CURRENCY AND CREDIT.

London: Longmans, 1919. Pp. vii, 393.

---

A careful analytical study of such closely related topics as paper money and the quantity theory, the foreign exchanges, systems of note issue, the theory of banking, financial crises, war finance. The author treats credit as the primary means of payment and money as subsidiary in an effort to set forth the nature and causes of the business cycle, and finds the instability of credit traceable not so much to the banker as to the trader and promoter. The distinctly international flavor of the work accentuates its timely character.
