To Chairman Eccles

From Mr. Draper

As I have just told Elliott Thurston over the telephone, I think your latest address before the Economic Club of New York is the most convincing and effective statement of your views which I have read since becoming a member of the Board. It seems to me that this address should have wider circulation than is possible by just sending it to the banks. Have you considered its acceptance by some magazine or newspaper of wide and general circulation?

The fact that this is an election year does not, in my opinion, have a bearing upon the subject matter of this address because the subject matter is of general interest, regardless of political ties. I sincerely hope that you will exert every effort to see that the address secures a larger audience because the country needs this type of economic education.
