Report on the availability of bank credit in the 7th federal reserve district, submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury by C. O. Hardy and J. Viner. Washington, D.C., Government Printing Office, 1935.

Widener Library: Econ. 4901.45.5

The report presents the factual results of a credit survey conducted in September, 1934, by Hardy and Viner and others with the assistance of a large staff of field investigators. It recommends banking legislation and changes in banking policy, the general aim of which is the liberalization of the lending policies of commercial banks and allied agencies. Abstract by R. H. Lounsbury, AMERICAN ECONOMIC REVIEW, XXV, June, 1935, p. 359.

New concepts of bank supervision and operation. (In: The Bankers Magazine, June, 1935, p.667-670)

The F.R.system should be made non-political and, thru co-operation with the Secretary of the Treasury, credit expansion and restriction could be so simple and logical that banking business would expand materially and credit be equalized and stabilized.

Bank liquidity and the Eccles bill. (In:

The Bankers Magazine, May 1935, p.527-535)

The more orthodox school of banking has broken down in its attempt to preserve banking liquidity. Structural changes will be necessary to correct the defects of the old system; the beginnings of this realization lay in the formation of the R.F.C. and its development has led to the Eccles bill.
