Dear Senators:

It has been on my mind for some time to let you know that I think you have rendered an invaluable service to the country in your public stand on monetary, credit and debt-management problems. As expressed in the Report of the Subcommittee on Monetary, Credit and Fiscal Policies, of which you were Chairman, and in your discussions of the subject, particularly on the Senate floor, you have stated more ably and understandingly than has ever been done before by any member of Congress, what the relationship between the Treasury and the central bank should be, both traditionally and in the light of present-day conditions.

I doubt that any accord could have been brought about between the Treasury and the Federal Reserve if it had not been for your force, conviction and knowledge of the subject. Your continued vigilance is just about the best assurance the country has that policy making, with reference both to the central bank's responsibilities in the field of credit and the Treasury's in debt-management, will be in the public interest.

Sincerely yours,

M. S. Eccles.

The Honorable Paul H. Douglas,
