ARTHUR ATWOOD BALLANTINE

The papers of Arthur Ballantine, lawyer, Assistant Secretary and Under Secretary of the Treasury during the early 1930's, are divided between his office and his apartment.

Material in his office includes speeches made while Assistant and Under Secretary of the Treasury, 1931-1933, some correspondence and memoranda about the banking holiday and reopening of banks. His secretary estimates one hour would be sufficient to scan this material.

Linear feet of shelf space occupied
(or other measure):

1 file cabinet on
public service plus 2 file cabinets of
other material

Approximate number of items:

Material in his apartment includes a complete set of day-by-day memos (2 vols.) written during his time at the Treasury and a set of day-by-day memos written during banking crisis of 1933.

Linear feet of shelf space occupied
(or other measure):

Approximate number of items:

All rights to the papers remain with Mr. Ballantine; his secretary, Miss Shaw, says he is not too interested in them except for a few special items.

Mr. Ballantine was asked to discuss Banking Crisis of 1933 by Columbia Oral History Project, but refused.
