JAMES FREEMAN CURTIS

(1878 - 1952)

The working correspondence and memoranda of James Freeman Curtis, lawyer in Boston and New York, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, first counsel of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, are to be found in the Treasury files for 1909-1913, and incorporated in the early files of the New York Federal Reserve Bank. All private papers are said by his widow (Mrs. Eleanor Curtis, 120 East 30 Street, N.Y.C.) to have been destroyed.

A two volume memoir of his life was recorded by Mr. Curtis for the Oral History Project of Columbia University. Some fifty pages from these memoirs, dealing with Mr. Curtis' experience with Federal Reserve legislation in 1913 and as General Counsel, Deputy Governor and Secretary of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York during its first five years, have been photostatted for the Committee. Two copies are in Committee files.

Literary rights in the unpublished memoirs of Mr. Curtis are reserved to Mrs. Curtis during her lifetime. They are understood to revert to Columbia University after her death.

See notes on Committee's career card of Mr. Curtis
