TO: The Chief Operating Officer of each financial institution in the Eleventh Federal Reserve District

SUBJECT

Depositing Change for Canadian Postal Money Orders Denominated in U.S. Dollars

DETAILS

Effective September 9, 1996, Federal Reserve Offices will no longer accept Canadian postal money orders (CPMOs) denominated in U.S. dollars that are commingled with U.S. postal money orders, Treasury checks, other foreign U.S. dollar denominated postal money orders, or mixed cash letters. The reciprocal agreement between the U.S. Postal Service and Canada Post Corporation, which has enabled this clearing arrangement since 1901, has been set aside at the request of Canada Post.

These items will instead be cleared like all other items cashed in the United States that are drawn on Canadian financial institutions. The items can be distinguished from others by the eight digit routing and transit number, 81281-127, which is the routing and transit number for CPMOs. Effective September 9, 1996, these items may be cleared through your local Federal Reserve Office by depositing them in a Canadian cash letter along with other U.S. dollar denominated Canadian checks. Or, they can be cleared through a correspondent bank in the U.S. that has a respondent relationship with a Canadian bank. As a result of this change in the clearing process, the applicable Canadian per-item and cash letter fees will be applied, as will the Canadian item availability.
