SHEET MILLS.<sup>1</sup>

SUMMARY.

The average rate of wages or earnings per hour of sheet-mill employees in 1915 was 7 per cent lower than in 1914, 6 per cent lower than in 1913, and 2 per cent lower than in 1912, but it was 1 per cent higher than in 1911 and 10 per cent higher than in 1910. The average full-time weekly earnings have followed very nearly the same course, as full-time hours per week have been unchanged since 1912 and were only 1 per cent lower in 1915 than in 1910. These facts are shown in the table of relative numbers, for "All occupations" (Table 39).

The most significant facts appearing in this chapter concerning wages and hours of labor of sheet-mill employees for the years 1910 to 1915 are summarized by means of averages and percentages in the following table. The facts for 1915 are reported for 5,736 men, and were obtained from 15 plants having 142 hot mills and capable of producing 38 per cent of the total tonnage of all sheet mills in the United States. Of the 5,736 employees, 3,940 were in the 14 principal productive occupations and the remaining 1,796 are in the unclassified productive and nonproductive groups reported for the years 1914 and 1915 only. These 15 plants roll ordinary commercial black sheets, gauges 12 to 30, and mills are not included which roll extra heavy sheets or thin plates. Some sheet mills occasionally roll black plates for tinning, but when so utilized they are classified in this report as tin-plate mills.

In this table occupations are grouped according to the wages paid, beginning with the lowest-paid group, and the occupations in each group are presented in alphabetical order. Classified full-time hours per week and rates of wages per hour are shown by percentages which were computed from the actual figures given in Table Q.

Referring to the first occupation shown in Table 38, laborers, comparison can be made of data from 9 identical plants for 1910, 1911, and 1912, 8 plants for 1912 and 1913, 13 plants for 1913 and 1914, and 15 plants for 1914 and 1915. In 1915 the 15 plants from which reports were obtained employed 394 laborers whose average full-time hours of work were 65 per week. Ten per cent of the 394 laborers worked over 48 and under 60 hours per week, 32 per cent worked 60 hours, 30 per cent worked over 60 and under 72 hours, and 27 per cent worked 72 hours and over per week. The average rate of wages or earnings per hour of the 394 laborers in 1915 was 18.8 cents, 24 per cent having earned 16 and under 18 cents, 73 per cent 18 and under 20 cents, and 3 per cent 20 and under 25 cents per hour. The average full-time weekly earnings were $12.21.

The average full-time weekly earnings of sheet-mill employees in 1915 ranged from $10.59 for shearmen's helpers to $54.80 for rollers.

INDEX NUMBERS.

Owing to changes in the number of plants reported from year to year, and the consequent differences in the averages for the overlapping year in two groups, it is difficult to make a comparison of the actual data over a period of several years which will give an accurate measure of the changes throughout the period. To aid in making such a comparison, relative or index numbers have been computed from the averages given in Table 38 for full-time hours per week, rates of wages per hour, and full-time weekly earnings, for each occupation, and for the department as a whole as determined by a combination of the data for the several occupations, from 1910 to 1915. Such figures appear in Table 39.

These relative or index numbers are simply percentages for which the data for 1915 are taken as the base, or 100 per cent. The relative for each year is the per cent which the average for that year is of the average for 1915. For example, the relative full-time weekly earnings of pair heaters in 1910 were 91 as compared with 100 in 1915, that is, the full-time weekly earnings of pair heaters in 1910 were 91 per cent of the full-time weekly earnings in this occupation in 1915. The method of computing relative numbers is explained on pages 65 to 67.

Table 39 also shows for each occupation the per cent of increase or decrease in full-time hours per week, rates of wages per hour, and full-time weekly earnings in 1915, as compared with each specified year preceding. These percentages of increase and decrease are computed from the relative numbers. Thus the full-time weekly earnings of pair heaters in 1915 were 10 per cent higher than in 1910, 2 per cent higher than in 1911, the same as in 1912, 5 per cent lower than in 1913, and 4 per cent lower than in 1914.

In other columns of the table is shown the per cent of change in each year as compared with the year immediately preceding. Thus the full-time weekly earnings of pair heaters in 1911 were 8 per cent higher than in 1910, in 1912 2 per cent higher than in 1911, in 1913 5 per cent higher than in 1912, in 1914 1 per cent lower than in 1913, and in 1915 4 per cent lower than in 1914. The other occupations and items of the table can be studied in like manner. The percentages of increase and decrease are computed from the relative numbers.

The figures for the department as a whole appear at the end of the table.

The relative full-time weekly earnings for all occupations combined in 1910 was 91, as compared with 100 in 1915. The relative increased to 98 in 1911, to 101 in 1912, to 105 in 1913, and to 108 in 1914, but in 1915 there was a drop of 7 per cent, the relative being 100. These relative numbers for each year previous to 1914 are based on the principal productive occupations only, while those for 1914 and 1915 include the unclassified groups (see pages 55 and 56) tabulated for 1914 and 1915 for the first time.

FULL-TIME WORKING DAYS PER WEEK.

The number and per cent of employees in the principal productive occupations in sheet-mill plants whose customary working time per week was 5 days or turns, or 6 days, or 7 days, or variations thereof, are shown in Table 40. It will be noticed that the customary working time of a large number of the employees in this department was "5 days, 5 days, and 6 days in rotation." In all except one of the plants covered, the hot-mill employees were divided into three groups, each working 8 hours per turn, five turns per week, Monday to Friday, inclusive, with one crew working one turn Saturday morning. In the one plant excepted two turns were worked on Saturday. Each crew advances one turn each week, thus giving each crew the extra Saturday turns in rotation.

Two sets of figures are shown for the 15 plants reported for 1914 and 1915, the first covering only the principal productive occupations as shown for all the preceding groups of years, and therefore strictly comparable with them, and the second including the unclassified occupations (see pp. 55 and 56) tabulated for 1914 and 1915 for the first time. The inclusion of these occupations makes a greater change in this table for sheet mills and in that for tin-plate mills as well than for any other departments, owing to the general custom of sheet and tin-plate hot-mill employees in the principal productive occupations of working three turns per day, 5 or 6 days per week, as stated above, while employees in the unclassified occupations, being largely mechanics or laborers, work 6 days to a large extent.

It was a custom years ago for rolling-mill companies to pay the roller a lump sum per ton of rolled product, and for the roller to furnish and pay the necessary rolling crew, the company not being concerned with the wages of the individual men. This custom had objectionable features, and as a whole has nearly disappeared, although to a limited extent it continues, in that a company may pay one man for a specified part of the rolling process, while two men are necessary all or a part of the time to the successful performance of the duties of the occupation. In such a case the company-paid man hires a helper on whatever terms he is able to make. This custom has frequently been found in sheet and tin-plate mills in the past, the company paying one man for each specific position (occupation) in the rolling crew, leaving the matter of spell hands or helpers to be settled by the men on their own terms. However, most companies now consider it advisable to carry all men working in their mills on their own pay rolls in order that they may know just who is employed in the plants and what rates are paid. Reports for 1914 and 1915 show a marked increase in the number of sheet-mill companies paying each individual workman directly, their pay rolls thus showing the frequency with which helpers were employed and their pay. Where information in former years was somewhat indefinite as regards helpers, it is now possible to obtain facts. These facts somewhat disturb data previously shown for certain occupations, although changes in methods of work have made it necessary to some extent to employ helpers where formerly they were not required.

In one plant in particular, when the company, in 1915, began paying each individual employee it developed that pair heaters, matchers, and doublers employed helpers intermittently. These helpers received from 75 cents to $2 per turn, or occasionally worked "level-handed" with the head man. This company in previous years had reported that in their belief helpers were seldom employed, and the average rate per hour for their occupations was computed from gross earnings without any deductions for helpers. Further, no deduction was possible, as the pay to helpers could not be ascertained. This company is of the impression that some changes in methods of work in 1915, and perhaps more frequent rolling of heavier product, accounted to a large degree for the additional number of helpers employed. It is thought to be fairer to this plant to continue to compute the average rates per hour from the gross earnings of each occupation, and to this extent the figures represent the pay for the operation rather than the wage of an individual. In order to illustrate the exact condition existing in this plant, Table 41 has been prepared, showing for six crews the gross earnings of pair heaters in the pay Matchers and doublers in this plant employed helpers with like irregularity, and the average rates per hour used in the tables of this report were computed on the gross earnings of the job. In a considerable number of plants catchers are assisted by "2d catchers" or helpers, who are paid by the company or by the catcher, or by both, but for this occupation satisfactory information has always been obtained, and catchers' hourly rates have been computed on their net earnings.

In both sheet mills and tin-plate mills the custom of two heaters working level-handed (dividing the pay evenly), instead of one heater working with a helper, has been increasing in recent years. Beginning with 1913, in both these departments a new group—"heaters, level-handed"—is included in this report; in previous years the scattering level-handed work was shown with that of the regular heaters.

Two general tables are presented for this department, as follows:

Table Q.—Full-time hours per week, rates of wages per hour, and full-time weekly earnings, in the United States, by years, 1910 to 1915.

Table R.—Full-time hours per week, rates of wages per hour, and full-time weekly earnings, in each district, by years, 1913 to 1915.

The data from Table Q are summarized in Table 38, percentages being used instead of the actual figures for classified hours and rates of wages.

The order in which the occupations are given in Tables Q and R and the table of relative numbers follows that of the processes of . manufacture. "Identical plants," as used in the tables of this report, are identical units of identical establishments reporting the same occupations in each of two or more consecutive years. For a more extended explanation, see page 58.

Descriptions of the occupations which are specified in the tables of this chapter and of other occupations of the sheet-mill department included in the two groups designated as: "Unclassified—productive," and "Unclassified—nonproductive," are to be found in the Glossary of Occupations, pages 519 to 523.

TIN-PLATE MILLS.<sup>1</sup>

SUMMARY.

The average rate of wages or earnings per hour of tin-plate mill employees in 1915 was higher than in any one of the preceding five years reported, and, as full-time hours per week were unchanged, full-time weekly earnings followed the same course as earnings per hour, being 22 per cent higher than in 1910, 9 per cent higher than in 1911, 8 per cent higher than in 1912, 3 per cent higher than in 1913, and 1 per cent higher than in 1914. These facts are drawn from the table of relative numbers for "All occupations" (Table 43).

The most significant details appearing in this chapter concerning wages and hours of labor of tin-plate mill employees for the years 1910 to 1915 are summarized by means of averages and percentages in Table 42. The information for 1915 represents 6,147 employees, and was obtained from 11 plants having 135 hot mills and capable of producing 37 per cent of the total tonnage of all tin-plate mills in the United States. Of the 6,147 employees 4,468 are in the 17 principal productive occupations reported for the years 1910 to 1913, and the remaining 1,679 are in the unclassified productive and nonproductive groups reported for the years 1914 and 1915 only.

In Table 42 occupations are grouped according to the wages paid, beginning with the lowest paid group, and the occupations in each group are presented in alphabetical order. Classified full-time hours per week and rates of wages per hour are shown by percentages which were computed from the actual figures given in Table S.

(1) Less than one-half of 1 per cent.

Referring to the first occupation in Table 42, page 436—assorters, female—comparison can be made of data for four identical plants in 1910 and 1911, for five plants in 1911, 1912, and 1913, and for six plants in 1913, 1914, and 1915. The first line of the table is read as follows: In 1910 four tin-plate mills from which reports were obtained employed 101 female sorters, whose average full-time hours of work were 49.7 per week. Of these 101 sorters, 46 per cent worked 48 hours and under per week, 8 per cent worked over 48 and under 56, and 47 per cent worked 56 and under 60 hours per week. The average rate of wages or earnings per hour in 1910 was 12.8 cents, 92 per cent having earned under 14 cents per hour, and the remaining 8 per cent 14 and under 16 cents per hour. The average full-time weekly earnings were $6.41. The other lines of the table may be read in the same manner.

The average full-time weekly earnings of tin-plate mill employees in 1915 ranged from $8.51 for shearmen's helpers to $47.17 for rollers.

INDEX NUMBERS.

Owing to changes in the number of plants reported from year to year, and the consequent differences in the averages for the overlapping year in two groups of plants, it is difficult to make a comparison of the actual data over a period of several years which will give an accurate measure of the changes throughout the period. To aid in making such a comparison, relative or index numbers have been computed from the averages shown in Table 42 for full-time hours per week, rates of wages per hour, and full-time weekly earnings for each occupation from 1910 to 1915, inclusive. Such figures appear in Table 43.

These relative or index numbers are simply percentages for which the data for 1915 are taken as the base, or 100 per cent. The relative for each year is the per cent which the average for that year is of the average for 1915. For example, the relative full-time weekly earnings of rollers in 1910 were 95 as compared with 100 in 1915; that is, the full-time weekly earnings of rollers in 1910 were 95 per cent of the full-time weekly earnings in this occupation in 1915. The method of computing the relative numbers is explained on pages 65 to 67.

Table 43 also shows for each occupation the per cent of increase or decrease in full-time hours per week, rates of wages per hour, and full-time weekly earnings in 1915 as compared with each specified year preceding. Thus the full-time weekly earnings of rollers in 1915 were 5 per cent higher than in 1910, 3 per cent lower than in 1911 and 1913, and 1 per cent lower than in 1912 and 1914.

In other columns of the table is shown the per cent of change in each year as compared with the year immediately preceding. Thus the full-time weekly earnings of rollers in 1911 were 8 per cent higher than in 1910; in 1912 1 per cent lower than in 1911; in 1913 2 per cent higher than in 1912; in 1914 2 per cent lower than in 1913; and in 1915 1 percent lower than in 1914. The other occupations and items of the table can be studied in like manner. The percentages of increase and decrease are computed from the relative numbers.

1 No change.

The relative full-time weekly earnings for all occupations combined in 1910 was 82, as compared with 100 in 1915. The relative increased 12 per cent to 92 in 1911, to 93 in 1912, to 97 in 1913, to 99 in 1914, and in 1915, the base year, to 100. These relative numbers for each year previous to 1914 are based on a combination of the principal productive occupations only, while those for 1914 and 1915 include the unclassified groups (see pp. 55 and 56), tabulated for 1914 and 1915 for the first time.

FULL-TIME WORKING DAYS PER WEEK.

The number and per cent of employees in the principal productive occupations in tin-plate mill plants whose customary working time per week was 5 days or turns, or 6 days, or 7 days, or variations thereof, are shown in Table 44. It will be noticed that the customary working time of a large per cent of the employees in this department was "5 days, 5 days, and 6 days in rotation." In all of the plants covered the regular turn employees were divided into 3 crews, each working 8 hours per turn, 5 turns per week, Monday to Friday, inclusive, with 1 crew working an extra turn Saturday morning. Each crew advances one turn each week, thus giving to each the extra Saturday turn every third week. Two sets of figures are shown for the 11 plants reported for 1914 and 1915, the first covering only the principal productive occupations as shown for all the preceding groups of years, and therefore strictly comparable with them, and the second including the unclassified occupations (see pp. 55 and 56), tabulated for 1914 and 1915 for the first time. The inclusion of these occupations makes a greater change in this table for tin-plate mills, and in that for sheet mills as well, than for any other departments, owing to the general custom of sheet and tin-plate hot-mill employees in the principal productive occupations of working three turns per day, while employees in the unclassified occupations, being largely mechanics or laborers, work 6 days to a large extent.

In both tin-plate mills and sheet mills the custom of two heaters working level-handed (dividing the pay evenly), instead of one heater working with a helper, has been increasing in recent years. Beginning with 1913, in both these departments a new group, "Heaters, level-handed," is included in this report. In preceding years the scattering level-handed work was shown with that of the regular heaters. In this department doublers are treated in the same way, beginning with 1913.

Two general tables of actual data are presented for this department, as follows:

Table S.—Full-time hours per week, rates of wages per hour, and full-time weekly earnings in the United States, by years, 1910 to 1915.

Table T.—Full-time hours per week, rates of wages per hour, and full-time weekly earnings in each district, by years, 1913 to 1915.

The facts from Table S are summarized in Table 42, percentages being used instead of the actual figures for classified hours and rates of wages.

The order in which the occupations are given in Tables S and T and the table of relative numbers follows that of the processes of manufacture. "Identical plants," as used in the tables of this report, are identical units of identical establishments reporting the same occupations in each of two or more consecutive years. For a more extended explanation see page 58.

Descriptions of the occupations which are specified in the tables of this chapter and of other occupations of the tin-plate mill department included in the two groups designated as "Unclassified—productive," and "Unclassified—nonproductive," are to be found in the Glossary of Occupations, pages 523 to 526.

GLOSSARY OF OCCUPATIONS.

A glossary is here given of the occupation terms found in the iron and steel industry. It covers the principal occupations and many of the minor occupations and local terms used. While not complete, it will be of service in interpreting the figures of the report and in any study of iron and steel labor conditions.

The glossary is arranged by departments and subdepartments, and the occupations are arranged as nearly as practicable in process order. After many occupation terms there are given within parentheses synonymous terms used in some plants.

The definition states briefly the work that is performed and indicates generally the amount of strength and skill required.

When the occupation to any extent leads up to a higher occupation the facts are stated.

BLAST FURNACES.

STOCKING AND CHARGING.

Bridge operator (Ore-bridge operator).—Operates an electric traveling crane, known as an ore bridge, in handling ore from boats to stock pile and from stock pile to bins or transfer cars. Controls the movements of the ore bridge on its track and also the movement of the suspended grab bucket by which the ore is picked up and transferred from one end of the bridge to the other. The position is that of a high-grade craneman, requiring considerable skill and experience because of the size of the crane and the speed with which materials are handled.

Bridge oiler (Ore-bridge oiler).—Oils ore bridges and assists the bridge operator. Light work, varying from unskilled to skilled, depending upon the experience of the oiler and the opportunity afforded to learn the duties of the bridge operator.

Bridge laborer (Ore-bridge laborer, Boat laborer, Ore shoveler, Dock laborer, Stevedore, Hatch tender).—Shovels ore into piles on boat to be removed by grab bucket of ore bridge, or directly into bucket when ore remaining is insufficient to be scooped up by bucket. When grab buckets are not used, fills buckets and hooks cable to buckets. Also cleans up ore that falls from bucket to dock. Unskilled, manual labor with a shovel.

Leg man.—Operates leg of Hulett machine removing ore from boats. The machine is a kind of electric crane on which there is a leg or arm in which the operator is stationed. There is a grab bucket at the lower end of the leg. This leg is lowered into the boat, the bucket picks up the ore, the leg is raised and moved so that the bucket comes over a small car into which the ore is dumped for conveyance to the stock pile. The position requires skill and experience, especially in manipulating the leg to clean up the ore in the bottom of the boat.

Hoisting engineer.—In charge of steam engine used for unloading ore and coal when there is no ore bridge. The duties are those of a low-grade stationary engineer.

Fireman.—Shovels coal under boilers for hoisting engine. Manual labor, requiring but little experience. Training for position of hoisting engineer.

Hoister.—Operates levers controlling a hoisting engine causing unloading buckets to raise, lower, and dump. The work is similar to that of the bridge operator but requires less skill and experience.

Carman.—Operates lever controlling small car which carries ore from Hulett machine to stock pile. Light work, unskilled.

Oiler.—Oils Hulett ore machine. Duties similar to those of bridge oiler.

Winchman.—Operates steam winch on ships, which hoists ore buckets from boat to dock. This method of unloading ore is seldom used. Work compares with that of a hoisting engineer.

Signal boy.—Stands near material being unloaded and signals the hoister when to raise or lower the bucket, the hoister's position, unlike the bridge operator's, being such that he can not see when the bucket is in place to be loaded. Light work, unskilled, usually performed by boys.

Bucket hooker and snapper.—Performs the duties of both signal boy and bridge laborer.

Car-dumper operator.—When ore and other materials are received in freight cars, the cars are emptied either by the stock laborers or by a car dumper, a huge machine which lifts a car and turns it on its side, thus dumping an entire carload of material at each operation. The car-dumper operator operates the levers controlling the hydraulic mechanism of the device and also adjusts the clamps to cars of different sizes. Responsible position, demanding considerable mechanical ability.

Car-dumper oiler.—Oils car-dumper machinery; assists car-dumper operator.

Car-dumper laborer.—General labor at car dumper.

Locomotive-crane operator (Locomotive-crane engineer).—Operates locomotive crane around yards, unloading coke, coal, and limestone from cars to stock piles and loading from stock piles to transfer cars to be carried to bins. Also loads pig iron on cars for shipment and does general crane work in connection with the erecting of new buildings, excavating, etc. The duties are similar to those of a yard engineer and craneman, requiring a man of skill and experience.

Locomotive-crane operator's helper (Hook-up, Hook-on, Locomotive-crane fireman).—Hooks crane chains to buckets or material to be moved, throws switches, fires, and couples cars. Unskilled light manual labor. Exposed to danger of material falling from crane. An opportunity is afforded to learn the duties of the locomotive-crane operator.

Transfer-car operator.—Operates controller on electric transfer car used for transferring materials from stock piles to the stock-house bins. The cars usually are loaded by the ore bridge or a locomotive crane. The work requires some experience and skill, and is analogous to that of motorman. In some places the work is done by the bridge oiler, or a stock laborer; in others by a stock unloader.

Steam-shovel craneman.—Operates steam shovel handling materials from stock piles to bins. He controls the movement of the crane, the filling of the bucket, and the dumping of the bucket after it is filled. He also has charge of the crew moving the shovel from place to place. Light manual labor, requiring an experienced employee.

Steam-shovel engineer.—Has charge of the engine of the steam shovel. Low-grade stationary engineer.

Steam-shovel fireman.—Shovels coal into fire box. Manual work, unskilled.

Stock unloader (Trestle laborer, Trestle man, Laborer.)—Unloads melting material (coke, limestone, and ore) into bins from railroad or transfer cars. Usually the cars dump from the bottom and the unloader cleans out the material that sticks in the car or falls on the tracks above the bins. The work varies from light to heavy manual labor, depending upon whether the material can be dumped from the car or must be shoveled out.

Larry man (Scale-car operator, Larry-car man).—The electric larry or scale car is a small motor car used to deliver melting materials from stock bins to skip car. A stock bin is opened by a lever, which allows the ore, coke, or limestone to fall into the car. The weight of the material in the car is indicated on a dial. When loaded, the car is placed over the skip pit and the material is dumped into the skip bucket.

The larry man operates the car, records the weight of materials dumped into the skip, and in some places also performs the duties of skip operator. He opens the stock bins and is responsible that the proper amount of material is drawn. The work is light, is quickly learned, and is analogous to that of a low-grade motorman.

Larry man's helper.—Keeps larry tracks clean, loosens stock in bins when it sticks, operates switches on larry tracks, loads skip buckets when coke chutes deliver direct to skip. In some places the helper opens stock bins and dumps material from larry car into skip bucket; in other places he is a spare operator who oils the car and spells the larry man. Work performed by an unskilled laborer. Little heavy manual labor, except during winter when stock is frozen.

Pocket trimmer (Pocket picker).—When ore is being drawn from the bins into the larry cars, it sometimes sticks and will not run, on account of dampness or freezing. The pocket trimmer loosens the ore with a bar or shovel so that it will run through the chute, and in some places cleans the stock-bin alleys. Unskilled manual labor, moderately heavy, involving the danger of falling into the ore bin and being drawn through the chute with the ore.

Skip operator.—Operates engine or motor by which skip bucket containing coke, limestone, and ore is hauled up the inclined runway to the top of the furnace. Also operates mechanism which lowers the bell by which materials are dumped into the furnace. He must see that the furnace is kept filled to a certain point indicated by a gauge, and that the materials charged, and the proportion of each, are as ordered by the superintendent or blower.

The mechanical part of the work requires either a stationary engineer of comparatively low grade or a motor tender. The position requires a man above ordinary intelligence, however, as the success of the furnace operation depends in part upon his accuracy in charging and in recording charges.

Skip oiler (Hoist oiler).—Oils hoisting engine, bell mechanism of furnace, skip-car guides, cables, etc. Usually looks after journals of cinder ladles and "breaks in" for extra bridge oiler. Light work, requiring some skill and experience.

Skip pitman (Skip scrapper, Skip laborer).—Cleans up material which falls into the skip pit outside of the skip bucket. Common unskilled labor, with shovel.

Bottom filler (Barrow man, Buggy man).—Where larry cars are not used, transfers materials from stock piles or bins to furnace hoist. Uses wheelbarrows or buggies which are put on elevators in plants using hand-charged furnaces or emptied into the "skip" in plants using mechanically charged furnaces. Heavy, fairly continuous work, with short rest periods, and performed by unskilled laborers.

Bottom filler's helper (Barrow man's helper, Buggy man's helper).—Shovels materials into barrows or buggies when these are loaded from ground, and in some plants spells the bottom filler. Moderately heavy, unskilled manual labor.

Cager.—On hand-charged furnaces, supervises and assists in putting barrows on elevator hoist, and signals top filler when to hoist elevator; also, in some places, keeps record of charges. On mechanically charged furnaces, supervises filling of the "skip" by means of which furnace is charged, and signals skip operator; also keeps record of charges. In some plants, however, skip operators perform these duties. On hand-charged furnaces the cager does considerable manual labor, while on other furnaces the work is mostly supervisory, of not very high grade.

Weighmaster.—Has charge, under the blower, of the stock-house men at hand-filled furnaces, weighs and records material charged into the furnace. Is responsible that proper amount, as directed by the superintendent, is charged. Semiclerical work.

Stock-house laborer.—Cleans up ore, coke, and limestone that falls in stock-bin alleys and skip pit, when such work is not done by the larry man's helper or skip pitman. Unskilled, manual labor with shovel and wheelbarrow.

Top filler (Topman).—Operates, on hand-charged furnaces, the vertical hoist by which the barrows of materials are drawn to the top of the furnace; dumps the materials from these barrows into the furnace hopper, and operates the mechanism by which the bell at the bottom of the hopper is lowered, allowing the materials to fall into the furnace. Hard physical labor, done at an elevation and, in many plants, is exposed to the weather.

Stock-yard laborer.—General labor on stock piles, in bins, handling coke dust, tending fires, sweeping, cleaning stock yards, etc. Unskilled work, varying from light to heavy manual labor.

Coke-dust handler.—Shovels coke dust from pockets and wheels it to the dump pile or cars. Unskilled, manual labor usually performed by pocket trimmers or stock-house laborers.

BLOWING.

Blower (Turn foreman, Furnace foreman).—In charge of the working of furnaces, under the direction of the superintendent. Usually the superintendent determines the proportion of materials charged, the number of revolutions the blowing engines are to make and the temperature to be maintained, the blower being responsible for carrying out his orders. The superintendent also fixes the approximate time when the furnace is to be tapped. The blower determines the exact time and manner of tapping and has charge of the entire casting force. The work is largely supervisory. It requires considerable practical working knowledge and occasionally demands a great deal of manual work.

Stove tender.—Has charge of the regenerative stoves in which the blast is heated by the waste furnace gases and, under the direction of the blower, is responsible for the proper heating of the blast. Changes the stoves periodically (usually every hour) by admitting air into those in which the brickwork is hot and gas into those that are to be heated. As it takes but a few minutes to change stoves, the stove tender is usually assigned to other duties, such as keeping the blowpipes and tuyère glasses clean, tending the water-circulation system and gas washer, taking test samples of cinder and iron, etc. The mechanical part of the work of changing stoves can be learned in a few days as it consists chiefly in manipulating the valves by which the flow of gas and air is controlled. The work is comparatively easy but varies according to the extra duties assigned.

Stove cleaner.—Removes, shovels into wheelbarrows, and takes away, the cinder, dust, and various débris that accumulate in the stoves. This work is not heavy and requires little skill or training. The position is usually filled by an unskilled laborer.

Flue-dust laborers.—The gas coming through the downcomer of the furnace passes through the dust catcher, the dust collecting in a pocket in the bottom. The flue-dust laborers, by opening a chute, cause the dust to fall into a car, although in some places it is put into wheelbarrows and wheeled away. They also sprinkle the flue dust with water as it is loaded into the cars. Light, unskilled, manual labor, usually done by stove cleaners.

Gas-washer man.—In charge of operation of the gas washer. Tends apparatus by which furnace gases are washed before being used in the gas engines or under the boilers and, in some plants, before being returned to the stoves. Comparatively simple and slightly skilled work. Types of gas washers differ widely in construction and in mode of operation.

Gas-washer laborer.—General labor around gas washer, unskilled.

Blowing engineer (Stationary engineer, Steam blowing engineer, Gas blowing engineer).—In charge of steam or gas blowing engines and, under the direction of the blower or superintendent, regulates the number of revolutions the engines make per minute. Also in charge of machinery generating electric current for motors, transfer cars, etc. The work is that of a stationary engineer of the highest grade.

Assistant blowing engineer (Checker, Second engineer).—Assists blowing engineer. The position may be considered as a training for the higher position of blowing engineer.

Pump tender (Pump man).—Operates pumps supplying water for cooling furnaces and for gas-washing system. In many plants the pumps are in charge of the blowing engineer. Light work, semiskilled.

Oiler, blowing engines (Oiler and wiper, Bottom oiler).—Oils and wipes blowing engines, pumps, etc., in engine room. The position requires a man of some skill, but, most of all, of experience, in order to avoid injury from moving machinery. An opportunity is afforded to learn the work of the blowing engineer.

Engine-room laborer (Janitor).—Carries oil and waste, cleans up, scrubs floors, etc. Light, manual labor, unskilled.

Oiling-system operator.—Operates oil-pumping system and filters for gas-blowing engines.

Engine-house crane-man.—Operates crane in blowing-engine house. The crane is not used very often, but when it is used it is usually operated by a handy man or operator taken temporarily from another crane.

CASTING.

Keeper.—Has charge, under the direction of the blower, of tapping the iron and cinder from the furnace. The greater part of the actual work—drilling the hardened clay out of the tap hole—is done by the keeper's helpers, though the keeper usually holds the bar by which the clay is removed or operates the compressed-air or electric drill for accomplishing the same purpose. While the metal is being run off the keeper directs its flow into the ladles or into the casting bed, and often does much of the work. After the cast he directs the work of closing the tap hole with clay and operates the "mud gun" which is used to force the clay into the tapping hole. The position of keeper is one of responsibility, and requires considerable experience. It may be regarded as training for the higher and more responsible position of blower. The keeper acts as blower in case the latter is absent, and in some places regularly performs the duties of blower on the night turn. The work of the casting crew (keeper, keeper's helper, and cinder snapper) is intermittent under ordinary conditions, since the work is done only in preparation for and during the casts (except for the tapping of cinder). These casts occur only every four to eight hours under normal conditions, and the actual time that the crew is busy during a turn varies from about 50 to 80 per cent. The tapping of the cinder varies in frequency according to the size of the furnace and to the nature of the materials charged. While casting and tapping cinder the crew is exposed to intense heat and sulphur fumes at times, and to the danger of burns from hot metal and sparks. Safety shields and respirators are provided in many places.

Keeper's helpers.—The first helper, during a cast, usually tends the skimmer which separates the slag from the iron, keeps the metal running, and assists the keeper in closing the tap hole. After the cast is finished he cleans the skimmer, puts up the iron dam, adjusts the cut-out runner gates, and helps to clean and line the main trough. If the keeper is absent during a cast the first helper usually takes charge of the furnace crew.

The second helper cleans the runners after a cast, lines them with sand, and wheels old sand away. During the cast he helps keep the metal running, tends the runner gates, and assists in closing the tap hole of the furnace.

At many furnaces the work of the keeper and helpers (except tapping) is interchangeable. At times all break scrap, wheel sand, line runners, and clean up. Test samples of slag and metal are taken of each cast by the helpers or some other employee assigned to the work. The work of breaking scrap, cleaning up, and wheeling materials is sometimes done by third and fourth helpers, or furnace laborers.

Cinder snapper.—The keeper usually opens and closes the cinder notch, the cinder snapper's duties being to keep the cinder and slag moving through the runner and to clean the runner after the cinder has been tapped. Also keeps the slag flowing through runner to cinder ladle when the furnace is being tapped, and after the cast cleans up the slag and wheels or carries it away. Unskilled, manual labor.

Clay man.—Prepares clay and loam, makes it into balls for filling tap hole, and wheels it to furnace. In some places cokes ladles, wheels in coke dust, handles tools and cleans up. Duties are performed by cinder dumpers, cast-house laborers, or stove cleaners in some places. Light manual labor, requiring but little skill or experience.

Tuyère man.—Fits and changes tuyères (the water-cooled pipes through which the blast enters the furnace), regulates and keeps in repair the water-cooling system by which the lower part of the furnace, or hosh, is kept cool. In many plants no separate occupation is carried for this work, which is done by pipe fitters whenever necessary. The work is largely that of a pipe fitter. Although they are employed around the furnace, many of the conditions of danger and discomfort mentioned as applying to keepers and their helpers do not apply to the tuyère men. They are not on the floor during the cast, except in emergencies.

Water tender.—Tends the water and cleans the water-cooling system of the furnaces, changes screens, assists in changing tuyères, and takes samples of casts. The work varies from light to heavy manual labor. An experienced employee is required for the position, which, in some plants, is ranked higher than that of keeper.

Cast-house laborer.—General labor around cast house, wheeling coke dust, sand, and scrap; also breaking scrap and cleaning up. Unskilled, manual labor performed by keepers' helpers or cinder men in some places.

Scrap man.—Picks scrap left in the runners after casting, or collected in the yards, and loads it into the "skip" or charging buggies. Requires no large amount of manual labor or skill.

Coke-dust man (Ladle coker).—Wheels coke dust and covers iron in ladles to prevent chilling. This work is done by keeper's helper at many furnaces. Unskilled, manual labor, exposed to intense heat while covering iron.

Test carrier (Sampler).—Carries samples of cast from furnace to laboratory for analysis.

Molder (Chill molder).—Prepares sand beds for casting when pigs are cast on the floor; also makes molds for castings used around the plant. These castings are made from hot metal taken from furnace during a cast. Position requires a man highly skilled in the work, which is light.

Cast-house craneman.—Operates electric crane handling sand, clay, flue dust, scrap, and sand-bed castings in cast house. In some places where sand-bed castings are broken up by a hydraulic pig breaker, he operates both the crane and the pig breaker. Light work, requiring an experienced employee.

Barman.—Guides sand castings by means of a long bar so that crane hooks supporting the castings will not be struck by plunger of hydraulic pig breaker. Unskilled, manual labor.

Hooker-on.—Hooks crane chains to pigs cast in sand bed and when pig is lifted from bed knocks loose sand off with a sledge hammer. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Waterer.—Sprays pigs cast in sand mold with water to hasten cooling. Done by iron carrier or hooker-on in some places. Unskilled, light manual labor.

Iron breaker.—When iron is cast in sand beds, or chill molds, the iron in each of the molds is known as a "pig," and that in the "runner," by which iron is led to the mold, is known as the "sow." It is the duty of the iron breaker to shovel sand over the molten iron, spray it with water, break the pigs from the sow, and to break the sow into convenient lengths. In some establishments where the work is not specialized he also performs the duties of iron handler. In plants where the iron is used in a molten condition or cast in pig machines this work is entirely eliminated. The work is done with heavy sledges and bars and is very hard manual labor, but it is usually arranged that breakers are relieved by "spell hands" or do lighter work during the intervals between casts, and they are usually allowed to go home as soon as their daily task is completed, so that the actual amount of working time for this occupation is not over 10 hours per day, and frequently is less than 10 hours.

Iron handler and loader.—Carries iron from the casting floor and piles it in the yard or loads it on cars. This work is frequently divided between two occupations: Iron carrier, who removes the iron from the casting floor; and iron loader, who loads it on cars. The work is essentially the same for both occupations. The work is heavy manual labor, requiring little more than strength and endurance. It is usually intermittent in character, though in some places it is so arranged that the men work continuously for shorter hours. In most plants the iron is loaded directly from the pig machine or from the piles with magnet cranes.

Iron breakers, iron handlers, and loaders sometimes work interchangeably.

Pig-machine craneman (Pouring operator).—Operates crane handling metal in the pig-machine casting house. The ladle of metal is lifted from the car in which it is brought from the furnace and placed in a machine or device which may be tilted by a crane to pour the metal, the crane being operated by the craneman as directed by the pig-machine foreman. In some places the ladle is placed on a small car with an electric tilting device, in which case the pouring is done by one of the pig-machine men.

Pig-casting machine operator (Pourer, Iron pourer, Motorman).—The ordinary pig machine consists of a series of molds mounted on an endless chain into which iron is poured from a ladle. The molds then pass under a water spray which hardens the metal and the pig drops from the mold at the end of the machine. As the molds return to the pouring ladle they are sprayed with a tar, lime, or clay wash to prevent the iron from sticking. The operator has charge of the pouring, doing the work himself if the ladle is poured from an electric car, or directing the work if the ladle is tilted by the craneman. The work is light, but an experienced man is required for the position.

Pig-machine runner man (First helper).—The runner man keeps the trough, from ladle to molds, clear of graphite and chilled iron while iron is being poured. Unskilled, manual labor, with exposure to intense heat and danger of burns from sparks while pouring.

Pig-machine laborer.—Removes with a sledge or bar any pigs that stick in the molds (Knocker out). Prepares and sprays molds with lime, tar, or clay wash to prevent iron from sticking (Lime man). The newer machines are equipped with an automatic knocker and sprayer. Light, manual labor requiring no skill or experience.

Ladle cleaner (Sculler).—Removes the slag and sculls of metal and cinder from the ladle. The work requires some skill and experience and is hard and heavy, much of it being done while the ladle is hot. The ladle cleaners also help load the sculls on cars in some instances.

Ladle liner.—Repairs and replaces linings of ladles. If the ladle is merely patched by smearing clay over slight breaks in the lining, the work requires but little skill or experience. If, however, the ladle requires a complete lining, the work is done by bricklayers who are skilled and experienced in such work.

Barman (Toolman).—Carries furnace tools and bars to and from blacksmith shops. Unskilled, manual labor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cinder-pit craneman (Cinder craneman).—At some furnaces the cinder and slag are run into pits. As the cinder falls into the pit it is sprayed with water, which causes it to granulate. The cinder-pit craneman operates an electric crane, which removes the granulated cinder from the pit to cars for shipment or to dump. Steam hoists and locomotive cranes are used also for handling cinder. Light manual labor, requiring but little skill or experience.

Cinder-car operator.—Works around the cinder crane, guiding the bucket, shoveling cinder that falls to the ground, leveling the granulated cinder loaded on cars, etc. Unskilled manual labor, moderately heavy.

Cinder man (Cinder-pit laborer, Cinder-dump laborer).—Handles the cinder on its way to and at the cinder dump; also, cleans up the cinder pits and cleans away cinder around the furnaces not cared for by the cinder snappers. The work is unskilled and varies greatly in severity, some of that on the cinder dump being very hard, while much of the cleaning up is comparatively light and easy.

Cinder-ladle oiler.—Oils journals of cinder ladles. Work usually done by the skip oiler. Light work, practically unskilled.

Scrap-drop operator (Scrap-drop engineer, Scrap-drop craneman).—Operates steam or electric scrap-drop crane or hoisting engine, which manipulates a bucket or magnet for loading scrap on cars, or raises an iron ball, that is dropped on sculls to break them. The work is that of a low-grade stationary engineer or craneman.

Scrap-drop laborer (Scrap picker).—Unloads and reloads scrap and breaks ladle sculls. Acts as crane hooker for scrap-drop crane. Unskilled manual labor, with the usual danger work around hoisting cranes.

Ball man.—When scrap-drop hoist is used instead of a crane, the ball man swings the ball so that it will fall on the sculls when released by the hoist. Unskilled, manual labor.

Engineer, locomotive.—Operates locomotive on either narrow or standard gauge track used for carrying cars of ore, coke, or limestone to stock bins; molten metal to the Bessemer or open-hearth furnaces, or pig machine; cinder to the cinder dump, etc. The work is similar to that usually performed by locomotive engineers in freight yards.

Fireman, locomotive.—Usual duties of a locomotive fireman.

Laborer, general yard (Pig-iron loader and unloader, Sweeper, Iron piler).—General labor around furnace yard, loading pig iron from stock for shipment, etc. Light to heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Oil-house man.—Filters oil, washes waste, and distributes same. In some places filters water for boilers. Light work, semiskilled.

Pig-conveyer operator (Pig-conveyor operator's helper).—Operates and repairs conveyor which carries iron from pig machine to Bessemer stock yard.

Pipe fitter (Tuyère man).—Attends and repairs piping on steam and water fittings, etc.

Tool-room man (Toolman, Tool keeper).—In charge of mechanical tools and does some minor repair work.

Water carrier.—Carries water for drinking purposes. Unskilled; done by boy.

SINTERING FLUE DUST.

Flue-dust laborer.—Sprinkles flue dust in cars with water, dumps cars, and shovels out flue dust that sticks to sides of cars. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor. Very dusty and dirty work.

Craneman.—Operates crane which transfers ore from stock pile to mixer.

Mixer man.—Opens chute to allow flue dust to fall into mixer, controls flow of water into mixer, and operates the mixer machine which makes a paste of the ore and water. Light work, unskilled, but requiring some experience in order to keep the ore at the proper consistency.

Charge-car man.—The ore goes from the mixer on a conveyor to a bin. Charge-car man opens chute of bin and fills the charge car, runs the car to the pans, and dumps the ore. Light manual labor, all operations being done by means of levers. Low-grade motorman.

Igniter man.—In charge of sintering crew, and responsible for proper sintering of ore. Ignites flue dust and dumps pans after dust is sintered when self-dumping conveyor is not used. The work is largely supervisory and requires a man with considerable experience.

Pan floor man.—Cleans sintering pans and grates, knocks out ore that sticks in pans, helps dump ore into pans, levels ore in pans for burning, assists and works under direction of igniter. Heavy, unskilled, manual labor, exposed to heat from burning dust.

Hoist man.—Operates lever-controlled electric hoist which carries sintered ore to screen house, and which automatically dumps the ore on the screens where the dust is separated from the ore. Light work, requiring man of ordinary intelligence.

"Fines" car man.—As the ore passes over the screens, the fine dust goes into a bin. The "fines" car man opens the chute of the bin, allowing the dust to fall into a hand car. He then pushes the car to the mixer where he dumps the dust, to be resintered. Heavy and dusty, unskilled, manual labor.

Oiler.—General oiler of machinery. Light, unskilled work.

BRIQUETTE WORK.

Flue-dust laborer.—(Same description as for Flue-dust laborer, above.)

Pressman.—Controls flow of dust and adhesive medium into machine, and operates the machine. The machine, which is practically automatic, mixes the flue dust with the adhesive medium, presses it into bricks in hydraulic molds, bakes it by steam heat, and discharges the briquettes upon a conveyor which carries them to the stock pile. Light manual labor, semiskilled, and requiring a man above ordinary intelligence.

Piler.—Takes briquettes from conveyor and places them in piles or loads them on cars. Heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

BESSEMER CONVERTERS.

STOCKING AND CHARGING.

Stocker and Stocker's helper (Barrow man, Coke and limestone wheeler, Metal loader and wheeler, Stock unloader, Pig-iron unloader).—Unload pig iron, coke, limestone, and scrap from cars to stock piles; load these materials on wheelbarrows or buggies and take to hoist or dump into skip of cupola.

Cupola hoist man (Hoist man, Skip operator, Skip engineer).—Operates the hoist upon which materials are raised from the ground level to the charging level of the cupolas. In some places the cupola is equipped with a skip hoist the same as a blast furnace, in which case the duties are similar to those of a skip operator. Practically no skill required. Comparable with the work of freight-elevator operators. The work is frequently done by boys or common laborers.

Cupola charger (Top filler, Top man).—Wheels materials in barrows from the hoist and dumps them into the cupola. This work is done in some plants by the use of a charging machine, similar in general plan to the open-hearth charging machine, or by a skip hoist, which mechanically fills the cupola, similar to that in blast-furnace practice. Hand filling is hard, hot work, and in many ways similar to the work of top fillers at the blast furnace, a cupola resembling in general plan a miniature blast furnace.

Cupola melter (Cupola tender, Cupola foreman).—Has general charge of the cupola and crew, regulates the blast, and directs the tapping of the metal. The position is largely supervisory, requiring a man with some practical experience.

Cupola melter's helper (Second melter).—Taps cinder from cupola, cleans cinder runner and floor, and covers metal in ladles with coke dust after tapping, when the cupolas are distant from converters. Moderately heavy, unskilled manual labor.

Cupola tapper.—Taps iron and cinder from cupolas at direction of melter; also cleans up the metal and the cinder runners. The work is sometimes divided into iron tapping and cinder tapping and is somewhat analogous to blast-furnace practice, though it is much lighter. In some plants the melter does the iron tapping, the cinder tapping and cleaning up being done by his helper.

Cupola tapper's helper.—Wheels clay ("ball stuff") used in tamping holes and lining runners. Light, unskilled, manual labor.

Cupola liner (Cupola patcher).—Relines the cupolas with refractory material; also usually does other work, such as bottom making and ladle lining, when not employed at regular duties. Where there are only a few cupolas this work is done by the ladle liners or melters. In most cases nothing more than patching with fire clay is necessary, which can be done by comparatively low-grade men. The work is disagreeable and carries some danger from the falling of sculls and loose materials, although this can be effectually prevented.

Cupola liner's helper (Cupola patcher's helper).—Wheels the materials needed, and generally assists the cupola liners in the performance of their duties. Light, unskilled, manual labor.

Cupola locomotive engineer (Ladle-car engineer).—Operates locomotive delivering hot metal from cupolas to mixer. Duties similar to those of an engineer in freight switching yards.

Cupola locomotive switchman.—Couples and uncouples cars and throws switches on tracks leading to cupola.

Mixer craneman.—Operates crane which empties ladles of metal from blast furnace or cupola into the mixer. In small establishments also oils and greases the crane. High-grade craneman.

Mixer ladle-crane oiler.—Oils machinery of crane used to empty ladles of metal into mixer, where oiling is not done by craneman.

Ladle skimmer.—Skims slag and coke dust from metal in ladles received from blast furnace or cupola before iron is poured into the mixer and keeps the mouths of the iron ladles clean from deposits of metal and slag. Unskilled, manual labor.

Mixer man.—Weighs metal received from blast furnaces and delivered to converter vessels, operates metal mixer, and handles metal from time received in ladles from blast furnaces until delivered into ladles for vessels. The position is largely supervisory, although in some places the mixer foreman operates the lever for pouring metal from the mixer, patches noses, and makes ordinary repairs.

Mixer lever man.—Operates lever which tilts the mixer and pours metal into ladle to be delivered to vessels. Light work, requiring some experience.

Mixer slag man, first.—Operates oil burner, pulls slag from pouring-out hole, helps skim slag from metal in ladle before it is poured into mixer, and patches mixer nose when necessary. Unskilled, manual labor.

Mixer slag man, second.—Stands at side door and pushes slag from surface of metal in mixer to pouring-out nose, prepares nose-patching material, helps scull and patch runners, and helps skim slag from metal in ladles. Unskilled, manual labor.

Runner man, first (Iron pourer, Trough man).—Operates electric or cable car that carries iron ladle from mixer to converter vessels; also dumps the iron into the vessels with a hydraulic machine. When metal is not poured directly into converter vessel, adjusts movable clay-lined runner for pouring into vessel from a point at the side and to rear of vessel mouth. In some plants the runner man weighs manganese and puts it into the vessel as directed by the blower. Skilled labor requiring little exertion, but involving exposure to high temperature for short intervals.

Runner man, second (Crane hooker, Hook-on, Ladle watcher).—Hooks dumping device to ladle which empties contents into vessel, wheels manganese from stock bin to vessel, and assists scrap man in throwing scrap into vessel. Unskilled, manual labor, moderately heavy, with exposure to heat at short intervals.

Vessel scrapper (Vessel scrapper helper, Scrap man).—Wheels and charges steel scrap into the mouth of the converter, at the signal of the blower, to lower the temperature of the molten metal. (In some plants this occupation is eliminated by introducing a little steam with the blast. "Scrapping" is usually preferred, however.) In some plants the scrap is shoveled into the mouth of the converter when it is turned on its side. During the few moments of actual exposure the heat is intense. The position is filled by relatively unskilled workmen. In other plants the scrap is charged by means of a chute while the converter is in an upright position, and when this is the case the conditions in respect to heat are rendered quite tolerable.

Scrap man (Scrap-car laborer).—Cleans up scrap, loads on buggy, wheels to converter, and throws into vessel, as directed by the blower. Unskilled, manual labor.

CONVERTING.

Blowing engineer.—In charge of and operates engine which furnishes the blast for the converter and the cupolas. The work is of lower grade though of the same general nature as that of the blowing engineer in the blast-furnace department.

Oiler and wiper.—Oils and wipes blowing engines and assists engineer. In small establishments the oiling and wiping are sometimes done by the engineer.

Blower.—In charge of the converters and directly responsible for the conversion of the molten metal. The specific duties consist in regulating the blast, the valves being controlled by levers in the "pulpit" (an elevated platform opposite the converters), and in regulating the temperature by admitting steam with the blast or by signaling the vessel scrapper to add cold scrap. The blower decides when the heat is fully "blown," tilts the converter, or orders the first regulator to do so, and signals what quantity of recarburizer shall be added as the metal runs into the ladle. This is one of the most responsible positions in the entire industry and highly skilled operators are required. All decisions as to the temperature and chemical state of the metal are made almost entirely on the basis of the color and general appearance of the flame. The work requires constant attention, the process being repeated every 8 to 15 minutes.

Regulator, first (Assistant blower).—Under the direction of the blower, operates the hydraulic levers by means of which the vessel is tilted to receive metal and during the course of the blow to receive scrap, etc.; also to pour the metal into ladles. This is a responsible position and requires experience and good judgment. The first regulator is on the platform with the blower, and the position may be regarded as one of training for that of blower. In some plants the blower instead of the first regulator tilts the vessel for pouring.

Regulator, second (Pouring craneman, Steel craneman).—Operates the levers which control the movements of the hydraulic jib crane on which the casting ladle is mounted. The ladle is placed to receive the metal poured from the vessel, and when filled is swung around over the molds at the pouring platform. After the metal is cast the ladle stopper is removed, the ladle tipped so that the slag and cinder runs from it, and the nozzle cleaned. It is then brought back into position and the stopper replaced. In some of the large plants operating three or four converters the work is somewhat differently divided, the first regulator controlling the converter only until the heat is blown, when a second regulator handles it for dumping, inspecting, and repairing bottom, etc., while the third regulator controls the ladle cranes. In addition, the second or third regulator frequently operates the "car pusher." Light work requiring a highly skilled and experienced employee.

Vessel man and Vessel man's helper (Vessel foreman).—Are responsible for maintaining the converter in good working order. Their duties consist (1) in inspection, (2) in changing and repairing bottoms, (3) in sculling, patching, and relining. After each "blow" the vessel is turned down so that the condition of its lining and particularly the bottom, where the blast is introduced through tuyères and which is subject to the greatest wear, may be inspected. If the inspection shows the bottom to be in bad condition with the tuyères nearly burned out, which occurs after from 20 to 30 heats, the entire bottom, which is constructed so that it may be easily removed, is taken off and a new bottom, which has been prepared by the bottom makers, is put on. The new bottom is placed on a hydraulic jack, stationary or mounted on a movable truck, directly under the converter, the outer edges of the bottom are covered with a ring of moist fire clay to give an air-tight connection with the vessel, and the whole is then pressed tightly against the bottom of the vessel by the hydraulic jack and held in place until the connections have been made. This operation is performed with remarkable rapidity. If only one or two tuyères are shown to be badly burned, it is necessary only to "blank" them by closing the air holes with refractory material. When slag or other accretions collect on the nose of the converter, the vessel men or the helpers pull or pry it off with a long rod or bar. If the inspection shows a bad spot in the vessel lining, it is repaired by throwing wet "ball stuff" on it and roughly tamping it down. When the lining is worn out, which occurs in the ordinary acid converter only after several thousand heats, the vessel men completely reline it. The duties also include, where no separate occupation is carried for the purpose, the cleaning of "sculls" and "spittings" from the shield or stack into which the converter blows.

The vessel men and helpers regularly work as a crew and there is little differentiation of duties, except that the vessel men supervise all the work and perform those parts which require experience and skill. The helpers are of all grades; some do the most difficult work, while others do little more than wheel materials. The position of vessel man is one which requires long experience and good judgment, and as emergencies must frequently be met, the men must have the ability to think and act quickly. The work is intermittent in character, with short periods of the greatest activity followed by long periods of comparative inaction, save for inspection, to which one man can attend.

Vessel laborer.—Wheels patching material from crusher to vessel floor for vessel men and runner men. This material is sometimes lifted to vessel floor by crane and wheeled to vessel by vessel man's helper. Unskilled, manual labor.

Shield cleaner.—Cleans spittings from shields and vessel floor and helps scull runners. The loose spittings are usually cleaned from the shield by the vessel man's helper or runner man after each blow, to prevent accumulations, while "sailors" remove spittings that stick to the shield and to overhead cables. The work is light and requires no experience except in climbing to clean cables and upper part of shield.

Manganese breaker.—Breaks manganese and wheels it to vessel floor, or shovels into boxes to be hoisted to vessel floor by crane. Unskilled, light manual labor.

Manganese heater.—In charge of a small furnace in which ferromanganese or spiegel is heated for recarburizing the blown metal; usually has helpers, who break and wheel materials and help to keep up the fire. The position is one requiring considerable experience to maintain the proper temperature. There is little heavy work connected with the position, but there is considerable exposure to high temperatures, due not only to the nature of the occupation but to the position of the furnace.

Manganese man (Manganese wheeler).—Weighs cold manganese, wheels to vessel, and charges same into steel ladles, as directed by the blower. The charging is sometimes done by the runner man. Light manual labor, unskilled.

Scrap hoist operator.—Operates hoist which is sometimes used instead of a crane to lift scrap to scrap platform. Unskilled, light work.

Clean-up.—Cleans up slag and steel that spills on vessel floor. Moderately heavy manual labor, requiring no skill or experience.

Bottom and ladle house craneman.—Operates electric crane handling vessel bottoms and material in the bottom house and ladles in the ladle repair shop. In some establishments there are separate cranes for the bottom house and ladle repair shop.

Bottom maker and Bottom maker's helper.—Rebuild converter bottoms. The essential parts of the bottom consist of (1) a cylindrical steel casing sloping out at the top to the diameter of the vessel, the lower part forming the "blast box" into which the blast is admitted by a large pipe. (2) Above the "blast box" is the refractory bottom, which is pierced by a large number of small holes for admitting and distributing the blast in the vessel. In acid vessels these tuyères, or holes, are formed in fire-clay bricks of special design (in practice the entire brick is known as a tuyère), around which ganister is rammed. When the bottom is removed by the vessel men, the bottom makers and helpers cool it with water and then chip out all the ganister and knock out the tuyère bricks. New tuyère bricks are then placed in position, and moist ganister is tightly rammed around them until it is level with their top. The entire bottom is then placed in an oven, where it is kept at a steady heat until thoroughly dried. In addition to this work the bottom maker's helper in many plants also grinds the refractory materials used for this purpose and for repairing vessels and ladles. The work is done by the bottom makers and helpers working as a crew and there is usually little distinction of duties. Bottom makers not only supervise the work, but also do a large part of it. They must have considerable experience and must exercise extreme care, so that the position is one of some importance. The helpers vary considerably in grade.

Bottom-oven fireman.—Fires ovens used for drying bottoms. Moderate manual labor, practically unskilled. Oil or gas burning ovens are usually controlled by the bottom maker.

Crusher man, first (Pan man).—Has charge of machine crushing and grinding refractory materials used for patching and lining bottoms, vessels, ladles, mixers, runners, and iron notches of blast furnaces. Helps dump material into machine and sees that the grinding is done properly. Light manual labor, practically unskilled.

Crusher man, second.—Loads refractory material into wheelbarrow, brings to grinding machine, and assists first crusher man. Unskilled, manual labor.

Mixing-house engineer.—Operates crushing and grinding engine and machinery. Electric power is used in some plants, the machine being operated by the crusher man. Low-grade stationary engineer.

Mixing-house oiler.—Oils grinding and mixing machinery. Light, unskilled, manual labor.

CASTING.

Stopper setter.—Removes old stoppers from the ladles and inspects and places in position the new ones. In a few plants the stopper setter also removes the old nozzle and sets in place a new one. The position is one which requires a large amount of experience and more than ordinary care, because a mistake in selecting or setting the stopper means almost certain injury to an employee.

Stopper setter's helper.—Carries new stoppers to pouring platform, delivers used stoppers to stopper maker, wheels material used by stopper maker, helps to set stoppers, and does general labor work. Unskilled, light manual labor.

Steel pourer (Ladle man).—In charge of and does the actual work of pouring (teeming) the steel from the ladle into the molds, and in some places sets the ladle stopper in position. The flow of metal is controlled by a lever on the side of the ladle, attached to the stopper within the ladle. The pourer determines to what height in the mold the steel should be poured to give an ingot of the desired weight. He is in general charge of the entire casting crew of a mill and is responsible for the metal from the time it is tapped from the furnace until the ingots are ready for delivery to the blooming mill. Either he or one of his helpers makes a test casting from each ladle, which casting is given chemical analysis. The position is one requiring some practical knowledge of metallurgy, but chiefly long experience in the handling of molten steel.

Mold-car pusher (Car mover, Mold-car operator, Car pusher, Stand lineman).—Operates levers to move mold cars under pouring ladles, and in some places assists the blower in tilting the vessel back for a new heat. Light work, unskilled, usually performed by boys.

Mold capper (Platform man).—Puts aluminum or other material into mold during pour to stop boiling of metal, though this work is sometimes done by the steel pourer. Places an iron plate or "cap" on top of the mold and secures it by means of a bar inserted under two lugs. Sometimes sprays top of mold with water to hasten cooling. After the steel has partially cooled, knocks bar out and removes cap. In addition the mold capper usually has other minor duties and acts as a steel pourer's helper. In any case, skill is required, and the severity of the work through exposure to extreme heat varies greatly.

Platform man (Mold cleaner).—Marks molds with chalk to show the length of ingot, catches the metal for tests, and cleans scrap off molds. Unskilled, manual labor, with some exposure to heat while pouring.

Test carrier.—Carries tests and reports to and from laboratory.

Cinder pitman (Vessel slag man, Pit slag man).—Cleans up and removes the cinder and metal from the pit or floor of the Bessemer building. The work is as a whole unskilled. It is, however, for the most part, hard manual labor done under conditions of great heat when working around and under the vessels and ladles.

Ingot stripper (Stripper man).—Operates the crane for stripping ingots. In the modern plants the ingots are cast in molds mounted on small cars, which are brought one at a time in front of the steel pourer's platform. After the ingots have sufficiently solidified these cars are removed by locomotives to the ingot stripper, which is frequently located some distance away, and in plants using both the Bessemer and open-hearth processes often does duty for both. The ingot stripping machine is an overhead hydraulic or electric crane of large capacity, equipped with special jaws for gripping the lugs on the side of the ingot mold, and special apparatus for lifting the mold clear of the ingot. Between the jaws is located a large plunger, which can be made to enter through the hole in the top of the mold and exert a pressure on top of the ingot when the mold is lifted. All operations are controlled by levers or controllers in the crane cab. The work requires considerable experience and judgment.

Ingot-stripper laborer (Ingot-stripper cable puller, Ingot-stripper winchman, Mold washer, Mold tar man, Mold shaker, Stool cleaner).—Sees that stripper crane hooks to molds properly and assists stripper man; in some places operates a winch that moves ingot cars under the stripper; in other places, washes, scrapes, and muds molds to prevent ingots from sticking. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Cinder-dump craneman.—Operates crane handling cinder and slag at dump, loading scrap for "scull drop," and in some cases skimming furnace metal before it is put into the mixer. Low-grade craneman.

Cinder-dump crane hooker.—Directs work done by craneman at cinder dump and hooks on tongs and cables. Unskilled, light manual labor.

Cinder-dump laborer (Cinder yardman).—Breaks and loads slag and scrap at cinder dump.

Ladle craneman.—Operates crane which changes intermediate and steel ladles when patching or repairing is required. Also loads scrap and assists stopper setters.

Ladle liner (Ladle patcher).—Patches and relines the ladles in which iron ("direct metal") is brought to the converter or in which steel is handled. The ladles may be patched while still hot by throwing damp clay on the defective spots and tamping it into place. For relining or any considerable repairs the ladle must be removed. In either case the ladle is first cleaned by the ladle liner's helpers, and either the entire lining or such part of it as the ladle liner judges on inspection to be defective is removed. If the ladle is to be entirely relined it is done by the ladle liners, with the assistance of the helpers, by building a wall of fire brick, usually in two courses, around the entire inside of the steel casing. The bottom lining is then made by throwing in moist "ball stuff" (the most refractory of clay), which is tamped down until a homogeneous compact lining is formed. The whole of the brick wall around the sides is then covered with fire clay, which is rammed to fill all cavities between the bricks and to present a smooth surface. A fire (gas, oil, wood, or coke) is then lighted inside the ladle and kept burning until the ladle is entirely dried out. The position of ladle liner is usually filled by skilled bricklayers.

Ladle liner's helper (Ladle liner's laborer).—Removes sculls of slag and metal from the ladles; removes the entire ladle lining or such part as directed by the ladle liner; brings the materials required by the ladle liner; helps to tamp down the clay lining; and, in general, assists the ladle liner in his work. Cleaning and removing ladle linings is particularly hard work, and, as the ladles are cleaned as soon as possible after the metal is cast, the work is frequently done under conditions of excessive heat. The ladle is first turned upside down to dump any liquid slag or metal. It is then turned right side up and when cool enough the men remove the sculls with bars and sledges. In the case of iron ladles this work is made easier by constructing the ladle with a large hole in the bottom, which is covered by an iron plate, over which the refractory clay for the bottom is laid. When a ladle is ready for patching or relining, this bottom plate, together with the clay bottom and any sculls, is pushed up through the ladle by a hydraulic jack.

Ladle-oven fireman.—Fires oven for drying ladles when ovens are not heated by gas or oil. Moderate manual labor, practically unskilled.

Stopper maker.—Makes stoppers for steel ladles. The stopper consists of a steel rod the height of the ladle inclosed in special hollow fire-brick cylinders, and on the lower end is a solid head usually made of a composition of graphite and fire clay and shaped to fit the nozzle. At the top the bar is bent to form a connection with the steel pourer's lever at the side of the ladle, by which it is raised and lowered, regulating the flow of steel. The stopper maker also removes the sleeves and heads from used stoppers, bends the rods to pattern, and puts on new fire-brick sleeves and head. The work is neither difficult nor heavy but requires some skill and experience.

Car and crane greaser (Mill oiler, Mill greaser, Mold-car oiler).—Oils and greases cranes, car shifters, ingot strippers, narrow-gauge buggies, and mold cars. Light work, unskilled.

Mold-yard craneman (Mold craneman).—Operates mold-yard cranes, for handling molds and cold ingots.

Mold-yard man.—Assists around mold-yard crane, unloads and changes molds and stools, and also breaks old molds into scrap size.

Mold-yard scrapman.—Cleans up and loads scrap in mold yard.

Engineer, locomotive (Narrow-gauge engineer, dinkey engineer).—Operates engine transferring ingot cars between converting and blooming mills.

Switchman (Narrow-gauge switchman).—Couples, uncouples, and throws switches.

Tool keeper (Toolman).—In charge of miscellaneous tools used in department.

OPEN-HEARTH FURNACES.

STOCKING, CHARGING, AND MELTING.

Stock craneman.—Operates small cranes of 5 tons or over capacity, handling melting stock (limestone, scrap, pig iron, etc.) for furnaces with crane, magnet, grab bucket, and chains. A great deal of the work is performed by lads of 16 to 20 years of age, since a bright mind and a supple body are great factors in learning to operate and in successfully operating the cranes.

Stocker (Stock laborer, Stock unloader, Stock-house laborer, Scrap-yard laborer, Box loader).—Unloads materials from cars and sorts and assembles different grades of scrap in piles; but principal duty is to load the materials for open-hearth melting (limestone, scrap, pig iron, etc.) into charging boxes. Unskilled work, varying in difficulty and severity with the individual plant. For the greater part, however, the employees may be regarded as selected common labor.

Engineer, locomotive (Narrow-gauge engineer, Stock engineer, Ladle engineer, Dinkey engineer).—Operates locomotives (standard or narrow gauge) used to distribute incoming stock, to transfer melting materials to furnace level, to shift ladle cars from blast furnace to mixer and mold cars from mold yard to pouring platform and thence to stripping cranes, and to haul the red-hot ingots to the blooming mill. The work requires very careful and watchful men, owing to the numerous tracks, crossovers, and short curves, and the many workmen moving about the yards.

Fireman, locomotive.—Fireman on locomotive. Usual duties.

Switchman (Stock switchman, Narrow-gauge switchman, Ladle Switchman).—Couples and uncouples cars and throws switches. Requires careful and watchful men for locomotive engineers. Unskilled labor.

Mixer craniman.—Operates crane that lifts ladle of molten metal from car to mixer and tilts the ladle to pour the metal into the mixer. The metal comes from the blast furnace and is stored in the mixer until desired for use in the open-hearth furnaces. A skilled craniman is required for the position.

Mixer laborer.—General unskilled labor work under mixer foreman.

Mixer man (Mixer lever man).—Operates mixer and handles metal from the time it is received in ladles until it is delivered into ladles for open hearth, including patching noses and ordinary repairs by regular crew. The work is light but requires an experienced employee.

Mixer transfer-car operator.—Operates car hauling metal from mixer to furnaces. The work is that of a low-grade motorman and is sometimes done by the charging-machine operator.

Charging-machine operator.—Operates the machine for charging materials into the furnace and for placing and removing the runner for pouring hot metal. The usual type of machine consists of an electrically propelled truck, moving on a track parallel with the furnace fronts, on which truck is mounted an electric carriage, moving to and from the furnaces. A large bar or ram projects on the furnace side and is provided with a specially shaped head, which engages in a groove at the end of the charging box. This bar can be moved back and forth, up and down, or made to revolve, so that with it the box is picked up, pushed through the open door of the furnace, and dumped. The machine is also used to shift the cars bearing the boxes to the point at which they will be used. The work requires considerable experience, good judgment, and great dexterity of hand, because there are as many as five levers or handles, each of which controls some separate movement of the machine. Furthermore, since a number of men necessarily work on and around the track upon which the charging machine operates, constant watchfulness is demanded.

Hot-metal charger (Ladle-car operator).—The ladle of hot metal from the blast furnace is placed on the charging car by a crane. The charging car is a small electric motor car with a trough at the forward end. The operator stands at the rear end, the ladle being in the center. The car is run to the furnace and the trough is pushed through the open door. The ladle is then tilted by the operator so that the metal pours into the trough and runs into the furnace. Very little skill or experience is required to operate the car, and the position may be compared to that of a low-grade motorman. Light work, with rest periods.

Charging-floor craniman (Crane operator, Hot-metal crane operator).—Operates hydraulic or electric crane to pour hot metal into furnaces and handles miscellaneous material on charging floor. An experienced crane operator is required for the position.

Crane hooker (Hook-on, Hook-up, Box hookman).—Hooks crane chains to ladles, charging boxes, and material to be moved. Unskilled, manual labor; exposed to danger from material falling from crane.

Door operator (Door boy, Door puller).—Operates levers which through electric or hydraulic connections open and close the doors of furnaces for charging or inspecting, or for making bottoms. The work is light, unskilled, and is frequently performed by boys. Operators are usually stationed at a sufficient distance from the furnace not to be exposed to heat.

Melter's helper, first.—In direct charge, under the melter's orders, of the operation of a single furnace. The duties consist of: (1) Directing the charging of materials; (2) regulating the temperature of the furnace, which is done by reversing the gas and air in the regenerators at proper intervals (usually from 15 to 30 minutes), by regulating the flow of gas and air and by charging cold or molten material, as the case may be; (3) inspecting and testing "heat" (particularly by fracture tests) and, upon the melter's decision as to the indication of these tests, making the necessary additions of ore, flux, or recarburizer, as well as seeing that the melter's orders as to tapping are carried out; (4) "making bottoms" and repairing the hearth and lining of the furnace; (5) on Sundays, if the department operates only six days per week, "tending gas" and making minor repairs.

The position requires considerable practical metallurgical knowledge (to be acquired only through experience) combined with supervisory capacity and sufficient strength to stand hard work. The work of making bottoms and repairs on linings is particularly hard, not only because it is heavy work, in which the first helper does his full share, but because it is done directly in front of the furnace door in a very high temperature. Fortunately the work can be finished in from 15 to 30 minutes. In all the work assistance is furnished by the second helpers and the third helpers (cinder pitmen), and if necessary by men from other furnaces, this work being everywhere reciprocal. As the position leads to that of melter it is eagerly sought after.

Melter's helper, second.—Although in general an assistant to the first helper, the second helper has specific charge of the back (casting side) of single furnaces, and, assisted by the third helper (or by second helpers from other furnaces), performs the actual work of tapping. He dries the tapping hole and spout, drills out the magnesite clay with which the tapping holes are closed in stationary furnaces, or signals the first helpers to tilt the furnace, if of the tilting type; with a bar keeps the metal running freely and puts in the recarburizer as the metal runs into the ladle; is everywhere employed in making bottoms and other necessary furnace repairs.

The position requires experience and skill, but no great amount of technical knowledge. The work is hard and heavy, and, though the conditions under which it is done vary greatly, being much improved under the best modern conditions, these employees are still exposed to extremely high temperatures, though usually for short periods. The hazard of severe burns during the process of tapping always exists.

Melter's helper, third (Cinder-pit man; Slagger; Cinder man).—The organization and duties of this group differ rather widely in the various plants. For the majority, however, the duties may be said to consist in cleaning out the cinder pits and in cleaning up the slag, in helping to tap, and in shoveling the recarburizing materials, which have been assembled at the back of the furnace, into the ladles when the metal is run out; also to assist in "making bottoms." In some places the cinder work is done by pit laborers. This is unskilled work, in which considerable strength and endurance frequently are called for.

Door and spout liner.—Lines and repairs furnace doors, hot metal spouts, etc. Has doors ready in reserve. When door burns out, it is taken from furnace for repairs and new door put on. The work is usually done by skilled brick masons.

Door and spout liner's helper.—Assists the liner, and wheels necessary material.

CASTING.

Ladle craneman (Pit craneman, Ladle crane operator).—Operates the large cranes, varying in size from 75 to 200 tons capacity, used at back of furnace to handle the ladles of molten metal. The cranemen place the ladles in position to receive the hot metal when the furnace is tapped and then, at direction of steel pourer, shift them from mold to mold. A great deal of the work is done under conditions of extreme heat and requires greater skill than that of any other cranemen. The work requires men who are quick to judge rightly and to act promptly in emergencies.

Ladle man, first (Steel pourer, Ladle boss, Pit boss).—Has charge of steel ladles, directs the placing of ladles for receiving heats, the setting of nozzles and stoppers, and sculling; is in charge of the pouring platform, and usually pours the first ingot, the remaining ingots being poured by the second ladle man. One of the most responsible positions on the casting floor. Moderately heavy labor, requiring an experienced man. The position is not without danger, and sometimes the ladle man is exposed to considerable heat.

Ladle man, second, third, and fourth.—The work of the second, third, and fourth ladle men is not clearly defined. As a rule, the second ladle man assists and works under the direction of the first ladle man and sometimes caps molds; the third ladle man sets ladle nozzles and cleans sculls from ladles; and the fourth ladle man sculls ladles. At some places, all work interchangeably. The work varies from light to moderately heavy labor, requiring little skill but some practical experience in some instances.

Mold capper (Hot baller).—Caps ingot molds after they are filled with hot metal. Usually done by one of the ladle men.

Nozzle setter.—Sets ladle nozzles when the work is not done by a ladle man. Light work, unskilled, but requiring man with practical experience.

Stopper maker.—(Same description as for Stopper maker, Bessemer converters).

Ladle liner.—(Same description as for Ladle liner, Bessemer converters).

Test carrier.—Carries test casts to laboratory for analysis. Light work, usually done by boys.

Pit laborer (Slager).—Cleans up slag and cinder from the pit behind the furnaces and in some places does the cinder work of the third melter's helper. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor, with exposure to heat while working around hot ladles and hot slag.

Mold-yard craneman.—Operates crane-handling stools, molds, etc.

Ingot stripper.—(Same description as for Ingot stripper, Bessemer converters.)

Ingot-stripper laborer.—(Same description as for Ingot stripper laborer, Bessemer converters.)

Molder.—Makes steel castings for general use. Same kind of work as is done by a molder in a foundry.

PUDDLING MILLS.

Craneman.—Operates electric magnet crane, unloading scrap from cars to stock piles. Work can be done by a man of ordinary intelligence.

Stocker ( Yard man, Wheeler, Scrap man, Piler, Pig-iron wheeler).—In some places scrap iron is unloaded from railroad cars by means of magnet cranes; in other places, the stockers do it by hand. They also load into wheelbarrows and take to the fagot makers or furnaces, scrap, pig iron, and ore. The work varies from light to heavy manual labor, depending upon the kind of scrap being handled. There is considerable danger of cutting the hands on sharp pieces of scrap and the hazard of material falling from the magnet cranes.

Scrap shearman and scrap shearman's helper.—Shears scrap material into short lengths for busheling furnaces and fagot makers. Manual labor, unskilled, but involving danger of cutting hands on scrap or in shears.

The helper brings scrap iron to the shears and shovels it back from shears for stockers to carry away. Moderately heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Puddler (Boiler).—Refines pig iron into wrought iron in a reverberatory furnace. The puddlers' work may be divided into five parts: First, lining the furnace with ore; second, charging the furnace; third, working the metal during the boil; fourth, working the iron into balls; fifth, drawing and delivering the balls to the squeezer. A highly-skilled occupation, requiring considerable experience. The puddler's work is perhaps the hardest physical labor in the industry, and, moreover, the largest part of it is done under conditions of extreme heat. The work is intermittent in character, there being a rest period after each period of great exertion. The heat conditions are in many plants greatly moderated by the use of water-cooled furnace doors and fronts.

Puddler's helper (Under hand).—Assists the puddler in lining the furnace and in charging, working, and drawing the metal. In addition, fires the furnace, watches the product, and sees that the weight of the metal is properly recorded. The position requires less skill and carries with it less responsibility than the position held by the puddler, as all the work is done under the puddler's direction. It is also not quite so severe, because the puddler does the greater portion of the "rabbling" or working of the metal during the boil and also makes the balls. The general conditions of work, however, are much the same as for the puddler.

Frequently two puddlers work the same furnace and divide the pay evenly. This is known as working "level-handed." In this case the two men make an equal division of all the duties.

Busheler (Scrapper).—The duties are practically the same as those of the puddler, except that iron scrap is charged in the furnace instead of pig iron and that each heat requires a shorter time. The scrap is usually brought to the furnace by stockers, shoveled into a suspended charging scoop by the bushelers, and dumped into the furnace, although in many places it is shoveled directly into the furnace. All conditions of work are practically identical with those of the puddler.

Busheler's helper (Scrapper's helper).—Same general duties and conditions as described for puddler's helper. The busheler and helper usually work "level-handed" and employ a fireman to attend the furnace fire.

Knobbler.—Makes wrought iron by treatment of steel scrap in a knobbling furnace. These furnaces are comparatively small, being not over 4½ feet high. A furnace consists of a shallow hearth which may be water cooled; an arched cast-iron top so formed as to contain water; brick sides and back. Near the bottom of the hearth tuyères, two in number, enter, one from each side. Into the hearth is charged charcoal and soft steel scrap to a weight of about 300 pounds. Charcoal is used instead of coal or coke, because it is freer from impurities which would affect the quality of the iron. As the scrap softens it is constantly pried up and turned with a bar to allow the charcoal to roll down under it. When the steel melts, the blast from the tuyères acts upon the metal to oxidize and remove the carbon as in the Bessemer process. As the carbon burns out the melting point rises and the metal "comes to nature" as in puddling. The knobbler works the mass into a ball which is finally taken out with tongs and "shingled" under a hammer. Very often it is heated in a reheating furnace and hammered a second time before being rolled into bar. The material thus obtained is used in the manufacture of iron pipe and of iron sheets. It probably is more nearly pure iron than other ordinary product.

Ash man.—Cleans ashes from furnaces and loads them into wheelbarrows which he wheels to dump. Unskilled, manual labor.

Engineer, stationary.—Operates the engines driving the squeezer and the muck rolls. The work is that of an ordinary stationary engineer.

Water tender.—Tends water in boilers. The boilers are usually heated by waste heat from the puddling and busheling furnaces.

Hammerman (Shingler).—Where a hammer instead of a squeezer is used for making the bloom (shingling), the hammerman grasps the ball of metal with a pair of tongs and holds it under a steam hammer or a drop hammer, turning it over continually until it is shaped into a rough bloom. This term also applies to the hammerman who works down, for rolling, piles made of muck bar. This is very heavy work done under conditions of extreme heat. During the hammering, sparks and pieces of scale fly widely, and to protect the eyes and face from these the hammerman usually wears a mask of iron wire.

Squeezer man.—Tends the rotary squeezer by which the liquid slag is squeezed out of the ball he is roughly shaping into a bloom for rolling. If the ball does not enter easily it is worked in gradually with a bar, and if the bloom does not come out easily from the squeezer, it is pried out with a bar. The work is performed in many plants by each puddler's helper in turn for the product of his own furnace. Hot and comparatively heavy work, but intermittent in character.

Bloom boy (Bloom slinger, Bloom swinger, Buggy man).—Takes the bloom from the squeezer to the rolls, using a pair of tongs suspended from an overhead trolley or an iron buggy. Hot and fairly heavy work but intermittent in character; always performed by men; involves some danger of burns from sparks as bloom passes through the rolls.

Roller.—In charge of the rolling crew rolling the wrought-iron blooms down into long, rough pieces known as "muck bar." The rolls are therefore known as muck rolls. The roller usually handles the iron at the rolls, doing exactly the same work as described for the "rougher down" in the bar mills. In some cases, the work is largely supervisory, the actual work being done by roughers, the roller setting the rolls and watching the product. A responsible position, requiring experience and skill. If the roller handles the bloom at the rolls, the conditions are the same as described for the rougher.

Rougher and Catcher (Rougher-up and Rougher-down).—The rougher and catcher pass the bloom back and forth through the rolls when delivered by the bloom boy. They are usually helped by hook-up when handling heavy blooms. The rougher works on the side next to the squeezer. Heavy work, involving exposure to heat and danger from flying sparks. (See Rougher and catcher, Bar mills.)

Hook-up.—Roughers, catchers, and finishers on the larger rolls are usually assisted by a hook-up who handles heavy material as it is being passed back and forth through the rolls. He uses a long bar, with a hook on one end and a handle on the other, which is suspended by a chain nearer the hook than the handle. The hook is placed underneath the billet to raise it, the bar acting as a lever with the chain as a fulcrum. The work requires some skill in handling heavy pieces, which is gained only by experience. The hook-up works near enough to the rolls to be exposed to the heat and flying sparks.

Roll scale man.—Cleans up and preserves the scale from the squeezer and the rolls, which is used by the puddlers. Comparatively light work, done with shovel and wheelbarrow by an unskilled workman.

Hotbed man (Drag-out).—Where the muck bar does not run to the hotbed on live rolls it is dragged there by the "drag-out" or "drag-down," who uses a pair of tongs. This is heavy work and hot. The "straightener" works on the hotbed, using a hook to arrange the bars as they come from the rolls and a wooden maul to straighten out curved places in the bars. The difficulty of the work varies according to the size of the material rolled. Unskilled, manual labor, exposed to heat.

Fork man.—Works on hotbed. Has long fork suspended by two chains on a trolley. As the bar comes from rolls to hotbed, the two fork handles are raised so that the tines go under the bar. The handles are then lowered and the fork is pushed across the hotbed to the shear side. Unskilled, light work.

Transfer chains on the hotbed do this work in the more modern mills.

Shearman.—Operates shears at end or side of hotbeds, cutting muck bar into lengths desired. The work is moderately heavy and requires but little skill or experience.

Shearman's helper.—Pulls bar across rolls to shears. Manual labor, requiring no skill.

Shear laborers.—After the muck bar is sheared into lengths it is piled on small cars by laborers and taken to the stock room. Unskilled, manual labor.

CRUCIBLE FURNACES.

MILLING.

Stock laborer.—Unloads iron muck bars and scrap from cars to stock pile. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Shear laborer.—Takes iron muck bars and scrap from stock pile, cuts into small pieces on alligator or rotary shears, or punch, and puts into stock bin. Moderately heavy manual labor, varying from unskilled to semiskilled, depending upon whether the laborer sets his own shears. Exposed to hazard of cutting fingers on scrap and in shears.

Weigher (Weigher-up).—Places small scoop on scales, shovels pieces of iron into it until it shows a certain weight, and then places on a pile to be used in filling pots. Unskilled, moderately heavy manual labor.

Medicine man.—Weighs charcoal, manganese, silicon, tungsten, and other materials put into crucible pots as alloys. The amount of each material to be put into a pot is ordered by the superintendent, so that the work, which is light, requires a careful man of ordinary intelligence.

Melter.—Has general charge of the crucible furnaces and melting crew; sees that the proper temperature is maintained, that the crucible pots are charged and drawn properly, and is generally responsible for the proper working of a furnace. The work is largely supervisory and requires a person with considerable practical knowledge, which can be acquired only by long experience.

Shaker-in.—When crucible pots are charged hot, the shaker-in fills the pots and carries them to the furnace on a truck. The pots are charged by the puller-out. Common labor, unskilled.

Puller-out.—Fills crucible pots with melting materials (iron and alloys), charges pots into furnace and draws pots when directed by melter. When pots are charged while hot, they are filled by the shaker-in. The furnaces open from the top and the pots are charged and drawn by special shaped tongs. This exposes the workman to a very high temperature and to the danger of burns if a pot breaks. In some places the pots are drawn mechanically, the puller-out merely steadying and guiding the pot. The work is highly skilled and done under conditions of great heat.

Fluxer.—Skims or swabs the scum or flux floating on top of the steel after the crucible pots have been drawn from the furnace. Hot work, unskilled, usually done by the molder.

Teemer.—The teemer lifts the crucible pots by means of a special shaped pair of tongs and pours the melted steel into molds to cool. In some places the contents of several pots are poured into a ladle and from the ladle into molds, to give a more uniform grade of steel. Mechanical pouring is in vogue at several establishments. In these places the pots are placed one at a time on a tilting device and poured by lever control. The teemer is a semiskilled employee who acts as an assistant to the melter when not pouring. Pouring is hot and heavy work.

Pot boy.—When pouring from crucibles is by mechanical means the pot boy operates a lever which tilts the crucible pot and pours the steel into the mold or ladle. Unskilled, light work, performed by boys.

Molder.—Prepares molds for pouring, removes ingots from molds after hardened, and assists the puller-out in filling crucible pots. The work is semiskilled and can be done only by men with practical experience.

Chipper (Knocker-off).—Chips or drills samples of steel from ingots for analysis, chips defective spots from ingots, and carries ingots to hammer shop. Moderate manual labor, semiskilled, requiring workman of ordinary intelligence.

Ingot grader (Ingot inspector).—Inspects fracture tests from ends of ingots after cooling and grades ingots. Light work, highly skilled and usually done by the foreman or superintendent.

HAMMER SHOP.

Heater.—Charges ingots into furnace, sees that they are heated properly, draws from furnace, and delivers small ingots to hammerman. On small furnaces firemen usually are not employed, in which case the heater shovels coal into the furnace. An important and responsible position, requiring practical knowledge of heating metal and involving considerable manual labor.

Fireman.—Shovels coal and tends fire of large heating furnace. Moderately heavy labor, unskilled.

Craneman.—Carries large ingots from furnace to hammer by means of a hand-operated crane, sometimes assists in holding the ingot under the hammer, and when hammered places ingot on stock pile. Manual labor requiring an employee with experience.

Hammerman (4-ton hammer and over).—On the large hammers the hammerman's work is largely supervisory, but the position requires a man with considerable skill and experience. The tongsmen usually handle the piece, assisted by the lever men, while the hammerman directs the work and sweeps scale from the ingot, although at times he handles the ingots at the hammer.

Hammer driver.—Operates lever which regulates the rise and fall of the hammer. The work is light, but requires a man of good judgment and of experience.

Tongsmen.—Shifts ingot under hammer, using tongs made for the purpose. The tongsmen usually work in pairs, one in front and one at the back of the hammer. Heavy manual labor, exposed to heat of ingot and flying scale. Tongsmen become very expert and skillful with experience and are promoted to the position of hammerman.

Lever man (back and front).—Uses a suspended hook or lever to assist in handling heavy ingots under the hammer. Heavy manual labor, requiring considerable skill and dexterity.

Hammerman (over 1-ton to 4-ton hammer).—Similar to hammerman on large hammers. Smaller pieces are handled and the hammerman usually does more of the actual work of handling ingots.

Hammerman's helper (over 1-ton to 4-ton hammer).—Assists the hammerman to hold and shift bars under hammer. Heavy manual labor at which the men become very adept and when experienced are promoted to position of hammerman.

Peg boy (Pegger).—Stands beside hammer and holds gauge block beside piece being hammered in order that hammerman may get desired size. Also sweeps scale from piece being hammered. Light work, unskilled, performed by boys.

Chain boy.—Controls chain which passes through block and is hooked onto piece being hammered, to keep piece level on die. Light, unskilled work, performed by boys.

Hammerman (1-ton hammer and under) (Tilter).—Holds bars under hammers and shapes as desired. In making octagon bars and small sizes the modern steam hammer strikes nearly 300 blows per minute. As the bars are finished on flat dies considerable skill is required to get the desired size, shape, and finish.

ROLLING.

The occupations in a crucible steel rolling mill are practically the same as in a bar mill, though the work is lighter and much slower, due to the fact that crucible ingots are small and very hard steel. (See Heater, Drag down, Roller, Rougher, Catcher, Strander, Finisher, and Straightener—Bar mill.)

ANNEALING AND WAREHOUSE.

Annealer.—Directs the charging, drawing, filling, and emptying of pipes in which crucible steel bars are annealed, sees that the pipes are properly sealed, and regulates the gas flow to maintain the proper temperature. The work is largely supervisory, requiring a man with practical experience, and involving manual labor when the furnace is coke fired and no fireman is employed.

Annealer fireman.—When the annealing furnaces are heated by coke the fireman tends the furnace fires when such work is not done by the annealer. Moderately heavy unskilled manual labor.

Annealer laborers.—Crucible steel rods are put into pipes, with sand and lime, and then into the annealing furnace. The laborers fill the pipes, charge and draw them from furnaces, and empty pipes after annealed. Manual labor, unskilled, done under the supervision of the annealer.

Stock inspector.—Inspects surface of bar steel for size and surface defects and marks defects to be cut out by the cropper. A responsible position, requiring a skilled and experienced employee.

Cropper and striker.—Cut defects from finished bars. The cropper is a skilled man who knows grades and is able to tell when sufficient steel has been cut away. He supervises the work and holds the cold chisel for cutting, the sledge work being done by the striker, who is unskilled. Defects are sometimes cut from rolled steel bars by a shearman in the rolling mill.

Laborer.—Conveys steel on trucks from mills and hammers to stock room. Unskilled, manual labor.

Bundlers.—After steel is inspected and graded it is tied into bundles by the bundlers and carried on trucks to the stock room. Unskilled, manual labor.

BLOOMING MILLS.

CHARGING AND HEATING.

Ingot stripper.—(Same description as for Ingot stripper, Bessemer converter.)

Heater.—The heater is responsible for and directs the charging and drawing of the ingots by the pit cranemen and the maintenance of a proper temperature in the special type of furnace used for heating ingots, known as "soaking pits." Either the heater, or, under his direction, the helper attends to the reversing of the gas in the regenerative chambers. Frequent inspections (to an increasing extent pyrometric tests) are made of the temperature of the ingots in the separate pits, and on the basis of these inspections or tests the heater must so regulate the temperature of the pits that there will always be ingots at the proper temperature for rolling. In many plants heaters keep a record for each ingot of the time of charging and drawing and of the chamber in which it was placed, although in some plants clerks are supplied to do this work. The heater also supervises and at times assists in cleaning and repairing the pits and in preparing new bottoms.

A highly skilled and very responsible position. Since most of the decisions as to the temperature of the pits and ingots are made only on the heater's ability to judge by inspection—a knowledge which can be gained only by long practical experience—it is difficult to secure a good man for the position.

Heater's helper.—Reverses the gas in the regenerative chambers of the pits and, under the direction of the heater, regulates the temperature, changes the steel bits in the tongs of the pit crane, and in a few plants operates the nonautomatic pit-crane tongs, although in some plants this is done by men in a separate occupation (pit tongs-men), assists in repairs, and in general helps the heater in all his duties. In many plants the helpers perform work which is ordinarily given to separate occupations, such as making and repairing bottoms, tapping and cleaning out cinder, and opening and closing the pit covers. Where the work consists only in reversing the gas and assisting the heater in other ways, the work is not heavy or severe. Where, however, the duties of the specialized occupations are also embraced, all the conditions of work peculiar to those occupations are encountered.

Bottom maker.—Bottom makers make, level, and repair the coke-dust bottoms of the "soaking pits." This work is done by throwing in coke dust from the top of the pits while there are no ingots in them and by working the coke into an approximately level condition with long iron bars. This is usually done while the pits are heated. When the bottom becomes too deep or contains much molten metal and scale, the bottom makers dig the bottom out, using a long iron bar with a sharp, flat head and a scraper for removing the cinder. The greater part of this work requires exposure to excessive heat, from which the men protect themselves by tying wet cloths over exposed parts and by wearing heavy shoes with soles of wood. The work is periodic in character, and the men thus obtain relief from time to time. The making of bottoms under these necessary conditions is very severe and by no means unskillful work. The wage is, however, proportioned much more to the difficulty and severity of the work than to the knowledge and skill required.

Bottom maker's helper (Coke dust man).—Wheels coke dust needed in making bottoms, brings necessary tools, and assists in doing the harder and more exposed work of bottom making. In some plants also performs the functions of a cinder man. The work resembles that done by the bottom maker, the chief difference being that the bottom maker is more highly skilled and supervises the work.

Cinder man—(Cinder snapper, Cinder laborer).—Taps the fluid slag and molten metal from the bottoms of soaking pits and wheels it to the cinder dump or to some point in the yard. Each chamber of the soaking pits is arranged so that it can be tapped separately by opening up the tap hole with an iron bar, very much as the cinder notch of a blast furnace is opened. The work is unskilled and not very heavy. In performing it, however, the men work in the cellars below the soaking pits proper, which are hot under any circumstances, and in which during the summer the heat is excessive. They are out of the cellars at intervals during the work, and thus obtain relief from the heat, as well as during the short rests which occur between jobs.

Cover operator (Cover lever man, Cover man).—Operates levers which, through electric, hydraulic, or mechanical means, open and close the heavy fire-brick covers over the soaking pits for the pit craneman when he is ready to charge or draw ingots, or for the heater or his helpers or for the bottom makers. In some cases the heater, heater's helper, or a bottom maker performs this function. The work is light and is frequently performed by boys or old men. In many plants the controlling levers are so far from the pits that no excessive heat is felt, but in a number the operators are exposed to excessive heat when actually at work. However, they usually arrange among themselves to have a good deal of spare time.

Pit craneman (Charger, Drawer, Pit tongsman, Pit crane operator, Steel charger).—Operates the crane used for charging the ingots into the soaking pits and for drawing them from the pits as directed by the heater and placing them either in the ingot car or on the roll table. In some places there are two cranes, one for charging and one for drawing. The position is one of excessive heat as well as of discomfort from the gas fumes, particularly during the summer, because of the necessary position which the craneman must occupy directly over the soaking pits. For this reason it is customary to provide spell hands for the position during the hot weather, and in some cases to shorten the working hours considerably. The position is particularly bad if the crane cab is fixed directly over the tongs, so that the craneman is exposed not only to the general heat from the pits but to the very much higher temperature that arises from the heated ingot and open pit. Much care has been taken in most plants to render the position more tolerable by an extensive use of asbestos and other nonconducting substances in the construction of the crane cab. In addition to its severity the occupation demands considerable skill to charge and draw ingots with the rapidity and accuracy required in the modern blooming mill.

Ingot-car operator (Buggy operator, Ingot-buggy operator).—Ingots are brought from the soaking pits to the rolls by either the pit crane or ingot car. Handling by crane frequently results in breakage or delays in putting the ingot in the right position for rolling. In some places the crane drops the ingot on a tilter, which is tipped over by a manipulator boy by lever control, so that the ingot falls on the rolls. Ingot cars are usually electric buggies controlled from a distance by one of the heating or rolling crew. In some instances the operator rides on the car, which is so arranged that he is protected from flying scale when the ingot enters the rolls and to a large degree from the heat of the ingot. Nevertheless, the position is uncomfortably hot in summer, and little rest is afforded unless spell hands are employed, which is a common practice during hot weather. The work is comparatively simple, as the car is operated by a single controller handle and is self-dumping, or has one lever for tilting the ingot forward onto the rolls.

ROLLING, SHEARING, SAWING, ETC.

Roller.—The nature and the difficulties of a roller's duties vary widely with the different types of mills. In all places he has charge of the rolling crew and is responsible for the output. Usually he operates the rolls, but in some instances only supervises the rolling. In reversing blooming mills he operates the levers by which the distance between the rolls is regulated and usually the levers controlling the direction and speed of rotation of the live rollers of the table. On three-high mills, when the distance between the rolls is fixed, the roller operates the apparatus tilting or lifting the table for raising the ingot from the lower to the upper pass and also the levers controlling the live rollers of the table. The roller's position is one requiring considerable skill and long experience, although the product of the blooming mill is an unfinished article. He is not valued so much for his services in tending the rolls while everything is going right, however, as for his knowledge of what to do when there is trouble. In a mill where an ingot is being handled every minute or two, and there are at times two ingots on the table at once, unremitting attention is required. In the case of a mill delay, as when there is no hot steel, he may rest or he may have to work hard at repairing some broken part.

Roll engineer.—The duties really fall into two distinct classes: (1) Engineers on reversing engines for two-high mills. In this case they not only must keep the engine in good running order and see to repairs (in which they are usually aided by assistants), but must occupy a position in the roller's platform or "pulpit" alongside the rolls and with levers connected with the engine throttle reverse the direction of the engine after every passage of the ingot through the rolls. (2) Engineers on nonreversing engines for three-high mills. In this case they simply act as ordinary stationary engineers, maintaining the engine at proper speed and keeping it in good running order. They must be on hand at all times to stop and start the engine at the roller's signal. The engineer on reversing engines must be an engineer of high grade and capable of quick decision and action in emergencies. He occupies a position which requires constant attention and which in summer is exposed to considerable heat. The engineer on nonreversing engines is usually a considerable distance from the heat of the rolls and is unoccupied while awaiting the roller's signals.

Manipulator.—Operates levers controlling a device by which ingots can be turned over or reversed or by which the ingot or bloom can be shifted laterally from one pass of the rolls to another. The work is much more skilled and requires longer experience than any description would indicate. The men become wonderfully expert in using the manipulators, and it is upon the quickness with which the operation of turning and shifting the ingot can be performed that the production of the mill largely depends. The manipulator assists in all roll changes and repairs not performed by millwrights.

Table man (Wrench man, Rougher, Assistant guide tender, Steerer).—Works alongside or, in a few cases, on the tables of the blooming mill and with long iron hooks guides the ingot or bloom into the right pass, or with a heavy iron tool with a square fork at the end which fits over a bloom, turns the bloom over when it is too small to be handled by the manipulator. In a few cases, using a similar tool with a fork large enough to fit an ingot, he performs the functions described above for the manipulator. In some cases he operates an approach table or some form of conveyor or transfer in addition to the duties described above. In mills equipped with the best types of manipulators, the table man's services are required only from time to time, when the piece becomes unmanageable, and in this case the position is relieved of its worst conditions. Where it is necessary for table men to do all or the greater part of the work of handling the ingot or bloom, the position, even when frequently relieved by spell hands, is one of the most severe in the industry, because of the arduousness of the work and the exposure to heat. There is also danger of serious injury to the eyes as well as of minor burns from flying metal which is driven back with considerable force when the ingot enters the rolls.

Back lever man.—Operates levers controlling table back of rolls.

Conveyor man (Transfer lever man, Steel loader, Push-off operator).—Operates levers which control the various conveyors used in transferring ingots from the soaking pit to the rolls, or blooms from the rolls to the hotbeds and shears, and from there to the shipping department or to other mills. These conveyors are usually motor driven and generally consist of a long table, with mechanically driven rollers (live rolls) on which the ingot or bloom rests and by which it can be shifted forward or backward by rotating the rolls in one direction or the other. Also operates conveyors disposing of crops and butts. These conveyors are usually continuous and in charge of an unskilled laborer. At the side of the tables are plate guards, which prevent the piece from falling off the table. Comparatively little skill, but constant attention, is required and, in a few cases, the work is done under conditions of extreme heat. The ordinary duties do not require any heavy manual labor, but when there is any trouble the conveyor men have to work very hard for a short time.

Greaser (Roll greaser).—Greases the roll bearings and mill-table gears and bearings, and oils the cranes, where this is not done by the craneman. The occupation is distinct from that of engine oiler and wiper. Low grade, unskilled, light work. When the mills are properly protected the occupation carries with it little hazard.

Oiler and wiper (Roll engineer's helper).—Assists roll engineer and oils and wipes engine. Light work, unskilled. Learns work of engineer.

Roll scale man (Scale wheeler).—Shovels out the scale which accumulates under the tables and in the "scale pits" under the rolls. This is wheeled away and used in the blast furnace or the open hearth. Also cleans up the mill and handles scrap. Light, unskilled work.

Shear and table engineer.—Operates shear engine and looks after table engine, including oiling. Low-grade stationary engineer, usually trained in the mill to do the work, which is light.

Shear-table man.—Operates shear tables, clutch, gauge, pushers, and slab jack by means of levers. Light work, requiring but little skill.

Shearman.—Operates large shears by which the end of the partially rolled ingot containing the "pipe" (a cavity formed in the molten metal by the gases contained in the metal) is removed; shears the ingot when rolled down to size into shorter pieces called "blooms" or "billets," according to their size and length, for use in the smaller rolling mills; supervises the entire shearing crew; and is responsible for keeping the shears and shear tables in proper working order. In many plants assists in roll changes. The work ordinarily falls into two parts: First, operating the roller table by which the piece is carried under the shears; and, second, setting the gauge which fixes the length of the piece and operating the lever controlling the mechanism (hydraulic, electric, or steam) by which the shear is made to cut the bloom or ingot. The operation does not require a great amount of skill, but the position is one of some responsibility, particularly in shearing crop ends so as to secure the maximum of good steel from each ingot rolled.

Shearman's helper (Crop puller, Butt puller, Push-off operator, Kick-off boy).—Shear-men's helpers comprise two different classes: (1) Those who operate levers by which the gauge or stop against which the end of the bloom strikes regulates the length, or levers for operating the kick-off, a contrivance for knocking the sheared ends (crop ends or bloom butts) off the shear table, or levers controlling the tables which carry the bloom away from the shears; (2) unskilled men who drag the hot bloom butts or crop ends away from the shears with tongs and do any of the other required unskilled work around the shears. The various lever men are not highly skilled, but their work requires very constant attention, and they may be regarded generally as in training for positions as shear-men. The unskilled work is not very heavy, because the crop ends are comparatively small, but it is rather hot work, particularly in summer, when the iron plates over which they drag the red-hot bloom ends become excessively hot. As a protection, heavy shoes with wooden or rubber belting soles are usually worn.

Scrap man.—When the scrap ends are not disposed of mechanically, the scrap man loads them on cars or into pans to be carried away by locomotive or crane. Heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Loader and stocker (Hooker-on, Stocker, Loader).—When the blooms leave the shears and hotbeds, they pass either directly to another mill or are loaded into cars for shipment or are piled in the yards until needed. In any case, the loaders and stockers handle them, loading and straightening them in the cars or piling them in the yards. Heavy, unskilled work. There are usually times for rest during mill delays, and the work is therefore relieved of much of its arduousness. The chief hazard involved in the occupation is from the fall of improperly piled blooms and from the overhead cranes largely used in handling the material.

Craneman (Mill craneman).—Cranemen operate the various cranes (except pit-cranes) used in the mill for handling rolls, defective metal, etc., as well as those in the shipping department (except locomotive cranes). These cranes are almost without exception electric cranes of relatively small capacity, and many of those in the shipping department are equipped with magnets. The handling of these smaller cranes does not require a great deal of skill or very long experience. Many of them are in fact operated by boys after a few days' training. None of these cranes, except those in the shipping department, work very steadily, being used only when needed. The cranemen are in their cabs, however, the greater part of the time. With properly equipped cranes the hazards of the occupation—falls, electric burns, and shocks, and danger of being run over by the crane or caught in the gears—are practically eliminated.

Crane hooker (Crane follower, Hooker-on, Hook-up).—Assists craneman in hooking on to load. Signals craneman and hooks and unhooks crane chains to material to be moved. Moderate, unskilled, manual labor.

Steel chipper.—Chips defects or slivers from steel, using a pneumatic chipper. Light work, requiring little skill.

Stamper (Marker).—Stamps heat numbers, weights, etc., on the sheared blooms, billets, or slabs. For this purpose he uses a heavy hammer with the proper die sunk in its head or a die which is struck with a sledge. The striking is frequently done by one of the shearman's helpers. The work is a little higher grade than unskilled, but requires no heavy manual labor. Although the workman stamps the blooms while they are still red hot, he can usually protect himself from exposure to extreme heat, and the job is consequently not very severe. In some plants a marker is employed, who paints weights, etc., on the blooms.

Toolman.—Carries supplies for mill, tools, etc.

Water carrier.—Carries drinking water.

PLATE MILLS.

CHARGING AND HEATING.

Slab yard crane man.—Operates crane carrying slabs from storage yard to furnace and placing them on skids for feeding into furnace.

Crane hooker (Crane follower).—Guides magnet crane or hooks crane cables to slabs in yard and unhooks when delivered to furnace; in some places straightens slabs on skids in front of furnace. Semiskilled manual labor.

Charging crane man and Charging-machine operator (Charger).—Operates levers controlling the various types of charging cranes and machines used for placing slabs in the furnace and removing them when properly heated. The most common type consists of an overhead crane with a suspended revolving carriage on which is mounted a long arm with a special grip for holding the slab. The arm is hooked at the end so that it will fit over one end of a slab, the other end being held by a block controlled by the machine operator, which pushes the slab tightly into the hook. The whole arrangement is very much like hooking the bent forefinger over a slab and then holding it in place with the thumb. In charging, the arm is swung over the trucks on which the slabs are brought from the slab mill, the arm is lowered and the hook at the end caught over the end of a slab, the bar carrying the holding block is then shoved up against the other end of the slab, which is then lifted and swung around in front of the proper furnace door. The furnace door is opened and the whole suspended carriage moves forward until the arm is well inside the furnace, the holding block is released, and the slab left on the floor of the furnace. Other types of charging machines are much like those described for the open hearth. The character of the work and the amount of skill and experience required vary widely according to the type of charging machine, as well as the kind of furnace used. In the majority of cases, the work requires a good deal of skill, as there are many levers to be controlled and the work must be done rapidly.

Furnace lever man (Transfer lever man).—In some mills the slabs are placed on skids in front of the furnace and pushed into the furnace by a hydraulic pusher. Such furnaces are usually "continuous," being so arranged that when a slab is pushed into the furnace a heated slab drops from the opposite side of the furnace upon the transfer table and is carried to the rolls. The furnace lever man operates the levers controlling the furnace transfer table and the pusher for charging slabs. Light, unskilled labor, requiring some experience.

Ash man.—Removes ashes from heating furnaces and takes them away in wheelbarrow. Common, unskilled labor; light work.

Cinder man (Cinder snapper, Cinder monkey).—Taps out the cinder which collects at the bottom of the furnace and takes it away in a cinder buggy or wheelbarrow. This cinder contains a high percentage of iron, and is consequently cast into convenient shapes to be used in the open-hearth or blast furnaces. Unskilled work. Very little heavy manual labor, and the exposure to heat does not last long.

Fireman.—Shovels coal into furnace to maintain proper heat. Heavy manual labor, with exposure to heat, and requiring some experience.

Many of the furnaces are gas heated, making the services of a fireman unnecessary.

Heater.—In charge of the furnaces for reheating slabs. Duties are to maintain the proper temperature within the furnaces and to direct the charging and drawing of the slabs. As a rule, the furnaces are not "continuous," the slabs being charged and drawn at the same end of the furnace. A highly skilled occupation, requiring long experience and considerable practical knowledge of the heat treatment of metals.

Heater's helper.—Assists the heater in all his duties. The number of helpers employed and functions performed by them depend largely on the type of furnace and whether they perform any duties, such as charging slabs, usually performed by men in separate occupations. They repair bottoms in case cinder or sand bottomed furnaces are used, and also assist in making other repairs. Heaters' helpers frequently operate the conveyor which carries the slabs to the rolls. The work is very diversified, requiring in part highly skilled men and in part relatively unskilled men. Where a heater has a large number of furnaces under his direction, his first helpers are highly skilled men, capable of looking after all the details for the separate furnaces.

Door operator.—Raises and lowers the doors of the furnace for charging and drawing and for the heater's inspection. The doors are usually counterweighted so that they can be operated by pulley. Light work, usually done by boys. The conditions are analogous to those of the door operator in the open hearth, except that the operator is usually much nearer the furnace.

ROLLING AND SHEARING.

Roll engineer (Hot engineer).—(Same description as for Roll engineer, Blooming mills).

Very few of the plate mills in this country are reversing, the majority being "three high." Same general conditions as in blooming mills.

Greaser.—Greases roll train, tables, etc. Unskilled, light labor.

Roller, sheared-plate mills.—Supervises and directs the entire process of rolling and the changing of rolls. Is responsible for the condition of the plate as it leaves the rolls. In order to give the plate the proper width, the roller takes advantage of the fact that plate when rolled lengthens considerably in the direction of rolling, but does not widen to any appreciable extent at each pass. The slab is accordingly delivered on the roll table with the long side of the rectangle leading, and is given enough passes in this direction to extend the plate to almost the width desired. The roller gauges it after each pass with a long bar, which has a slidable marker mounted on it. When it reaches the proper dimension in the direction of the rolling, the roller orders the "hookers" to give the slab a quarter turn, which brings the short side first, and the piece is then rolled back and forth until it is rolled down to the exact width and thickness required. During this period the roller gauges the thickness of the plate frequently with a micrometer gauge. The roller, during the course of rolling, indicates to the screw man how much nearer the rolls should be brought together. This is a very responsible and highly skilled occupation, requiring a special knowledge of the working of iron and steel that can be gained only by long experience. It is impossible to convey in a description the kind and degree of knowledge required to produce uniform plates of the proper width and thickness, on which the loss shall be as little as possible. The roller must be able to direct the heater when the slabs are not heated properly.

Roller, universal mills.—Duties and responsibilities are the same as for sheared-plate mills, the only difference being that the plate, instead of being turned in order to give the proper width, is rolled straight through with the same end first, the width being determined by the side rolls. Nature of work is same as for rollers in sheared-plate mills.

Screw man (Screw-down).—Operates levers or wheel controlling hydraulic or electric mechanism actuating the screw by which the distance between the rolls is regulated. This mechanism is connected with a dial on which the distance between the rolls is indicated automatically. This is responsible work, requiring considerable experience. The screw man is signaled by the roller from time to time at what distance to keep the rolls, but the screw man is responsible for making the proper changes. His position is in a "pulpit" not far from the rolls.

On universal mills there is also a screw man for the side rolls whose duties are similar, but easier.

Manipulator, sheared-plate mills.—(Same description as for Manipulator, Blooming mills).

Table operator.—Operates levers which lift tables in front and behind rolls, and controls live rolls. The operator is stationed in a "pulpit" some distance from the rolls and the heat of the material being rolled. The work is light, but requires a man of skill and experience.

Table man (Hooker, Hook man).—The duties resemble very closely those of the table man in blooming mills. They turn the slabs around when ordered by the roller and generally assist the manipulator. In many cases they perform the duties of the scalers, as described below under "Roll hands." They also frequently regulate the flow of water on the rolls, and where scale is removed by a steam blast, regulate the blast. The conditions of work are analogous to those of the table man in blooming mills.

Roll hands (Scalers).—Includes miscellaneous men required by the local conditions as well as the rather definite occupation of "scalers," whose duty is to remove the scale formed on the slab, so as to give a polished, smooth surface to the finished plate. This is done by several methods, which may be performed by the same man or separate occupations may be carried, the principal ones being (a) salter, who throws salt on the slab, and (b) sweeper-off, who uses a heavy wire brush and rubs the scale off. The nature of the work and the skill required vary considerably, according to the exact duties performed.

Roll scale man.—Removes scale from under and around the rolls and does general cleaning about the mill. In some places, the work is done by laborers on Sundays and when the mill is shut down. Light, unskilled, manual labor.

Straightener (Cold-roll operator, Roller leveler).—Operates levers controlling the straightening machine. This machine consists of two sets of rolls, the upper set being placed so that the axis of each of its rolls is just above the line between a pair of the lower rolls. The position is like that given by placing the fingers of one hand on top of those of the other, so that the first finger of the upper hand rests on top and between the first and second fingers of the lower hand. The lower surface of the upper set is just enough below the upper surface of the lower set to create a pressure which will smooth out wrinkles or bulges that may have formed in the plate while it was cooling. Not very difficult nor highly skilled work. For some of the narrow plate, where less care is required, the position is filled by boys.

Gauger.—Inspects and gauges the plate, as it cools on the roller table, more carefully than the roller is able to do, or is employed on tandem and other plate mills of the same kind to gauge the plate between different passes. The work requires some judgment and considerable training. It is not heavy, nor is there much exposure to heat.

Hotbed lever man (Transfer man, Train operator).—Operates levers that control transfer tables which carry plates from rolls, and the mechanical devices for transferring them from the tables to the casters in front of shears. Light manual labor, requiring but little skill or experience.

Hotbed man.—Handles product on hotbed. Moderately heavy, unskilled manual labor.

Greaser, hotbed.—Greases and oils hotbed and finishing machinery. Light manual labor, unskilled.

Marker.—Marks plate with chalk to indicate where ends and sides are to be sheared and the lengths into which it is to be cut. The work is light, but requires a man with experience and good judgment to get the greatest amount of salable plate out of the material.

Line boy (Square-up).—Chalks line used by marker and helps draw line across end of plate. Light work; performed by boy.

Layer-out.—After plates have been squared up the layer-out marks them for shearing into special shapes and sizes, boiler heads, etc. Light work, similar to that of the marker.

Painter.—Paints order numbers, weights, etc., on plates. Light work, unskilled.

Stamper.—Stamps heat numbers, weights, etc., on plates, using hand dies and a hammer. Light manual labor.

Shearman.—In the mills for sheared plates there are usually two sets of shears—one for “end shearing,” in which the long piece of plate, as it comes from the rolls, is cut across at the proper point; the other, for “side shearing,” which takes the pieces as they come from the end shears and cuts them along the lines marked by the layer out. Usually the plate is run out from the roller conveyor onto large “casters,” which may be turned in any direction, set on top of bars of equal length, fixed in the floor. The plate is moved along these casters, the shearman at one of the forward corners and the leader at the other, the plate being pushed by the shearman’s helpers, who hold it with “dogs” (short iron bars with a slot in the end of each which fits over the edge of the plate). The shearman brings directly under the knife the line marked for shearing and the leader brings his corner to the proper point. Then, at a signal from the shearman, the shear-lever man brings down the shear knife. The shearman is responsible for the condition of his shears and supervises the work of the entire shearing crew. The position requires considerable experience and a very accurate judgment. The responsibility is considerable, as by the slightest error the shearman may spoil a valuable plate. The work is comparatively heavy and is usually done by men of good physique.

Shearman’s helper (Shear laborer).—Includes three grades of helpers: (a) “Leaders,” who guide the plate on the casters and “line it up” at the mark where it is to be cut; (b) “shear-lever men,” who, at the direction of the shearman, pull the lever which operates the knife; (c) “shear laborers,” who, as described above, pull the plate along on the casters and assist in handling the sheared plates. There are also “scrap men,” who clean up the pieces of scrap made in shearing. The leaders are highly skilled men, who may be considered as being in training for the position of shearman. Except that they do not have the responsibility and supervisory duties, their work is of the same character as that of the shearman. The work of the other helpers is not heavy and requires very little skill or experience.

Rotary shearman.—In some places the plate is carried on conveyor rolls between two rotary shears, which shear the plate on each side on the lines made by the marker. The shearman operates levers controlling the shears and also the conveyor rolls on which the plate is carried. Rotary shears are used, also, to shear along curved lines and patterns for special shapes. In making boiler heads and circular shapes the plates are roughed out on the squaring shears and taken to the rotary shears by a crane. A plate is fastened to a standard which rotates in such a manner as to bring the edge of the plate in contact with the rotary shears.

Rotary shearman’s helper.—When shearing the side of a plate, the helper sets the shears to cut at the point indicated by the layer-out and a shear laborer clamps the plate with a holder to make it travel in a straight line. On other work he assists in handling the plates and picks up scrap. Moderately heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Scrap shearman.—Operates shears cutting up into scrap lengths pieces sheared from plates. Moderately heavy labor, unskilled.

Engineer, shear and table.—Operates shear and table engines. Duties of a stationary engineer.

Craneman.—Operates the cranes other than those used for charging and drawing furnaces. The cranes are chiefly electric and of small capacity. A large number of them are used in handling plates for shipping, etc.

Crane hooker.—Signals craneman and fastens crane hooks to material to be moved and unfastens them. Light labor, semiskilled.

Product-crew man (Stock laborer).—Handles product from shears to shipping beds. Manual labor, light to heavy, unskilled.

Water carrier.—Carries drinking water and keeps ice and water in barrels.

STANDARD RAIL MILLS.

CHARGING AND HEATING.

Engineer, locomotive (Narrow-gauge engineer, Dinky engineer).—Runs locomotive carrying blooms from blooming mill to rail mill. Compares with freight-yard engineer.

Fireman, locomotive.—Usual duties of a locomotive fireman.

Switchman.—Couples and uncouples cars, throws switches, signals engineer, and performs the other duties which pertain to the position.

Craneman (Cold-steel man).—Operates crane conveying steel from blooming mill to furnaces.

Crane hooker (Crane-tongs man, Hook up).—Signals craneman and hooks chains to blooms to be moved. Semiskilled, light manual labor.

Bloom-yard laborer.—General labor around bloom yard, assisting in making up heats, unloading steel, etc. Unskilled, manual labor.

Bloom-conveyor operator.—When blooms are brought to rail mill from blooming mill over a conveyor, operates levers which control movement of conveyor. Light work, unskilled.

Bloom push-over.—Operates electric pusher that pushes blooms off conveyor from bloom mill or yard to furnace run. Light lever work, unskilled, done by boys.

Charging-machine operator (Charger, Pit craneman, Charging craneman, Drawer).—Charges blooms into reheating furnace, using various types of charging machines. One of the commoner machines in use grips the bloom at one end, swings it around from the conveyor, and pushes it into the furnace. The same machine draws the heated bloom and places it in the conveyor leading to the rolls. (See Charging-machine operator, Plate mills.)

Reheater (Heater).—In charge of reheating furnaces, which are necessary when the blooms are not rolled directly from the blooming mill. Duties are to adjust air and gas so as to maintain the proper temperature within the furnaces, to keep furnace bottoms in good condition, and to direct the charging and drawing of the blooms. Requires considerable knowledge of the heat treatment of metals, but not so much skill and experience as for soaking-pit heaters. (See Heaters, Blooming mills.)

Reheater's helper (Heater's helper, Assistant heater).—Assists the reheater in all his duties. The number of helpers employed and functions performed by them depend largely on the type of furnace. Where a reheater has a large number of furnaces under his direction, his first helpers are capable of looking after all the details for the separate furnaces.

Pusher man.—When cold blooms are used they are first heated in a preheating furnace before going to the regular furnace. This furnace is "continuous" and the pusher man operates levers that causes the electric pusher to push the blooms from the furnace skids into the furnace and from the furnace to the regular heating furnace.

Door opener (Cover operator, Door operator, Furnace-door man).—(Same description as for Cover operator, Blooming mills.)

Bottom maker.—(Same description as for Bottom maker, Blooming mills.)

Bottom maker's helper and laborer.—(Same description as for Bottom maker's helper, Blooming mills.)

Cinder man.—Breaks up cinder and loads same on cars, brings in coal for heaters, and taps and removes cinder from pits. Moderate, unskilled, manual labor.

Furnace run operator (Manipulator).—Operates lever which controls conveyor rolls that bring blooms from furnace to roughing rolls. Light work, unskilled.

Ingot-car operator (Ingot-buggy operator, Buggy operator).—(Same description as for Ingot-car operator, Blooming mills.)

ROLLING AND SAWING.

Roller.—The roller's duties are almost entirely supervisory; that is, he does not control the operation of a set of rolls as in blooming mills. He is in general charge of the rolling and of all roll changes and makes frequent inspections to see that everything is going right; has the product gauged frequently to see that the section is rolled true to size, and if it is off he sees that the necessary changes are made to line the mill up properly. The roller is valued chiefly for his practical knowledge of the mechanical working of steel and for his ability to set up and maintain his mill in proper running order. The position demands a high degree of skill and knowledge.

Roller's helper (Assistant roller, Roll hand).—The roller's duties are so varied, and the area covered by the modern rail mill is so large, that he is, in the majority of plants, given one or more assistants, who watch various parts of the particular processes and assist the roller generally in all the work. These men are in line for promotion to the position of roller. The roller's helpers often spell others of the rolling crew, and in some places do the work of the guide setters. The nature of the helper's work depends entirely on the duties assigned by the roller and on the work of the person he is set to spell.

Guide setter (Guide man, Finishing guide man).—Sets in place on the various stands of rolls the iron guides by which the partly finished rail is made to enter the "pass" between the rolls at the proper angle, and inspects them to see that they are kept in proper position. Assists the rollers in roll changes. The work requires a high degree of mechanical skill and a great deal of practical experience. The guides frequently need adjusting while the rolls are still hot.

Roll engineer (Bloom engineer, Roughing engineer, Finishing engineer).—Operates both "reversing" and "nonreversing" engines. (See Roll engineer, Blooming mills.)

Roll engineer's helper (Assistant engineer).—Oils and wipes engines and learns the work of the roll engineer.

Motor-house tender (Roll motorman).—Where electric instead of steam power is used for rolls, conveyors, etc., the motor-house tender has charge of the electric motors. A skilled electrician.

Table lever man (Bloom lever man, Catcher, Rougher, Roughing lever man, Table engineer, Manipulator, Finishing lever man, Iron man).—Operates the tables, raising and lowering the blooms for the rolls, and the various forms of manipulators used in turning the pieces so that they will enter the passes properly. The rails must enter the rolls much more exactly than in the case of blooming mills, and this position, therefore, requires more highly skilled men. (See Manipulators, Blooming mills.)

Table man (Barman).—(See Table man, Blooming mills.)

Transfer man.—Operates levers controlling tables that transfer blooms from first to second roughing rolls and from second roughing rolls to finishing rolls, etc. Light work, unskilled, but requiring some experience.

Mill greaser (Greaser, Table oiler, Roll-train greaser, Mill oiler).—Greases roll trains and oils roll tables. Light work, unskilled.

Condenser pump engineer (Pump man).—Attends condenser pumps for rail mill and blooming mill. Low-grade stationary engineer.

Roll scaleman.—Cleans scale from under rolls, wheels it away, and keeps mill clean. Unskilled, light work.

Hot-saw man (Hot-saw lever man, Sawyer, Hot-saw operator).—Operates levers controlling the circular saw by which the rails are sawed after they leave the finishing pass. The saw man sees that the gauges are properly set, and if a "gang saw" (i. e., one in which two or more saws set apart the length of a rail are made to cut simultaneously) is used, the saw man must see that the saws are properly set. The work does not require a great deal of experience.

Gauger.—Operates levers which drop stops to put the rail in proper position for sawing, and helps change saws. Light work, semiskilled.

Butt puller (Crop-end man, Scrap man).—Drags away short ends of sawed off rails or operates the conveyor that carries them away. Unskilled, heavy, manual labor, except where conveyor is used.

Hot-saw engineer.—Operates engines for hot saws, oils saws, and takes care of belts. A stationary engineer.

Stamper (Rotary stamper).—Has charge of automatic machine that stamps heat numbers on rails. The machine consists of a wheel in which steel numbers are set, which must be changed to correspond with each heat number from which a rail is made. Changes are signaled from the heating pit. Light work, semiclerical.

Letter stamper.—Stamps letters on rails by means of a heavy hammer with a die in its head. Light work, unskilled, with some exposure to heat.

Curver (Cambering-machine operator).—Has charge of cambering machine through which the hot rail passes before going to the hotbed, to give it a bend that straightens while the rail is cooling. Light work, unskilled.

Hotbed lever man (Jack operator, Hotbed operator, Friction-roll operator).—Operates levers controlling various forms of transfers by which rails are carried along on hotbeds. Light work, a little better than unskilled, and requiring comparatively little experience.

Hotbed man (Hot straightener).—Greases the tops of the rails which make up the hotbed, and turns the rails over from time to time so that they will cool evenly, and thus be as straight as possible when cool. In turning the rails a tool called a "dog" is used, which is very much like a large wrench. In some establishments, two occupations are found, hotbed greaser and rail turner. Unskilled, but very heavy manual labor, and exposed to considerable heat.

Hotbed inspector (Section inspector).—In charge of hotbeds, hot saws, and cambering machine, and weighs hot rails; inspects rails on hotbeds for mechanical defects. Duties confined to inspecting in some establishments, the other work being in charge of a hotbed foreman.

Mill craneman (Crane operator).—Operates electric cranes for general work and making roll changes. An experienced operator is required.

Roll setter.—Builds up and adjusts rolls. A skilled position, involving some heavy manual labor.

FINISHING, ETC.

Transfer lever man (Roller-line operator).—Operates levers that control roller conveyors carrying rails from hotbeds to the finishing sheds or from the finishing sheds to the shipping yard. Light work, semiskilled.

Transfer-car man (Hotbed transfer operator).—Operates transfer car delivering rails from hotbeds to the hand or automatic press beds. A low-grade motorman.

Bed puller (Bed pusher, Laborers).—Pulls rails along skids between conveyor rolls and chippers and straighteners. In some places, uses small air hoists to handle rails. Unskilled, heavy manual labor.

Throw-off (Rail dumper).—In some places, rails are moved from the conveyors to the straighteners or cold saws by hydraulic pushing arms operated by the throw-off. The work is done by lever control, is light and requires but little skill or experience.

Chipper (Burr filer).—With a cold chisel and hammer removes the burr left on the ends of the rail when it is sawed. In some cases, a pneumatic chipping tool is used. Also removes any small flaws, left in rolling, that do not go below the surface. Light work, requiring some skill and experience.

Straightener, gag press.—The "gag press" is a machine having a bed into which rollers are set so that the rail can be easily pushed along over it. Above this bed is the press proper, which is so arranged that it can be brought down by the operator (called gagger) to any required distance, generally by the pressure of his foot on a pedal. In straightening rails the straightener, assisted by one of his helpers, swings the rails onto the bed. The straightener then sights along the head of the rail from one end toward a light (very much like an engine headlight) at the other end of the rail. Any bend in the rail is readily detected, and the straightener moves the rail along over the bed until the center of the curve is directly under the press. He then signals the gagger, who puts a gag—a block held by a handle—under the upper block and brings down the press. If the rail is not entirely straight the gag, which is slightly tapered, is slipped farther under, and this is repeated until all curves are straightened. This work, in addition to being very heavy manual labor, requires a great deal of skill and experience.

Straightener's helper (Gagger, Hold-up).—There are two classes of helpers, the gaggers (see above) and those who assist straighteners in handling heavy rails. A gagger needs experience, but chiefly an alert mind that will carry out the straightener's directions and signals quickly and easily. It is not heavy work, but demands constant attention. The rail handler's work is relatively unskilled, but very heavy.

Driller.—Operates an automatic multiple drill press which drills the bolt holes in the web of the rail. The work is comparatively simple when the drills are set by a foreman or a drill gauger. The driller brings the lever down or turns the wheel that sets his drill in motion. Much of the handling of the rails is heavy work.

Ender man (Rail ender).—Operates an automatic machine that mills or smooths the ends of rails. The work is semiskilled, but rather heavy due to the continuous handling of rails.

Inspector (Finishing inspector).—Inspects the finished rail in accordance with the specifications for the particular order and the customs of the individual mill. A preliminary inspection is given before straightening, but the chief inspection follows when the finished rails are ready for shipping. The work varies according to the class of product of the particular mill and the care with which the mill inspects its own product.

T-rail turner (Inspector helper, Inspector laborer).—Turns T rails for outside inspection. Heavy labor, unskilled.

Cold-saw man (Cold-saw operator, Sawyer).—Operates levers controlling saws which cut defective rails to shorter and salable lengths. This work is not done nearly so rapidly as hot sawing, nor does it require as careful a man. The work consists largely in supervising the helpers who handle the rails and in operating the saw levers.

Cold-saw man's helper.—Handles the rails for the cold saw and cleans up scrap. Comparatively unskilled, but heavy manual labor.

Yard craneman.—Operates crane for handling product, etc., in yard.

Rail yard laborer (Loader, Piler, Wrencher).—Stocks and loads rails in stock yard; loads cold cuttings, scrap rails, etc. Heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Clean-up.—Sweeps and cleans up mill. Unskilled work.

BAR MILLS.

CHARGING AND HEATING—IRON BARS.

Stock laborer.—Wheels scrap to fagot makers, piles and wheels muck bars, carries fagots and muck bars to furnaces. Heavy materials are carried on small cars sometimes pulled by horse. Light materials are handled in wheelbarrows. Light manual labor, involving danger of cuts on hands and from material falling from crane in stock yards.

Fagot maker (Piler, Scrap piler).—Makes up a rough box of pieces of muck bar into which small pieces of wrought-iron scrap are put and the whole bound with wire. These scrap piles or fagots are heated to a welding heat and rolled into muck bar. Light work, requiring little skill or experience.

Heater, fagots.—Has charge of the furnaces in which fagots are heated to a welding heat for rolling. The heater supervises and assists in placing the fagots in the furnace and in drawing them when properly heated. Highly skilled men are required for the position. Considerable manual labor is required, with exposure to furnace heat, which has been lessened in some places by the use of water-cooled furnaces.

Heater's helper, fagots.—Assists the heater in charging the furnace and drawing heats. When charging heavy fagots, the heater usually holds the "peel" or charging bar, the helper and run-down bringing the fagot to the furnace with a pair of suspended tongs.

Some furnaces are equipped with a chain cable which may be hooked to heavy heats to assist in drawing them from the furnace. The cable is controlled by levers operated by a lever boy or pull-up.

Fireman.—Shovels coal into furnace and tends fire. Unskilled, manual labor, dirty and smoky.

Ash man.—Cleans grates and removes ashes from furnaces. Unskilled, manual labor, with shovel and wheelbarrow.

Cinder man.—Taps the cinder (slag) from the furnace and takes care of all that runs out of the tap hole during the boil. Wheels cinder casts from furnace to cinder pile or cars, using wheelbarrow or cinder buggy. This cinder is carefully preserved, as it contains a large percentage of iron. Hot, but not very heavy work. Comparatively unskilled, with some danger from explosions of cinder.

Run-down.—After a heated fagot has been drawn from the furnace by the heater and his helper, the run-down takes it to the rolls and enters it into the first pass, or delivers it to the rougher. The fagot is carried in tongs suspended from an overhead trolley by a chain. Hot and heavy work, with rest periods while fagots are heating. Some skill, acquired only by experience, is required to handle the fagot and start it through the rolls.

CHARGING AND HEATING—STEEL BARS.

Billet yard laborer (Billet straightener).—Handles billets in stock yards, piles, loads, assortments, hooks to crane, etc. Much of the material is hot from the blooming mill when handled, and in some places the work is done outdoors, regardless of weather conditions. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor, with danger of injury from cranes and yard locomotives.

Billet chipper.—Removes defective places from billets by means of a pneumatic chipper. Light, unskilled work.

Craneman.—Operates the few small cranes used in bar mills, bringing billets to furnace and handling finished product, scrap, and machinery, and in making roll changes. Magnet cranes are used to a great extent. Chiefly low-grade cranes are employed for the position.

Crane hooker (Hook-up, Magnet placer).—Hooks chains on materials to be lifted by cranes, removes chains after materials have been transferred to the desired position, and assists around magnet crane. Unskilled, manual labor.

Stocker (Unloader, Steel unloader).—Unloads and handles the pieces of steel (billets) intended for the heating furnaces. The billets are usually stacked in piles in the yard, each pile representing a separate size and character of steel, which is indicated by marks on each billet, although in some cases they come directly from the blooming mill across transfer tables. The billets are taken from these piles, or from the cars in which they are received, and loaded on barrows or trucks, which are pushed to the furnaces. In the most modern plants this occupation is largely eliminated by the use of magnet cranes and low trucks operated electrically or by narrow-gauge locomotives or by the use of roller conveyors. The stockers also handle the coal for the furnaces if solid fuel is used. The work is heavy, varying considerably both in character and in severity, and is performed by unskilled workmen.

Charger (Charging-machine operator).—Puts the iron or steel billets into the heating furnace as directed by the heater. A large part of this charging is done by hand, the billet being laid on the flat end of a long iron tool known as a "peel," which is pushed into the furnace and the billet laid at the proper point. In many of the newer plants, however, the billets are pushed into the furnace by mechanical pushers, which the charger controls by levers, the heater's helper and a laborer straightening the billets on the skids in front of the pusher. In a number of mills the heater's helpers charge the furnaces. The work of hand charging is hot and heavy, requiring but little skill or experience. The work is intermittent in character, affording the chargers an opportunity to get away from the furnace heat at intervals.

Heater.—In charge of one or more heating furnaces, sees that specified stock is charged and that the proper temperature is maintained, and is otherwise generally responsible for the proper working of a furnace and for the minor repairs to the lining. A very important and responsible position, requiring considerable practical knowledge of the heat treatment of metals, which can be gained only by long experience. The heater probably has more to do with the successful operation of a mill than any other employee. The work is largely supervisory.

Fireman.—Fires furnaces and cleans grates and pits. Heavy manual labor, unskilled, done under conditions of great heat.

Many furnaces are gas fired, making the services of a fireman unnecessary.

Heater's helper.—The duties of the heater's helper vary with the character of the furnace or mill and with the division of work in the various plants. In some plants the heater's helper performs all the duties connected with heating the steel and delivering it to the rolls, that is, firing the furnace, cleaning the grates, tapping the cinder, repairing the furnace bottoms, charging and drawing the steel, and carrying it with tongs down to the rolls. The firing of the furnace and the cleaning of the grates frequently are eliminated from the list of duties by the use of a gas-fired furnace, the charging of the steel by the employment of chargers or by the use of "continuous" furnaces, while the drawing and delivery of the steel to the rolls is almost always eliminated by the employment of drag-downs or by the use of some form of mechanical conveyor in connection with a charging machine. The character and skill required by the work vary widely, ranging from that of a first helper, who takes charge of the operation of a furnace, to that of an unskilled laborer, who wheels out cinder.

Cinder man (Cinder monkey, Cinder snapper).—(Same description as for Cinder man, Plate mills.)

Ash man.—Cleans grates and removes ashes from furnaces. Unskilled, manual labor.

Coal screener.—Screens coal for furnaces. Unskilled, manual labor.

Coal wheeler.—Shovels coal into a wheelbarrow and delivers it to the furnaces. Heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Door operator (Door boy, Pull-up).—Operates levers or pull chains by which the furnace doors are raised and lowered. Positions are ordinarily filled by boys, as the work is light.

Signalman.—Signals furnace crew to deliver billets to rolls.

Pump man.—Operates pumps furnishing water for skid pipes at heating furnaces.

ROLLING AND MISCELLANEOUS.

Drag-down.—Draws and carries steel billets from the furnace to the rolls, except where mechanical conveyors are used, and, in some places, starts the billets through the first pass of the rolls. The steel is drawn by grasping it with a pair of tongs and pulling it out of the furnace, and is then carried to the rolls either by simply dragging or sliding it along the steel floor; or, if the piece is heavy, the tongs may be supported by a chain from an overhead trolley (telegraph) and the steel be carried down without touching the floor, or the steel is put on a small iron buggy and wheeled down to the rolls. The work is hot and heavy, requiring no great skill, but considerable dexterity, acquired only through experience, is necessary in order to handle the material with facility.

Transfer man.—Operates lever controlling the transfer rolls which carry billets from the furnace to rolling crew. Light work, requiring but little experience.

Roll engineer.—Operates the engine which drives the rolls and sees that they are kept in proper condition. All engines used in these mills are nonreversing. The work is similar to that of an ordinary stationary engineer.

Oilers.—Oils and cleans engines. Assists roll engineer and is in a position to become familiar with his duties.

Oiler's helper.—Carries oil and helps to oil engines.

Roller.—In charge of and responsible for the operation of the rolls. The duties consist chiefly in seeing that the proper rolls are installed, that they are properly set and kept in good condition, and that the rolling crew performs every part of its work properly. The roller also directs and takes part in the changing of the rolls, and when there is a "cobble" or any other difficulty he works with the crew. In case the steel is not properly heated he notifies the heater. Very responsible position in which a thorough practical knowledge of the properties of steel is indispensable.

Rougher and Catcher (Rougher-up and Rougher-down).—Pass the steel back and forth through the first stand of rolls. The rougher takes the billet from the drag-down—when the drag-down does not put in first pass, which is seldom—grasping it near the end with a pair of specially shaped tongs. The other end is thrust between the lower set of rolls, where it is gripped and drawn through by the rolls as they revolve. As it comes from the rolls on the other side it is grasped with a similar set of tongs by the catcher, frequently known as the rougher-up, who, in a "three-high" mill, puts it between the center and upper rolls, which carry it back under pressure to the rougher-down. In "two-high" mills, of which few remain, the piece is put on top of the upper roll and is thus carried back to the rougher-down without being worked. This process is repeated until the piece has been considerably elongated and reduced in cross section. Heavy work, with exposure to heat and flying sparks. A rather long period of training in other positions is necessary before a man is able to work at the roughing rolls. The difficulty and severity of the work increase generally with the size of the piece handled and the speed of the mill.

Hook-up (Hook man).—The rougher on mills with rolls 12 inches or more in diameter, and on the larger mills, the roughers, catchers and finishers are almost always assisted by hook-ups. The hook-up derives his name from the long bar which is used in his work. It has a saw-toothed hook on one end and a handle on the other, and is suspended by a chain at a point nearer the hook than the handle. The hook is placed underneath the billet to raise it, the bar acting as a lever, with the chain as a fulcrum. Hot and heavy manual labor, requiring a considerable amount of skill in handling heavy pieces.

Billet boy (Pass boy).—When the mill is of the Belgian type—the roughing rolls set tandem in front of the stranding and finishing rolls—the billet boy catches the piece as it comes through the last pass on the roughing rolls, drags it to the strand roll and enters it in the first pass. Heavy manual labor, requiring but little skill or experience.

Strander (Edger, Pony rougher, Poke-in, Stick-in).—When the piece comes from the roughing rolls it is grasped with tongs by the strander and the end put into the proper pass. The work of the strander is lighter than that of the rougher, as the piece is by this time greatly reduced in section; but it requires a great deal of dexterity to handle the rapidly lengthening piece of steel and to enter it in the proper passes.

Finisher.—Handles the steel at the last or finishing pass. In rolling bars the piece is usually run out to the floor and lies there for a moment in order to allow the scale to form, so that the finishing rolls will remove it. The work is light, the amount of skill and dexterity required depending entirely on the size of the product and the speed of the rolls.

Table lever man.—Operates levers which raise and lower tables in front and behind roughing rolls of three-high mills to bring the billet in proper position to pass through the rolls. In some places a lever man is provided for each table. Also controls manipulator and live rolls on transfer tables. Light work, requiring an experienced employee.

Roll scale man.—Shovels scale from pit under rolls and carries it away on a wheelbarrow or cart, when it is not taken away by a crane. Unskilled, manual labor.

Greaser (Roughing table oiler).—Greases the roll necks and the gears and rollers for the conveyors, if any are used. Low-grade work, requiring little skill or experience.

Hotbed man (Straightener, Drag-out).—In the greater number of bar mills the piece as it comes from the finishing rolls is grasped by the drag-out with a pair of tongs and dragged off down the steel floor to the hotbed. The piece is straightened either by being laid out at full length, or if a more perfect straightening is needed, by putting the two ends in grips which pull away from each other, thus effectually stretching the piece out perfectly straight; or, if the bar is large, wooden mallets are used to maul out any bends. In the most modern mills the piece is carried out by roller or cone conveyors to an inclined automatic hotbed, the piece rolling down the incline as the fingers which hold it in place are lowered. In this case men are required only to operate levers and to straighten out any piece that is bent. The work of the drag-outs and the straighteners on the older mills, which, however, are by far the greater in number, varies in difficulty and severity with the size of the product rolled. In the most modern mills the hotbed man is simply a lever man and needs little skill or experience to perform his work.

Stretcher man.—As the last end of the bar comes over the cone conveyor to the hotbed, the stretcher man seizes it in a clamp to stop its progress. It is then transferred to the hotbed by the lever man. Light work, with some exposure to heat; unskilled.

Hotbed lever man (Cone roller man).—Operates levers which control machinery for transferring product on hotbeds. Light work, requiring but little experience.

Hotbed snapper.—Operates snapper which stretches bars on hotbed.

Hotbed trough man.—Throws trough switch, operates pinch rolls, etc.

Shearman (Hot-billet shearman.)—In charge of shears which square bars at ends and cut them into proper lengths. The shearman is responsible for the lengths cut and must decide what portion of the bar is to be scrapped. Light manual labor, requiring experience rather than skill.

Shearman's helper.—Straightens bars on rolls, helps to set gauge, watches bars and sees that they are going through shears properly. Light manual labor, unskilled.

Shear table lever man.—Operates roller table back of shears.

Shear scrap man (Shear laborer).—Picks up scrap around shears and carries away on wheelbarrow or piles in boxes to be removed by crane. Light, unskilled work.

Snap shearman.—Cuts ends off bars before they enter the finishing rolls, by placing bar in small alligator shears. This work is usually done by the catcher who enters the bar in the first pass of the finishing rolls.

Hot-saw man (Hot-saw lever man).—Operates hot saws, cutting sheet bars into lengths. An experienced employee is required for the work, which is light manual labor.

Hot-saw helper.—Oils machinery and sees that bars fall into the cradle after they are sawed. Unskilled, manual labor.

Marker.—Paints size, order number, etc., on finished product. Semiclerical position; light work.

Bundler.—Assembles the sheared bars into bundles and binds them with wire for shipment. The work is usually done in direct connection with the shearing and is very frequently a part of the duties of the shearman's helper. Light work, demanding only unskilled workmen.

Cold-saw operator.—Operates cold saw which cuts finished bars into desired lengths. The saw is operated by means of levers, little skill or experience being required.

Cold-saw laborer.—Handles bars and places them in proper position on rolls in front of saw to be sawed into lengths. Moderately heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Laborer.—Cleans up and does the many light jobs around the mill. Chiefly light work, requiring only unskilled workmen.

Twisting-machine operator and Twisting-machine operator's helper.—The twisting machine contains several sockets which may be revolved. In each of these sockets the end of a rod is placed by the operator, his helper putting the other ends of the rods in stationary sockets so that they are held firmly in place. The operator then moves a lever which causes the revolving sockets to move, which twists the rods into spiral shapes. Light manual labor that requires but little skill.

Twisting-machine laborer.—Brings rods to machine to be twisted and piles them after twisting is done. Unskilled, light manual labor.

ROD MILLS.

Stocker.—Unloads and handles steel billets for heating furnaces. In modern plants the billets are usually carried from the cars in which received to the furnaces by a magnet crane, the work of the stocker being limited to arranging the billets in even rows in order that they may be picked up readily by the magnet. In the older-style plants the billets are loaded on trucks and pushed to the furnaces. The work is light, except where hand loading is in vogue, and is done by unskilled workmen.

Craneman.—Operates magnet crane bringing billets from stock yards or cars to skids or runners in front of the heating furnaces. Light work on which low-grade cranemen may be employed, although men who are skilled in repairing and maintaining electrical apparatus are sometimes employed to insure against breakdowns which would stop the supply of billets and cause a mill shutdown.

Billet man.—Arranges billets on the skidway behind continuous furnaces so they will enter the furnace on the same curve and go through in a straight line. Light manual labor, unskilled.

Charger (Plunger, Pulpit man, Pusher, Pusher man).—After the billets are arranged on the skidway behind the "continuous" furnace, they are pushed into the furnace one at a time by means of a hydraulic pusher which the charger controls with a lever. As a billet is pushed into the back of the furnace, it causes a heated billet to drop from the front of the furnace upon a conveyor which carries it to the rolls. The charger is stationed some distance from the furnace. The work is light and requires neither skill nor experience. Where the billets are charged into the furnace by hand, the work is hot and heavy.

Heater.—The heater is in direct charge of the heating furnaces. He must see that the billets are charged properly, that the proper temperature is maintained, that the billets are delivered to the rolls at the right heat, and is, in general, responsible for the proper working of the furnaces. A very important and responsible position, requiring considerable practical knowledge of the heat treatment of metals, which can be gained only by long experience. The work is largely supervisory, although at times the heater assists employees working under his supervision.

Heater's helper.—Regulates fires, tends water-cooling system, assists in cleaning scale from furnaces, and does general work around the furnaces under the direction of the heater. The character of the work varies considerably according to the type of furnace used, ranging from heavy manual labor on hand-charged furnaces to comparatively easy work on continuous furnaces. The helper may be considered as a semiskilled employee who may become very proficient with experience and capable of performing the duties of heater.

Fireman.—Fires furnaces with coal or coke and cleans grates and pits. Many furnaces are gas fired, making the services of a fireman unnecessary. Moderately heavy manual labor, unskilled, done under conditions of some heat.

Cinder man.—Removes cinder which collects in the bottom of the furnace and takes it away in a cinder buggy or wheelbarrow. The cinder is preserved for use in the open-hearth or blast furnaces, since it contains a high percentage of metal. Unskilled, light, manual labor.

Shortstop (switchman).—As the heated billets come from the furnace they are carried to the rolls on a conveyor. The shortstop operates levers which block the conveyor and check the progress of the billet until the rolling crew are ready for it. He also switches billets from the conveyor to the floor when there is a breakdown and the billet would become cold before it could be rolled. When two mills are being operated by one furnace, he switches the billets to the different rolls. He also signals the charger when to deliver a heated billet from the furnace. The work is light, being done by levers, but a semiskilled employee is required for the position. The short-stop is usually advanced to the position of bull dogger, and then to rougher.

Roller.—Is in charge of the rolls and is responsible for their operation. The duties consist chiefly in seeing that the proper rolls are installed, that they are properly set and kept in good condition, and that the rolling crew performs every part of its work properly. He directs and sometimes assists in changing the rolls and notifies the heater when the steel is not properly heated. Very responsible position in which a thorough practical knowledge of the properties of steel and the rolling processes is indispensable.

Rougher and Bull dogger.—The billet comes from the heater on the conveyor and goes through the first pass of the roughing rolls. As it comes through the rolls it is grasped by the rougher with a pair of specially shaped tongs and placed between the center and lower rolls which carry it back under pressure to the bull dogger. The bull dogger grasps the billet with his tongs, which are suspended by a chain that acts as a fulcrum, and passes it back to the rougher between the center and upper rolls. The process is repeated until the billet is reduced in cross section and elongated as desired. Heavy manual labor, requiring considerable skill and experience. The men are exposed to the heat of the billets handled, but in most mills heat conditions are alleviated by cold-air blasts.

Catcher (Sticker-in, Ten-inch man, or according to size of roll).—After the piece leaves the roughing rolls it is passed through several sets of rolls to reduce it to the proper size. As the piece comes through one set of rolls it is grasped with tongs by the catcher, who trims the end on small alligator shears and passes it back through another set of rolls. The catcher's work is lighter than that of a rougher, but it requires considerable skill and dexterity to handle the rapidly lengthening piece of steel, which runs through the mill at a very high speed, and to enter it in the proper pass. Catchers start on the first passes and are advanced to the position of finisher as they become proficient.

Hooker.—As the piece comes through one set of rolls and is started through another set, it loops out and runs into a pit. This loop is due to the fact that each set of rolls reduces the cross section of the piece to such an extent that it can not pass through the succeeding set of rolls as rapidly. The hooker, by means of long steel rods hooked at the ends, keeps these loops straight and running freely. As several loops may be in a pit at one time, quickness, accuracy, and nerve are required. The safety of the catcher depends upon the pieces being kept straight, which makes the position a responsible one. The work is light and easily learned and requires but little skill or experience. There is some exposure to heat, but not to extreme heat.

Finisher.—Catches the piece as it comes through the next to the last roll and enters it at the last pass or finishing roll. The work is moderately heavy and very rapid, requiring a high degree of skill and dexterity as the rolls are speeded up so that the rod is running at the rate of 1,000 to 1,500 or more feet per minute. The finisher has general supervision over the rolling, under the roller, to whose position he is in line for promotion.

Reel hooker (Puller-off).—As the rods come from the finishing rolls they are automatically wound around rapidly revolving reels. When the reel is wound the reel hooker opens it by pulling a lever, and pulls the bundle of rods from the reel to the conveyor by a steel bar having a hook on the end. He then readjusts the reel for rewinding. Levers that drop reels and return them to position are sometimes operated by a second man, called the "pulpit" man or reeler, the reel hooker pulling the bundles of rods from the reels to the conveyor only. One hooker has charge of several reels. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Conveyor man (Conveyor hooker).—Stationed at the end of the conveyor that brings the bundles of rods from the reels. As the bundle comes on the conveyor the conveyor man twists it with a small steel hook so that it stands upright and is caught by a large hook on the cooling conveyor chain. This is an endless chain that carries the bundles a sufficient distance to allow them to cool before they are removed. Where a chain and hook are not used, the conveyor man is located in a "pulpit" and operates levers that bring the buggies under the conveyor and pushes the bundles of rods into them from the conveyor. Light, semiskilled, manual labor.

Take-off man (Pull-off).—Removes bundles from hooks of cooling conveyor and places on trucks, using a long hook suspended by a chain which acts as a fulcrum, or straightens bundles on buggies where chain-and-hook conveyor is not used. Also ties ends of rods around bundles. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Buggy man (Trucker).—Pushes truck cars or buggies loaded with bundles to scales for weighing, then to the yard for piling, to shipping platform, or to cleaning house of wire department. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Suet man.—Greases bearings of rolls in mill and inspects roll bearings to see that they do not become overheated. Light work, unskilled.

Scrap hooker.—Takes away from rolls pieces which become bent or twisted so they can not be finished. Also shovels scrap ends into wheelbarrow and takes to scrap pile. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Roll turner.—Cuts rolls to proper surface and makes passes in rolls. Roll turners are not necessarily general machinists, but they are highly skilled in their particular work, which requires great accuracy.

Shearman.—Cuts up "cobbles" on alligator shears for scrap to be remelted in open-hearth furnaces. Unskilled, light manual labor.

Scrap baller.—Operates electrically driven machine, or reel, which balls up spoiled rods and scrap wire to be taken to the open-hearth furnaces for remelting. There is some danger of injury in handling the long pieces of scrap, but machines are usually well protected by safety devices. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Sweeper.—General cleaning up around mill.

Roll scale man.—Shovels scale from under rolls and carries it away in wheelbarrow. Light, unskilled work, sometimes performed by cinder man.

Engineer.—Regular stationary engineer in charge of engines that drive finishing and roughing rolls. When rolls are driven by electric power, the motor is in charge of a motorman, who is a skilled electrician.

Oiler.—Cleans and oils roll engines. Regular duties do not require a skilled man, but an opportunity is afforded to learn the work of the engineer.

Rod pilers.—Pile bundles of rods in stockyards. Unskilled, manual labor.

Loader.—Trims ends of rods with hand shears, ties bundles together with wire bands, and loads into cars. Unskilled, manual labor.

WIRE MILLS.

Stocker.—Pushes trucks loaded with bundles of rods from stockyard to cleaning room of wire mill. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Pin man (Acid craneman's helper).—The bundles or coils of rods come to the cleaning room arranged in a vertical position, side by side, on trucks. The pin man pushes a large wooden pin through all of the coils and fastens each end of the pin to the crane. He then assists the craneman in dipping the coils into the acid bath and in removing them to the conveyor. Unskilled, light, manual labor.

Acid man.—Has charge of the acid bath, prepares the acid solution, regulates the temperature of the bath (steam heated) and, in some plants, inspects the rods after they are dipped. Is responsible for the proper cleaning of the rods. A highly skilled position, requiring a man with considerable experience.

Acid craneman.—Operates steam crane for handling rods from trucks to acid bath. The rods are lowered into the acid bath and allowed to remain there long enough to remove all scale and impurities. They are then lifted from the bath, rinsed in water, and put on the "sull rack" or conveyor which carries them through a water spray that causes a slight rust or "sull" which aids as a lubricant in wire drawing. Light, unskilled, manual labor, but requiring experience to tell when rods are properly cleaned. The work of the craneman and pin man is wet and dirty, with exposure to steam and to fumes from the acid bath. In the newer plants fumes are carried away from the tanks by suction.

Yeast tender (Coating mixer).—Makes a solution of lime, yeast, water, etc., and delivers it to the lime bath and puts it into the tanks. Light manual labor, requiring little skill or experience.

Lime craneman.—Operates small crane which removes the rods from the sull rack, dips them in a tank containing a solution of lime, which acts as a lubricant and protection from corrosion, and places them on a truck to be taken to the dry house. Light, unskilled, manual labor.

Dry-house wheeler.—Pushes trucks loaded with rods from the lime tank to the dry house. Pulls out pin before taking to dry house and piles on truck to be returned to acid room. Unskilled, manual labor.

Fireman.—Has charge of and is responsible for maintaining the proper temperature in the drying kilns where the rods are dried after being dipped in the lime solution. Kilns are heated by coal, coke, gas, or waste heat from other furnaces. The work requires a man of some experience. Little manual labor is involved unless the kilns are heated by coke or coal.

Rod wheeler.—Where electric tractors or mules are not used, pushes trucks of rods from drying furnace to wire drawers. In some plants unloads rods from trucks. Moderate, unskilled, manual labor.

Buggy supplier.—After rods have been delivered to wire drawers, the buggy supplier pushes the empty trucks or buggies to the lime tanks to be reloaded. Light, unskilled, manual labor.

Wire drawer.—Takes bundle of rods from truck or floor, places on a freely running reel, and trims and points end of rod in small swaging rolls or rotary rolls. After the rod is pointed and a safety device is put on, it is taken to the drawing frame, and the pointed end put through the die. A mechanical grip is then fastened to the pointed end, which draws the rod through the die sufficiently to attach it to a block which revolves and draws the rod through the die and winds the wire on the block. The die is a steel plate or chilled iron die containing a number of holes the same diameter as the wire to be drawn. The rod runs through a die hole and is reduced in size to the diameter of the hole. It is a cold process and the rod passes through a lubricating grease before entering the die. After the wire is drawn the wire drawer removes the coil of wire from the block and places it on a truck for removal, or on a roll for further drawing. Light to heavy manual labor, depending on weight of material handled, requiring a skilled and experienced employee.

Wire wheeler.—Wheels trucks of wire from wire drawers to stock room, shipping platform, etc. Unskilled, manual labor.

Gauger.—Inspects wire and gauges it with a V-gauge to see that it is drawn properly. Work supervisory and skilled.

Die reamer.—Reams chilled iron dies to proper sizes. The die holes are first drilled out on a power drill, then reamed to the proper size by holding against a revolving cutting tool. Light work, highly skilled. The quality of wire drawn depends upon the reamer's accuracy in reaming the dies.

Plate batterer.—Pounds steel die plates under a steam hammer to close die holes which have become worn and must be repunched to proper size. Semiskilled labor.

Plate setter.—After steel die plates have been battered under the steam hammer, the setter punches out the holes to desired size, using a hand punch. Highly skilled work, accuracy in sizing the die holes being necessary to produce a perfect wire.

Oiler.—Oils gears, line shafting, etc., in mill. Common, unskilled labor.

Scrap man.—Collects boxes of scrap from around wire-drawing machines, loads on trucks, and takes to balling machine. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Sweeper.—An unskilled laborer doing general sweeping and cleaning around the mill.

Engineer.—Has charge of engines furnishing power to wire mills. A skilled stationary engineer.

Oiler.—Oils and wipes engines. Semiskilled, with opportunity to learn duties of engineer.

GALVANIZING.

Reeler.—Places bundle of wire on reel back of annealing furnaces, from which it is drawn slowly, passing successively through the annealing furnaces, acid bath, water bath, the spelter or galvanizing bath, and sometimes a second water bath, after which it is rewound on blocks. As the wire runs off one reel, the reeler splices the end to the end of a new coil, which makes a continuous wire passing through the galvanizing process. If the furnaces are gas fired, the reeler looks after the gas flow and temperature. Moderate manual labor, requiring experience rather than skill, and quickness in splicing wires and straightening out trouble. Reelers usually are advanced to positions as blockers.

Fireman.—When annealing furnace and spelter tanks are heated by coal or coke, instead of by gas, a fireman is employed who tends fires and is responsible for temperatures. Manual labor, requiring experience to maintain even temperatures.

Wiper.—As the wires emerge from the spelter or galvanizing bath they pass under small balls of asbestos, held in place by levers, which wipe the surplus spelter from the wires. As a spliced place in the wire comes from the tank, the lever must be lifted to allow it to pass. At the same time the ball of asbestos is removed and a new one inserted. Also watches spelter pan to see that the proper temperature is maintained, puts the spelter in the pan, keeps skimmings of spelter, and at the end of the week cleans dross from pan. The skimmings are afterwards refined to save the zinc. The work is light, highly skilled, and requires quickness and accuracy.

Blocker.—After wire is galvanized, it is automatically wound on blocks. The blocker removes the bundles of wire from the blocks, cuts out splices and imperfect places, ties ends of wire, and, in some places, helps to load bundles on trucks. Moderate manual labor, semiskilled, with opportunity for advancement to wiper's position.

Scrap man.—Collects scrap wire and wheels to bundling machine; also wheels spelter to galvanizing tanks. Common, unskilled labor, light work.

Bundler.—Ties wire bands around bundles of wire after they have been galvanized and loads on trucks. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Tester.—Tests samples of wire in laboratory to see that they are properly galvanized. Skilled, light work.

Inspector.—Inspects wire to see that it is of proper size and galvanized properly; also to see that the blocker has cut out all imperfect places. A highly skilled position, next to foreman in importance.

TUBE MILLS.

BUTT WELDING—TUBES UP TO 3 INCHES.

Craneman.—Operates crane unloading skelp from cars to tube mill. Light work, requiring little experience.

Crane hooker.—Hooks crane chains on cradles containing skelp, signals craneman, and unfastens chains after skelp is unloaded from car. Light work, unskilled.

Clipper and Clippers's helper (Shearman and Shearman's helper).—By means of a foot lever operates machine that cuts bell end of skelp to a tapered point and bends it into a cup shape. The helper assists in putting the skelp into the machine and removing it after cut and cupped. In most places, this work is done in the skelp mills. Moderately heavy labor, unskilled.

Bend-up.—Skelp bars are bent up at one end so they will not tear the furnace bottom as they are pushed in. Bars for butt welding are small and the bending is done by the bend-up who uses a short bar or wrench, called a "dog," for the purpose. Moderate labor, unskilled.

Charger (Poke-in).—When a charging machine is used to put skelp into the furnace the charger slides the skelp from the pile to the trough of the charging machine. In some places, this work is done by the clipper and his helper. Light skelp usually is put into the furnace by hand, the charger's helper carrying the skelp to the furnace and the charger putting it into the furnace. In either case, the work is semiskilled and moderately heavy.

Charging-machine operator (Controller boy, Motorman, Pusher runner).—Operates usually from a seat, by lever control, the electric charging machine that pushes skelp into the furnaces. The work is light and can be performed by an unskilled person of ordinary intelligence.

Picker (Shove-up).—Stands on the front or charging side of the furnace and with a steel bar, "picker," straightens the skelp bars in the furnace and keeps them separated. Experience rather than skill is required. The picker is exposed to the furnace heat, and usually wears a protecting mask. As a rule, two pickers work at each furnace, spelling each other for periods of about 30 minutes.

Welder.—Catches end of skelp in furnace with tongs about 6 feet long, slips one or two "bells," the diameter of which is the same as the outside of the pipe to be drawn, over the tongs handle and drops the tongs into the groove of the bell block. The bell is larger than the groove in the block and remains stationary, while the tongs catch on a moving endless chain which draws the skelp through the bell, bending it into form and producing the necessary pressure to weld the edges. The welder also looks after the furnace bottom, is responsible for the proper heating of the skelp, and, in some places, regulates the heat of the furnace by changing the gas and air supply. A highly skilled and experienced man is required for the position. The welder and the welding crew work very rapidly, and under conditions of great heat, making it necessary to employ spell hands. The men work from one-third to one-half of the time they are on duty.

Bell cleaner.—After the skelp passes through the bell, the bell falls into a trough of water. The bell cleaner knocks off the scale and places the bell on a table for further use by the welder. Light work, unskilled, done by boys.

Take-off tongs.—Releases tongs from end of pipe, cools in trough of water and places on conveyor that delivers tongs to welder. Light work, unskilled.

Hook runner (Buggy boy).—The old-style welding benches are not equipped with an endless chain but with a straight chain pull with a hook attached to the end. After each piece of skelp is drawn, it is necessary to unhook the tongs and return the hook to the welder. This work is done by the hook runner. Hot and rapid work, done by boys.

Tong carrier.—Where mill is not equipped with a conveyor to return the tongs to the welder, they are carried by the tong carrier. Light, rapid, and unskilled work, done by boys.

Bench mover.—The welding bench, on which runs the chain that draws the skelp from the furnace, is arranged to move back and forth across the furnace so the welder can reach the skelp in the order in which it was charged. The bench mover operates the welding bench and controls the movement of the chain on the bench by means of lever control. He is seated in a "pulpit," which is well out of the furnace heat. In some mills he also operates a lever which controls a device that throws the pipe from the welding bench onto a conveyor leading to the sizing rolls. Light work, done by boys.

Tag welder.—Welds a small bar, called a tag, to the end of each piece of skelp which is to be drawn through a series of bells each reduced in diameter, a process used in making pipe to withstand heavy pressure. The tag is required because the ordinary tongs will not hold or the skelp itself gives way. Few mills have tag welders. Occupation very similar to blacksmith.

Size roller.—Catches end of pipe with a pair of tongs and rolls it off the welding bench, unless this is done mechanically, and starts the pipe through the sizing rolls—a set of grooved rolls that makes the pipe perfectly round. He must see that the weld is up or down as the pipe goes through the rolls. The size roller stands near the furnace opposite the welder, and is exposed to the furnace heat. Heavy manual labor, continuous and unskilled, with frequent rest periods, being a spell-hand occupation.

Roll setter.—Sets rolls and makes roll changes, assisted by helpers. Watches the rolling process and sees that pipes are rolled to the proper size. The work is largely supervisory, but involves heavy manual labor during roll changes. A skilled and experienced man is required.

Hot-saw operator.—In some establishments double-length pipes are sawed in two before entering the cross rolls. The work is light, as the saws are operated by lever control, and requires but little skill or experience.

Cross roller (Trough dumper).—The cross roller sees that the pipe enters the cross rolls properly after passing through the sizing rolls. These rolls keep the pipe to correct size, straighten it, and remove the scale. The cross roller also operates, by lever control, the dumper that dumps the pipe on the conveyor of the cooling bed, and, in some places, drags cobbles to scrap pile. Light, rapid work requiring an experienced employee.

Hot-pipe gauger.—Gauges pipe with a caliper gauge as it comes through cross rolls. If not properly sized, notifies the roll setter. Light work, requiring a man of ordinary intelligence. Some exposure to heat.

Cooling-table man (Straightener, Layer-off, cross rolls).—Straightens pipes on cooling-table conveyor when they do not fall properly on conveyor after they come through the cross rolls. Light work, unskilled, usually performed by boys.

Cold-saw operator (Saw boy).—Places pipe in position on conveyor table, using tongs, and operates saw that saws crop end from pipe. A saw is at each end of the conveyor and one in the middle to cut in two double-length pipe, each saw having an operator. Light work, requiring but little experience, usually done by boys.

Ripper.—When rotary cutters are used to cut crop ends from pipes the operator is called a ripper. The work is about the same as that of a cold-saw operator.

Rack man.—After the pipes are sawed they drop from the conveyor table into racks which are removed by cranes. The rack man straightens the pipes in the rack when they do not fall properly. Light work, unskilled.

Craneman.—Operates the crane that carries racks of pipe from the welding department to the finishing department.

Crane hooker (Crane follower, Marker).—Hooks crane chains to racks, signals crane-man and follows crane to finishing department and unhooks chains. Unskilled labor.

Straightener.—Straightens pipes that are not straight when they leave the cooling conveyor. The pipe is placed between two small rolls and bent by pulling on the free end. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Oiler and greaser.—General oiling and greasing of all machinery, except electric. Light work, unskilled.

Gas reverser.—Reverses gas valves to throw gas from one side of furnace to other to keep furnace heat evenly distributed and prevent burning out on one side. As this merely requires the reversing of a lever, the work is light and unskilled. At some places it is done by the gas-producer man.

Cinder tapper.—Taps cinder from furnaces and runs it into pans to cool. In some mills this work is done by the furnace crew. Light work, unskilled, with some exposure to heat.

Cinder, scale, and gravel wheeler (Laborer, Sandman).—Wheels cinder and scale from furnaces and brings gravel to furnaces for bottoms. Unskilled labor with wheelbarrow and cinder buggy.

Mill laborer.—Does general cleaning work and odd laboring jobs. Unskilled labor, varying from light to heavy work.

Scrap shearman.—Cuts scrap and cobbles from finishing and welding departments on alligator shears. Unskilled, moderately heavy manual labor.

Bell driller (Bell filer).—Bores out bells to proper sizes on drill press. A machine hand, semiskilled. Work light.

LAP WELDING—BENDING FURNACE.

Scarfer and helpers.—When the skelp is not scarfed in the rolling mill it must be done at the tube mill. This is done by passing the skelp through the scarfing rolls or knives, which bevel off the edges to give the proper thickness when welded. The scarfer is a skilled employee who is responsible for the proper setting and operating of the scarfing rolls and knives. The helpers are unskilled laborers who handle skelp.

Charging-machine operator (Motorman, Controller boy, Pusher runner).—In lap welding the skelp is heated in the bending furnace and bent so that the sides overlap, then reheated in the welding furnace and welded. Skelp for small tubes is charged into the furnace several pieces at one time; for large sizes, one at a time. The nature of work and duties are about the same as for the charging-machine operator, butt welding. When heavy skelp is being run, however, the charging machine also is used to push the skelp from the furnace to the bending rolls.

Charger (Poke-in).—Duties and nature of work similar to those of charger and picker combined, butt welding.

Door boy.—Opens and closes doors of bending furnace. Light work by lever control, unskilled, done by boys.

Bender, large tubes (Head man, power bending rolls).—The skelp is pushed from the furnace by the charging machine. It passes between power rolls and is bent into the form of a tube, the edges overlapping ready to be welded. The bender controls the rolls by levers, operates the cable that pulls the tube from the rolls after it is bent, usually has charge of the furnace, and is responsible for the proper bending and lapping of the skelp. The work is light, exposed to considerable heat, and requires a man with skill and experience that can be acquired only through practice.

Bender's helper (Sledger).—When the tube is being bent in the bending rolls the edges sometimes are not properly lapped. The helper works with a bar and sledge hammer, under the bender's direction, opening or closing the lap as may be required. Light work, unskilled, done under conditions of considerable heat.

Bender, small tubes.—Small tubing is bent by being drawn through a die, as in the butt-welding process, instead of being rolled. The bender pulls the skelp from the furnace with a pair of tongs, regulates the heat of the furnace, and is responsible for the proper bending and lapping of tubes. Requirements about the same as for bender, large tubes.

Tong runner (Hooker).—Fastens tongs on skelp after it is pulled from the furnace by the bender, and fastens tongs to chain which pulls the skelp through the die, bending it to form. Also returns tongs to furnace. Unskilled labor, not very heavy, but rapid and hot.

Skelp transfer man.—Operates levers controlling conveyor that carries skelp from bending to welding furnaces. Light work, unskilled.

Roller-off (Take-off).—Where there is no conveyor, rolls bent skelp from bending to welding furnace, using a short iron bar. Light work, unskilled, but hot.

LAP WELDING—WELDING FURNACE.

Pit hand (Roll-over).—Rolls bent tubes from transfer table into trough of charging machine, using an iron bar. When charging machine is not used, pushes bent tubes into the furnace. Unskilled, moderately heavy manual labor, exposed to considerable heat.

Pusher runner (Pusher, Charging-machine operator, Poke-in).—(Same description as for Charging-machine operator, above.)

Turner-down.—In lap welding, tubes are charged at each side of the furnace and drawn from the center. The turner-down uses a pair of tongs and, as a tube is withdrawn, rolls the others toward the center. Done by pit hand in some places. Unskilled, hot, heavy manual labor. An opportunity is afforded to learn duties of the welder.

Welder.—Has charge of the welding furnace and the furnace crew, and is responsible for the proper heating of the bent skelp. Regulates flow of gas and air in the furnace. Supervises the making of furnace bottoms, the work being done by the furnace crew. When small-sized tubes are made, pushes the skelp out of the furnace into the welding rolls. Large sizes are pushed out by the charging machine. The work is highly skilled, largely supervisory and light, except when pushing skelp from furnace, which is hot and heavy work.

End fixer (End opener).—While the bent skelp is heating in the furnace, the end fixer keeps the ends of the tubes open so they will enter the welding rolls properly. This is done by means of an iron bar with which the ends are pried back at the lap. The work is done under exposure to the furnace heat, is hot, heavy, and unskilled.

Baller (Ball man).—As a tube is pushed from the furnace it enters the welding rolls, which are located directly behind the furnace. These rolls run continuously. To prevent the tube from being crushed, it passes over a ball or mandrel, of the diameter of the inside of the tube, which is attached to a long rod called the welding bar. A fresh ball is put on for each tube, the baller doing this work with a pair of tongs. After the tube has passed over the ball, he removes the ball with a hook and places it in a trough to be cleaned. Iron tubes are passed through a second set of rolls similar to the welding rolls. The crew is the same as at the welding rolls—baller, rod puller, and take-off. The work is light, unskilled, but rather hot, due to the furnace heat. When large-sized tubes are being made, the balls are heavy, and a helper assists the baller in handling them with a small air hoist.

Baller's helper.—Assists the baller in putting balls on the welding rod and removing them. Also fixes a wooden plug on the rod when large-sized tubes are being welded. The end of the tube passes over the plug, which then slides along the rod and acts as a support for the tube to keep it from collapsing. Light, unskilled labor, with some exposure to heat.

Ball boy.—Keeps baller supplied with proper-sized balls. These balls are kept in bins and taken from the bins to the baller in wheelbarrows. Light work, unskilled.

Bar puller (Rod puller, Lever man, Rodman).—After the tube has passed through the welding rolls and the ball has been removed from the end of the welding bar, the bar puller runs the bar back from the rolls and out of the tube by operating a lever. He also operates a lever that dumps large-sized tubes out of the welding trough to the sizing roll trough for inspection by the taker-off, though in some places an extra employee called a lever man is detailed for this work. Light work, requiring an experienced employee.

Taker-off.—Rolls small tubes from welding trough to sizing roll trough, inspects lap weld to see that there are no defects in the weld, and, if perfect, starts the live rolls in the trough that carries the tube to the sizing rolls. Imperfect tubes are sent back to the furnace pit to be recharged for a second run. The taker-off has charge of the back of the furnace. His work is light and done under conditions of considerable heat. A man of experience is required for the position and one who is able to judge quickly whether a tube is properly welded.

Turntable lever man.—Operates levers that control hydraulic lift which lifts defective tubes from sizing roll trough, turns them end for end, and carries to furnace pit for recharging. Light work, unskilled.

Roll setter.—(Same description as for Roll setter, Butt welding.)

Cross roller.—About the same as cross roller, butt welding, except that rolls are reversed frequently and tubes passed through them several times.

Poke-in.—When there are no live conveyor rolls leading to the sizing rolls and cross rolls, the tubes are pushed along the table by a poke-in. The work is moderately heavy, hot, and unskilled.

Cooling-table man.—(Same as Cooling-table man, Butt welding, except that one man attends several tables, the tubes being larger and cooler and needing less attention.)

Cold-saw operator.—(Same description as for Cold-saw operator, Butt welding.)

Ripper.—(Same description as for Ripper, Butt welding.)

Straightener.—Large tubes are straightened on an electric or hydraulic press. Rollers are set in the bed of the press over which the tubes are rolled until the bent part comes directly under a plunger. The plunger is then released and its pressure straightens the tube. The work is moderately heavy, a helper assisting the straightener in handling largest sizes of tubes. Little skill is required, but the straightener must have ability to gauge the straightness of a tube at a glance.

Sticker dresser and patcher.—At times a tube will stick on the ball when partly welded. The sticker dresser and his helper cut off the imperfect end of the tube with a cold chisel and sledge hammer. They also patch imperfect welds by inserting a piece of cold steel. The tube is then reheated and redrawn which welds the piece inserted. Moderately heavy labor requiring experience rather than skill, which is gained while acting as a helper.

Ball grinder.—Grinds welding balls to smooth surface and proper size on emery wheel. Light work, requiring both skill and experience.

Ball gauger.—Gauges welding balls and marks their sizes with chalk, after which they are carried to stock bins by laborers. Unskilled, light work.

Ball rattler (Churn man).—Places welding balls in a steel drum which revolves by electric power and knocks the scale from balls. Light to heavy manual labor, depending upon size of balls handled; unskilled.

Gas reverser.—(Same description as for Gas reverser, Butt welding; also does cinder tapping at lap-welding furnaces.)

Laborer.—Wheels sand and broken crockery to furnaces for bottom making, wheels cinder and scale from furnaces, and does general cleaning up around mill. Unskilled labor, varying from light to heavy.

SEAMLESS TUBING—HOT MILL.

Laborer.—Miscellaneous work—cleaning up scrap, handling machinery, moving material, etc. Work varies from light to heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Stock laborer.—Unloading stock from cars and piles and taking to furnace. Work done by small electric cranes. Unskilled, light manual labor.

Charger, heating furnace.—At some places the billets are charged into small heating furnaces, heated and then sawed into desired lengths. The charging is usually done by hand and is rather heavy work, unskilled.

Pusher-out.—Pushes billets from heating furnace to conveyor leading to hot saws. Moderately heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Hot sawyer.—Saws billets, while hot, into desired lengths. Power saws, controlled by lever, are used. The work is light and unskilled.

Shearman and Shearman's helpers.—When billets are not heated and sawed into lengths, they are cut on power shears. One helper, called the feeder, pushes the billets into the shears, the piler takes away the lengths when cut, and the shearman operates the shears and has general charge of operations. The work is moderately heavy. The shearman is a skilled man; his helpers are unskilled, but the work may be considered as training for the higher position.

Center pressman.—The lengths of steel that are to be made into tubing are taken by the center pressman, one at a time, placed under a drill press and a hole bored in the exact center to a depth of about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  inches. They are then thrown on a pile to be taken to the furnace for heating before being drawn. Light work, unskilled, requiring a man of ordinary intelligence.

Billet heater.—(Same description as for Heater, Rod mill.)

Charger (Heater's helper).—(Same description as for Charger, Rod mill.)

Tongsman.—Carries the heated billet from the furnace to the piercing mill, usually by means of suspended tongs, "telegraphed." Hot and heavy work, requiring considerable experience.

Plugger.—Controls the piercing rolls and puts pointed mandrel on rod over which tube passes when rolled. The rolls are a special conical shape which cause the heated billet to rotate rapidly and move forward. The pressure of the rolls causes the solid billet to open in the center and the pointed mandrel over which it passes smooths and shapes the cavity thus produced. The work is light and unskilled, as the rolls are set by a foreman and are in charge of the piercing-mill operator. Pluggers are advanced to the position of piercing-mill operator.

Piercing-mill operator.—Has charge of the piercing rolls and is responsible for the proper piercing of billets. Controls the movement of the rod that holds the piercing mandrel; also the device that throws the tube into a car or buggy after it is pierced. Light work, done while seated, but requiring an experienced employee.

Tube heater.—After billets have been pierced, the heater charges the tubes into the furnace and draws them when heated. Hot and heavy work, requiring a thorough practical knowledge of heating steel.

Trolleyman.—Takes the heated tubes from the furnace to the rolls, where they are rolled over a mandrel to give the proper diameter and thickness of wall. Hot and heavy work, requiring considerable experience in handling the steel by means of the suspended tongs, or "telegraph."

Roller and Roller's helper.—See that the tubes enter the rolls correctly. Very little work in connection with the position. Largely supervisory to see that rolls are running properly.

Inlet man.—Pushes tubes from rolls to expanding machine. Unskilled, manual labor.

Expander.—A pointed mandrel, whose diameter is the same as the inside diameter desired in the tubes, is placed on a rod by the expander and the tube forced over it by the expanding machine. The work is light, and is done by a skilled and experienced employee.

Lever man.—Operates lever that draws mandrel rod from the tube after it has been expanded and tips the pipe into a rack to be carried away by crane. Unskilled, light labor.

SEAMLESS TUBING—COLD DRAWING.

Pointer.—After tubes have been made they are sometimes reduced in size by cold drawing, which is similar to wire drawing except that the tubes are drawn over a mandrel to prevent crushing. The pointer heats the ends of the tubes in the furnace and points them under a small steam hammer, the point being used to start the tube through the drawing die. Unskilled work, fairly heavy and hot.

Pointer's helper.—Assists the pointer in heating tubes and tends the furnace fire. Unskilled, manual labor.

Pickler.—(Same description as for Pickler, galvanizing department, Tube mills.)

Annealer.—Tubes are charged and drawn into and from the annealing furnaces by hand. This is the work of the annealer. It is heavy manual labor, exposed to furnace heat, and requires a man with considerable experience.

Benchman.—After the tubes are annealed, they are drawn through ties by the benchman whose duties and work are about the same as a wire drawer.

Benchman's helper.—Puts a rod in the tube to prevent its crushing while being drawn. Unskilled, light labor.

Gauger.—Gauges tubes for size and sees that proper dies are used. Supervisory and responsible position.

Expander.—After a tube is drawn the rod can not be removed from it until it has been passed through the expanding rolls. The expander operates these rolls, which slightly expands the tube and permits the rod to be withdrawn. Light work, unskilled.

Stripper benchman.—After the tube passes through the expanding rolls, the stripper benchman pulls it off the inserted rod. Light labor, unskilled.

FINISHING DEPARTMENT.

Machine hands.—Include two classes of employees—cutters and threaders. The cutters operate machines to cut off the crop ends of small-sized pipe that is not sawed, and to cut defects from all sides. The machine is practically automatic and lever controlled; the work is moderately heavy, continuous, and unskilled. The threaders operate mechanical machines that thread ends of pipe. The operators usually do not set up their machines, the work requires no skill, and it is only moderately heavy.

Socket screwer and Socket screwer's helper.—The socket screwer takes the pipe, inserts the socket in an automatic machine that grips it and revolves it rapidly, screwing the socket on the pipe which is held stationary by a lever-operated device. On small pipe the helper screws the socket on the pipe by hand. In some places this is done by the cutter or his helper. On large sizes of pipe the socket screwer has no helper. It takes longer to screw the sockets onto the pipe and during the time this is being done he does the work usually done by the helper. The work is light, rapid, and unskilled.

Tester and Water boy (Prover and Valveman).—Each taking hold of one end of a pipe, they place the pipe in a hydraulic machine that fills it full of water, under pressure. The water boy operates the valve that turns on the water, and the tester watches the pipe for leaks. Defective pipes are thrown out and returned to the machine hands to have the defects cut out and to be rethreaded. Unskilled labor, moderately heavy, and very rapid when handling small sizes of pipe.

Marker.—Stencils length of pipe on the pipe, helps the bundler, and in some places inspects for defects. Light work, requiring an experienced employee.

Stenciler.—Stencils trade name, length, and weight on pipe. Light work, unskilled, done by boys on small sizes.

Drifter.—Places a steel cylinder in end of pipe and drives it through by a steel bar and sledge hammer to clean the inside of the pipe and remove all obstructions. This is done only when specially ordered by purchaser. Heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Blister man (Swager).—When a pipe blisters on the inside, the blister man puts a mandrel against it and pounds the pipe with a sledge hammer to close the blister. Heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Bundler and Bundler's helper (Stocker).—Place the proper number of pipes in a V-shaped rack for bundling. The bundler then measures the total length of the pipe, calculating the length from one standard piece and deducting or adding the difference due to shorter or longer pipes which he measures with a rope tie. The pipes are then tied into a bundle and a tag attached showing the number of feet it contains, after which the bundle is carried away by a crane. The ends of bundles for foreign shipment are wrapped in burlap to protect the threads. The bundler is an experienced employee, expert in calculating lengths rapidly; his helper an unskilled laborer. The work is moderately heavy.

Stamper boy.—At some establishments a boy marks tags for bundles, as directed by the bundler. Light work, unskilled.

Ring man.—Puts a half coupling on the threads of large pipes to protect them during shipment. Light work, unskilled.

Ring sorter.—Sorts rings for pipe ends by sizes. The work is light, and usually done by old employees incapacitated for heavy labor.

Inspector.—Inspects pipe for size, finish, and threading. Supervisory work, done only by an experienced employee.

Tumbler.—Puts special orders of pipe into a drum which revolves and polishes the pipe. Moderately heavy labor, unskilled.

Laborer (Socket stocker, Scrap man).—Does general work around the finishing department, wheeling couplings to machines, cutting rope and burlap for bundling pipes, cleaning up, etc. Unskilled, manual labor, varying from light to moderately heavy work.

Die setter (Die fixer).—Sets the dies of pipe-threading machines and keeps dies in order. A skilled machinist.

Die boy.—When dies are removed from machines the die boy washes and cleans them before they are sharpened or repaired by the die setter. Unskilled, light work.

Cutter grinder (Die grinder).—Sets cutters in pipe-cutting machines and keeps them in proper condition. A semiskilled occupation.

Trough stockers.—When there is no crane to handle pipes after they leave the finishing machines, the work is done by trough stockers. Heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Cold straightener.—Straightens small sizes of pipe—under 2 inches—by placing one end between stationary blocks and bending to proper line. Semiskilled labor, moderately heavy.

Ring sawer.—Saws defective sockets into two rings for use of ring man. The work is done on a small cold saw, is unskilled and light.

Thread gauger.—Gauges threads of pipe in finishing department for sizes. Light work, requiring an experienced employee.

Annealer.—(Same description as for Annealer, Sheet Mills and Crucible furnaces.)

Annealer fireman.—(Same description as for Annealer, Sheet Mills and Crucible furnaces.)

Annealer laborers.—(Same description as for Annealer, Sheet mills and Crucible furnace.)

Test maker.—Takes ends cut off boiler tubes, places over a die and pounds with a hand hammer to produce a flange. Tube must flange out without splitting to be a perfect test. An experienced man is required for the work, which is light.

SOCKET DEPARTMENT.

Shearman.—Shears iron bars into length to make coupling sockets. Moderately heavy manual labor, requiring an experienced operator.

Shear laborer.—Assists the shearman in lifting iron bars to shears. Unskilled labor, moderately heavy.

Heater and Heater's helper, bending machine.—Put bars for making large sockets into furnace, remove bars when properly heated and drag to steam bending machine. Also regulate furnace heat, look after bottom and remove scale. The work of the heater is skilled, the helper working under his supervision and learning his duties. Heavy labor done under conditions of considerable heat.

Bender.—Small sockets are made on an automatic bending machine which shears the bar to size and bends it to shape in one operation. If the bars are heated, the bender does the heating. The bender assists the heater to put bars into the furnace and operates the bending machine which grips the bar and holds it against a circular bending mandrel while a roller moving around the mandrel bends it into a ring with the ends overlapping. The bent ring is then picked up by the bender with a pair of tongs and dropped into a chute in which it rolls to the welding furnace. Heavy manual labor, exposed to heat, requiring a skilled employee.

Socket welder's helper (Heater).—Heats sockets for welding. Work about the same as that of the heater, bending machine.

Socket welder.—The helper places the heated socket on the hammer block, a mandrel is inserted and it is then pounded under the hammer. The welder operates the hammer and is responsible for the proper welding of the sockets. Heavy labor, exposed to heat and sparks; experience required.

Hammer runner (Hammer driver).—On large, heavy sizes the steam hammer is operated by a hammer runner, under the direction of the welder. Light work, semi-skilled.

Laborer.—Wheeling coal and coke to furnaces, iron to benders and welders, couplings to stock room, etc. Unskilled labor, varying from light to heavy.

Tappers.—Operates tapping machine, which threads insides of couplings. These machines are practically automatic, the tapper having only to feed the couplings into the machine and to remove them when threaded. Light work, unskilled.

Tap setter.—Sets teeth in tapping machines and keeps them properly adjusted. Light work, highly skilled.

Tap grinder.—Sharpens taps and grinds them on emery wheel. Skilled work.

GALVANIZING.

Acid man.—(Same description as for Acid man, Wire mill.)

Pickler.—Has charge of the acid bath and fastens crane chains to tubes which are then placed in the acid bath by means of a crane, removed and rinsed in water and placed on trucks. Manual labor; experience required.

Dryer.—Pushes trucks loaded with tubes, which have been pickled, into drying ovens, takes from oven to galvanizing tank when dry, and puts tubes into galvanizing liquid. This is handwork, the pipes being handled with short tongs. Heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Galvanizer.—Has charge of the galvanizing tank, the charging and drawing of tubes, tends fire, regulates heat, puts in spelter, and with the crew cleans the tank at the end of each week. Light work, skilled, and largely supervisory.

Drawer.—After the tubes are galvanized they are pulled from the galvanizing kettle by the drawer, who uses a pair of tongs for the purpose. As they are pulled up the runway from the kettle, they pass through a ring that wipes off excess galvanizing material. Unskilled, manual labor, varying from light to heavy according to the size of material handled.

Cooler.—Takes the tubes after they have been drawn from the galvanizing kettle and dips them into a water bath. Unskilled labor, varying according to whether light or heavy tubes are being dipped.

Inspector.—Inspects tubes after they have cooled to see that they are properly galvanized. Light work, skilled.

SHEET MILLS.

HOT MILL.

Craneman.—Operates cranes in hot mill and galvanizing departments. Light work, not very high grade, and requiring but little skill or experience.

Crane hooker (Pick-up, Hook-up).—Attaches crane hooks to materials to be moved by crane, and signals operator. Light manual labor, unskilled.

Stocker shearman (Bar shearman).—The steel bars come to the shears from the stockyard over a roll table. The shearman operates the shears and cuts the bars into the proper lengths, and he is responsible for the sizes cut. Heavy manual labor, unskilled.

Stocker laborer (Mill stocker, Shear helper).—Steel bars are brought by a crane to the roll table leading to the shears. The laborers straighten the bars on the table, using crowbars, and also pile the sheet bars, after these have been cut by the shears, to be carried to the furnace. Moderately heavy, unskilled labor.

Laborer (coal supply).—Loads coal on wheelbarrow and wheels it to furnaces of hot mill. Common labor, heavy, unskilled.

Stoker oiler.—Oils stoking machinery of furnaces. Light work, hot, dirty, and unskilled.

Pair heater.—The sheet bars are brought from the stock house by a crane. They are put into a furnace and heated before being rolled. The pair heater has charge of the furnaces and, assisted by the doubler, charges and draws the bars and drags them in pairs to the roughing rolls. When the pair furnace is separate from the sheet furnace, he fires the furnace and maintains the proper temperature. In some plants he also spells the doubler in operating the screws by which the distance between the roughing rolls is regulated. Heavy manual labor, with short rest periods, requiring some experience. Some furnaces are water cooled, which reduces the temperature in front of them, and a few have mechanical conveyors to carry the sheet bars to the roughing rolls, which lightens the work of the pair heater.

Rougher and Catcher.—The rougher, with his tongs, takes a pair of heated bars from the pair heater and passes them successively through the two-high roughing rolls to the catcher, who passes them back over the top roll to be taken off by the rougher while the other is going through the rolls. This is repeated until the bars are sufficiently "broken down," when the rougher and catcher each take one to the finishing rolls where a similar rolling operation is repeated. Then one is laid on top of the other and the two rolled together, the catcher returning them to the rougher as before. After these pairs are rolled together, they are separated by the matcher, put into the furnace, and heated for further rolling. Skilled work, rapid and heavy, done under conditions of great heat.

Matcher.—The matcher, sometimes assisted by the rougher, pulls the two sheets apart after they have been rolled together, and then piles together a number of sheets, depending on the desired gauge, and delivers them to the sheet heater. When the lighter gauges are desired, the packs, after the next rolling, are pulled apart by the matcher and doubler, and the required number piled together in a pack. The matcher also assists the doubler in doubling packs. Hot and hard manual labor requiring quickness in opening the packs and accuracy in matching the sheets. If the packs are not matched up accurately, they may be too short when rolled or too narrow when sheared, causing loss. Very little skill is required, the position usually being the "breaking-in" job of the rolling crew. The matcher has shorter rest periods than others on the rolling crew, owing to the diversified nature of the work.

Sheet heater and Sheet heater's helper.—In charge of the heating furnace in which the sheets in packs (doubles, fours, or eights) are reheated for the finishing rolls. The heater with his helper fires the furnace, which includes shoveling the coal and keeping the grate bars clean. They also charge and draw the packs and deliver them to the roller at the finishing rolls. Hot and hard manual labor requiring strength and dexterity in handling the packs of sheets. Considerable skill and experience is required in heating, so as not to "burn" the sheets or to heat them so they weld when rolled. Many furnaces are equipped with automatic coal feeders which lessen the work of firing.

Doubler.—The doubler assists the pair heater in charging the bars into the pair furnace. The doubler and matcher usually work together in pulling the sheets apart, and in matching and bending the pack transversely. The doubler then stamps the bend flat with a machine and delivers the doubled packs to the sheet heater for the final heating. He also drags the packs, after they have had the finishing passes through the rolls, to the shears. In some places, the catcher and doubler take turns in catching the packs at the finishing pass and dragging them to the shears. The work is diversified, rapid, and hot when doubling and matching, and heavy when dragging the finished packs to the shears.

Roller.—The roller is in charge of all the processes of heating and rolling. He gives a helping hand whenever necessary, but usually his active duty begins when he takes the "packs" of heated sheets from the sheet heater or his helper and passes them through the finishing rolls to the catcher who returns them over the rolls, as many passes being made as are necessary. This finishes the rolling of the heavier gauges. When lighter gauges are required the packs are delivered a second time to the sheet heater, reheated, and returned to the roller, who again passes them through the rolls until they are of the required gauge. It is during the finishing passes that the greatest skill is required. With a metallic measure the roller notes the lengthening of the sheets until that length is reached which owing to the thickness and length of the original sheet bar will give the required gauge. During the finishing passes the roller, or his helper, operates the screw which regulates the distance between the finishing rolls. The quality of the product depends very largely on the roller's skill in handling material and men, a skill which usually has been gained through long experience in the mill, by working up from the lower positions. The actual work performed by him is very rapid and done under conditions of great heat. The rolling-crew positions (roller, heater, rougher, catcher, matcher, and doubler) are usually filled by men of unusual strength and endurance, as the work is heavy and often done in high temperatures. Men in these positions usually have resting periods at frequent intervals. Many mills are equipped with water-cooled furnaces, fans or cold-air blasts where the men work, and, in some instances, with water-cooled floors, to relieve heat conditions.

Engineer.—Has charge of the engine furnishing motive power for the hot mills. A skilled, stationary engineer.

Dragger.—Drags finished packs from the finishing pass of the rolls across the cooling floor to the shears. This work is usually done by the doubler and catcher, with a helper when handling the heavier packs. This helper also assists the shearman. Heavy manual labor, unskilled, handling hot material.

Shearman and Shearman's helper (Leader, Shear hold-up).—The finished packs are brought from the finishing rolls by the doubler, catcher, or dragger and are squared and cut into proper size by the shearman and his helper. They work together in handling the packs, but the shearman is responsible for their proper cutting. The work is quite heavy, with rest periods varying according to the percentage of the production sheared. The shearman is a skilled employee; his helper unskilled and training for the higher position.

Scrap man.—Picks up scrap sheared from sheets and wires into bundles or places it in pans or boxes. Also in some places wheels bundles to scrap platform and loads on cars. A hydraulic press is sometimes used to press the scrap into bales or bundles, the operator being known as a bundler. Bundles from the hydraulic press are usually transferred to the cars by a magnet crane. The work is light manual labor and unskilled. There is some danger of injury by material falling from cranes and from cutting the hands and fingers while handling scrap.

Opener.—After the packs have been sheared the opener tears the sheets apart with specially shaped tongs. Difficult ones (stickers) are thrown aside for the special "sticker opener," who uses tongs and a heavy sword. Semiskilled work, heavy and continuous, necessitating the keeping of the body in a bent-over position almost constantly.

Leveler, first (Cold-roller, Roller leveler).—After the sheets have been sheared and opened the leveler feeds them one at a time into the leveling machine, which consists of a series of small rolls one above the other, to make a level and smooth surface. Moderately heavy work, requiring but little skill or experience.

Leveler, second (Cold-roller catcher).—Takes sheets from back of machine, piles in bundles on truck and stencils sheets. The bundles are carried away by a crane. Unskilled, moderately heavy, and continuous work.

Annealer.—Directs the charging and drawing of annealing boxes from the furnaces, sees that boxes are properly sealed, and regulates the gas flow to maintain the proper temperature. The work is largely supervisory, requiring a man with practical experience.

Annealer fireman.—When the annealing furnaces are heated by coke, the fireman tends the furnace fires. Moderately heavy, unskilled manual labor.

Annealing floor man (Loader, Box annealing helper).—Loads sheets on platforms of annealing boxes, covers sheets and seals for annealing furnaces. After boxes are drawn from furnaces, removes box covers, unloads and weighs sheets and delivers them to the galvanizing department or ties into bundles for stock. Moderately heavy, unskilled, manual labor.

Stretcher man and Stretcher man's helper.—Steel sheets are placed on the stretching machine by the stretcher man, his helper, and a stretcher laborer. The ends of the sheets are fastened in clamps of the machine which pull in opposite directions by hydraulic pressure and straighten all bent places in the sheet. The stretcher man has charge of the machine and operates the lever controlling it. The work is not heavy and requires but little skill or experience.

Grease man.—The grease from rolls and machinery is collected and carried to the grease house by laborers, where it is boiled, cleaned, and separated from water by the grease man. The work is comparatively easy, but somewhat disagreeable on account of the smoke and odor from the boiling tanks.

Grease man's helper.—Delivers oil from grease house to mill. Unskilled, light manual labor.

GALVANIZING.

Cage loader (Stocker, Laborer).—Places black sheets on cages or racks and hooks to crane, which carries sheets to the pickler. Unskilled, manual labor, requiring but little exertion, except when sheets are carried by hand instead of by crane.

Pickler.—To remove all scales immerses the sheet in a hot solution of sulphuric acid either "by hand," using short tongs to keep the sheets separated, or by operating a machine which has racks or cradles to hold the sheets, which must be completely separated so that the acid solution will wash the entire surface of both sides of the sheets. There is but little manual labor as the sheets are usually machine dipped, but some skill is required as the pickler must know when the scale is off and have the sheets removed at the proper time. The work is somewhat disagreeable on account of the acid fumes from the pickling solution.

Cage unloader.—Unloads cages, usually by a crane, after sheets have been pickled and carried to the feeder. In some places the picklers do this work. Unskilled, manual labor.

Feeder.—The sheets are placed in the rinsing trough by the cage unloader or pickler. The feeder pulls the sheets from the trough with tongs and starts them through the galvanizing machine by feeding into a pair of rolls which operate like a clothes wringer and dry the sheets before they enter the galvanizing bath. This work is sometimes done by the potman. Light work, unskilled, with some exposure to fumes of galvanizing bath. Feeders usually are promoted to potmen.

Potman.—The galvanizing machine is practically automatic. The sheets are started through it by the feeder and come out at the opposite end galvanized. In its course through the machine a sheet passes through the spelter or galvanizing liquid, through rolls which remove excess galvanizing material, and through a hot blast that dries it before it falls upon the chain conveyor which carries it from the machine. The potman puts the spelter into the galvanizing pots and regulates the flow of gas to make the proper heat. There is but little manual labor connected with the position except when cleaning pots at the end of each week, but an experienced man is required. The fumes from the spelter bath are strong and disagreeable, causing vomiting and sickness in some instances.

Galvanizing fireman.—When galvanizing pots are heated by coke instead of gas, the fireman tends the fires. Coke is brought to the pots by an unskilled laborer. Light work, practically unskilled.

Inspector.—The inspector is a laborer who examines the sheets on both sides after they have been galvanized, placing the primes on the cooling rack or on trucks and throwing the wasters out to be rerun. This work is sometimes performed by the potman. It is continuous, light manual labor, and skilled to the extent that the inspector must be able to detect sheets that are not properly galvanized. When heavy sheets are being run, an unskilled laborer assists in handling the sheets.

Bundler and Bundler's helper.—Metal strips or ties are laid on the bundling rack and several sheets are piled on them. The strips are then bent around the sides of the pile and over the top with a hammer, which ties the sheets into bundles. The bundler and the helper work together and do the same kind of work, which is moderately heavy, continuous, and unskilled.

Laborer (Cleaner).—Delivers spelter to galvanizing machine, carries wasters to pots or scrap pile, and does general cleaning around shop. Unskilled, light manual labor.

CORRUGATING.

Paint-machine feeder.—Feeds sheets into machine where they pass between a series of rolls which are automatically covered with paint. Painted sheets come out at back of rolls, fall on conveyor chains, and are carried to drying racks. Light manual labor, requiring little skill.

Paint-machine laborer.—Picks sheets from conveyor chain back of paint machine and places in drying racks. Continuous manual labor, involving the handling of freshly painted sheets; rapid work while machine is operating; unskilled.

Corrugator.—Has charge of corrugating machine and men employed around it. Is responsible for size of corrugations. Sets machine as necessary. Feeds sheets into machine, several at one time. Light manual labor.

Corrugator's helper.—Assists in feeding sheets into corrugating machine. Also stencils sheets before feeding into machine.

Bundler.—Takes sheets from machine, piles and ties into bundles; also wheels trucks of bundles away, though this is sometimes done by crane. Continuous work.

Laborer.—Sweeps floors, does general cleaning up, picks up scrap, etc. Diversified work, both as to difficulty and condition under which done.

Shipping-room laborer.—Puts sheets into cars for shipment and handles sheets in stock room. Moderate, unskilled, manual labor.

TIN AND TERNE PLATE MILLS.

Craneman.—(Same description as for Craneman, Sheet mills.)

Stocker.—(Same description as for Stocker, Sheet mills.)

Heater and Heater's helper.—Fire and regulate the sheet furnace and keep grate bars clean. Receive the pairs of sheets after first rolling by rougher, charge them into furnace, reheat, remove, and deliver to roller for second rolling. Receive doubled sheets from doubler or his helper after doubling and shearing, charge and reheat and deliver to rougher for third rolling. Receive sheets from doubler or his helper after redoubling, charge into furnace and reheat and deliver to roller for fourth rolling and finishing. Hard manual labor requiring sturdy physique and skill in handling and heat treating the sheets in their different stages of manufacture, first as a pair of sheets rolled together, then as four sheets after first doubling, and again the short pack of eight sheets after redoubling. These men spell each other at certain stages, and at others work together.

Doubler and Doubler's helper.—Fire the pair-heating furnace and keep the grate bars clean, and, assisted by the screw boy, charge and superintend the heating of tin bar in this furnace. After two sheets have been rolled together they open them with tongs, match and double them over, place in press and flatten the fold, then shear and trim the rough end and deliver to heater or heater's helper. Again after the doubled sheets have been rolled they open them up and double a second time and deliver again to the heater or heater's helper. Requires some knowledge of heating steel, quick and accurate handling of the sheets in opening and doubling them, and care in shearing. The doubler and helper perform the same work and alternate with each other either at stated intervals or after handling a certain number of pairs.

Rougher.—The rougher works at the front of rolls and the catcher at the back. A pair of heated tin bars is delivered to the rougher by the doubler or his helper and the two bars given in succession several passes through the rolls and then laid one on top of the other and given one or more passes, the catcher in each instance returning them over the top roll. After the last of these passes the rougher delivers the pair to the heater or his helper, who puts it in the sheet furnace and reheats. A number of pairs are given this preliminary rolling and charged in the sheet furnace. The next rolling is done by the roller. After this second rolling, and doubling and reheating, the heater or his helper returns the sheets to the rougher for a third rolling. The rougher again delivers the sheets to the doubler or his helper for redoubling and heating, after which they are given the finishing passes by the roller. The rapid handling of tin bars and sheets requires constant attention and a knowledge of rolling nearly equal to that of the roller himself. The rougher determines whether the pairs brought to him are properly heated and rejects them if they appear unequally and improperly heated.

Catcher and Catcher's helper.—The catcher and his helper perform the same duties, alternating with each other. They catch the bars or sheets when passed through by the rougher or the roller, lift them and pass them back over the top of the rolls, and when finished make a neat pile of the packs ready for transfer to pack shears. The work is done, of course, at the same relative speed as that of the men at front of rolls, with the additional labor required to lift the material to top of rolls and to remove and pile finished packs.

Screw boy.—The screw boy assists the doubler or doubler's helper in charging the pair-heating furnace with tin bar. He operates the screw which regulates the distance between the rolls during the rolling of the bars and of the pair after being heated in the sheet furnace, pulls the pair off the rolls and delivers to doubler or doubler's helper for doubling. Operates the screw again during the rolling of the doubled sheets. Moderately light, but very rapid work, with a rest period during the time the roller makes the finishing passes and operates the screw himself.

Roller.—The roller alternates with the rougher, doing the second rolling when two sheets are being rolled, and giving the finishing passes to the pack of eight sheets, the fourth rolling of the steel. The sheets are passed through the rolls, caught by the catcher or his helper, and returned over the top of the roll. During the finishing passes the roller himself operates the screw which regulates the distance between the rolls and the gauge of the product. He gauges the length with a steel measuring rod and notifies the catcher when the sheets are finished. The roller is the practical foreman in charge of a hot-mill unit, which consists of furnaces and set of hot rolls, and of the operating crew. The work requires much skill and experience in handling materials and crew, gained usually by working up through the lower positions. The actual work of rolling is about evenly divided between the roller and his rougher. The material passes through four stages of heating and rolling, the roller usually working the metal during the second and fourth stages. The roller is held responsible for the successful operation and working condition of his mill and the quality of the product. His attention is required constantly. The work is performed at high speed.

Shearman and Shearman's helper.—The shearman squares and trims the packs to a specified size. In order to supply himself with sufficient work he usually shears the product from three eight-hour turns on one mill. The helper assists in placing the packs on the shear table and in removing and piling them when sheared. He also takes away the scrap and throws it into the scrap pit. Moderately heavy manual labor, continuous during a turn, and requiring considerable attention at all times to get the maximum weight of finished sheets of specified size.

Craneman.—Operates small crane moving sheets and packs from rolls to shears, from shears to openers, from openers to picklers, etc. Light work, requiring but little experience.

Crane hooker (Crane follower).—Signals craneman and hooks crane chains to material to be moved. Semiskilled, manual labor.

Opener.—The packs (each containing eight sheets rolled together) having been sheared and cut in two or more pieces, each piece of which contains eight sheets, must be separated for further treatment. They are placed on benches in the opening department and there opened by men or women. The packs are first bent at one corner and piled edge up on the benches. The opener then grasps a pack of eight sheets and, wearing a glove with block of lead fastened inside, strikes these corners, opening as a rule one sheet at a time. The opener then tears them apart and piles them flat with the opening corners matched. Sheets difficult to open are laid aside and usually opened by "sticker openers." The work is light, continuous during the turn, and requires great dexterity.

Pickler.—After the packs are opened, the sheets are subjected to a bath of hot sulphuric acid, or black pickle, to remove all scale and oxide from their surface. The picklers arrange the plates in a crate which is then picked up and deposited in the acid bath by a machine or, in establishments where sheets are pickled by hand, they arrange the sheets in vats and cover them with acid. The pickling machine moves the crate up and down so that the acid may come in contact with every part of the plate, while in hand pickling the picklers use short tongs with which rapidly to separate the sheets so that the acid may get to the surface of all of them. After pickling, the sheets are washed in a similar manner in water. Sheets also are pickled after the second annealing (white pickling), but in a weaker solution of acid.

Packer.—After sheets have been pickled they are removed from the crates and packed on the annealing bottoms by the packers, covered over, sealed, and carried to the annealing furnaces. Unskilled, moderately heavy, manual labor.

Annealer.—(Same description as for Annealer, Sheet mills.)

Annealer fireman.—(Same description as for Annealer fireman, Sheet mills.)

Cold opener.—After the sheets come from the annealing furnaces they are stuck together and must be separated. This is done by the cold opener, whose work is similar to that of the opener behind the shears, but easier.

Cold roller, Rougher, and Catcher.—After the sheets have been annealed and opened, they are passed cold through rolls (cold rolling) to give a perfectly smooth surface in order that the finished plate will have a high polish. The sheets are passed through the rolls by the rougher and catcher, the roller having charge of several stands of rolls and supervising the work. The work is light and requires but little skill or experience, except for the roller, who is responsible for the proper setting of the rolls and the finish of the sheets.

Greaser.—Greases roll trains in mill. Unskilled, light work.

Tinner.—After the sheets have been opened, black pickled, annealed, cold rolled, annealed again, and white pickled, they are removed to the tin house. The tinner, standing in front of the tinning machine, takes the sheets one at a time and feeds them downward into the machine which contains the molten tin covered with palm oil. The sheets pass through several sets of rolls, which distribute the tin evenly, the last set squeezing off the surplus tin. As the sheets come from the tinning machine they fall upon a conveyer which carries them to the branners. Light and continuous work requiring considerable dexterity in handling and feeding the sheets. The tinner also puts the tinning material in the machine, keeps his own fire, and cleans up at the end of each week.

Redipper.—When terneplate is made the tinning machine contains a mixture of tin and lead running about 25 per cent tin and 75 per cent lead. As the plate comes from the tinning machine it is received by the redipper, who immediately dips it into another bath of terne mixture and feeds it down into a tank of palm oil through two or three rolls that revolve at the top of the compartment. Light and continuous work, semiskilled.

Riser.—When the terneplate is fed down into the palm oil by the redipper, the riser by means of a hook starts it upward again, and as it appears between the second and third revolving rolls, receives and places it on a rack. Light and steady continuous work, and usually done rapidly.

Branner.—Lower-grade plates come from the tinning machine on a conveyer that feeds them automatically into the branning machine. This machine consists of a series of revolving brushes which apply bran or a mixture of sawdust and lime to the surface of the plates to remove the palm oil that adheres to them. The highest grades of plates are branned by hand, two branners working behind each tinning machine. The first takes the plate and works it back and forth in bran in the shallow box on the table before him and then places it in a rack in reach of the second branner who performs the same operation again, after which a "duster" wipes off with a soft sheepskin the bran dust that remains on the plate. Sometimes the branners both bran and dust the plates. The work is light and requires but little skill to tend machines or to bran by hand.

Truckers.—Where plates are not carried by a crane from the branners to the assorting room, they are loaded on trucks and pushed to the assorting tables by truckers. Moderately heavy, unskilled labor.

Assorter.—Assorters are usually females. The finished tin plate is placed on a bench in front of the assorter who quickly lifts each sheet, estimates the weight, and examines it on each side for flaws and improper coating. Assorters throw the sheets usually into four or more piles—those that are defective in one pile and those that are perfect in other piles, as are determined by their skill in estimating the slight differences in weight. The work requires very quick hands and eyes, and great skill in determining weight. In mills where the assorters have to remove the assorted tin the work is heavy.

Mender scraper.—Smooths rough spots on tin sheets to be retinned, using a steel scraper. Semiskilled, light work.

Stamper.—Terneplates and some tin plates are stamped with customers' or manufacturers' private brands. This work is done by a stamper on a small press. Light machine work, continuous, unskilled.

Slitter.—Operates a rotary gang slitter which cuts plates into smaller sizes than worked in the tin house. The slitter feeds the plates into the machine and carries them away after being cut. Unskilled, light manual labor.

Reckoner.—Tin plate is sold by the base box, consisting of 112 sheets 14 inches wide by 20 inches long. Plates of any size are usually packed 112 sheets to the box. However, some plates, on account of size and gauge, are packed 56 sheets to the box. The reckoner counts the sheets from the tables, weighs them, and checks the weight. Unskilled labor, requiring quickness and accuracy in counting.

Tissue packer.—High-grade plates are packed with tissue paper between the plates. This work is done usually by girls.

Boxer.—Places plates in wooden boxes, places slats over tops, and nails shut for shipment.

Shipping laborer.—Wheels boxes of plates into cars and piles for shipment. Unskilled, manual labor.
