WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOR IN THE SLAUGHTERING AND MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY, 1917.

INTRODUCTION.

The objects of this report are, primarily, to show rates of wages, hours worked, and earnings of employees in this industry, by occupations, for one plant pay-roll period in 1917, and to describe or define the work of the employees in the various occupations for which data are shown.

The industry has increased in importance and size until it is now the largest engaged in manufacturing food products, and is also one of the largest and most important in the United States. It has become an actual necessity to the people of the country, not only to those in the large centers of population, but also to those in the smaller cities and towns. They are to a very large extent absolutely dependent upon the packing plants for cattle, hog, and sheep products.

The following table, compiled from the United States Census reports, shows the growth and importance of the industry, in value of products, average number of persons employed, average number of wage earners, amount paid to wage earners, average earnings per year of wage earners, and the number of cattle, calves, sheep and lambs, and hogs killed in each of the years 1899, 1904, 1909, and 1914:

Inasmuch as conservation of food products has become of vital importance, it may be proper to call attention to the fact, shown by the figures above, that the slaughter of calves in this country increased from 883,857 in 1899 to 2,504,728 in 1909, or 183.3 per cent in 10 years, and also that there was a decrease in the number of cattle slaughtered from 1909 to 1914. This seems clearly to indicate that the available supply of cattle has been reduced by the great increase in the slaughter of calves.

EXPLANATION OF SCOPE AND METHOD.

In 1917 agents of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, under the supervision of the chief statistician of the bureau, visited the largest and most important slaughtering and meat-packing plants throughout the United States, for the purpose of obtaining statistical information covering the wages, hours, earnings, and working conditions of employees in this industry.

Data were obtained from 83 plants, including the largest and most important as well as a very few small plants. Seventy-four of the 83 plants pay employees weekly, seven pay every two weeks, one pays semimonthly, and one pays monthly. The pay-roll periods for which data are shown are not identical, but are all in the first half of 1917, beginning early in January and ending about July 1. These plants represent a very large per cent of the industry. The following table gives the number of plants, number of employees, amount paid to employees, and number of animals slaughtered, classified by length of pay-roll period:

Rates of wages, hours worked, and earnings were copied from the pay rolls by the agents. This was done after timekeepers and foremen of the plants had carefully noted the occupation or occupations at which each employee had worked during one pay-roll period. If an employee had worked at more than one occupation, each occupation was noted and the time worked at each was, if obtainable, also noted, and if different rates were paid for the various kinds of work done, the rate for each kind was stated.

All the plants visited cooperated with the agents to the fullest extent, giving them permission to visit the various departments, see employees at work, converse freely with foremen and other employees, and obtain explanations and descriptions of the various operations in the regular order of performance. For this information and the very courteous treatment received from the officials and employees of the plants due acknowledgment and thanks are here expressed.

The work in the industry is diversified owing to the fact that it begins with live animals and ends only when every process necessary to change them into the various meat products and by-products has been completed. The plants in the industry have various departments, differing in various ways, due principally to size, equipment, arrangement, and housing conditions. Some plants have well-defined departments while others do not. It was therefore necessary to standardize them as nearly as possible by separating each plant into departments according to kind and character of work done.

Plants have been divided into the following departments:

1. Cattle-killing department.
2. Hog-killing department.
3. Sheep-killing department (including in this department employees in plants where the sheep-killing gang also kill and dress calves).
4. Offal department, divided into three divisions:
  - (a) All offal except hides and casings (heads, tongues, livers, hearts, feet, paunches, oxtails, bones, and fat).
  - (b) Hides.
  - (c) Casings.
5. Fresh-beef department (cooling, cutting, trimming, packing, icing, and shipping).
6. Fresh-pork department (cooling, cutting, trimming, packing, icing, and shipping).
7. Lard and oleo oil department.
8. Sausage department.
9. Cured-meat department.
10. Canning department.

The above departments include practically all productive employees in the industry who are engaged in producing food for human consumption from live animals. Other employees who are necessary to the operation, repair, and upkeep of the plants and the transaction of business are shown in Table A as "Nonproductive or miscellaneous employees" and as "Office employees." Employees in the box factories, the brush, cooper, tin, and other shops in which the output is new, and not repair work, and employees in the butterine, mince-meat, produce, extract, soap, curled hair, wool, fertilizer, or bone departments are not tabulated.

SUMMARY OF RATES OF WAGES, HOURS WORKED, EARNINGS, AND CLASSIFIED RATES, BY DEPARTMENTS AND OCCUPATIONS, IN ESTABLISHMENTS WITH WEEKLY PAY ROLLS AND WITH BIWEEKLY PAY ROLLS.

General Table A (pp. 70 to 689) shows for each establishment, the number of employees in each occupation, the average rate of wages per hour, average hours worked and average earnings in a single payroll period of 1 week, 2 weeks, one-half month, or 1 month, average hourly earnings, and classified hourly rates of wages by departments and divisions. This table is so long that it is extremely difficult to make comparisons between occupations. Therefore Table 3, which is a summary of Table A by departments and occupations, is presented here. It shows in one group all occupations for each department in regular order for establishments which pay employees weekly and in another group those for establishments which pay employees every two weeks. A total is shown for all occupations in each department and for each total cumulative percentages are entered, which give the per cent of employees below a specified classification. The total for the cattle-killing department shows that 62 of the 74 establishments which pay employees weekly have employees who slaughter cattle; that 3,441 employees were so employed at the time data were obtained for these establishments; that 50 of them were paid under 20 cents per hour, 299 were paid 20 and under  $22\frac{1}{2}$  cents per hour, and so on by a spread of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cents per hour up to 60 cents per hour and over, the highest rate being paid to 37 employees. The cumulative percentages are computed from these figures to the nearest one-half per cent. The 50 employees who were paid under 20 cents per hour are 1 per cent of 3,441, the total employees at all rates. The 50 at under 20 cents per hour plus 299 at 20 and under  $22\frac{1}{2}$  equal 349, or 10 per cent, at under  $22\frac{1}{2}$  cents per hour. The percentages for other classifications are computed in like manner, and show that 49 per cent, or approximately one-half of all employees in the cattle-killing department, were paid under  $27\frac{1}{2}$  cents per hour, and that only 1 per cent were paid 60 cents per hour and over.

CLASSIFIED HOURS WORKED AND EARNINGS, BY DEPARTMENTS AND OCCUPATIONS, IN THE 74 ESTABLISHMENTS HAVING WEEKLY PAY ROLLS.

General Table B (pp. 690 to 1073) which, shows employees classified by hours worked and earnings in one week, is so long that comparisons between occupations can not be easily made. Two summary tables are therefore presented here. Table 4 is a summary of hours worked and Table 5 is a summary of earnings. The data for both are for the 74 establishments that pay employees weekly. Totals and cumulative percentages are shown for each department.

Tables 6, 7, and 8 show in the form of cumulative percentages the proportion of employees earning each classified rate of wages per hour (Table 6); of those working each classified number of hours per week (Table 7); and of those receiving each classified amount per week (Table 8). The fact that some percentages may appear more than once for a department is due to the fact that whole numbers are given, any number having a fraction over one-half being raised to the next whole number. For example, take "hog killing" in Table 6, where 100 appears five times, successively under  $42\frac{1}{2}$ , 45,  $47\frac{1}{2}$ , 50, and  $52\frac{1}{2}$  cents. In this case over  $99\frac{1}{2}$  per cent of the hog-killing department employees were paid rates of less than  $42\frac{1}{2}$  cents per hour, and the remaining less than one-half of 1 per cent of total employees received hourly rates which fell within the five classifications of  $42\frac{1}{2}$ , 45,  $47\frac{1}{2}$ , 50, and  $52\frac{1}{2}$  cents.

<sup>1</sup> Including 3 establishments in which hogs are slaughtered by the cattle-killing employees, and 1 which has its hogs slaughtered in another establishment.

The plants from which data were obtained are grouped, as far as possible, by centers of production and geographical divisions. The Chicago plants, which include the largest and most important plants, not only in the United States but in the world, are shown in one group; the Kansas City, Omaha, St. Joseph, St. Louis, and East St. Louis plants, which come next in size and importance and in which like conditions exist, are combined and shown in one group. Geographical divisions determine almost entirely the other groupings.

Seven groups or divisions, as follows, are shown:

Division 1. Chicago—nine plants.

Division 2. Known to the industry as “river towns”—Kansas City, Omaha, St. Joseph, East St. Louis, and St. Louis—20 plants.

Division 3. Fourteen plants located in Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and South Dakota.

Division 4. Seven plants located in Oklahoma and Texas.

Division 5. Thirteen plants located in Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, western Pennsylvania, and western New York.

Division 6. Ten plants located in Atlantic coast cities.

Division 7. Eleven plants located in Colorado and Pacific coast cities.

OCCUPATIONS.

Many persons employed in this industry work at more than one occupation. They have, as a rule, a regular occupation for which a regular rate is paid, but for the other work a different rate is frequently paid for each kind of work done. This other work may be of a lower or a higher grade, and the rate paid for it less or more than the regular work. Examples are as follows:

(a) Killing floors or departments are cleaned each day as soon as the killing for that day has been completed. It is necessary to have a considerable force for this work and there is always a demand or request for it by some of the killing gang, even though it is paid for at the clean-up or labor rate, which is much less than the regular rate of these employees. This is also true of employees in other departments.

(b) Plants or departments are sometimes run at less than full capacity. When this is done it is necessary to reduce the gang or force, which is done by laying off or dropping some of the common unskilled laborers from the pay rolls temporarily, or transferring them to other departments and assigning some employees all along the line to a lower grade of work, but at no reduction in rates.

(c) Employees sometimes do a higher grade of work than their regular occupation by "filling in" for employees temporarily absent. For this they are paid the regular rate of the absent employees.

(d) Hog killing and hog cutting and trimming in most plants are done by one force or gang of employees. These employees, therefore, have at least two regular occupations, for which two regular rates are usually paid. In this report preference has been given to the killing occupations.

Each employee has been given the occupation and the rate of the occupation at which he worked most during the pay-roll period for which data were taken or the most important at which he worked when the time worked at each occupation was not reported.

HOURS.

All plants have what are presumed to be regular hours of work for employees; that is, a fixed or stated number of hours for each week day (Monday to Friday), and the same or a different number of hours for Saturday or Sunday. These hours are supposed to be fixed by a specified hour for beginning work in the morning and for closing in the afternoon. But in so far as they apply to the killing, cutting, hide, casing, and offal departments, and to a less extent to other departments, they are more regular in the breach than in the keeping. The hours actually worked by many employees vary from day to day and week to week, as they are dependent entirely upon the run of animals into local stockyards. Monday is, as a rule, a short day, due to the animals arriving in the early morning of that day and to the necessity of buying and transferring them to the plants before the killing may begin. Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and sometimes Friday, are the long days. Saturday is usually a short day, due, as a rule, to the fact that most all animals purchased for the week have already been slaughtered, though there may be various other reasons.

The schedule of regular hours is as follows:

- 70 plants 10 hours Monday to Friday and 10 Saturday.
- 4 plants 10 hours Monday to Friday and 5 Saturday.
- 3 plants 10 hours Monday to Friday and 10 Sunday.<sup>1</sup>
- 1 plant 10 hours Monday to Friday and 7 Saturday.
- 1 plant 10 hours Monday to Friday and 7½ Saturday.
- 1 plant 10 hours Monday to Friday and 5 for six months and 7½ for six months on Saturday.
- 1 plant 9½ hours Monday to Friday and 5½ Saturday.
- 1 plant 9 hours Monday to Friday and 5½ Saturday.
- 1 plant 10 hours in summer and 9½ hours in winter Monday to Friday and 5 in summer and 9½ in winter on Saturday.

GUARANTIES TO EMPLOYEES.

Fifty-one of the 83 plants considered in this report give certain or all of their employees assurance that payment for a specified or stated number of hours per week will be made. This is called "guaranteed" or "gang" time, and usually applies to killing, cutting, and lugging gangs. In order to be entitled to the guaranty it is necessary for employees to report each day and do the full gang-time work, or other work that may be required of them.

The data obtained from the plants show that very few employees worked less than the guaranteed time, and in consequence were not paid for more hours than worked.

The guaranties are as follows:

Twenty-six plants guarantee 40 hours' pay per week, but the persons entitled are not reported.

Twelve plants guarantee 45 hours' pay per week, but the persons entitled are not reported.

One plant guarantees 48 hours' pay per week to luggers.

One plant guarantees 40 hours' pay per week to the cattle-killing gang and 45 to the sheep-killing gang.

Two plants guarantee 50 hours' pay per week to the cattle and sheep-killing gangs.

Two plants guarantee 50 hours' pay per week to all employees.

Two plants guarantee 55 hours' pay per week to all employees.

One plant guarantees 57 hours' pay per week to three hog-killing butchers.

Three plants guarantee a full daily or weekly rate for each day or week to all employees except a small number of laborers.

In addition to the above there are also "straight-time" employees; that is, those who are hired on a weekly rate basis and who are paid the full rate, regardless of hours worked. Their hours vary from day to day and week to week, frequently being much less than the regular plant hours of 60 or 55, though sometimes more.

FEMALE EMPLOYEES.

Women and girls have for many years been employed in large numbers in the canning and sausage departments of this industry, and to a very limited extent in a few other departments. In recent years the number of females employed in the industry as a whole has increased, and employment of them has been extended to other departments until females are now found in all except the hide department. They are doing a variety of work that was formerly done by men.

They scrub, wash and wipe cattle and sheep, trim bruises and tails, wash rags, put in neck rags, put in and take out spreaders, brush out necks, shave and singe hogs, and pull kidneys out of leaf fat—all on the killing floors or in the killing departments; trim offal, wash and pick fat, wash heads, wash tripe or paunches, shave, scrape, clean, and singe pigs' feet, pull toes, and split, bone, trim, and sinew pigs' feet, and do other operations in the offal department; run, strip, fat, slime, turn, measure, salt, pack, blow, inspect, grade, and trim casings, blow and tie bladders and weasands, and do general work in the casing department; trim and pack meat in the fresh-beef department; trim meat cuts, trim trimmings, pack, wrap, inspect, label, and grade meat, and bundle skins in the fresh-pork department; wash empty cans, line and fill tubs and pails, and label pails and tubs in the lard and oleo oil department; operate sewing machines, make bags, turn bags, fold cloth, clean hangers, label meat, repair bags, and weigh, pack, and wrap meat in the cured-meat department; wash, clean, trim, and re-turn casings, cut casings to length required according to kind of sausages to be stuffed, tie one end of each casing length with cord, operate and feed chopping, cutting, mixing, grinding, and stuffing machines, and link, tie, hang, cook, smoke, and pack sausage in the sausage department; trim dried-beef hams, corned beef, and tongues, inspect trimmed meats, wash and wipe empty cans, glasses, and jars, operate slicing, stuffing, and capping machines, weigh meat and tongues and weigh stuffed cans, making the correct weight by adding meat to or taking meat out of the stuffed cans, stuff sliced dried beef and bacon, meat, and sausage into glasses, jars, and cans by hand, set caps on stuffed cans, and pass, pile, label, wrap, paint, and pack stuffed glasses, jars, and cans in the canning department.

The work done by females is not heavy and does not require much strength. Practically all are seated while at work. Those who operate and feed machines, some trimmers, and a few others stand while at work.

Working conditions in the canning and sausage departments are good. The rooms are, as a rule, well lighted and ventilated and are also sanitary. The conditions in other departments are not good, and it is extremely doubtful if the conditions and the work can be made suitable for women and girls.

The conditions in the fresh-pork, casing, and offal departments are from necessity not good, as it is necessary to use much water in these departments. Cement floors with water standing or running on them make it necessary for the workers to stand on boards to keep the feet dry.

Most all establishments provide rest rooms for female workers and all provide comfortable dressing rooms, sanitary wash rooms, etc.

Over 8,000 women and girls were employed in the productive departments of 58 of the 83 plants that furnished data for this report. Females were not employed in 25 establishments. About 2,000 were employed as office employees (clerks, stenographers, bookkeepers, etc.), making a total of over 10,000. About 2,500 were employed in the canning department, 1,800 in the sausage department, and 1,100 in the fresh-pork department, and the remainder were scattered through the other departments.

WAGE INCREASES IN 1917.

On or about April 1, 1917, wages of nearly all persons employed in this industry were increased  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cents per hour. The increase was made after data had been obtained from all the plants in division 1 (Chicago), from 6 in division 2, from 1 in division 6, and from 1 in division 7. The figures shown in this report for these plants do not include the increase, but the figures for all other plants do include it. A further increase of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  cents per hour was made in the fall of 1917. The second increase is not included in the data shown for any plants.

INSPECTION OF ANIMALS AND MEATS.

Inspection is now so closely connected with and so much a part of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry in all establishments that do interstate business, and of such importance in affording assurance and protection to consumers of meat, that this report would be incomplete without some statement concerning it. Inspection is made by well trained, experienced, and efficient employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, and is so thorough and complete that there is little or no chance of diseased, unsound, unhealthful, or unwholesome meat being passed for food. It begins with the live animals in the local public stockyards or in the pens of the individual establishments and ends with the shipment of the "U. S. Inspected and Passed" meat from the establishments. It consists of (1) an ante-mortem inspection carefully made while the animals are at rest in the local public stockyards or the establishment pens; (2) a post-mortem inspection of the carcass and the various organs, especially of the glands; (3) sanitary inspection for strict cleanliness in handling and preparing meat for food.

(1) If the ante-mortem inspection or observation discloses signs or symptoms of disease in or among a lot of animals, the entire lot is given another inspection, each animal being carefully and thoroughly examined. In the case of hogs, if the signs or symptoms indicate cholera they are placed in a special pen for special examination. In all cases and for all diseases where it is important and necessary to have a record of an animal's temperature, it is taken and recorded. Animals found diseased and unfit for food are condemned and marked by means of a serially numbered "U. S. Condemned" metal tag attached to the ear. It is against the rules and regulations of the Bureau of Animal Industry to slaughter animals so marked in any establishment or to take them into any department of an establishment used for edible products. They are taken to the tank house where they are disposed of according to rules and regulations. The number of the tag is reported to the inspector in charge by the employee who attaches it to the animal and also by the one in charge of tanking animals and condemned meats.

(2) The post-mortem inspection is of much more importance and far more necessary than the ante-mortem inspection. By it diseased meat is detected and eliminated from the food supply. It is made while animals are being slaughtered and consists of head inspection, viscera inspection, carcass inspection, and final inspection.

In making the head inspection the lymphatic glands, which are seats of tuberculosis, are cut into and examined for signs of that or any other disease; the tongue is carefully examined and cut into whenever necessary, and the cheeks of cattle and sheep are cut into and examined for evidence of tapeworm.

The viscera inspection is made as soon as the animal is gutted. The various organs, heart, lungs, liver, paunch, intestines, etc., are carefully inspected and glands cut into or palpitated and examined.

The carcass inspection consists of a careful examination of surfaces and parts of the carcass after the animal has been skinned, gutted, and separated into halves, special attention being given to the conditions of serous membranes, and finally all the glands, which are seats of disease more frequently than other parts, are thoroughly palpitated and examined.

Carcasses found free from disease or any abnormal condition by the head, viscera, and carcass inspections are marked "U. S. Inspected and Passed," and those not so found are marked "Retained." Those passed go to the cooler, and those retained are sent to the final inspection room for final and searching inspection by veterinary inspectors who are thoroughly skilled through training and experience in the work. If found diseased and unfit for food they are tagged "U. S. Condemned" and sent to the tank house, where they are cooked and made into inedible grease and fertilizer.

(4) Sanitary inspection of buildings, rooms, and equipment of establishments is made for the purpose of enforcing strict cleanliness in the handling and preparation of meat for food. Establishments are required to furnish an ample supply of light in all rooms and departments, good ventilation, modern and effective plumbing and drainage systems, and an abundant supply of pure water; to have rooms and equipment for edible products separate from those for other or inedible products; and to provide sanitary equipment, sanitary and sufficient dressing rooms, toilets, and lavatories apart from rooms in which meat and meat food products are prepared, stored, or handled. Where both sexes are employed separate facilities are required.

Inspection is made at approximately 850 establishments in which about 60,000,000 animals are slaughtered each year. In each year about 260,000 animals are found diseased and unfit for human food and are condemned. If no inspection were made many of these would without doubt become part of the general food supply. According to records of inspection millions of pounds of meat are on reinspection condemned on account of having become tainted, rancid, or otherwise unfit for food. This shows how much is being done to protect the health of consumers of meats, and also shows the value and importance of inspection, and should cause consumers to look for the mark of inspection on meats they buy.

Inspection has not only improved the quality of meat and meat food products, but has also improved the working conditions of employees in the slaughtering and meat-packing industry by requiring a sufficient supply of light, good ventilation, and other sanitary conditions.

Inspection is made at the 83 establishments that furnished data for this report. These establishments slaughter about 80 per cent of all animals subject to inspection and about 50 per cent of all animals slaughtered in the United States, inspected and noninspected. According to records, 145,751 cattle, 49,318 calves, 115,246 sheep and lambs, and 570,242 hogs were slaughtered in these 83 establishments in one week ending May 12, 1917, while only 26,159 cattle, 29,030 calves, 31,029 sheep and lambs, and 172,380 hogs were slaughtered during the same week in all other establishments in which inspection is made.

EXPLANATION OF TABLES.

Two general tables have been made. Table A presents data by departments, divisions, and occupations for each establishment separately, except for the sheep-killing, fresh-beef, and canning departments, in which two or more divisions have been combined. The reason for this combination is stated in the description of each of these departments. The total for each division includes data for all establishments that pay employees weekly, but does not include data for those that pay every two weeks, semimonthly, or monthly. Those that do not pay weekly are noted.

The average rate of wages per hour for all the employees in the specified occupation in each establishment, shown in the third column of the table, was obtained by dividing the total of the rates for all employees by the number of employees. The average hours worked in the pay-roll period of one week, two weeks, one-half month, or month for all the employees in each establishment at the regular specified occupation and at any other occupations at which they worked during the establishment pay-roll period, which appear in the fourth column, were obtained by dividing the total hours worked by all employees by the number of employees. Employees in many establishments worked at more than one occupation.

The average earnings in one week, two weeks, one-half month, or one month, shown in column 5, were obtained by dividing the total earnings of all employees by the number of employees, while the average actual hourly earnings of all employees in each plant for the regular specified occupation and for any other occupation at which they worked during the plant pay-roll period of one week, two weeks, one-half month, or one month, shown in the sixth column, were obtained by dividing the total earnings of all employees for all work done by the total hours worked at all occupations. The average actual hourly earnings of all employees in a plant may be more or less than the average rate of wages per hour shown in the third column. This is due to the fact that:

(a) Some employees worked part of their time in some other than their customary occupation, for which they were paid a rate higher or lower than their customary occupation rate.

(b) Some employees worked a less number of hours than the guaranteed "gang time" but were paid for full guaranteed "gang time." Example—were guaranteed 40 hours per week, worked 35 hours, were paid for 40 hours.

(c) Some employees performed, besides their own work, the work of some absent employees, for which they were paid not only their regular rate but also the rate of the absent employees, divided equally among them.

(d) Some employees worked less hours than paid for. Example—worked 59 hours, were paid for 60; or worked one-half day, were paid for a full day.

(e) Some employees who were hired on a daily rate basis worked less than the regular daily hours of the plant (10 hours) and were paid full daily rate.

(f) Some employees who were hired on a weekly rate basis worked less than the regular weekly hours of the plant (60 or 55 hours) and were paid full weekly rate.

The columns under "Number who received each classified rate of wages per hour" should be read in connection with data shown in column 3 and not with that in column 6.

Nonproductive or miscellaneous employees.—Practically all productive employees in this industry are included in the foregoing tabulation which shows employees by departments. Other employees are necessary to the operation, repair, and upkeep of the establishments, and for the transaction of business. In the largest and most important establishments each department has one or more employees for a special job or operation, while in the smaller establishments one employee or force does the special job or operation for all the departments in the establishment, being shifted from one department to another as needed. For this reason and because the occupations and work are not peculiar to this industry, but common to many industries, these employees are tabulated by establishments as a whole.

Office employees.—The rate per hour or per week, actual hours worked, and earnings in a single pay-roll period of one week, two weeks, one-half month, or one month were obtained from the pay rolls of each establishment for each employee except office employees. Rate per hour, week, month, or year was obtained for each office employee, and regular weekly hours, that is, the fixed or stated hours for each day (Monday to Friday), and the same or different for Saturday, that the office was open for work were also obtained. Actual hours worked and earnings were not obtained for any office employees.

Hourly rates of employees who are paid weekly rates were obtained by dividing the weekly rates by the regular weekly hours; of those who are paid monthly rates by multiplying the monthly rates by 12 and dividing the product by 52 times the regular weekly hours; and of those who are paid yearly rates by dividing the yearly rate by 52 times the regular weekly hours.

The "average rate per hour" was obtained by adding all rates and dividing the total by the number of employees.

The "hours per week" shown for each establishment are the actual hours that the office is open for work.

The "average rate per week" was obtained by adding all weekly rates and dividing the total by the number of employees.

Average earnings per hour are shown for all other employees but are not shown for these because actual hours and earnings were not obtained.

The occupations of these employees are not peculiar to this industry.

The total or summary for each occupation is made from the totals for each division, and is, therefore, only for plants that pay employees weekly.

Table B presents data by departments, divisions, and occupations for employees in establishments that pay weekly, classified by hours worked and earnings.

DESCRIPTION OF DEPARTMENTS AND OCCUPATIONS.

CATTLE-KILLING DEPARTMENT.

Under this department are included data for employees whose work is primarily that of slaughtering cattle. The information obtained from the pay rolls of a few establishments shows, however, that some employees also did other work. But the time worked in other than their specified regular occupation connected with cattle killing was but a very small per cent of the total time worked by them during the pay-roll period. In tabulating the data for this and all other departments, each employee who did work other than his specified regular occupation has been given his regular occupational rate. The "average rate of wages per hour" and the classified hourly rates shown under "Number who received each classified rate of wages" are for the specified regular occupations. The average hours worked and the average earnings in one week, two weeks, one-half month, or one month, and the average hourly earnings are for all work done during the pay-roll periods of the establishments, including both the time worked at and the earnings for specified regular occupations and for any other work done during the pay-roll period. In 19 establishments a very small number of sheep and lambs were slaughtered during the pay-roll period for which data were obtained, the number being so small that a regular sheep-slaughtering gang was not necessary. In these establishments the sheep and lambs were slaughtered by a small number of the cattle-killing gang who were detailed temporarily to do this work. In four establishments some of the cattle-killing gang also slaughtered hogs. The hours and earnings for this work are included in this department because the employees who did this, worked much more of their time in this department than out of it.

Seventy-three of the 83 establishments that furnished data for this report slaughter cattle. Sixty-four pay employees weekly, seven pay every two weeks, one pays semimonthly, and one pays monthly. In two that pay weekly, one that pays semimonthly, and one that pays monthly, the cattle are slaughtered by the hog-killing gang, and the data (hours and earnings) for the work are shown in the hog-killing department because the employees who did it worked much more of their time in that department than out of it. Eight establishments slaughter hogs only and two do canning only.

A brief description of the occupations found in this department is here given in the regular order of their usual performance. The order varies in some establishments, due to different machinery and arrangement of buildings and rooms, and especially to the size of the gangs or crews. No educational qualifications are necessary in any occupation in this department, except that of penners, who must be able to read and write.

Drivers and penners.—Drivers drive the cattle from the establishment yards or pens to the killing floor. Little or no experience is necessary. Penners receive the cattle from the drivers, making a record of lot and lot numbers and place the cattle in small pens on the killing floor adjoining a narrow pen running parallel with and a little higher than the killing floor. This narrow pen is the one in which cattle are placed for knocking. The penner drives and prods the cattle into this pen. In some establishments one man does the driving and penning.

The knocking pen is about 4 feet wide and separated into compartments by gates, each compartment being about 10 feet long and 4 feet wide and large enough for two cattle at one time. It is separated from the killing floor by gates which are raised and lowered by machinery which is located overhead or in the gallery. When a rope attached to the machinery is pulled the machinery is set in operation, the gate to the killing floor is lifted, and, as the floor of the compartment is tilted on its axis by means of a chain which is attached to the gate and to the back part of the floor, the raising of the gate lifts the back part of the floor, lowers the front part and dumps the cattle, after they have been knocked, to the killing floor. The gate and floor then automatically drop into position.

Knockers.—Walk on boards at the top and over the edge of the knocking pen, strike the cattle on the forehead with a hammer which weighs about 4 pounds, pull the rope attached to the hoisting machinery and dump the cattle to the killing floor. When the knocker is assisted, the assistant, who is a laborer, pulls the rope. This occupation requires strength, agility, accuracy in judging distance, and experience.

Shacklers or slingers.—Attach one end of a short chain (with a hook on each end) around the hind feet of the cattle, hook the other end to the hoisting machinery, and pull a rope setting the machine in operation which hoists the cattle to an overhead rail, leading to a point on the killing floor where the animals are to be stuck. In some establishments the animals are dropped automatically to this rail, while in others a laborer who works overhead or in the gallery hooks the cattle from the hoist to the rail. In establishments where cattle are slaughtered according to the kosher or Jewish method, the cattle are shackled, thrown to the killing floor, and partly hoisted, the head, neck, and shoulders resting on the floor. In these establishments the shackler is called a "slinger." Experience, skill, and strength are necessary.

Head holders.—Hold the head of the animal for the kosher sticker by attaching an instrument shaped somewhat like a muzzle over the nose and face and pull the head over on the face, thereby stretching the neck. The muzzle or holder has a wooden handle about 3 feet long. Experience is not necessary.

Stickers.—Stick the cattle in the neck through the chest to the hollow with a knife, cutting the arteries running from the heart to the neck. This occupation requires accuracy, judgment, speed, and experience.

When cattle are being slaughtered by the kosher or Jewish method, there are no knockers. The slinger throws the live animal by shackling the hind feet and hoist it until the shoulder, neck, and head only are on the floor. While in this position the head is held by the holder and the sticker cuts the throat by drawing a very sharp knife across the throat a few inches from the head, cutting the jugular vein.

Headers.—Skin out the heads, that is, take the hides from heads and cut through the neck and joint of the vertebræ back of the head, cutting the head entirely from the carcass. The heads are kept in regular order so that they may be identified with the carcasses from which they came. The heads are trucked to a place convenient for the Government inspectors. Experience and skill are necessary for this work.

Droppers and pritchers-up.—These two occupations are combined because in many establishments one man does both the dropping and the pritching up. Droppers drop the carcasses from the sticking or bleeding rail to the killing beds by pulling a rope attached to machinery in the gallery. Pritchers-up roll or raise cattle on backs with all feet up and keep them in that position by placing one end of a pritch (a small wooden instrument about 2 feet long with a steel point on one end) against the breast or brisket and the other end against the floor. A new employee requires a little experience before being able to do this work well.

Foot skimmers.—Skin the fore legs from the foot to the knee and take off the leg at the knee joint. This operation consists of cutting through the skin at the back of the foot or hoof, cutting off the dewclaws, splitting the hide from the foot to the knee, skinning out the leg bone and taking off the leg by cutting through the knee joint. In some establishments the dewclaws are not cut off until the hide reaches the hide cellar. This occupation requires experience, skill, and speed. Droppers and pritchers-up are promoted to this work.

Leg breakers.—Skin out the hind legs from the foot to above the gamb (the hamstring or tendon located at the back of the leg immediately above the hock joint), cut through the hock joint, break the joint, and take off the hind leg at that joint. In some establishments the leg is not broken or taken off by the leg skimmers, but is left on until the carcass is hoisted for gutting and other operations, an is then broken or taken off by some other employee. In some establishments leg breakers also rip open—that is, rip open the hide from the bung to the neck. Experience, skill, and speed are necessary for this work.

Rippers-open.—Rip open the hide from the bung to the neck and in some establishments assist floormen or siders. Experience and skill are necessary.

Gullet raisers.—Cut through the neck to the gullet and feeding tube (weasand) leading from the mouth to the hollow of the carcass, cut them loose from the neck, and tie the loose end of the weasand to prevent purging. This is a minor knife job, but experience is necessary.

Caul pullers.—Cut through the meat between the hind legs to crotch or aitch bone, split open the belly from the crotch to the breastbone or brisket, and pull the caul fat from around the paunch and intestines. The caul is placed in a separate bucket or other vessel so that it may be identified with the carcass of the animal from which it came. Experience is necessary for this work.

Floormen or siders.—Skin out the breast and belly and remove the skin or hide from the inside of the hind legs and from the sides. This is one of the most skilled operations in this department. It requires speed, care, accuracy, and long experience and is the job or occupation that the dropper, pritcher-up, foot skinner, and leg breaker look forward to.

Breast or brisket breakers and sawyers.—Saw through the center of the breastbone from outside to inside the carcass. This operation requires experience, as it is necessary to cut or saw the brisket or breastbone into two equal parts.

Crotch breakers.—Cut through the crotch or aitch bone, which is part of the hip bone or pelvis, from the outside to the hollow. The cut is made with a knife except when old cows are slaughtered. Then it is necessary to saw through as the bones are very hard and can not be cut or broken easily. Experience is necessary.

Hoisters.—Look after the hoisting machinery which is used in lifting animals from the floor, attach spreaders to the carcasses to be hoisted from the killing beds, and after the work on the floor has been completed set the machinery in operation by pulling a rope attached to it. Experience is necessary.

Tail rippers and pullers.—Rip open the skin or hide on the tail from the butt to the tip end and pull or skin the hide from the tail. Experience is necessary.

Bung droppers.—Cut around the bung, separating it from the carcass. In some establishments the bung dropper also cuts off and saves the bladder, while in others the bladder is cut off and saved by an employee who does nothing else. Experience is necessary.

Rumpers.—Skin the hide from around the rump and top of the hips. This is a very important occupation and requires skill and experience, as the skin on that part of the carcass adheres very closely to the meat, making it extremely difficult to remove the hide without cutting or scoring it or cutting through the outside membrane which covers the outer surface of the meat. A cut or score in the hide would decrease its value, while a cut through the membrane would mar the appearance of the meat.

Fell cutters.—Cut or skin the hide from the back and outside of the hips or the top of the legs. This operation requires very careful work, owing to the fact that the fell, that is, the white, silvery tissue or membrane which lies immediately between the hide and the meat, adheres so closely to the meat and hide that a slight cut through it would either score or cut the hide or score the meat. In either case it would make a bad job.

Fell pullers and beaters.—Employees do this work, in pairs. One takes a leg skin that was skinned out by a leg breaker, pulls and jerks it, thereby removing the hide from the legs from above the gamb to the top of the leg, while the other beats the hide loose from the leg by striking the meat side of the hide between the carcass and the leg skin. Experience is necessary.

Backers.—Skin the hide from the back from the rump to the top of the shoulders near the neck. Experience and skill are necessary.

Gutters.—Take the paunch, intestines, liver, heart, and lungs from the carcass and cut through the kidney fat along the backbone from the hips to the bottom of the kidney fat, thereby separating the fat into two equal parts and at the same time preparing the carcass for the splitters. The Government inspector here inspects the heart, liver, lungs, paunches, intestines, and the glands for signs of disease. If any such signs are found, the carcass and all offal, including the head and the caul fat, are sent to the retaining room for final inspection by a Government veterinary inspector. Gutters must have experience, speed, and skill.

Shank skinners.—Skin out the shanks of the fore legs from the knee joints to the shoulders. In most establishments this operation is done by the hide droppers. Experience and skill are necessary for this work.

Hide droppers.—Clear out the shanks in establishments where other employees do not do this operation, clear the hide from the front of the shoulders and the neck, dropping it from the carcass to the killing floor where the hide inspector examines or inspects it for cuts and scores. Experience, speed, and skill are necessary for this work.

Tail sawyers.—Saw through the tail bone and part of the backbone or vertebræ down between the hip bones to a point nearly opposite the hip or socket joint. This work is done by hand with a small meat saw and requires skill and experience.

Splitters.—Split through the center of the backbone or vertebræ from the hips to the chuck or to a point in the backbone near the third or fourth ribs. A long, heavy, sharp cleaver is used for this operation. The occupation is one of the most important in this department and requires strength, skill, and experience.

Chuck splitters.—Split through the chuck and neck from the point where the splitters completed their work, through the last joint of the vertebræ in the neck next to the head, thereby completing the splitting of the backbone into two equal parts and completely separating the carcass into halves. This work is done with a heavy, sharp cleaver and requires strength, skill, and experience.

Scribers.—Saw through the top part of the backbone between the spinal cord canal and the top of the back or the outer surface of the carcass, beat, break or bend the bones of the back while the carcass is still warm. This is done from loin to a point opposite the third or fourth ribs for the purpose of giving that part of the carcass a smooth, well-rounded, and thicker appearance. It is done only when a very good grade of cattle is being slaughtered, and not when canners or cows are slaughtered. Scribers do other work when old cows are slaughtered. Experience and skill necessary.

Trimmers.—Trim bruises, skirts, rounds, and tails. Trim bruises from carcass, cutting out the blood clots and bruised meat to improve the appearance of the carcass. Trim skirts or diaphragms by cutting the surplus membrane from them. Care should be taken in this operation not to cut entirely through the membrane to the lean meat, as by so doing the membrane draws up when the carcass cools and shows the meat, thus marring the appearance of the inside of the carcass. Trim rounds by cutting out bruises and cutting off uneven or irregular particles that may be hanging to them. Trim tails by cutting out bruises and cutting off fat. These operations are all knife jobs and require experience and skill.

Utility men (handy men, straw bosses, and all-round men).—Efficient, experienced, all-round, handy employees who are shifted from one kind of skilled work to another as needed or who fill in for employees who are temporarily off duty.

Washers and wipers.—Wash and clean dressed carcasses and wipe them with soft rags made of several thicknesses of cloth, thereby removing water and blood from them. Little or no experience is necessary.

Butchers, general.—Do all the operations necessary in slaughtering cattle. These employees are as a rule found in small establishments or in establishments that are primarily engaged in the slaughter of hogs but also slaughter a few bulls for bologna sausage. These employees have skill and experience.

Tonguers.—Cut tongues from the heads, leaving them hanging by a small particle of meat so that the Government inspector may easily cut into and examine the glands of the head for disease. Experience necessary.

Laborers.—Do the unskilled work in and about the killing department. They assist the penners, the knockers, and the hoisters, squilgee or clean the blood from the floor, attach hooks of rollers in gambes, tie bladders, pull spinal cords from the spinal canal, skewer loins and necks, wrap cloths around rounds, wash cloths to be used for wiping carcasses and for absorbing the blood in necks and kidney ducts or canals, clean rollers, carry rollers, oil rollers, and shove carcasses on rail running from the killing floor to the conveyor which carries carcasses to the coolers or chill rooms.

Truckers.—Truck material and supplies into and about the department, and truck offal, mostly paunches and intestines, to chutes leading from the killing department to the offal department. New employees require little or no experience to do this work efficiently.

HOG-KILLING DEPARTMENT.

Inasmuch as hog killing and hog cutting are both done by one gang or crew of employees in practically all establishments that furnished data for this report, and as many of the employees have at least two regular occupations, it was necessary to give preference to either the killing or cutting occupation of such employees. Preference, therefore, has been given to killing occupations in practically all cases, exception being made only in a very few cases where employees worked at killing occupations a comparatively small per cent of the total time worked. The hourly rates shown in this department, therefore, are for killing occupations, but the hours worked and earnings for each pay period are for both the killing and the cutting occupations, and for any other work done during the pay-roll period. Some employees worked at both killing and cutting occupations, and also did other work. The average hourly earnings are for all kinds of work done during the pay-roll period, and were obtained by dividing the total earnings by the total hours worked.

Seventy-five of the 83 establishments that furnished data for this report slaughter hogs. Sixty-six of the plants pay employees weekly, seven pay every two weeks, one pays semimonthly, and one pays monthly. In four establishments that pay employees weekly, hogs are slaughtered by the cattle-killing gang and the data (hours and earnings) for hog killing are included in the data shown under the cattle-killing department. One establishment has its hogs slaughtered by another plant and therefore has no data shown for it under this department. In four establishments in which a small number of cattle were killed during the pay-roll period, the number being so small that a regular cattle-killing gang was not necessary, the work was done by the hog-killing gang, and the data (hours and earnings) for that work are included in this department because the employees who did the work were employed much more of their time in this department. No educational qualifications are necessary in any of the occupations of this department except that penners must be able to read and write and keep a record of the lots and numbers.

The occupations shown under this department are described as follows:

Laborers, drivers, penners, steamers, singers, washers, and aitch-bone breakers.—Do the various kinds of unskilled work on the killing floor; drive hogs from the establishment pens to the killing floor; pen hogs on the killing floor, that is, place them in pen next to the revolving hoisting machine, and make record of lot and lot numbers; assist shacklers by catching and holding the hogs; steam hogs, while being shaved and scraped, using a steam hose; singe hogs while being dressed, using a gas-singeing hose; wash hogs and break crotch or aitch bones, using an instrument similar in shape to a tinner's shears. No experience necessary.

Shacklers.—Receive hogs from drivers or penners, place them in the small pen connected with the revolving hoisting machine, attach or hook one end of shackle (a short chain with a hook on each end) around one leg of the hog and attach the other end to the revolving hoisting wheel. The wheel is operated by machinery and hoists the hogs from the floor, dropping them automatically to a rail running from the wheel to the sticker. This occupation requires strength, skill, and experience.

Stickers.—Stick the hogs in the neck, penetrating the neck to the hollow of the hog, cutting the arteries running from the heart to the neck and head. A sticker, in many plants, is assisted by another employee who catches and holds the hog for the sticker as it comes to him over the rail leading from the wheel. The assistant is really a learner, apprentice, or laborer. In some establishments the assistant fills in for the sticker, being paid approximately the sticker's rate. In this case he is included with the stickers. This occupation requires strength, skill, speed, and experience.

Scalders, tubmen, droppers, gamb cutters, polemen, and duckers.—These employees handle the hog from the time it leaves the sticker until it is hooked to the scraping or dehairing machine. Droppers receive the hogs as they come from the sticker and detach the shackles, dropping the hogs into the scalding tubs or vats, and return the shackles by gravity rails to the shackling pen. Experience and skill are necessary for this work. Scalders keep the water in the scalding vats at the required temperature, test the scalding, using a pole with a hook on it for the purpose of determining whether the scalding has been sufficient to remove the hair. When a scalding finds that the hog is scalded so that the hair may be removed easily, he shoves the hog to the gamb cutter. Polemen and duckers assist the scalding and tubmen by ducking or keeping the hogs under water while they are being scalded. Gamb cutters slit the skin on the back part of the hind legs immediately above the hock joint and cut between the leg bone and the gamb or hamstring so that a hook or the gambrel stick may be easily inserted in the gamb. This work requires experience, strength, and some skill.

Hookers-on, hookers-off, hangers-off, straighteners, and feeders, chain.—These employees handle the hog from the time it leaves the gamb cutter until it is hooked to the moving conveyor, which is operated by machinery, excepting during head and feet scraping, which is usually done en route. In some establishments a gambrel stick is inserted in each gamb, after which the hog is hooked to the scraping or dehairing machine. In other establishments a short chain with a hook on each end is used, one hook being attached to the gamb and the other to the machine. The hog is then carried through the dehairing or scraping machine. After passing through, it is automatically dropped to a shaving bench or moving table which carries it to the chain or moving conveyor. While on the moving table, the head shavers, scrapers, and cleaners do their work. Feeders attach hook or feed the hogs from the table to the moving conveyor. In some establishments, in which hogs are dressed by the Canadian or English method, immediately after passing through the dehairing machine they are dropped to a table near the singeing machine, which consists of an endless chain passing up a steel pipe or chimney of burning gas. The chimney is of sufficient size to allow the passage of as large a hog as may be killed. The hog is marked by cutting a slit between the jawbones. A chain with a hook on each end is used to attach the hog to the singeing machine. One hook is inserted in the slit between the jawbones and the other is hooked to the endless chain. The hog passes through the pipe and is thoroughly singed, coming out a very dark brown. After passing out at the top of the pipe the hog is lowered to the floor whence it started and is dropped to a table. It is carried through the chimney to the top of the machine head first and lowered feet first. This work is heavy, as there is more or less lifting, and requires strength and experience.

Shavers and scrapers.—Shave and scrape off the hair left on the hogs after the scraping machine has done its work, and scrape hogs after they have been singed. This work is done with knives, and requires experience, skill, and speed.

Headers.—Cut off the head, unjointing it from the body at the first joint of the vertebræ immediately back of the head, cutting through the flesh and joint, but leaving the head hanging to the carcass by a small part of the skin and jowl. The head is so left on the body that the Government inspector may cut into the glands of the head and inspect them for signs of tuberculosis or any other disease. If any sign of disease is found, a metal stamp is attached to the carcass and no further work is done upon it until it arrives in the retaining room, where the work of dressing is completed under the supervision of veterinary inspectors of the Department of Agriculture. This operation requires skill and experience.

Gutters, bung droppers, and rippers-open.—Rip open the skin and belly from the bung to the neck or the cut made by the sticker. Bung droppers cut around the bung, separating it from the carcass, and as a rule also cut out the bladder. The gutter removes the paunch, intestines, and the pluck. In many establishments one employee does all these operations. This work requires skill and experience. The paunch, intestines, and pluck are here inspected by the Government inspectors for signs of disease.

Ham facers.—Trim or cut the surplus fat from the inside or face of the ham. This is done in order to improve the appearance of the ham and at the same time show as much lean as possible. This work requires skill and experience.

Splitters.—Separate the hog into halves by cutting through the center of the backbone from tail to and through the neck bones. In some establishments the splitting is done by cutting the ribs loose from the backbone on both sides, thereby taking the backbone out whole. This work is done with a heavy, sharp cleaver, and requires strength, skill, and experience.

Leaf-lard pullers.—Remove the leaf lard from the carcass. Leaf lard is a thick layer of fat inside the carcass extending from the vertebræ to the belly and from the crotch almost to the breastbone. It is the highest grade of fat in the hog. Little or no experience is necessary for this work.

Leaf-lard scrapers.—Scrape the small pieces or particles of lard left in the carcass by the leaf-lard puller. Little or no experience is necessary for this work.

Bruise trimmers, head removers, and kidney pullers.—Trim bruises on the dressed carcasses, removing blood clots, blood, and discolorations; cut the small part of the jowl and skin which was left uncut by the header, thus removing the head from the carcass. Pull kidneys from the leaf lard while it is still warm. Very little experience is necessary for this work.

Utility men.—All-round, efficient, handy men who are shifted from one occupation to another as needed, spelling or filling in for employees temporarily off duty for any reason or period of time. Experience and skill are necessary.

Truckers.—Truck materials, supplies, and offal into, about, and from the department. No experience is necessary.

Kidney pullers, shavers, singers, neck brushers, and spreaders.—These terms designate the few occupations in which a very small number of women are employed on the killing floor. The number of women so employed is so small that all have been transferred to one group.

SHEEP-KILLING DEPARTMENT.

Under this department are included data for employees whose work is primarily that of killing and dressing sheep—that is, those who work much more of their time at this than at any other work. Forty-two of the 83 plants that furnished statistical data for this report have regular gangs or crews for this work, and the data here shown are for the employees in these plants. Nineteen plants in which sheep are killed do not have regular gangs, the work usually being done by some of the cattle-killing gang detailed to do it, and the data (time worked and earnings) for that work are not included here but are included under the cattle-killing department where these employees work most of the time. In two plants this work is done by contract and no data are shown for them under any department, and in 20 plants no sheep are killed.

The number of employees in a gang or crew of sheep butchers varies from 2 to 3 men in the smallest plants to 50 to 60 in the largest. Those in the smallest plants do all the different operations of dressing sheep and are called sheep butchers. In the largest plants each employee does one operation only, and in such plants are found clear-cut, well-defined, standardized occupations such as are shown for some of the plants in divisions 1 and 2. Employees in medium-sized plants do more than one operation, the number varying with the number of employees in the gang. Each employee in the medium-sized plants has been given the occupation at which he worked most during the pay-roll period taken, or the most important occupation at which he worked where the time worked at each occupation was not given.

Employees who do the sheep killing also as a rule do the calf killing, for which they are paid the same rate per hour, even though they do an entirely different kind of work. A very small per cent of the calves are skinned on the killing floor. The dressing of calves when the hides are left on the carcasses consists of shackling, sticking (cutting the throat), skinning out the feet (legs from hoofs to the knees) and the head, washing, combing, and cleaning the coat (hair), ripping the hide from bung to the neck, ripping open the belly, breaking the crotch or aitch bone, splitting the brisket, dropping the bung, gutting, taking out the pluck, and washing inside the carcass. When this has been done, the carcasses with hides on go to the chill room. Plants frequently receive orders for calves dressed with hides on. Those not sold with hide on are skinned in the chill room the morning after the killing by some of the sheep and calf butchers. The pay for skinning cold calves is sometimes by an hourly rate and sometimes by a piece rate of about 10 cents for each carcass.

Divisions 1 and 2 are shown separately and divisions 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 combined. This is due to the fact that 54,907 sheep and 9,750 calves were killed in the plants in division 1 during the payroll period for which data were obtained; that 84,791 sheep and 7,861 calves were killed in the plants in division 2, and that only 31,728 sheep and 23,505 calves were killed in divisions 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 combined during the period for which data were obtained.

A brief description of occupations found in this department is here given in the regular order of their performance. The order, however, varies in some plants, due to different machinery, room arrangement, etc. Not every occupation found in this department is shown separately in the tabulation, as the conditions in a few plants made it necessary to combine some of the occupations. Except for penners, who must be able to read and write and keep record of sheep killed, etc., no educational qualifications are needed in the occupations in this department.

Laborers.—Included under this term are drivers, penners, holders, shovers, hookers onto conveyers, hangers-up of racks, and squilgeers. Drivers drive sheep from the establishment pens to the killing floor and deliver them to the penners. Penners receive the sheep from the drivers, count and sort them by lots, making record of lot and lot number, and place them in an inclosure adjoining the small pen connected with the revolving hoisting wheel. Holders catch and hold sheep for shacklers. Shovers shove sheep along on overhead rail to chain or moving conveyor or from conveyor to a rail leading to the cooler. Hookers-on hook or transfer sheep from rail to conveyor. Hangers-up of racks hang racks on rail leading from conveyor to the cooler. Squilgeers clean up the killing floor. Little or no experience necessary.

Shacklers.—Receive sheep from penners; prod and push them into a small pen connected with the revolving hoisting wheel; attach one end of the shackle (a short chain with a hook on each end) to leg of sheep and hook the other end to the hoisting wheel. The wheel, which is operated by machinery, lifts the sheep from the floor and drops them automatically to a rail running from the wheel to the bleeding rail. Experience, speed, strength, and skill necessary.

Stickers.—Pull the sheep from the wheel along the rail; stick knife into the side of the neck near the back of the jaw, draw the knife across the throat, cutting the jugular veins. Skill and experience necessary.

Joint breakers.—Break the joints between the fore feet and the legs by hand. Experience and strength necessary.

Scalpers.—Skin the pelt from the scalp and face. This is a knife operation. In some establishments it is not done until the pelt is dropped from the carcass, being done then by the pelt droppers. Experience and some skill is necessary.

Miscellaneous workers.—Include hookers-up, fore quarters and hind legs; jaw skinners, raisers and tiers of weasands, cutters-off of toes, cod punchers, shoulder punchers, leg rollers, leg crossers, and shank pinners. Hookers-up hook up fore quarters by attaching the fore feet to a spreader attached to a rail running parallel with the rail to which the hind legs are attached; hook or transfer hind legs from overhead rail to the ring or moving conveyor, remove shackles and return them by gravity rail to the hoisting wheel or shackling pen, and in some establishments pull pelt from the outside of the hind leg from the broken joint to about the hock joint. Jaw skinners skin the pelt from around the jaws and neck. Raisers and tiers of weasands cut through the neck from the head to the chest, cutting the gullet and weasand loose from the meat, and tie the end of the weasand to prevent purging. Cutters-off of toes cut off toes of the front feet at the broken joint, thereby releasing the fore legs from the spreader, leaving the animal hanging by the hind leg. Cod and shoulder punchers punch the pelt loose from around the cod and the shoulders. Leg rollers wrap the caul fat around the hind legs, attaching it to them with short wooden skewers. Leg crossers take one hind leg from one hook on the conveyor and attach it to another hook to which the other hind leg is fastened. Shank pinners bend the foreleg (foot to knee) back to shank, and pin leg and shank together with small wooden skewers. These occupations or operations are not generally found in establishments, as the work is usually done by employees working at more important occupations; hence the necessity of showing them here in one group as miscellaneous workers. Experience and some skill necessary for this work.

Leggers (fore and hind).—Skin the pelt from the fore legs from the foot to the shoulders and from the inside and back part of the hind legs from the foot to the crotch and cut off the hind foot at the joint between the leg and the foot. In some establishments the fore leggers skin the pelt from the neck, jaw, shoulders, and breast. Experience and skill necessary.

Brisket or breast pullers.—Rip open the pelt through the breast and part of the belly and pull it from the point of the brisket on both sides to the shoulders. Experience and skill necessary.

Facers.—Rip open the pelt from the crotch to near the breast and skin it from the belly and part of the sides by holding the pelt with one hand and punching it loose from the carcass with the fist of the other. In some plants employees who do this work are called pelters. This is one of the most important occupations in this department and requires long experience and skill.

Rumpers and back pullers.—Skin the pelt from the rump, clearing it from the carcass at the top of the hips near the tail. Pull the pelt from the carcass from the top of the hips to the neck. In some establishments back pullers also drop the bung by cutting the end loose from the carcass. In others the bung is dropped by the gutters. Experience and skill necessary.

Brisket or breast splitters.—Split the breastbone through from outside to inside or hollow, by driving a sharp knife through the bone with a small mallet. Experience and skill necessary.

Pelt droppers.—Skin the pelt from the neck to the head, clearing it from the carcass. In some plants the pelt droppers also skin the pelt from the head. Experience and skill necessary.

Scrubbers, washers, and wipers.—Scrub or wash the carcass, using a fountain brush supplied with water by a hose, and wipe or dry the carcass with cloths made of several layers of cheesecloth. Carcasses are washed and wiped thoroughly after the pelt has been dropped and again after the gutting has been completed. Little or no experience necessary.

Caul pullers.—Cut open the belly and pull the caul fat from the paunch and intestines and place it in a small pan attached to the moving conveyor near the carcass. There is a separate pan for each caul. When sheep are caul dressed the caul is draped over the kidneys and wrapped around the hind legs by the dressers. Experience and skill necessary.

Gutters (bung droppers and rippers-open).—Cut through the crotch and crotch bone to the hollow of the animal, drop the bung and remove the intestines, paunch, and pluck. In some cases sheep are dressed with the pluck left in the carcass and are so sold to the trade. The pluck is the liver, heart, and lungs. Experience and skill are necessary. The viscera inspection is here made by the United States inspectors.

Headers and neck trimmers.—Cut the head from the carcass and trim the neck. Experience necessary.

Dressers.—Include rib sawyers or Boston cutters, setters or Boston setters, caul dressers, and dressers. There are many methods of dressing sheep, due to the demands of the trade in different sections of the country and in different cities in the same section, also to the age and size of the animals. Some of those most used are here defined. Caul dressers take the caul from the small pan on the conveyor next to the carcass and drape or hang it around the hind legs and over the kidneys. In some plants they also roll or wrap it around the legs and fasten it to them with skewers. Rib sawyers or Boston cutters saw across the ribs inside the carcass about midway between the backbone and the breastbone and belly, using a small scribe saw, then bend the brisket and rib outward. Boston setters or setters set a stay stick inside the carcass to hold the ribs back to the position in which they were placed by the sawyers or cutters. These operations require long experience and skill.

Luggers.—Lift the carcass from the moving conveyor or ring and carry it to the rack on the rail which runs from the killing floor to the chill room. Strength, but little or no skill and experience necessary.

Utility men, spellers, handy men, all-round men.—All-round, efficient, handy men who are shifted from one skilled occupation to another as needed, filling in for employees temporarily off duty. Experience and skill necessary.

Sheep or calf butchers.—Dress sheep and calves entirely, doing all the operations. These employees are usually found in small establishments where only a small number of animals are dressed from day to day. In most establishments they also do other work. Experience and skill necessary.

OFFAL (OTHER THAN HIDES AND CASINGS) DEPARTMENT.

The dressed carcass is the direct product of the slaughtered animal. Offal is the indirect product and therefore consists of hides, casings or intestines, fats obtained from animals while being slaughtered, paunches, livers, hearts, feet or legs, tongues, tails, sweetbreads, spleens or milts, weasands, heads (horns, brains, cheek, and other head meat, beef lips or mouths, and head bones), and blood.

Before the development of the modern meat-packing establishment, very little of the offal except hides and tallow or fats was saved. The modern meat-packing establishment has eliminated this waste. Now everything is saved. All that is edible or fit for human food is cleaned and prepared for food, and the remainder is made into inedible grease, tallow, fertilizer, combs or ornamental articles, knife handles, buttons, neat's-foot oil, glue, etc.

Under this department are included all employees who save, clean, trim, and prepare all beef, hog, sheep, and calf offal other than hides and casings, including pigtails and pigs' feet and snouts. Offal requires immediate and careful attention while animals are being slaughtered, as it spoils quickly.

The working conditions in this department are not good, as a rule. The work is usually done in rooms with cement floors, with water standing or running on the floors, making it almost impossible for employees to work without getting their feet damp or wet.

Eighty of the 83 establishments that furnished data for this report have employees in this department; 71 of them pay employees weekly, 7 pay every 2 weeks, 1 pays semimonthly, and 1 pays monthly. No educational qualifications are needed in any of the occupations in this department.

It is almost impossible to give a detailed definition of the various operations or occupations of this department, especially for trimmers. In large establishments employees are given only one operation to do. In small and medium-sized establishments one employee does more than one operation; that is, trims more than one kind of offal. In some cases the whole force does all the trimming, being shifted from one kind to another.

The occupations found in this department are described as follows:

Chisellers, cheekers, and templets.—Chisellers insert a chisel between the bones of the head, pull the jawbones out of socket, and tear head meat loose from the bones. Templets cut or loosen meat from around the temples and cheeks. Cheekers cut or trim the cheek meat from heads. Experience and skill is required in these operations.

Machine operators.—Including skull splitters or choppers, jawbone pullers; knockers-out of teeth or grinders-out of teeth, head or turbinated bone grinders, sawyers of horns, shanks, or shin bones; snout pullers, marrow blowers. These employees operate machines that split heads, pull jawbones, knock or grind teeth out of jawbones, remove lard or grease from head bones, saw off horns, saw shank or shin bones, pull snout skins, or blow marrow from bones. They not only operate the machines, but also handle the heads or bones, placing them in or on the machines in the necessary or required positions. In some establishments beef heads are not split by machinery, the work being done by hand with a heavy, sharp ax. After the head is split the brain is taken from the skull and placed in pans, buckets, or other vessels. Employees who do this work have experience, but new employees become efficient after doing the work a very short time.

Trimmers.—These employees are knife workers. They trim the various kinds of offal, cutting off meat, skins, and membranes, and separating the fat from the lean meat. In many establishments they are called general trimmers, while in other establishments each employee has a special or specific operation to perform. They trim head meats, trim pecks, cut out palates, cut out and trim sweetbreads, trim cheek meat, trim livers, trim fats, hearts, lungs, etc. Experience is necessary to do this work well, but new employees after a short period of experience can do it efficiently.

Pluck trimmers.—Cut off, cut out, or separate plucks, pull and split weasands. The pluck consists of the heart, lungs, gullet, and weasands. It is separated or trimmed by cutting off the heart and weasand and trimming the fat from the heart and from around the gullet or windpipe. While the operation requires some experience, new employees are able to do the work efficiently after a short period of experience.

Inspectors.—Include graders, slunk skimmers, utility men, spell men. Inspectors inspect the offal trimmings to see if they are clean and also for the purpose of grading them as to quality. Spell men fill in for employees who are temporarily absent from duty. They are efficient employees who are competent to do the various kinds of skilled work in this department. Slunk skimmers remove the skin or hides from calves. Experience is necessary for this work.

Laborers.—Laborers do the various kinds of unskilled work in this department. They clean up floors, cut sinews from legs, save hair, pick up fat, catch blood, wash barrels, and do general roustabout and general unskilled work. In many establishments the laborers are shifted from one kind of unskilled work to another. No experience is necessary.

Rippers-open of paunches and pecks.—Cut open paunches and pecks and dump the contents.

Washers.—Wash and pick over offal trimmings and fats. The washing is sometimes done by hand and sometimes by machinery. When done by machinery, the washer operates the machines. Little or no experience is necessary for this work.

Truckers.—Load and unload trucks and truck material and supplies into, about, and out of the department. They need little or no experience.

Tripe washers.—Wash and clean beef paunches after they have been dumped. This work is sometimes done by hand and sometimes by machinery. It is very important and requires care, as the paunch must be thoroughly cleaned and washed before it is cooked, finished, and made into tripe. Experience is necessary for this work, but new employees usually learn to do it efficiently in a very short time if they work under the supervision of experienced employees.

Tripe scalders and cookers.—Scald and cook beef paunches after they have been thoroughly cleaned.

Tripe scrapers and finishers.—Scrape the inside or mucous lining of the paunch after it has been cooked and finish the cleaning by scraping all the fat and membrane from the outside, thereby leaving only the muscular tissue of the paunch and do the necessary trimming. The tripe is now ready for packing in casks or tierces filled with vinegar pickle.

Pigs' feet shavers, cleaners, scrapers, and singers.—These employees shave, clean, scrape, and singe the hair and scurf from pigs' feet and prepare them for market or for vinegar pickle. While experience is necessary for this work, new employees learn to do it after a very short period of experience.

Toe pullers, feet splitters, and trimmers.—These employees pull the toes or hoofs from the feet, split the feet into two equal parts, and do other necessary trimming. While experience is necessary, new employees are able to do the work efficiently after a short period of service.

Finishers.—Do the final trimming of pigs' feet and pack them in tierces and fill the tierces with vinegar pickle. Experience is necessary for this work.

HIDE DEPARTMENT.

This department includes all employees who handle cattle hides, calfskins, and sheep pelts. The operations begin with the inspection of the hides on the killing floor for cuts and scores, and ends with the take-up employees or gang who pull the cured hides from the pack, shake out the salt by shaking the hide over a wooden horse, flesh side down as a rule, roll, tie, and prepare them for shipment. Sixty-seven of the 83 establishments that furnished the data for this report had regular hide gangs, and data shown in this department are for employees in these establishments. Nine establishments had no hide employees, as they were engaged in canning or they slaughtered hogs only. No data were reported for six establishments, as the hides from cattle slaughtered in them were sold green.

Hides are graded, inspected, and trimmed by the most skilled employees in the department. This work, however, is frequently done by sub, or assistant, foremen in many of the medium-sized establishments, and by the foremen in the very small establishments. Foremen and assistants in the medium-sized and small establishments who did this work are included in the data for trimmers, graders, and inspectors. All other employees in this department are unskilled. It requires only a few days' experience for new employees to become efficient spreaders and salters, or laborers. The take-up employees in many establishments are more or less temporary as there is no work for them except when the establishments have orders to be filled. There are no educational qualifications needed in any of the occupations in this department.

The occupations shown in the tabulation for this department are described as follows:

Inspectors, trimmers, and graders.—Inspect green hides for cuts and scores; trim hides by splitting the ears so that they will lie even on the pack when salted; cut off the tail or switch; cut off loose or hanging particles of hide at the edges and trim off surplus pieces of meat that were carelessly left on the hide when it was taken from the carcass; grade hides before they are salted down on packs and after they are taken from packs. Experience is necessary to do this work.

Spreaders and salters.—Spread green hides on packs, hair side down, and salt them down, that is, cover them with salt. Experience is necessary to do this work.

Laborers.—Pull hides from the bottom of the chute leading from killing floor to cellar; truck green hides from the chute to the hide packs; pull them from packs after they are cured, shake out salt, sweep, roll, tie, pack, and ship hides; cut out ear hair; and do general roustabout work. No experience is necessary.

CASING DEPARTMENT.

Casings are the coverings for sausage and other meat products and are prepared from the intestines of cattle, hogs, and sheep, from beef, hog, and calf bladders, from beef weasands or feeding tubes, and from hog stomachs. The intestines are divided into three kinds of casings—bungs, rounds, and middles. The bung is the largest in diameter and from 4 to 5 feet in length, according to size of the animal from which it comes. The round is the small intestine and the middle is the large intestine.

Employees in this department are entirely dependent for work upon the number of animals that are slaughtered in the establishment as a whole, as when no animals are slaughtered there are no casings to clean. Whenever animals are slaughtered the casings or intestines come to this department by a chute leading from the killing floor.

Eighty of the 83 plants that furnished data for this report have casing workers. One has its animals slaughtered by another plant, and two do canning only, and therefore have no casings to be cleaned.

Inasmuch as casings are cleaned in rooms with cement floors, and as there is, in some establishments, much water standing or running on the floors, the working conditions of the employees in this department are not good. It is almost impossible for them to keep their feet dry and warm.

There are no educational requirements for the occupations in this department. The occupations are as follows:

Casing pullers or runners.—Pull and cut bungs out of casing sets which consist of bungs, rounds, middles, and the ruffle or fat of the intestines; run or pull rounds and middles out of sets, usually using a knife to separate them from the set and ruffle fat. Experience, speed, and skill are necessary for this work.

Strippers.—Remove the contents from bungs, rounds, and middles. In some establishments one end of the casing is attached to a pipe or tube, water is then turned into and forced through them, thus forcing the contents from them. In other establishments stripping is done with machines or by hand. Experience is necessary.

Fatters and slimers.—Operate and feed machines that remove fat from the outside surface and slime or mucous lining from the inside surface of casings. In some establishments the sliming is done by hand both before and after the casings are turned. In some the fattening is done by one machine and the sliming by another. Experience is necessary.

Turners.—Turn casings inside out. This is done with water. One end of the casing is turned by hand enough to get the force of the water. The running water then forces its way entirely through casing, turning it inside out. Experience is necessary.

Blowers, graders, and inspectors.—Casings are inspected and graded by forcing water through them or by filling them with air by compressed-air machines. This is done for the purpose of finding leaks or defects, and also for separating them into grades—"narrows," "wides," and "middles." Experience is necessary.

Measurers and bunchers.—Measure rounds and middles by length and make bunches of approximately 100 feet in each bunch of rounds and 60 feet in each bunch of middles. Experience is necessary.

Salters and packers.—Place the cleaned bunches of casings in boxes, covering them with a sufficient quantity of salt. After standing in the salt until the next day they are taken out of the salt boxes, packed in tierces, and moved to and stored in the casing chill room, ready for marketing. Experience and skill necessary.

Trimmers of casings.—Cut off fat ends from bungs before they are cleaned, and knots or warts after they have been cleaned and turned inside out; trim fat from around necks of bladders; trim and skin weasands; skin bungs, taking off the outside skin or membrane. Experience and skill are necessary.

Blowers and tiers of bladders and weasands.—Attach neck of bladder to compressed-air machine, fill bladder with air and tie the neck with cord; attach open end of weasand, one end already being tied, to compressed-air machine, fill the weasand with air and tie the untied end. Experience is necessary but new employees learn to do the work after a very short period of service.

General workers.—Including those who clean and wash casings, weasands, and bladders; who save, wash and clean chitterlings; all-round men; those who wash and clean calf rennets, and over cleaners. They do various kinds of work in this department, being shifted from one kind to another as needed. Experience is necessary.

Laborers.—These are unskilled employees who do general roustabout work. No experience is necessary.

Truckers.—Load and unload trucks with casing products, bringing the products into the department, transferring them from place to place in the department and trucking the finished casings from the casing cleaning room to the chill room. Little or no experience is necessary.

FRESH-BEEF DEPARTMENT.

The data shown under this department are for employees in the industry who take dressed carcasses of cattle, calves, sheep, and lambs as they come from the killing department, look after and care for them in the coolers and chill rooms, see that the chilling is properly done, cut and separate them into the various cuts of meat according to orders to be filled or to the demands of the trade, trim cuts and trimmings of cuts, pack, ice, prepare, or load fresh beef, calf, and sheep products for shipment from the establishment.

Cutting is the most important division of this department, as most of the skilled occupations are found in the cutting room. Practically all other employees in this department are common, unskilled laborers, many of them being shifted from one occupation to another as needed.

Methods of cutting vary according to the kinds or grades of carcasses to be cut, or to the demands of the trade. Carcasses come to the cutting room in halves if cut in the establishments in which they are slaughtered, or in quarters if slaughtered in subsidiary plants. The very large establishments in Chicago have in other cities or localities branch establishments which ship dressed beef, already separated into quarters, to the central Chicago establishment for final cutting. In the main establishment a side of beef, if of good grade and of a quality to meet the demands of the trade, is separated into quarters by cutting across the half carcass between the twelfth and thirteenth ribs from the belly to and through the backbone, leaving 12 ribs in the fore quarter and one in the hind quarter.

The fore quarter is separated into the following cuts: Fore shank, clod, plate, rib, and chuck. The fore shank is the first cut and is made by cutting through the shoulder joint separating the upper fore leg from the shoulder blade and along the upper leg bone to the knee joint, cutting the meat (clod) from that part of the leg bone. The employees who make this cut are called shank droppers. The clod, which is the heavy muscle of the top of the fore leg next to the shoulder, is next cut or pulled from the quarter. The employee who does this operation is called the clod puller. The plate, which consists of the brisket and navel, is next cut by sawing across the 12 ribs, beginning with the twelfth rib, 10 or 12 inches from the backbone, and cutting through to the first rib, the cut passing near the shoulder joint where the shank was dropped from the fore quarter. The remainder of the fore quarter is next separated into the rib of beef and the chuck by cutting between the fourth and fifth ribs to and through the backbone. The rib of beef consists of eight ribs; two ribs of the butt end have the thin part of the shoulder blade included. The chuck consists of the neck and top of the shoulder with four ribs and most all of the shoulder blade.

The hind quarter is separated into two cuts, loin and round, by cutting through the muscle and meat in front of the hind leg from the stifle joint along the leg bone to the hip or socket joint and across the rump to the backbone to a point a few inches from the tail bone. The round consists of the round and rump, but does not include the knuckle, the heavy muscle in front of the hind leg. The loin includes the knuckle when the hind quarter is cut by this method.

Kosher-dressed carcasses are as a rule of very good grade and are cut as described above except that the kosher meat is the first cut made from the half carcass. The kosher meat (shank, clod, shoulder, neck, brisket, and in some localities the navel) consists of the front of the fore quarter. It is separated from the half carcass by cutting across between the fourth and fifth ribs to and through both the backbone and the brisket. In some localities the kosher meat includes all the plate.

Carcasses are separated into the cuts described above because many retailers have greater demands for certain cuts, such as ribs and loins or rounds and chucks, than they have for any other cuts, thereby making it necessary for them to buy special cuts, in addition to whole carcasses, halves, and quarters.

Carcasses of "canners"—that is, old cows—and other animals of poor grade are cut as described above except that hind quarters are separated into rounds, loins, and rumps. The round in this case includes the knuckle but does not include the rump. In the good grade the loin includes the knuckle and the round includes the rump. The hind quarter is separated, first, by cutting along the top part of the round or leg next to the crotch bone or pelvis to the hip joint and from the hip joint across the thick, meaty part of the flesh in front of the leg bone, leaving all the knuckle on the round; second, by cutting the rump from the loin by sawing across the hip and cutting through the meat from the hip joint to the backbone a few inches from the tail bone. This method of cutting the hind quarter makes a smaller loin, making the butt end short, and a larger round. The round in this case consists of three parts—the inside or the top round, the outside or the bottom round, and the knuckle. These three pieces of the round are used in making beef hams or dried beef. All cuts made from canners—old cows—and other carcasses of poor grade are boned; that is, employees called boners take bones from the cuts.

In the large establishments, after the shank has been dropped and the clod pulled, carcasses are separated into cuts by power machines equipped with band saws. In the smaller establishments all the cutting is done by a small force of employees. They are called cutters and do all the cutting and boning required entirely by hand, using knives, meat saws, and cleavers.

Seventy-one of the 83 establishments that furnished data for this report have employees who work regularly in this department; 62 pay employees weekly, 7 pay every 2 weeks, 1 pays monthly, and 1 semimonthly. In tabulating the data, divisions 2 to 7 are combined because of the relative unimportance of the fresh-beef department in those divisions.

The occupations shown in this department are described below. Except that meat runners or order men must be able to read and make up orders, no educational qualifications are necessary in any of these occupations.

Ribbers.—Separate halves of carcasses into quarters by cutting between the twelfth and thirteenth ribs from near the bottom of the belly to the backbone or vertebræ. The cut should be made midway between the ribs, and requires an experienced and skillful employee.

Laborers.—Shove carcasses on overhead rails from coolers to the cutting room or from cars on tracks in yards of establishments to the cutting room; hang meat hooks on rails; pick up hooks; saw through the backbone at the point between the twelfth and thirteenth ribs where the ribber cut; cut the small part of the belly left uncut by the ribber, thereby completely severing the fore quarter from the hind quarter, cut gambs, dropping hind quarters from overhead rails to shoulders of luggers; chop flanks from the hind quarters by chopping through the rib that was left on the hind quarter; pull kidney or kidney fat out of hind quarters, and do other miscellaneous, unskilled, roustabout work in and about the department.

Luggers and lifters.—Carry quarters of meat from rails to cutting tables or blocks, or to cutting machines. Strength and some skill necessary. Little or no experience needed.

Sawyers, power.—Operate power machines used in separating quarters into cuts. The operator shoves the fore quarter through the machine after the shank has been dropped and the clod pulled, and cuts the plate from the rib and chuck, then shoves the remainder through, separating it into the rib and chuck, the cut being made between the fourth and fifth ribs or separates the hind quarter into cuts by shoving it through the saw, separating the round from the loin by one of the two methods described above. Experience and skill necessary.

Ham facers, strippers, and markers.—The ham facer and marker cuts the skin or fell from the outside surface of the round of beef and marks the knuckle for the ham strippers by cutting from the stifle joint to the butt end of the round. This mark or cut indicates the division between the inside (top) and the outside (bottom) of the round. Strippers hang the round of beef to a post, shank end of the round up, and cut or strip the knuckle, outside and inside, from the round, leaving the leg bone or shank with the shank meat on it. Experience and skill necessary.

Boners.—Take bones from various cuts of meat. In large establishments the cutting-room force is so arranged that each employee performs a specific or special operation; that is, takes bones from plates, ribs, chucks, rumps, loins, or butts of loins, drops shanks or pulls clods or tenderloins, or breaks butts. In small establishments employees called boners remove the bones from all cuts and therefore are general boners. Plate boners take ribs and breast-bones from plates. Chuck boners take the neck bones, ribs, part of the back-bone or vertebræ, and shoulder blade from chucks. Rib boners take ribs and vertebræ or backbone and the small part of the shoulder blade from the rib of beef. The outside membrane or the outer surface is sometimes also removed from the rib of beef. Shank boners cut the shank meat from the shanks. Rump boners take out the part of the hip bone that is left in the rump when the cut is made. Sometimes the rump boners also take out the tail bone or part of the vertebræ that is left in the rump. Tenderloin pullers cut or trim out the tenderloin which is inside the loin of beef and extends from the hip or crotch to near the thirteenth rib. It lies just inside the back-bone. The butt breakers separate the loin into two parts by cutting through the loin from top to bottom, breaking the joint in the vertebræ at a point sometimes called the fox joint. This leaves all the hip bone that is usually left in a loin of beef in the butt end of the loin and leaves the small end of the loin of beef (the part of the loin from which the cut commonly known as the porterhouse steak is cut) with only part of the backbone in it. Butt boners take the hip bone and backbone out of the butt end of the loin.

Strip boners strip the meat from the backbone. In some establishments they take all the bones out of the whole loin of beef, while in others one employee or group of employees takes the hip bone and backbone out of the butt end of the loin and another takes the backbone out of the small end. The employee who takes the bone out of the small end is called a "stripper." These operations require skill, experience, and speed.

Trimmers.—Trim cuts of meat after the bones have been removed; trim from bones small particles of meat that were left on them by the boners, or trim trimmings of meats. These operations are knife jobs and require skill and experience.

Utility men, handy men, spellers, assistant foremen, and straw bosses.—General, all-round, handy men who are efficient and fill in wherever needed, and who do the work of other employees who are temporarily off duty. Experience and skill necessary.

Cutters and general butchers.—These employees are, as a rule, found in small establishments and do all the cutting and boning of cuts required, and are efficient, skilled, and experienced employees.

Graders.—Grade cuts of meat by quality and weight. Experience necessary.

Packers, meat runners, order men, and stowers.—Pack fresh beef, calf, and sheep products, select and make up orders, and stow and pack meats in cars for shipment. Experience necessary.

Truckers.—Load and unload trucks and truck supplies into and about and out of the department. Some experience necessary.

Freezer and temperature men.—These employees work in the freezers, taking fresh cuts of meat in there to be frozen and bringing them out after they have been frozen. Experience is necessary to be able to work in freezing temperature as these employees do.

Calf skinners.—Skin calves in the coolers. Calves are frequently dressed with the skins on in the killing department and sent in that condition to the coolers. This work is done in some establishments by some of the skilled sheep and calf butchers. Skill and experience necessary.

Trimmers of trimmings.—These workers are females. They separate the lean meat from the fat in the trimmings left over from the various cuts of meat.

FRESH-PORK DEPARTMENT.

The data shown under this department are for those employees (except those who work at both a killing and a cutting occupation who are shown under the "Hog-killing department") who take dressed carcasses as they come from the hog-killing department, look after and care for the carcasses in the chill rooms, see that the chilling is properly done, separate them into the various cuts (hams, shoulders, pork loins, bellies, fatbacks, shoulder butts, and "picnics" or "calas," etc.), trim cuts, trim trimmings of cuts, separating the fat from the lean, or pack, ice, prepare, and load fresh-pork products for shipment from establishments. Methods of cutting hams, shoulders, bellies, etc., are very numerous, varying according to the demands of the trade, both domestic and foreign.

Hams, shoulders, bellies, fatbacks, and "picnics" or "calas" are sent to the cured-meat department to be cured; the fat trimmed from trimmings is sent to lard rooms to be used in making lard, and the lean trimmed from trimmings is sent to the sausage department to be used in making sausage.

Data are shown in this department for 66 establishments that pay employees weekly, and 7 that pay every 2 weeks. In 3 of the establishments that pay weekly hogs are slaughtered by the cattle-killing gang, but are cut and trimmed by another gang. One establishment that pays weekly and has its hogs slaughtered in another plant has a regular cutting gang. Data for these gangs are included under this department.

The occupations shown in this department are described below. Except that counters must be able to keep a record of carcasses brought into and sent out of the coolers and that small-order men must be able to read orders, there are no educational requirements in any of these occupations.

Laborers.—This term includes shovers, spacers, temperature men, counters, cutters-down, block tenders, sawyers-off of feet, wrappers, machine tenders, and skin bundlers. Shovers shove hogs on rails into and out of chill rooms. Spacers space carcasses in coolers by keeping them in straight lines on rails a certain and regular distance apart. Temperature men look after the temperature of the chill rooms, keeping it as nearly to the required temperature as possible. Counters count and make record of carcasses as they are shoved into and out of the chill rooms. Cutters-down cut the gamb or hamstrings, dropping half of the carcass from the rail running from the chill room to the cutting room to a bench or moving table in the cutting room. Block tenders shove part of the carcass from the table to the block used by the shoulder chopper and after the shoulder has been separated from the middling, take shoulder and middling from the block, shoving the shoulder to the shoulder sawyer and the middling to the scribe sawyer. Sawyers-off of feet operate small band saws used in sawing feet from shoulders and hams. Wrappers wrap paper around cuts of meat. Machine tenders operate fatting machines which remove fat from hog skins or rinds. Skin bundlers bunch or bundle small pieces of hog skins or rinds and tie the bunches. Little or no experience is necessary for this work.

Ham and shoulder sawyers.—Ham sawyers saw through the hip bone at the point where the ham was marked to be cut from the half carcass. The sawing is done by a small meat hand saw. Shoulder sawyers operate power machines equipped with a band saw. They shove the whole shoulder to the saw, holding it so that the saw cuts through and separates the shoulder into parts—the top and bottom, or butts, and “picnics” or “calas.” Considerable skill and experience is required for this work.

Ham cutters-off.—Cut the ham from the half carcass by using a knife and cutting down through the half carcass at the point where the ham sawyer sawed through the back bone or vertebræ. Experience necessary.

Ham trimmers.—Trim hams as required according to the method of cutting, cutting off the fat around the edges, face, and butt of the ham, which gives it a smooth, well-rounded appearance. This is one of the highly skilled occupations and requires skill, experience, and speed.

Ham boners.—Cut out the part of the pelvis or hip bone that is left in hams when they are cut from the carcass, cutting to the hip or socket joint, cut around the socket joint, use a small curved instrument to push the meat from around the leg bone from the hip joint to the stifle joint, cut through the stifle joint and remove the upper part of the leg bone, cut around the bone from the stifle joint to the point where the foot was cut from the ham and take out the lower part of the leg bone, skin the ham, leaving as little fat as possible on the skin, carefully trim the fat off of the skinned ham, wrap the skin around the ham and tie the skin and ham securely with a cord. The fat having been removed, the ham is now almost entirely lean and ready for cooking. This operation requires skill, speed, and experience.

Choppers-off, shoulders and ribs.—Shoulder chopper uses a long, heavy, sharp cleaver, and cuts or chops entirely through one-half of the carcass immediately back of the shoulder, about the fourth rib, cutting through the ribs, vertebræ or backbone, and part of the shoulder blade, severing the shoulder from the middling. This is a very important occupation which requires strength, skill, and accuracy, and commands a good wage. Rib choppers chop or cut the neck bones or ribs, and lift or take them out of the shoulder. Experience necessary.

Shoulder trimmers.—Trim shoulders, cutting off all irregular pieces of meat in order to give the shoulder a smooth, even, well-rounded appearance. This is very important especially when "picnics" or "calas" are being trimmed to give them the appearance of small hams. Experience, speed, and skill necessary.

Shoulder boners.—Remove the bones from the shoulder. This operation requires skill and experience.

Butt pullers.—Take the top or butt end of the shoulder as it is after the whole shoulder has been separated by the shoulder sawyer into the butt and "picnic," and pull the lean inside part of the meat out of the butt. This is done with a curved knife. The cut left after the butt has been pulled is called the shoulder plate. Skill and experience necessary.

Scribe sawyers.—Saw across the ribs inside the middling, from the point where the shoulder was chopped off to the cut made where the ham was cut off, cutting entirely through the ribs. This cut is made about 8 inches from the backbone. Experience is necessary.

Loin pullers.—Pull or cut the pork loin out of the middling, using a long two-handled knife similar to a drawing knife. The pork loin extends from the point where the ham was cut off to the point where the shoulder was chopped off and from the point where the scribe sawyer sawed across the ribs to the top of the back, and includes the ribs, part of the backbone, and all the lean meat in the upper part of the middling. This operation requires skill and experience.

Ribbers.—Cut the ribs from the bellies or the lower part of the middling. Bacon is made from bellies. Experience necessary.

Trimmers, and ham and shoulder skinners.—Trim all cuts of meat other than hams and shoulders, such as bellies, loins, butts, etc., and remove the skins from hams and shoulders. These occupations are knife jobs of more or less importance and require skill and experience.

Trimmers of trimmings.—Trim the ham, shoulder, belly, and all other fresh-pork trimmings; that is, separate the lean from the fat and remove the hog skins or rinds from the trimmings. Experience necessary.

Utility men, handy men, all-round men, assistant foremen, and straw bosses.—All-round, efficient, skilled, and experienced employees who are able to fill in where needed or to take the place of skilled employees who are temporarily absent from duty.

Small-order men.—Make up small orders, selecting the cuts by grades and arrange them for shipment. Experience necessary.

Packers, nailers, and car stowers.—Pack fresh-pork cuts and products in containers, boxes, barrels, etc., fastening containers with nails, and load and stow them in cars for shipment from establishments. Experience and skill necessary.

Truckers.—Truck supplies into and about the department, and meats from it for shipment. In most establishments truckers also load and unload trucks. Little or no experience necessary.

LARD AND OLEO OIL DEPARTMENT.

Under this department is a combination of employees of the lard department and the oleo oil department. The combination was made because the occupations are of almost the same character. One force renders or reduces hog fat to lard and the other melts or reduces beef fat to oleo oil. Another reason for the combination is that the number of employees in each force is not of sufficient importance to show separately.

The supplies or fats come to this department from the hog-killing department, the fresh-pork cutting and trimming rooms, the beef-killing department, the fresh-beef cutting and trimming rooms, and from the offal and casing departments.

The hog fat is usually brought thoroughly chilled before it is sent to the lard or rendering rooms. It is hashed, fed to the melting or rendering kettles, melted, settled, clarified, bleached when off color, and made into lard. The lard is drawn off into pails, cans, tierces, barrels, or tanks.

Beef fat usually comes to the oleo oil house or room from the killing floors, casing rooms, offal rooms, and the cutting and trimming rooms, and while it has been washed and cleaned it is not so thoroughly chilled as it should be before it is hashed. It is thrown or forked into vats of cold water, again washed, sorted, or graded, and partly chilled. It passes from the cooling vats to the chilling vats (vats of ice water, or vats of water chilled by pipes or coils filled with brine), and through them to the hasher. The hasher is a machine which chops the fat into small particles, and empties it into a conveyor which carries it from the hasher to the melting kettle. The temperature at which fat is melted depends entirely upon the grade of fat. Number 1, or the very best grade, is melted at a temperature from 152° to 155° F.; number 2, at 155°; number 3, at 160°; yellow, at 160°; mutton fat, at 165°. The melted beef fat is settled and siphoned into a clarifying kettle and is there settled and skimmed. It is now oleo stock from which oleo oil and beef stearin are made. It is drawn from the settling kettle into seeding trucks and trucked to the seeding rooms and kept there at a temperature of approximately 90° until it is granulated and in condition to be pressed and made into oleo oil and stearin. It is stirred or agitated while in the seeding or cooling room in order that the cooling may be uniform. It is trucked from the seeding room to the press room and pressed by a force of employees who are called wheelmen because they work at a revolving table. The force or gang of wheelmen or press men consists of one man who spreads the cloths on the revolving table; one who handles the stock in the seeder truck, shoving it to the one who takes it from the truck and fills the cloths on the table; one who folds the cloths after the stock has been placed on them; one who places the filled and folded cloths on the press; one who drops steel press plates on each layer of cloths—all working on or about the revolving table or wheel or at the press. When the press is filled the power is turned on and the oleo oil is pressed from the stock. The oil runs into tanks from which it is drawn into barrels or tierces and stored. The oil is used in making butterine; that is, a substitute for butter. The pressing of the oil from the stock leaves a product in the cloths which is called stearin. Stearin is frequently used in making compound lard by combining it with cottonseed oil.

Lard is of three kinds—neutral, prime steam, and compound. Neutral lard is made from leaf lard and fatback and is reduced in open kettles at about 130° F. Prime steam lard is made from fat trimmings and intestinal fats and is rendered in a closed kettle or tank at 240° F. As it is frequently off color it is bleached with fuller's earth or clay, which is removed from it by pumping through filter presses. Compound lard is a substitute lard made from refined cottonseed oil and oleo or beef stearin, with little or no lard in the mixture. It is always bleached and pumped through filter presses.

There are very few skilled occupations in this department. Almost all employees are unskilled and they are shown in this tabulation as laborers. Many of them are shifted from one kind of work to another, and in some establishments they are called general workers or roustabouts. No educational qualifications are necessary in any of the occupations.

Seventy-six establishments have employees who work in lard and oleo oil rooms or houses. Sixty-eight of these pay employees weekly, 7 pay every 2 weeks, and 1 pays semimonthly. Seven do not make any lard or oleo oil.

The occupations found in this department are described as follows:

Laborers.—Load and unload trucks, push or shove trucks, wash seeding trucks, varnish tierces, pass empties to fillers, roll tierces, pile tierces, put covers on cans, pack shavings between cans, roll barrels, take away and pile tierces and barrels, take away pails, scrape seeding trucks, clean up floors. These employees are unskilled and in many establishments are shifted from one kind of work to another as needed. No experience necessary.

Melters.—Also called kettlemen, cookers, settlers, clarifiers, skimmers, tank men, and oleo makers. These employees look after the fat while in the kettles, see that the melting or cooking is properly done, and that the melted fat is clarified, settled, and skimmed. Experience necessary.

Roller men.—Look after or operate the cooler roller machinery. The roller is filled with brine and as it turns comes in contact with and cools lard which runs into a curved basin or shallow tank at the bottom of the roller machinery. Experience is necessary.

Fillers.—Draw the lard from kettles or tanks into pails, buckets, tierces, and barrels. This is done by opening and closing valves or spigots. No experience necessary.

Pumpers and refiners.—Operate machinery that pumps lard from tanks into vats or through the filter presses. They pump lard from tanks to the bleaching-room tanks, mix the necessary amount of fuller's clay or earth with it to bleach it, and pump it through filter presses. The presses have steel plates with heavy layers of canvas between the plates. As the lard is forced through the canvas by the pump the canvas catches and removes the earth from the lard. Experience and skill necessary.

Utility men.—Also called handy men, straw bosses, and assistant foremen. General all-round handy men who fill in wherever needed. These employees are efficient and skilled and do the highest grade of work in this department, being shifted from one kind of work to another as needed. Experience necessary.

Labelers.—Paste labels on pails, cans, buckets, etc. Light work. No experience necessary.

Pressmen or wheelmen.—Press oil from lard or from oleo stock. Spread cloths on a revolving table, fill cloths with lard or oleo stock, fold the four sides or edges of the cloths over the lard or stock, place the filled and folded cloths in or on the press, drop steel press plates on each layer of three or four cloths, repeating the operations until the press is built or filled, and then turn on the power to operate the press. The oil runs through the cloths and from the press into tanks, leaving the stearin in the cloths. After the oil has been pressed from the lard or stock, the press is pulled down and the stearin is shaken out of the cloths. These employees are called wheelmen because they work at a revolving table. Experience necessary.

Can washers, tub liners, fillers, and labelers.—These occupations include all the female workers employed in the lard and oleo department. These workers wash the cans, line and fill tubs, and paste on labels.

SAUSAGE DEPARTMENT.

Supplies used in this department are fresh-beef trimmings which come from the fresh-beef cutting or chill rooms, hearts, head meat, and gilet or weasand meat from the beef cellars or freezers, fresh lean pork trimmings from the fresh-pork cutting or chill rooms, and casings from the casing department chill rooms.

The meat used in making sausage is not, in its original condition, so palatable as steaks, roasts and chops, but it is wholesome. By chopping, curing, grinding, mixing, and spicing, it becomes very palatable, and is also an economical article of food.

Large and important establishments usually have two gangs or crews of sausage makers. One makes domestic sausage, which is cooked and smoked and requires only a few days to make; and the other makes dry-cured or summer sausage, which is not cooked and requires several months to make. Each has many different varieties and grades. Data shown for this department are for both gangs combined, as the operations are almost the same.

Practically all employees in the sausage department are unskilled. It requires a very short period of service for new employees to become efficient workers in this department. There are no educational requirements in these occupations.

The occupations in this department are described as follows:

Truckers and forkers.—Truck meat and casings into and about the sausage department and sausage from the department for shipment, and fork meat from trucks to chopping and grinding machines or to curing shelves. Little or no experience necessary.

Cutters.—Also called choppers, grinders, mixers, curers, feeders, and machine tenders. Operate the various kinds of machines used in chopping and grinding sausage meat, feed the machines, and mix the curing ingredients and spices with the meat as it is being chopped and ground. Experience necessary.

Casing workers.—Including washers, turners, re-turners, measurers, cutters, tiers, and fatters. Casings, although washed and cleaned thoroughly in the casing department, are again washed, turned, and inspected before they are used in the sausage department, re-turned, measured, and cut to the length required and one end tied with cord. Fatters cut or trim fat from hog bungs. Experience is necessary for this work, but new employees learn to do it efficiently after a few days' experience.

Stuffers.—Operate compressed-air stuffing machines. The stuffer fills the machine with meat, attaches the open end of the casing to a tube on the machine, turns on power by turning a small crank, turns off power when the casing is full, and drops the filled casing on a table at which linkers, tiers, and hangers work. Experience necessary.

Linkers, twisters, tiers, and hangers.—Take the filled casing or sausage from the table, tie the open end of the casing with cord and twist or turn it, thereby making links; hang sausage on truck or trees. It must not be construed that employees who are called "linkers" do no other work, as a machine crew consisting of a stuffer, linkers or tiers, and hangers does not make link sausage continuously. The crew stuffs many different kinds of sausage. Experience is necessary for this work, but new employees learn to do it well after a short period of experience.

Ropers.—Including wrappers and tiers. Wrap sausage with cords—that is, loop cord around the stuffed sausage. This is a dry-cured or summer sausage occupation. The wrapping is done after the sausage has been cured. The cord is wrapped or tied around the curved surface of the sausage, each wrap of the cord being a short distance apart. Experience and speed necessary.

Laborers.—Including roustabouts, ham-cylinder washers, cleaners-up, ham pressers, hangers, cooks' helpers, smokers' helpers, and truckers of cages or bikes. They are the employees who, as a rule, do the various kinds of unskilled labor in and about the sausage department.

Cookers.—Put sausage and hams into cooking vats or ovens; keep the water and steam in the vats and ovens at the required temperature and cook the sausage and hams the required time. Skill and experience necessary.

Smokers.—Keep up the fires in the smokehouse, making the required amount of smoke, and see that the sausage and meats are properly smoked. Experience necessary.

Packers, male.—Including scalers and packers, shippers, and nailers. Weigh and pack sausage in containers for shipment. Experience necessary.

Packers, female.—Including wrappers, inspectors, labelers, taggers, tiers, box makers, and packers' helpers. Wrap sausage in paper, tie packages, attach labels and tags to packages, set up paper boxes or cartons to be used in packing sausage, and assist packers by passing sausage to them, and inspect wrapping, labeling, tagging, and tying of packages prepared for shipment. Experience necessary, but new employees learn to do the work well after a few days' experience.

General workers, female.—Do general work in the sausage department, such as washing pans, peeling onions, etc. Little or no experience necessary.

Utility men.—Called also assistant foremen, straw bosses, subforemen, handy men, small-order men, and all-round men. These employees are of a higher grade of skill than the usual run of sausage workers and are shifted as needed to the various kinds of the higher grade work in the sausage department. Experience necessary.

CURED-MEAT DEPARTMENT.

The supplies or meats come to this department from the fresh-pork and fresh-beef departments, and consist principally of hog hams, shoulders, bellies, fatbacks, "picnics" or "calas" (i. e., shoulders with the butt ends cut off—see "Fresh-pork department"), plates (the fat outside top of the shoulder or the piece of the butt end remaining after the lean inside of the butt has been pulled), jowls, pork loins, and beef hams (inside or top of the round, outside or bottom of the round and the knuckle).

The cuts of meat enumerated above are cured either by the dry-salt or sweet-pickle method of curing meat. The cure by each method begins with pumping or injecting pickle or cure into meat around bones and into joints. This is done with a small hand pump, small hose, and hollow needle. The needle is inserted into the meat where the pickle or cure is most needed. The pickle is forced through the hose and needle into the meat by operating the pump. The pickle hastens the cure and lessens danger of the loss of meat by souring while in the process of cure. The cure is continued by putting meat down in salt; that is, a layer of salt is put down on the floor or meat racks, followed by a layer of meat with salt over each piece and layer, the process being continued until the pile of meat is as high as desired. This is the dry-salt method. In the sweet-pickle method the cure is continued by packing meat into vats or tierces. When the vats or tierces are filled, sweet pickle is poured over the meat until it is completely submerged. During the process of cure, or while the meat is down in salt or in sweet pickle, it is overhauled at regular intervals to help the cure and to prevent spoiling or souring. After the meat has been down in salt or pickle for the required time, it is taken out of the salt or pickle and transferred to the smoke-house, where the cure is completed by smoking.

Shoulder clods, boned beef plates, and rumps are corned or cured by packing in salt pickle or brine. Uncooked pigtails, pig snouts, lamb tongues, ox lips, or beef mouths are also cured by this method. Cooked pigs' feet and snouts, tripe, and tongues are packed in vinegar pickle.

The working conditions in this department are not so good as in other departments because the cure takes place in the lower rooms or cellars of establishments. The rooms are as a rule very damp, cold, not well lighted, or ventilated.

There are very few skilled employees in this department. An unusually large per cent of the employees are unskilled and are therefore shown in this tabulation as laborers. Most of the occupations other than laborers require very little skill. These occupations can be filled by new employees after a very short period of experience. Except that order men must be able to read and fill orders, no educational qualifications are necessary.

Seventy-eight of the 83 establishments that furnished data for this report have cured-meat departments. Sixty-nine pay employees weekly, 7 pay every 2 weeks, 1 pays semimonthly, and 1 pays monthly. Five establishments do not cure any meat.

The occupations found in this department are here described.

Graders.—Also called sorters, sizers, average men, spotters, inspectors, and chute men. Receive the cuts of meat as they come into this department and grade or sort them according to size and quality; inspect meat while in process of cure to see that the cure is being made and to detect bruises, spots, or bone sour, etc. Experience is necessary.

Laborers.—Including graders' helpers, pickle makers' helpers, inspectors' helpers, sorters' helpers, pumpers' helpers, smokers' helpers, ham passers, meat passers, passers to pumpers, passers to salters, passers to packers, takers from pumpers, haulers to vats, meat carriers, meat tossers, meat wipers, meat hangers, meat scrapers, meat stringers, bacon stringers, ham stringers, sewers, tiers, meat soakers, meat washers, roustabouts, vat washers, truck washers, and general workers. These employees do the various kinds of unskilled work in and about this department. Little or no experience is necessary for this work. In many establishments this class of labor is shifted from one place or kind of work to another as needed.

Packers.—Including packers of beef, barrel pork, bellies, briskets, pig rinds, and smoked meat, vat men, sweet-pickle packers, wrappers, burlap sackers, car stowers, car loaders, and dippers. These employees pack meat in vats or tierces or put it down in dry salt and also pack and wrap meat for shipment from the establishments.

The two occupations or operations of packing meat for cure and packing it for shipment were combined because it was impossible to separate them, as many establishments carried them on their pay rolls as "packers" without classification. Experience necessary.

Overhaulers.—Also called meat pullers and turners. These employees overhaul the meat while being cured by pulling it out of vats, shifting it from one vat to another, by rolling tierces, or by taking meat up out of salt. Experience necessary.

Picklers.—Including pickle men, pickle makers, pumpers, and curers. These employees make, according to formula, the pickle used in curing meats, pump pickle into meat, or fill vats and tierces with sweet pickle. In some establishments one man or employee does the pickle making and pumping, and also fills the vats and tierces with the pickle. Experience is necessary.

Rubbers, salters, and pilers.—Pile meats in layers and sprinkle salt on each piece and layer of meat. Experience necessary.

Smokers.—Look after the smokehouse and the meats in the smokehouse and see that the smoking is properly done. Experience necessary.

Butchers, trimmers, and knife men.—Do all the knife work required in this department—the trimming and cutting of meats. Experience and skill necessary.

Truckers.—Truck meat and salt into the department and truck the meats about and out of the departments. Little or no experience necessary.

Utility men.—Called also assistant butchers, straw bosses, assistant foremen, small-order men. These employees do general work of the highest grade in this department, filling in whenever and wherever needed. They are shifted from one kind of work to another. Experience and skill necessary.

Female employees.—All female employees in this department are shown in one group because the number employed in any one kind of work is too small to show separately. They rub borax on meat, clean meat, make sacks for meat, make canvas covers for meat, operate sewing machines, put meat into sacks or bags, wrap and tie hams, wrap and tie bacon, and paste labels on boxes and packages prepared for shipment from the establishment. Experience necessary.

CANNING DEPARTMENT.

Meat canning to any considerable extent is done by relatively few slaughtering and meat-packing establishments. In the Chicago district (division 1) only four of the nine plants reported have canning departments, but each of the four has a very large production, and the four have been tabulated as a separate group.

In the remaining six divisions only 11 of the 74 plants reported do any canning at all, and 5 of those 11 have a very small production. These 11 canning departments, representing districts 2 to 7, have been combined and tabulated as a second group.

The meat products of these canning departments are almost without number, and no attempt is made here to catalogue them or to enumerate the operations performed in preparing them. The occupations which have been tabulated are, rather, general ones and do not purport specifically to describe meat canning in all its ramifications. However, practically all the work done in canning the standard products, such as corned beef, sliced dried beef and bacon, tongues, and sausage, readily finds a place in one or the other of these general occupations.

Comparatively so little time is given to operating the machines used in preparing some of the special products or to some particular stage of such work that the few employees so engaged have been classed as "general workers," unless the work on which they were engaged was so similar to that of some one of the general occupations tabulated that they could be combined with employees in such occupation without distorting it.

The heads of these departments and the chief foremen are skilled and experienced men to whom large salaries are paid, but the greater part of the ordinary canning work can be done satisfactorily by men or girls after a short period of training. New and inexperienced employees usually are paid the minimum time rate while learning. On piecework jobs an employee who can not earn a reasonable amount after a few weeks' experience is given less exacting work with lower earnings or dropped altogether, as the case may warrant. Practically all canning work, especially in the larger plants and those divisions in which women are employed, is done under the best conditions possible. A good part of the work of women is done while seated. Except that cookers and steam tenders must be able to read steam gauges, and that weighers must know how to read scales, no educational qualifications are necessary in the occupations in this department.

Brief descriptions of the work done by meat-canning employees in the 20 occupations tabulated follow:

Cookers.—Prepare meat for canning, regulate the quantity and temperature of water in the cooking vats, the temperature of ovens, and the length of cooking. In small plants they may regulate steam also or do other work, such as forking meat out of vats, for example, which in large plants would be done by separate gangs. Experience and a certain aptitude are required, but the work is not heavy or otherwise especially arduous.

Steam tenders.—Regulate temperature of the retorts in which meats after canning are subjected to further cooking, watch steam gauges, and regulate length of the "process." In large plants the term includes also employees who regulate steam in the cook room. Considerable experience is required, although the work is done under the constant supervision of the retort department foreman, as the success of the product depends on proper "processing."

Washers of empty cans.—Feed machine which washes inside of cans preparatory to their being filled, or wash cans and glass jars by hand. Little experience or skill is required, and in many plants the work is done by "general workers" or laborers and not specified on the pay roll.

Passers and pilers, cans.—Put cans in place for either hand or machine fillers, remove and set for capping, feed and take from vacuum vent-soldering machine, arrange right side up on conveyors for washing and painting machines, stack up to dry after painting, put in place for either hand or machine labeling and wrapping, pile in store-room or shipping room, and at various stages of the canning operation batch cans for inspectors. This is all unskilled work, and for the most part requires little experience.

Trimmers, meat (by hand).—Trim fat, sinews, skin, gristle, bruises, or blood clots from corned beef; cut out palate, pieces of gullet, glands, loose skin, or peel outer skin from tongues; trim fat, pieces of bone, gristle, or any rough, hard surfaces that might interfere with the operation of the slicing machines, from dried beef ("insides," "outsides," and "knuckles"), etc. The trimming of corned beef and tongues requires some skill in the use of the knife and rapidity of motion mainly, but the trimming of dried beef requires, in addition, strength and calloused hands. All trimmers need keen sight and well-developed powers of observation, as they must closely inspect the meats as they work.

Machine tenders (preparing and stuffing meat into cans).—The machines include rotary trimming machines, which remove thick skin and gristle from corned beef and dried beef; bacon and dried-beef slicing machines, machines cutting linked sausage to proper lengths for stuffing, and sorting the lengths; Hamburg steak, hash, and veal-loaf mixing machines, and machines stuffing corned beef, Hamburg steak, hash, or veal loaf into cans. Tending or assisting in the operation of these machines requires experience and care rather than special skill. Some of the large concerns have installed stuffing machines which have a capacity of 20,000 cans of corned beef per 10 hours, the operators feeding empty cans to the machine with one hand and pushing away filled cans with the other, an occupation requiring unwavering attention and great dexterity. Many of the other machines, however, work automatically, careful observation being necessary only when starting or stopping the machine.

Stuffers (meat into cans, by hand).—Canning beef, pork, or lamb tongues, and sausage, is done by hand and usually by females. A sufficient quantity of tongue for the size of the can to be filled is weighed and placed before the stuffer, who, using a funnel and pestle, stuffs it into a can. In sausage stuffing, linked sausage which has been cut into exact lengths is heaped before the stuffer, who holds a can with one hand while with the other with unerring accuracy and great speed she grabs the proper number of lengths and stuffs them upright into the can. The work, especially sausage stuffing, requires some skill, but mainly experience and dexterity.

Packers (sliced bacon and chipped dried beef, in cans, glass jars, or cartons, by hand).—The exact amount of bacon or beef for each jar or carton is weighed in a bowl and placed before the packer. In packing jars the sides are lined with the larger pieces, the ends of which are folded over the top after the smaller pieces have been filled in. In packing cartons the pieces are laid in flat and smooth with paper between the layers. Some packers of the highest grade of bacon use tweezers and do not touch the product with their fingers.

In packing round cans with chipped beef much less precision is required. In some plants the proper amount for each can is placed before the packer, while in others the packer must scale the filled can for the exact weight. Disks of parchment paper are placed at bottom and top of each can.

Experience is the main requisite for this work, which is not difficult, and in big establishments, in particular, is done under most agreeable conditions, the packers being seated and the light and ventilation being good.

Weighers (filled cans).—Girls scale the filled can and either add to the contents or remove a sufficient amount to make the weights exact. The work requires speed and accuracy.

Wipers (filled cans).—Wipe cans, especially cap grooves, top, and inside of rim, after filling, so that cap will fit closely. Usually done by hand but the work sometimes is done by a mechanical brushing device. The work requires little skill or experience.

Cap setters.—Lay caps in place on top of filled cans ready for the capper to solder, or for the crimping machine to turn flange and crimp to the can. The work requires little skill or experience.

Cappers.—Complete the closing of cans after filling, using various devices, such as:

1. Glass-jar capping machine. The operator puts jars with caps laid on in box of machine, closes cover, presses foot lever, thereby creating a vacuum and turning down and crimping flange tight under rim of jar; opens machine, and removes jars.

2. Crimping machine. After can with cap set on has been placed in the machine the operator presses with one foot a lever and the machine turns down the flange of the cap crimping it fast under the rim of the can.

3. Floater conveyor. The operator tends conveyor which carries small filled cans from the crimping machine through a bath of thin liquid solder, keeping the cans right side up.

4. Spindle capping machine. After cans with caps set on have been placed under the spindles, which are in groups of five or six, the operator clamps the spindles down on the caps and starts the machine. Each can revolves under its spindle and as the machine revolves is brought in turn before the operator, who with a stick of solder in one hand and a hot soldering iron in the other completes the capping by soldering the cap on.

5. Vacuum machine. After cans with caps soldered on are fed onto conveyor which carries them into the circular box of the machine until it is full, the operator fastens down cover, pulls a lever creating a vacuum, turns with his left hand a wheel slowly moving the cans and as each can passes under a glass section of the cover, with his right hand touches with a hot iron a drop of solder which has been placed on the cap, melting it over the vent hole. The machine is then opened and the cans carried out by the conveyor on the side opposite that by which they entered.

6. Sanitary machine. Cans of cut linked sausage are fed onto conveyor which carries them to the steam exhaust box of the machine, and after passing to and fro for a few minutes they are expelled and carried on conveyor to capping machine. The caps are fed automatically and are crimped to the cans, which then pass through another steam bath. The machine men control the steam and the can feeder and expeller, keep the cap cylinder filled, and control the crimping device.

The work connected with operating any of these devices is comparatively simple, and experience and care are required in varying degrees. Many of the machines are operated by girls.

Washing-and-painting-machine tenders.—Wash and paint filled cans before labeling and wrapping. Helpers, passers, and pilers feed cans onto a conveyor which carries them through the steam and lye bath of the washing machine and then so place them on another conveyor that when carried between the parallel brushes of the painting machine both ends are coated. The machine tenders watch and control all the operations, and keep the machine in order and supplied with proper quantities of steam, caustic soda, and paint. The work requires mechanical ability and good judgment.

Painters (can, by hand).—Paint such cans as require more painting than the machine would give them or which are too large for it.

The cans are held in one gloved hand while they are painted by the other. The work is somewhat disagreeable and exhausting, owing to the odor and speed, but is usually done by girls.

Labelers and wrappers.—Paste labels on filled cans or cartons, and wrap these containers in printed paper covers preparatory to shipping. Largely rapid handwork and done by girls, a few men being employed in operating some of the labeling and wrapping machines. The handwork is quickly learned and the machines are simple in operation.

Packers.—Pack cans, jars, or cartons in boxes for shipping, including nailing and strapping the boxes. Comparatively easy work, requiring but little experience except in strapping the boxes, which requires more judgment and is paid a higher rate than regular packing.

General workers.—In every canning department there are large numbers of utility workers, that is, men and girls who are changed from one occupation to another as the product changes or as conditions necessitate. This may happen any number of times in one day. Many of these employees are skilled workers who can do any kind of canning work, but a large number of the females are relatively new and unskilled employees, while most of the men are slightly above the grade of common laborers.

Inspectors.—The work of the canning department is carefully inspected at every stage, beginning with the cooking and trimming of meats and ending with the packed boxes ready for shipment, covering the washing and wiping of empty cans, the stuffing or packing of meats in cans, jars, or cartons, the weighing of the filled cans, the crimping and soldering of caps, the soldering of vents, and filled-can washing, painting, labeling, wrapping, and packing. Much of the inspecting is done by girls, but the final inspection of the capping and vent soldering usually is made by experienced men who are responsible for the success of the finished product. Experience necessary.

Truckers.—Employed all through the department trucking meats, empty cans, filled cans, boxes, etc. Little or no experience necessary.

Laborers.—In some establishments employees so designated include some men who possibly might have been more definitely classed, but an effort has been made to separate all general workers so that by far the greater part of these employees are common laborers. No experience necessary.
