CONDITION AND INCOME OF MEMBER BANKS ELEVENTH FEDERAL RESERVE DISTRICT

To All Member Banks

in the Eleventh Federal Reserve District

Abstract

Member banks in the Eleventh Federal Reserve District experienced a year of record postwar growth in deposits and bank credit during 1971. A more expansive monetary policy stimulated inflows of demand deposits and contributed to a decline in market interest rates, making commercial bank time deposit rates more attractive to investors. Total loans rose substantially in 1971, reflecting improvement in the regional economy, especially in the last half of the year. And a sizable portion of the deposit inflows was used to purchase securities, especially those issued by states and political subdivisions. Although operating expenses increased more than operating income, net gains on securities transactions and reductions in income taxes contributed to a moderate rise in net income.

Total assets of member banks in the District increased by $$ 3.5$ billion in 1971, or 13.6 percent. Increases in loans and investments of $$ 2.8$ billion, or 14.1 percent, provided the majority of the increase. This increase in bank credit at member banks in the District was the largest since World War II in both absolute and percentage terms. Gross loans including overdrafts increased by $$ 1.7$ billion in 1971, or 12.8 percent. All major types of loans contributed to the increase, but real estate loans to finance construction of new homes and apartments were particularly buoyant, rising $$ 402$ million, or 28.2 percent. Loans to individuals, especially through credit cards or to finance instalment purchases, also rose significantly. Business loans declined during the first six months of 1971 but rose in the last six months as the regional economy gathered strength. This resulted in a net gain in business loans for the year of $$ 331$ million, or 6.2 percent. Loans to financial institutions, which includes Federal funds sold, increased by 17.2 percent in 1971, and loans to farmers were up 23.1 percent.

Even though loan demand was fairly strong in 1971, the ample supply of funds permitted District member banks to add slightly more than $$ 1.0$ billion to their holdings of securities. Net acquisitions of obligations of states and political subdivisions accounted for more than half of this increase. A fairly large volume of other securities was also acquired, but the increase in holdings of U.S. Treasury securities was moderate.

Total deposits at District member banks were $$ 2.8$ billion higher in 1971 than in 1970, an increase of 13.1 percent. This was also the largest increase in deposits at District member banks since World War II in both absolute and percentage terms. This gain mainly occurred in both individual time and demand deposits, up $$ 1,052$ million and $$ 785$ million, respectively. Deposits of states and political subdivisions and the U.S. Government also posted sizable increases in 1971.

Total operating income of member banks in the Eleventh Federal Reserve District rose by $$ 100$ million in 1971, or 7.1 percent. Interest and dividends on securities were responsible for 44 percent of this advance. Total operating expenses for District member banks increased, however, by $$ 112$ million in 1971, or 10.2 percent. This was due primarily to an increase of $$ 77$ million, or 18.6 percent, in interest paid on time and savings deposits. As a result, income before taxes or gains or losses on securities decreased by $$ 12$ million, or 3.7 percent. However, net income rose by $$ 17$ million, or 7.7 percent, due principally to net gains on securities of $$ 12$ million and reductions in income taxes of $$ 15$ million.

Yours very truly,
