Subject: Major L. L. B. AngasFrom J. M. Daiger

... 16-852

Major L. L. B. Angas, the English stock broker whose pamphlet of a year or two ago, "The Coming American Boom" got him a good deal of notoriety and subsequently a job in New York, was placed next to me at the recent dinner in New York to Roy M. Wenzlick, of the Real Estate Analyst, Inc., St. Louis. You may encounter him at New Orleans, since he is on the program of the general convention; and you may find that he has in some respects anticipated in his address some of the things that you will say in yours.

I have not read either of the pamphlets written by Angas, but the man himself impressed me as being very superficial and much too glib. I notice that in the address which he made the other day at the Young Men's Board of Trade in New York he appropriated and apparently gave out as his own material that I know he had never heard of until he heard Wenzlick's address.

The fellow looks and talks like a parrot, and I dare say that after he hears your speech he will soon be making it himself.
