An analysis of the preceding tables can lead to but one conclusion, and that is, that the banks of this state for a series of years have enjoyed unexampled prosperity and growth, and that in the main the spirit of conservatism has characterized the management. However, the test of conservatism is not in conditions when prices are steadily rising and trade, commerce and agriculture are active and profitable.

The growth of deposits, without doubt, indicates accumulated wealth—it might be more properly said, surplus wealth, which is in a sense a surplus provided against a period of adverse conditions. Experience teaches that a long period of prosperity, such as has been experienced for several years, is a flowtide inevitably to be followed by an ebbtide. The strength of the banking institutions of the state is indicated in that reserve condition which fortifies against a period of possible ebb in prices and conditions. So far as this Department can determine our banks are being conducted on the theory that there may be a change, in which event they will be prepared to care for the interests placed in their charge. It is gratifying, indeed, to be able to state that this is a fact with the banks of Nebraska, as a whole.

The rapid and unprecedented rise in the price of real estate in a purely agricultural commonwealth, like this, is a condition to be considered in extending credit. The department finds the banks of the state, as a rule, recognize this fact, and are safeguarding their funds against a possible over-valuation of this item. While it might be said that the hazzard would be less in the older Eastern portion of the state yet the banks of Western Nebraska are as conservatively and carefully managed as any other part of the state. It is but just to the section just spoken of to state that of ten bank failures that have occurred during the six years of the present supervision but two of the ten have occurred in the Western half of the state.

I take pleasure in stating that time and experience are demonstrating the wisdom of a policy of bank restriction and supervision. There is less objection to the requirements of the Department and the restrictions of the law on the part of the banks each year, proving conclusively that the collective judgement of the bankers of the state is in harmony with the policy of strict supervision inaugurated in this state in 1895.

Some few amendments to the banking law have been attempted during the present session of the Legislature, the fate of which at this writing is unknown. However, the operation of the law, as it now exists is certainly being vindicated, as shown by the record—the preceding pages.
