

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF NEW YORK

[Circular No. 10639
May 20, 1993]

REGULATION O
Extension of Interim Rule Regarding Insider
Lending Limits for Small Banks and Request for Comment

Comments Invited by July 15

To All Member Banks and Bank Holding Companies in the Second Federal Reserve District, and Others Concerned:

The following statement has been issued by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System:

The Federal Reserve Board has requested public comment on whether the Board should retain, modify, or terminate a provision in Regulation O which establishes procedures for smaller banks to increase their aggregate insider lending limit up to 200 percent of unimpaired capital and surplus.

Comments should be received by July 15, 1993.

In accordance with authority provided by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act (FDICIA), the Board amended its Regulation O, effective May 18, 1992, to permit banks with deposits under $100 million to increase the lending limit from 100 percent to up to 200 percent of unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus, if they followed certain procedures.

The smaller bank's board of directors was required to adopt and send to the Board a resolution determining, on the basis of the bank's lending experience, that a higher limit was prudent and was necessary to attract or retain directors or to prevent restricting credit.

The higher limit was to be in effect for one year, through May 18, 1993.

To provide time for it to receive and consider public comment, the Board is extending the current provision for an additional six months.

Beginning on the next page is the text of the Board's notice and request for comment, which has been reprinted from the Federal Register of May 14; comments thereon should be submitted by July 15, 1993, and may be sent to the Board, as specified in the notice, or to our Domestic Banking Department.

E. GERALD CORRIGAN,
President.

At the same time, the Board seeks public comment on whether this provision should be made permanent, modified, or permitted to expire. In this regard, the Board is seeking comment on whether this provision is "important to avoid constricting the availability of credit in small communities or to attract directors of such banks," the statutory standard the Board must meet to make this provision permanent.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Background

Section 22(h) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 375b) restricts the amount and terms of extensions of credit from a bank to its executive officers, directors, and principal shareholders (collectively, "insiders") and to any related interest of an insider. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 (FDICIA) amended section 22(h) of the Federal Reserve Act to establish a limit on the total amount a bank may lend in the aggregate to its insiders and their related interests as a class. See Pub. L. 102-242, sec. 306, 105 Stat. 2236 (1991). In general, the limit is equal to the bank's unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus. FDICIA also authorized the Board to set a higher limit for banks with deposits of less than $100 million if the Board determined that the exception was "important to avoid constricting the availability of credit in small communities or to attract directors of such banks." Pub. L. 102-242, sec. 306(d), 105 Stat. 2236, 2358. The statute provides that the higher limit for smaller banks may not exceed 200 percent of the bank's unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus.

Effective May 18, 1992, the Board amended Regulation O to implement the amendments to section 22(h) contained in FDICIA. The general limit in FDICIA on lending to insiders and their related interests—100 percent of the bank's unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus—was adopted. After considering public comment on the higher aggregate lending limit authorized by FDICIA for smaller banks, the Board determined to adopt an interim provision permitting banks with deposits under $100 million to adopt a higher limit, not to exceed 200 percent of the bank's unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus, for a period of one year to expire May 18, 1993.

Regulation O sets forth a specific procedure for a smaller bank to follow in order to implement the higher aggregate lending limit for itself. The board of directors of the bank must by resolution determine that a higher aggregate lending limit is consistent with prudent, safe, and sound banking practices in light of the bank's experience in lending to its insiders, and that a higher limit is necessary to attract or retain directors or to prevent restricting the availability of credit in small communities. The resolution must set forth the facts and reasoning that support this determination, including the amount of the bank's aggregate lending to insiders, expressed as a percentage of unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus, as of the date of the resolution. The bank also must submit its resolution to the appropriate federal banking agency, with a copy to the Board. Finally, the bank must meet or exceed all applicable capital requirements. See 12 CFR 215.4(d)(2).

The Board stated at the time it adopted this interim provision that, apart from anecdotal evidence, commenters on this provision had not provided specific information regarding the amount of lending by banks to their directors and related interests, or other specific information that would allow the Board to determine the effect of the aggregate lending limit on the availability of credit and the service of directors. The Board further stated that, during the one year period of this provision, the Board, in consultation with the other federal banking agencies, would collect data on the lending practices of banks in order to analyze these effects. At the end of the one year period, the Board would revisit the issue of an appropriate aggregate lending limit for smaller banks. See 57 FR 22417, 22420 (1992).

The Board is hereby extending this provision for six months, through November 18, 1993, as an interim rule. The Board finds that it is necessary to extend this provision in order to prevent any lapse in the availability of this provision to smaller banks while additional public comment is being sought and considered. For the foregoing reasons, the Board for good cause finds that notice and public comment is impracticable, and that the interim rule should be effective immediately. See 5 U.S.C. 553(b)(B) and 553(d)(3). The effective date of this provision is May 18, 1993. Resolutions adopted by smaller banks to increase their aggregate lending limits and that expire by their terms on May 18, 1993, will be considered by the Board to remain in effect through November 18, 1993.

The Board is requesting additional public comment while the interim rule is in effect on whether this rule permitting smaller banks to raise their aggregate lending limits to 200 percent of unimpaired capital and surplus should be made permanent, modified, or permitted to expire. In this regard, FDICIA permitted the Board to make an exception to the aggregate lending limit for smaller banks only if the Board determined that the exception would be "important" to avoid constricting the availability of credit in small communities or to attract directors to smaller banks. In order to assist the Board in making a decision on the higher limit for smaller banks, the Board requests commenters to provide specific information concerning the needs of banks with deposits under $100 million to have aggregate lending limits in excess of 100 percent of their unimpaired capital and unimpaired surplus in order to meet the credit needs of their communities and to attract and retain qualified directors. Comments should be received by the Board by July 15, 1993. Resolutions of boards of directors of smaller banks, adopted pursuant to 12 CFR 215.4(d)(2), may continue to be submitted, as well as comments in general from smaller banks and other members of the public.¹

¹ The Board has received copies of resolutions adopted by 22 smaller banks to increase their aggregate lending limits.

Initial Regulatory Flexibility Analysis

The Regulatory Flexibility Act (5 U.S.C. 601-612) requires an agency to publish an initial regulatory flexibility analysis. Two of the requirements of an initial regulatory flexibility analysis (5 U.S.C. 603(b))—a description of the reasons why the action by the agency is being considered and a statement of the objectives of, and legal basis for, the rulemaking—are contained in the supplementary information above.

The rulemaking imposes no additional reporting or recordkeeping requirements with respect to a bank's monitoring and maintaining compliance with the aggregate lending limits applicable to the bank. An additional reporting or recordkeeping requirement is imposed upon smaller banks that elect to prepare the board of directors resolution required in order to establish a higher aggregate lending limit for themselves. The rulemaking does not duplicate, overlap, or conflict with other relevant federal rules.

Another requirement for the initial regulatory flexibility analysis is a description of, and where feasible, an estimate of the number of small entities to which the rulemaking will apply. The rulemaking would apply to all banks with deposits under $100 million. As of December 31, 1992, 8,643 banks would have been subject to the rulemaking. The rulemaking should have an insignificant economic impact on smaller banks.
