New York Fed to Launch College Labor Market Interactive January 29

January 22, 2016

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York will launch a new web interactive on January 29 at 10:00 AM that will provide details on the labor market for recent college graduates.

The new interactive will include regularly updated information on labor market outcomes—such as the unemployment rate and wages—for individuals aged 22 to 27 with a bachelor’s degree and how they fare relative to similarly aged workers without one. In addition, users will also be able to track the demand for college graduates, as measured by online job advertisements.
