This study brings "together the fiscal statements of the Confederacy into a reliable totality," converts "them into such units of value as to make them usable," points "out by a few comparisons their significance as a measure of effort," and calls "attention to the contrasted effect of their incidence in the two sections," Abstract by America C. Ford, AMERICAN ECONOMIC REVIEW, XV, June 1925, p. 379.

Finds the per capita cost of the war 3 times as great for the people of the South as for those of the North
