Dear Marriner:

Here is a clipping from our paper which presents your 44-hour week suggestion in the manner you intended. I used the material you sent to me--the extract from the letter you wrote to a labor leader.

Indeed the battle against inflation goes on, but some progress has been made in the form of educating the people to the perils.

I observe a decided improvement in the attitude of the people I encounter.

A real smashing attack on the problem would receive widespread public support, I feel sure.

You are entitled to feel pleased over the results flowing from your release of the White House memorandum.

As mr a reader of Congressional Record I enjoyed the episode of the exchange of letters between Vardaman and Bricker. It was plain Vardaman expected to receive Bricker's applause and it must have startled him to get a kick in the pants instead.

Well you must be having fun even though it is a mighty grim and important crasade upon which you are embarked. Keep me informed of your statements and addresses and don't let me get scooped on any important news affecting you.

Regards,

Dance

Dear Darrell:

I want to thank you for running the article, "Eccles Explains 44-Hour Week", in the February 19 issue of The Ogden Standard Examiner.

I will be glad to send you copies of any of my written statements and addresses, and will try to see that you do not get scooped on any important news effecting me.

With kindest regards,

Dear Darrell:

I just received a clipping covering the Marticle which appeared in your paper on January 25 relative to my appearance before the Joint Committee on the Economic Report in its hearings on the President's Economic Program. Unfortunately, it was bad reporting because it gave an entirely wrong impression, as you will note from the marked portion of the enclosed copy of my statement.

I am enclosing an excerpt from a letter which I just wrote to a labor leader which briefly explains the economic justification for the longer work week as a basis for increasing production and combatting inflation. The battle for the defense of the dollar goes on but does not seem to be succeeding very well.

With kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

M. S. Mccles.
