A critique of the monetary policy adopted by the new national administration in April 1953. The study concludes (as of Feb. 1954): "Prompt reversal of the Treasury's debt-management policy which is aimed at lengthening the maturity of the debt and moving more of the debt into the hands of non-bank investors is essential. Restoration of short-term financing and a low and stable long-term interest rate policy is necessary to prevent continued deflationary pressure from being exerted on the economy" (p. 141).
