WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LEGISLATION OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA, 1919.

INTRODUCTION.

The Fourth Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor, issued in 1893 under the title of "Compulsory Insurance in Germany," was the first report published in this country devoted to the subject of workmen's insurance.¹ At that time compensation for industrial accidents had been established by law in two countries only, Germany in 1884, and Austria in 1887; the third country—Norway—not following until 1894. In the other countries discussed in the appendix of this early report the workmen's compensation movement had not passed beyond the stage of Government commissions and legislative discussion.

Since the publication of this first report, the development of the legislation providing for workmen's compensation for industrial accidents in Europe and throughout the world has been extremely rapid; in fact, it may be doubted whether any other subject of labor legislation has ever made such progress or gained such general acceptance for its principles in so brief a period. At the present time at least 50 foreign countries and provinces have introduced some form of workmen's compensation for industrial accidents, which, while showing great variations in the industries covered, the amount of compensation provided, and the methods by which compensation payments are secured, recognize the principles of compensation as distinguished from the older idea of employer's liability previously accepted in the civil law of continental Europe, as well as in English and American law.

In the United States what might be called the period of investigation and education began somewhat late as compared with European countries. But since that beginning, investigation and study have been followed with great rapidity by legislative action. The first American State commissions that led to the enactment of laws were appointed in New York, Wisconsin, and Minnesota in 1909, legislation following in New York in 1910, in Wisconsin in 1911, and in Minnesota in 1913. Beginning with the year 1909, 36 commissions, either appointed or voluntary, not including the Federal commission, have considered the subject of compensation, and compensation legislation has been enacted in 42 States and the District of Columbia (public employees only), as well as in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. There are also to be noted the orders applicable to the Canal Zone and the Alaskan railway, and the Federal laws of 1908 to 1914, these orders and laws being now repealed and superseded by the United States Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916.

Foreign countries, too, have been progressive in the same field, some of the laws noted in earlier reports being superseded, while in new and comparatively undeveloped industrial countries this type of law has been adopted, so that annual revisions are a practical necessity if current conditions are to be accurately presented. By reason of the bulk of the legislation enacted, and the volume of material afforded by any analysis of the laws, and also because of the closer community of interests, the present volume is limited to a presentation of the laws of the United States and Canada.

The lapse of time has diminished the value of the accounts of the work done by the investigative commissions; and moreover their ends have been accomplished for the most part, so that the summary of their reports which has been presented in earlier bulletins on the subject is omitted. Therefore the present volume will set forth in analytic form the main provisions of the laws, some account of their judicial construction and administrative methods, and the latest text, giving identical treatment to the laws of Canada and the United States so far as the conditions permit.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

INTRODUCTION.

The first account of the action of the States of the Union and of agencies interested in compensation legislation appeared as an article of 40 pages in Bulletin No. 90,² September 1, 1910. Legislation bills, etc., of 1911 received attention in an article appearing in Bulletin No. 92.³ Subsequent accounts have been given in separate bulletins,⁴ besides special analytical studies.⁵

Investigative commissions began to be provided for as early as 1903 (Massachusetts) and 1905 (Illinois), but no legislative results followed. Later commissions in both these States, and two and even three commissions in others, indicate the degree of caution with which the approach was made to the subject of compensation legislation. The following tables show the progress of action, both in the appointment of commissions and in the enactment of laws:

The 40 commissions above accounted for operated in 32 jurisdictions, while laws have been enacted in 42 States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, for the civil employees of the Federal Government, and for the employees of the government of the District of Columbia. Not every law has been preceded by a commission, therefore; but every commission except that of Arkansas, appointed in 1919, has been followed by the enactment of a law, though in some cases so remotely as to suggest a lack of any real connection between the two events. The year 1911 was marked by the creation of the largest number of commissions as well as by the enactment of the largest number of laws. But one investigative commission has been appointed since 1916—that of Arkansas, said to be to remove constitutional objections in a pending bill; only four have been created since 1913, and it is obvious that the day of their usefulness is ended, either as an aid in determining the desirability of compensation legislation or of working out deviations from accepted standards so as to meet supposed local peculiarities.

PROGRESS OF LEGISLATION.

The status of the employees of the United States, which precludes suits for damages against their employer, the Government, led to a comparatively early enactment of provisions in their behalf which partook, to a considerable extent, of the nature of compensation laws, though not fully representing them either in principle or operation. Thus as early as 1882 (22 Stat., p. 57) provision was made for certain employees of the Life-Saving Service who might suffer from accidental injuries and from disease contracted in the service.

Beginning with 1900, the Post Office Department was given the authority to employ "acting clerks in place of clerks injured while on duty" in the Railway Service, the salaries of the injured clerks being continued for not more than one year. Death benefits were added by later enactments, half pay during the second year of disability being provided, and the scope of the provisions increased so as to cover many other employees of the department.

In 1908 a more general law for Federal employees was enacted to be administered by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, but lacking much of complete coverage and falling far short of adequacy in its provisions. It remained practically unchanged, however, until in 1916 a law of general application to civil employees of the United States was passed, and an administrative commission provided for. This act extends to employees of the Isthmian Canal and the Panama Railroad, and of the Alaskan railways under Federal construction and control, but administration for these groups of employees rests with the officials in charge of the respective localities and undertakings.

The latest extension (1919) of the provisions of this act brings employees of the government of the District of Columbia within their scope, the law being administered in this regard by the same commission that has charge of the act as it affects civil employees of the United States generally.

The first State legislation enacted in the United States, providing for stated benefits without suit and without proof of negligence, was a cooperative insurance law of the State of Maryland, enacted in 1902. This law was of restricted application, affecting only mining, quarrying, steam and street railways, and work by municipalities in constructing any sewer, excavation, or other physical structure. This law was to be administered by the State insurance commissioner, and made payment an absolute requirement in case of death. It was declared unconstitutional after about two years' operation.⁶ An act of the same legislature made quite similar provisions for coal and clay miners in Alleghany and Garret counties.

The next law within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States was an enactment by the United States Philippine Commission in 1905, authorizing the continuance of wages for a period during disability, but not exceeding 90 days, in case of injury received by employees of the insular government in line of duty.⁷

Next in order of time was the Montana statute of March 4, 1909, in effect October 1, 1910, providing for the maintenance of a State cooperative insurance fund for miners and laborers in and about the coal mines of the State. Contribution to the fund was compulsory, employers to pay on the basis of the tonnage of coal mined and employees on the basis of their monthly gross earnings. State officials were to administer the fund, and payments for death and disability were provided for. While compulsory, the act was not exclusive as against injured workmen, who were permitted to sue under the employers' liability law, though bringing suit forfeited benefits under this act. The double obligation imposed upon the employer by the act was held by the supreme court of the State to invalidate it, though in its essential features it was held to be a valid exercise of the law making power.⁸

The next law enacted in this field, and the last before the effect of investigations by commissions came to be influential, was a law of 1910 of Maryland, superseding and repealing the act of 1902, affecting the coal and clay miners of Allegany and Garrett counties. This act was itself repealed by the compensation law of 1914. It provided for equal contributions by employers and workmen to a fund to be collected and disbursed by the treasurers of the respective counties. Administration rested with the county commissioners. Suit could be brought, but this barred compensation rights, and conversely the acceptance of benefits barred the right to sue. The fault of double liability which was held to invalidate the Montana statute was avoided in this law by a provision which authorized an employer who had defended a suit, and against whom judgment had been rendered, to deduct, on compliance with certain conditions, the amount of such judgment and costs from the payments thereafter to be made by him to the county fund.⁹

It is to be observed of the foregoing legislation, antedating what may be called the commission period, that it is of limited application, either as to the locality or classes of employees affected; also that there appears to have been little regard to compensation principles as at present understood. The remaining laws to be noticed may be said to be of general application, and have either followed the investigations of commissions or have been enacted under conditions making the results of such commissions available to those interested.

The first of the laws of this class is the elective compensation law of New York, 1910, followed at the same session by a compulsory law for hazardous occupations. The latter law was declared unconstitutional after a very brief term of existence, but after an amendment to the constitution, a new law was passed, which has been sustained by both the State and the Federal courts.

Of the 10 laws enacted in 1911, 7 provided for simple compensation, 3 containing also provisions for insurance; while in 1912, three States enacted compensation laws and one an insurance law; in 1913 seven States were added to the list, in five of which compensation only was provided for, while in two there is also a system of insurance. In 1914 compensation laws were enacted in two States, though in one (Kentucky) the law was declared unconstitutional before the time for it to take effect. Of the 10 new laws enacted in 1915 (one taking the place of the unconstitutional statute of Montana), 9 provided for compensation merely, while 1 established an insurance system. A new compensation law was passed in Kentucky in 1916, in lieu of the earlier law declared unconstitutional; this, with a law of Porto Rico which requires the insurance of the liabilities fixed by it are the only new laws of the year, though important amendments were made in Louisiana and New York. Indeed, practically every year is marked by amendments whose tendency is in general to strengthen the laws and enlarge their scope.

The extension of compensation legislation to five States in 1917, one in 1918, and four in 1919, besides the inclusion of public employees of the District of Columbia, marks the present bounds of compensation legislation. Of these, two of the laws of 1918 and one in 1919 provide for a State insurance system, though in only one of them is this system exclusive.

The following table shows in chronological order the States, etc., that have enacted compensation laws:

³ The law of Missouri is suspended awaiting the results of a referendum.

The dates given above are the dates of the actual inception of compensation methods in the various jurisdictions. As indicated by the footnotes, earlier laws were enacted in a few States, but were never really operative. The existing laws of a number of jurisdictions, widely differing in some instances from those enacted at the dates given above, are of more recent enactment; but the operation of a compensation law has been continuous since the original act became effective. There are therefore but six States in the southeastern portion of the Union that are without compensation laws, unless the referendum in Missouri should prove adverse to the act of that State. It also rests with Congress to provide for private employments in the District of Columbia and for interstate employees in transportation and for maritime workers.

Besides the statutory enactments noted above, there have been constitutional provisions made in a number of States, adopted with a view to the removal or forestalling of objections to compensation legislation on grounds of constitutionality. Thus the constitution of Arizona, adopted on the admission of that State into the Union in 1910, provides specifically for the enactment of a compensation law. Amendments in favor of such legislation were adopted in 1911 in California, in 1912 in Ohio, 1913 in New York and Vermont, 1914 in Wyoming, and in 1915 in Pennsylvania. In Oklahoma alone, of all the States where the question has been submitted to the people, was such an amendment rejected. This took place on August 1, 1916, the amendment failing along with eight others submitted at the time. Of this it has been said that the questions passed upon were rejected as a whole on account of other facts than the attitude of the public toward this particular subject.

The importance of such amendments to the constitution as preliminary to the enactment of compulsory laws has been greatly discounted by reason of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, upholding compensation laws of various types and form, as not in conflict with constitutional provisions; so that, in the absence of specific limitations which may be found by way of exception in some State constitutions, no bar appears to the enactment of a compensation law compulsory in form, and of general application. However, in but two States (California and Illinois) thus far has an original elective law been supplanted by a compulsory one.

The rapid growth of compensation legislation, involving, as it has, the almost simultaneous enactment of laws in a number of States, has operated to prevent the adoption of any one form of law as a type, so that, although a single fundamental principle underlies the entire group of laws of this class, its expression and application present great diversity of details in the different States. This extends not only to the primary factors of the scope of the laws and the amount of compensation payable under them, but the matter of making the laws compulsory or voluntary in their acceptance, the securing or not securing the payments of the benefits, the mode of securing where it is required, methods of administration, of election or rejection, etc.

No fixed form of analysis or summary presentation can give in complete detail the provisions of the laws under consideration. They relate not only to the compensation of accidents, but to accident reporting, safety provisions, the enforcement of safety laws, the establishment of insurance systems, premium rates, investments, the scaling of payments in cases of certain forms of negligence or their increase under certain conditions, procedure in arbitration, forms of appeal, and a great variety of subjects on which it would be impossible to generalize, and which can be discovered only by a reading of the individual statutes, though the use of the index to the laws will aid in this. The adoption by a few States of laws generally similar can be clearly recognized, but it is obvious that at the present time it can not be said that any one type of law is predominantly approved. However, it seems none the less certain that the welfare of both employer and employee, as well as the public interest generally, would be served by the general adoption of uniform laws, just and certain in their operations, and not dependent for their acceptance on the personal views or interests of individuals or groups of individuals.

It is encouraging to note in this connection that, though there is such diversity, and a manifest disposition on the part of some administrative and legislative bodies to regard variations as warranted by local conditions, if not absolutely desirable, there are certain discoverable tendencies to move in a common direction, and thus approach a common end.

Thus a comparison of the new and amendatory enactments from year to year discloses a movement toward an increase in the rate of compensation. Until the year 1919, a majority of the laws used a 50 per cent basis for compensation awards, while at present a larger number pay from 60 to 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the wages as benefits. Waiting time has been reduced from a general standard of two weeks to a predominant limitation of one week or less, eight States shortening the waiting time in 1919, and 9 or 10 others by earlier amendments. Perhaps in no aspect have the laws been more generally liberalized than in regard to medical and surgical aid, important changes taking place each year, though there is yet room for improvement. Administration by a commission instead of by courts is increasingly recognized as necessary, three States having provided for them after experience, without them, leaving but 10 which are at present without such an agency.

Compensation laws may be classified first as compulsory or elective. A compulsory law is one which requires every employer within its scope to accept the act and pay the compensations specified. Usually, but not always, the employee must also accept the provisions of the act. In Arizona, for example, the law is compulsory as applied to the employer, but the employee, after an injury, has the option of accepting compensation or suing for damages.

An elective act is one in which the employer has the option of either accepting or rejecting the act, but, in case he rejects, the customary common-law defenses are abrogated. In other words, the employer is subjected to a higher degree of liability if he does not elect. In most States the employee also has the right to accept or reject the act, although in Texas he has no option and must accept if his employer elects.

None of the compensation laws covers all employments. Usually agriculture, domestic service, employments casual in nature or not conducted for the purpose of the employer's business, and in some laws nonhazardous employments, are exempted from the provisions of the act. It may be provided, however, that such employments may come under the provisions of the law through the voluntary acceptance of the employer or the joint election of employer and employee in these exempted classes, but the employer loses no rights or defenses if he does not accept, and to this extent the compensation law is a voluntary one. Thus a law may be either compulsory or elective as to the employments covered and voluntary as to other employments.

Furthermore, an act may be elective as to private but compulsory as to public employments. Classification, however, is based exclusively upon private employments.

Besides the distinction as to the compulsory or elective application of the law, it may require the employer coming under it, whether voluntarily or by compulsion, to insure his liability to make payments, or it may leave the matter of insurance to his own choice. On the basis of these two facts the following classification of State laws appears:¹¹

¹¹ The term State is used in this discussion to include the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the Island of Porto Rico. Since the Federal law applies only to public employees, it is not, as a rule, considered.

| Compensation compulsory, 14. | | Compensation elective, 31. | |
|---|----------------------------|---|--|
| Insurance required, 13. | Insurance not required, 1. | Insurance required, 26. | Insurance not required, 5. |
| California. Hawaii. Idaho. Illinois. Maryland. New York. North Dakota. Ohio. Oklahoma. Porto Rico. Utah. Washington. Wyoming. | Arizona. | Colorado. Connecticut. Delaware. Indiana. Iowa. Kentucky. Maine. Massachusetts. Michigan. Missouri. Montana. Nebraska. Nevada. New Hampshire. New Jersey. New Mexico. Oregon. Pennsylvania. Rhode Island. South Dakota. Tennessee. Texas. Vermont. Virginia. West Virginia. Wisconsin. | Alabama. Alaska. Kansas. Louisiana. Minnesota. |

Very considerable differences appear in the methods provided by the laws of the 39 States in which insurance is obligatory. Thus the State may make provision for the carrying of such insurance, and require all employers coming under the act to avail themselves of such provision; or the State fund may simply offer one of alternative methods. Again, the State may refrain entirely from such action, but require insurance in private companies, stock or mutual; and lastly, self-insurance may be permitted—i. e., the carrying of the risk by the individual, subject to such safeguards as the law may prescribe.

² Ohio permits self-insurance, but all employers are required to contribute their proportionate share to the State insurance fund surplus.

It is to be observed that the terms "exclusive" and "competitive" as used in the foregoing table relate to the competition of other insurance carriers, self-insurance being permitted in some States from which competing companies are barred.

Besides the 17 States here noted as having State funds, the law of Virginia mentions the State fund as one of the insurance carriers for employers coming under the act, but makes no provision for the creation of such fund. It will be noted that three¹² of the seven States which are classed in the foregoing table as having exclusive State funds are shown by the table next above to have an elective system of compensation. However, should employers in these States accept the compensation system, insurance in the State fund is obligatory, except that in West Virginia approved employers may carry their own liabilities.

The law of Idaho affords some difficulty as to classification of the insurance system. Payments under the act are to be secured by insuring in the State fund, or by a deposit of satisfactory security. "Such security may consist of a surety bond or guaranty contract with any company authorized to do surety or guaranty business in Idaho." This has been construed by the attorney general of the State to permit both surety bonds and insurance contracts to be received as security.

The compensation laws of three States¹³ provide for a State mutual association, though, except in Kentucky, the management is entirely in the hands of directors chosen by insuring subscribers. In Kentucky the governor appoints 3 of the 15 directors. Massachusetts was the first State to provide for this type of insurance. The original purpose was to create an insurance monopoly conducted by an employers' mutual company and supervised by the State. Before the law was finally enacted, however, private companies were given practically the same privileges as the so-called State company, which at present is a regular competing private company. The other two States practically copied the provisions of the Massachusetts law. Massachusetts and Texas do not permit self-insurance, while Kentucky does.

The accompanying map shows the extent of existing legislation and the nature of the laws (i. e., elective or compulsory), and whether or not insurance is required; also the States having a State insurance fund and its type. An analysis of the law of each State, in comparable form, is presented on the following pages.

ANALYSIS OF THE PRINCIPAL FEATURES OF THE LAWS.

Date of enactment.—August 23, 1919. Effective January 1, 1920.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment, causing disability for more than two weeks, or death, not caused by employee's willful misconduct, intoxication, or willful failure to observe rules or statutory duties.

Industries covered.—All except those employing less than 16 persons, common carriers while engaged in interstate commerce and domestic and agricultural service. Municipalities and employers of less than 16 employees (except farm laborers), may elect to come under the act.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons in the industries covered, including minors, but excepting casual employees. Public employment: Not covered unless employer elects.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

(a) Burial expenses not to exceed $100.

(b) Total dependents: To widow, 30 per cent of wages; to dependent husband, 25 per cent; to widow or widower and one child, 40 per cent; to widow or widower and two or three children, 50 per cent; to widow or widower and four or more children, 60 per cent; to dependent orphan, 30 per cent; for each additional orphan, 10 per cent, maximum 60 per cent; to one parent, 25 per cent, both 35 per cent; to grandparent, brother, sister, mother-in-law, father-in-law, if one, 20 per cent, if more than one 25 per cent.

Compensation payable in the order named and ceases on death or remarriage, and upon arrival of children at age of 18.

(c) To partial dependents: A proportion of the above corresponding to the relation the contribution of the deceased to their support bore to his wages. Maximum weekly payment, $12; minimum, $5. Total period, 300 weeks; total maximum $5,000.

Compensation for disability:

(a) Reasonable medical, etc., treatment for the first 60 days, not exceeding $100.

(b) For temporary total disability, 50 per cent of wages for not over 300 weeks.

(c) For partial disability, 50 per cent of wage loss for not over 300 weeks.

For certain specific injuries (mutilations, etc.), 50 per cent of wages for fixed periods (10 to 400 weeks).

(d) For permanent total disability, 50 per cent of wages for 550 weeks, not over $5 weekly after 400 weeks.

Maximum weekly payments, $12; with one wholly dependent child, $13; with two children, $14; with three or more children, $15; minimum, $5.

No compensation payable for first two weeks. Compensation may be commuted to lump-sum payments by agreement or by the court.

Revision of benefits.—Awards payable for more than six months may be revised by agreement or by court.

Insurance.—Employers may insure whole or part of compensation. Insurance not required.

Security for payments.—Compensation is not assignable, nor subject to garnishment, and is entitled to the same preferences as unpaid wages.

Settlement of disputes.—Settlements not made by agreement are determined by the courts.

ALASKA.

Date of enactment.—April 29, 1915; in effect July 28, 1915; amended, chapter 44, acts of 1917.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury causing disability for more than two weeks, or death, arising out of and in course of employment, not due to the employee's willful intention to injure himself or another, or to his intoxication.

Industries covered.—Mining operations in which five or more persons are employed, unless election to the contrary is made (includes development and construction work, stamp and roller mills, reduction work and processes, coke ovens, etc.).

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries covered, contractors and subcontractors excluded. Public employment not included.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

(a) If married, $3,000 to widow, $600 additional for each child under 16 years of age, or child wholly dependent by reason of mental or physical incompetency, or unborn or posthumous child, and to dependent parent or parents if any; if no widow, $3,000 to any minor orphan, and $600 additional for each child under 16; no total to exceed $6,000.

(b) If unmarried, and dependent parent or parents, $1,200 to each.

(c) If no dependents, funeral expenses not to exceed $150, and other expenses, if any, to same amount.

Compensation for disability:

(a) Permanent total: $3,600 to workman alone; $1,200 additional if wife is living; $600 additional for each child under 16, posthumous child, or child over 16, dependent by reason of physical or mental incompetency; total not to exceed $6,000. If no wife or children, $600 to each dependent parent.

(b) Temporary total disability: 50 per cent of weekly wages for not over six months.

(c) Permanent partial disability: Fixed sums for specified injuries in lieu of other payments, varying with conjugal condition and number of children.

Revision of benefits.—Readjustment must be made if within two years an injury develops or proves to be such as to warrant a different award from any previously made.

Insurance.—No provision.

Security of payments.—Attachment may be had pending result of action, or employer may deposit cash or bond with court. Payments are exempt from execution.

Settlement of disputes.—By courts, either with or without jury trial.

ARIZONA.

Date of enactment.—June 8, 1912; in effect September 1, 1912; amended, chapter 7, acts of 1913.

Injuries compensated.—All accidental injuries causing disability of at least two weeks, or death, arising out of and in the course of the employment, caused in whole or in part, or contributed to, by a necessary risk or danger of, or inherent in the nature of the employment, or by failure of the employer or his agents to exercise due care or to comply with any law affecting the employment.

Industries covered.—All especially dangerous employments (enumerated list), including the construction, operation, and maintenance of steam and street railroads; work with or near explosives; building work using iron or steel frames or hoists, derricks, or ladders or scaffolds 20 or more feet above ground; telegraph, telephone, or other electrical work; work in mines, quarries, tunnels, subways, etc.; work in mills, shops, and factories using power machinery. Elective as to other industries.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries covered. Public employment: No provision.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

(a) To persons wholly dependent, a lump sum equal to 2,400 times one-half the daily wages or earnings of the deceased employee, but not to exceed $4,000. Payments to children cease on reaching the age of 18 years.

(b) If no dependents, the reasonable expenses of medical attendance and burial of deceased employee.

Compensation for disability:

(a) For total disability, 50 per cent of the employee's semimonthly earnings during the time he is unable to work at any gainful occupation.

(b) For partial disability, a semimonthly payment equal to one-half the wage decrease.

(c) The total amount of payments for total or partial disability caused by a single injury not to exceed $4,000.

Revision of benefits.—Examinations as to the nature of injury and degree of incapacity, etc., may be required by either party at intervals of not less than three months.

Insurance.—The employer may insure provided the liability for compensation is not less than the compensation fixed by law.

Security of payments.—A judgment for compensation issued by a court is collectible without relief from valuation or appraisal laws and has the same preferential claim as is allowed by law for unpaid wages or personal services.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes may be settled by (a) written agreement between the parties, (b) arbitration, or (c) reference to the attorney general of the State. In case of failure or refusal to agree by any of the modes above provided, then by a civil action at law.

CALIFORNIA.

Date of enactment.—April 8, 1911; in effect September 1, 1911; new act, chapter 176, acts of 1913, in effect January 1, 1914; new act, chapter 586, acts of 1917, in effect January 1, 1918; amended chapter 471, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries or disease arising out of and in the course of employment, including injuries to artificial members, causing disability for more than 7 days, or death, not intentionally self-inflicted and not the result of the intoxication of the injured employee.

Industries covered.—All except agriculture and domestic service, which services may come under the act by joint election.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees, including apprentices and aliens, excepting casual employees not in the course of the employer's trade or business. Public employment: Persons employed by the State and its political subdivisions and all public corporations, including officers and enlisted men of the National Guard.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) The reasonable expense of burial, not exceeding $100.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent, three times the annual earnings of the deceased employee; not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, payable at least semimonthly in installments equal to 65 per cent of the wages. Payments to children cease on their reaching the age of 18 years, unless mentally or physically incapacitated for earning a living.
- (c) If only partial dependents survive, three times the annual contribution of the deceased to their support, subject to the same limitations as above.
- (d) If no dependents, burial expenses, and $350 to be paid to rehabilitation fund. Any disability payments made and burial expenses paid are to be considered as parts of the foregoing totals.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Such medical, surgical, and hospital treatment as may reasonably be required to cure and relieve from effects of injury.
- (b) For temporary total disability, 65 per cent of average weekly earnings during such disability.
- (c) For temporary partial disability, 65 per cent of weekly loss of wages during such disability.
- (d) For permanent disability, 65 per cent of average weekly earnings for periods varying from 4 to 240 weeks, according to the degree of disability. After the expiration of 240 weeks a further benefit varying from 10 to 40 per cent of the weekly earnings is payable during the remainder of life, when the degree of disability reaches or exceeds 70 per cent.

The aggregate amount of benefits for a single injury causing temporary disability is limited to three times the annual earnings of the injured person, with a maximum benefit period of 240 weeks.

In case of permanent incapacity or death, a lump sum may be substituted for benefits, such lump sum to equal the present value of the benefits computed at 6 per cent.

Average weekly earnings shall be considered as not less than $6.41 nor more than $32.05.

Revision of benefits.—Decisions and awards may be reviewed at any time during the first 245 weeks, after legal notice received.

Insurance.—Insurance is required in the State insurance fund or in an authorized insurance company, unless the employer furnishes proof of ability to carry his own insurance. Municipalities are required to insure in the State fund unless the risk is refused.

Security of payments.—A claim for injury or death of an employee or any award shall have the same preference over other unsecured debts as is given by law to claims for wages, but not so as to impair a lien of a previous award. Policies inure directly to the benefit of employees, who also have a first lien on any amount due the employer from the insurance company. Self-insurers may be required to give bond or deposit securities.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the State industrial accident commission, subject to a limited review by the courts.

COLORADO.

Date of enactment.—April 10, 1915; in effect August 1, 1915. Reenacted, chapter 210, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries caused by accident arising out of and in course of employment, not intentionally self-inflicted, and causing death within two years or disability for more than ten days.

Industries covered.—All, except interstate commerce and domestic and agricultural labor, in which four or more persons are employed, if employers elect to come under the act; others may elect, but lose no defenses if they do not.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees, including aliens and minors, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed, but excluding employees whose work is but casual and not in the usual course of the employer's business. Public employees: All under any appointment or contract of hire; elective officials and officers and enlisted men of the National Guard excluded.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) To persons wholly dependent, including acknowledged illegitimate children, 50 per cent of the weekly wages for six years, $10 maximum, $5 minimum, total not to exceed $3,125 nor to be less than $1,560. If death occurs from any cause during receipt of disability benefits, any unaccrued and unpaid remainder goes to dependents.
- (b) If only partial dependents survive, 50 per cent of the weekly wages, $10 maximum, $5 minimum, for such part of six years as the commission may determine, total not to exceed $3,125. If death occurs from any cause during the receipt of disability benefits, partial dependents shall receive not more than four times the amount contributed by the deceased during his last year of employment, the aggregate of disability and death benefits not to exceed $3,125.
- (c) If no dependents, medical services and $75 funeral expenses.
- (d) Payments to any beneficiary cease on death; to widow or dependent widower on remarriage, but a lump sum equal to one-half the unpaid balance shall be paid to the spouse if there are no children; if there are dependent children, the unpaid balance is payable to them; to children, on reaching the age of 18, unless physically or mentally incapacitated from earning.

Payments lapsing for any reason go to surviving dependents, if any.

Benefits to aliens are one-third the amounts payable to citizens, and may not exceed $1,041.66 in all.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical and surgical assistance for first 60 days, not more than $200 in value and $100 for dental services.
- (b) For temporary total disability, 50 per cent of weekly wages during continuance, $5 minimum, $10 maximum; full wages if less than $5.
- (c) For permanent total disability, 50 per cent of average weekly wages, maximum $10, minimum $5, for life.
- (d) For permanent partial disability, 50 per cent of the weekly wage decrease, $10 maximum; total not to exceed $2,600. Special schedule for specified injuries, 50 per cent of weekly wages for periods ranging from 4 to 208 weeks, in addition to other payments. Facial disfigurements may also be compensated for in an amount not exceeding $500.
- (e) For temporary partial disability, 50 per cent of wage loss during disability; maximum $10, minimum $5 weekly, aggregate maximum $1,300.

Payments may be commuted to a lump sum after six months.

Revision of benefits.—Awards may be reviewed after making, and may be appealed from within 20 days.

Insurance.—Insurance in State fund, stock, or mutual company, or proof of financial ability to make payments, is required. Public employees must be insured in the State fund.

Security of payments.—Insurers are primarily liable to a workman or his beneficiaries entitled to benefits; notice to employer is notice to insurer; insolvency of employer does not release insurer. Claims are not assignable, and payments are exempt from attachment or execution. Claims to have same preference as to lien as wages, but not limited as to amount.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are determined by the industrial commission, with limited appeal to courts.

CONNECTICUT.

Date of enactment.—May 29, 1913; in effect January 1, 1914; amended, chapter 228, acts of 1915; chapter 368, acts of 1917; chapter 284, acts of 1918; chapter 142, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—All injuries arising out of and in the course of employment, disability of more than 7 days, or death, except when injury is caused by willful and serious misconduct of the injured employee, or by his intoxication. Occupational diseases are included.

Industries covered.—All industries in which five or more persons are employed, in absence of contrary election by employer.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees of an employer accepting the act, in absence of contrary election, outworkers and casual employees who are employed otherwise than for the purposes of the employer's business excepted. Public employment: Employees of the State and any public corporation within the State using the services of another for pay.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $100 for burial expenses.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent, a weekly compensation equal to one-half the earnings of the deceased employee.
- (c) If only partial dependents survive, a weekly compensation, determined according to the measure of dependence, not exceeding one-half the earnings of the deceased employee.

- (d) Compensation shall in no case be more than $18 or less than $5 weekly, and shall not continue longer than 312 weeks.

A widow's or widower's dependence ceases with remarriage, and a child's upon reaching 18 years of age, unless physically or mentally incapacitated.

If a widow or dependent widower remarries or dies during the term of benefit payments, subsequent payments go to other dependents, if any.

Aliens receive only one-half of above compensation.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable medical and surgical aid and hospital service.
- (b) For total disability, a weekly compensation equal to one-half the employee's earnings, not more than $14 or less than $5 weekly, or for longer than 520 weeks.

- (c) For partial disability, a weekly compensation equal to one-half the wage loss, but not more than $18 per week, or for longer than 520 weeks. For specified injuries causing permanent partial disability, one-half the average weekly earnings for fixed periods in lieu of all other payments.

Lump-sum payments may be approved by the commissioner, provided they equal the value of the compensations.

Revision of benefits.—Review may be had upon request of either party, whenever it shall appear to the compensation commissioner that the incapacity or the measure of dependence has changed. The commissioner retains control over awards during their whole period, with power to take proper action thereon at any time.

Insurance.—Approved schemes may be substituted, provided the benefits are equivalent to those provided by law. Insurance may be taken in approved stock or mutual companies or associations.

Security of payments.—Employer must furnish the insurance commissioner satisfactory proof of his solvency and financial ability to pay awards, file satisfactory security with the insurance commissioner, or insure in approved stock or mutual companies or associations. Payments are not assignable, are exempt from execution, and are entitled to the same preference as wage debts.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are to be settled by the compensation commissioners. Appeals from findings and awards of any commissioner may be made to the superior court of the county without cost to either party.

DELAWARE.

Date of enactment.—April 2, 1917; in effect January 1, 1918; amended, chapter 203, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in course of employment, causing disability for more than 14 days, or death within one year, and not due to the employee's intoxication or willful negligence or intent to injure himself or another.

Industries covered.—All, except agriculture and domestic service, in which five or more persons are employed, unless contrary election is made.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons under contract for hire for a valuable consideration except casual employees not in the regular course of the trade or business of the employer, and outworkers. Public employment: Not included.

Burden of payment.—All on the employer.

Compensation in case of death:

(a) Funeral expenses, not exceeding $100.

(b) To the widow or widower alone, 25 per cent of the wages of the deceased employee; if one child, 40 per cent, and 5 per cent for each additional child; not over 60 per cent in all. If one or two orphan children, 25 per cent, and 10 per cent for each additional child, the total not to exceed 60 per cent. If none of the foregoing, and a dependent parent or parents survive, 20 per cent; if no parents, to dependent brothers or sisters, 15 per cent for one, with 5 per cent for each additional, the total not to exceed 25 per cent. Aliens (widows and children only) receive one-half the above amounts.

Payments are for a period of 285 weeks, minus any disability benefits paid the injured person prior to his death, but cease on the death of a beneficiary, the remarriage of a widow or widower, or on a child attaining the age of 16 years; but orphan children or those abandoned by the surviving parent continue to receive benefits until the age of 16, regardless of the limitation of 285 weeks. Shares lapsing are redistributed.

Wages used in computing death benefits shall be reckoned as not less than $10 nor more than $30 per week.

Compensation for disability:

(a) Medical and surgical aid as may be reasonably required during the first 14 days, unless refused by the employee, but not to exceed $75.

(b) For total disability, for the first 475 weeks, 50 per cent of the injured person's wages, not more than $15 nor less than $5 per week, unless the wages were less than $5, when full wages shall be paid, the total not to exceed $4,000.

(c) For partial disability, 50 per cent of the wage loss, not more than $15 per week, for not more than 285 weeks; for specified injuries, 50 per cent of the wages for fixed periods, in lieu of all other payments, the amount to be not more than $15 nor less than $5, per week, unless the wages were less than $5, when the full wages shall be paid.

Periodical payments may be commuted to lump sums on the application of either party, with due notice to the other.

Revision of benefits.—On application of any party in interest, but not oftener than once in six months, a review of awards may be had and changes made as the condition of the injured person or the status of beneficiaries may warrant.

Insurance.—Insurance is required in an approved organization, unless adequate proof of the employer's financial ability to meet obligations is furnished.

Self-insurers may be required to give bond or make a deposit to secure the payment of liabilities.

Security of payments.—Policies must inure directly to the benefit of the person entitled to compensation. Payments have the same priority as wage debts, and are not subject to assignment or execution.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the State industrial accident board, subject to appeal to the courts, to be tried without the aid of a jury.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Date of enactment.—July 11, 1919; in effect July 1, 1919.

This act extends the provisions of the act compensating civil employees of the United States to "employees of the government of the District of Columbia so far as they may be applicable," except pensionable members of the police and fire departments. For analysis, see page 67.

HAWAII.

Date of enactment.—April 28, 1915; in effect July 1, 1915; amended, act No. 227, acts of 1917.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury by accident arising out of and in course of employment, including occupational diseases, causing disability for more than seven days or death within six months, and not due to the employee's intention to injure himself or another or to his intoxication.

Industries covered.—All public and all industrial employment for pecuniary gain.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons under contract of employment or apprenticeship, other than casual employees, whose pay does not exceed $36 per week. Public employment: All except elective officials and employees who receive salaries in excess of $1,800 per year.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $100 funeral expenses.
- (b) 40 per cent of the average weekly wages to widow or dependent widower alone, 50 per cent if one or two dependent children, 60 per cent if three or more; 30 per cent to one or two orphans, 10 per cent additional for each child in excess of two, total not to exceed 50 per cent. If no consort or child, but other dependents, 25 to 40 per cent.
- (c) Payments to widow cease on death or remarriage, and to widower on termination of disability or remarriage; to child on reaching age of 16, unless incapable of self-support, when they may continue to 18; to other beneficiaries, on termination of disability; no payments except to children to continue longer than 312 weeks. Basic wages not less than $5 nor more than $36 weekly.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable surgical, medical, and hospital services during disability, not exceeding $150 in amount.
- (b) For total disability, 60 per cent of weekly wages, $3 minimum, $18 maximum, for not longer than 312 weeks; total not to exceed $5,000. If wages are less than $3, full wages will be paid unless disability is permanent, when $3, will be paid.
- (c) For partial disability, 50 per cent of wage decrease, $12 maximum, not over 312 weeks, total not to exceed $5,000. Fixed awards are made in lieu of all other payments for specified injuries.

Payments may be commuted to one or more lump sums in any case.

Revision of benefits.—Agreements or awards may be reviewed at any time, but not oftener than once in six months.

Insurance.—Private employers must carry insurance, secure guaranty insurance, deposit security, or furnish proof of financial ability to make payments.

Security of payments.—Payments are preferred claims, the same as wage debts. Employees have direct recourse to insuring company; insolvency of employer does not release insurer.

Settlement of disputes.—Industrial accident boards for each county with aid of a committee of arbitration, if desired by either party; appeals to courts.

IDAHO.

Date of enactment.—March 16, 1917; in effect January 1, 1918.

Injuries compensated.—Injury by accident arising out of and in course of employment, not due to the employee's willful intention to injure himself or another or to his intoxication, causing death within two years, or disability for more than seven days.

Industries covered.—Compulsorily, all public employment and all private employment carried on by the employer for pecuniary gain, except agricultural and domestic service and employment by charitable organizations. Exempted industries may come under the act by written agreement of both parties.

Persons compensated. Private employment: All employees except casual, out-workers, persons earning more than $2,400 per annum, and members of the employer's family dwelling in his house. Public employment: All except those receiving salaries in excess of $2,400 per annum and elected officials.

Burden of payment.—All on employer; but provision may be made for employees to contribute to a hospital fund.

Compensation for death:

(a) Burial expenses not to exceed $100.

(b) To a dependent widow or widower alone, 45 per cent of the employee's average weekly wages; if a child or children, 55 per cent. Orphan children receive 25 per cent if one, and 10 per cent additional for each child more than one, the total not to exceed 55 per cent. To a dependent parent or parents, any sum not paid to the foregoing, the total not to exceed 55 per cent of the weekly wages; or if none of the foregoing dependents, 25 per cent to one dependent parent or 20 per cent to each if both are dependent. Also other dependents may receive benefits within the 55 per cent limits, if any sum remains.

(c) If there are no dependents, the employer shall pay $1,000 into the industrial administration fund.

(d) No payment shall extend beyond 400 weeks, and shall terminate on the death or remarriage of a widow or widower, on a child reaching the age of 18 unless incapable of self-support, or on a parent or grandparent ceasing to be dependent. Benefits terminating before the end of 400 weeks may be reapportioned.

Death benefits may not exceed $12 per week nor be less than $6, or the actual weekly earnings if less than $6. Alien dependents receive only 50 per cent of the above compensation.

Compensation for disability:

(a) Reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital service, and crutches and apparatus as may be required or requested at the time of the injury and for a reasonable period thereafter.

(b) For total disability, 55 per cent of the injured person's wages, not less than $6 nor more than $12 for 400 weeks, and $6 per week thereafter. For temporary disability the benefits shall not exceed wages, but for permanent disability they shall not be less than $6.

(c) For partial disability, 55 per cent of the wage loss for not more than 150 weeks; schedule for designated permanent partial disabilities, ranging from 3 to 200 weeks, in lieu of other payments.

Lump-sum settlements may be approved for part or all the benefits, for either disability or death.

Revision of benefits.—Agreements or awards may be reviewed on the application of either party, but not oftener than once in six months.

Insurance.—Employers must insure in the State insurance fund or deposit satisfactory security or surety bond to guarantee payments.

Security of payments.—Policies of insurance in the State fund and all guaranty contracts must provide that the employee may have direct recourse thereto, and the insolvency of the employer is no release of his surety. Benefits have the same priority as wage payments, and are exempt from assignment, attachment, etc.

Settlement of disputes.—The act is administered by an industrial accident board. Agreements between employers and employees must be approved by this board. On failure to agree, a committee of arbitration must be formed, whose award is valid unless a review by the board is requested within 30 days. A limited appeal from the findings of the board may be taken to the courts.

ILLINOIS.

Date of enactment.—June 10, 1911; in effect May 1, 1912. New act, June 28, 1913; in effect July 1, 1913; amended June 28, 1915, May 31, June 25, 1917, June 28, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Accidental injuries arising out of and in the course of employment causing permanent disfigurement, disability of over six working days, or death.

Industries covered.—Public employment; private employments (enumerated list), and all enterprises in which the law requires safety devices. Other employers may elect, but forfeit no defenses if they do not.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees except those not engaged in the usual trade, etc., of the employer. Public employment: All persons employed by the State, county, municipality, etc., except officials.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests on the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) To persons wholly dependent, a sum equal to four years' earnings, not less than $1,650 (to a widow with one child under 16, $1,750, and if two or more children, $1,850), nor more than $3,500 (to a widow with one child under 16, $3,750, and if two or more children, $4,000).
- (b) If only dependent collateral heirs survive, such percentage of the above sum as the support rendered during the last two years was of the earnings of the deceased.
- (c) If no dependents, a burial benefit not exceeding $150.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical and surgical aid for not over eight weeks, and not over $200 in value; also necessary hospital, medical and surgical aid during the period for which compensation may be payable.
- (b) For total disability beginning with eighth day (second day if permanent), a weekly sum equal to 50 per cent of the employee's earnings, $7 minimum, $12 maximum, during disability or until payments equal a death benefit; thereafter, if the disability is permanent, a sum annually equal to 8 per cent of a death benefit, but not less than $10 per month.
- (c) For permanent partial disability, 50 per cent of the loss of earning capacity, but not more than $12 per week.
- (d) For certain specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), a benefit of 50 per cent of weekly wages for fixed periods, in addition to temporary total disability payments.
- (e) The basis of 50 per cent shall be increased 5 per cent for each child under 16 years of age, the maximum to be 65 per cent. The minimum sum of $7 per week is to be increased $1 for each such child, the total not to exceed $10. The maximum weekly payment of $12 is to be increased $1 per week for each such child, the total not to exceed $15.
- (f) For serious and permanent disfigurement, not causing incapacity and not otherwise compensated, a sum not exceeding one-fourth the death benefits. No payments are to extend beyond eight years, except in case of permanent total incapacity.

Lump-sum payments for either death or disability may be substituted by the industrial board for periodic payments.

Revision of benefits.—Medical examination may be had not oftener than every four weeks. The industrial board may, on request, review installment payments within 18 months after the award or agreement thereon.

Insurance.—The employer must insure, furnish proof of ability to pay, or make other provision for security of payment; or he may maintain a benefit system, but may not reduce his liability under the act.

Security of payments.—In case of insolvency, awards constitute liens upon all property of the employer within the county, paramount to all other claims, except wages, taxes, mortgages, or trust deeds. Exempt from garnishment, attachment, or execution.

The rights of an insolvent employer to insurance indemnities are subrogated to injured employees.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are determined by the industrial commission through an arbitrator or arbitration committee, subject to review by the board. Questions of law may be reviewed by the courts.

INDIANA.

Date of enactment.—March 8, 1915; in effect September 1, 1915; amended, chapters 63, 81, 165, acts of 1917, chapters 57, 71, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury causing disability for more than seven days, or death within 300 weeks by accident arising out of and in course of employment, not due to willful misconduct, intention to injure self, intoxication, or willful failure or refusal to use safety appliance or perform duty required by statute.

Industries covered.—All except interstate and foreign commerce, for which Federal laws make provision, railroad employees engaged in train service, and domestic and agricultural labor, unless employer makes contrary election; compulsory as to State and its municipalities, and corporations engaged in mining coal.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees and contractors' employees engaged upon the subject matter of the contract; employees whose work is casual and not in the usual course of the employer's business are excepted. Public employment: All employees.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $100 for funeral expenses, if death from the injury occurs within 300 weeks.
- (b) 50 per cent of weekly wages to persons wholly dependent; to those partially dependent, amounts proportionate to decedent's contributions to their support. The term of payment is limited to 300 weeks from the receipt of the injury.
- (c) Payments cease on remarriage of widow or dependent widower, or on children attaining the age of 18 years, unless mentally or physically disabled for earning. Wages are to be considered as not above $24 nor less than $10 weekly, no total to exceed $5,000.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical and hospital services for first 30 days, and longer at option of employer; industrial board may extend period 30 days; employees must accept unless otherwise ordered by industrial board.
- (b) For total disability, 55 per cent of wages for not more than 500 weeks.
- (c) For partial disability, 55 per cent of wage loss for not more than 300 weeks.
- (d) For certain specified injuries, 55 per cent of wages for designated periods ranging from 10 to 250 weeks in lieu of all other payments; for permanent disfigurement impairing opportunity or usefulness, benefits for not over 200 weeks.

Wage basis and total amounts are limited as for death benefits.

In unusual cases payments may be commuted to a lump sum after 26 weeks.

Revision of benefits.—Awards may be reviewed at any time by industrial board on its own motion or the request of either party, but without retroactive effect.

Insurance.—Required unless satisfactory proof of financial ability to meet payments is furnished.

Security of payments.—Contracts of insurance must inure directly to the benefit of the person entitled to payments under an award. Payments have same preference and priority as unpaid wages, and are exempt from claims of creditors.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are determined by the industrial board, with appeal to courts on questions of law.

IOWA.

Date of enactment.—April 18, 1913; in effect July 1, 1914. Amended, chapters 188, 270, 336, 409, 418, acts of 1917; chapter 220, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—All personal injuries arising out of and in the course of the employment causing disability for more than two weeks, or death, except when caused by the injured employee's willful intention to injure himself or another, or by the intoxication of the employee.

Industries covered.—All industries, except agriculture and domestic service, in absence of contrary election by employer. Compulsory as to the State and its municipalities.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries covered in absence of contrary election, except clerks not subjected to the hazards of the industry and casual employees, or those not employed for the purpose of the employer's trade or business. Public employment: All except policemen and firemen entitled to benefits from pension funds.

Burden of payment.—Entire burden is on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Reasonable expenses of the employee's last sickness and burial, not to exceed $100.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent, a weekly payment equal to 60 per cent of the wages of the deceased employee, but not more than $15 nor less than $6 per week, for 300 weeks.
- (c) If only partial dependents survive, such a proportion of the above as the amounts contributed by the employee to such partial dependents bear to his annual earnings.
- (d) If the employee was a minor whose earnings were received by the parent, a sum to the parent equal to two-thirds of the amount provided for persons wholly dependent.

If the spouse dies during the compensation period, the unpaid balance goes to other dependents, if any; if she remarries, and there are no dependent children, payments cease.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable surgical, medical, and hospital services and supplies for first four weeks, not exceeding $100 and $100 additional in exceptional cases.
- (b) For temporary total disability, 60 per cent of wages, not more than $15 nor less than $6 (unless wages are less than $6, then full wages), for not more than 300 weeks.
- (c) For permanent total disability, the same compensation as for temporary disability, to be paid for a period of not more than 400 weeks.
- (d) For permanent partial disability (specified maimings), 60 per cent of average weekly wages for fixed periods, beginning with the date of injury. Payments under (b) and (c) for the fifth, sixth, and seventh weeks are 100 per cent of the weekly earnings, if the disability continues during these periods, respectively.

Lump-sum payments may be substituted in any case where the term can be determined, on approval of the industrial commissioner and an order by the court.

Revision of benefits.—Payments may be reviewed by the industrial commissioner at the request of either party.

Insurance.—Employers must insure in approved companies or mutual associations, or furnish satisfactory proof of financial ability to make payments, or deposit security with the State insurance department; or they may maintain approved substitute schemes, provided there is no diminution of benefits.

Security of payments.—In case of insolvency of the insurer a claim for compensation becomes a first lien, and in case of legal incapacity of insured to receive the amount due, the insured must settle directly with the beneficiary.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes may be settled by committees of arbitration, with the industrial commissioner as chairman; limited appeal to courts.

KANSAS.

Date of enactment.—March 14, 1911; in effect January 1, 1912; amended, chapter 216, acts of 1913; chapter 226, acts of 1917; chapter 222, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in the course of employment, not due to intoxication or deliberate intention of injured employee, or caused by his willful failure to use safeguards provided by statute or furnished by employer, causing incapacity to earn full wages for at least one week, or death.

Industries covered.—Railways, factories, quarries, electrical, building or engineering work, laundries, natural-gas plants, county and municipal work, employments requiring the use of dangerous, explosive, or inflammable materials, if employing five or more persons; and mines, without reference to the number of employees, all in absence of contrary election; employers in other industries and those employing less than five persons may also elect.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees, including apprentices, but excluding those employed otherwise than for the purpose of the employer's business. Public employment: Workmen on county and municipal work.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) To persons wholly dependent, a sum equal to three years' earnings of the deceased employee, not less than $1,400 nor more than $3,800. For nonresident alien beneficiaries (except in Canada) the maximum is $750.
- (b) If only partial dependents survive, a sum proportionate to the injury to such dependents.
- (c) If no dependents are left, a reasonable expense for burial, not exceeding $150. Compensation ceases upon the marriage of any dependent, or when a minor, not physically or mentally incapable of wage earning, shall become 18 years of age.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) On demand, medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, not over $150 in value, for not more than 50 days.
- (b) For total incapacity, payments during incapacity after the first week, equal to 60 per cent of earnings, but not less than $6 nor more than $15 per week.
- (c) For partial incapacity, 60 per cent of wage loss during incapacity, after the first week. Lump sums equal to 50 per cent of the wages for specified periods are to be paid for designated injuries, in lieu of all other compensation.

No payments for total or partial disability shall extend over more than eight years.

After six months, lump-sum payments may be substituted at the employer's option, the sum to be agreed upon or determined by the court; or the workman may apply for a lump-sum settlement at any time.

Revision of benefits.—Any award may be modified at any time by agreement, or either party may demand a revision.

Insurance.—The employer may insure in any approved insurance scheme which provides compensation not less favorable than is provided in this act.

Security of payments.—Lump sums awarded by the court may be secured by order of the court by a good and sufficient bond when there is doubt of security of payment. If the employer was insured the insurer shall be subrogated to the rights and duties of the employer. Claims and awards are not assignable or subject to execution, etc.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes not settled by agreement may be referred to arbitrators, subject to an appeal to courts.

KENTUCKY.

Date of enactment.—March 23, 1916; in effect August 1, 1916; amended, ch. 176, 1918.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injuries by accident arising out of and in course of employment, causing incapacity for more than seven days, or death within two years, not self-inflicted, or due to intoxication or willful misconduct. Results of pre-existing diseases are not included.

Industries covered.—All except domestic service and farm labor where three or more persons are employed; excepted industries may become subject to the act by joint application by employers and employees.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in establishments coming under the act, if the employees elect. Public employment: All employees of municipalities coming under the act, if the employees elect.

Burden of payment.—All on the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Reasonable burial expenses, not to exceed $75.
 - (b) To persons wholly dependent, 65 per cent of the average weekly earnings, not more than $12 nor less than $5 per week, for 335 weeks, the total not to exceed $4,000.
 - (c) If only partial dependents survive, a proportion of the amount for total dependency, determined by the degree of dependence.
 - (d) If no dependents, $100, payable to the personal representative.
- Payments to a widow or widower cease on remarriage and to a child on reaching the age of 16, unless incapacitated for wage earning.
Payments thus terminated go to other beneficiaries, if any.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical, surgical, and hospital aid for 90 days, unless another period is fixed by the board, the cost not to exceed $100.
- (b) For total disability, 65 per cent of average weekly wages, not more than $12 nor less than $5, for eight years, total not to exceed $5,000.
- (c) For partial disability, 65 per cent of the weekly wage loss, not to exceed $12, for not more than 335 weeks, total not to exceed $4,000.

Compensation periods are fixed for special injuries, in lieu of other payments.

Lump-sum awards may be made after six months if approved by the board.

Revision of benefits.—Review may be had on the request of either party or on the motion of the board, changing or revoking any previous order.

Insurance.—Employers accepting the act must insure in a stock or mutual company or the State Employees' Insurance Association, or give proof of financial ability to pay compensation direct.

Security of payments.—Insurance policies must provide for direct liability to the beneficiaries. Self-insurers must furnish bond or other security. Benefits have the same priority as wage debts and are not subject to assignment or attachment.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the workmen's compensation board, or a member thereof, or a referee appointed by it; limited appeal to courts.

LOUISIANA.

Date of enactment.—June 18, 1914; in effect January 1, 1915; amended, Nos. 38, 39, 1918.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury by accident arising out of and in course of employment causing disability for more than 2 weeks, or death within 1 year, and not due to willful intention to injure, to intoxication, to deliberate failure to use safeguards, or to deliberate breach of safety laws.

Industries covered.—Hazardous trades, businesses, or occupations in absence of contrary election; extensive list, and others may be so adjudged or brought within the act by voluntary agreement. Compulsory as to employees of the State and its municipalities and public boards.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: Every person performing services arising out of and incidental to his employer's trade, business, or occupation, if the same is within the act. Public employment: Every person in the service of the State, etc., except officials.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

(a) $100 expenses of burial.

(b) To widow or dependent widower alone, 25 per cent of weekly wages, 40 per cent if 1 child, and 55 per cent if 2 or more. If 1 child alone, 25 per cent, 40 per cent for 2, and 55 per cent for 3 or more. For 1 dependent parent, 25 per cent; for 2, 55 per cent; if 1 brother or sister, 25 per cent and 10 per cent additional for each other. The total in no case may exceed 55 per cent of the weekly wages, $3 minimum payment, $16 maximum, for not over 300 weeks. Payment to any beneficiary ceases on death or marriage, to children on reaching the age of 18, unless mentally or physically incapacitated.

(a) Reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital services, not to exceed $150 in value.

(b) For total disability, 55 per cent of the weekly wages, $16 maximum, $3 minimum, unless the wages are less than $3, then full wages, for not more than 400 weeks.

(c) For partial disability, 55 per cent of the wage loss, for not more than 300 weeks.

(d) Fixed schedule for specified injuries, for periods from 10 to 200 weeks, in lieu of other payments. Payments in any case may be commuted to a lump sum on agreement of the parties and approval by the courts.

Revision of benefits.—Judgments may be modified at any time by agreement of the parties and approval by the courts; or after 1 year, they may be reviewed by the court on application of either party.

Insurance.—Not required.

Security of payments.—Policy of insurance must give claimants right to direct payment regardless of the default or bankruptcy of the employer. Compensation payments have the same preference as wage debts.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by judges of the courts in simple, summary procedure.

MAINE.

Date of enactment.—April 1, 1915; in effect January 1, 1916; reenacted April 4, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injury sustained in course of employment, causing disability for more than 10 days, or death, not due to willful intention to injure himself or another, and not due to intoxication unless fact or habit of intoxication was known or cognizable to employer.

Industries covered.—All except agricultural and domestic labor, logging, and seamen in interstate or foreign commerce, in which more than five persons are employed, if employer elects. Abrogation of defenses does not affect cutting, hauling, driving, or rafting of logs.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons in industries covered, employees whose work is casual or not in the usual course of the employer's business excepted. Public employment: Employees of the State, cities, and counties, and of towns accepting the provisions of the act, other than officials; but cities and towns may continue injured firemen on the pay roll at full pay, in lieu of compensation.

Burden of payment.—All on employer. If employees contribute to substitute scheme, additional proportionate benefits must be paid.

Compensation for death:

- (a) To persons wholly dependent, 60 per cent of weekly wages for 300 weeks, $6 minimum, $15 maximum, not over $3,500 in all.
- (b) If only partial dependents survive, amounts proportionate to the relation of the contribution paid by deceased, and his average wage, for 300 weeks.
- (c) If no dependents, not above $200 expenses of last sickness and burial. Payments to children cease at age of 18 unless mentally or physically incapacitated for earning a living.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable medical and hospital service during first 30 days of disability, not over $100 in value, unless by agreement or order of commission a longer period or larger amount is provided for.
- (b) For total disability, 60 per cent of the wages for not more than 500 weeks, $6 minimum, $15 maximum, total not to exceed $4,200.
- (c) For partial disability, 60 per cent of the weekly wage loss, not over $15, for not more than 300 weeks. For specified injuries causing permanent partial disability, 60 per cent of the wages for various fixed periods, then compensation on basis of wage loss, if any, for not more than 300 weeks in all. Lump-sum payments may be approved by the commission after weekly payments for not less than six months.

Revision of benefits.—Agreements or awards may be reviewed at the instance of either party at any time within two years.

Insurance.—Insurance in approved companies is required unless the employer gives satisfactory proof of solvency and makes deposit or bond to secure payments.

Security of payments.—Claims have same preference over unsecured debts as do wages for labor.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are to be settled by the industrial accident commission, with appeal to courts on question of law.

MARYLAND.

Date of enactment.—April 16, 1914; in effect November 1, 1914; amended, special session, chapter 6, 1917, chapters 86, 368, 379, 597, 713, acts of 1916.

Injuries compensated.—Accidental personal injury arising out of and in course of employment, not due to willful intention or intoxication, and causing disability for more than two weeks or death within two years.

Industries covered.—Extrahazardous (enumerated list); others by joint election of employers and employees. Farm and domestic labor, country blacksmiths and wheelwrights are excluded.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All industries covered, except casual employees and those receiving more than $2,000 annually. Public employment: Workmen employed for wages in extrahazardous work, unless the municipality makes other equal or better provision.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Funeral expenses, not over $75.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent, 50 per cent of the weekly wages for eight years; not more than $4,250 nor less than $1,000.
- (c) To persons partly dependent, 50 per cent of the weekly wages for such portion of eight years as the commission may fix, the amount not to exceed $3,000.
- (d) If no dependents, funeral expenses only.
- (e) Payments to widow cease on remarriage, and to children on reaching the age of 16 years, unless mentally or physically incapacitated.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical, surgical, etc., expenses, not above $150 in value.
- (b) For total disability, 50 per cent of weekly wages, $5 minimum, $12 maximum, during its continuance, total not to exceed $5,000. If wages are less than $5, full wages will be paid.
- (c) For partial disability, 50 per cent of weekly wage loss, $12 maximum, total not over $3,000; specific periods for specified maimings, in lieu of other payments.

Where the injured employee is a learner, with prospect of increase of wages, this fact may be considered in fixing awards.

Payments may, in the discretion of the commission, be made in part or in whole in lump sums.

Revision of benefits.—The commission may modify its findings and orders at any time for justifiable cause.

Insurance.—Insurance in State fund, stock or mutual company, or proof of financial ability, is required.

Security of payments.—Policies must permit action by commission to secure payments to any person entitled. Payments may not be assigned, nor are they subject to execution or attachment.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are to be settled by the industrial accident commission, with appeal to courts.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Date of enactment.—July 28, 1911; in effect, July 1, 1912; amended, chapters 571, acts of 1912; 48, 448, 568, 696, 746, acts of 1913; 338, 708, acts of 1914; 123, 275, 314, acts of 1915; 72, 90, acts of 1916; 198, 249, 269, acts of 1917; 113, 119, acts of 1918; chapters 197, 198, 204, 205, 226, 272, 299, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries arising out of and in the course of employment causing incapacity for 10 days, or death, unless the injury is due to the serious and willful misconduct of the injured employee.

Industries covered.—All industries except farm labor and domestic service. Exempted employments may come under the act if the employer so elects.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees, except masters of vessels and seamen engaged in interstate or foreign commerce and employees whose work is not in the usual course of the employer's business, where the employer is an insurer under this act. Public employment: The State shall, and any county, city, town, or district having power of taxation and accepting the act may, compensate its laborers, workmen, and mechanics.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) The reasonable expense of burial, not exceeding $100. If dependents survive, this sum shall be deducted from the compensation payable.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent, a weekly payment equal to two-thirds the average weekly wages of the deceased employee, but not less than $4 nor more than $10, for a period of 500 weeks, the total not to exceed $4,000.
- (c) If only partial dependents survive, a sum proportionate to the portion of earnings contributed to their support by the deceased employee. Children cease to be dependents at 18 (16 if living apart from parent legally bound to render support), unless mentally or physically incapacitated from earning a living.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable medical and hospital services, and medicines as needed, for the first two weeks after injury, and in unusual cases for a longer period, in the discretion of the board.
- (b) For total disability, a sum equal to two-thirds the average weekly wages, but not less than $7 nor more than $16 per week, not exceeding 500 weeks, nor $4,000 in amount.
- (c) For partial disability, two-thirds the wage loss, but not to exceed $16 per week, nor $4,000 in amount.
- (d) In specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), two-thirds the weekly wages, not exceeding $10 nor less than $4 per week, for fixed periods, in addition to other compensation.

Lump-sum payments may be substituted in whole or part, after payments for injury or death have been made for not less than six months.

Revision of benefits.—Either party may demand a revision of payment at any time.

Insurance.—Employers under the act must subscribe to the State employees' insurance association or insure in some authorized company.

Security of payments.—Payments are not subject to assignment, attachment, or execution.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are decided primarily by a member of the industrial accident board, whose decision is subject to review by the board, with limited appeal to the courts.

MICHIGAN.

Date of enactment.—March 20, 1912; in effect September 1, 1912; amended, Nos. 50, 79, 156, 259, acts of 1913; Nos. 104, 153, 170, 171, acts of 1915; Nos. 41, 206, 235, 249, acts of 1917; Nos. 64, 110, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries causing incapacity to earn full wages for a period of one week, or death, arising out of and in the course of employment, unless such injuries resulted from intentional and willful misconduct of the injured person.

Industries covered.—Compulsory as to the State and its municipalities, and each incorporated public board and commission authorized to hold property and to sue and be sued. All industries having one or more persons in service under contract of hire if the employer elects.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees, including aliens and minors legally permitted to work. Public employment: All employees except officials of the State or of a municipality.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) To persons wholly dependent, a weekly payment equal to 60 per cent of the deceased workman's average weekly wages, but not less than $7 nor more than $14 per week for a period of 300 weeks.
- (b) If only partial dependents survive, such proportion of the above as the amount of previous contributions bears to such earnings.
- (c) If no dependents, the reasonable expense of the last sickness and burial, not exceeding $200 in addition to any medical services.

Payments to children cease at 16, unless mentally or physically incapacitated from earning.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable medical and hospital services for the first 90 days after injury.
- (b) For total incapacity, a weekly payment equal to 60 per cent of the earnings, but not less than $7 nor more than $14 per week, nor for a period longer than 500 weeks from the date of the injury, and not exceeding $6,000.
- (c) For partial incapacity, a weekly payment equal to 60 per cent of the wage loss, but not more than $14 per week, and for not longer than 500 weeks.
- (d) For certain specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), 60 per cent of the average weekly earnings for fixed periods, in lieu of other payments.

Payments begin with the eighth day after the injury, but if the disability continues for six weeks or longer, compensation is computed from the date of injury.

After six months lump sums may be substituted for weekly payments.

Revision of benefits.—Weekly payments may be reviewed by the industrial accident board at the request of either party.

Insurance.—Employer must furnish proof of financial ability to pay the required compensation, or insure in an authorized employers' liability company, or in an employers' insurance association organized under State laws, or become a member of a State insurance fund administered by the State commissioner of insurance.

Security of payments.—In case of insolvency, claims constitute a first lien upon all property of the employer. Employers must furnish proof of financial ability to pay compensation, or insure in approved companies or with the State.

Settlement of disputes.—Either party may request the industrial accident board to appoint a committee of arbitration, whose decisions are subject to review by the board. The supreme court may review questions of law.

MINNESOTA.

Date of enactment.—April 24, 1913; in effect October 1, 1913; amended, chapters 193, 209, acts of 1915; chapters 302, 351, acts of 1917; chapters 176, 185, 354, 356, 358, 363, 367, 416, 439, 442, 508, acts of 1919, and chapter 44, special session, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injury by accident arising out of and in the course of employment causing disability for more than one week, or death, unless intentionally caused, or due to the intoxication of the injured person.

Industries covered.—All excepting common carriers by steam railroad and farm and domestic service, in the absence of contrary election by employers.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees, including aliens and minors lawfully employed, in the absence of contrary election, employees whose work is casual and not in the usual course of the employer's business excepted. Public employment: Included, except employees of State, those elected or appointed for regular terms, and employees of cities whose charters provide for compensation.

Burden of payment.—Cost rests upon the employer, except that upon agreement with employee contributions may be required.

Compensation for death:

(a) $100 funeral expenses.

(b) To a widow alone, 40 per cent of monthly wages of deceased, increasing to 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent if four or more children; to a dependent husband alone, 30 per cent; to a dependent orphan, 45 per cent, with 10 per cent additional for each additional orphan, with a maximum of 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent; if none of the above, 35 per cent to one parent and 45 per cent if both survive; if none of the foregoing, to other relatives wholly dependent, if but one, 30 per cent, or if more than one, 35 per cent, divided equally.

Widows, on remarriage, receive in lump sum one-half the unpaid compensation.

(c) If only partial dependents survive, that proportion of benefits provided for actual dependents which contributions bore to wages earned.

(d) When no dependents are left, expense of last sickness and burial.

Maximum weekly compensation $15, minimum $6.50.

Payments continue for not over 300 weeks, and cease when a child reaches the age of 18, unless physically or mentally incapacitated, and upon the death or marriage of other dependents unless otherwise specified.

Compensation for disability:

(a) Reasonable medical and surgical treatment, not exceeding 90 days nor $100 in value, unless ordered in exceptional cases, when $200 is the limit.

(b) For temporary total disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wages for not over 300 weeks.

(c) For permanent total disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the wages for 550 weeks, but not more than \$6.50 per week after 400 weeks.

(d) For temporary partial disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wage loss, not over 300 weeks.

(e) For specified permanent partial disability (mutilations, etc.), 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the earnings for fixed periods, in lieu of other payments, maximum of 400 weeks; for other permanent partial disabilities, not over 300 weeks.

Payments for disability may not be more than $15; nor may they be less than $6.50, unless the wages were less than $6.50, then full wages.

Lump sums must be substituted for periodical payments, but in case of death, permanent total disability, or certain maimings, the consent of the court must be obtained.

Revision of benefits.—After six months from the date of an award either party may apply to the court for revision.

Insurance.—Employers may insure in any authorized company, stock or mutual, or maintain cooperative schemes, assuming other and greater risks.

Security and payments.—Insured workmen have an equitable lien upon any policy becoming due, and in case of the employer's incapacity the insurer shall make payment directly to them. Claims have same preference as unpaid wages.

Settlement of disputes.—By judge of district court, in a summary manner, subject to review by the supreme court as to questions of law.

MISSOURI.

Date of enactment.—April 28, 1919. Effective: [Deferred by referendum.]

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in course of employment causing disability for more than seven days, or death within 350 weeks, unless due to employee's or another's willful misconduct, including intentional self-inflicted injury, intoxication, or willful failure or refusal to use a safety appliance or perform a duty required by statute or failure to obey reasonable safety rule.

Industries covered.—All where employer has five or more employees, except farm labor and domestic servants provided employer fails to reject; compulsory as to the State and its municipalities except where the employee has rejected the act. Employers not included may elect to accept act.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries covered, including minors but excluding casual employees not engaged in the usual business of the employer, and outworkers. Public employment: All employees except officials of political subdivisions and those who reject act.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses not to exceed $100 and if not otherwise covered, $200 for expenses of last sickness.
- (b) To total dependents, two-thirds of average annual earnings for not to exceed 300 weeks. Payments for more than one dependent child to be divided in the discretion of the commission. If more than one person is dependent the compensation is to be divided equally.
- (c) To partial dependents according to the facts but only when there are no total dependents.

The maximum weekly payment is to be $15 and minimum $6.

Payments to children cease at 17, unless physically or mentally incapacitated.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Such medical, surgical and hospital, etc., treatment as may be reasonably required for first eight weeks, not exceeding $200 in value.
- (b) For temporary total disability, two-thirds of wages for not over 400 weeks.
- (c) For temporary partial disability, two-thirds of wage loss, for not over 200 weeks, not in excess of $12 per week.
- (d) For permanent partial disability, two-thirds of wages for periods fixed by commission, but not in excess of 400 weeks; for certain specific injuries (mutilations, etc.), two-thirds of wages for fixed periods, in addition to all other compensation; for disfigurement in an amount not to exceed $750.
- (e) For permanent total disability, two-thirds of wages for 240 weeks, and thereafter for life on basis of 40 per cent of wages.

Except where otherwise limited the maximum weekly payment is $15 per week and the minimum $6.

No compensation is payable for the first seven days after the injury unless disability continues for more than six weeks.

The commission may commute the compensation by the payment of a lump sum.

Revision of benefits.—Readjustment of compensation may be made by the commission on its own motion or on application.

Insurance.—An employer under the act must insure his liability for compensation in an authorized insurance company or furnish proof of ability to carry own liability.

Security of payments.—Compensation is not assignable, and is exempt from attachment, garnishment, and execution, and from set-off or counter claim, or any liability for any debt, and is entitled to the same preference as claims for wages without limit as to time or amount.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are decided primarily by the Missouri Workmen's Compensation Commission, with right of appeal to the circuit court on questions of law.

MONTANA.

Date of enactment.—March 8, 1915; in effect July 1, 1915. Amended, chapters 95, 100, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries arising out of and in course of employment, resulting from some fortuitous event, causing death, or disability for more than two weeks.

Industries covered.—“All inherently hazardous works and occupations,” in which employers elect, including manufactures, construction work, transportation, and repair of the means thereof, but not including agricultural or domestic labor; compulsory as to public employment.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons other than independent contractors, employed in the industries covered, whether as manual laborers or otherwise, except casual employees whose work is not in the usual course of the employer's business. Public employment: All employees in the industries covered.

Burden of payment.—All on employer; employees may contribute to hospital fund. Compensation for death:

- (a) $75 for funeral expenses if death occurs within six months of injury.
- (b) To beneficiaries (widow, widower, child, or children under 16, or invalid child above 16), 50 per cent of wages of the deceased if residents of the United States; if not, 25 per cent, unless otherwise required by treaty. To major dependents (father or mother), in case there are no beneficiaries, 40 per cent. To minor dependents (brothers or sisters actually dependent), if no beneficiary or major dependent, 30 per cent. Nonresident alien dependents receive nothing unless required by treaty, nor do beneficiaries if citizens of a Government excluding citizens of the United States from equal benefits under compensation laws; not over 50 per cent of above rates in any case. Term of payments may not exceed 400 weeks, $12.50 maximum, $6 minimum; if wages less than $6, then full wages. Payments cease on remarriage of widow or widower, or when child, brother, or sister reaches the age of 16, unless an invalid.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical and hospital services during first two weeks after happening of injury, not over $50 in value, unless there is a hospital contract.
- (b) For temporary total disability, 50 per cent of wages during disability, $12.50 maximum, $6 minimum, unless wages are less than $6, when full wages will be paid, for not more than 300 weeks.
- (c) For permanent total disability, same scale as above for 400 weeks, then $5 per week while disability continues.
- (d) For partial disability, 50 per cent of the wage loss, not over $6.25 per week, nor 75 per cent of the compensation provided for loss of the injured member; payments to continue not more than 150 weeks for permanent cases, and 50 weeks if temporary.
- (e) For specified maimings, 50 per cent of wages but not more than $12.50 per week nor less than $6 per week unless wages are less, then full wages.

Periodical payments may be converted in whole or in part to lump sums.

Revision of benefits.—Decisions and awards may be rescinded or amended at any time by the industrial accident board for good cause.

Insurance.—The employer may carry his own risk on a showing of financial ability; security may be required for probable liabilities and must be given when a continuing payment is ascertained. Insurance may be carried in any company authorized to do business in the State, or the employer may contribute to a State fund.

Security of payments.—In case of bankruptcy, etc., liabilities under this act are a first lien upon any deposit made by an employer, and if this is not sufficient, then on any property of the employer or insurer within the State, and shall be prorated with other lienable claims.

Settlement of disputes.—By industrial accident board, with limited appeal to courts.

NEBRASKA.

Date of enactment.—April 21, 1913; in effect December 1, 1914. [Deferred by referendum.] Amended, chapter 85, acts of 1917; chapter 91, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injury causing disability for more than seven days, or death, caused by accident arising out of and in the course of employment, except accident caused by or resulting in any degree from willful negligence or intoxication.

Industries covered.—All industries where one or more persons are employed by the employer in the regular trade, business, or occupation of the employer, except domestic service, agriculture, and interstate or foreign commerce, in the absence of contrary election. Exempt employers may make an affirmative election.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees, including aliens and minors, but excluding employees whose work is but casual or not for the purpose of gain or profit of the employer or not in the usual course of the employer's business, and home workers. Public employment: All persons employed by the State, or any Government agency created by it, not elected or appointed for a regular term.

Burden of payment.—The entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) In addition to any other benefits, a reasonable amount not exceeding $150 to cover expenses of last sickness and burial.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent, 66⅔ per cent of the employee's wages, but not less than $6 nor more than $15 per week, during dependency, but not exceeding 350 weeks; if the wages of the deceased were less than $6 per week then full wages are to be paid as compensation.
- (c) If only partial dependents survive, a proportion of the above corresponding to the relation the contribution of the deceased to their support bore to his wages.

Compensation to children ceases when they reach the age of 16 years, unless they are physically or mentally incapacitated from earning.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical and hospital services not exceeding $200 in value.
- (b) For total disability, 66⅔ per cent of the weekly wages, but not more than $15 nor less than $6 per week for 300 weeks; thereafter, for life or while disability lasts 45 per cent of such wages, but not more than $12 nor less than $4.50 per week unless wages are less, then full wages.
- (c) For partial disability, 66⅔ per cent of loss of earning capacity, but not exceeding $15 per week nor exceeding 300 weeks.
- (d) For certain specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), 66⅔ per cent of wages for fixed periods in lieu of other benefits, $15 maximum, $6 minimum, unless wages are less, then wages.

Payments begin with the eighth day, but if disability continues six weeks or longer, compensation is computed from the date of injury.

Lump sums may be substituted for periodic payments, but if for death or permanent disability, the approval of the court must be obtained.

Revision of benefits.—Benefits running for a period of six months or longer may be revised at any time by agreement of the parties, with the approval of the compensation commissioner, or after six months by application of either party to a court.

Insurance.—An employer under the act must insure his liability for compensation in an authorized stock or mutual insurance company, or furnish proof of financial ability to make payments.

Security of payments.—Insurance policies must inure directly to the benefit of beneficiaries and be enforceable in an action by them.

Compensation rights and awards have the same preference against the assets of the employer as unpaid wages for labor.

Settlement of disputes.—All disputed claims must be submitted to the compensation commissioner, from whose award either party may appeal to the district court of the county, the case to be heard and determined as a cause in equity, with the right of further appeal to the supreme court.

NEVADA.

Date of enactment.—March 15, 1913; in effect July 1, 1913; amended, chapter 190, acts of 1915; chapter 233, acts of 1917; chapter 176, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries arising out of and in the course of employment, causing incapacity to earn full wages for more than seven days or death, except when caused by the employee's willful intent or intoxication.

Industries covered.—All except domestic and farm labor, provided the employer elects; compulsory as to the State and its municipalities.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in the industries covered, including aliens and minors, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed, but excluding employees whose work is both casual and not in the usual course of the employer's business. Public employment: All employees.

Burden of payment.—The entire cost rests on the employer, except that he may deduct one-half the cost of an "accident benefit fund," not more than $1 per month, from each employee's wages for medical, etc., expenses.

Compensation for death:

(a) Burial expenses not to exceed $125.

(b) To widow or dependent widower, 30 per cent of the average monthly wages, with 10 per cent additional for each child under 18 years of age. If only children survive, 15 per cent for each child; the total in either case not to exceed 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent. If there are none of the foregoing, one dependent parent may receive 25 per cent, and two 35 per cent; if dependent brothers or sisters under 18, 20 per cent for one, and 30 per cent if more than one. Other cases of dependency are to be dealt with according to the facts.

Payments to a widow or dependent widower cease on remarriage; widow receives two years' benefits in a lump sum. Payments to children cease at 18, unless incapable of self-support.

Payments to nonresident alien beneficiaries are 60 per cent of the above. No excess of wages above $120 per month shall be considered in awarding benefits.

No lump-sum settlements are allowed in case the widow, dependent children, or other persons are wholly dependent.

Compensation for disability:

(a) Reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital aid for not more than 90 days, but may be extended to 1 year by the industrial commission.

(b) For temporary total disability, an amount equal to 60 per cent of the average monthly wages, but not less than $30 nor more than $72 for not over 100 months, with $10 per month additional if injured person had dependents, total amount not to exceed $7,200.

(c) For permanent total disability, 60 per cent of the average monthly wage, not less than $30 nor more than $60, payable during life.

(d) For temporary partial disability, 60 per cent of the loss of earning capacity, but not more than $40 per month for not more than 60 months, wages in excess of $120 per month not to be considered.

(e) For certain specific injuries (mutilations, etc.), a monthly payment equal to one-half the monthly wages, not less than $30 nor more than $60, for fixed periods, in addition to the payments for temporary total disability.

No compensation is payable for the first week of disability, but if it continues one week beyond the first seven days or longer compensation is paid from the date of the injury.

The industrial commission may permit the substitution of lump sums for monthly payments in an amount not exceeding $5,000.

Revision of benefits.—Readjustment of compensation may be made by the commission on application therefor.

Insurance.—Employers coming under this act must insure in the State insurance fund.

Security of payments.—State management of the insurance fund and collection of premiums by the State. Payments are not assignable and are exempt from attachment, etc.

Settlement of disputes.—All matters relating to the amount of compensation to be paid are determined by the industrial commission.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Date of enactment.—April 15, 1911; in effect January 1, 1912, ch. 163.

Injuries compensated.—Any injury to an employee arising out of and in the course of employment causing disability of over two weeks, or death, unless due to willful misconduct, intoxication, or violation of law.

Industries covered.—Industries dangerous to life or limb (enumerated list), including the operation and maintenance of steam and electric railroads, work in shops, mills, factories, etc., employing five or more persons; work about lines or cables charged with electricity; operations dangerously near explosives used in the industry, or to a steam boiler owned and operated by the employer; and work in or about any quarry, mine, or foundry (enumerated list); provided the employer elects.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All workmen engaged in any of the employments covered by this law. Public employment: Government employees are not mentioned.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) To persons wholly dependent, a sum equal to 150 times the average weekly earnings of the deceased, not to exceed $3,000.
- (b) If only partial dependents survive, such proportion of the above compensation as corresponds to the portion of wages contributed to their support.
- (c) If no dependents are left, expenses of medical care and burial to a reasonable amount, not in excess of $100.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) For total disability, a sum beginning with the fifteenth day, not exceeding 50 per cent of average weekly earnings.
- (b) For partial disability, a sum not in excess of 50 per cent of the loss of earning capacity.

In no case is compensation to exceed $10 a week nor run for a longer period than 300 weeks.

The court may determine the amount of lump sums payable as a substitute for weekly payments.

Revision of benefits.—The injured person, when requested by the employer, must submit to medical examination not oftener than once a week.

Insurance.—No provision.

Security of payments. The employer must satisfy the commissioner of labor of his ability to pay the required compensation or file a bond conditioned on the discharge of all liability incurred under the act.

Weekly payments have the same preferential claims against the assets of the employer as is allowed for unpaid wages or personal services.

Settlement of disputes.—All questions not settled by agreement are determined by an action in equity.

NEW JERSEY.

Date of enactment.—April 4, 1911; in effect July 1, 1911; amended by chapter 174, acts of 1913; chapter 244, acts of 1914; chapter 149, acts of 1918; and chapter 93, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injury by accident arising out of and in the course of employment causing disability of over 10 days, or death, unless intentionally self-inflicted or due to intoxication.

Industries covered.—All employments in the absence of contrary election.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees except casual. Non-resident aliens receive no benefits. Public employment: Every employee of the State, municipality, etc., except persons receiving a salary greater than $1,200 per year, and those holding an elective office.

Burden of payment.—The entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) The expense of the last sickness not exceeding $200, and not exceeding $100 for burial.
- (b) To one dependent, 35 per cent of the wages of the deceased person, and for each additional dependent 5 per cent additional, the total not to exceed 60 per cent, payable for not more than 300 weeks. Compensation not to be less than $6 nor more than $12 per week, unless the earnings were less than $6 when full wages are paid.
- (c) If no dependents, chapter 203, acts of 1918, requires the sum of $400 to be paid to the commissioner of labor.

No compensation is allowed to nonresident alien dependents.

Payments to all dependents cease at death, to widows on remarriage, and to orphans on reaching the age of 18, unless physically or mentally deficient. A lump-sum payment may be substituted at the discretion of the court of common pleas.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable medical and hospital services for 27 consecutive days following the day of the accident, not exceeding $50 in value, which may be extended to 17 weeks and $200 in value in exceptional cases.
- (b) For temporary disability 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wages, payable during disability, but not beyond 300 weeks.
- (c) For permanent total disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wages during such disability, not beyond 400 weeks.
- (d) For certain specific injuries (mutilations, etc.) producing partial but permanent disabilities, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wages during fixed periods, in addition to payments for any period of total disability.

All weekly payments are subject to a minimum of $6 per week and a maximum of $12 per week unless earnings were less than $6 when full wages are paid.

A lump-sum payment may be substituted at the discretion of the workmen's compensation bureau.

Revision of benefits.—At any time after one year from the time an award becomes operative, either party may demand a revision of benefits.

Insurance.—No provision in the principal act. Supplemental acts (ch. 178 and ch. 262, acts of 1917) require every employer, whether accepting the compensation act or not, to furnish proof of ability to carry his own insurance, or to be insured in an authorized company; the insurance provisions do not apply to farm laborers or domestic service.

Security of payments.—Insurance policies must be for the benefit of the employees, and be directly available on suits by them for their enforcement. The right of compensation has the same preference against the assets of the employer as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law for a claim for unpaid wages.

Settlements of disputes.—A workmen's compensation bureau created by chapter 149, acts of 1918, is charged with the duty of hearing and determining disputes, subject to an appeal to the courts.

NEW MEXICO.

Date of enactment.—March 13, 1917; in effect June 8, 1917; amended, chapter 44, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injury by accident arising out of and in course of employment, causing disability for more than 14 days, or death within one year, not due to the intoxication of the injured man or willfully suffered by him or intentionally inflicted by himself or another. Failure to observe statutory safety regulations or to use safety devices will cause the compensation to be reduced 50 per cent.

Industries covered.—Extrahazardous occupations (enumerated list) in which four or more persons are employed, unless contrary election is made. If the injury is received while at work on a derrick, scaffold, etc., 10 or more feet above ground, the act applies without regard to the number of employees. Other occupations may be included by joint written agreement.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in the industries covered, except those purely casual and not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business. Public employment: Not mentioned.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $75 for funeral expenses if death occurs as a proximate result.
- (b) 40 per cent of earnings to dependent widow or widower alone, with 5 per cent additional for each child; 25 per cent to one or two orphans, 10 per cent additional for each additional child, totals in either case not to exceed 60 per cent. If no spouse or child survives, a parent or parents in any degree dependent receives 20 per cent; if none of the foregoing survive and there are brothers or sisters in any degree dependent, 15 per cent shall be paid for one, and 5 per cent for each additional one, the total not to exceed 25 per cent.
- (c) No payment shall extend beyond 300 weeks, nor shall amounts paid partial dependents exceed the actual contributions made by the deceased to their support. Payments cease on the remarriage of a widow or widower, on a child, brother, or sister attaining the age of 18, unless mentally or physically incapacitated for earning, on the death of any dependent, the adoption of an infant, or his becoming self-supporting before reaching 18 years of age.

The earnings upon which death benefits are computed shall be taken as not above $30 per week, nor less than $12 per week except where the earnings are less than $12 per week, then the amount of the earnings.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical, surgical, and hospital services for the first 14 days, not over $50 in value, unless an adequate scheme of hospital service has been provided for, in which case such scheme shall be followed out.
- (b) For total disability, 50 per cent of the workman's earnings, for a term not to exceed 520 weeks.
Weekly benefits shall be not more than $12 nor less than $6 per week, unless the earnings are less than $6, when the full amount shall be paid.
- (c) For permanent partial disability, 50 per cent of earnings for specified injuries, for various periods ranging from 3 to 150 weeks, in addition to payments for any period of total disability; other cases to be compensated proportionately; disfigurement of head or face, not over $500.

Weekly benefits shall be not more than $12 nor less than $6 per week, unless the earnings are less than $6, when the full amount shall be paid.

Lump-sum settlements may be approved for part or all the benefits, for either disability or death.

Revision of benefits.—The employer may at any time require a medical examination of a beneficiary, and the court may adjust awards accordingly.

Insurance.—Employers under the act must file with the district court of the county insurance or security for the payment of benefits provided by this act, unless a certificate of financial ability is obtained.

Security of payments.—Policies of insurance must inure directly to the benefit of claimants. Benefits are exempt from attachment, garnishment, or execution, and can not be assigned.

Settlement of disputes.—Act is administered by courts. Proceedings are to be summary as far as possible. Appeals lie to the supreme court.

NEW YORK.

Date, of enactment.—December 16, 1913; in effect July 1, 1914; amended, chapters 41, 316; acts of 1914; chapters 167, 168, 615, 674, acts of 1915; chapter 622, acts of 1916; chapter 705, acts of 1917; chapters 249, 633, 634, 635, acts of 1918; chapters 458, 498, 629, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Accidental injuries arising out of and in course of employment, and disease or infection naturally and unavoidably resulting therefrom, causing disability for more than two weeks, or death, unless caused by the willful intention of the injured employee to bring about the injury or death of himself or another, or by his intoxication while on duty.

Industries covered.—“Hazardous employments,” including extensive classified list; also all other employments not so enumerated, in which four or more workmen or operatives are regularly employed, domestic and farm labor excepted.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries covered. Public employment: Included.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $100 for funeral expenses.
- (b) To a widow or dependent widower alone, 30 per cent of wages of deceased, 10 per cent additional for each child under 18; dependent orphans under 18 receive 15 per cent each, and dependent parents, brothers, or sisters receive 15 per cent each; aggregate payments in no case to exceed 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent.
- (c) Payments to widow or widower cease on death or remarriage or when dependence of widower ceases, with two years' compensation on remarriage; payments to children, brothers, and sisters cease at 18, and to parents when dependence ceases.

In computing the above benefits no wages in excess of $100 monthly are considered.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical and surgical treatment and hospital services for 60 days, or longer where the conditions require, costs to be approved by the commission.
- (b) For total disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wages during continuance.
- (c) For partial disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wage loss; for specified permanent partial disabilities (mutilations, etc.), 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wages for fixed periods, in lieu of other payments; separate provision for disfigurements.

The foregoing payments may not be less than $5 nor more than $15 per week, except for certain maimings the maximum may be $20.

Payments begin on the fifteenth day, but if the disability continues for more than 49 days, compensation is allowed from the beginning.

Revision of benefits.—Awards may be reviewed at any time, and ended or increased or decreased within the limits fixed.

Insurance.—Employer must give proof of financial ability to make payments (deposit of securities may be required), or must insure in State fund or mutual or stock company.

Security of payments.—Insurance may be made to inure directly to the benefit of claimants; insolvency of employer does not release insurance company. Payments have same preference as unpaid wages for labor without limit as to amount.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the State industrial commission, with limited appeal to courts.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Date of enactment.—Approved March 5, 1919; effective July 1, 1919, ch. 162; amended by chapter 73, special session of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries arising in the course of the employment causing disability for more than seven days or death within 6 years, not caused by employee's willful intention to injure himself or to injure another.

Industries covered.—"Hazardous employments," including any employment in which one or more employees are regularly employed in the same business or establishment, except agricultural or domestic service and common carriers by steam railroad. Employments not classed as hazardous may elect to come under act.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons engaged in hazardous occupations, including minors, apprentices, and aliens, but excluding casual employees whose work is both casual and not in the course of the employer's business. Public employment: All employees of the State or any political subdivision thereof.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

(a) Burial expenses not to exceed $100.

(b) To widow or wholly dependent widower without children, 35 per cent of the average weekly wages until death or remarriage; 10 per cent additional for each child under the age of 18, but not to exceed 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the average weekly wages. Upon remarriage of widow she shall receive 156 weeks' compensation in a lump sum.

To orphans under 18, 25 per cent for one and 10 per cent for each additional not to exceed 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the average weekly wages. Payments cease at 18 unless incapable of self-support.

To one dependent parent, 25 per cent, and to two, 20 per cent each when there is no widow, dependent widower, or child; if there are, then such amount as may remain after the widow, widower, or child are provided for, the total not to exceed 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the average weekly wages, to continue until death.

To wholly dependent sister, brother, grandparent or grandchild, if no widow, widower, or child survives, if one, 20 per cent, if two, 30 per cent to be equally divided, to continue for eight years or until death, marriage, or termination of dependency.

(c) To partly dependent parents, brothers, sisters, grandparents, or grandchildren such percentages as may be allowed by board.

Payments are to be computed on the basis of a minimum wage of $18 and a maximum of $30 per week.

Compensation for disability:

(a) Such medical, etc., service and supplies as the injury may require.

(b) For total disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the average weekly wages during disability.

(c) For temporary partial disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the loss of earning capacity.

(d) For permanent partial disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of weekly wages for fixed periods determined by percentages of total disability.

Compensation is paid from date of the injury if disability continues beyond seven days.

The maximum weekly compensation is $20 per week, and the minimum $6.

Lump-sum payments may be made instead of weekly payments when bureau thinks it to be to the best interest of the beneficiary.

Revision of benefits.—Bureau may review at any time, on its own motion or on application.

Insurance.—Insurance in the State fund is required of all employers in hazardous work.

Security of payments.—Fund is administered by workmen's compensation bureau. Agreements to waive rights to compensation are invalid, and all assignments of compensation are void. Compensation is exempt from claims of creditors.

Settlements of disputes.—All disputes are settled by the workmen's compensation bureau, with limited appeal to the district courts.

OHIO.

Date of enactment.—June 15, 1911; in effect January 1, 1912; amended pages 72, 396, acts of 1913; 193, acts of 1914; 508, acts of 1915; 6, 157, 450, 528, acts of 1917; 277, 313, 555, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—All injuries, not self-inflicted, received in the course of employment, causing disability beyond one week, or death.

Industries covered.—All industries employing five or more persons regularly in the same business; also establishments with less than five workmen, if the employer elects to pay the premiums provided by this act.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees excluding persons whose employment is but casual and not in usual course of trade or business of employer but including aliens and minors. Public employment: Persons in the service of the State, or its political subdivisions, excepting the officials of the State or municipal governments, and policemen and firemen in cities where pension funds are established and maintained by municipal authority.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses not to exceed $150.
 - (b) To persons wholly dependent, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the average weekly earnings of the deceased workman, not to exceed \$15 weekly, for eight years after the date of the injury, not less than \$2,000 nor more than \$5,000.
 - (c) If only partial dependents survive, a proportionate sum, not to exceed $15 weekly, to continue for all or such portion of the period of eight years as the industrial commission may determine in each case, not exceeding a maximum of $5,000.
 - (d) If no dependents, medical and hospital services not exceeding $200 in value and burial expenses as above.
- Dependence of children not presumed after 16 unless physically or mentally incapacitated.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical, hospital, etc., services, not to exceed $200, but more may be allowed in cases of actual necessity.
- (b) For temporary total disability, a weekly payment of 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of average weekly wages, during disability, not less than \$5 nor more than \$15 per week, but not for longer than six years, nor exceeding \$3,750.
- (c) For permanent total disability, a weekly payment as above, continuing until death.
- (d) For partial disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of loss of earning capacity, during the continuance thereof, but not exceeding \$12 per week, or a total of \$3,750.
- (e) In certain specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), compensation of 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of wages, for fixed periods, with the same maximum and minimum limitations as noted above.

Payments under (d) and (e) are in addition to payments during temporary total disability.

In all cases, if wages are less than prescribed minimum, then total wages are paid as compensation; an expected increase in wages may be given consideration.

Revision of benefits.—The industrial commission may from time to time make such modification or change in its former findings of fact as it deems necessary.

Insurance.—The law creates a State insurance fund, under control of an industrial commission, in which employers under the act must insure, or give proof of ability to provide benefits equal to those provided by the State insurance fund. Noninsuring employers may be required to give security or bond to guarantee the payment of benefits falling due.

Security of payments.—Insurance is under State control. Claims for compensation under this law have the same preference against the assets of the employer as is or may be allowed by law on judgments rendered for claims for taxes.

Settlement of disputes.—The commission hears and determines all cases within its jurisdiction, limited right of appeal to the civil courts being reserved to the claimant.

OKLAHOMA.

Date of enactment.—March 22, 1915; in effect September 1, 1915. Amended, chapter 14, acts of 1919

Injuries compensated.—Personal injuries causing disability for more than seven days arising out of and in course of employment, not due to the willful intention of the injured employee to injure himself or another, intoxication, or willful failure to use statutory safeguard. If disability continues for 21 days compensation is paid from date of injury. Fatal injuries not covered.

Industries covered.—“Hazardous” (enumerated list and general clause), in which more than two persons are employed, including work by State or municipalities; agriculture, horticulture, stock raising, retail stores, and interstate railways not included.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: Persons engaged in manual or mechanical work or labor in industries covered. Public employment: Workmen employed for wages in any hazardous work within meaning of this act.

Burden of payment.—All on employer. Schemes requiring contribution from employees may be approved by commission if they provide greater benefits.

Compensation for death.—Fatal injuries not covered.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Necessary medical, surgical, or other treatment for first 60 days not to exceed $100 in value unless in the judgment of the commission a greater period or amount is required.
- (b) For temporary total disability, 50 per cent of average weekly wages for not more than 300 weeks.
- (c) For permanent total disability, 50 per cent of average weekly wages for not more than 500 weeks.
- (d) For partial disability, 50 per cent of wage loss for not more than 300 weeks; for specified permanent injuries, 50 per cent of weekly wages for fixed periods in lieu of other compensation.

Payments may not exceed $18 per week nor be less than $8 unless wages were less than $8, when full wages will be paid. Periodical payments may be commuted to lump sums, and aliens who are nonresidents may have payments commuted to lump sums equal to one-half the value of the present worth.

Revision of benefits.—Awards may be reviewed at any time on application of any party in interest.

Insurance.—Employer must insure with a stock or mutual company or association of the State or companies out of the State issuing approved policies, or maintain a benefit fund, or provide satisfactory proof of ability to make compensation payments.

Security of payments.—Insurance companies or fund systems must be approved by the commission. Claims can not be assigned, and payments are exempt from levy, execution, etc. Deposits with the commission to secure payments may be required of employers or insurers.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are to be settled by the industrial commission, subject to appeal to the supreme court.

OREGON.

Date of enactment.—February 25, 1913; in effect June 30, 1914. [Deferred by referendum.] Amended, chapters 271, 334, acts of 1915; chapter 288, acts of 1917; chapters 55, 288, 397, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries or death by accident arising out of and in the course of employment, except those brought about intentionally.

Industries covered.—All hazardous occupations, including factories, mills, and workshops employing machinery, etc. (enumerated list); all in absence of contrary election. Other employers may accept the law by affirmative election.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: Any workman employed in enumerated hazardous employments in absence of contrary election, except farm laborers, who may be brought under the law by election. Nonresident alien beneficiaries other than parent, spouse, or child are not included unless otherwise provided by treaty. Public employment: State and municipalities, irrigation districts, etc., may elect to come under the act.

Burden of payment.—The employer deducts 1 cent from employee's daily earnings, and himself contributes this sum and a percentage of his monthly pay roll, fixed according to industry. The State gives a subsidy.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses not to exceed $100.
- (b) To widow or invalid widower, a monthly payment of $30, and to each child under 16 (daughters 18) $8 a month, the total monthly payments not to exceed $50.
- (c) To orphans under 16 years of age (daughters 18), a monthly payment of $15 each; the total monthly payments not to exceed $50.
- (d) To other dependents, there being none of the foregoing, a monthly payment to each of 50 per cent of the average support received during the preceding year, but not to exceed $30 a month in all.
- (e) To parents of an unmarried minor, a monthly payment of $25, until such time as he would have been 21, after which time compensation shall be paid according to (d) above.

Payments to widow or widower continue until death or remarriage. On remarriage of widow she receives a lump sum of $300. Payments to a male child cease at 16 and to a female at 18, unless the child is an invalid.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical, surgical, and hospital expenses not exceeding $250 in value.
- (b) For permanent total disability, monthly payments as follows: (1) If unmarried at the time of the injury, $30; (2) if with wife or invalid husband, but no child under 16 years, $35; if the husband is not an invalid, the sum is $30; (3) if married or a widow or widower with a child or children under 16 years of age, $8 additional to the provision under (2) above for each child until 16 years of age; the total monthly payments not to exceed $50.
- (c) For temporary total disability, the above payments apply during disability, increased 50 per cent for first six months, but in no case to exceed 60 per cent of monthly wages.
- (d) For temporary partial disability, a proportionate amount, corresponding to loss of earning power for not exceeding two years.
- (e) For certain specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), monthly payment of $25 per month payable for fixed periods, less the time during which any payments were made on account of total disability. A lump sum at the option of the injured person is provided in some cases.

Partial lump-sum payments to any beneficiary may be substituted at the discretion of the commission, but not to exceed $4,000.

Revision of benefits.—The rate of compensation may be readjusted either upon the application of the beneficiary or by the State industrial accident commission upon its own initiative.

Insurance.—Insurance is effected through the State industrial accident fund, under supervision of the State industrial accident commission.

Security of payments.—Insurance under State control.

Settlement of disputes.—Any decision of the commission is subject to review by the circuit court, and appeals lie from the circuit court as in other civil cases.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Date of enactment.—June 2, 1915; in effect January 1, 1916; amended. acts No. 57, 359, 395, acts of 1917; acts No. 277, 306, 310, 441, 455, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury by accident in the course of employment, causing disability for more than 10 days or death in 300 weeks, not intentionally self-inflicted or due to the intentional act of a third person for reasons not connected with the employment.

Industries covered.—All, unless employer makes election to the contrary. A supplemental act (No. 359, acts of 1917) requires all contracts with the State or any municipality to contain a provision that the contractor shall accept the provisions of the compensation law. (Agricultural and domestic employees are excluded by a separate act.)

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons rendering service to another for a valuable consideration, casual employees whose work is not in the regular course of the employer's business, and outworkers excepted. Public employment: All employees.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $100 funeral expenses.
- (b) 40 per cent of weekly wages to widow or dependent widower, 10 per cent additional for each child, total not to exceed 60 per cent; if no parent, 30 per cent if one or two children, 10 per cent additional for each child in excess of two, total not to exceed 60 per cent; if no consort or child under 16, but dependent parent, brothers, or sisters, 15 to 25 per cent of wages.
- (c) Payments cease on death, remarriage of widow or widower, cessation of dependence of widower, or when a child, brother, or sister attains the age of 16; not to continue beyond 300 weeks, unless for children under 16, when 15 per cent of wages will be paid for one and 10 per cent additional for each additional child, total not to exceed 50 per cent. Basic wages are not less than $10 nor more than $20 weekly.

Upon remarriage a widow is to receive the then value of the compensation for one-third of the unpaid period.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable medical and surgical expenses for first 30 days after disability begins, cost not to exceed $100; in addition, hospital treatment for 30 days at prevailing costs.
- (b) For total disability, 60 per cent of weekly wages for 500 weeks, $6 minimum, $12 maximum, total not to exceed $5,000, if wages less than $6 full wages will be paid.
- (c) For partial disability, 60 per cent of weekly wage loss, $12 maximum, for not over 300 weeks; fixed periods for specified injuries, in lieu of other payments, $6 minimum, $12 maximum, full wages if less than $6.

Payments may be commuted to a lump sum.

Revision of benefits.—Agreements and awards may be reviewed by the board at any time for proper cause.

Insurance.—Employers must insure in the State fund, a stock or mutual company, or give proof of financial ability.

Security of payments.—Agreements or claims may be filed with a prothonotary, who enters them as a judgment, and if approved by the board they become a lien on the property of the employer. A separate act provides for direct payments from insurance companies to the beneficiaries, in case of the employer's failure to make payments of benefits.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by a workmen's compensation board, with appeal to courts.

PORTO RICO.

Date of enactment.—April 13, 1916; in effect July 1, 1916; amended, act No. 9, acts of 1917. New act, February 25, 1918; in effect July 1, 1918.

Injuries compensated.—All personal injuries by accident occurring to a laborer in the course of his employment and due thereto, causing death within one year or disability, excepting injuries due to an attempt to commit crime or to injure himself, his employer, or another person; intoxication, or gross negligence, or the criminal act of a third person.

Industries covered.—All industries employing three or more persons except domestic service and agricultural work without mechanically driven machinery.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees of employers covered by the act, clerical employees in offices and commercial establishments where machinery is not used excepted; also excepting employees whose earnings exceed $1,500 per year. Public employment: Included.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death.—A compensation of three to four thousand dollars as a maximum to persons wholly dependent, the amount to be graded according to the earning capacity of the deceased, and the number of beneficiaries. Benefits may be apportioned among the dependent legal heirs by the will of the decedent if not in conflict with this act or the code.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical attendance, medicines, also hospital services when necessary, and sustenance, as the workman's relief commission may prescribe; but the allowance for medicine and food supplies shall be deducted from the compensation granted, and none allowed after the award.
- (b) For temporary disability an amount equal to one-half the weekly wages, not less than $3 nor more than $7, for not more than 104 weeks.
- (c) For permanent total disability not less than $2,000 nor more than $4,000, in proportion to the rate of wages earned at the time of injury.
- (d) For permanent partial disability not more than $2,500, in proportion to the rate of wages earned at the time of injury. The time and manner of payments are to be determined by the workman's relief commission.

Revision of benefits.—No provision.

Insurance.—All payments are made from the workman's relief trust fund established by the act, to which all employers covered by the act contribute.

Security of payment.—Fund is administered by the treasurer of the island. Rights and actions not assignable nor subject to attachment.

Settlement of disputes.—Claims are passed upon by the workman's relief commission, with limited appeal to the courts.

RHODE ISLAND.

Date of enactment.—April 29, 1912; in effect October 1, 1912; amended, chapter 937, acts of 1913; chapter 1268, acts of 1915; chapter 1534, acts of 1917; chapter 1795, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injuries by accidents arising out of and in the course of employment causing incapacity for earning full wages for a period of more than two weeks, or death, except where the injury resulted from the willful intention of the injured person to injure himself or another, or from intoxication.

Industries covered.—All industries except domestic service and agriculture, if the employer elects. Defenses in suits for damages are not abrogated unless more than five persons are employed.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in establishments covered by this act in absence of contrary election, employees whose work is of a casual nature and who are employed otherwise than for the purpose of the employer's business, and those earning above $1,800 a year excepted. Public employment: Employees of the State, and such classes of employees of cities and towns electing to accept the act as are designated in the act of acceptance, but not including members of regularly organized fire and police departments.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) To persons wholly dependent, a weekly payment equal to one-half the average weekly earnings of the deceased employee, but not less than $4 nor more than $10 per week, for a period of 300 weeks.
- (b) If only partial dependents survive, a sum proportionate to the amount which the annual contributions bore to the annual earnings of the deceased, for not exceeding 300 weeks.
- (c) If no dependents, the expense of the last sickness and burial of the deceased employee, not exceeding $200.

Payments to children cease on their reaching the age of 18 years unless they are physically or mentally incapacitated.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) The necessary medical and hospital services for the first four weeks after the injury.
- (b) For total incapacity, a weekly payment equal to one-half the wages, but not less than $7 nor more than $14 per week, during such incapacity, but not for a longer period than 500 weeks, nor more than $5,000.
- (c) For partial incapacity, a weekly payment equal to one-half the loss of earning power, but not exceeding $10 per week, during such incapacity, and not for a longer period than 300 weeks.
- (d) For certain specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), in addition to the above, one-half the wages, weekly payments to be not less than $4 nor more than $10 per week, for fixed periods.

Payments begin on the fifteenth day, but if the incapacity extends beyond four weeks, they revert to the date of the injury.

Lump-sum payments may be substituted by order of the superior court after compensation has been paid for six months for either death or injury.

Revision of benefits.—Amounts payable may be reviewed and modified by the superior court at any time within two years, if the time for payments has not expired.

Insurance.—Employers must insure, give proof of financial ability to make direct payments, or furnish security or bond. If employees contribute to any approved scheme or insurance plan, proportionate added benefits must be provided.

Security of payments.—Insurers are directly liable to claimants; beneficiaries have a first lien on any sum due from insurers to the employer on any policy.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the superior court on a petition in the nature of a petition in equity, filed by any party in interest. Appeals may be carried to the supreme court by any aggrieved person.

Date of enactment.—March 10, 1917; in effect June 1, 1917; amended, chapters 363, 314, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in course of employment, causing disability for more than 10 days or death, not due to intoxication or willful misconduct.

Industries covered.—All except agriculture and domestic service, in the absence of contrary election. Exempt occupations may come in by voluntary election.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons in service under a contract of hire or apprenticeship, except those whose employment is both casual and not in the usual course of the business or trade of the employer. Public employees: Employees of the State and its municipalities are included.

Burden of payment.—All on the employer, except that one-half of the fees of arbitrators may be charged to the compensation allowed in any case.

Compensation in case of death:

- (a) To a dependent widow, child, or children, a sum equal to four times the average annual earnings of the deceased person, not less than $1,650 nor more than $3,000; if none of these, similar amounts may be paid to a dependent parent, grandparent, brother, or sister. If there are none of the foregoing, collateral dependent heirs may receive such a percentage of the same amount as the deceased workman's contributions to their support during the preceding two years are of his earnings during such period.

- (b) If there are no dependents, the employer shall pay burial expenses in an amount not exceeding $150.

Payments are to be made in installments equal to one-half the wages, as the wages were paid, or weekly, if that is not feasible. Payments cease on the death of a beneficiary or the remarriage of a widow; but if there are dependent children, amounts otherwise due her go to the children.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Necessary medical, surgical, and hospital services for not more than 12 weeks nor in an amount above $150.

- (b) For total disability, 55 per cent of the weekly earnings, not more than $12 nor less than $6.50, unless earnings are less, then full wages, until four years' earnings are paid, not to exceed $3,000.

- (c) For partial disability, 55 per cent of the wage loss, not over $12 weekly, for not longer than six years; for specified injuries payments are to be made for fixed periods, in addition to the amount paid during any period of total disability.

- (d) For serious and permanent disfigurement of the hand, head, or foot not giving rise to other awards, an agreed or arbitrated award of not more than one year's earnings.

No payment is made for disability of not more than 10 days' duration, but if it continues for 6 weeks or more, compensation is payable from the date of the injury. Commutation to lump sums may be arranged for on a proper showing.

Revision of benefits.—Awards may be reviewed by the industrial commissioner at the request of either party, and modified according to the findings.

Insurance.—Insurance in an approved company or association is required, unless satisfactory proof of financial ability to make payments is furnished, or sufficient security is deposited with the State insurance department to guarantee payments.

Security of payments.—Insurance policies are to be valid regardless of the employer's solvency, and must provide that the workman shall have a first lien upon any amount becoming due him thereunder. Claims are unassignable, and payments are exempt from execution.

Settlement of disputes.—Arbitrators are to be chosen, one by each party, the industrial commissioner acting as chairman. If review is claimed, the commissioner may revise the decision or refer it back to the arbitration board. Appeal lies to the courts only on questions of law.

TENNESSEE.

Date of enactment.—April 15, 1919; effective July 1, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injury by accident arising out of and in course of the employment, causing disability for more than 14 days, or death, not due to employee's intoxication, willful, misconduct, or intentional self-inflicted injury, or refusal to use a safety appliance or perform a duty required by law.

Industries covered.—All employing 10 or more persons, except common carriers while engaged in interstate commerce, domestic and agricultural service, and coal mining. Those employing less than 10 persons, coal mines, and public employers may elect to come under the act.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employed in the industries covered except employees whose work is casual and not in the usual course of the employer's business. Public employment: Employees are not covered unless the employer elects to come under the act.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses not to exceed $100.
- (b) To widow, 30 per cent; with one child, 40 per cent; two or more children, 50 per cent. One orphan child, 30 per cent; each additional orphan, 10 per cent; total not to exceed 50 per cent. Dependent widower, 20 per cent. One dependent parent, 25 per cent; two dependent parents, 35 per cent. One grandparent, sister, brother, mother, or father-in-law, 20 per cent; two or more, 25 per cent, of the average weekly wages, in the order named, until death or marriage.
- (c) If only partial dependents survive, a proportion of the above corresponding to the relation of the contribution of the deceased to the total income of such dependents.

Payments to children cease upon their reaching the age of 18 years, unless incapable of self-support.

The maximum weekly compensation is $11 per week and the minimum $5, unless wages are less than $5, when full wages are paid, for not over 400 weeks.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable medical and surgical treatment for 30 days after notice of accident, not to exceed $100.
- (b) For temporary total disability, 50 per cent of average weekly wages, for not over 300 weeks.
- (c) For temporary partial disability, 50 per cent of wage loss for not over 100 weeks.
- (d) For permanent partial disability, 50 per cent of wage loss for not over 300 weeks; for certain specific injuries (mutilations, etc.) producing permanent partial disabilities, 50 per cent of wages during fixed periods.
- (e) For permanent total disability, 50 per cent of wages for not to exceed 550 weeks reduced to $5 per week after 400 weeks, with maximum total of $5,000.

Payments are to begin on the fifteenth day unless disability continues for more than six weeks, when they date from the injury.

Payments may not exceed $11 per week nor be less than $5, unless wages are less than $5, when full wages are paid, and may be commuted to a lump sum.

Revision of benefits.—Revision of payments for more than six months may be made by the court on agreement of parties; or, in case of disagreement, on application of one party.

Insurance.—Insurance is required in an authorized insurance company or association, or bond or proof of financial ability to make payments.

Security of payments.—Insurance policies must inure directly to the benefit of the beneficiaries and be enforceable in an action by them.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the judge or chairman of the county court, with right of appeal to the courts.

TEXAS.

Date of enactment.—April 16, 1913; in effect September 1, 1913; amended, chapter 103, acts of 1917.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury sustained in the course of employment causing incapacity to earn full wages for at least one week, or death, not due to the act of God, unless the employment is specially exposing, nor to the intentional act of a third person committed for personal reasons not connected with the employment, nor to the injured man's willful intent to injure himself or another, nor received while intoxicated.

Industries covered.—All in which three or more persons are employed, if the employer elects, except domestic and farm labor, railways (steam or electric) operated as common carriers, and vessels in interstate and foreign commerce.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries included, except those not in the usual course of the employer's trade or business. Public employment: No provision.

Burden of payment.—The entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) To the legal beneficiaries of the deceased employee, a weekly payment equal to 60 per cent of his wages, not less than $5 nor more than $15, for a period of 360 weeks, distributed according to law governing property distribution.
- (b) If no beneficiaries are left, the expenses of the last sickness and in addition a funeral benefit not to exceed $100.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical and hospital care for the first two weeks; hospital care for two weeks additional if necessary.
- (b) For total incapacity, a compensation equal to 60 per cent of the average weekly wages of the injured person, but not less than $5 nor more than $15 per week, during such disability, but not exceeding a period of 401 weeks.
- (c) For partial incapacity, a compensation equal to 60 per cent of the loss of earning power during such disability, in no case to exceed $15 per week, but not exceeding 300 weeks, or for both partial and total disability, 401 weeks.
- (d) For certain specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), compensation equal to 60 per cent of the average weekly wages of the injured person, for fixed periods, not less than $5 nor more than $15 per week, in lieu of all other compensation.

A lump-sum payment may be substituted for weekly payments in cases of death or permanent total disability, subject to the approval of the industrial accident board.

Revision of benefits.—On its own motion or on application of an interested party, the industrial accident board may at any time review an award.

Insurance.—Employers come under the law only by taking insurance, which may be effected through the Texas Employers' Insurance Association, or in any company admitted to do business in the State.

Security of payments.—Compensation is payable directly by the insurance association. Policies in other companies are subject to the provisions of the act. All benefits are nonassignable, and exempt from garnishment, attachment, etc.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are referable to the industrial accident board, whose decisions are subject to appeal to any court of competent jurisdiction.

UTAH.

Date of enactment.—March 15, 1917; in effect July 1, 1917; amended chapter 63, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in course of employment, causing disability for more than three days, or death within 3 years.

Industries covered.—Compulsorily, all except agriculture and domestic service, in which three or more persons are employed; elective as to all exceptions.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All persons regularly employed under any contract of hire, including aliens and minors legally permitted to work, but not including persons whose employment is but casual and not in the usual course of the employer's business. Public employment: Every person in the service of the State or a municipality, including regular members of the police and fire departments of cities and towns, excepting elective officials and officials receiving more than $2,400 per year salary.

Burden of payment.—All on employer, but employees may contribute to benefit schemes for benefits additional to those provided by the act.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Funeral expenses, not exceeding $150.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent, 60 per cent of the average weekly earnings of the deceased employees, not to exceed $16, for not over six years, $2,000 minimum, $5,000 maximum.
- (c) To persons partly dependent, the same amount, subject to the same limits as to maximum, for all or such part of the period of six years as the commission may in each case determine.

Payments to beneficiaries cease on their death or remarriage; to female children on their attaining the age of 18, and to males on reaching the age of 16, unless mentally or physically incapacitated from earning.

- (d) When there are no dependents the employer or his insurer must pay, in addition to medical and funeral expenses, the sum of $750 into the State treasury for a second-injury fund, unless the employer is insured in the State fund.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Such medical, nurse, and hospital services and medicines as the employer or insurer may deem proper, not over $500 in value.
- (b) For permanent total disability, 60 per cent of average weekly wages for five years, and 45 per cent thereafter until death, $16 maximum, $7 minimum.
- (c) For temporary total disability 60 per cent of weekly wages for 6 years, not to exceed $5,000; $16 maximum, $7 minimum.
- (d) For partial disability, 60 per cent of the weekly wage loss, not over $16 per week, for not more than six years. For specified injuries causing permanent partial disability, 60 per cent, not over $16 weekly, is to be paid for fixed periods, in addition to payment for temporary total disability; proportionate awards for disfigurement or injuries not enumerated.

Any periodical payment under special circumstances may be commuted to a lump sum by the commission.

Revision of benefits.—Revision may be made from time to time as in the opinion of the commission may be justified.

Insurance.—Employers must insure in the State fund, in a stock or mutual insurance company, or give proof of ability to meet their own compensation payments; but approved benefit schemes may be maintained.

Security of payments.—Policies in private insurance companies are binding without regard to the solvency of the employer, and are enforceable by the employee directly. Self-insurers may be required to deposit security or give a bond.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the State industrial commission, with limited appeal to the courts.

VERMONT.

Date of enactment.—April 1, 1915; in effect July 1, 1915; amended, Nos. 171, 173, 174, 175, acts of 1917; Nos. 158, 159, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury causing disability for more than seven days (14 days until July 1, 1918), or death within two years, arising out of and in course of employment, not due to the employee's willful intention to injure himself or another, his intoxication, or failure to use a safety appliance.

Industries covered.—All industrial establishments in which more than 10 persons are employed, and commerce as far as permissible under Federal laws, domestic labor excepted, unless election to the contrary is made. . Public service under municipalities which elect compensation system.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All under contract with or in service of an employer, domestic and casual employees, those not in the usual course of the employer's business, and those receiving more than $2,000 excepted. Public employes: All except those elected by popular vote or receiving in excess of $2,000 annually.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $100 for funeral expenses if death occurs within two years.
- (b) 33½ per cent of weekly wages to dependent widow or widower, 40 per cent if there be one or two children, and 45 per cent if more than two; if no parent, 25 per cent to one or two children, 10 per cent additional for each child in excess of two, total not to exceed 40 per cent; if no consort or child under 18, and dependent parent, grandparent, or grandchild, 15 to 25 per cent of wages.
- (c) Payments to widow cease on death or remarriage; to widower on remarriage or cessation of dependency; to children on reaching age of 18 unless incapable of self-support, in no case to exceed 260 weeks or $3,500 in amount; payments to other classes of beneficiaries end in 208 weeks at most. Basic wages are not less than $5 weekly.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical and hospital services for first 14 days, not to exceed $100.
- (b) For total disability 50 per cent of weekly wages for not more than 260 weeks, $3 minimum, $12.50 maximum, total not to exceed $4,000. If wages are less than $3, full wages will be paid.
- (c) For partial disability, 50 per cent of wage decrease, maximum $10, for not more than 260 weeks.
- (d) For certain specified injuries, 50 per cent of weekly wages, but not more than $12.50 nor less than $3, for designated periods ranging from four to 170 weeks, following the period of total disability, the total not to exceed 260 weeks. Payments may be commuted to one or more lump sums in any case.

Revision of benefits.—Awards may be reviewed on application at any time, but not oftener than once in six months.

Insurance.—Required unless deposit of security is made, or satisfactory proof of financial responsibility.

Security of payments.—Employees may have direct recourse to insuring company; insolvency of employer does not release insurer; compensation rights are preferred claims.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are determined by a commissioner of industries, with appeal to courts.

VIRGINIA.

Date of enactment.—March 21, 1918; in effect January 1, 1919, ch. 400.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries caused by accident arising out of and in course of employment, not due to the injured person's willful misconduct, intoxication, intention to injure himself or another, or failure to use a safety appliance or to perform some duty required by law or to obey a rule of the employer, and causing disability for more than 14 days or death within 6 years.

Industries covered.—All employing regularly more than 10 persons, in absence of contrary election, domestic and farm labor and interstate commerce and intrastate common carriers using steam excepted.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees of employers under the act who do not themselves make a contrary election, including minors and apprentices, except employees whose employment is not in the usual course of the employer's business. Public employment: All employees.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses not exceeding $100.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent a weekly payment equal to one-half the average weekly wages of the deceased; $10 maximum, $5 minimum.
- (c) If only partial dependents survive, such proportion of the above as the amount contributed bears to the annual earnings of the deceased employee.
- (d) Payments may not extend beyond a period of 300 weeks, nor to children after they attain the age of 18 years, unless physically or mentally incapacitated. Payments to a widow or widower are, on remarriage, to be divided among other dependents, if any.

Compensation to alien dependents (Canada excepted) may not exceed $1,000.

The total compensation may not exceed $4,000.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Necessary medical attention for the first 30 days; additional services, including surgical and hospital services and supplies, may be furnished at the employer's option, and must be accepted unless the industrial commission orders otherwise.
- (b) For total disability, one-half the weekly wages, not more than $10 nor less than $5 per week, for not more than 500 weeks, the total not to exceed $4,000.
- (c) For partial disability, one-half the wage loss, not more than $10 per week, for not more than 300 weeks; for specified injuries (loss of member or members) 50 per cent of the wages for fixed periods.

Lump sums may be substituted for periodic payments in any case after 26 weeks on agreement of the parties and the approval of the industrial commission.

Revision of benefits.—The industrial commission may review an award on its own motion before a judicial determination, or at any time on the application of a party in interest on the ground of a change in condition.

Insurance.—Every employer coming under the act must insure in a stock or mutual company, or in a State fund, or furnish satisfactory proof of financial ability to make direct payment.

Security of payments.—Claims are not assignable, and are exempt from claims of creditors; payments have the same preference for full amount as wage debts. Notice to the employer is notice to the insurer, and policies must inure directly to the benefit of the person entitled to compensation.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the industrial commission, subject to limited appeal to courts.

WASHINGTON.

Date of enactment.—March 14, 1911; in effect October 1, 1911; amended, chapter 138, acts of 1913; chapter 188, acts of 1915; chapters 28, 120, acts of 1917; chapters 67, 129, 130, 131, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries causing disability for more than eight days, or death, except injuries brought about intentionally.

Industries covered.—All extrahazardous employment (enumerated list and covering clause), but not including railway employees engaged in interstate commerce; public utilities; State, county, and municipal undertakings involving extrahazardous work.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries covered by the act; including employees on the pay roll at a rate not less than the average named in such pay roll. Public employment: All employees in industries covered by the act.

Burden of payment.—The entire burden rests upon the employer, except as to the medical aid fund, to which the employee contributes one-half; or an approved relief fund may be maintained by joint action.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Expenses of burial not to exceed $75 if unmarried, $100 if widow or child survives.
- (b) To widow or invalid widower, a monthly payment of $30; to each child under 16, $5 per month, the total not to exceed $50 per month.
A widow receives in addition to monthly payments a lump sum of $250 where the burial expenses do not exceed the amount allowed.
- (c) If no parent survives, a monthly payment of $10 to each child under 16 years of age, the total not to exceed $40 per month.
- (d) To other dependents, if none of the above survive, a monthly payment to each, during dependency, equal to 50 per cent of the average amount previously contributed to the dependent, the total not to exceed $20 per month.
- (e) To the parent or parents of an unmarried minor a monthly payment of $20 until the time he would have been 21. In case of dependence, payments to parents of minors are governed by (d).

Payments to a widow or widower cease on death or remarriage, and to a child on reaching the age of 16 years, or 18 years if invalid. If a widow remarries, she receives a lump sum of $240.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Proper medical, etc., services and care during the period of disability, if temporary; if permanent, until awards are made.
- (b) For permanent total disability: (1) If unmarried, $30 per month; (2) if wife or invalid husband, but no child, $30 a month; if husband is not an invalid, $15; (3) if married, or a widow or widower with child or children under 16 years, $5 a month additional for each child, the total not to exceed $50; if constant attendance is required, $20 per month additional. In case of death from whatever cause, while totally disabled, death benefits accrue as above.
- (c) For temporary total disability, payments as for permanent total disability during disability with specified rates for first six months, according to number of dependents.
- (d) For temporary partial disability, the payment as for total disability continues in proportion to the loss of earning power, if over 5 per cent.
- (e) For specified permanent partial disabilities, lump sums ranging from $500 to $2,000, in lieu of other payments, other disabilities to be compensated proportionately; parents of an injured minor receive in addition 10 per cent of the award to such minor.

No benefits are to be paid for the first 8 days unless the disability continues for more than 30 days.

Monthly payments may be converted into a lump-sum payment, not over $4,000, in case of death or permanent total disability.

Revision of benefits.—Revision may be had upon application of the beneficiary or upon the motion of the department.

Insurance.—Insurance is required in a State accident fund.

Security of payments.—Accident fund under State control.

Settlement of disputes.—By industrial insurance department, whose decisions are subject to review by the superior court, from which appeal lies as in other civil cases.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Date of enactment.—February 22, 1913; in effect October 1, 1913; amended, February 20 and March 13, 1915; ch. 131, February 13, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—All personal injuries not the result of willful misconduct or intoxication of the injured employee, disobedience to rules of employer, failure to use a safety device, or self-inflicted, causing incapacity for more than one week, or death within one year.

Industries covered.—All except domestic or agricultural labor, including the State and all government agencies.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries covered, including aliens, except members of firms, traveling salesmen, persons not legally employed, and the officers, managers, etc., of corporations. Public employment: Included, except elective officials.

Burden of payment.—Employer, 90 per cent; employees, 10 per cent.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Reasonable funeral expenses, not to exceed $150.
- (b) To the widow or invalid widower, $20 per month, and $5 per month additional for each child under the age of 15 years.
- (c) To other persons wholly dependent, if no widow, invalid widower, or child under the age of 15 years is left, 50 per cent of the average monthly support received from the deceased during the preceding year, not exceeding $20 per month, for six years.
- (d) If the deceased was a single minor, to a dependent parent, 50 per cent of the earnings, not to exceed $6 per week for 6 years unless parents were only partially dependent or deceased was under 15 years of age, then until the time when he would have become 21.
- (e) If only partial dependents survive, a compensation computed as in (c), with the same maximum.

Payments to a widow or widower cease on remarriage, and to children on reaching the age of 15 years unless child is an invalid. If widow or invalid widower remarry within two years of death of employee, he or she is to be paid 20 per cent of balance of 10 years' benefits.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical, nurse, and hospital services, not exceeding $150 ($300 in special cases, which may be increased to $600 by the commissioner).
- (b) For temporary disability, during such disability, 50 per cent of the average weekly earnings for not exceeding 52 weeks, except that for certain ununited fractures, etc., the period may be 78 weeks.
- (c) For permanent disability, 50 per cent of wages for periods varying with degree of disability (from 5 to 85 per cent, with special schedule for maimings), periods ranging from 20 to 340 weeks; above 85 to 100 per cent disability, 50 per cent of wages for life.

Lump-sum payments may be substituted for periodic payments in case of either injury or death.

Payments for all disabilities $5 minimum, $12 maximum.

Revision of benefits.—Awards may be modified at any time.

Insurance.—Insurance is effected through a State fund under the control of the compensation commissioner, or employers of approved ability may carry own risks, giving bond for performance of requirements not less than those of the law, without contributions from their employees.

Security of payments.—Payments may be made only to beneficiaries, and are exempt from claims of creditors or attachment or execution.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the commissioner; limited appeal to the supreme court of appeals.

WISCONSIN.

Date of enactment.—May 3, 1911; in effect same date; amended, chapters 599, 707, 772, acts of 1913; 121, 241, 316, 369, 378, 462, acts of 1915; 624, 637, acts of 1917; 136, 457, 568, 577, 668, 680, 692, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury by accident causing disability of at least one week, or death, while performing service growing out of and incidental to the employment, not intentionally self-inflicted; occupational diseases included.

Industries covered.—All, if the employer elects; election presumed where there are three or more employees, except as to agriculture and railroads. Compulsory as to the State and its municipalities.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees except those not employed in the usual trade, business, or occupation of the employer, including aliens, in the absence of contrary election. Public employment: All employees of the State or its political subdivisions, officials excepted.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) The reasonable expense of burial, not exceeding $100.
- (b) To persons wholly dependent, a sum equal to four years' earnings, but which when added to any prior compensation for permanent total disability shall not exceed six years' earnings.
- (c) If only partial dependents survive, a sum not to exceed four times the amount provided for their support during the preceding year.

All payments are to be made in weekly installments equal to 65 per cent of the average weekly earnings. Benefits for death resulting from intoxication are reduced 15 per cent.

Dependence of children ceases at 18, unless physically or mentally incapacitated.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical, surgical, and hospital treatment for 90 days, and for such additional time as will in the judgment of the industrial commission lessen the period of compensation; artificial members are also to be supplied. Employee may have Christian Science treatment unless employer elects to the contrary.
- (b) For total disability, 65 per cent of the average weekly earnings during such disability.
- (c) For partial disability, 65 per cent of loss of earning power.
- (d) For certain specified injuries (mutilations, etc.), a sum equal to 65 per cent of average weekly wages for fixed periods, ranging from 6 to 320 weeks, in lieu of other payments.
- (e) For serious permanent disfigurement, a lump sum may be allowed, not exceeding $750.

Payments begin with the eighth day, but if disability continues for more than 28 days, payment is to be made for the first 7 days.

In case of temporary or partial disability the aggregate compensation for a single injury shall not exceed four years' earnings; for permanent disability payments are limited to periods of from 9 to 15 years, according to the age of the injured person. Compensation is reduced 15 per cent if injury was due to intoxication.

Lump-sum payments may be substituted at any time after six months from the date of injury.

Revision of benefits.—The commission may modify or change its order or award within 10 days if a mistake is discovered; or a review by the court may be had on appeal within 20 days.

Insurance.—Insurance in approved companies is required unless the employer gives proof of financial ability; but the liability of the employer may not be reduced by such insurance.

Security of payments.—Claims for compensation are given the same preference as claims for labor, and are nonassignable and exempt from attachment or execution. The industrial commission may require security for payments of awards running six months or more.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the industrial commission, subject to a limited review by the courts.

WYOMING.

Date of enactment.—Chapter 124, February 27, 1915; in effect April 1, 1915; amended, chapter 69, acts of 1917, chapter 117, acts of 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injury causing disability for more than 10 days, or death, as a result of employment and not due to the culpable negligence of the injured employee or to the willful act of a third person due to reasons personal to such employee or because of his employment.

Industries covered.—Extra hazardous (enumerated list), in which three or more workmen are employed, interstate railroads, and persons whose employment is purely casual and not for the purpose of the employer's business excepted; public employments and use of explosives and work 10 or more feet above ground included, without reference to number of employees.

Persons compensated.—Private employment: All employees in industries covered. Public employment: All employees in classes of employment designated.

Burden of payment.—All on employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $50 for funeral expenses, unless other arrangements exist under agreement.
- (b) Lump-sum payments of $2,000 to widow or invalid widower, and additional sum, equal to $100 per year, until the age of 16 is reached for each child under the age of 16, the total for children not to exceed $3,000. If there are dependent parents and no spouse and no child under 16, a sum calculated on a basis of 50 per cent of the monthly support of the last year's contribution, for the period of probable support, not exceeding $1,000.

Payments to nonresident alien beneficiaries are limited to 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent of the amounts above provided, and only the widow and children under 16 years of age are considered.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) In cases of total disability and permanent partial disability, medical attention and care in a hospital, maximum $100.
- (b) For permanent total disability, lump sum of $2,500 if single or with wife or invalid husband, and a sum equal to $100 per year for each child under 16, until the age of 16 is reached, the total for children not to exceed $5,500.
- (c) For temporary total disability, $35 per month if single, $40 if married, and $6 monthly for each child under 16, the total monthly payment not to exceed $60, and the aggregate not to exceed the amount payable if the disability were permanent.
- (d) For permanent partial disability, fixed lump sums, from $225 to $1,500, for specified injuries in lieu of other payments; others in proportion.

No payments are made for the first 10 days unless disability continues for more than 30 days, when they date from the injury.

All payments are lump sums, except for temporary total disability.

Revision of benefits.—No provision.

Insurance.—Insurance in State fund required.

Security of payments.—Insurance under State control; payments not assignable or subject to execution, attachment, etc.

Settlement of disputes.—Disputes are settled by the district courts of the counties, with appeal to the supreme court of the State.

UNITED STATES—CIVIL EMPLOYEES.

Date of enactment.—Public No. 267, September 7, 1916; in effect same date.

Injuries compensated.—Personal injuries sustained while in the performance of duty, not due to intoxication, willful misconduct, or intention to bring about injury, causing death within 6 years, or disability for more than three days.

Industries covered.—All civilian employments of the United States Government and the Panama Railroad Co.

Persons compensated.—All civil employees of the United States and of the Panama Railroad Co.

Burden of payment.—All on the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) $100 burial expenses, and transportation of body of resident of the United States dying away from home, if relatives desire it.
- (b) To widow or dependent widower alone, 35 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased, with 10 per cent additional for each child, the total not to exceed 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent.
- (c) If no parent survives, 25 per cent to one child, and 10 per cent additional for each additional child, the total not to exceed 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent.
- (d) To dependent parents of deceased, 25 per cent if one, 40 per cent if both are dependent; if there is a widow, widower, or child, the parents' rights are subordinate, and the total awards may not exceed 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent.
- (e) Other dependent relatives receive benefits in smaller amounts subject to the claims of the foregoing relatives.

Payments to a widow or dependent widower terminate on their death or remarriage; to a child on marriage, reaching the age of 18, or if over 18 and incapable of self-support, on becoming capable of self-support; payments to other beneficiaries are subject to the above limitations, but may in no case continue beyond eight years.

All payments are subject to a maximum of $66.67 per month, and to a minimum of $33.33, unless the actual earnings are less than that amount, when the compensation shall equal the earnings.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies.
- (b) For total disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the monthly pay during the continuance of such disability.
- (c) For partial disability, 66 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent of the difference in wage-earning capacity due to such disability.

Payments are subject to the same maximum and minimum amounts as in case of death.

Payments on account of death or permanent disability may be commuted to lump sum.

Revision of benefits.—Awards may be reviewed at any time, either on request or by the commission on its own motion.

Insurance.—No provision.

Security of payments.—Compensation is paid from special compensation fund.

Settlement of disputes.—The United States Employees' Compensation Commission decides all questions arising under the act.

UNITED STATES—WAR RISK.

Date of enactment.—September 2, 1914; in effect same date; amended, June 12, 1917; October 6, 1917.

Injuries compensated. (1) In the case of masters, officers, and crews of merchant vessels, death or personal injury (including disease) by the risks of war, and detention following capture by the enemy.

(2) In the case of officers and enlisted men in the Army and Navy, and members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female), death or disability from personal injury or disease contracted in the line of duty, but not for injury or disease due to the willful misconduct of the victim.

Industries covered.—(1) Employment on American merchant vessels. (2) Military and naval service, including nursing by the Army Nurse Corps (female) and Navy Nurse Corps (female).

Persons compensated.—(1) Masters, officers, and crews of merchant vessels. (2) Officers, enlisted men, and members of services named.

Burden of payment.—(1) On owners of vessels. (2) On Government.

Compensation for death:

(1) In merchant marine, one year's earnings, $1,500 minimum, $5,000 maximum.

(2) In Army and Navy:

(a) Burial expenses, not exceeding $100.

(b) For widow alone, $25 per month; $10 additional for one child, $12.50 for two, and $5 each for third and fourth.

(c) For child alone, $20; for 2 children, $30; for 3, $40; and $5 each for fourth and fifth.

(d) For a widowed mother, $20, or such part thereof as will not exceed an aggregate of $75 taken with (b) or (c).

Payments to a widow or widowed mother continue until death or remarriage, and to a child until the age of 18, or, if incapable of self-support, during such incapacity.

Compensation for disability:

(1) In merchant marine, for permanent total disability, same as for death; various percentages of the same in cases of permanent partial disability. Other losses and disabilities may also be provided for by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

(2) In Army and Navy:

(a) Reasonable medical and surgical aid, hospital services, and artificial limbs and other appliances as may be needed.

(b) For total disability, if single, $30 monthly; if wife alone, $45; $10 additional for each child, the maximum not to exceed $75. If no wife, but one child, $40, with $10 additional for the second child and $10 for the third. If a dependent widowed mother, $10 in addition to the above amounts. If constant attendance is required, an additional sum, not over $20 per month, may be allowed; or if permanently helpless and bedridden, $100 is to be paid in lieu of all other compensation.

(c) For partial disability, if not less than 10 per cent, a proportionate percentage of the amounts payable for total disability. A schedule of ratings is to be formulated by the bureau.

Rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training are to be provided; refusal to accept causes suspension of benefits.

In the merchant marine, earnings continue during detention following capture by the enemy, to be determined substantially as provided for in case of death.

Revision of benefits.—In Army and Navy, awards reviewable at any time.

Insurance.—In the merchant marine, owners are to insure, and in default the Secretary of the Treasury is to act at their expense.

Security of payments.—(1) In the merchant marine, insurance is to be with the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, or on terms satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury.

(2) In Army and Navy, payments from special fund.

Settlement of disputes.—Act is administered by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, under the Secretary of the Treasury.

CONSTITUTIONALITY AND CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

Especially in the early commission reports was great stress laid on the question of constitutionality, as the laws under consideration were obviously wide departures from the principles that had been applied theretofore. Until the decisions of the courts of several States passing upon the constitutionality of the laws of such States were available, there was nothing of controlling authority to which reference could be made as directly supporting laws of this class. There were, however, carefully worked out arguments presented in the report of the New York commission, as well as in those of Minnesota and Ohio, others devoting less space to this subject. In all these it was necessary to proceed on the basis of analogies, and it was not until the compulsory statute of New York (ch. 674, Acts of 1910) was considered by the courts of that State that there was any direct judicial ruling on the points involved in compensation statutes. This, of course, is excluding from consideration the Maryland statute of 1902, which, as already pointed out, was a cooperative insurance law applicable only to a very limited class of employments. This law was held unconstitutional by the court of first instance on the ground that it deprived the parties of their right to trial by jury, and as conferring judicial or at least quasi-judicial functions on an executive officer. The case was not carried up, so that no opinion of a higher court was ever secured.

However, at the present time, there is such a wealth of favorable judicial decisions, including several by the Supreme Court of the United States, that one can but wonder on what grounds or with what hopes the constitutionality of such legislation can now be challenged. Entitled to first rank as authority are the decisions of the Supreme Court handed down March 6, 1917, upholding as constitutional the laws of Iowa,¹⁴ New York,¹⁵ and Washington;¹⁶ that on the Texas statute handed down March 3, 1919,¹⁷ and one on the Arizona law, rendered June 9, 1919.¹⁸

The Iowa statute is elective, requiring insurance, but with no provision for a State fund; that of New York is compulsory, and offering a State fund as an optional means of carrying the required insurance; while that of Washington is compulsory, insurance in the State fund being likewise obligatory. In the Texas case a statute elective as to the employer, but compulsory on the employee when the employer elects, was held not to violate constitutional rights, thereby controverting the position taken on this point by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky in declaring the law of 1914 of the State unconstitutional,¹⁹ chiefly by reason of the alleged inequity of such a provision.

The Arizona statute presents differences from any previously considered by the Supreme Court, and especially in the provision that gives the injured worker an election to accept compensation under the act or to sue in damages. The same legislature that enacted the compensation law enacted also a liability law giving damages in cases in which the employee is free from negligence. The contention was made that this option of the employee is inequitable, the employer being deprived of property without due process of law, and denied the equal protection of the laws, since liability is imposed without fault, and, it is claimed, without an equivalent protection. This contention was rejected, four justices dissenting.²⁰ The majority held that no new burden of cost is added to industry by these laws, if justly administered, but that an existing burden is merely brought to recognition and placed upon the employer as a cost of production, instead of being left upon the employee, to be borne without the power of distribution.

The dissenting opinions held the view that the acts violate the employer's right guaranteed to him by the fourteenth amendment, while the employee's rights are also vitiated, inasmuch as recovery thereunder is uncertain, delayed, and indefinite.

The form of law thus validated closely approaches, if it is not identical in principle with, the double liability law of Montana, which was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court of the State in 1911 (Cunningham v. Northwestern Improvement Co., 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 562); and in spite of the status thus given such legislation by the majority opinion, it can not be regarded as conforming to the generally approved ends of compensation legislation, which include certainty of adjustment, the avoidance of litigation, and such uniformity of procedure as will enable each party to reasonably anticipate the course of events incident to the employment relation.

In view of these decisions, it may be said that every essential feature of every compensation law has been approved by this highest authority. Moreover, this has been done without reference to authorizations contained in the constitution of the State of enactment. In other words, while the court of appeals of New York found itself able in 1915 to sustain the compulsory law of that State,²¹ in contrast to its position in 1911 as to the law of 1910,²² because an amendment to the State constitution authorizing such a law had been adopted in the interval between the two acts, the Supreme Court found it possible to sustain the law as within the fundamental police power of the State, with reference to the amendment.

A striking illustration of the diversity of attitudes taken on the subject is afforded by comparing the opinion of the Supreme Court in the White case and that of the New York Court of Appeals in the Ives case. Diametrically opposite opinions are set forth on the subjects of the police power, the doctrine of liability without fault, due process of law, and the destruction of property interests. The one regarded the theory of compensation as "not merely new in our system of jurisprudence, but plainly antagonistic to its basic idea," the court being unanimous. The other likewise unanimously recognized "that the legislation under review does measurably limit the freedom of employer and employee to agree respecting the terms of employment, and that it can not be supported except on the ground that it is a reasonable exercise of the police power of the State," but added: "In our opinion it is fairly supportable on that ground."

The present status is indicated by a summary statement citing many cases made by Mr. Justice Pitney in the decision on the Texas statute:

In recent years many of the States have passed elective workmen's compensation laws not differing essentially from the one here in question, and they have been sustained by well-considered opinions of the State courts of last resort against attacks based upon all kinds of constitutional objections.

And the attack and support are, if possible, even more vigorous in regard to the compulsory laws.

In the face of this series of opinions, it would seem that the constitutionality of such laws would be regarded as established. However, the law of North Dakota (1919) was attacked on the ground that it violates the rules as to classification, in that it classed clerical employments as hazardous, and so within the law, and that it interferes with the freedom of contract guaranteed by the Constitution, as well as with the equal privileges and immunities of citizens. All these contentions were overruled, both on principle and on authority (State v. Hagan (Oct. 25, 1919), 175 N. W. 372). On the other hand, a circuit court judge of Davidson County, Tenn., found the law of that State objectionable to the constitution of the State, holding that the decisions of the Supreme Court and the courts of last resort of the States upholding the various laws were not precedents, in view of the peculiar provisions of the State constitution; however, the court did cite with approval the Kentucky and New York decisions against the earlier laws of these States, though they have been in effect entirely overthrown by specific rulings of the Supreme Court. When this case came to the supreme court of the State, however, the position taken by the lower court was rejected, and the act was declared to be constitutional.

Under the peculiar system in vogue in Massachusetts, the question of the constitutionality of its statute was determined in advance of its enactment, the State senate having submitted the bill to the supreme judicial court of the State for its opinion on this point. In Ohio the State treasurer refused to pay a bill for supplies for the State board of awards on the ground that the act was unconstitutional, thus enforcing an early decision; in Washington also practically the same method of securing prompt court review was adopted. In the other States, as a general rule, interested parties raised questions attacking the general principles of the laws, thus securing adjudication in the customary order. The principal points will be considered in the light of the discussions of the various courts.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Naturally, in the case of such wide departure from established procedure, doing away with trial by jury, questions of negligence, contributory negligence, and the old methods of legal process generally, and establishing a system contemplating practically automatic compensation and placing the burden of industrial accidents on the industry rather than on any particular member of it, the question arose as to whether or not there was a deprivation of "liberty or property without due process of law," in violation of the fourteenth amendment. As to what constitutes due process of law the Ohio Supreme Court said (State v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 97 N. E. 602):

Perhaps no exact definition of due process of law has been agreed on. Judge Story defines it in his work on the Constitution, section 1935: "The right to be protected in life and liberty, and in the acquisition of property under equal and impartial laws, which govern the whole community. This puts the State upon its true foundation for the establishment and administration of general justice, justice of law, equal and fixed, recognizing individual rights and not impairing them."

In Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, section 356, it is said: "Due process of law in each particular case means such an exercise of the government as the settled maxims of the law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the classes of cases to which the one in question belongs."

The Ohio statute under consideration was an elective one, and the court found that there was in it "no resemblance to waiver" of any constitutional right, and in the light of the foregoing definitions concluded:

We think that in a case such as is presented here, in which the State itself has undertaken a great enterprise in the interest of the general good, and in the exercise of its police power, and presents to its citizens the option to join in the undertaking and receive its protection and benefit on a right of action being withdrawn by the legislature which experience has shown to be difficult of practical enforcement, while preserving the valuable and substantial kindred rights of action, it can not be said that in such withdrawal there is a violation of the constitution in the respects claimed.

The elective laws of Massachusetts and Wisconsin were likewise upheld by the supreme courts of the respective States as against the charges that they had violated this principle, the Massachusetts court (In re Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308) laying particular stress on the voluntary or noncompulsory features of the proposed law, and holding that there was nothing unconstitutional in its proposals and requirements; while the Wisconsin court (Borgnis v. Falk Co., 147 Wis. 327, 133 N. W. 221) considered the nature of the administration of the law by a board and not by a court, and the limitations of the powers of such board, as contributing to keep the law within constitutional limits. In the principal opinion in this case it was pointed out that the law in question was enacted in response to an urgent public opinion in an attempt "to solve certain very pressing problems which have arisen out of the changing industrial conditions of our time." While declaring that constitutional commands and prohibitions must be implicitly obeyed so long as they exist, it was held that, in the absence of an express provision, conditions prevailing at the time of the adoption of the constitution and subsequent changes in social and economic affairs should be compared and weighed, and that no attempt should be made to hold back the legislation needed for present conditions by reason of earlier constructions and interpretations; and in general it may be said that statutes of optional acceptance are not open to the charge that they deprive one of property without due process of law, since it is of his own choice that he becomes subject to their provisions. (Evanhoff v. Industrial Commission, 78 Ore. 503, 154 Pac. 106; Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co., 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211.) It is sufficient to add that statutes which have been regarded as elective have been uniformly held not to violate due process of law. (Hunter v. Colfax Coal Co., 175 Iowa, 245, 154 N. W. 1037; Shade v. Ash Grove Lime etc. Co., 93 Kans. 257, 144 Pac. 249; Greene v. Caldwell, 170 Ky. 571, 186 S. W. 648; Mathison v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., 126 Minn. 286, 148 N. W. 71; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Tel. Co., 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451; Borgnis v. Falk, 147 Wis. 327, 133 N. W. 221; Mailman v. Record Foundry & Mach. Co. (Me.), 106 Atl. 606; Shea v. North Butte Mining Co. (Mont.), 179 Pac. 499.)

The Supreme Court of Washington had a different problem to meet, in that the law under consideration was one which proposed an exclusive remedy, the question of acceptance being determined by the statute and not left to the option of the employer. Under this act every employer to whom it applies is required to contribute to a fund from which payment is to be made for the injuries of employees of persons engaged in similar industries, such payments to be made without reference to the fault of the employer or the negligence of the employee, and also without reference to the fact that no workman in a contributing employer's establishment may be injured during the entire period for which the contributions are made. The court (State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 117 Pac. 1106) conceded that on first impression the objections contained in these facts constituted a persuasive argument against the validity of the act, but added that these conditions do not furnish an absolute test of such validity.

The test of the validity of such a law is not found in the inquiry, Does it do objectionable things? but is found rather in the inquiry, Is there no reasonable ground to believe that the public safety, health, or general welfare is promoted thereby? * * * It is not meant here to be asserted that this [police] power is above the constitution, or that everything done in the name of the police power is lawfully done. It is meant only to be asserted that a law which interferes with personal and property rights is valid only when it tends reasonably to correct some existing evil or promote some interest of the State, and is not in violation of any direct and positive mandate of the constitution. The clause of the constitution now under consideration was intended to prevent the arbitrary exercise of power or undue, unjust, and capricious interference with personal rights; not to prevent those reasonable regulations that all must submit to as a condition of remaining a member of society.

The court then cited a number of authorities as supporting the principles above laid down, many of the cases being those mentioned in the earlier discussions presented in the reports of investigating commissions of Minnesota, New York, and Ohio.

The first Montana statute was also a compulsory one, and the court in considering it (Cunningham v. Northwestern Improvement Co., 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 562) cited and followed the Washington opinion and reached the conclusion that the general scheme of the act under consideration was well within the police power of the State:

If the people, represented by their legislature, are of opinion that the public interests demand that industrial insurance ought to be substituted in whole or in part for actions in wrongs, this court certainly can not say that they are in error.

With the exception of the Court of Appeals of New York, therefore, all the courts of last resort which passed upon the constitutionality of these earlier enactments held that they did not violate the constitutional rule as to due process of law. The same view was held by the Supreme Court of New York in its opinion in the Ives case, quoting from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Holden v. Hardy (169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383):

While the cardinal principles of justice are immutable, the methods by which justice is administered are subject to constant fluctuation; and the Constitution of the United States, which is necessarily and to a large extent inflexible and exceedingly difficult of amendment, should not be so construed as to deprive the States of the power to so amend their laws as to make them conform to the wishes of the citizens as they may deem best for the public welfare without bringing them into conflict with the supreme law of the land.

On appeal, however, the foregoing opinion was rejected by the court of appeals. As to the liability fixed by the New York compulsory statute, it was said that it plainly constitutes a deprivation of liberty and property under the Federal and State constitutions which would not be valid unless justifiable under the police power. The economic argument was considered and the defects of the present system were recognized.

We have already admitted the strength of this appeal to a recognized and widely prevalent sentiment; but we think it is an appeal which must be to the people and not to the courts. The right of property rests not upon philosophical or scientific speculations, nor upon the commendable impulses of benevolence or charity, nor yet upon the dictates of natural justice. The right has its foundation in the fundamental law. That can be changed by the people, but not by legislatures. * * * If such economic and sociological arguments as are here advanced in support of this statute can be allowed to subvert the fundamental idea of property, then there is no private right entirely safe, because there is no limitation upon the absolute discretion of legislatures, and the guaranties of the constitution are a mere waste of words.

It was further said that—

The argument that the risk to an employee should be borne by the employer because it is inherent in the employment may be economically sound, but it is at war with the legal principle that no employer can be compelled to assume a risk which is inseparable from the work of the employee and which may exist in spite of a degree of care by the employer far greater than may be exacted by the most drastic law. * * * In its final and simple analysis that is taking the property of A and giving it to B, and that can not be done under our constitutions.

The cases cited in the New York State investigating commission's report and later in the Washington and other decisions, were referred to and distinguished as not supporting the claims made for them. The opinion, therefore, of the New York Court of Appeals and that given out by the Washington Supreme Court are in direct conflict. In referring to the New York opinion the Washington court said:

The act the [New York] court there had in review is dissimilar in many respects to the act before us and is perhaps less easily defended on economic grounds. The principle embodied in the statutes is, however, the same, and it must be conceded that the case is direct authority against the position we have here taken. We shall offer no criticism of the opinion. We will only say that, notwithstanding the decision comes from the highest court of the first State of the Union and is supported by a most persuasive argument, we have not been able to yield our consent to the view there taken.

In a later case (Stertz v. Industrial Insurance Commission, 158 Pac. 256) the Supreme Court of Washington had before it a case where the injury was due to the wrongful act of a third party. It was said that the State law "positively ends the 'jurisdiction of the courts' on 'all phases' of master and servant liability," and that "liability for a stranger's acts on the premises is one of those phases * * *. It is but a slight extension of the common-law assurance of a safe place to work. Neither would it be a violation of the due process guaranty to make the master an insurer of the workman at the shop."

Before any case under a workmen's compensation law had reached the Supreme Court of the United States it was called upon to consider the validity of a sort of compulsory insurance of bank deposits provided for by a statute of Oklahoma. This was to be achieved by means of a fund maintained by contributions by banks within the State, very much as employers are called upon to secure the payment of awards due their injured employees by insuring in a State fund. This law was upheld (Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186), and the courts of Washington, Iowa, and other States were quick to claim the value of this judicial support of the principle in controversy. The New York Court of Appeals, on the other hand, when announcing its decision in the Ives case, refused to recognize this decision "as controlling of our construction of our own constitution." However, when the new compulsory law of New York was before this court in 1915, subsequent to the amendment to the State constitution, it was said:

Surely it is competent for the State in the provision of the general welfare to require both employer and employee to yield something toward the establishment of a principle and plan of compensation for their mutual protection and advantage. The act now before us seems to be fundamentally fair to both employer and employee. It is plainly justified by the amendment to our own State constitution; and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, notably in the Noble State Bank case, make it reasonably certain that it will be found by that court not to be violative of the Constitution of the United States (Jensen v. Southern Pacific Co., 215 N. Y. 513, 109 N. E. 600).

Of greatest interest, by reason of the rank of the court and the fact that the decision was the first to be made by it on the subject, is the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on the compulsory statute of New York (New York Central R. R. Co. v. White (1917) 243 U. S. 188, 37 Sup. Ct. 247). The question of due process is here disposed of by pointing out that the common-law doctrine of the employer's liability for negligence, with its defenses of contributory negligence, fellow service, and assumption of risks, "is based upon fictions, and is inapplicable to modern conditions of employment," its application resulting in litigation that "is unduly costly and tedious, encouraging corrupt practices, and arousing antagonisms between employers and employees."

The close relation of the rules governing liability for injuries to the fundamental rights of liberty and property is recognized; "but these rules, as guides of conduct, are not beyond alteration by legislation in the public interest. No person has a vested interest in any rule of law entitling him to insist that it shall remain unchanged for his benefit."

Negligence is said to be "merely the disregard of some duty imposed by law; and the nature and extent of the duty may be modified by legislation, with corresponding change in the test of negligence."

The fellow-servant doctrine is characterized by "material differences in different jurisdictions," and "it needs no argument to show that such a rule is subject to modification or abrogation by a State upon proper occasion."

The same conclusion is reached as to the subjects of assumption of risks and contributory negligence; and it is further pointed out "that the entire matter of liability for death caused by wrongful act, both within and without the relation of employer and employee, is a modern statutory innovation, in which the States differ as to who may sue, for whose benefit, and the measure of damages." Departures from the common-law rules have repeatedly been made by State legislatures and by Congress as well, and these acts have been upheld by the court.

It is true that in the case of the statutes thus sustained there were reasons rendering the particular departures appropriate. Nor is it necessary, for the purposes of the present case, to say that a State might, without violence to the constitutional guaranty of "due process of law," suddenly set aside all common-law rules respecting liability as between employer and employee, without providing a reasonably just substitute * * *. No such question is here presented, and we intimate no opinion upon it. The statute under consideration sets aside one body of rules only to establish another system in its place. * * * The act evidently is intended as a just settlement of a difficult problem, affecting one of the most important of social relations, and it is to be judged in its entirety. We have said enough to demonstrate that, in such an adjustment, the particular rules of the common law affecting the subject matter are not placed by the fourteenth amendment beyond the reach of the law-making power of the State.

i. e., the imposition of a universal tax on employers for the maintenance of an insurance fund, and the question was raised whether this tax was so excessive as to constitute deprivation of liberty or property without due process of law. The court held that unless there was undue compensation paid there could not be an excessive burden on the industry—this on the assumption that a reasonable compensation for industrial accidents was a proper burden on the industry. Since the industry as a whole is subject to hazards, it was held not unreasonable that the industry as a whole, and not merely such establishments as might furnish the occasion for individual accidents, should bear the burden; and, further, that it lies within the power of the State to declare that every employer engaging in business should make stated and fairly apportioned contributions for the maintenance of a public fund for compensating injuries irrespective of the plant in which the injury might be received. This power was said to go so far as to make it proper for the State, in the interest of the safety and welfare of its people, to prohibit any industry found to involve so great a human wastage as to leave no fair profit beyond it.

The question of due process was raised in the discussion of the Kentucky statute (Kentucky State Journal Co. v. Workmen's Compensation Board (1914), 161 Ky. 562, 170 S. W. 1166). The State constitution forbids any limitation by law on the amount to be recovered for injuries resulting in death, or for injuries to person or property. This was held to guarantee rights which the law in question violated by reason of the limitation of amounts, and also by the provision that a workman might make a contract of waiver which would be binding both upon himself and upon all persons claiming under or through him. On rehearing, however, it was suggested that the mere fact of waiver would not be objectionable if free choice in making the same was secured, the court having held in the first instance that though the act was elective in form it was in fact compulsory. A further objection to the act was found in the fact that where the employer accepted the statute, the employee was automatically drawn into the contract and made subject to the provisions of the law on pain of being deprived of all his causes of action.

Another provision of the statute was held to violate the employer's rights in that where a fatally injured workman left no dependents a fixed amount was to be paid to the State compensation board for its own use, barring the estate or personal representatives from any claim. This was held to violate another provision of the constitution (sec. 241), which gives a right to sue for damages in case of injuries causing death, and the court ruled that a law to be valid must not thus restrict the rights of personal representatives nor compel contributions to the State fund. The legislature of 1916, in the enactment of a new law, undertook to avoid the defects indicated.

The new law was before the court of appeals of the State in June of the year of enactment, a test case having been made to secure an early decision as to its constitutionality (Greene v. Caldwell, 170 Ky. 571, 186 S. W. 648). It was upheld in all points, the elective provisions being extended to employer and employee alike. The restriction of the amount of recovery was held not to conflict with the clause of the constitution forbidding the limitation of the amount of recovery, since it was optional with the claimant to accept the compensation law in the first instance. Having accepted it he was not in a position to complain of the limits set by the new law, and in the absence of constitutional objections, the wisdom and propriety of the law were held to be for the legislature to determine without interference by the courts.

In connection particularly with the holding of the Kentucky court that the provision of the law making the act binding on employees when accepted by the employer was unconstitutional, the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on this exact point is of interest. The case involved the Texas statute (Middleton v. Texas Power & Light Co., 249 U. S. 152, 39 Sup. Ct. 227), which contained this identical provision. The contention was made that the employee was thereby deprived of liberty and property without due process of law, but the Supreme Court held that the employee had no vested right to have the rules of law remain unchanged for his benefit, and that his only loss was a part of his liberty to make a contract under rules of law that had previously obtained. These rules being subject to change in the public interest, the employee had no greater right to object to a compulsory compensation system (made so by the election of the employer) than has the employer when the system is made compulsory by an act of the legislature, as in New York and Washington.

The position of the Kentucky court as to the validity of the provision requiring contributions to the expense fund is also controverted by the ruling of the New York Court of Appeals (Industrial Com. v. Newman, 118 N. E. 794), upholding a provision of law requiring contributions to a special fund where no beneficiary survives the death of an injured workman.

EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

The same amendment that guarantees due process of law likewise guarantees equal protection of the laws. The statutes of a number of States are applicable only to designated hazardous industries, or those that may be so classed by an administrative authority, and their validity has been attacked on the grounds of an alleged inequality. This form of attack has uniformly failed, even the New York Court of Appeals, that held the first compulsory statute of that State unconstitutional, sustaining the validity of the classification of certain employments as hazardous, as therein proposed. Another limitation makes the law applicable only to employers of a designated number of persons, as more than four or five, or some greater number. This also was held to be a valid restriction, as the danger from fellow servants is less in smaller establishments (Jeffrey Mfg. Co. v. Blagg, 235 U. S. 571, 35 Sup. Ct. 167).

The Washington statute resembles that of New York in the matter of its declared scope, using, however, the term "extrahazardous," but permits joint election of employers and employees in undertakings not so classed. Classifications of the included industries are also provided for on the basis of the hazard of the occupation, for the purpose of distributing the burden of compensation in proportion to relative hazard. The Supreme Court of the United States, in passing upon the Washington statute, cited its opinion in the New York case as presenting grounds sufficient to support the view that such laws are not to be regarded as arbitrary and unreasonable from the standpoint of natural justice, and that the State of Washington was warranted "in concluding that the matter of compensation for accidental injuries with resulting loss of life or earning capacity of men employed in hazardous occupations is of sufficient public moment to justify making the entire matter of compensation a public concern, to be administered through State agencies." Industrial occupations that frequently and inevitably produce personal injuries may be regulated by the State and the human losses charged against the industry either directly, as under the New York law, or by publicly administering the compensation through a reasonable system of occupational taxes as in the Washington law; and the act can not be deemed oppressive to any class of occupation so long as the scale of compensation is reasonable.

In the hearing on the constitutionality of the Hawaiian law (Anderson v. Hawaii Dredging Co., 24 Hawaii Sup. Ct. 97), it was objected that the rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States could not be taken as precedents, inasmuch as the law of the Territory is neither limited to hazardous employments, as in New York, nor are benefits payable from a common fund, as in Washington. The court held, however, that laws making classifications of industries are sustainable, not on account of such classifications, but in spite of them; and that the constitutionality of the statute was not dependent upon the system adopted for the payment of benefits.

Not unlike the foregoing were the principal objections raised to the constitutionality of the law of Alaska (Johnston v. Kennecott Copper Corporation, C. C. A., 1918, 248 Fed. 407), in which it was claimed that an improper classification had been attempted in the enactment of a law applicable only to mining and related operations, and, further, only to establishments employing five or more persons. The act was held to apply in a uniform manner to all persons similarly situated, and to be a proper exercise of the legislative discretion. Another objection was that the act provides no system of insurance and no provision for the payment of compensation. The court pointed out that there were certain regulations for the security of payments, amounting to the substitution of a system or set of rules for the one set aside by the act, and quoted from the decision of the Supreme Court in its consideration of the New York law; and following this and other decisions of the Supreme Court sustaining compensation legislation, the Alaska statute was upheld throughout.

The exclusion of farm laborers and domestic servants is held proper by the Supreme Court on the ground that the legislature reasonably might consider that the risks inherent in these occupations were exceptionally patent, simple, and familiar (White case). Similar reasoning was applied by the Supreme Court of Texas to the work of cotton-gin laborers, who were excluded from the original law of that State. This was approved by the Supreme Court of the United States (Middleton case), but there must be a feeling of satisfaction that this obviously hazardous employment is now included under the law.

The law of Maine excludes "the work of cutting, hauling, rafting, or driving logs," and the act has been held constitutional (Mailman v. Record Foundry & Machine Co. 106 Atl. 606), though with no particular discussion of this point. The same exemption appears in the liability law of the State, and this was held by the supreme court to be a valid classification on the ground that the appliances and power used in logging "are well known and their dangers obvious. The lumber business is as old as our Government, and many of its features are familiar to employees before entering them." (Dirken v. Great Northern Paper Co., 86 Atl. 320.) Unconvincing as this reasoning doubtless appears to a layman, it has seemed thus far to suffice to retain this provision in both the liability law and the compensation law of the State. Perhaps the exemption of coal mines in the Tennessee statute will be similarly defended in case of a challenge on this point, but the more customary classification of employments would certainly place both these occupations in the group designated as hazardous.

The exclusion of railroad employees engaged in interstate commerce is rather a superfluous provision, in view of the paramount and exclusive authority of Federal legislation in this field (Michigan Central R. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 33 Sup. Ct. 192); but such an exemption has been upheld (Mathison v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co., 126 Minn. 286, 148 N. W. 71). And the exclusion of all employees of common carriers by rail is justified by the Supreme Court in passing on the Texas statute, in view of the Federal law covering interstate employees, and of "the difficulty that so often arises in determining in particular instances whether the employee was employed in interstate commerce at the time of the injury," so that railroad employees generally "might better be left to common-law actions with statutory modifications already in force, and such others as experience might show to be called for" (Middleton case).

An objection that was found fatal to the Montana statute was its failure to provide equal protection, not as between different classes of employers or of employees, but as between the employers and workmen to whom the act applied. The law in question was a compulsory cooperative insurance statute, requiring the payment of contributions to a State fund by the employer in his own behalf and in behalf of his employees, and permitting him to recoup himself in part by withholding from the employees' wages fixed amounts as their contribution to the fund. Designated amounts were provided as benefits for injured workmen to be paid from this fund, but the workmen were given the option of suing the employer in an action to recover damages for injuries received. This resulted in the compulsory maintenance of a fund by the employers' contribution and also liability to an action in damages after having made such contribution. This provision of the statute, not essential to its general scheme (which had been declared constitutional by the court), was held to be inequitable and unjust so as clearly to invalidate the law as charging the employer with a double liability and not affording equal protection (Cunningham case). It may be noted that in the local law of Maryland applying to Allegany and Garrett Counties (now repealed), the option was permitted employees of accepting benefits from the funds maintained by contributions or to sue the employer for damages. The difficulty which invalidated the Montana law was avoided, however, by permitting the employers to reimburse themselves by withholding from subsequent contributions such an amount as would equal the judgment and costs incurred in the action.

Attention has already been called to the decision of the Supreme Court upholding the Arizona statute (Arizona Copper Co. v. Hammer, 250 U. S. 400, 39 Sup. Ct. 553), although that law permits options to the injured worker of a common-law action, suit under the liability law if the worker is without negligence, or a claim under the compensation law, which is compulsory on the employer regardless of all questions of fault or negligence on his part. (See Arizona S. Co. v. Ujack, 15 Ariz. 382, 139 Pac. 465.) It is evident that the employer may be insured against the liabilities imposed by the compensation law, to which he is subject without option, and may yet be called upon to defend a suit for damages, with the defense of fellow service abrogated, and the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risks "at all times left to the jury." (Const., art. 18, secs. 4 and 5.)

Objections to this situation are disposed of in the majority opinion, four justices earnestly dissenting, with the remark that—

It is thoroughly settled by our previous decisions that a State may abolish contributory negligence as a defense, and election of remedies is an option very frequently given by the law to a person entitled to an action; an option normally exercised to his own advantage, as a matter of course.

However, the dissent finds that—

Here, without fault, the statute in question imposes liability in some aspects more onerous than either the New York or Washington law prescribed; and the grounds upon which we sustained those statutes are wholly lacking. The employer is not exempted from any liability formerly imposed; he is given no quid pro quo for his new burden; the common-law rules have been set aside without a reasonably just substitute; the employee is relieved from consequences of ordinary risks of the occupation, and these are imposed upon the employer without defined limit to possible recovery which may ultimately go to nondependents, distant relatives, or, by escheat, to the State; "the act bears no fair indication of a just settlement of a difficult problem affecting one of the most important of social relations"—on the contrary, it will probably intensify the difficulties.

JURY TRIAL.

A contention made in connection with the question of due process of law, but as a specific point, was that the system of awards proposed was an abrogation of the right of trial by jury, in violation of constitutional rights. The Supreme Court of New Jersey (Sexton case) in speaking of this point said:

This contention totally misconceives the proper construction and effect of the constitutional provision in question. The language with respect to this mode of trial is that it shall remain inviolable, not that it shall be unalterable. It is therefore a privilege which may be waived by either party and not an absolute right which is not the subject of such a waiver.

It was pointed out that there had been for a number of years provisions for the waiver of the right of jury trials, and that provisions of this sort had been uniformly held to be constitutional.

In the foregoing case it is obvious that the matter of election or option was of the essence of the opinion; but in Washington (Clausen case) the subject of a fixed rule was before the court, and it was objected that "the legislature can not fix a procrustean rule for the admeasurement of damages arising from injuries received by one in the employment of another," as both parties were entitled to have the question of right and amount submitted to a jury. The court having held, however, that for the privilege of engaging in business of certain sorts the State might properly require contributions to a benefit fund, it concluded that it might also require employees entering into contract relations with employers of the foregoing class to receive a given sum for such injuries as they might incur during employment. In this view the legislature would be authorized to provide that if a workman was injured while so engaged he should receive a "sure award in a limited sum as compensation for his injury and in lieu thereof shall forego his common-law action in damages therefor. * * * The desirability of this substitution is unquestioned, and we believe that the legislature had the power to make it without violating any principle of the fundamental law."

A similar conclusion was reached by another line of argument, the court saying that "the right of trial by jury accorded by the constitution, as applicable to civil cases, is incident only to causes of action recognized by law." If, therefore, the legislature is able to take away the cause of action on the one hand and the ground of defense on the other and merge both into a statutory indemnity, the right to sue has fallen and with it, of necessity, the right of jury trial. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals, while discussing the Washington statute (Raymond v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., 233 Fed. 239), pointed out that the guaranty of the Federal Constitution as to trial by jury does not prevent the establishment of a process of law in which trial by jury is omitted.

In the Cunningham case (Montana) also it was pointed out that the Constitution of the United States does not guarantee a trial by jury in a civil action in a State court, citing a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States. It was said, further, that the provision of the State constitution that the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all and remain inviolate had been construed by the court as applying only to those cases wherein a right of trial by jury existed at the date of the adoption of the constitution.

It was held, therefore, that such guaranty would have no reference to claims against an indemnity fund such as are provided for by the act in question, since the adjustment of claims under the act is administrative and not judicial, nor does due process of law necessarily require a jury trial, citing Montana Co. v. St. Louis Min. Co. (152 U. S. 160, 14 Sup. Ct. 506).

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts pointed out that under the law of that State an employee retained the right to jury trial as to the facts as to whether the employer had insurance and whether the employee had given the statutory notice not to be bound by the act; but failure to give such notice was a waiver of the right to trial by jury, which was not a compulsory deprivation, but optional with the employee. (Young v. Duncan, 106 N. E. 1.) The elective character of the Illinois statute was also pointed out by the supreme court of that State, as relieving the law of the charge of depriving parties of the right of trial by jury (Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co., 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211); of the Iowa law, by the Supreme Court of Iowa (Hunter v. Colfax Consol. Coal Co., 175 Iowa 245, 154 N. W. 1037); of the Pennsylvania law, by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania (Anderson v. Carnegie Steel Co., 99 Atl. 215); of the Rhode Island law, by the Supreme Court of Rhode Island in sustaining its constitutionality (Sayles v. Foley, 38 R. I. 484, 96 Atl. 340), and, more recently, of the Montana law, by the Supreme Court of Montana (Shea v. North Butte Mining Co., 179 Pac. 499).

Somewhat broader in its form was the charge made against the New York statute that it deprives plaintiffs of their right to recover for torts, in reply to which the court of appeals declared that there is no deprivation, but a substitution, which, if restricted, is yet a remedy, and this restriction may be viewed as the employee's contribution to the insurance fund, the employer discharging his obligation by the payment of premiums. (Jensen v. Southern Pacific Co., supra.)

The matter was disposed of by the Supreme Court of Texas by saying that the right of trial by jury can not be claimed in an inquiry that is nonjudicial in its character or with respect to proceedings before an administrative board, such as the accident board provided for by the act (Middleton v. Texas Power & Light Co., 185 S. W. 556), while a district court of the United States emphasized the elective nature of the Iowa statute, saying that the constitutional guaranty of the right of trial by jury, as well as of liberty to contract and of due process of law, could be waived, either expressly or by common consent or acquiescence (Hawkins v. Bleakly, 220 Fed. 378).

The mode of determining disputes by a board of arbitrators, or by reference to the State commission, thus doing away with trial by jury, was offered as an objection to the constitutionality of the law of Maryland (Solvuca v. Ryan & Reilly Co., 101 Atl. 710). The court held that the constitution of the State was not violated in allowing awards without jury trial, since the award may be reviewed "by a proceeding in the nature of an appeal," initiated in the court having jurisdiction in the locality, and since, upon the hearing of such an appeal, any question of fact involved may be submitted to a jury.

The Supreme Court, in passing upon a similar contention in the case of New York Central R. R. Co. v. White, stated that "the denial of a trial by jury is not inconsistent with 'due process'"; no question was made but that the procedural provisions of the act are amply adequate to afford the notice and opportunity to be heard required by the fourteenth amendment. The Washington law entirely withdraws from private controversy the question of relief for accidental injuries in industrial employments, substituting therefor a remedy by compensation to the exclusion of every other remedy, except as otherwise provided in the act itself. As to this provision the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, preserving the right of trial by jury, was invoked by the plaintiffs. On this point the court said:

It is conceded that this has no reference to proceedings in the State courts (citing Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. Bombolis, 241 U. S. 211, 36 Sup. Ct. 595); but it is urged that the question is material for the reason that if the act be constitutional it may be followed in the Federal courts, in cases that are within its provisions. So far as private rights of action are preserved, this is no doubt true; but with respect to those we find nothing in the act that excludes a trial by jury. As between employee and employer the act abolishes all right of recovery in ordinary cases, and therefore leaves nothing to be tried by jury.

The Iowa statute is elective, instead of compulsory, and the Supreme Court, in addition to saying that jury trial is not one of the rights secured by the fourteenth amendment, held election to be a waiver of the right, though the State was at liberty either to abolish or limit such right if it saw fit so to do. (Hawkins v. Bleakly, 243 U. S. 210, 37 Sup. Ct. 255.)

Superseding the earlier elective law of Ohio is a compulsory one, which provides that an employer failing to contribute to the State fund must pay his injured workmen such sums as the State commission may award, if the employee makes claim through the commission. Failure of the employer to pay the award subjects him to a penalty of 50 per cent. This was held constitutional, since the State constitution authorizes a compulsory law, which would include reasonable provisions to make the law effective. The State will enforce the payment, in a proceeding that involves a jury trial, with the one question removed as to the amount of the recovery, which is fixed pursuant to statute; so that there is no denial of right of trial by jury as to any issue which the employer is entitled to raise. The acts of the commission are administrative and not judicial, so that there is no unlawful transfer of powers. There is therefore no denial of due process or of equal protection of the law (Fassig v. State, 95 Ohio St. 232, 116 N. E. 104).

LIABILITY WITHOUT FAULT.

Perhaps the ground on which the New York Court of Appeals most strongly condemned the first compulsory law of that State was that it charged the employer with a liability without fault. The point was argued at considerable length, and the cases offered in support of such liability were examined and held to be inapplicable to the questions under consideration by the court, and the conclusion was therefore reached that the law in question contained no justifying provision that would warrant the imposition of such liability.

It contains not a single provision which can be said to provide for the safety, health, or morals of the employees therein specified, nor to impose upon the enumerated employers any duty or obligation designed to have that effect. It does not affect the status of employment at all, but reads into the contract between the employer and employee without the consent of the former a liability on his part which never existed before and to which he is permitted to interpose practically no defense, for he can only escape liability when the employee is injured through his own willful misconduct (Ives case).

The Supreme Court of Washington (Clausen case) held with equal vigor that the valuable ends in view and the reasonable provisions of the law for the securing of those ends warranted the imposition of such liabilities as were enforced by the law of that State, so that in the exercise of the police power for the promotion of the welfare of the State, a sufficient warrant existed for the fixing of the liability in question, citing in this connection an extended list of cases, some of which the New York court had noted and distinguished.

In a case decided by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin (City of Milwaukee v. Miller, 144 N. W. 188), in discussing the nature of compensation laws, the court referred to the old rule of liability as being based on "the common-law principle that he who tortiously injures another in his person or his property incurs a legal liability to make good to that other all the loss which is directly and naturally caused thereby, regardless of any element of reasonable anticipation of consequences." The court then said:

This extreme and rather harsh rule is characterized by a penal element, grounded on the moral turpitude of the wrongful act. Under the statutory system for dealing with personal injury losses incident to performance of the duties of an employer they are regarded as mutual misfortunes to be charged up, as directly as practicable, to the cost of production. The right to have the employer regarded as an agency to make payment to the employee and absorb the same as an expense of the industry, regardless of whether the loss is attributable to any human fault, is a legislative creation within the constitutional exercise of the police power to legislate for the public welfare.

The Supreme Court of California took up the question in very much the same manner as that of Washington, assuming the power of the legislature to declare a liability without fault as a matter of public policy. It pointed out that it was generally admitted that the common-law defenses of the employer can be abrogated, and declared that the rule of fault was neither more sacred nor more necessary. At common law, in the absence of fault, the burden of the accident fell on the employee; and by declaring the liability of the employer in such cases, the legislature was simply exercising its right to shift the burden to the employer, and through him to the industry. It was held that no vested right was disturbed, the statute not being retroactive, and that what was effected was simply a readjustment of the employment status, not forbidden by the fourteenth amendment (Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 151 Pac. 398). It may be mentioned in this connection that the Arizona compensation law specifically abrogates "the common-law doctrine of no liability without fault," in so far as it might be pleaded with reference to the classes of accidents covered by the act; and the courts uniformly rule that the negligence of the employer need not be proved in proceedings under the compensation laws, the question being not one of the right to recover damages for a tort, but one of the grant of a different right based on the status of the employee as such.

The establishment of this principle was strongly criticized by the appellant railroad company in the New York case before the Supreme Court (New York Central R. Co. v. White), due, presumably, to the fact that the earlier New York statute had been declared unconstitutional by the court of appeals of the State largely, and perhaps chiefly, on the ground that it charged the employer with liability without fault.

The Supreme Court held that the establishment of a compulsory system relating to hazardous employments was not an unreasonable or arbitrary application of legal principles, since the undertaking is one in which the workman is engaged by mutual consent of employer and employee in an operation intended to be advantageous to both. Considering the probability of physical injury or loss of life through industrial accident, entailing the loss of self-support, and in fatal cases depriving widows and orphans of their natural protection, it was held to be but reasonable on grounds of natural justice that there should be a contribution in reasonable amount, according to a reasonable and definite scale, by way of compensation for the loss of earning power—"that which stands to the employee as capital in trade"—incurred in the common enterprise, and that without regard to the question of negligence or fault. As an offset to this responsibility, it is pointed out that the employer is relieved from a liability for damages rated by common-law standards, and payable only in cases where fault is proved.

Nor can it be deemed arbitrary and unreasonable, from the standpoint of the employee's interest, to supplant a system under which he assumed the entire risk of injury in ordinary cases, and in others had a right to recover an amount more or less speculative upon proving facts of negligence that often were difficult to prove, and substitute a system under which, in all ordinary cases of accidental injury, he is sure of a definite and easily ascertained compensation, not being obliged to assume the entire loss in any case, but in all cases assuming any loss beyond a prescribed scale.

While the loss is primarily laid upon the employer, it "is a loss arising out of the business, and, however it may be charged up, is an expense of the operation, as truly as the cost of repairing broken machinery or any other expense that ordinarily is paid by the employer."

It was added "that liability without fault was not a novelty in the law. The common-law liability of the carrier, of the innkeeper of him who employed fire or other dangerous agency or harbored a mischievous animal, was not dependent altogether upon questions of fault or negligence. Statutes imposing liability without fault have been sustained." (Cases cited.)

While the question was apparently not raised in this specific form in the consideration of the Washington statute, the point was clearly covered in the ruling that the levying of a tax on all employers in an industry, regardless of the occurrence or nonoccurrence of accidents in their particular establishments during any given period, was neither arbitrary nor unreasonable.

A quite recent (1918) decision by the New York Court of Appeals says:

An award under the workmen's compensation law is not made on the theory that a tort has been committed; on the contrary, it is upon the theory that the statute giving the commission power to make an award is read into and becomes a part of the contract. * * * These payments are made irrespective of whether or not the employer was guilty of wrongdoing. It is a part of the compensation agreed to be paid for services rendered in the course of the employment (Doey v. Howland Co., 120 N. E. 53).

In passing upon this point in the Arizona case the Supreme Court said:

We are unable to say that the employers' liability law of Arizona, in requiring the employer in hazardous industries to assume—so far as pecuniary consequences go—the entire risk of injury to the employee attributable to accidents arising in the course of the employment and due to its inherent conditions, exceeds the bounds of permissible legislation or interferes with the constitutional rights of the employer. The answer that the common law makes to the hardship of requiring the employee to assume all consequences, both personal and pecuniary, of injuries arising out of the ordinary dangers of the occupation, is that the parties enter into the contract of employment with these risks in view, and that the consequences ought to be and presumably are, taken into consideration in fixing the rate of wages. In like manner the employer, if required—as he is by this statute in some occupations—to assume the pecuniary loss arising from such injury to the employee, may take this into consideration in fixing the rate of wages; besides which he has an opportunity, which the employee has not, to charge the loss as a part of the cost of the product of the industry.

There is no question here of punishing one who is without fault. That, we may concede, would be contrary to natural justice. The statute requires that compensation shall be paid to the injured workman or his dependents, because it is upon them that the first brunt of the loss falls; and that it shall be paid by the employer, because he takes the gross receipts of the common enterprise, and by reason of his position of control can make such adjustments as ought to be and practically can be made, in the way of reducing wages and increasing the selling price of the product, in order to allow for the statutory liability. There could be no more rational basis for a discrimination; and it is clear that in this there is no denial of the "equal protection of the law."

ABROGATION OF EMPLOYERS' DEFENSES.

In a number of cases the question was raised as to the power of the legislature to abolish the defenses of fellow service, contributory negligence, and assumption of risks, as was done in most of the laws providing for compensation. There was, however, little disagreement by the courts on this point, the New York Court of Appeals saying that the power of the State to make changes in methods of procedure and the rules of law was clearly recognized.

We have said enough to show that the statutory modifications of the "fellow-servant" rule and the law of "contributory negligence" are clearly within the legislative power. These doctrines—for they are nothing more—may be regulated or even abolished. This is true to a limited extent as to the assumption of risk by the employee (Ives v. South Buffalo Ry. Co., supra).

The Massachusetts court (opinion of justices) said that the rules of law relating to these three defenses were established by the courts, not by the constitution, and that the legislature may change them or do away with them altogether as defenses. The courts of Wisconsin, New Jersey, and Ohio agree with the opinion of the Massachusetts court, the Ohio court (Creamer case) saying that as to the right to abolish the defense of assumption of risks the great weight of authority is against the New York court, holding that it is subject to the same complete legislative control as the other defenses made. The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, speaking on this point, says that "the defenses inhibited or barred are such as the legislature had a clear right to eliminate for reasons of public policy" (De Francesco v. Piney Mining Co., 86 S. E. 777).

See also Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co., 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211; Mathison v. Street Ry. Co., 126 Minn. 286, 148 N. W. 71; Wheeler v. Contoocook Mills, 77 N. H. 551, 94 Atl. 265; State v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St., 349, 97 N. E. 602; Middleton v. Texas Power & Light Co., 108 Tex. 96, 185 S. W. 556, etc.

Despite the uniform attitude of the State courts on this question⁴ the point was raised in the cases before the Supreme Court already cited. In discussing the New York case, the defenses of fellow service, assumption of risks, and contributory negligence were taken up separately and briefly discussed, the conclusion being that "it is not necessary to extend the discussion. This court has repeatedly upheld the authority of the States to establish by legislation departures from the fellow-servant rule and other common-law rules affecting the employers' liability for personal injuries to their employees." (Cases cited.) This position is not to be interpreted as warranting a sudden setting aside of all common-law rules respecting the employer's liability without providing a reasonably just substitute:

The statute under consideration sets aside one body of rules only to establish another system in its place. * * * The act evidently is intended as a just settlement of a difficult problem, affecting one of the most important of social relations, and it is to be judged in its entirety.

The Washington law, of course, eliminates the entire subject of defenses by eliminating the right of action for damages; while in the Iowa law a qualified right remains, dependent upon the attitude of employer and employee, respectively, as accepting or rejecting the act. When the employer rejects, under the Iowa statute, he is deprived of these defenses whether the employee has accepted or rejected, whereas if he accepts the law, and the employee alone rejects, all defenses are retained by the employer in any suit brought.

We can not say that there is here an arbitrary classification within the inhibition of the "equal protection" clause of the fourteenth amendment. All employers are treated alike, and so are all employees, and if there be some difference between employer and employee respecting the inducements that are held out for accepting the compensation features of the act, it goes no further than to say that, if neither party is willing to accept them, the employer's liability shall not be subject to either of the several defenses referred to. As already shown, the abolition of such defenses is within the power of the State, and the legislation can not be condemned when that power has been qualifiedly exercised, without unreasonable discrimination.

EXERCISE OF JUDICIAL POWERS.

Most of the laws in question provide for their administration and the settlement of disputes by boards or commissions, and these provisions were made the grounds of attack on their constitutionality as conferring judicial powers upon nonjudicial officers. In no case was the contention of unconstitutionality admitted, though the courts found different grounds for sustaining the various laws, and indeed the laws themselves differ somewhat in regard to the powers and prerogatives of the administrative bodies.

The Montana law conferred certain duties upon the State auditor, which were held by the supreme court of that State to be administrative and not judicial, while the suggestion that he might in certain cases be called upon to exercise judicial power was said to be of no persuasive force, since such procedure would be altogether voluntary on his part and he might resort to the courts if he so desired (Cunningham v. Northwestern Improvement Co., supra). Its present law is administered by a commission or board, of which it is said that "it is true that many of the functions exercised by the board are judicial in character," but it is, nevertheless, not vested with judicial power within the constitutional meaning of that term, being "a purely administrative body," without power to render an enforceable judgment (Shea v. North Butte Mining Co., supra).

The industrial commission provided for in the Wisconsin statute was said by the court of that State not to be a court, and the act was construed as not vesting in this commission judicial powers within the meaning of the constitution. "It is an administrative body or arm of the Government, which in the course of its administration of the law is empowered to ascertain some questions of fact and apply existing law thereto, and in so doing acts quasi-judicially; but it is not thereby vested with judicial power in the constitutional sense." It was held that the act made no attempt to confer on the board power to consider and determine its own jurisdictional authority, but that courts were open for appeals from its findings on any one of three grounds: First, that the board acted without or in excess of its powers; second, that the award was procured by fraud; and, third, that the findings of fact did not support the award. In view of these provisions the court held that there was no violation of the constitution in conferring such powers on the commission as it was authorized to exercise. (Borgnis v. Falk, 147 Wis. 327, 133 N. W. 221; see also Menominee Bay Shore Lumber Co. v. Industrial Commission, 156 N. W. 151, where the ruling that the commission is not a court was incidental to a decision that a minor needs no guardian in order to appear before it.)

Similar considerations were involved in the discussion of the Ohio statute, and like conclusions were reached by the court in this case (State v. Creamer, supra). It was said that the board of awards created by the act was purely an administrative agency with duties relating to the creation and administration of the insurance fund, and the fact that it is empowered to classify persons to come under the law and to ascertain facts as to the application of the fund does not invest it with judicial power within the constitutional sense; so also of the Texas statute (Middleton v. Texas Power & Light Co.), and that of Kentucky (Greene v. Caldwell); and of Maryland (Solvuca v. Ryan & Reilly Co., 101 Atl. 710).

The law authorizing the industrial accident board of Michigan was held not to be unconstitutional, on the ground that it is merely an administrative agency available at the option of the parties interested (Mackin v. Detroit-Timkin Axle Co., 187 Mich. 8, 153 N. W. 49). In Iowa also it was held that though the right of appeal from the decisions of the commission was more restricted than under the laws of a number of other States, there was no excessive delegation of judicial powers, since the conditions and amounts of awards are fixed by statute, and further, an acceptance of the act must precede its application (Hunter v. Colfax Consol. Coal Co.; Hawkins v. Bleakly, 220 Fed. 378). The elective nature of the law was held by the Supreme Court of Illinois to obviate any difficulty that might otherwise arise on the ground of the exercise of judicial powers by the commission of that State (Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co.).

In all the foregoing cases the nonjudicial character of the boards and commissions was affirmed, but the courts of several States adopt another view for identical agencies therein. Thus it was said by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts that for certain purposes and in certain respects the commission on arbitration and the industrial accident board, provided for by the compensation law of the State, should be classed as courts, though the members are not judicial officers within the constitution. However, as they have power to summon witnesses, administer oaths, make rulings, and render decisions they are in a sense courts, in which proceedings may be had which correspond to actions (Pigeon v. Employers' Liab. Assurance Corp., 102 N. E. 932). But in a later case this court defined the industrial accident board of the State as being not a court of general or limited common-law jurisdiction, but solely an administrative tribunal, created to administer the compensation law in aid and with the assistance of the superior courts. The essential prerequisites of the act as prescribed by itself must be observed, and the authority of the board can not be enlarged or diminished by express consent or waived by acts of estoppel (In re Levangie, 117 N. E. 200).

The Supreme Court of California found the powers of the accident commission of that State to be those of a court, the law giving to it "full power, authority, and jurisdiction to try and finally determine" all proceedings for the recovery of compensation, which are "precisely the same functions that are performed by any court in passing upon questions brought before it." Power thus to act is held to be given by the amendment to the constitution of the State authorizing the enactment of the law and the creation of the board with authority to settle disputes (Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 156 Pac. 491; Carstens v. Pillsbury, 158 Pac. 218). The fact that the commission is held to have such a status entails the necessity of a procedure in conformity to the standing of a court, in compliance with constitutional requirements as to due process of law. This was held to restrict somewhat the power of the commission to proceed informally, to waive the customary rules as to evidence, etc. (Carstens case).

In discussing its law the Supreme Court of Oregon held that the constitution of the State gave the legislature authority to set up new courts if the three departments of the government, legislative, executive, and judicial, are kept properly separate (Evanhoff v. Industrial Accident Commission, 78 Oreg. 503, 154 Pac. 106). Evidently, the peculiar limitations of the State constitutions afford ground for diverse rulings on the power to establish courts, while the functions of the commissions also vary; but, on one ground or another, the authority of these bodies has been unanimously upheld.

Somewhat different was the point raised against the statute of Rhode Island, the contention being made that the provision of the act which authorizes employers to maintain benefit schemes as a substitute for the provisions of the act amounted to a delegation of legislative powers. This was overruled by the supreme court on the ground that the establishment and acceptance of such schemes was optional, and not binding as a law would be (Sayles v. Foley, 38 R. I. 484, 96 Atl. 340).

The status of the administrative bodies provided for by the laws under consideration was not considered, except in a general way, by the Supreme Court in the case noted above, though their authority was, of course, assumed in so far as the validity of awards made without jury trial was upheld. In the White case, the New York commission was said to have "administrative and judicial functions, including authority to pass upon claims to compensation on notice to the parties interested. * * * No question is made but that the procedural provisions of the act are amply adequate to afford the notice and opportunity to be heard, required by the fourteenth amendment."

The Iowa statute calls for an arbitration committee appointed for the case in hand, with power of review lodged in an industrial commissioner. This results in what the Supreme Court characterized as an "administrative tribunal," powers of judicial review remaining in the courts (Hawkins v. Bleakly, citing the decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa in the case; Hunter v. Colfax Consolidated Coal Co., supra).

Whatever may be lacking in uniformity of reasoning in the citations on this point, there is complete agreement that in the establishment and authorization of the various administrative commissions no new courts have been created or judicial power delegated in such wise as to offend the provisions of the Federal or State constitutions.

FREEDOM OF CONTRACT.

The compulsory laws of New York and Washington were, because of their nature, subjected to scrutiny on the ground that they interfered unconstitutionally with the freedom of contract, and in the Ives case (New York) it was held that this was unwarrantably done, reading into the contract between the employer and employee, and without the employer's consent, a new liability to which he can interpose practically no defense. In the Clausen case (Washington) it was said that personal rights, such as that of contract, are not absolute. "On the contrary, it has been many times said that there is no absolute right to do as one will, to assume any calling one desires, or contract as one chooses; that the term 'liberty' means absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community," citing Frisbie v. United States (157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586). Other opinions cited were Holden v. Hardy (169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383), in which the Supreme Court, speaking of the power to limit the hours of labor a workman may be employed in underground mines, said: "This right of contract, however, is itself subject to certain limitations which the State may lawfully impose in the exercise of its police powers", and State v. Buchanan (29 Wash. 602, 70 Pac. 52), in which a law limiting the number of hours of labor that women might be employed in a day was held constitutional, although requiring the yielding of individual rights.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts (opinion of justices) found no difficulty in disposing of the question of freedom of contract because of the elective or optional feature of the State law, by reason of which employers and employees were alike at liberty to choose whether or not they would accept the provisions of the statute. As to the Wisconsin law it was contended that while it in form presented to employers and their workmen a free choice as to acceptance or rejection of its terms, it was in fact coercive, since the employer is constrained by the abolition of his defenses to accept the act, while the employee will feel himself obliged to come within its provisions for fear of discharge if he does not accept. The court assumed that certain employers would feel themselves able adequately to safeguard their workmen and carry their own risks under the liability laws of the State, even with the defenses abrogated, since under the circumstances of their establishments they would consider that preferable to assuming the burdens of the compensation law. So also it was argued that in all probability a great body of workmen, especially the unskilled classes, would be glad to secure a certain compensation in case of injury instead of accepting the uncertainties of a lawsuit. This phase of the subject was dismissed as being speculative and conjectural, since no one could say what the practical operation of the law would be. "It is enough for our present purpose that no one can say with certainty that it would operate to coerce either employer or employee" (Borgnis case).

The same situation was developed in the Ohio opinion on the earlier (elective) law, in which it was said that "it is urgently insisted that while the law is apparently permissive and leaves its operation to the election of the employer and employees, it is really coercive." The law in question deprived the employer of certain defenses if he failed to elect, election by the employee being presumed if he continued in service, but he might sue in certain cases of the employer's negligence. The system thus provided was held by the court not to be coercive on account of the common-law and statutory rights still preserved to the parties. "As was said in the Wisconsin case, 'Laws can not be set aside upon mere conjecture or speculation. The court must be able to say with certainty that an unlawful result will follow.' We do not see how such a thing could be said here" (Creamer case).

The New Jersey Supreme Court took the same view, holding that no coercion was exercised upon either party to the contract of hire. There are two principal parts of the law—one a stringent liability law, and the other a compensation statute—and both parties are free to choose under which of them the employment is to stand. It is provided that in the absence of notice of rejection acceptance of the compensation system is presumed. It was said that it would have been quite as competent for the legislature to have adopted other alternatives, but in its wisdom the particular choice made was the one adopted.

Really, the matter comes down to a question of presumption or burden of proof, which it is entirely within the control of the legislature to regulate so long as the parties are left entirely free to make whatever contract they choose, as they are in this case. We are therefore of the opinion that, as against the objections taken, section 2 is constitutional. [Sexton case.]

To the general charge that the laws interfered with freedom of contract, the supreme courts of Illinois and Iowa in the cases already cited (p. 173) give the answer that the statutes are elective, and that if the parties elect they can not complain of the consequences; so also of the right of the parties to waive remedies otherwise provided and subject themselves to such inquiries as to violate the provisions of law as to unreasonable search and seizure, their acceptance of the act being voluntary.

More specifically the point of the restriction of freedom is raised against the presumptions as to election. The Supreme Court of Minnesota held that the law of that State was not vitiated as a voluntary and optional one, because express disavowal of its provisions was required (Mathison v. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co.); while the Massachusetts court declared that a requirement which provides that the law must be rejected at the time of hiring if the employee does not wish to come under it is reasonable (Young v. Duncan). Of this provision the Michigan Supreme Court, speaking of the presumption that the employee will accept where the employer elects, said that the former has a knowledge of the law and a presumptive notice of his employer's action, there being merely an establishment by the legislature of a presumption which can be overcome, the purpose being to avoid uncertainty (Mackin v. Detroit-Timkin Axle Co.).

Considerable stress was laid by the appellants in the White case, when it was before the Supreme Court, upon the effect of the New York law in depriving the parties to the labor contract of their constitutional rights of freedom in the making of contracts to render service or to employ labor, citing declarations made by the court in recent cases (Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 35 Sup. Ct. 240; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 233, 36 Sup. Ct. 7) in which certain laws were held unconstitutional as interfering with the right of personal liberty involved in the making of contracts for employment. As to this the court said:

It is not our purpose to qualify or weaken either of these declarations in the least, and we recognize that the legislation under review does measurably limit the freedom of employer and employee to agree respecting the terms of employment, and that it can not be supported except on the ground that it is a reasonable exercise of the police power of the State. In our opinion it is fairly supportable on that ground. And for this reason: The subject matter in respect of which freedom of contract is restricted is the matter of compensation for human life or limb lost or disability incurred in the course of hazardous employment, and the public has a direct interest in this as affecting the common welfare.

The authority of the State to prohibit contracts made in derogation of a lawfully established policy respecting compensation for accidental death or disabling personal injury was said to be clear. It was pointed out that no safety provisions, nor regulations directly tending to protect life and health, appear in the New York statute.

But the interest of the public is not confined to these. One of the grounds of its concern with the continued life and earning power of the individual is its interest in the prevention of pauperism, with its concomitants of vice and crime, and, in our opinion, laws regulating the responsibility of employers for the injury or death of employees arising out of the employment bear so close a relation to the protection of the lives and safety of those concerned that they properly may be regarded as coming within the category of police regulations.

Objections were also raised to the Washington statute as coming between the employer and the employee in the matter of the labor contract. The court held, however, that the police power of the State carries with it a wide range of judgment and discretion as to the matters that are of sufficiently general importance to be brought under State control and administration. The public welfare is sufficient warrant for the exercise of such powers as are made use of in the compensation law to regulate the conditions of contract, no less with reference to those who are disabled or who are dependents of those fatally injured in the industrial occupations necessary to the development of the resources of the State than for the support by a system of pensions of disabled soldiers and the widows and dependents of those killed in war. The fact that the compensation system is not confined to those who are left without means of support is not an objection to its validity, since to make such limitations would be to discriminate against the thrifty in favor of the improvident.

We are unable to discern any ground in natural justice or fundamental right that prevents the State from imposing the entire burden upon the industries that occasion the losses.

In passing upon the law of Texas, which makes acceptance of the law binding on employees remaining in the service of an employer who accepts the act, the Supreme Court said:

A moment's reflection will show the impossibility of giving an option both to the employer and to the employee and enabling them to exercise it in diverse ways. * * * What plaintiff [employee] has lost, therefore, is only a part of his liberty to make such contract as he pleased with a particular employer and to pursue his employment under the rules of law that previously had obtained. But, as has been held so often, the liberty of the citizen does not include among its incidents any vested right to have the rules of law remain unchanged for his benefit. [Middleton case.]

A provision of the law of Pennsylvania forbidding contracts of waiver or agreements for releases prior to the happening of an accident was attacked in a case (Anderson v. Carnegie Steel Co., 99 Atl. 215) which was before the supreme court of that State. The court held that this was in accordance with the declared policy of the State as set forth in an earlier law, the present provision being but an extension of the same, and not an invalid interference with the freedom of contract.

The law of Arizona, as already pointed out, goes to the other extreme in regard to the granting of options, the injured workman being given a choice, even after the injury, between the compensation law and a suit for damages, which accords with existing provisions of the constitution. The legislature went further, however, and undertook to give to the personal representative of an employee whose injuries were fatal the same option. This the supreme court of the State declared was beyond the power of the legislature, since the representative had only the right to sue, and could be given no right under the compensation act in case the injured man had failed to make the election before death (Behringer v. Copper Co., 149 Pac. 1065).

STATUS OF BENEFIT FUNDS.

An objection was urged against the constitutionality of the statute of Washington in its provision for the maintenance of a fund to be formed of premiums or contributions by employers, on the ground that this was a violation of the provisions of the constitution requiring equal and uniform taxation of property for public purposes. It was held that while the fund was a charge laid on persons engaged in the industries named, imposed by public authority as are taxes, it was not in the meaning of the constitution a tax, as "no acquisition to the public revenue, general or local, is authorized or aimed at. It is to be used, not to meet the current expenses of government, but to recompense employees of the industries on whom the burden is imposed for injuries received by them while engaged in the pursuit of their employment. It is the consideration which owners of the industries pay for the privilege of carrying them on. It is therefore in the nature of a license tax, and can be justified on the principle of law that justifies the imposition and collection of license taxes generally." Cases were then cited showing the power of the legislature to levy such taxes in the State, the conclusion being reached that the sums might be considered as partaking of the nature of a license for both revenues and regulation, but in neither aspect was there anything inimical to either the State or Federal constitution (State v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 117 Pac. 1106). Considering another phase of the subject, the supreme court of the State said that when the employer had contributed to the fund, his obligations were discharged, and an injured employee would look not to the employer but to the fund, and if the claim were rejected no suit would lie against the employer but against the commission (Stertz v. Industrial Insurance Commission, 158 Pac. 256).

When these provisions of the Washington law came before the Supreme Court of the United States (Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington), it was pointed out that while the State court relied principally on the police power of the State, the levying of contributions on employers in the specified industries was also justified "as possessing the character of a license tax upon the occupation, partaking of the dual nature of a tax for revenue and a tax for purposes of regulation." The court then said:

We are not here concerned with any mere question of construction, nor with any distinction between the police and the taxing powers. The question whether a State law deprives a party of rights secured by the Federal Constitution depends not upon how it is characterized, but upon its practical operation and effect. And the Federal Constitution does not require a separate exercise by the States of their powers of regulation and of taxation.

It seems to us that the considerations to which we have adverted in New York Central R. R. Co. v. White, supra, as showing that the workmen's compensation law of New York is not to be deemed arbitrary and unreasonable from the standpoint of natural justice, are sufficient to support the State of Washington in concluding that the matter of compensation for accidental injuries with resulting loss of life or earning capacity of men employed in hazardous occupations is of sufficient public moment to justify making the entire matter of compensation a public concern, to be administered through State agencies.

Taking the law, therefore, to be justified by the public nature of the object, whether as a tax or as a regulation, the question whether the charges are excessive remains. Upon this point no particular contention is made that the compensation allowed is unduly large; and it is evident that unless it be so, the corresponding burden upon the industry can not be regarded as excessive if the State is at liberty to impose the entire burden upon the industry.

As we have seen, its fourth section prescribes the schedule of contribution, dividing the various occupations into groups, and imposing various percentages evidently intended to be proportioned to the hazard of the occupations in the respective groups. Certainly the application of a proper percentage to the pay roll of the industry can not be deemed an arbitrary adjustment, in view of the legislative declaration that it is "deemed the most accurate method of equitable distribution of burden in proportion to relative hazard." As further rebutting the suggestion that the imposition is exorbitant or arbitrary, we should accept the declaration of intent that the fund shall ultimately become neither more nor less than self-supporting, and that the rates are subject to future adjustment by the legislature and the classifications to rearrangement according to experience, as plain evidence of an effort to limit the burden to the requirements of each industry.

Like the Washington statute, the earlier Montana law was compulsory in the matter of contributions to the general fund. It was held by the supreme court of the State that as the act in question was a scheme calculated to result to the public welfare, it was a proper corollary conclusion that the contributions to the fund were of the nature of a tax imposed for a public purpose; or the procedure might be justified, if the act abolished suits at law for personal injuries and death, on the theory that the State had given a quid pro quo to the employer. The court concluded, however, that it was not required to accept either of these arguments, but that it was within the police power of the State to levy such an impost as an employment tax upon the occupation covered by the act.

It is not at all necessary to justify the imposition of such a tax that the business itself should particularly require police supervision, although, as we have seen, extrahazardous enterprises may demand restraint and regulation. Such a tax may be imposed, either for regulation or revenue, or for both. Property and occupation are alike legitimate objects of taxation. [Cunningham case.]

A somewhat different aspect of this question is involved in the Wisconsin statute, since, while no general fund is maintained, compensation is compulsory as to the State and its municipalities. It follows, therefore, that public funds raised by taxation are used for the payment of the benefits contemplated by the act, and on this ground the constitutionality of the law was challenged as compelling municipalities to levy taxes for other than public purposes. As to this point the supreme court of the State (Borgnis v. Falk) said:

We have not been quite able to perceive the force of this point, and we find no argument upon it in the brief. We shall only say that the manner in which the State or the public shall treat its workmen is peculiarly a matter for the legislature to determine. No one is compelled to work for the public, and, if he does, he takes the situation on the terms which the public gives. We know of no reason why the public, acting by its lawmaking power, may not provide that its employees shall have as part of their compensation certain indemnities in case of accidental injury in the public service. When the law does so provide, the raising of the funds to discharge those indemnities becomes plainly a proper public purpose.

It is evident that the principles here enunciated are the same as those set forth by the supreme courts of Michigan and Ohio in sustaining the laws of the respective States against contentions that the compulsory application of the statute to municipalities and the diversion of taxes were unconstitutional.

The Ohio Supreme Court had before it in an earlier case (State v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 69 N. E. 602) the question of the legality of the State fund, which, under the law as it then stood, was made up of contributions from both employers and employees, while the State assumed the expense of administration. It was charged against this system that the law directed the State to use public funds for private purposes, to which the court replied that the ends in view were of a nature to justify the action of the State in its power to secure peace, safety, and the best interests of the Commonwealth, and quoted from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Noble State Bank v. Haskell (219 U. S. 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186), in which the constitutionality of a statute of Oklahoma, authorizing the establishment of a guaranty fund for deposits by a levy on the banks of the State, was under consideration. The quotation is as follows:

The substance of the plaintiff's argument is that the assessment takes private property for private use without compensation. * * * Nevertheless, notwithstanding the logical form of the objection, there are more powerful considerations on the other side. In the first place it is established by a series of cases that an ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property for what, in its immediate purpose, is a private use. * * *

It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare.

The objection on this ground was therefore overruled.

The same views were expressed by the Supreme Court of Iowa and the Court of Appeals of New York in meeting the contention that the insurance systems established by the laws of these States effected a taking of property without due process of law.

The Employees' Insurance Association of Texas was attacked on the ground that it was a private corporation formed otherwise than by a general law, contrary to the provisions of the constitution of the State. This contention was rejected, the supreme court saying that the association was only an agency for the proper administration of the law and not properly a corporation, even though so designated in the act (Middleton v. Texas Power & Light Co., 185 S. W. 556).

A special fund is provided under a section of the New York law that looks to the protection of employers of workmen who have suffered a partially disabling injury (sec. 15, subd. 7, added by ch. 622, 1916). This fund is to be maintained by levying a contribution of $100 on the insurance carrier in each case in which there is a death of an insured person with no survivor entitled to compensation. The proceeds are to be used as special benefits in "second injury" cases, when a partially disabled person becomes totally disabled through an injury that would only partially disable a normal person. This arrangement was held by the court of appeals to be within the power of the legislature to provide, conforming to the spirit of the act, and of uniform application to all persons coming within the conditions prescribed by the act (State Industrial Commission v. Newman, 118 N. E. 794).

POLICE POWER.

As to whether or not the acts under consideration properly fall within the police power of the State is a question to be answered according to the views taken as to the scope and purpose of the laws themselves. With the exception of the New York court, the laws were regarded as tending to meet existing needs in a legitimate manner and as being within the police power of the State. The Supreme Court of Ohio (Creamer case) quoted with approval from the discussion of Prof. Freund in his work on the subject, as follows:

The term "police power" has never been circumscribed. It means at the same time a power and function of Government, a system of rules, and an administrative organization and force.

Prof. Freund is further quoted as saying that a consideration of the subject "will reveal the police power not as a fixed quantity, but as the expression of social, economic, and political conditions. As long as these conditions vary, the police power must continue to be elastic—i. e., capable of development."

This court regarded the law in question as a proper exercise of the police power of the State in view of the objects to be gained by its enforcement. So also the Washington court, which said: "In fine, when reduced to its ultimate and final analysis, the police power is the power to govern." The insurance law of the State having, as this court held, "a reasonable relation to the protection of the public health: morals, safety, or welfare, it is not to be set aside because it may incidentally deprive some person of his property without fault or take the property of one person to pay the obligation of another" (Clausen case).

The Montana statute was opposed on the ground that it was not designed to prevent the evils growing out of and incident to the present system of actions for fault, because it does not abolish such actions. In passing the court remarked that if the act has a reasonable tendency to accomplish the desired result it ought to be upheld as within the police power. Aside from the humanitarian features of the law which provided prompt and certain relief for injured workmen, which might be regarded as a matter of private benefit, this opinion considered the view that the act might be fairly construed as an attempt to prevent persons injured in coal mines and their dependents from becoming public charges.

Any measure which tends to minimize indigency of necessity raises the general standard of the people; any statute which has a tendency to reduce the present enormous expense of operating our courts would seem to be presumptively a proper exercise of the police power. * * * * * In our judgment the general scheme of this act is well within the police power of the State. If the people, represented by their legislature, are of opinion that the public interests demand that industrial insurance ought to be substituted, in whole or in part, for actions for wrongs, this court certainly can not say that they are in error (Cunningham case).

Other opinions reached the same conclusions by practically the same arguments, the laws being regarded as calculated to serve the public welfare. The New York court, however, says:

We have tried to make it clear that in our judgment this statute is not a law of regulation. It contains not a single provision which can be said to make for the safety, health, or morals of the employees therein specified, nor to impose upon the enumerated employers any duty or obligation designed to have that effect.

The recent decisions by the Supreme Court relied upon in other opinions as supporting the views adopted as to the police power (Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186; Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U. S. 121, 31 Sup. Ct. 189) were referred to, but of them it was said:

We can not recognize them as controlling of our construction of our own constitution. [Ives case.]

The Supreme Court of Washington (State v. Mountain Timber Co., 135 Pac. 645), called upon to consider its earlier decision on the constitutionality of the industrial insurance law of that State, had before it objections on the ground that the act violated article 4, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees for the State a republican form of government; that it violated the fourth amendment to the Constitution, which secures all persons against unreasonable searches and seizures of their persons and effects; that it violated the fifth and seventh amendments in depriving the plaintiff of property without due process of law, and for a public use without just compensation, and also without the right of trial by jury; and, lastly, that it violated the fourteenth amendment in granting privileges and immunities and depriving the plaintiff of property without due process of law, and also depriving him of equal protection of the laws.

The court recognized that not all these points had been considered in detail in the case State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, but said:

When we say that we sustain a law by reference to the police power that might otherwise be in conflict with some provision of the Constitution it would seem that every incident to that law, as well as all methods necessary to make it effective, are likewise exempted from the prescriptions and limitations of the Constitution. The legislature has adopted the idea of industrial insurance and seen fit to make that idea a workable one by putting its execution, as well as its administrative features, in the hands of a commission.

The court then cited a number of cases on the subject of the police power, quoting therefrom to show its development and application under the conditions:

Having in mind the sovereignty of the State, it would be folly to define the term. To define is to limit that which in the nature of things can not be limited and which is rather to be adjusted to conditions touching the common welfare when covered by legislative enactment. The police power is to the public what the law of necessity is to the individual. It is comprehended in the maxim, Salus populi suprema lex. It is not a rule; it is an evolution.

It was further said that "to hold the idea of industrial insurance to be constitutional, and to hold its incidents and machinery when molded into law to be inoperative because of some constitutional limitation, would lead to absurd results." The court then unanimously upheld the judgment from which the appeal was taken, declaring that the power to provide for the execution and administration of the law had been sustained in a previous decision (Davison v. Walla Walla, 52 Wash. 453, 100 Pac. 981, and cases cited); that the constitutional provision as to the right to a trial by jury has no application in the State courts or to prosecutions for the violation of State laws, citing State v. McDowell (61 Wash. 398, 112 Pac. 521), and that the contention that the industrial insurance law is in violation of a republican form of government needs no discussion, citing Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Oregon (223 U. S. 118, 32 Sup. Ct. 224) and Kiernan v. Portland (223 U. S. 151, 32 Sup. Ct. 231). In the concluding paragraph the court said: "We recognize that this case is appealed to this court in order to bring it to the future attention of the Supreme Court of the United States"; and concluded with citations of the decisions of the various courts sustaining compensation laws and other decisions bearing on points of law of like nature.

The Supreme Court of Illinois avoided the issue by declaring that the compensation law of that State was not an exercise of police power, but simply offered the parties concerned a method of settlement of cases falling within its purview (Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co.). The Supreme Court of Rhode Island, on the other hand (Sayles v. Foley), declared that the law of that State was a warranted exercise of the police power, taking modern industrial conditions into consideration.

As forecast by the Washington court, the Mountain Timber Co. appealed its case, and the Supreme Court, in passing on this point, said:

We are clearly of the opinion that a State, in the exercise of its power to pass such legislation as reasonably is deemed to be necessary to promote the health, safety, and general welfare of its people, may regulate the carrying on of industrial occupations that frequently and inevitably produce personal injuries and disability with consequent loss of earning power among the men and women employed, and, occasionally, loss of life of those who have wives and children or other relations dependent upon them for support, and may require that these human losses shall be charged against the industry, either directly, as is done in the case of the act sustained in New York Central R. R. Co. v. White, supra, or by publicly administering the compensation and distributing the cost among the industries affected by means of a reasonable system of occupation taxes. If any industry involves so great a human wastage as to leave no fair profit beyond it, the State is at liberty, in the interest of the safety and welfare of its people, to prohibit such an industry altogether.

Much that has been said in the discussion under the various headings above is in fact determinations of the propriety of the various provisions as an exercise of the police power; and the frequent appeal to modern industrial conditions can not escape notice. Indeed, the New York Court of Appeals acknowledged the cogency of the economic and equitable reasons for the enactment of a compensation law, while declaring such a statute unconstitutional (Ives v. South Buffalo Ry Co.). This fact is pointed out by the Supreme Court of New Hampshire in its statement that the opinion in the Ives case supports all the provisions of such a law as that enacted by the New Hampshire Legislature (Wheeler v. Contoocook Mills).

PARTICULAR PROVISIONS OF THE LAWS.

Besides questions of a more general nature, as the foregoing, numerous decisions have been made by the courts construing particular phrases and features of the laws, and determining their application to particular cases. Where industrial commissions and administrative boards exist, charged with the duty of deciding controversies under the acts, rulings, and opinions are formulated, and these also are available as setting forth the scope and method of the laws in their practical working. It would be both undesirable and impractical to attempt a complete survey of this field in the present bulletin, but inasmuch as the construction of a statute is of no less vital importance than its terms, some account will here be given of the action taken by the various courts and administrative bodies with reference to a number of the specified provisions of the laws.

INJURIES COMPENSATED.

As to the class of injuries compensated, the natural conclusion from the fact of the enactment of compensation laws to supersede those governing the employer's liability would be that only injuries due to accident are covered by the acts. Indeed, in most of the laws this is specifically stated, and carefully chosen language is used in several with the obvious intent of excluding what are commonly known as occupational diseases and the results of cumulative processes as distinguished from the immediate results of single accidental occurrences. In a few jurisdictions, however, only the word "injury" or the phrase "personal injury" occurs, and in such cases the field would seem to lie open for the inclusion of any physical disability occasioned by the nature and conditions of the employment, thus permitting awards for occupational diseases. The qualifying term "accidental" does not appear in the laws of California (as amended, 1915), Connecticut, Massachusetts, Ohio, the Philippine Islands, Texas, West Virginia, and the Federal statutes of 1908 and 1916. In Wyoming the definition is obscure, the words "injury and personal injury" being declared not to include "a disease except as it shall directly result from an injury incurred in the employment." This is obviously a definition in the terms of the thing defined, but it seems probable that the intent was to exclude other than accidental injuries. This construction is supported by the reports required when "an accident occurs causing injury;" also in some degree by the title of the State fund for insurance, i. e., "industrial accident fund."

Inasmuch, however, as the spirit of the laws undoubtedly suggests relief for industrial incapacity due to employment, it is difficult to support the narrower view of sudden and violent injury as a necessary basis, as against the more inclusive idea of injury due to the working conditions, whether of sudden or gradual development. A few States have recognized this in their laws, amendments to those of California, Connecticut, Hawaii, and Wisconsin specifically providing for the compensation of occupational diseases, as do the new (1916) Federal law and the original (1919) North Dakota law; while the courts of Massachusetts have construed the law of that State as including them (but see p. 119).

Accidents.—The term "accident" can hardly be said to have any peculiar meaning in laws of this class, but for statistical purposes the compensation commission of New York defines an industrial accident as one which causes loss of time from work or which requires medical aid, and orders that all such accidents be reported. The laws of some other States make specific limitations by defining the term as implying that the event is unexpected, unforeseen, happening suddenly or violently, and producing at the time objective symptoms of the injury. This strictness has not been uniformly observed by the courts, however, as regards either violence or objective symptoms.

Whether sunstroke should be classed as an accidental injury has been considered by the administrative authorities of several States, the California industrial commission saying that as a general rule injuries suffered from so-called acts of God, such as sunstroke, freezing, lightning, wind, etc., are not compensable, since they are risks which the whole citizenry takes. Circumstances in the instant cases were held to warrant an award for sunstroke, the workman having been engaged in removing cement from a warehouse with an iron roof and no windows, the thermometer standing at 105°.

The Illinois board gave compensation to a laborer digging in a trench and overcome by heat, stating that a rational and reasonable conclusion is that the prostration would not have occurred had he not been so employed. This board took the same view of the case of a stationary engineer, whose death was reported due to heat prostration, he having worked in a poorly ventilated room, with a temperature of about 120°. The Iowa board ruled in one case that heat prostration was not an injury within the act, there being no extraordinary hazard or exposure to heat on account of the laborer's employment; but ruled in another case that "where the employee sustains such injury when put to work at a task which peculiarly exposes him to such injury, he should be paid the compensation provided for in the act." The commissioner of labor of Minnesota, in passing upon this question, reached the conclusion that where heat stroke or sunstroke is due to the conditions of employment rather than to physical weakness on the part of the injured person, it is an accident within the provisions of the compensation law. The industrial commission of Ohio awarded compensation for heat prostration of a roller in an iron-mill, holding that it was an injury within the meaning of the act, though it was held that sunstroke, in the absence of special conditions artificially produced, would not support an award.

The Pennsylvania board ruled that the physical changes produced in the tissue of the body by an injury of this nature were such as properly to be classed as violence to its structure; and this view was sustained by the supreme court of the State (Lane v. Horn & Hardart Baking Co., 104 Atl. 615). The Supreme Court of Minnesota likewise (State ex rel. Rau v. District Court of Ramsey County, 164 N. W. 916) awarded compensation in a case of death due to sunstroke as for "a violent injury produced by an external power," where a workman was employed at street labor, exposed to the direct rays of the sun, in an atmosphere rendered excessively humid on account of the sand in the street being wet. The Supreme Court of Nebraska also allowed compensation where death followed a heat stroke, the employee in question being engaged in cleaning and oiling motors in a building of sheet iron with tarred roofing and insufficient ventilation, while the air was heavy with dust and particles of matter produced in the manufacture of mattresses, etc. "A stronger man might have lived, but it is enough that the industry brought about this man's death." The matter of violence was disregarded, the unexpected quality of the event being held sufficient to classify it as an accident within the meaning of the act (Young v. Western Furniture & Mfg. Co., 164 N. W. 712).

The Supreme Court of Rhode Island affirmed an award for death from heat exhaustion, against the contention of the employer that death in such a case was due to disease and not to accident (Walsh v. River Spinning Co., 103 Atl. 1025). As to the nature of the injury the court said:

It appears to us that the unusual and excessive heat in the boiler room, producing the sudden inability of the physical system to longer resist its debilitating effects, constituted a chain of circumstances which may fairly be regarded as an unlooked-for mishap not designed and undoubtedly unexpected.

Against this practically uniform allowance of benefits for an injury unquestionably arising out of and in course of employment, stands the opinion of the Supreme Court of Michigan, which denied compensation for death from heat prostration on the ground that there was no accident. The case was one of a bricklayer who was prostrated at 4 p. m. of the fourth day of his employment in a boiler room, dying in less than three hours. The temperature in the room was said to have been 136°. The State board had made an award but the court reversed it, saying:

The record is absolutely barren of any evidence that anything untoward or unusual happened in the course of his employment during any of the three days or that he exerted himself in any unusual manner or to an unusual degree. He was doing the work which he and his associates were employed to do exactly in the manner they expected to do it. To permit recovery in this case would make it impossible to deny recovery in any case where a fireman of a stationary or marine boiler in the performance of his ordinary and accustomed labor succumbs to heat prostration [Roach v. Kelsey Wheel Co., 167 N. W. 33].

It is a pleasure to record that here, as in the Bischoff case (p.183), decided by the same court, there was a vigorous, even if futile (so far as immediate results are concerned), dissent by two judges. In this it was pointed out that the workman was in the course of his employment, was robust and temperate, and that he fell instantly upon excessive exertion in moving a heavy load after working in the extreme heat in which he had been employed.

The minority further insisted that in denying compensation in this case the court was rejecting its own precedent in a case decided in 1916 (La Veck v. Parke, Davis & Co., 190 Mich. 604, 157 N. W. 72). In this case a workman affected by arterio-sclerosis had suffered a rupture of a blood vessel in his brain, caused by overexertion and exposure to extreme temperature. An award in his favor was affirmed on the ground that there was an accident, since, though the workman "intended to do the prolonged work which the situation demanded," the rupture "was an unexpected consequence from the continued work in the excessively warm room." The majority met this citation with a bare statement of opinion that the case was not "authority for the determination of the board" in the Roach case.

These two opinions bring to light the difficult and unsettled question of the extent to which a distinction may be recognized, within the spirit and purpose of the compensation laws, between accidental causes and accidental results. What can be looked upon in no other light than as a border-line case, though of a somewhat different nature than those under consideration above, is one in which the compensation commission of New York allowed a claim where a man had been at work for 21 hours, with a total of 1½ hours out for meals, during which time he was on his feet almost continuously and climbed 216 steps three times. About half an hour after stopping work he was found sitting dead in a chair. Death was said to be due to angina pectoris, brought on by overexertion and exhaustion.

But whatever view is taken of the propriety of recognizing a distinction between cause and result, it does not seem in harmony with the intent of such legislation to permit an employer to operate with immunity and at the sole risk of the workman, under conditions and for periods that produce immediate and demonstrable results, not anticipated indeed, but following a more or less protracted routine, and at some unforeseeable moment breaking over the boundary of human endurance and working disability or death of the exact economic effects and under the same general conditions as are contemplated in the enactment of the laws.

The New York Supreme Court, appellate division, denied benefits in a case of heat prostration, following the ruling of the industrial commission to the same effect, in a case (Campbell v. Clausen-Flanagan Brewery, 171 N. Y. Supp. 522), in which a driver was overcome while out in the open air. The accidental nature of the injury was admitted but, since the surroundings were only those of the public generally, it was held that it did not arise out of the employment, and was therefore not compensable under the law.

The rule as to injury by freezing or frostbite would naturally be the same as for heat prostration. A compensation commissioner of Connecticut ruled that a collector driving long distances in very cold weather was exposed to such hazard as to warrant an award for freezing followed by erysipelas and death. This was affirmed by the supreme court of the State (Larke v. Insurance Co., 97 Atl. 320). The same commissioner, however, denied the claim of a night watchman who suffered frostbite of a toe while bringing coal from a storage shed into the boiler room of the establishment. The Massachusetts industrial accident board made awards for freezing where outdoor employment led to the exposure of the employees, and the supreme court of the State affirmed an award in favor of a longshoreman whose hands were frozen while at work at a wharf, the view being adopted that he was exposed to materially greater danger of freezing than the ordinary outdoor worker (in re McManaman, 113 N. E. 287). The industrial accident board of Montana took a similar position, saying that where an accident is due to forces of nature which might have been anticipated or foreseen there must be present some aggravation of the hazard whereby the workman is more exposed to danger as a result of his employment than is the ordinary man; but if the employment entails such unusual degree of exposure there is liability for the injurious consequences.

So also in a Wisconsin case (Ellingson Lumber Co. v. Industrial Commission, 169 N. W. 568), the court found that a woodsman was exposed to the inclemency of the weather by reason of his occupation, and that frozen feet were the result of an "accident within the meaning of the compensation statute."

The same principle was applied by the Supreme Court of Minnesota in a case in which a workman's thumb was frozen while he was cutting and handling timber in the snow. It was held on authority that freezing is a personal injury within the meaning of compensation acts, and is an accident in so far as it is an unexpected and unforeseen event, producing at the time injury to the physical structure of the body. Whether it also meets the requirement of happening "suddenly and violently" was said to be a more difficult question; but the court, one justice dissenting, concluded "that a fair construction of the statutory definition does not exclude freezing, and we hold that it is a personal injury caused by accident within the meaning of the act" (State ex rel. Virginia & Rainy Lake Co. v. District Court of St. Louis County, 164 N. W. 585). Another case before the same court turned more directly upon the question of whether or not the injury arose out of the employment, the circumstances being the employment of a janitor who was working both at keeping up the fires in a building and cleaning off the sidewalk, the weather being very cold. The two duties alternated, and the employee could divide his time as he chose. The court below found that the injury was sustained in the course of his employment, and arose out of it, but decided that the freezing was not an accident. Subsequently the supreme court made the ruling as to accidental injury noted above, and on the appeal in this case held to that ruling, reversing the court below in this respect, but affirming that the injury arose out of the employment on account of the nature of the work in which the employee was engaged, thus clearing the way for an award in the injured man's favor (State ex rel. Nelson v. District Court of Ramsey Co., 164 N. W. 917).

That there was no ground for an award was the opinion of the commissioner of labor of Minnesota in a case in which there was an abscess due to ink or metal poisoning where there was no break or infection due to accident, the commissioner saying that "if there was no breach of the surface of the body due to accident and through which the infection or poisoning takes place, it does not come within the meaning of the act." Likewise adverse was the ruling of the compensation commissioner of West Virginia in a case where a coal miner was overcome by smoke on account of returning to his working place too soon after the firing of a shot; and the law of this State was held not to cover the case of a miner suffering from an abraded bunion infected by the poison of bank water in a mine, though claims were allowed for ulcerated eyes caused by the splashing of such water into the eyes of a miner while pulling down coal, and where carbolineum used to preserve the crossarms of a telegraph pole got into a lineman's eyes and face, causing abscesses. The compensation board of Pennsylvania also allowed compensation in a case where a workman was poisoned by sumac in a skin which he was handling, dermatitis and disability resulting. The board ruled that the injury was sudden, not a disease and not a secondary result, but due to a cause proceeding from without and encountered in the course of service.

The condition of a breach of the surface of the body prescribed by the labor commissioner of Minnesota seems to have been met in a case passed upon by the industrial commission of Ohio in which an employee handling goods claimed to have incurred blood poisoning by scratching her face with her fingers, this being held not to be an occupational disease, but an accidental injury. That lesion is not required by the industrial commission of California as a basis of awards appears from favorable rulings in two cases passed upon by that body, one being that of a man who appeared to be suffering from nervous shock due to efforts to rescue fellow workmen from suffocation in a septic tank, two having been killed and the superintendent nearly so. It was said that the risk of such experiences was involved in any employment and should be compensated if it directly causes injury. In the other case there was no apparent serious injury, but an apparently sincere belief of incapacity, which was held to entitle the claimant to compensation until the restoration of mental balance. As to such cases it must be said that there is an abundance of experience to show that a final determination, whether favorable or adverse to the claimant, is very generally followed by prompt recovery.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin sustained an award as for an accidental injury proximately causing the death of lumbermen where the death was due to typhoid fever induced by drinking polluted water furnished for the camp by the employer (Vennen v. New Delfs Lumber Co., 154 N. W. 640).

A settlement was made under the compensation law of Illinois on account of the death of 20 employees due to diphtheria and typhoid fever. These diseases were contracted by drinking polluted water furnished by the employing company. No contest against the payments was made by the company, the settlement being voluntary, according to a statement by one of the members of the State industrial board. The Illinois act contemplates the payment of benefits for accidental injuries arising out of and in the course of employment, the term accidental, according to the construction usually adopted, eliminating the ordinary occupational diseases from the scope of the act. The Supreme Court of Minnesota took a diverse view from the foregoing in a case involving a similar infection. The cases are identical in that the employer's responsibility was claimed to be due to the quality of the drinking water supplied by him for his employees; but while the Wisconsin court awarded benefits, that of Minnesota decided that under the definition of an accident appearing in the law of that State (i. e., "an unexpected or unforeseen event, happening suddenly and violently, with or without human fault, and producing at the time injury to the physical structure of the body"), the happening in question could not be construed as an accident. The period required for the development of the infection afforded the chief ground for holding that the definition excluded the case from compensation (State ex rel. Faribault Woolen Mills Co. v. District Court of Rice County, 164 N. W. 810). Somewhat similar to the foregoing was the position taken by a commissioner of the State of Connecticut, who denied compensation where the cumulative effect of an acid dip used for four days led to pus formation, the amputation of a finger at the second joint, and the partial loss of use of another finger, the refusal being based on the ground that the condition was "not due to an injury which can be located in point of time and place."

On like grounds the Supreme Court of Michigan denied the claim for compensation in a case where there was an infection from an untraced source, which might have gained access to the system through cracks in the skin of the hands due to the nature of the employment, the court saying that there was no sufficient evidence of an accident in the course of employment to sustain an award (Jermer v. Imperial Furniture Co., 166 N. W. 943). But where a tannery employee suffered an infection of the throat, due, as the board held, to inhaling dust from dry hides in a work place where the ventilation was poor, the same court upheld the award on the ground of an accidental contact with a septic germ or germs, taken up by the respiratory organs and thus carried into the system—said to be an unusual occurrence, but one shown by the evidence to be probable in the case at hand (Dove v. Alpena Hide & Leather Co., 164 N. W. 253). An award was also approved by this court where an undertaker's assistant died from a streptococcus infection after cleaning his employer's instruments after the embalming of the body of a person who had died of such an infection, the employee having apparently cut himself slightly while cleaning the instruments (Bloess v. Dolph, 161 N. W. 885).

Suffocation by the accidental inhalation of illuminating gas at a gas plant was also held to be a compensable injury under the Michigan law (Holnagle v. Lansing Fuel & Gas Co., 166 N. W. 843).

Over against these awards stands a reversal by the same court of an award made in behalf of a fireman who was wet while fighting a fire, and remained so for many hours on a winter day. Taken ill the next morning, his death followed from pneumonia in about two weeks. The court held that it was no unusual thing for a fireman to become wet while at work, so "that pneumonia was brought on, not by an unexpected event, but by an event which was an incident to his regular employment," to be classed "among the ordinary ones attending the duties of a fireman, and not as an accident" (Landers v. City of Muskegon, 163 N. W. 43).

The Supreme Court of Connecticut ruled similarly adversely in the case of a workman whose exposure was the result of a walk through deep snow to his place of employment, where he worked for 12 hours in wet clothing. The line of reasoning was different, however, for though the combination of weather conditions and prolonged and exhausting labor may be regarded as the accidental cause of the exhaustion which was followed by the pneumonia, such exhaustion could not be classed as "in and of itself a bodily injury" within the meaning of the act (Linnane v. Aetna Brewing Co., 99 Atl. 507).

The circumstances in the Linnane case are not unlike those in a case under the Indiana statute (United Paper Board v. Lewis, 117 N. E. 276). Here overwork in a hot, steam-filled room was followed by chills and nephritis developed. This was said to be a personal injury by accident, and an award in behalf of the workman was affirmed.

This accords with the action of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in allowing compensation in a case in which lobar pneumonia was found to result from the wetting of the clothing and the inhalation of smoke by a fireman—a situation quite comparable to that in the Landers case above (In re McPhee, 222 Mass. 1, 109 N. E. 633). The court in this case declared the inhalation of smoke and the drenching to be a personal injury within the act, the law of the State not necessitating the finding that it was accidental.

Compensation was allowed in a New York case where the accident itself caused no injury, but was followed by injurious consequences. Disease due to inclement weather conditions was the basis of the award (Rist v. Larkin & Sangster (1916), 156 N. Y. Supp. 875), though there was some complication of causes. A heavy cold followed by pleurisy and pulmonary tuberculosis was attributed to the accidental necessity of the workman's jumping into a river, where the jumping itself had no immediate disabling effect, but the wetting and the subsequent exposure were chargeable with having caused the disease.

Where a compensable accident originates the train of events in the course of which serious results follow an apparently slight physical injury, the question is not of the nature of the injury, but of proximate cause. This subject is considered more fully under another head (see pp. 128 to 135).

Construing the act as limited to accidental injuries, the solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor allowed benefits under the Federal law of 1908 in a case of compressed-air illness, otherwise known as "bends" or caisson disease, distinguishing this as a traumatic disease due to the lesion of tissues on account of the abnormal atmospheric pressure (Op. Sol., p. 201). This disease, however, is classed as an occupational disease by the British law and in treatises on the subject. Other traumatic diseases (i. e., those due to an injury or wound,) as in the case of lockjaw or other infection, would be excluded from the class of occupational diseases as being entirely unrelated to the nature of the employment. Such diseases if the sequel of a compensable accident, would, of course, come within the provisions of all compensation laws.

Typhoid fever and diphtheria, for which compensation was paid under the Illinois law, are neither occupational nor traumatic in their origin, but are idiopathic—i. e., of primary causation—and are subject to compensation, if at all, either on the basis of being accidental injuries, or injuries arising out of employment merely, under laws not requiring the injury to be accidental.

Hernias as injuries have been the subject not only of much discussion by courts and commissions, but special sections have been devoted to them in some of the more recent statutes. Questions of preexisting condition and proximate cause are involved, as well as of the proper treatment to be applied and the right of the employee to accept or reject the prescribed course of conduct. The industrial commission of Ohio concludes that "hernia (or so-called rupture) is a disease which ordinarily develops gradually, being, very rarely, the result of an accident." Rules were therefore adopted to the effect that where there is real traumatic hernia, resulting from the application of force directly to the abdominal wall, either puncturing or tearing the wall, full disability will be allowed; but in all other cases it will be considered as either congenital or of slow development and not compensable, being a disease rather than an accidental injury, unless conclusive proof is offered that the immediate cause which calls attention to the hernia was such as a sudden effort, severe strain, or bruise; that the descent of the hernia immediately followed the cause; that there was severe pain immediately following; and that the foregoing facts were noticed and communicated immediately to one or more persons. Where these conditions are fulfilled, compensation will be allowed as for the aggravation of previous conditions, for a time loss only and to a limited extent.

The Washington commission presented in its first annual report a tentative decision to award compensation only when it is proved that the hernia appeared suddenly, that it was accompanied by pain, that it immediately followed an accident, and that it did not exist prior thereto. A year later it called attention to the Ohio rules, saying, however, that the Ohio commission's findings are not subject to review in court, so that it can settle hernia cases on their merits from a medical standpoint, not being confronted by the legal side of the question. A case rejected by the Washington commission came to the supreme court of the State, and a claim was there allowed, the court holding the injury complained of to be the result of a "fortuitous event" within the meaning of the law, saying that "to hold with the commission that if a machine breaks, any resulting injury is within the act, but if the man breaks, any resulting injury is not within the act, is too refined to come within the policy of the act as announced by the legislature. * * * It must admit that the tearing of the muscles or the rupture of fibers, or whatever it is that causes hernia, while exercising unusual effort, is likewise covered by the act" (Zappala v. Industrial Insurance Commission, 144 Pac. 54).

It is apparent that the matter of the "tearing of the muscles or the rupture of the fibers" was rather vaguely assumed by the court as the explanation of the condition made the ground for a claim; while a compensation commissioner of the State of Connecticut, in an extensive memorandum, quotes medical authorities in accord with the statements of the Ohio commission, one of them saying that "local trauma, which has long been accorded by the laity an important place in the etiology of hernia, practically very rarely is the cause." The commissioner, however, awarded compensation in a limited form to the claimant in the case in hand, requiring him to submit within four weeks to proper surgical treatment.

The industrial accident board of Michigan likewise has furnished a pretty full discussion of the question, concluding in favor of the accident theory, if it may be so designated, saying:

We do not overlook the medical evidence introduced at the hearing to the effect that hernia should be classed as an accident only in a few rare cases. We think the weight of authority in workmen's compensation cases is clearly against such theory, and that the general rule established in the adjudicated cases and the textbooks is otherwise.

The award of the committee in the case under consideration was approved by the board. That this is the conclusion of the supreme court of the State appears from its decision in a case (Bell v. Hayes-Ionia Co., 158 N. W. 179) in which an award of the board was affirmed, even though there was evidence that there had been structural weakness prior to the event to which the injury was traced; the court saying that this would not "preclude a recovery if the injury itself is distinct and the result of a particular strain causing a sudden protrusion of the intestine." This case was decided largely on the authority of an earlier case (Robbins v. Original Gas Engine Co., 157 N. W. 437), in which the view that hernia is a disease was discussed. It was said by the court that it would be assumed from the evidence that the strain to which the condition of the claimant was traced was the occasion of the first protrusion of the sac through the abdominal wall, and if it was also assumed that there was a certain lack of physical integrity of the parts, still compensation might be allowed for the injury, and that not on the basis of disease, but of accidental injury.

It would seem, however, that the Michigan Supreme Court has here again assumed a more conservative attitude, as was done in the Roach case (p. 108), since in a more recent case (Tackles v. Bryant & Detwiler Co. (1918), 167 N. W. 36) compensation was denied where an inguinal rupture developed, following the lifting of a heavy timber, at which time a severe pain was felt, and the hernia was found to be developed, but as "he did not slip nor fall, nor did the timber strike him," it was concluded there was no accident. Nothing out of the ordinary happened, "because he had lifted such timbers before," so that there was evidently no "accidental injury within the meaning of the act." Evidently the doctrine of accidental result as accident is rejected by this court quite uniformly.

The Appellate Court of Indiana, on the other hand, affirmed an award made by the industrial board of the State, when a man suffering from hernial trouble had his condition so aggravated by heavy lifting as to necessitate an immediate operation. The mere fact of his susceptibility was said to afford no grounds for denying benefits, even though in some jurisdictions there was a restricted use of the word "accident" that would preclude the award; "but the weight of authority and the better reason, we think, favor the adoption of the popular meaning of said word, which includes any unlooked-for mishap or untoward event not expected or designed." (Puritan Bed Spring Co. v. Wolfe, 120 N. E. 417).

The industrial commission of Wisconsin, in passing on a case before it, said:

This is another case where a man who suddenly discovers that he has hernia concludes that it must have resulted from some fall or strain, and immediately recalls to his mind some recent incident which not only seems to him to constitute a sufficient cause, but which he honestly brings himself to believe did cause it. At best, such an incident constitutes nothing more than a mere possible cause. Except such incident was particularly violent or was followed immediately by severe pain, it can not, with any degree of certainty, be said to be a probable cause. In this case, a hernia on each side, an insignificant accident or strain given as the cause does not argue much.

The application was accordingly dismissed. Similar was the position of the Massachusetts board in a case in which the claimant testified to injury by heavy lifting, the impartial physician testifying:

The hernia could have been caused by his work. But every hernia is related to and is caused by strain, and if the board authorizes compensation for this hernia, it must require some employer hereafter to pay for every hernia that arises in any employee. Hernia, to be caused by some specific accident, can only follow a physical effort of tremendous and unusual violence.

The finding of the board was adverse to the claimant.

The Supreme Court of West Virginia, on the other hand, takes the view of that of Washington and of the Michigan board, and specifically rejects the position of the Washington commission, reversing also the public service commission of its own State, allowing a claim attributed to heavy lifting, and holding hernia to be an accident within the meaning of the law of the State (Poccardi v. Public Service Commission, 84 S. E. 242). The Minnesota department of labor and industries took a similar position, offering as a typical decision and award the case of Rakovich v. Agnew Bros. decided by a county court, in which a rupture was held compensable as an injury under the act, with an award also for medical and hospital expenses covering the costs of an operation.

It would seem therefore still to be a matter for medical definition and legislative determination, since the courts are so-unable to agree. Whether or not the true cause of hernia can in any case be found in the strain of extraordinary effort, the fact remains that a previously capable workman is frequently found to be disqualified for further labor as the result of such strain; while there are admitted, even if rare, instances of genuine traumatic hernia. In either case there is a disabling injury arising out of and in course of the employment; and it would seem to be more in accordance with the fundamental principles of compensation legislation that it should be a charge on the industry than on the worker alone.

An entirely different phase of the term "accident" is presented when an intentional assault is committed on an employee, several such cases being noted under the head, "Arising out of and in course of employment" (pp. 170 to 188). An opinion on this point is that of the Supreme Court of California (Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 156 Pac. 491), in which a night watchman was shot by a burglar, the court ruling that as to the injured man there was an accident, even though there was intention on the part of the person inflicting it, citing Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury (p. 177), where a foreman was assaulted by a discharged workman. The statute of Washington, as construed by the supreme court of that State (Stertz v. Industrial Insurance Commission, 158 Pac. 256), does not require that the injury arise out of the employment, so that a man shot by a discharged workman is within the protection of the act in any case if on the employer's premises, and if in course of employment when off the premises.

Occupational diseases.—As already noted, the Federal act of 1908 provided for compensation for employees injured in the course of employment without the restricting words "by accident." However, the Attorney General of the United States said of this act that "there is nothing either in the language of the act or its legislative history which justifies the view that the statute was intended to cover disease contracted in the course of employment, although directly attributable to the conditions thereof. On the contrary, it appears that the statute was intended to apply to injuries of an accidental nature resulting from employment in hazardous occupations, not to the effects of disease. * * * The word 'injury,' as used in the statute, is in no sense suggestive of disease, nor has it ordinarily any such signification." The language and intent of this statute had been previously construed by the Solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor in the same way, a case of lead poisoning incurred from employment being held not covered by it.

It may be noted here that the later rulings by the Solicitor of the Department of Labor, construing the same Federal statute, approved claims for disability due to lead poisoning, distinguishing such cases from the one in which the Attorney General used the language above quoted, the disease in that instance being pneumonia contracted in the course of employment. In construing the law to include cases of lead poisoning and the like, the solicitor said:

It is, in fact, difficult to find any good, substantial reason why Congress should have desired to make a discrimination as to the manner in which the incapacity arose. The intention was clearly to provide compensation for loss of time caused by incapacity arising from the employment in a similar manner to which the States and United States "are requiring private employers to respond, so that all injuries shall be compensated for out of the business or industry in which sustained instead of requiring the employee to bear this burden."

Attention has already been called to the fact that there is apparent in legislation something of a tendency in favor of the inclusion of occupational diseases as entitled to consideration in a system undertaking to provide against the untoward consequences of industrial activities. The United States employees' compensation act of 1916 authorizes compensation "for the disability or death of an employee resulting from a personal injury sustained while in the performance of his duty," excluding cases of willful misconduct, etc. The commission administering the law took the view that the term "personal injury" as used in the act covers "not only accidents as ordinarily defined, but also any bodily injury or disease due to the performance of duties and causing incapacity for work," citing as precedents the interpretation of the act of 1908 by the Solicitor of the Department of Labor and of the Massachusetts industrial accident board and Supreme Court. Compensation has been allowed by this commission, in pursuance of this construction, in cases of lead poisoning, dermatitis from fulminate of mercury, dermatitis from machine oil, injuries from a variety of corrosive and poisonous substances, typhoid and malarial fevers, rheumatism due to the dampness of the dirt floor on which the employee was compelled to stand, apoplexy due to overexertion in a position involving unusual strain, etc. A number of claims where similar diseases were under consideration were rejected on account of the failure to establish a causal connection.

As above noted, the amendment of 1915 did away with the necessity of making proof of injury "by accident" under the California law; but in passing upon an injury antedating this amendment, it was held that loss of sight due to poisoning by wood alcohol was compensable (Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Industrial Commission (1918), 171 Pac. 429); and the industrial commission of the State awarded benefits in the case of a traffic policeman who developed flat feet or broken arches as a result of constant standing on the hard pavement, classing this as an injury due to the nature of the employment. The new act of 1917 formally includes diseases "arising out of the employment."

The Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut construed the law of that State as not covering occupational diseases, reversing an award by one of the compensation commissioners in a case of lead poisoning (Miller v. American Steel & Wire Co., 97 Atl. 345). There was a dissenting opinion, in which was pointed out the fact that the majority, by "judicial construction, ascertains that the term 'personal injury' includes only injuries arising through accident, while I [the dissenting judge], by judicial construction, find the same term to include all injuries, whether arising from accident or disease."

The commissioner for the fifth district of that State allowed compensation for incapacity from an injury to a plumber caused by working in a kneeling position for a considerable time, the result being what is commonly known as "housemaid's knee." The account of the ruling at hand does not designate the disability as one due to occupational disease, though it comes within that definition according to British law, the award being made on the basis that "there was a direct causal connection between the employment and the resulting injury." A committee of arbitration considered another case in the same State in which claim was made for occupational neurosis attributed to the jarring of the arm of a workman using a pneumatic chipping machine, and while the statement was not made directly, it is inferable that if the facts had been found to support the claim, there would have been an award. As it was, apoplectic strokes were held to be the cause of the weakness, and as these were not due to the employment, no compensation was allowed. The law of the State was amended in 1919 so as to include diseases "peculiar to the occupation."

Under the Massachusetts law the meaning of the term "personal injury" without the qualifying words "by accident" was held by the supreme judicial court of that State to so broaden the law as to warrant the inclusion of occupational diseases, awards being made in the case of a claim by an employee suffering from lead poisoning (Johnson v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 104 N. E. 725); and one based on blindness induced by the inhaling of poisonous gases at a kiln or furnace (In re Hurlé, 104 N. E. 336). The court held that personal injuries as contemplated by the act are not restricted to those caused by external violence or physical force, but that the phrase covers bodily harm caused by the conditions of employment. Under the same law a committee of arbitration awarded benefits in the case of a claim based on illness said to be due to the severe shaking of the floor on which the workman sat while at work, the referee physician reporting the case as one of "occupation neurosis due to continual vibration"; but the supreme court of the State reversed an award for neurosis caused by a bad posture of a cigarmaker while at his work, saying that nothing appeared to show a necessary connection between the work and the posture, so that the induced neurosis could not be regarded as an injury arising out of the employment (In re Maggalet, 225 Mass. 57, 116 N. E. 972).

Quite similar to the circumstances in the Maggalet case are those in a case (Pimental's case, 127 N. E. 424), in which a somewhat deformed cigar worker was unable to sit evenly and squarely on account of a bodily deformity. He developed a condition of neuralgic pain, which the court found as a "reasonable inference" to be "not due to his occupation, but was rather the result of faulty posture brought about by long and laborious work." The case was held not to be one of disease. "Pain is not disease, nor is disease resulting in pain a personal injury."

In the Johnson case, above, the same judge wrote the opinion as in the Pimental case, saying in the earlier case that "it is clear that 'personal injury' under our act includes any injury or disease which arises out of and in the course of the employment, which causes incapacity for work and thereby impairs the ability of the employee for earning wages." It is the more surprising therefore to read in the later case:

"If it could be held that the employee was suffering from an occupational disease, still the workmen's compensation act does not in terms include disease. It can not be held to cover disease contracted by employees in the course of and arising out of their employment."

It can not only be said that this statement is in exact contradiction of the language used by this judge in the Johnson case (which is said to be "not an authority in favor of the contention of the employee in the case at bar"), but it is also out of harmony with the very desirable trend toward broad and adequate coverage for industrial disabilities. The statement is not required as a basis for the decision reached in the Pimental case, and the hope may be entertained that on further consideration it will be regarded as obiter, and the forward-looking attitude of the earlier Massachusetts cases be continued.

Lead poisoning is so typically a disease of occupation that the attitude of a court or commission on a case of this malady is determinative of the construction of the local law on the entire subject; so that the ruling of the commissioner of industries of Vermont that lead poisoning is not compensable under the law of that State (Bennett case, 1918) must be taken as a guide for the interpretation of the law in that field. It was said that, though the injury arose out of and in the course of employment, it was not accidental, and therefore not within the act. The Superior Court of Rhode Island based its judgment somewhat differently, though with the same practical result, when it denied a claim for compensation for neuritis developed in the hand of a workman engaged in punching holes in rubber balls, subjecting his hand to great strain, and furthermore receiving a wrench by the accidental twisting of a ball in a specific instance, the claim being overruled simply on the ground that it was for an occupational disease, and was for that reason not within the act.

The law of Michigan in its body uses the same phraseology as that of Massachusetts, and the industrial accident board of the State held that the language was broad enough to include cases of occupational disease, the particular instance being one of lead poisoning. The supreme court of the State took the opposite view, construing the compensation act as a substitute for the old liability laws only, providing relief in cases of accidental injuries, and not embracing new fields. It was further held that the title of the act, which indicated its purpose to provide "compensation for accidental injury or death," was sufficiently restrictive to exclude occupational diseases not due to accident (Adams v. Acme White Lead & Color Works, 148 N. W. 485).

The Ohio statute, while not containing the word "accident," has been construed by the industrial commission of the State to be restricted in its application to injuries other than those which can be classed as diseases. It was admitted that the word "injury" might be so construed as to include every kind of disability, whether due to accident or not, "but if the word is to be taken in its ordinary and popular sense, then the applicant is not entitled to compensation, for by the term 'injury' is generally understood some sudden and unexpected event inflicting bodily harm and resulting in a period of disability." The fact that the constitution of the State had just been amended so as to specifically authorize compensation for occupational diseases was also referred to as supporting the construction. A case of lead poisoning incurred in factory processes thus decided adversely to the claimant by the industrial accident commission was reversed by the trial court, and compensation awarded. This case reached the supreme court of the State, however, and the award of the commission denying compensation was approved, practically for the reasons assigned by the commission (Industrial Commission v. Brown, 110 N. E. 744). However, when a laborer died from poisoning by fumes given off by paint being heated in a closed room, preparatory to its use on a cold day, the court ruled that this was a death by misadventure and not from a disease incident to the occupation and "developed in the usual and ordinary manner by reason of and because of the occupation." The rule against occupational diseases did not apply, therefore, and an award by the commission was affirmed (Industrial Commission v. Roth, 120 N. E. 172). What was said to be a border-line case was approved by a judge in a Minnesota case, where tin poisoning developed so suddenly and under such circumstances as to "conform to the requirements of an accident," and was compensated (Meisel case, 1919), and the Supreme Court of New York allowed a claim where a workman was disabled by reason of the poisonous fumes and gases which were allowed to accumulate in his working place, the injury being classed as accidental (Naud v. King Sewing Machine Co., 159 N. Y. Supp. 910).

In Texas, though the word accident does not appear, the court held that the law relates to accidental injuries. However, the distinction was between accidental and intentional injury, and not between accident and disease (Middleton v. Texas Power & Light Co., 185 S. W. 556). No decisions or rulings have come to hand relative to the construction of the law of West Virginia as to this point. In Colorado a dishwasher complained of a rash caused by sal soda used in the dishwater, claiming compensation therefor. The State industrial commission held that the disability was not due to accident, as is required by the statute, but was an occupational disease and not compensable. In Illinois injuries that might be classed as diseases were admitted under the act, one case being that of a punch pressman who after three days' work found his arm numb from constant vibration, with acute pain, necessitating cessation of work. The diagnosis was traumatic peripheral neuritis, resulting in practical loss of the use of the right arm. An award was made over the contention that there was no accidental injury within the meaning of the compensation act. So also in the case of an employee working on an inside pipe at a pumping station within from 1 to 5 feet of a gas flame. There was imperfect combustion, and death followed within 24 hours after a collapse, an autopsy and analysis of the blood showing cerebral hemorrhage caused by gas poisoning, due to the inhalation of the unburned particles of gas. The industrial board took as its definition of an accident, "an untoward event which is not expected or designed," and ruled that there was a causal connection between the conditions of employment and the resulting injury warranting the award.

A later Illinois case that reached the supreme court of the State (Mattheisen & Hegeler Zinc Co. v. Industrial Board, 120 N. E. 249) involved a claim for death due to inhaling fumes given off by oxide of zinc in a smelter. The poison was said to have accumulated during a long period, with a fatal climax. An award in favor of the claimant was affirmed, the court saying that "the word 'accident' is not a technical legal term with a clearly defined meaning, and no legal definition has ever been given which has been found both exact and comprehensive as applied to all circumstances." It was said that the statute was "meant to include every injury suffered in the course of employment for which there was an existing right of action at the time the act was passed; also, to extend the liability of the employer to make compensation for injuries for which he was not previously liable and to limit such compensation"; and if there is "a definite time, place, and cause, and the injury occurs in the course of the employment, the injury is accidental within the meaning of the act." The company claimed that in 50 years they had never had a case of either sickness or death from such poisoning, but also denied liability for compensation on the ground of the death being due to an occupational disease. The court ruled that there was no evidence to prove that the poisoning was a disease incident to the occupation, and the award was affirmed.

The industrial board of Indiana awarded compensation to a workman who suffered from an eruption and sores on his hands, following the use of the same gloves for four days, without cleaning, while handling TNT powder, for which work fresh gloves had customarily been supplied daily.

A New Jersey case quite similar to that of the dishwasher in Colorado is one that was passed upon by the New Jersey Supreme Court, where claim was made for an eczema probably due to acid used in a bleachery. This was held not to be an injury by accident, since no specific time or occasion of its occurrence could be pointed out (Liondale Bleach, Dye & Paint Works v. Riker, 89 Atl. 929). The industrial commission of Wisconsin in November, 1913, and December, 1914, had before it cases in which claims were made for disability from lead poisoning. In the earlier case it is said that "lead poisoning is an occupational disease and is not contemplated within the provisions of the act, except such as might follow so quickly and proximately from some specific condition in the employer's business that it could be included within the meaning of the word 'accident' as used in the law." In the other case it was said that if the poisoning was due to the inhaling of lead it must have been through a considerable period of time, "which in its culminative effect resulted in an occupational disease, which is not an injury within the meaning of the act." An amendment of 1919 includes occupational diseases.

The Pennsylvania law limits its benefits to injuries due to "violence to the physical structure of the body." Claims were presented in a case of anthrax without evidence of any wound or cut, and in one of palsied wrist caused by inhaling acid fumes, the industrial board holding in both cases that the act did not extend to such injuries. However, compensation was allowed where the claimant was made sick from inhaling fumes caused by an explosion in the workroom, the board holding that such "involuntary inhalation of gas is an accidental injury" (Baith case, 1917); and the supreme court of the State affirmed an award in the case of a wool sorter who became inoculated with anthrax through an abrasion on his neck (McCauley v. Imperial Woolen Co., 104 Atl., 617). The court pointed out that though occupational diseases are not within the act, there was in the contact with the anthrax germ a fortuitous happening, determinable in time and effect, and of the nature of an accident within the meaning of the act.

The Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, took identical grounds in a similar case, the germ gaining access to the system through a crack in the back of the workman's hand. The injury was said to be due to an attack "made unexpectedly by a concealed disease germ" (Hiers v. John A. Hall & Co., 164 N. Y. Supp. 767). The same court affirmed an award in a somewhat later decision (Eldridge v. Endicott, Johnson & Co., 177 N. Y. Supp. 863), in which the case of a man dying from anthrax was considered. In the Hiers case it was at least presumable that the crack in the hand was the result of the conditions of the employment; but in the Eldridge case it was admitted that the germ gained access to the system through a slight cut inflicted by a barber on the day prior to the development of the disease. In affirming the award as for an accidental injury arising out of and in course of the employment, the court cited as authority a recent decision of the court of appeals of the State (Horigan v. Post-Standard Co., 224 N. Y. 620, 121 N. E. 872). In this case a workman had cut his finger while at home, the cut evidently becoming infected while he was at work the next day by contact with filth, blood poisoning and death following. This case was disposed of in a memorandum decision, the ruling being merely that the poisoning was the result of the work in which he was employed rather than of the cut received at home. However, the court of appeals reversed the decision in the Eldridge case, and remanded it to the industrial commission for rehearing, on the ground that there was no evidence that the anthrax was contracted from the hides handled (126 N. E. 254). It was said that the commission was not authorized to take judicial knowledge of the presence of anthrax germs in the hides, some evidence at least being necessary.²³

Disfigurement.—Injuries disfiguring but not disabling the recipient raise questions under laws whose intent is economic and not to make good suffering or injuries not interfering with industrial opportunity.

However, it must be recognized that disfigurements of certain kinds are a pronounced hindrance to employment, and particularly in certain lines of employment, and specific provision is made for their compensation in the laws of some States.

The industrial board of Illinois made allowances in cases where, even though there was no wage loss immediately effected, it was probable that the disfigurement was sufficient to affect the earning capacity or opportunity for employment in another occupation; but in a case where scars on the head would not be seen unless the hair was cut very short, it was ruled that no award was warranted. The statute provides for such awards where no claim is made for permanent partial or total disability. An award for disfigurement that also took account of "other disabilities" was therefore reversed by the supreme court of the State, and new proceedings were directed, to follow the terms of the act in excluding the idea of a permanent partial disability, if compensation for disfigurement was in issue (Stubbs v. Industrial Board, 117 N. E. 419).

In an Oklahoma case (Adams v. Iten Biscuit Co., 162 Pac. 938) the claimant suffered permanent injuries and also serious disfigurement. It was urged that the compensation law was inadequate, and that at least a right of action for the disfigurement should be had. The court ruled to the contrary, holding that it was the legislative intent to provide by the act for all accidental injuries, and not to divide them up, and that the compensation provided by the act was intended to be exclusive.

A contrary view to the foregoing was taken in a Louisiana case, in which a woman lost her scalp (Boyer v. Crescent Paper Box Factory, 78 So. 596). Here the temporary total disability for which the law provided compensation was said to be less of an injury than that sustained which was not a disability affecting earning power. The law was therefore said not to cover such a case, and a judgment for damages was affirmed.

The Iowa statute was construed by the compensation commissioner of the State to give compensation only in cases of actual disability, and no claim was allowed in the instant case. It was said, however, that no decision was made on the question of a disfigurement which would prevent the obtaining of any employment. Rulings covering the loss of an ear are on hand from three sources, the industrial accident board of Michigan and the labor commissioner of Minnesota making allowances for the mutilation, while the New York Supreme Court, appellate division, ruled that such an injury was neither enumerated in the schedules of the law nor did it cause disability, so that no compensation could be awarded for it. It was said, however, that the right to sue for such an injury was not affected by the statute, it not being included under it, so that an action at common law would lie (Shinnick v. Clover Farms Co., 154 N. Y. Supp. 423). The supreme court of the State in special term in a later case (Connors v. Semet-Solvay Co., 159 N. Y. Supp. 431) rejected this view and allowed compensation for burns causing disfigurement and pain, saying that no recovery could be had apart from the compensation act, holding that the compensation law covers all points of the employer's liability, and citing the court of appeals of the State (Jensen v. S. P. Co.) as authority.

An amendment of 1916 to the law of New York authorizes the industrial commission, in its discretion, to allow awards in cases of serious facial or head disfigurement, and fixes a maximum. The court of appeals of the State recently affirmed an award in behalf of a woman whose scalp and face were torn by the catching of her hair on a revolving shaft, saying that the amendment in question had so far modified the original basis of the law, which was to compensate for disability to work. There was no award for loss of earning power, that not being ascertainable at the time, and the question was held open. It was held that concurrent awards might be made, one for loss of earning power and one for the facial or head disfigurement, but that it should be clear that the latter did not include any allowance for the former; and as this appeared to have been safeguarded in the instant case, it was held that the award should stand (Erickson v. Preuss, 119 N. E. 555); and in a quite similar case the same court affirmed an award on the ground that disfigurements had a tendency to impair earning power (Sweeting v. American Knife Co., 123 N. E. 82), asserting also that the statute would stand even though the facial disfigurement were unrelated to loss of earnings.

The constitutionality of this provision of the law was sustained in a case that reached the Supreme Court of the United States (New York Central R. Co. v. Blanc, 40 Sup. Ct. 44). It was contended that only impairment of earning capacity warranted a compulsory payment of compensation, and that the "disfigurement clause" of the act was arbitrary and oppressive, violating the constitutional rule as to due process of law. The court ruled that earning power might be reduced by other than mere reasons of capacity; nor could it concede that impairment of earning power is the sole ground for compulsory compensation to injured workers. The amendment was therefore upheld and the judgments upholding awards affirmed.

The doctrine expressed in this opinion finds application in the case of other injuries, not necessarily impairing earning power, but undeniably constituting physical injuries. Conflicting opinions in two such cases are found in a New Jersey case (Hercules Powder Co. v. Morris County Court of Common Pleas, 107 Atl. 433), and one decided by the Appellate Court of Indiana (Centlivre Beverage Co. v. Ross, 125 N. E. 220). Both cases involved the loss of a testicle as the result of accidental injury. The Supreme Court of New Jersey ruled that the law did not limit benefits to cases of loss of earning power, but that the injured man might properly be compensated for a "permanent impairment of his physical entity," such as was suffered in the case at hand. The Indiana court, on the other hand, reversed an award made by the industrial board, saying that the injury was not one specified by the act, nor was it one likely to "impair the future usefulness of the employee." It was held that loss of earning power was the sole basis for compensation, in contrast with the two opinions last cited.

Accidental injury as proximate cause.—The cases that arise under this head are complicated by the fact that a prior existing condition or a subsequent intervening event appears to modify the normal consequences of the conditions involved in the industry and the accidents that may result therefrom. Where the laws are construed as applying only to cases of accidental injury, using that term in its customary significance, there is great difficulty in determining the proximate cause of the physical conditions for which claims are submitted—i. e., whether or not the causal connection between the condition and the alleged happening back of it is such as to support a claim. It is a common rule that where, on account of preexisting conditions, as of varicose veins, hardening of arteries, or incipient or latent tubercular, cancerous, etc., conditions, the employee is peculiarly liable to serious results from comparatively slight injuries, "the employer takes his employee subject to the physical condition he is in at the time he enters the employment";²⁴ and even though the injury was in reality but an aggravation of existing conditions, compensation must be paid where the injury actually caused the disability of a person otherwise able to continue in employment. This rule is followed by the California industrial commission, but in a case in which recovery from ulceration and varicose veins was prolonged by reason of a previous ulceration which had destroyed the true skin and left only a scar tissue of slow-healing capacity, the period of compensation was restricted to an estimated period ordinarily required for recovery from varicose ulceration. The Ohio industrial commission allowed full benefits for the death of a man who was predisposed to apoplexy, a stroke having been induced by overexertion in the course of his employment. A ruling by the Massachusetts board on review awarded total-incapacity benefits in the case of a man to whom an injury had caused aggravation of an old arthritis of the spine, recovery from the injury being interfered with by habits of regular drinking which affected "circulation, heart, blood vessels, liver, and kidneys. It will be a tremendously long time before such a spine becomes normal. The accident is responsible for taking two or three years out of the man." The same board, however, determined that the general physical condition of another employee would have incapacitated him in any event within approximately one year after the date of the injury which effected his disability, and payments were limited to that period; and a Minnesota county court decided that the condition of a miner's eye was such prior to the injury that it would have become useless in 67 weeks, so that compensation should be limited to the period thus fixed, where the injury resulted in the blindness of the affected eye (Pintar v. Morton Mining Co.). This corresponds to the action of one of the compensation commissioners of Connecticut in estimating the period of probable capacity to remain at work of an injured man who was afflicted with a progressive disease at eight weeks beyond the date of his injury, limiting the award for compensation to that period.

It seems impossible to reconcile these rulings with another ruling of the Massachusetts accident board in which compensation for the full term was awarded a widow for the death of her husband from apoplexy following heavy lifting. It was found that the man had previously suffered from advanced arteriosclerosis, Bright's disease, and heart trouble, and "probably would not have lived a year if he had not been injured." In making this ruling, however, the board cited two decisions of the supreme court (In re Fisher, 108 N. E. 361, and In re Brightman, 107 N. E. 527), in both of which the statutory allowance was made for the death of employees who were affected by weakness of the heart and succumbed after exertion which would probably not have produced any serious results in the case of a person in normal physical condition. That this is definitely the position of the Massachusetts Supreme Court appears from the following, quoted from a later opinion handed down by it (In re Madden, 111 N. E. 379):

There is nothing said in the act about the protection being confined to the healthy employee. The previous condition of health is of no consequence in determining the amount of relief to be afforded. It is the injury arising out of the employment and not out of disease for which compensation is to be made. Yet it is the hazard of the employment acting upon the particular employee in his condition of health, and not what the hazard would be if acting upon a healthy employee or upon the average employee. All who rightly are describable as employees come within the act.

This rule was also applied in a case, Crowley v. City of Lowell, 111 N. E. 786, in which an accident to a man having dormant syphilis resulted in insanity.

The industrial commissioner of Iowa, in discussing a case in which there was a syphilitic condition which presumably doubled the period of disability, ruled that there was nothing found in the law which justified taking this difference into consideration, saying:

It is my opinion that in Iowa compensation must be paid for the entire period of disability and that you should not take into consideration the physical defects.²⁵

The Supreme Court of Michigan took the same view as that expressed by the Iowa court in a case (Hills v. Oval Wood Dish Co., 158 N. W. 214) involving similar conditions. It was said that, assuming that the disability was in fact prolonged by the disease, there was yet no point at which it could be said that the consequences of the injury ceased to operate, the claim being indeed that the consequences of the injury were prolonged rather than that they ceased to have effect. "There is no part of the period of disability that would have happened, or would have continued, except for the injury." Compensation was therefore to be continued during the whole term of disability.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana took the same position where a latent case of locomotor ataxia was developed by an injury, though there was "no doubt" that the plaintiff's physical disability resulting from the accident "is worse than it would be if he had not been diseased" (Behan v. John B. Honor Co., 78 So. 589); and the Appellate Court of Indiana affirmed an award for death from a ruptured aorta caused by a strain, although it was evident that the aorta was in such a diseased condition that death would eventually

²⁵ The provisions of the laws vary in regard to any limitation in this field, but they generally undertake to exclude diseases not the result of injuries in the employment, the law of Kentucky excluding also "the results of a preexisting disease."

An obvious necessity for safeguarding the situation in this respect is the examination of applicants for employment, and it has been suggested that this duty be performed by the State so as to enable such distribution or employment of impaired workmen as will best avoid their being entirely deprived of opportunity for self-support. The industrial commission of Ohio has a special bulletin on this subject (Physical Examination of Wage Earners in Ohio, 1915), giving an account of results of examinations of applicants and employees in establishments employing some 68,000 persons. An Executive order of President Taft, date of Dec. 7, 1912, covering "all artisan and supervisory artisan positions under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Navy" under the competitive classified service, contains the following:

"No artisan or supervisory artisan whose position is included in the classified service by this order shall be classified unless he has established his capacity for efficient service or has been examined and found qualified by the labor board and is recommended for classification by the commanding officer under whom he is employed."

In accordance with the foregoing, instructions were drafted by the Civil Service Commission in 1914 barring applicants from examination who are affected by insanity, tuberculosis, paralysis, epilepsy, blindness, loss of both arms or both legs, loss of arm and leg, badly crippled or deformed hands, arms, feet, or legs, uncompensated valvular diseases of the heart, locomotor ataxia, cancer, Bright's disease, or diabetes. Ratings were also adopted showing deductions for the impairments named ranging from 5 per cent to rejection.

Besides the rejections named, contagious or infectious disease (including venereal) and arteriosclerosis were added. Deductions from 30 per cent to rejection were directed in case of loss of hand or foot or hernia; from 15 to rejection for piles, fistula, or fissure, and for deformities, old fractures, etc.; from 10 to rejection for chronic disorders of stomach or bowels; and from 5 to rejection for rheumatism or history of it. Also deductions of 30 per cent for valvular disease of heart fully compensated, as attested by certificates of two physicians; 15 for loss of eye, middle ear disease, or deafness; 15 to 30 for spinal curvature, loss of one or more fingers or toes; 10 to 25 for enlarged heart (unaccompanied by valvular disease) or irregular heart; 5 to 30 for varicose veins; 5 to 25 for skin diseases (noncontagious) and chronic bronchitis; 5 to 15 for chronic tonsillitis or pharyngitis; 5 to 10 for varicocele, minor defects of vision, deficient chest mobility, insufficient muscular development, obesity, too rapid heart, or deviation of nasal septum, cleft palate, etc.

A rating of at least 70 per cent on physical ability is required for all positions filled through noneducational examinations.

result therefrom, even without severe exertion (Indian Creek Coal & Mining Co. v. Calvert, 119 N. E. 519).

That a case of appendicitis was the result of a blow on the walls of the abdomen, and compensable under the act, was the ruling of the accident board of Maine, the injury following a fall against an object near the injured man's working place, the floor being slippery with oil. A Connecticut commissioner made a full award in the case of a man suffering from appendicitis, the appendix being ruptured by a strain, resulting fatally; and an award was affirmed by the Supreme Court of New Jersey, where an internal cancer was ruptured by effort while at work, with fatal results, the court saying: "But for the injury, life might have continued for a considerable period" (Voorhees v. Smith Schoonmaker Co., 92 Atl. 280); while the California commission held that the fatal consequences of a perforation caused by gastric ulcer, following an effort in cranking an automobile, was not compensable, as the effort was only the occasion of the injury and not the cause. An unusual situation developed in the case of a Connecticut employee who had practically lost the sight of an eye previously, but received an injury necessitating its removal. The award made was for the period of total disability and for medical, surgical, and hospital services prescribed by the law, and not for the loss of an eye.

The administrative bodies of Michigan and Wisconsin ruled against claims where workmen fell as the result of illness and injured themselves by so falling, the Michigan board saying that "the employer is not liable for injury due to illness rendering the employee incapable of properly guarding himself against injury"; while the Wisconsin commission declared that "such injuries are not subject to compensation unless they result from unusual physical conditions." The New York commission, on the other hand, awarded the regular benefits in a case in which an employee fell in a fit of apoplexy and was burned by a pail of hot tar which he was carrying. And the Appellate Court of Indiana held that compensation should be paid as for an injury arising of the employment, where a workman fell into a tank of water and was drowned while seized by an epileptic fit (Miller v. Beil, 127 N. E. 567). It was said that, though his physical condition was the remote cause of the death, the consequences were due to his employment requiring him to work at or near the tank.

A case of this nature was passed upon by the Supreme Court of Michigan, where a workman on a properly constructed scaffold fell in an epileptic fit and received fatal injuries. The court held that he was not within the act, since the injury did not arise out of the employment, the illness being the proximate cause of death (Van Gorder v. Packard Motor Car Co., 162 N. W. 107). Some emphasis is given to the fact in the foregoing case that the employer was not aware of the liability of the employee to such fits, but in a case considered by the Supreme Court of California, involving practically identical circumstances, an award was denied without reference to the fact of ignorance or knowledge, simply on the ground that the injury arose from the fact that the injured man was an epileptic and did not arise out of the employment (Brooker v. Industrial Accident Commission, 168 Pac. 126). A distinction is drawn between cases of this nature and cases where the injury, "though apparently caused by the idiopathic condition of the employee, is due in part also to the overexertion of the employee in performing his work, or to the nature of the work or the appliances furnished to him with which to work, or to the lack of proper safeguards against the ordinary dangers of the place of work, the injury being sometimes greater because of his idiopathic condition."

In this connection may be noted a ruling of the Supreme Court of New York (Santacroce v. Sag Harbor Brick Works, 169 N. Y. Supp. 695), affirming an award in behalf of a workman who had previously been in good health, but who suffered at the time from "an attack of vertigo or some similar disorder" and fell from a height of 15 feet. It was there held that the dizziness, fall, and injury were all due to the place and nature of the employment. In a case in which a fall while at work apparently lighted up a latent infection, the Wisconsin commission allowed a claim for resultant disability.

A different form of the question of proximate cause was passed upon by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, which sustained an award in the case of death from suicide following insanity, the employee having had his eye burned from a splash of molten lead, the court saying that if the injury arose out of and in the course of employment it was not of importance whether the consequences appeared natural and probable or abnormal and inconceivable, the only question being whether or not they actually resulted (In re Sponatski, 108 N. E. 466).

The question of sequence was also before the appellate division of the Supreme Court of New York in Plass v. Central N. E. R. Co. (155 N. Y. Supp. 854), in which a railroad section man was poisoned by contact with poison ivy, blood poisoning, bronchitis, congestion of the lungs, and death following. These facts found by the industrial commission were held not open to review by the court, there being "certainly some evidence to warrant them." The award in this case was affirmed by the court of appeals of the State (123 N. E. 852).

The question of proximate cause is quite closely related to that of the preexisting condition of the employee in many instances, an illustration being found in a case decided by the compensation commission of New York, in which a man injured by burning developed delirium tremens while in the hospital and died. The ruling of the commission was in favor of the dependent claimant, on the ground that the primary cause of the death was the burning, the delirium tremens being contributory. The industrial board of Massachusetts took the same view in a case in which a fracture of the leg resulted fatally by reason of the low resistance of the injured man, due to regular use of alcohol. The chain of incidents was given as injury, sepsis, delirium tremens, death, the death being held to be connected with the injury. The Supreme Court of Michigan affirmed an award of compensation in a very similar case (Ramlow v. Moon Lake Ice Co., 158 N. W. 1027), the view being taken that the delirium tremens would not have developed at the time but for the injury.

“An inconsequential fall” resulted in the breaking of a diseased bone of the leg, and the diseased condition necessitated the amputation of the leg some inches above the fracture. While admitting the propriety of an award for the accident, the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, held that an award for the loss of the leg was not warranted (Brady v. Holbrook etc. Corp., 178 N. Y. Supp. 504), citing Richardson v. Greenberg (188 App. Div. 248, 176 N. Y. Supp. 651), in which the distinction between accident and disease was more fully discussed.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin denied compensation to a man who, when recovering from a hurt, engaged in a boxing bout which seems to have excited bacteria that were walled off so as to be harmless, but by blows received were brought into the circulation, resulting in blood poisoning. It was held in that case that the original hurt was not the proximate cause of the subsequent disability, but that it was superseded by an act not in the course of employment (Kill v. Industrial Commission, 152 N. W. 148).

Subsequent happenings were involved in a case in which a man fractured his knee in October and was making normal recovery, when he slipped and fell the following March, loosening the bone, and again fell in July and received injuries while waiting to receive his crutches after getting out of a wagon. The contention was raised that no compensation should be allowed for the prolonged disability resulting from these falls; but the Supreme Court of Michigan held that there was nothing to show willful misconduct; that the injured man was apparently doing nothing contrary to his doctor's orders; and that the infirmities from which he suffered were the consequences of his original injury, so that payment should be continued, even though, barring mishaps, recovery should have been complete at an earlier date (Cook v. Hoertz & Son, 164 N. W. 464). Under the Massachusetts law decisions are originally made by a committee of arbitration, and in a case passed upon by such a committee it was shown that liquor had been smuggled to the injured man while in the hospital, and the conclusion was reached that death was due to the delirium caused by such surreptitious use of liquor, and compensation was denied.

A somewhat unusual distinction was drawn by the Superior Court of Rhode Island (Gross case, 1917), which held that an injury accelerating an existing disease was compensable only for the period of the disability estimated to be due to the injury, and made an award of six months' benefits where there was actually a fatal termination, when death might have been little, if any, delayed had there been no accident (see Pintar case, etc., p. 129). On the other hand, the Supreme Court of Michigan sustained an award in the full amount for the loss of an eye, where the injured eye was, in fact, so defective before the accident as to be capable only of distinguishing light and seeing approaching objects. It was said that the law did not specify a normal eye as the basis of awards, though conceding that a mere sightless organ might be considered no eye at all (Purchase v. Grand Rapids Refrigerator Co., 160 N. W. 391; see ruling of Connecticut commissioner, p. 131).

Pneumonia, regarded as the result of an accident, formed the basis of awards by the commissions of New York and West Virginia, while the Massachusetts accident board on review denied compensation in a case where a janitor, overheated while stoking a furnace, became chilled while sweeping, the finding being that there was no personal injury in the course of employment, so that no compensation was due. In the New York case a watchman fell and broke his leg and developed static pneumonia and pleurisy, followed by death. In one of the West Virginia cases the injured man was kicked in the chest, while in the other the injury consisted of a fracture of the skull. Obviously the development of a case of inhalation pneumonia following an operation for compensable hernia would furnish a basis for an award (Industrial Accident Board of Massachusetts). That the injury was the proximate cause of death was determined by the industrial accident commission of California in a case in which a blistered heel, due to the wearing of boots, furnished by the employer, too large for the employee, was followed by blood poisoning, uremia, and death, it being held that the chain of causation was complete. Where a chauffeur's arm was broken, and unpadded splints led to the formation of an abscess, followed by blood poisoning and ankylosis of thumb and fingers, the Supreme Court of New Jersey allowed an award, as without the happening of the original injury none of the subsequent events would have taken place (Newcomb v. Albertson, 89 Atl. 928); and a district court judge of the same State allowed a claim for the death of an upholsterer from cancer which was held to be traceable to injuries to the tongue caused by his holding tacks in his mouth, according to the custom of the trade.

Somewhat stricter than the foregoing appears to be the ruling of the Supreme Court of Kansas in a case (Ruth v. Witherspoon-Englar Co., 157 Pac. 403), compensation for total disability being disallowed on the ground that it was due, not to the original injury, but to the malpractice of the physician treating the case. The cause was remanded to the lower court for a determination of the extent of the injury due directly to the accident as distinguished from the subsequent malpractice.

COVERAGE.

The question of coverage, or the exclusion or inclusion of designated groups of employment or occupation, is one that is disposed of quite differently in the laws of the different States. Experience under the acts has tended to a broader inclusion by amendatory legislation in a number of cases, while on the other hand the difficulty attendant upon establishing different systems of relief in cases of the identical employment of railroad employees engaged in interstate and intrastate commerce operates to eliminate entirely from the scope of compensation acts employees engaged in the movement of trains. The cases under this head turn so largely on the specific wording of the provisions of the acts that they are of less general interest, but a few of them will be noted.

Domestic and farm labor.—The common omission of domestic and farm labor is sometimes absolute and sometimes conditional. In some States, in common with other excluded employments, it may be brought within the act by an affirmative election. In others, however, the exclusion is absolute by the terms of the act. Thus the attorney general of Minnesota ruled that a farm owner could not bring his workmen under the law of that State, which “shall not be construed or held to apply to * * * farm laborers.” Questions requiring determination arise where there is a combination of duties or of industrial undertakings. Thus the industrial accident board of California excluded an employee who was in regular employment in his employer’s saloon, but whose injury was received while cleaning windows in the employer’s apartment above the saloon, such employment being classed as household domestic service and not compensable. On the other hand, a horseman and general utility man about a house, caring for the garden, lawn, etc., was held to be within the compensation act while exercising horses belonging to the employer. The Supreme Court of Illinois rejected a claim on account of the injury of a carpenter received while building a crib for a farmer, the ground being taken that the farmer was not engaged in the business or occupation of building, the work itself not being extrahazardous and the business of farming being excluded from the act (Uphoff v. Industrial Board, 111 N. E. 128). The question is approached from the other side in a case before the industrial board of this State where a farm hand and teamster on the farm of a seedsman was injured, the employer maintaining a seed warehouse with an elevator subject to city ordinances and a storeroom, so that he was an employer within the hazardous class and had elected to accept the law. The employer was held bound as to all employees except those specifically exempted, this exemption including the claimant in the present case.

The Massachusetts law was construed by the supreme court of that State so as to permit a farmer and market gardener to insure drivers and helpers, while omitting laborers whose duties were strictly agricultural, the court saying that such a classification is reasonable and valid and conforms to the spirit of the act (In re Keaney, 104 N. E. 438). The industrial board of the same State recognized similar distinctions in the case of an employer who insured his office force and other employees. The family chauffeur was held not to be included in the policy of insurance, as his work was not in the usual occupation of his employer, his principal duties being to drive the car of his employer on errands of pleasure. The industrial accident board of Michigan awarded compensation to a farm laborer where the employer was a corporation whose business it was to manufacture chemicals, serums, etc., incidental to which a farm was maintained, the injury being caused by a kick from a horse. It was held that the maintenance of the farm was in this case a part of the manufacturing business of the company, and it was further pointed out that the law of the State does not exclude farmers, but merely places them under no added burdens if they fail to accept the act. This was reversed by the supreme court of the State (Shafer v. Parke, Davis & Co., 159 N. W. 304), on the ground that the status of the employee was fixed by the work actually done by him, and not by the fact that his employer had other interests, not affecting the nature of his work.

Questions similar to the foregoing were passed upon by the industrial accident board of Texas in a case in which a partnership operated a farm and an irrigation plant. It was held that even though the management of the two undertakings was the same, if they were operated separately the irrigation plant could come under the statute while the farm and the laborers on it would be excluded. It was further said that the same workmen might be included or excluded according as they were employed in the one undertaking or the other. The same board in another case, however, excluded all the employees on a farm and ranch, though one man was a mechanic in charge of a considerable amount of machinery on the place. It was added that even if a different ruling should be made with reference to the mechanic it would not have the effect of bringing the farm laborers within the act.

No one who knows the actual hazard of farming operations, and the accident rate incident thereto will claim that the exclusion of farm labor from the compensation acts is based on its freedom from danger of accidental injury. This is perhaps particularly true of the operations of harvesting and thrashing, and the specialized nature of the latter has opened the door to its inclusion in some cases. Thus the Appellate Court of Indiana ruled that an employee engaged as a part of the crew of a thrashing machine, which was moved about from farm to farm thrashing oats and wheat at a fixed price per bushel paid to the owner of the machine, was not a farm laborer within the exemptions of the Indiana statute. The fact that the farmer himself rarely undertakes the work of thrashing, and that thrashing and milling are industrially distinguishable from farming operations, was held to sustain the view that such work should not be excluded from the operations of the law, even though the machine is moved about from farm to farm and operates on them (In re Boyer, 117 N. E. 507).

The Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, took a similar view as to the nature of the work, so that an employee following a thrasher was said not to be a farm laborer; and while the law did not name the running of a thrashing machine as a hazardous business, the fact that the injury was received while moving the separator enabled a classification as operating a vehicle to be made, which brought the case within the act (White v. Loades, 164 N. Y. Supp. 1023). The Supreme Court of Minnesota took the opposite view, classing a separator man as a farm laborer, and not within the law of the State (State ex rel. Bykle v. District Court, 168 N. W. 130).

Similar or perhaps greater hazards attend the operation of corn shredders, which likewise are moved from farm to farm in the performance of their work. The Supreme Court of Iowa classed an engineer and laborer working for the owner of a shredder, who was an independent contractor as to the work in hand, as a farm laborer engaged in agricultural pursuits (Slycord v. Horn, 162 N. W. 249).

Hazardous employments.—The question of hazard is made the basis of determining inclusions and exclusions in a number of the laws, enumerations being made by the acts in a number of cases, while in the others the matter is open to determination. The Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, has had before it a number of cases involving the definition of the term "hazardous" under the act of that State. Thus (Aylesworth v. Phoenix Cheese Co., 155 N. Y. Supp. 916), a laborer employed by a company at harvesting ice was held not to be within the act, since the harvesting of ice is not classed as hazardous (since included by an amendment of the law, 1916), and the employee was not working for the company in the preparation of foods, in which case he would have been included. A butcher or chef's assistant in a hotel who cut an artery while preparing a leg of mutton for cooking and died from the injury was held not engaged in the manufacture or preparation of meats or meat products, so that no claim on his account could be allowed (De la Gardelle v. Hampton Co., 153 N. Y. Supp. 162); so also where a driver for a packing house, who in his ordinary employment would be included within the act, but who was sent on foot to deliver a retail order and fell over a bucket of glass and received injuries from which he died, it was held that he was at the time not in hazardous employment (Newman v. Newman, 155 N. Y. Supp. 665; affirmed by court of appeals).

While the business of warehousing is covered by the statute, it was held that an employee injured while handling a barrel of vinegar for a wholesale produce merchant in his warehouse was not protected by the law, since the employer was not engaged in warehousing, that phase of his business not being for pecuniary gain (Mihm v. Hussey, 155 N. Y. Supp. 860). The act by amendment of 1916 now includes storage of all kinds. Another excluded case was that of a janitor whose general duties were not of the kinds classed by the law as hazardous, and who was injured while hanging out a flag, which was a part of his duties. It was held that in the case of such employees it must be specifically shown that the work in which the employee was engaged at the time of his injury was of the hazardous class, which was held not to be the case in the present instance, though the man fell and broke his leg (Reisner v. Gross & Herbener, 155 N. Y. Supp. 946).

Admitted to benefits by this court were a porter and elevator man in a manufacturing and wholesale drug house in which some parts of the work were hazardous, the court saying that an employee therein would be presumptively included in the act (Larsen v. Paine Drug Co., 112 N. E. 725); and a butcher's helper in a retail establishment who lost four fingers in an electric meat chopper, pneumonia and death ensuing, it being held that the injured man might be regarded as included in the work of manufacture or preparation of meats or meat products unless the employer showed specifically otherwise (Kohler v. Frohmann, 153 N. Y. Supp. 559). Meat markets are now within the act. A man injured while lifting glass from a cutting table in an establishment in which plate glass was polished, mirrors made, etc., was presumed to be engaged in the manufacture of glass, glass products, etc., unless specific facts to the contrary should be presented in the defense. It was said in this case that the employer's premiums were the same, whether or not the employee was engaged in hazardous employments at all times (McQueeney v. Sutphen & Hyer, 153 N. Y. Supp. 554).

The court of appeals of the State had before it a case involving the operation of an elevator, and reached the conclusion that this does not come within the protection of the law unless the business in connection with which the elevator is used is classed as hazardous (Wilson

v. Dorflinger Sons, 112 N. E. 567) This reversed a judgment of the supreme court, appellate division, awarding compensation in the case named on the ground that elevators should be classed as vehicles "other than on tracks." An amendment of 1916 brings freight and passenger elevators within the scope of the act.

The compensation commission of the State ruled in favor of a hotel porter injured while at work in the hotel's ice-manufacturing plant, since, though his regular employment was not covered by the act, the work in which he was engaged at the time of his injury was held to be so, laying down the rule that employees in industries that are nonhazardous as a whole are protected under the act while engaged in occupations covered by it. In another case before this commission an employee of a mining company, whose duties were to act as policeman on the premises, was killed while making an arrest. It was found that he was an employee of the company under contract, and since the business of the company was classed as hazardous, all its employees would be covered by the act, the injured man in this particular instance being required to be on the premises in the discharge of his duties, even though not actually engaged in the physical operation of the plant. Other contentions to the effect that the injury was not an accidental one, and that it did not arise out of and in the course of employment, were rejected and compensation awarded.

It is of interest to note that the law of New York, the most important one using hazard as a basis, after several amendments adding enumerated employments, has practically abolished this test by making the law apply to all unenumerated undertakings in which four or more "workmen or operatives" are employed, or, to state the matter differently, fellow service is declared to be a basis of hazard, and no longer an employer's defense. An amendment of 1916 also makes compensation available by election for all employments.

The Supreme Court of Washington met the contention of a telegraph company that the work in which it was engaged was not hazardous with the statement that the legislature had declared the work of construction of telegraph and telephone lines to be extrahazardous, which it might do unless the court could take judicial notice that such was not the case (State v. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., 172 Pac. 902). The company could not therefore be heard to dispute the declaration, and it was held subject to the act.

The law of Illinois classes as hazardous the work of building, maintaining, repairing, etc., any structure. The supreme court of the State held window cleaning to be a work of maintenance within the meaning of the act, and sustained an award in favor of a claimant for the death of a workman employed by a window-cleaning company (Chicago Cleaning Co. v. Industrial Board, 118 N. E. 989);

but the building of a shed 32 by 24 feet and 17½ feet high was declared not to be an "enterprise" in which the building "of any structure" would bring an employer automatically within the act as engaging in an extrahazardous employment (Uphoff v. Industrial Board, 111 N. E. 128).

This law includes as extrahazardous "any enterprise in which statutory or municipal ordinance regulations" govern the use or guarding of appliances for the safety of the employees or the public. This was held (Hahnemann Hospital v. Industrial Board, 118 N. E. 767) to warrant an award for the death of an engineer in a hospital in which the elevator, electric wiring, etc., were the subject of municipal regulation, even though none of these instrumentalities was connected with his death. The digging of trenches for sewers was held to be within the class of extrahazardous work, which includes excavating (Scully v. Industrial Commission, 120 N. E. 492).

Rulings on the question of hazard are obviously difficult, since they would seem to be practically answered by the fact of the occurrence of the injury which must happen before the case can come to consideration; and the fact of the injury is in itself proof that the occupation is at least in some degree hazardous. It is difficult, therefore, to avoid the impression of unfair exclusion in cases where a workman suffers injury in circumstances ordinarily giving rise to valid claims for compensation, but finds himself, or his dependents in case of fatal injuries, deprived of supposed rights, and, indeed, of all possibility of recovery, because the industry is reckoned by the courts or administrative commission as nonhazardous. Industrial protection is incomplete in such a state of affairs, besides the uncertainty that exists where the decision rests on opinion, statistics of accident rates in specific industries not being available in many cases to afford a real basis of determination.

In any view, the matter resolves itself into this, that if a given occupation is hazardous, those engaged in it may properly expect provision to be made in their behalf; if the risk is comparatively slight, the cost of providing for the occasional injuries arising in it is not burdensome on the employer while ministering to the needs of the injured individual, which are none the less urgent because of the comparatively small number of persons injured in like circumstances.

Casual employment.—The exception in many laws of persons whose employment is only casual and not in the usual course of the trade, business, etc., of the employer has been passed upon in a number of cases at hand. The California law requires for exception that the employment shall be both casual and not in the usual course of the employment, its provisions corresponding with those of the British act; the Iowa industrial commissioner construes the law of that State to be of the same effect. In a California case, where an employee passing a creamery operated by his employer was requested to furnish aid for a short time in work outside the usual course of his employment and was injured while doing so, it was held that while his employment in this case was casual it was nevertheless in the usual course of his employer's business, so that he was entitled to compensation. This commission has fixed an arbitrary term of one week as the standard, employment for a less period being held per se casual, if not in the usual course of the trade or business of the employer. A plasterer doing less than one week's work for a rooming-house keeper was held excluded for both reasons, while a decorator who usually had his carpenter work done by his regular employees was required to pay compensation to a carpenter hired for less than one week to do such work for him, as it was in the regular course of the employer's business. Where a locomotive engineer wished a garage built on his premises he engaged the services of a workman, who agreed to secure the services of another man and assured the employer that the job would not last more than five days, relying on which assurance the employer did not insure his liability under the compensation law. The failure of the workman to secure constant assistance prolonged the work beyond the period of one week, but the California commission held that the employer had a right to rely upon his employee's agreement to complete the work within a time which would have made the employment casual, so that no compensation could be demanded.

The law of Massachusetts originally excepted persons whose employment was but casual or not in the usual course of the trade, etc., of the employer, and under it a caterer was held not required to compensate for injuries to a waiter employed by him for a single occasion (In re Gaynor, 217 Mass. 86, 104 N. E. 339). As employment on occasion merely is the custom in this class of work, it is evident that service of this nature was by this decision excluded from the act, until an amendment of 1914 struck out the provision debarring casual employees from its benefits. They are therefore now within the act unless employed at work "not in the usual course" of the employer's business.

The exclusion of casual employees not only leads to difficulties, but to absurdities as well, and some harsh results have followed their exception from coverage. The status of a workman not employed in the business of the employer was considered by the Court of Appeals of New York in a case (Bargey v. Massaro Macaroni Co., 113 N. E. 407) in which a carpenter engaged in making alterations in the factory was injured while at work. It was held that under the act the company was an employer in its capacity as a manufacturer of foodstuffs, but as the carpenter was not engaged in that work he was not an employee, his work having no relation to the hazardous business of the employer. Recovery under the provision of the act covering the construction, demolition, and repair of buildings was also denied on the ground that the company did not carry on such occupation for pecuniary gain. An award of the commission of the State in the claimant's behalf was therefore reversed.

The Supreme Court of Michigan, also, while recognizing that it is usual for the owner of a hotel to have his rooms painted and decorated occasionally, set aside an award in favor of a painter and decorator, holding that such work was not a part of the business of keeping a hotel within the meaning of the State law (Holbrook v. Olympia Hotel Co., 166 N. W. 876). The law of this State no longer excludes casual employees.

Perhaps even more unsatisfactory than the foregoing is a decision of the Illinois Supreme Court (two justices dissenting) declaring casual the employment of a laborer on a highway who was killed by a dynamite explosion while assisting in the removal of stumps. The work of blasting was to continue but a comparatively short time, and while the general work on the highway at the time was held not to be hazardous within the meaning of the act, the work of blasting was declared to be so; but this work was said to be "a mere casual or incidental employment in connection with the matter of grading and repairing the road, this bringing the workman within the class of casual employees who are not included within the act"; this though the workman was regularly and continuously employed in the general undertaking (McLaughlin v. Industrial Board of Illinois, 117 N. E. 819).

This is in contrast with the position of the Supreme Court of Minnesota (State ex rel. Nienaber v. District Court, 165 N. W. 268), which held that the driver of a street sprinkler, who went to the aid of the driver of a coal wagon at his request, and was injured while so aiding him, was an employee of the coal dealer, since, though the employment was but casual, it was in the course of the employer's business and within the act.

As in the case of Massachusetts, such results have in some States led to amendments enlarging the scope and clarifying the purpose of the acts. Of principal interest, perhaps, under this head, is the rectification of the conditions which arose under the New York statute as set forth in the case of Bargey v. Massaro Macaroni Co. The impropriety of excluding from the benefits of the act a carpenter engaged in making alterations and repairs in a factory building, merely because his employer was not engaged in the business of erection and repair of buildings, was too obvious to remain without remedy. The law of the State was therefore amended in 1916 so as to include persons engaged in any of the hazardous occupations named in the act who are in the service of an employer whose principal business is that of carrying on or conducting a hazardous employment within the act, eliminating the earlier provision that the employee must be himself at the time "engaged in a hazardous employment in the service of an employer carrying on or conducting the same," thus making it possible to compensate an employee in a hazardous occupation differing from that ordinarily engaged in by employees of the employer in his usual course of trade or business.

A case practically identical with the Bargey case in its circumstances arose under the amended law, when a bricklayer, employed by a lithographing and printing company to repair the walls of its plant, was injured. The fact that an amendment had been recommended by the industrial commission of the State so as to "cover employees called in to do construction and repair work as in the Bargey case," was referred to by the court in its opinion, and it was held that the injured man was entitled to benefits even though the work in which he was engaged was entirely different from the regular business of the establishment. The court below had denied compensation on the ground that the employer did not carry on the employment of bricklaying for pecuniary gain. This view was rejected by the court of appeals as tending to nullify entirely the effect of the amendment, the court saying also that the employer was carrying on a designated hazardous business for pecuniary gain, and that the injury sustained by the workman was in the service of the company, which was obligated to maintain a suitable plant for the proper conduct of its business; and since the employment in which the bricklayer claimant was engaged was "incidental and requisite to the business carried on by the company," under the law as amended he was clearly entitled to compensation (Dose v. Moehle Lithographic Co., 221 N. Y. 401, 117 N. E. 616).

So that although an employment may be properly classed as casual, as where a workman was replacing a smokestack at a factory, he is now within the act if the principal business of his employer is hazardous (Cummings v. Underwood Silk Fabric Co., 171 N. Y. Supp. 1046); and even before the amendment of 1916 the court had gone so far as to say, in a case where a handy man was putting in a shelf in a manufacturing establishment, that if "an employee is injured while performing an act which is fairly incidental to the prosecution of a business, and appropriate in carrying it forward and providing for its needs, he or his dependents are not to be barred from recovery because such act is not a step wholly embraced in the precise and characteristic process or operation which has been made the basis of the group in which employment is claimed" (Larsen v. Paine Drug Co., 218 N. Y. 252, 112 N. E. 725).

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin also held that repairs in an industrial plant, whether usual and capable of anticipation, or such as may occur but once in a long industrial life, are not without the usual course of business of the employer. It therefore affirmed an award under a provision of law which excluded employees whose work "is but casual, or not in the usual course," etc., where the injured man was in no wise a regular employee of the establishment (Holmen Creamery Assn. v. Industrial Commission, 167 N. W. 808). The law of this State has also been amended by striking out the words "is but casual or."

The strict attitude of the Illinois Supreme Court has already (p. 142) been noted. A plasterer at work in an addition to the employing company's plant was fatally injured, practically at the completion of a three-day job. The court denied his widow's claim on the ground that irregular employment, even through a period of years, was casual within the meaning of the act (Aurora Brewing Co. v. Industrial Board, 115 N. E. 207). And where the work was admittedly in the line of the employer's business, a structural-iron worker who was employed by a railroad for a job of three or four days' duration was held to be a casual employee, and not within the act (Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, 120 N. E. 508). The law, which was of the same effect as that of Wisconsin, noted above, was similarly amended in 1917.

The laws of Connecticut and Minnesota agree with that of California in following the British act, so that even if the business is but casual, if it is in line with the employer's business, the employer is liable (State v. District Court of Rice County (Minn.), 155 N. W. 103); while in a Connecticut case (Thompson v. Twiss, 97 Atl. 328), an indefinite term of employment, though to last at least several weeks, was held not to be casual, even though the work was not in the main business of the employer, "yet a very substantial one." This viewpoint coincides with that of the compensation commission of Pennsylvania; in this State the law excludes persons whose employment is casual and not in the regular course of the employer's business. The commission rules that "the policy of the law is against the creation of any situation whereby a workman can be engaged in his occupation in the State of Pennsylvania and be deprived thereby of the benefits of the workmen's compensation act." It was said that if a farmer undertook to build a barn, hiring the men therefor, they would not be classed as agriculturists because employed by him; but if he hurriedly employed a workman to repair a suddenly discovered leak that would be a casual employment. This accords with an earlier ruling by a referee in this State who allowed the claim of a carpenter remodeling the residence of his employer, who was engaged in no trade, but was held for the occasion to be engaged in the business of reconstructing the home. It was said that if there was "time for premeditation, calculation, and design he must be considered to have engaged in a business, and the employee under those circumstances can not be considered as casual."

The attitude of the supreme court of the State is less liberal. In the case of Marsh v. Groner (102 Atl. 127) the court denied compensation to a plasterer who was engaged to do several days' work on a residence on which the work of remodeling had been carried on for some months, the rejection being based on the view that the employer was not engaged in the business of building in the sense intended by the law. One justice dissented, saying that the majority had changed the law from "the regular course of the business" to "the course of the regular business" of the employer, thus unduly narrowing it.

Where an employee came to the employer's house for one day each week to assist in domestic duties it was held that such employment was not casual but periodical, and injuries received during its continuance were compensable (compensation commissioner of Connecticut). Quite similar was the view taken by the Maryland accident commission in the case of an employee who received $2 per week from an employer in a market, with the privilege of rendering services to other persons having stalls in the same market. An injury received while at work for one employer was held not to be during the rendering of casual services. Where one renders occasional services, but is under no contract and has no agreement therefor, the defense of casual employment was held to apply in a Massachusetts case, even though the employment was in the line of the employer's business. This ruling by a committee of arbitration is in harmony with a decision of the supreme court of that State, where a teamster with team rendered services of a few days' duration once or twice a year (In re Cheevers, 106 N. E. 861). The accident board of the same State allowed a claim where an employee was supplied under a contract with a union, the man not being hired as an individual but as a member of the union; the injured man was supplied as a substitute mailer, and was injured during the first day of his employment, though he had been pretty constantly at work in other offices in the city. The board held that his employment was substantially regular and not casual and that he was working under a contract, so that compensation must be allowed. The supreme court of that State passed upon another case in which a workman employed to trim trees to keep the wires of the employing company clear was directed by his foreman to trim the limbs of a tree through which none of the company's wires ran. The court held that as he was supposed to obey orders it was none of his business to inquire as to the right of the company to trim a particular tree, and that as he was doing what he had been hired to do the work was not casual (In re Howard, 105 N. E. 636).

The Minnesota commissioner of labor ruled that the length of service did not determine the nature of employment as casual in a case where a contractor who had no regular employees took on such men as he could obtain in a strange town for the purpose of a piece of work which he had contracted to do there.

The Supreme Court of New Jersey applied a principle already noted under this head in a case where a longshoreman was killed two hours after taking employment. Men in his line of service do not work regularly for one employer, but render services on the occasion of ships coming into port, being a regular class of employees for this purpose. The court held that such employment was not casual despite its irregularity (Sabella v. Brasileiro, 91 Atl. 1032). The industrial commission of Ohio holds the law of that State to cover public employees without distinction as to whether casual or not. The same view is taken of the Wisconsin statute by the industrial commission of that State and of the Michigan law by its board.

Other exclusions.—The Washington statute was held not to authorize the inclusion of elevators in mercantile establishments, the term "elevator," where used in the act, referring to grain elevators, and mercantile establishments not being among the extrahazardous places of employment contemplated by the act (Guerrieri v. Industrial Insurance Commission, 146 Pac. 608).

The law of Illinois includes occupations subject to statutory or municipal regulations. This was held by the appellate court not to cover occupations known not to be extrahazardous, so that the driver of a milk wagon was held not to be covered by the act, even though the dairy business was subject to municipal regulation. It was stated that transportation and warehousing were mere incidents to the conduct of the employer's business and were not of such nature as the act was intended to cover, and an award by the lower court was reversed (Bowman Dairy Co. v. Noyes, Ill. App.). The Supreme Court of Washington, in passing upon this phase of the law of that State, rules that a merchant who has repair shops and employs mechanics in them is, as to such employees and mechanical departments, engaged in extrahazardous employment within the meaning of the act, though simply as a merchant he is not (Wendt v. Industrial Insurance Commission, 141 Pac. 311).

The Texas statute excludes railways operated as common carriers, and this exclusion is held to cover street railways. The industrial accident board held that a company operating a street railway and also an electric light plant would be under the act as regards the latter if the electricity was furnished for other purposes than the operation of the road. Labor being interchangeable to a certain extent, it would be a question of fact in each case whether a claimant was injured while working for the electric light plant as such or was in the service of the railway company. The statute of this State also has a provision exempting employers of not more than five employees. It was held that a mercantile partnership operating stores in two different places in one city, each store having five employees, might become a subscriber under the act on the basis of its aggregate force of employees, since it was a single employer, though operating separate establishments.

Inasmuch as compensation is to be paid by the employer or his insurer to the employee, the question of who are employees is essential. The compensation board of Pennsylvania denied benefits to the secretary and treasurer of a mercantile company, who was also a buyer, and sometimes sold goods behind the counter, saying that the law was for the benefit of workmen and laborers serving at modest salaries or for wages, under the direction and control of others, and not for the executive officers of corporations. (Bastheim case, 1917.) A similar conclusion was reached by the Court of Appeals of New York in a case (Bowne v. S. W. Bowne Co., 116 N. E. 364) in which the president and principal stockholder of the company lost a leg as the result of an accident occurring while he was handling lumber. His salary was not affected by the accident, nor were his dividends reduced thereby. The industrial commission of the State, however, granted his claim for compensation, awarding the maximum schedule benefits. The company and the insurer carried the case to the court of appeals, where it was held that the intention of the law was to make a distinction between such an officer as the claimant in this case and other employees of the corporation, and the order granting the award was reversed.

This accords with a decision of the Supreme Court of California in the case of a member of a mining partnership (Cooper v. Industrial Commission, 171 Pac. 684). This man was a practical mining engineer, and was killed in a mine shaft while getting samples of ore for assaying. It was said that the compensation act did not contemplate such a mixed relation as would result if partners were to be regarded at the same time principal and agent or employer and employee. The industrial accident board of Massachusetts likewise denied the benefits of the act of that State to a partner who received $30 a week from the firm and claimed that it was wages. The public service commission of West Virginia also disallowed the claim of an employee who was bookkeeper and secretary of the company, on the ground that he was an officer of the corporation and not an employee within the meaning of the act of that State.

One of the compensation commissioners of Connecticut declared that if it had been desired to exclude officers of corporations from benefits as employees specific language would have been employed, so that one who was engaged in the company's service, although he was stockholder, director, and treasurer, was held entitled to compensation. The compensation commissioner of New York likewise allowed benefits to the president of an employing corporation who was injured while working in its shops as a mechanic; and the supreme court of the State, appellate division, though denying a claim on the ground that the employment was not covered by the act, held that a shareholder and vice president of a corporation was an employee within the meaning of the compensation act where he worked alongside the regular workmen, though he was general foreman (Beckman v. J. W. Oelerich & Son, 160 N. Y. Supp. 791).

The law of Texas was construed by the industrial accident board of that State to cover sons, wives, and daughters of merchants working in the store and paid a salary or wages. On the contrary, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts held that the wife of a merchant, who acted as cashier and bookkeeper and drew regular wages, was not an employee of her husband. Cases were cited to the effect that a married woman can not make a contract either with her husband or with a partnership of which he is a member (In re Humphrey, 116 N. E. 412).

The question of the status of employees engaged otherwise than on a fixed salary was ruled upon by the compensation commission of New York, the instant case being that of a traveling salesman employed on a commission basis. It was held that such employees should be included in the pay roll upon which premiums are based, though it is permissible to exclude any salesmen who are continuously employed outside of the State. Similar were the rulings of the industrial accident board of Texas as to salesmen taking orders on commission and pieceworkers in factories; so also as to a porter working in a hotel, dependent entirely upon tips for his income, the same board ruling that he was rendering service for the company, even though his payment came from such tips.

The matter of numerical exclusions would ordinarily seem to offer no ground for dispute. However, the question was raised in a Connecticut case, the State law not being applicable unless there are at least five employees. The fact that a building contractor employed a housekeeper in addition to four workmen about a building was held by a commissioner to bring him within the law.

The New York law, applicable to designated hazardous groups of employment, was amended by adding "all other employments not hereinbefore enumerated" in which "four or more workmen or operatives" are regularly employed. This was an attempt to cover all occupations having the requisite number of employees; but the question was immediately raised as to the meaning of the terms used, and the attorney general of the State gave it as his opinion that the phrase "workmen or operatives" is less broad than if the word "employees" had been used, and applies only to persons engaged in manual labor as mechanics, laborers, or artisans, and not to clerks or those engaged in professional work. In this view the act would not apply to an establishment employing, say, two laborers and two bookkeepers, but it is admitted that this construction is not authoritative, and until the courts pass upon it the safest course would be to elect to bring all employees under the act. As emphasizing this, it may be noted that the industrial commission of the State, charged with the administration of the law, is said to regard the amendment as bringing all employees under the act, excluding only farm laborers and domestic servants; while the counsel to the commission regards the distinction made by the attorney general as correct, except that if the law is applicable at all, as where there are four or more mechanics, etc., the law would then apply to all employees in the establishment, regardless of the nature of their employment; but it would not apply where there is strictly a clerical force and no manual labor is done.

Public employees.—The status of employees in public service was passed upon in a number of cases coming under notice. The law of New York as enacted defined employments as trades, etc., carried on by the employer “for pecuniary gain,” and under this provision the attorney general of the State in 1914 made a ruling, under which the commission has since acted, by which the claims of a number of employees of municipalities were rejected on the ground that no municipality could be engaged in business for pecuniary gain. The view of nonliability was taken by the supreme court of the State, appellate division, in the case of a worker on a State road (Allen v. State, 160 N. Y. Supp. 85), though it was said that the State has power to engage in business for profit, of which this was not an instance. Where there is profit, therefore, as may occur in municipal docks, lighting and water plants, and the like, compensation would seem to be payable. The Supreme Court of Kansas took a similar position in the case of a teamster hauling sand for a county road, holding that the county was not, in the work in hand, engaged in trade as business within the meaning of the act (Gray v. Board of County Commissioners, 165 Pac. 867).

It is obvious that such interpretations largely minify the value of the laws as regards public employees; and the New York law was amended in 1916 so as to make it applicable to work carried on by the State or a municipality, regardless of the question of profit. The attorney general of the State has ruled that all such agencies must insure their employees coming within the classes covered by the act, though self-insurance is permitted.

The law of Illinois brings within its scope all employers engaged in the enumerated hazardous occupations, including under the term “employer” the State and each county, city, town, township, etc., election being presumed in the absence of active rejection of the act. In McLaughlin v. Industrial Board of Illinois (117 N. E. 819) the contention was made that the act was invalid, since there was at common law no liability of the township in cases such as that in hand, in which a road workman was killed by an explosion of dynamite used in removing stumps from a highway; and that the legislature could not and did not intend to require a township to make an election in order to escape the provisions of the act. As to this the court held that the legislature had the right and power to make a township liable in damages to its employees, and that it was not essential that it should specify the means by which an election not to provide and pay compensation under the act should be made. It was also urged that it would be illegal to compel taxpayers to pay compensation under an elective act when they had no choice in the matter and no opportunity of making an election. To this the court replied that the officials in interest had the power of making the election, and that municipalities speak through their elected officials and not through the taxpayers. The law was therefore held constitutional and applicable to employment of the nature under consideration. Compensation was denied, however, as already noted, on the ground that the employment was casual (p. 142).

Somewhat resembling the contention raised in the McLaughlin case was the objection made to the law of Nevada, that in making it compulsorily applicable to counties there was a violation of the due-process-of-law clauses of the Federal and State constitutions. The supreme court of the State took the position, however, that in requiring counties to pay premiums under the act it was directing money to be spent for a public purpose, which was a legitimate charge upon the people, the State, and its subdivisions, so that the law was constitutional (Nevada Industrial Commission v. Washoe Co., 171 Pac. 511).

Another class of employment was under consideration by the Supreme Court of Michigan (Wood v. City of Detroit, 155 N. W. 592), the injured person being an employee of the public lighting commission of the city. The State accident board had made an award over the city's contention that the act was void as applied to municipalities, and this award was sustained by the court. The method of disposing of the question of constitutionality has already been noted (p. 93).

The constitutionality of the Montana law was challenged by a county of that State, the claim being made that inasmuch as counties were not originally subject to the operation of the liability statutes they could not be brought under the compensation law. The supreme court of the State dismissed this contention, stating that the present law was not a substitute for the liability statutes, but rested on fundamentally different grounds, and that counties were subject to its operations (Lewis and Clark County v. Industrial Accident Board, 155 Pac. 268).

The University of Illinois claimed that it was not covered by the act of that State; that it had not elected to come under the act; and that it was not engaged in a hazardous occupation. A claim was allowed on account of the death by accident of an elevator operator in the institution, the industrial board ruling that the institution was within the act compulsorily, and that on account of the various enterprises connected with it it was an employer at hazardous labor. The Agricultural College of Michigan also contested the claim of a carpenter who did repair work about the buildings of the institution, in the course of which he fell, sustaining a fractured leg. The claim was contested on the ground that the employee was a casual one, and also that the college was not subject to legislative control, so that it was not under the law. The industrial accident board of the State held that the proviso excluding casual employees does not apply to employees of the State or municipal corporations, and also that the college is subject to general laws regarding liability, an award in behalf of the claimant being affirmed.

A separate statute extends the benefits of the New Jersey compensation law to public employees, but provides that elective officers and persons receiving salaries greater than $1,200 per year shall not be entitled to compensation. This was held (Mayor etc. of Jersey City v. Borst, 101 Atl. 1033) to debar disability benefits only, and where the injury was fatal the claim of dependents was allowed without regard to the excess of salary above $1,200.

In Connecticut a woman supervising pupils in a State school for imbeciles was held to be an employee of the State within the act, the law covering all employers who use "the services of another for pay."

The industrial commissioner of Iowa discriminates between school-teachers in cities and in the country on the ground that country teachers frequently have to do the work of a janitor, while teachers in the city schools are not required to perform such duties. School janitors and country school-teachers, as well as other employees who perform manual labor for the school districts, were held to be included in the act; but as the law contains no reference to either manual or hazardous employments as conditioning rights under it the grounds for the distinction are not clear.

A Massachusetts statute (ch. 807, acts of 1913) authorizes cities to vote on the question of accepting the provisions of the State compensation law for "laborers, workmen, and mechanics" employed by them. These words were held by the supreme court of the State (Devney v. City of Boston, 111 N. E. 788) not to apply to a hoseman in the city fire department, such employees being classed as in "the official service" of the city and not in "the labor service," as determined by the civil service rules laid down by the State civil service commission. It was also said that laborers were persons without particular training, employed at manual labor, while workmen and mechanics broadly embrace those who are skilled users of tools, hose-men coming in neither class.

The same court held, however, that a janitor of a school building, though under the civil service act, was nevertheless a laborer or mechanic, the nature of the service and not the mode of appointment being the test (White v. City of Boston, 116 N. E. 481). But a teacher in a vocational and industrial school, who taught and demonstrated repair work, was held not to be a laborer or mechanic, and was outside the law (Lesuer v. City of Lowell, 116 N. E. 483).

The status of police officers, under a city charter where appointment is made by a commission and the police are required to take an oath of office, was passed upon by the supreme court of the State of Michigan (Blynn v. City of Pontiac, 151 N. W. 681), the court holding that the injured man was a public officer and not an employee of the city, reversing an award by the State accident board. The Supreme Court of Connecticut spoke similarly of a sheriff elected to office, and not "working under a contract of service," and therefore not an employee (Sibley v. State, 96 Atl. 161). The legal department of the city of Newark, N. J., held that the law of the State did not apply to a patrolman of the city; while the Pennsylvania compensation board rules that policemen are protected by its statute, though constables and elective officers generally are not. The industrial commission of Ohio also held that a police lieutenant in a city which does not maintain a policeman's pension system is an employee within the meaning of the act of that State, this decision being based on the particular provision of the law on this point.

The law of Minnesota excludes city officials elected or appointed for a regular term of office. This was held (State v. District Court of St. Louis Co., 158 N. W. 790) not to debar policemen from a right to recover under the act; nor firemen in the city fire department (State v. District Court of St. Louis Co., 158 N. W. 791); and the fact that the fireman was a member of a voluntary relief association supported in part by the city and in part by the members, from which the dependents of the decedent drew benefits, does not affect the right to compensation nor the amount thereof. The compensation law was also held not to repeal provisions of a city charter granting injured firemen full wages for fixed periods; they may therefore receive both benefits (Markley v. City of St. Paul, 172 N. W. 215).

The status of a city policeman was passed upon by the Supreme Court of Kansas in Griswold v. City of Wichita (99 Kans. 502, 162 Pac. 276). In this case, as in the Gray case, it was said that the city in employing the policeman was not engaged in trade or business, and further that he was not in any case a workman within the meaning of the law, so that no compensation would be allowed. A sheriff elected to office was held by the California courts not to be an employee under appointment, and an award in his favor made by the compensation commission of the State was annulled; and this even though words of specific exclusion in the act of 1911 were omitted from the act of 1913 (Mono County v. Industrial Accident Commission, 167 Pac. 377).

The industrial commission of Wisconsin ruled that a prisoner placed at work during the term of his sentence was not an employee of the State, so that no compensation could be allowed for the loss of the right hand of an imprisoned sailor from an injury while employed about a planing machine in a chair factory. A similar ruling was made by the attorney general of Minnesota where a prisoner lost an eye while working for the county.

Children unlawfully employed.—The status under the compensation acts of children employed in contravention of other statutes is not well defined. Some laws explicitly exclude them, leaving the employer subject to a suit in damages, with the special liabilities attaching to cases in which a statute has been violated (Waterman Lumber Co. v. Beatty (Texas), 204 S. W. 448); also with those connected with the status of children against whom the common law defenses can not be pleaded. But even where the laws are similarly phrased, the courts of different States have ruled differently. Thus in New York, where the law covers "employees" generally in designated classes of industries, the compensation law was held to be available in the case of a minor employed at a prohibited dangerous machine (Ide v. Faul & Timmins, 166 N. Y. Supp. 858); and this over the objection that the insurance contract limited the company's liability to cases of employees "legally employed." However any person "entitled to compensation" under the State law was to be covered, and the court held that the fact of employment in violation of the labor law furnished no defense to either the employer or the insurance carrier. A suit for damages was held not to be available in a similar case, on the ground that compensation is the exclusive remedy; though in this the judge declared himself to be following precedent, and not his own views as to the better policy (Robilotto v. Bartholdi Realty Co., 172 N. Y. Supp. 328; see also Kenny v. Union R. Co., 166 App. Div. 497, 152 N. Y. Supp. 117).

These opinions have been announced in the absence of any decision by the State court of last resort, and a later opinion by another court takes a different attitude (Wolff v. Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills, 173 N. Y. Supp. 75). The foregoing cases are cited, but the view is taken that by "employee" the legislature meant only a person legally employed, so that a suit for damages is the proper and only remedy in the case of employment in violation of the labor law. This accords with the view taken by the New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals, the provisions of the laws of the State being the same as in New York (Hetzel v. Wasson Piston Ring Co., 89 N. J. Law 203, 98 Atl. 306), and of Washington (Hillestad v. Industrial Commission, 141 Pac. 913). However, a recent decision by the Supreme Court of New York, Trial Term, regards the position taken in the Wolff case as untenable, both on reason and on authority (Boyle v. Piano Action Co., 181 N. Y. Supp. 668).

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin drew the line at a somewhat different point, and held that a minor who was of legal age for employment but was engaged at forbidden hazardous occupations was under the compensation act, and could not sue for damages, since the statute itself gives minors of employable age a right to contract under it (Foth v. Macomber & Whyte Rope Co., 154 N. W. 369). In a later case the same court held that a child of employable age but working without a statutory certificate was not an employee under the compensation act, even though his age had been misrepresented and the employment was found by the court to have been in good faith. A compensation award had been paid and release secured, but this was held void, and damages were allowed under the liability act of the State (Stetz v. Boot & Shoe Co., 156 N. W. 971). This case is distinguished from the Foth case above on the ground that in that case the minor was legally authorized to engage in the business in which he contracted to work, even though at the time of the injury he was employed at a machine forbidden by law; while in the present case, in the absence of an employment certificate, no employment was lawful. One judge dissented from this finding, while two others took no part in the decision. The law of this State was amended in 1917 so as to give treble damages in case of a child of permit age working without a permit or at a forbidden employment, and suffering injury. The amendment was declared constitutional, and was applied in the case of a boy 16 years of age being employed without a permit, the law requiring permits for children up to 17 years of age (Brenner v. Heruben, 176 N. W. 228).

The law of California includes minors as employees, and their illegal employment is held by the accident commission of the State not to bar recovery under the compensation act (Shanton case, 2 Com. Dec. 698); however, an insurance company limiting its policy to persons legally employed is not liable under such policy. But if the policy covers employees for whom compensation is provided by law, the company must pay the award, even though the employment was unlawful (Clark case, 5 Com. Dec. 219).

The Illinois law covers "minors who are legally permitted to work under the laws of the State." The industrial commission awarded benefits where a minor was illegally employed, saying that, as he could recover wages, so also he was entitled to compensation; but the supreme court of the State denies such right (Boszek v. Bauerle & Stark Co., 282 Ill. 557, 118 N. E. 991; Moll v. Industrial Commission, 123 N. E. 562). The Ohio law contains a similar limitation, and is similarly construed (Acklin Stamping Co. v. Kutz, 98 Ohio St. 61, 120 N. E. 229); and the supreme court of Indiana ruled that employment means lawful employment, so that the compensation law was no bar to a suit for damages when a boy unlawfully employed suffered an injury (New Albany Box & Basket Co. v. Davidson, 125 N. E. 904).

The accident board of Massachusetts, however, gave compensation to a boy injured while employed without a permit, saying that the penal liability of the employer did not affect the boy's rights under the compensation act (Kroeger case, 1920.)

Extraterritoriality.—The terms of the laws vary as to their applicability to accidents occurring outside the State, being explicit in some instances, while in other cases construction by the courts is necessary. Thus the law of Indiana specifically states that every employer and employee under the act shall be bound by its provisions regardless of the place of the occurrence of the injury; so that a circus employee, himself a resident of Indiana, his employer being a corporation organized under the laws of the State, was entitled to the benefits of an award made by the State board for an injury received in the State of Illinois (Hagenback v. Leppert, 117 N. E. 531). On the other hand, the Kentucky board ruled that the law of the locality should decide, and dismissed the claim of a workman usually employed in Kentucky, but receiving the injury complained of in the State of West Virginia.

Denying extraterritorial application of the laws of their respective States are also to be found the opinions of the industrial accident commission of Maryland and the industrial accident boards of Michigan and Texas.

The industrial commission of California took the position that though its law was in itself of no effect beyond the boundaries of the State, a contract made in the State followed the employee even though injured outside its limits; and as such contracts were made with the statute in view, compensation under it was recoverable regardless of the place of the injury. The supreme court adopted this view on its first consideration (Anderson v. North Alaska Salmon Co., Mar. 31, 1916); but on rehearing in December it reversed its position (North Alaska Salmon Co. v. Pillsbury, 174 Cal. 1, 162 Pac. 93). A distinction was drawn at this time between elective laws, under which the obligation to pay compensation may be regarded as a matter of agreement or contract, and compulsory laws, as that of California, where the obligation is fixed by the statute and not by the contract. The law was amended in 1915, subsequent to the occurrence of this accident for the purpose of covering injuries to employees, residents of the State at the time of the injury and contracting within the State, regardless of the place of the injury (sec. 75a of the act of 1913; sec. 58 of the act of 1917).

The constitutionality of this amendment was challenged in an action (Estabrook Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Pac. 848) in which it was claimed that it discriminated against nonresidents. The plaintiff was an employer and a resident of the State, and the court held that he was not affected by the discrimination complained of, if any existed, and therefore had no right to raise the question of constitutionality. The award against him made under this section was therefore affirmed.

However, another employer petitioned about a year later, raising the same question, and the court held there were exceptions to the general rule laid down by the supreme court; so that if a member of the class discriminated against was not in a position to contest the validity of the act, any person affected by its application might take action (Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 59 Cal. Dec. 18), citing Buchanan v. Warley (245 U. S. 60, 38 Sup. Ct. 16), and Middleton v. Texas Power and Light Co. (249 U. S. 152, 39 Sup. Ct. 227).

In passing on the point raised it was held that the legislature had the power to enact a law providing for compensation under California contracts, whether the employee be a citizen of the State or not. It was also recalled that the industrial accident commission was without power to act on any extraterritorial case unless such power was given by the statute under consideration. But to limit the benefits of the act to citizens or persons domiciled in the State, in so far as extraterritorial effects are concerned, would effect an unlawful discrimination against citizens of other States of the Union who might make contracts in the State, but would be debarred the benefits of the act because not coming within its designated class of residents of the State. The provision was therefore declared unconstitutional. On rehearing, however, the court decided that the State had power to regulate all contracts entered into within its borders, and might make compensation benefits payable to the parties to such contracts wherever injured. The grant of that right could not be confined to residents of the State, under the Federal Constitution, but must be available to all the citizens of all the States who are affected by like conditions of contract and injury; so that instead of declaring the section void, it was broadened to include nonresidents, citizens of other States (Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 59 Cal. Dec. 18).

The industrial commission of Colorado decides that the contract of employment follows the employee into other States wherever he goes in its performance. This view was adopted by the supreme court of the State, saying that otherwise an employer would be burdened with the duty of insuring under the law of each separate State into which his employee might go in the performance of his contract (Industrial Commission v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 174 Pac. 589). The Supreme Court of Connecticut similarly construed the law of that State (Kenneron v. Thames Towboat Co., 94 Atl. 372). This is the position also of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island (Grinnell v. Wilkinson, 98 Atl. 103), the Supreme Court of Minnesota (State ex rel. Chambers v. District Court, 166 N. W. 185), the Supreme Court of West Virginia (Gooding v. Ott, 87 S. E. 802), and the Supreme Court of New Jersey, the latter saying that the compensation act is contractual in its nature and the place of the performance of the contract thereunder is no more essential than in the case of life insurance (Rounsaville v. Central R. Co., 94 Atl. 392).

The law in all of these States is elective. However, the New York Court of Appeals, construing a compulsory law, takes the same view, saying that the contract was entered into with the compensation law in view, and that the premiums paid for insurance were computed on the pay roll and not on the time worked within or without the State boundaries (Post v. Burger & Gohlke, 216 N. Y. 544, 111 N. E. 351). It was pointed out by this court that the liability was not contractual, strictly speaking, since the law is a compulsory one; but that it is quasi-contractual, and the provisions of the law would affect the contract on that basis (Smith v. Heine Safety Boiler Co., 224 N. Y. 9, 119 N. E. 878).

The Supreme Court of Iowa went so far as to say that, where the statute was elective as to both parties, the payment of compensation was not the performance of a statutory duty, but the fulfillment of the conditions of a contract, and the place of injury was not of the essence of the case (Pierce v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 172 N. W. 191.)

Where an accident occurred in the State of New Jersey, the contract of employment having been made beyond its borders, recovery under the New Jersey law was allowed on the ground that it covers all accidents occurring within the State unless rejected (American Radiator Co. v. Rogge, 92 Atl. 85). However, where an employer hires an employee outside the State to do work outside its borders, the New York Supreme Court holds that the law does not apply (Gardner v. Horseheads Construction Co., 156 N. Y. Supp. 899).

The original law of New Jersey provided that disputes under the act are to be settled by a judge of the court of common pleas, and this provision was held by the Supreme Court of New York, special term, to prevent it from taking cognizance of a claim under the New Jersey law, or giving judgment on an amount alleged to be due under the provisions of that law, the court saying that a forum had been fixed by the act itself, and the right being statutory, all its conditions should be complied with (Lehmann v. Ramo Films, Inc., 155 N. Y. Supp. 1032); and this was said to be true even though both parties are citizens of New York, where the claim is under the law of New Jersey (McCarthy v. McAllister Steamboat Co., 158 N. Y. Supp. 563). When this question came to the court of appeals, however, it was said that there was no public policy of the State that would prevent recognition and enforcement of the law of New Jersey in the courts of New York (Barnhart v. Am. Concrete Steel Co., 125 N. E. 675).

The industrial commission of New York made a distinction in the case of an employee of a corporation doing business in New York, the employee himself being a resident of Rhode Island, but at the time of his injury working in the State of Texas. The case of Post v. Burger was distinguished, Post being said to be a resident of New York and potentially a public charge on the State if injured, while in this case the injured man would in no event assume such a status. It was said that he might recover under the laws of Texas, since in actions of tort the law of place must govern, so that compensation was denied (Carlson case, 1917). It is not clear, however, how this distinction could be made to nullify the argument of the court of appeals to the effect that the premiums paid for insurance under the act are computed on the pay roll, and not on the time worked within or without the State boundaries. The State fund was the insurer, and the workman had been directed by his employer in New York to go to Texas, where the injury occurred. In passing upon the case, the commission stated that the New York statute could not compel employers either in New York, in Rhode Island, or in Texas to cover their employees everywhere with compensation insurance.

A New York workman injured in Pennsylvania claimed and was awarded compensation under the law of Pennsylvania, and afterwards sought the larger benefits provided by the New York statute. The insurer claimed that by accepting benefits under the Pennsylvania law the workman was estopped from further proceedings. However, the New York commission allowed the claim, but with deduction of the amount received under the Pennsylvania law (Dumberger case, 1919.)

Other variations were passed upon by the industrial commission of the State of New York, one case being that of a resident of New Jersey, who had been hired by a Philadelphia corporation to do work in the State of New York. The employee was injured and applied for compensation under the New York law. It was held that jurisdiction existed in the State of New York and that difficulty might arise in establishing it in the other States named, while if the claim is made in New York the claimant would be estopped to deny recovery had, so that no double recovery could be secured. The claim was therefore allowed. In another instance a marine engineer living in New Jersey, but employed by a New York corporation in waters in and about New York Harbor, was killed in Newark, N. J. A claim in his behalf was allowed. The Ohio law is given the same application by the industrial commission of that State where a citizen of the State was sent outside its boundaries in the employer's service.

The question of extraterritorial jurisdiction was before the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in the case of In re American Mutual Liability Insurance Co. (Gould's case, 215 Mass. 480, 102 N. E. 693). In this case the parties in interest were residents of the State of Massachusetts and had accepted the provisions of the compensation law of the State. The death, however, occurred while the workman was rendering service to his employer in the State of New York, his employment occasionally leading him to service in that State and in other States. The industrial accident board of the State found that the insurance company had been paid by the employer for insuring all injuries received by its employees in the course of their employment, whether within or without the Commonwealth. The supreme court, however, declined to accept this fact as binding, and held that the scope of the law itself must determine; and from a consideration of all its terms it was decided that the law had no effect as to injuries received outside the State and that the company was not liable in the case in hand.

The ruling in this case as to the nonextraterritorial effect of the Massachusetts law is cited by the Supreme Court of Connecticut in a case in which a Massachusetts employee of a Massachusetts employer was injured while performing a piece of work in the State of Connecticut (Douthwright v. Champlin, 100 Atl. 97). Its own decision favoring the extraterritorial operation of the Connecticut law (Kennerson case, supra) was mentioned, and a statement was quoted therefrom that the Connecticut courts would enforce such laws of other jurisdictions, "provided they did not conflict with our laws or public policy," and the processes prescribed "could be used in our jurisdiction." However, as the Massachusetts law is restricted by State boundaries, according to the construction put upon it by its own courts, the parties come into Connecticut in the same status as "if the contract had been made in South Carolina, where there is no compensation act." In either case a contract performed in Connecticut will have read into it the conditions of the law of Connecticut, in the absence of a positive rejection of the act.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin considered the nature of compensation legislation as bearing on the question: "We do not regard the liability of the employer under the workmen's compensation act merely as a substitute for the common-law liability of the employer." The question is not of the result of a wrong committed by the employer but of an incident of industry conducted under modern conditions. "Therefore the damages arising therefrom should be borne by the whole industry rather than by the employer or employee." To put injuries occurring within the State boundaries in one class and those occurring without in another would open the way to a continuation of both the old and the new system, "and the legislative purpose would not be accomplished" (Anderson v. Miller Scrap Iron Co., 170 N. W. 275). A judgment for damages under the Michigan liability statute was therefore reversed and the cause remanded for proceedings under the compensation law of Wisconsin, the place of residence, contract, and principal employment of the deceased workman, this law being declared a part of every contract, and exclusive in its effects, where both parties are under the act.

Admiralty.—What might be considered as a part of the foregoing subject is the question of persons employed at occupations giving them a right of action under the admiralty law. The Supreme Court of Connecticut held that the State has concurrent jurisdiction in such cases, and the compensation law is available (Kenneron v. Thames Towboat Co., supra).

The compensation commission of New York held that the law administered by it was exclusive in its application to longshoremen, whether at work on docks or on vessels in the harbors of the State, and the court of appeals (In re Walker, 109 N. E. 604) ruled that as the employee formerly had the option of proceeding at common law or in admiralty to recover for injuries, so now he has the option of choosing the compensation law, which has superseded the common law. As to the contention that shipowners are not equally exempted from possible suits with other employees, the court held that this lies in the nature of the case and is not a result of the action of the legislature, so that no question of the constitutionality of the act was raised thereby.

The California commission held that a man injured on the high seas was covered by the law of that State on the ground of the residence of himself and of the employing corporation and of the location of the port of registry of the vessel and the place of contract. When the supreme court of the State came to consider the subject it held that the provision of the judiciary act of 1789 that saved to suitors in admiralty their common-law remedies, where the common law was competent to give a remedy, was broad enough to let in statutory remedies of subsequent enactment, even though a new right was thereby created (Northern Pac. S. S. Co. v. Industrial Acc Comm., 163 Pac. 199). The new remedies were said to be personal and not in rem, and therefore could exist alongside of the admiralty rights.

The Supreme Court of Washington took the opposite view, holding that since the State had no power to modify the shipowner's liability under admiralty, it could not be presumed to make the compensation act effective where admiralty might apply; it was further held that to do so would require shipowners to contribute to the State insurance fund and still be liable to suits in admiralty (State v. Daggett, 151 Pac. 648). The same view was taken by the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Washington (The Fred E. Sander, 208 Fed. 724).

In thus construing and applying their law the New York authorities had in mind provisions of the act specifically covering longshore work and the operation and repair of vessels used in interstate or foreign commerce; also those covering employees in interstate and foreign commerce working within the State, in so far as not forbidden by act of Congress (Jensen v. Southern Pacific Co., 215 N. Y. 514, 109 N. E. 608). However, when these cases (Walker and Jensen cases) came to the Supreme Court of the United States for consideration the statute was declared to go beyond the power of the State legislature to enact, and these particular provisions were held unconstitutional. It was said, four judges dissenting, that a State can not impose obligations such as are contained in the New York law upon maritime commerce, since to do so would be to destroy the uniformity in maritime matters that the Constitution intended to establish in its provisions as to admiralty jurisdiction (Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 37 Sup. Ct. 524; Clyde Steamship Co. v. Walker, 244 U. S. 255, 37 Sup. Ct. 545).

An interesting sequel to this decision was an amendment to the Federal Judicial Code (Oct. 6, 1917), saving to claimants of the class affected the right to proceed under any compensation law applicable to the locality in which the injury was received, similar to the saving of the common-law remedies. Following this amendment also was the act of the New York Legislature restoring the provisions of its law which had been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Questions of construction and application of the amended code and of the State law immediately arose, leading to widely differing adjudications. Thus it has been held that the amendment of the Judicial Code had the effect of so far validating the compensation law of New York in its application to maritime workers that no other remedy remains. The act purports to provide an exclusive remedy where it applies, and this provision was held to be incorporated into the Judicial Code by its amendment of 1917, the limitation declared by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Jensen case having been set aside by the action of Congress (The Howell, 257 Fed. 578). The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, on the other hand, rejected the contention that where there was a compensation law the admiralty courts were deprived of jurisdiction (Hogan v. Bula, 262 Fed. 225). The United States District Court for the District of Oregon holds that the amendment does not interfere with the power of Federal courts to administer the maritime law, where a remedy in admiralty is chosen, and that they must administer maritime law only, unaffected by State statutes. An action in admiralty was therefore held to be a proper means of securing redress for injuries to a maritime worker, where he chose that form of relief (Rohde v. Grant Smith Porter Co., 259 Fed. 304). To the same effect is a decision of the Supreme Court of Washington, upholding the right of the injured man to exercise a choice of remedies (Lund v. Griffiths & Sprague Stevedoring Co., 183 Pac. 123). Here the option was to proceed at common law, and it was contended that the State compensation act barred suits for damages in case of injuries to employees; but the court held that the Federal act controls, and that the amendment of 1917 did not abolish either admiralty or common-law remedies, but merely added compensation to the list of remedies available. The same view was adopted by the Supreme Court of New York in cases where the common-law remedies were pursued (Dziengelewsky v. Turner & Blanchard, 176 N. Y. Supp. 729; Simpson v. Atlantic Coast Shipping Co., 176 N. Y. Supp. 731).

In the case of a dredge hand who fell overboard and was drowned, the Massachusetts accident board rejected the contention that the amendment to the Judicial Code did not bring under the State compensation law any injury not theretofore included, and awarded compensation, though there could be no recovery for the death of a seaman either under the common law or the general maritime law (Dorman case, 1920).

The California commission went so far as to award compensation to an injured seaman who had received benefits from his employer on account of an injury during the voyage, and subsequently made a claim under the act. It was said that the mere receipt of benefits from the employer did not constitute an election under the admiralty law, so that his claim was not barred (Mestrand case, 1919).

Somewhat earlier than the foregoing was the decision by the commission in the Soarez case (July 31, 1918), in which an award was made for the death of a stevedore injured while unloading lumber at a dock. The contention was made that no compensation legislation would be valid unless enacted subsequent to the amendment of the Judicial Code. This the commission rejected, ruling that the amendment granted rights under existing laws, and awarded com-compensation for the death of Soarez. This case was taken on appeal to the supreme court of the State, where it was decided on March 30, 1920, the award being annulled (Sudden and Christenson v. Industrial Accident Commission, 188 Pac. 803).

The court took the view that Congress had exceeded its powers under the Constitution in attempting to confer upon the States authority given to Congress alone under Article III, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States. The decision of the Supreme Court in the Jensen case was cited as sustaining the view that "Congress has paramount power to fix and determine the maritime law which shall prevail throughout the country." It was held that this must be done by Congress acting directly and not by giving the State legislatures authority to act in such a manner as would "destroy the uniformity of the maritime law which it was the aim of the Constitution to secure."

The Court of Appeals of New York had earlier sustained the constitutionality of this amendment (Stewart v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 226 N. Y. 302, 123 N. E. 383), but the argument in this case did not appeal to the California court. Subsequently the New York case was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States (Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart 40 Sup. Ct. 438). This opinion was rendered May 17, 1920, and authoritatively annuls the amendment of 1917 to the Judicial Code, Congress having no power to so act in view of the limitations fixed by the Constitution. "To say that because Congress could have enacted a compensation act applicable to maritime injuries, it could authorize the States to do so as they might desire, is false reasoning." As the California court pointed out, so also here it was said that to do so "would inevitably destroy the harmony and uniformity which the Constitution not only contemplated but actually established."

The industrial accident board of Texas had before it the case of a claim for injuries received by the employee of a company engaged in business described as "general towing," the employer being insured in a stock company in conformity with the provisions of the State compensation law. An award was made under a construction of the law that held that such operations as the towing of vessels entering and leaving the harbor of Port Arthur were within the provisions of the State law. On the rendition of the opinions in the Winfield cases and the Jensen case the insurer declined to make further payments on the ground that the decisions of the Supreme Court showed the case to be one for Federal jurisdiction and not under State law.

Assuming that as between the towboat company and its employees there was a question of admiralty rights and jurisdiction, the board took the position that nevertheless the insurance company could not plead any defenses under the maritime law, since it had come into the case voluntarily, assuming certain contingent liabilities for a valuable consideration. "It has no admiralty rights whatever; it neither owns nor operates a boat; could not do so under its charter powers." It was held also that when the towboat company voluntarily became a subscriber to the act it waived its admiralty rights, and that the employee working for the company with a knowledge of the facts likewise waived his admiralty rights. Under the law the case in question was one between the insurance company and the employee or his beneficiaries, and as the company was without admiralty rights, and the employee had waived such rights, the doctrines enounced in the decision by the Supreme Court had no application. In so far as the question of interstate commerce was concerned, the purely optional nature of the Texas statute was said to distinguish it from the laws of New Jersey and New York; and since the employee had by voluntary agreement accepted provisions of law by which he did not look to the employer, either directly or indirectly, for damages or compensation in case of injury, but to a third contracting party, the Federal statute was not operative. In view of this position, compensation payments by the insurer were directed to be continued.

Interstate commerce.—The initial difficulty confronting both legislatures and courts in determining the application of State compensation laws to railroad employees lies in the fact that the control of interstate carriers is vested by the Constitution of the United States in the Federal Congress. Various regulative measures have been enacted by this body affecting employees of such carriers, but the only statute which demands consideration in this particular field is the act of 1908, amended 1910, determining the liability of railroad companies for injuries to their employees while engaged in interstate commerce. As the authority of Congress is necessarily paramount (Michigan Central Railroad Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 33 Sup. Ct. 192; Grand Trunk Railway v. Knapp (C. C. A.), 233 Fed. 950), the States are compelled to legislate with this statute in mind. Phraseology is frequently used to indicate the purpose of the legislature to enact laws applicable to railroad employments only in so far as such employments are not covered by the Federal law. The laws of other States exclude railroad employments, or at least train operation, from their purview, leaving persons in such employments in recovering for injuries therein to the rights established by statutes declaring the liability of employers. Actions for damages are therefore necessary in these jurisdictions in all cases of injury to railroad employees, whether engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce; and this principle controls even to the extent of making it impossible for an injured workman and his employer to make an agreement of settlement under the terms of a State compensation law (that of Michigan in the instant case), where the case is clearly one of interstate commerce, according to a decision of a United States circuit court of appeals (Waters v. Guile, 234 Fed. 532)²⁸.

In States having compensation laws opposite conclusions have been reached as to the boundaries of the field within which they may act, one view being that since the Federal law applies only where there is negligence on the part of the employer, other cases may be cared for by a supplemental act, the contrary opinion being that the Federal statute is exclusive and comprehends the entire liability of employers in interstate commerce by railroad. Thus, in harmony with the latter view, the Illinois Supreme Court reversed the lower courts which awarded judgment in favor of an employee injured in interstate commerce without negligence of the employer, holding that the State had no authority to supplement the Federal statute in this manner (Staley v. I. C. R. Co., 268 Ill. 356, 109 N. E. 342). The industrial commission of Ohio took practically the same view, setting forth that under the State law railroads and their employees engaged in intrastate and also in interstate commerce are subject to the provisions of the State compensation act only to the extent that the two kinds of work are clearly separable and distinguishable; also that under the act the application as to intrastate employees is effective only after the voluntary acceptance of the act by both parties in writing. Since such acceptance is voluntary, a nonaccepting employer loses no defenses by a failure to accept (Connole v. Norfolk & Western Railway Co., 216 Fed. 823).

In contrast with the Illinois opinion, the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey held that the Federal act is exclusive only where there is negligence on the part of the employer. In proceedings for compensation the plaintiff does not charge negligence, and if the plaintiff does not admit or plead negligence none appears, so that there is no applicability of the Federal law, and compensation may be awarded on the contractual obligation imposed by the compensation statute (Winfield v. Erie R. Co., 88 N. J. L. 619, 96 Atl. 394). The supreme court of the State in an earlier case (Rounsaville v. Central R. Co., 87 N. J. L. 371, 94 Atl. 392) remarked that the Federal law established no new right of action, merely taking away defenses, and that liability under it is not affected by the terms of contract, while the compensation act is a new remedy, contractual in nature, the two not overlapping, but each valid where applicable; but a referee under the Pennsylvania law refused to admit the defense of interstate commerce in the case of a brakeman killed in railroad yards, and awarded compensation under the State law. The State board confirmed such an award, saying that where the company offers the objection that the Federal law controls, its contention is matter of defense and must be supported by positive testimony, the full burden of proof resting on the company to take the case out from under the State law.

The New York Court of Appeals took the same view as the New Jersey courts, saying that the acts are so different as to leave room for both. Employees in the State are protected by the regular insurance covering all accidents regardless of negligence. The Federal law covers cases of negligence by its exclusive right, but goes no further, so that there is no risk of double liability (Winfield v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 216 N. Y. 284, 110 N. E. 614). The industrial commissioner of Iowa similarly construed the law of that State, though the point seems not to have been passed upon by its courts.

The New York Court of Appeals also held that longshoremen loading interstate vessels are not operating the vessels within the meaning of the State law. It was added that regulating the relations between employers and employees was not a regulation of commerce, and was within the jurisdiction of the State until Congress acts, which it has not done as to vessels, so that an award might be made in the case in hand (Jensen v. S. P. R. Co., 215 N. Y. 514, 109 N. E. 600); and generally where the interstate commerce is by water, the authorities available agree that, since Congress has not legislated at all on the subject, the State laws control. The law of Washington declares on this point that its provisions "shall apply to employers and workmen engaged in intrastate and also interstate or foreign commerce, for whom a rule of liability or method of compensation has been or may be established by the Congress of the United States, only to the extent that their mutual connection with intrastate work may and shall be clearly separable and distinguishable from interstate or foreign commerce." The court held that taking the law as it stood in all its points it was intended to legislate for all persons engaged in the extrahazardous employments enumerated in the act, and that Congress having in no way legislated in the particular premises, the State had the right to enact laws incidentally affecting such commerce. It was held, therefore, that any right of recovery which the plaintiff might have would be by way of a claim under the compensation law of the State (Stoll v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 205 Fed. 169).

Not using the same language as to strict exclusiveness, but maintaining the applicability of the laws, are to be found the supreme courts of Connecticut (Kennerson v. Thames Towboat Co., 89 Conn. 367, 94 Atl. 372) and of Minnesota (Lindstrom v. Mutual S. S. Co., 132 Minn. 328, 156 N. W. 669); while the industrial commission of Ohio, though refusing to consider cases of interstate commerce by railroad, as already noted, applied the compensation law to the case of an employee swept overboard from a tug in Lake Erie and drowned.

In spite of the weight of authority usually accorded to the courts holding the views set forth above, the persuasive reasoning by which their positions were supported, and the obvious need for relief not afforded by the Federal liability law, the Supreme Court of the United States declared against the supplemental or piecing-out theory of these courts. In taking their stand, the State courts had recognized the exclusive force of the Federal act where it was applicable, but where no negligence was charged it was assumed that there was no applicability of the Federal law, and that compensation might be awarded on the contractual obligation imposed by the compensation statute. This the Supreme Court denied, holding that interstate commerce is not in any way subject to State compensation laws, and saying that the Federal statute is "comprehensive and also exclusive, fixing the entire responsibility of interstate carriers to their employees, so that no power to supplement the laws lies within the purview of State legislatures" (New York Central R. Co. v. Winfield, 244 U. S. 147, 37 Sup. Ct. 546; Erie R. Co. v. Winfield, 244 U. S. 170, 37 Sup. Ct. 556).

Thus both the New York and New Jersey courts of last resort were reversed. It may be noted that two justices dissented in these cases, on the ground that the Federal law was intended to cover only the limited field of the carrier's liability for negligence, and not the whole field of obligation that might exist by reason of the occurrence of accidents.

Assuming the exclusive authority of the Federal act in its territory, the question of which law to seek relief under, whether State or Federal, remains obscure in many cases. The rights of recovery are widely different, dependent upon whether the employee is engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce, and the boundaries between these two classes of employment are not only obscure in themselves, but the efforts of the courts in attempting to determine them have been hardly less confusing than clarifying. Thus a preliminary question to be disposed of in the case of New York Central R. Co. v. White, noted under the discussion of constitutionality of the laws, was as to the status of the employee suffering the injury. It appeared from the facts that he was a night watchman guarding tools and materials intended to be used in the construction of a new railway station and new tracks not yet brought into use. The company made the contention that, on account of the interstate nature of the business, the rights of recovery against it were defined and limited exclusively by the provisions of the Federal employers' liability act of 1908. The Supreme Court held, however, that since the employee was not at the time of the injury engaged in interstate transportation, nor in work so closely related to it as to be practically a part of it, but had to do solely with construction work, he was within the jurisdiction of the State law. On the other hand, where a workman employed in cutting weeds, etc., along the right of way of a railroad died from congestion of the lungs following poisoning from ivy vine, an award and decision in his favor were reversed by the Court of Appeals of New York because consideration had not been given to the contention that the work of removing the weeds, grass, etc., was interstate commerce. The court held that if the work contributed to the safety and integrity of the railroad, which was an interstate carrier, it was a part of interstate commerce, and the industrial commission must pass upon the nature of the employment before making its award (Plass v. Central New England Ry. Co., 117 N. E. 952).

A serious result of error in choosing the remedy appeared in a Michigan case, where an employee was adjudged to be in intrastate employment after having sued under the Federal law. Since the compensation law required claims to be filed within six months after the injury, and a greater time had been consumed in the court proceedings, no right of recovery remained (Schild v. R. Co., 166 N. W. 1018).

The converse of this situation arose in a case in which the widow of a deceased electric lineman presented a claim to the industrial commission of California. An award was made as for intrastate employment, and was affirmed by the supreme court of the State (Southern Pacific Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 171 Pac. 1071). The deceased received an electric shock while wiping insulators on a main line by which current was transmitted to a transformer station, from which it passed to lines by which both interstate and intrastate traffic was moved. The court regarded this service too remote to be classed as interstate, comparing it to switching coal cars to a chute from which both kinds of traffic would be supplied with fuel. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed this decision (same case, 40 Sup. Ct. 130), saying that if the current had been short circuited through the decedent's body, interstate commerce would have been immediately interfered with; hence the employment must be classed as interstate, and subject only to the Federal law. As this law contains a two-year limitation, and as a longer time than two years had elapsed when the final decision was reached, the widow was without redress.

An interesting point in connection with this case is that the Supreme Court of California in declaring the injury intrastate relied principally upon the analogy of the present case to one decided by the Supreme Court, holding a member of a switching crew to be in intrastate service (Chicago B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. Harrington, 241 U. S. 177, 36 Sup. Ct. 517). The crew was engaged in switching cars of coal to supply bins from which locomotives would be supplied, for both interstate and intrastate operations. The argument in the Harrington case was cited and said to be apt, the decision resting squarely on the court's understanding of the Supreme Court's views. A subsequent reversal by the very court which was sought to be followed illustrates the complexity of the situation.

A very recent decision involves the claim of a trainman moving coal from the mine to a railroad yard, 2 miles distant. A fatal injury was the basis of an award to the widow, affirmed by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania (264 Pa. 220, 107 Atl. 735). The case was then taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and there reversed (Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co. v. Hancock, 40 Sup. Ct. 512), on the ground that as some of the cars had been designated by instruction cards to the conductor as intended for shipment outside the State, they were in interstate commerce from the time of leaving the mine, though not yet weighed and billed. "The determining circumstance is that the shipment was but a step in the transportation of the coal to real and ultimate destinations in another State."

The question is almost insoluble under existing conditions, and the variety of conditions seems far from being exhausted. A recent case before the Supreme Court of Washington involved the status of a telegraph company (State v. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., 172 Pac. 902). It was held that as to employees engaged in construction the employment was intrastate and within the State law. Employees sending messages were engaged in both interstate and intrastate service, and inasmuch as the two forms of work could not be segregated, the State law had no application thereto. The problem is in no wise different in principle from the earlier one of under which law to sue, before the enactment of compensation laws; and as to this it was said by the Supreme Court that "each case must be decided in the light of the particular facts, with a view to determining whether, at the time of the injury, the employee is engaged in interstate business."

Alien beneficiaries.—The laws are in most instances specific enough on the point of the inclusion or exclusion of nonresident alien beneficiaries to make construction unnecessary. The Illinois statute is not thus specific, however, but the industrial board of the State ruled that the wording of the law, "the people of the State," includes aliens as among those workmen covered by the act, so that their nonresident dependents are entitled to benefits; this view was confirmed when a case involving the point came before the supreme court of the State (Victor Chemical Works v. Industrial Board, 113 N. E. 173). The New Jersey statute excludes nonresident beneficiaries, and inasmuch as employees within the State have no other remedy than that provided by the act, it was held that no right survives, so that Lord Campbell's act giving the right of recovery for fatal injuries no longer avails for nonresident aliens, the only right that the injured man had having died with him (Gregutis v. Waclark Wire Work, 91 Atl. 98, 92 Atl. 354).

The law of California makes no reference to alien beneficiaries, but does include alien employees, and the contention was made (Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 156 Pac. 491) that this made possible payments to alien and nonresident dependents; that no public purpose cognizable by the legislature was to be served thereby, and that therefore the law was unconstitutional. The supreme court of the State rejected this view, saying that "there is no constitutional or rational ground for limiting the benefits of this legislative scheme to citizens or residents of this State. If the employment was such as to fall within the State's lawmaking jurisdiction, the legislature certainly had the power to pass laws operating uniformly upon all persons affected by such employment."

Under like conditions as to legislation, the Court of Civil Appeals of Texas held that dependents of a workman to whom benefits had been paid up to the time of his death were entitled to compensation, even though nonresident aliens, "since neither under the workmen's compensation act nor under the general law of this State are they denied right to inherit" (Surety Ins. Co. v. Vickstrom, 203 S. W. 389).

The Pennsylvania law allows nonresident aliens two-thirds benefits. This was held by the State board to be an attempt to equalize money values, and if resident beneficiaries leave the State and go back to their native country, the award should be reopened and revised accordingly (Ciambella case, 1918).

ARISING OUT OF AND IN COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT.

The majority of the laws of the States contain as a limitation on the injuries to be compensated the statement that they must arise out of and in the course of employment, and the rulings on this point are necessarily numerous. The phrase is copied from the British workmen's compensation law, and in considering its frequent use has been made of English decisions. The Supreme Court of New Jersey discussed its effect in an early case (Bryant v. Fissell, 86 Atl. 458), reaching the conclusion that "an accident arises 'in the course of the employment' if it occurs while the employee is doing what a man so employed might reasonably do within the time during which he is employed, and at a place where he may reasonably be during that time." Since, however, the law of New Jersey contains also the words "out of" and requires that both conditions be met, further consideration was had, concluding "that an accident arises 'out of' the employment when it is something the risk of which might have been contemplated by a reasonable person when entering the employment as incident to it. * * * A risk is incidental to the employment when it belongs to or is connected with what a workman has to do in fulfilling his contract of service." In this case a carpenter engaged in the erection of a building was injured by the falling of material in charge of the ironwork contractor, who was a separate employer of labor. It was held that the injury was received in the course of and arising out of the employment. The same court applied this doctrine to include the case of a workman killed while crossing railroad tracks on the way from the place of his employment to the toilet customarily used by persons in the employer's service (Zabriskie v. Erie R. Co., 88 Atl. 824). In discussing the same phraseology the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts (In re Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, 102 N. E. 697, frequently cited as "McNicol's case") first laid down the rule that both conditions of the phrase must be complied with, and in discussing the effect of these words said:

It is not easy nor necessary to the determination of the case at bar to give a comprehensive definition of these words which shall accurately include all cases embraced within the act and with precision exclude those outside its terms. It is sufficient to say that an injury is received "in the course of" the employment when it comes while the workman is doing the duty which he is employed to perform. It arises "out of" the employment, when there is apparent to the rational mind, upon consideration of all the circumstances, a causal connection between the conditions under which the work is required to be performed and the resulting injury. Under this test, if the injury can be seen to have followed as a natural incident of the work and to have been contemplated by a reasonable person familiar with the whole situation as a result of the exposure occasioned by the nature of the employment, then it arises "out of" the employment. But it excludes an injury which can not fairly be traced to the employment as a contributing proximate cause and which comes from a hazard to which the workmen would have been equally exposed apart from the employment. The causative danger must be peculiar to the work and not common to the neighborhood. It must be incidental to the character of the business and not independent of the relation of master and servant. It need not have been foreseen or expected, but after the event it must appear to have had its origin in a risk connected with the employment and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence.

On these grounds the court allowed benefits for the death of a man killed by blows and kicks of a fellow workman who was "in an intoxicated frenzy of passion," his habits and disposition having been known to his employer, the award being based "upon the causal connection between the injury of the deceased and the conditions under which the defendant required him to work."

Difficulty remains in the determination of the question as to whether the hazard is due to the employment or to conditions affecting the public generally. Thus a delivery man walking along the street and falling over a bucket of broken glass, receiving fatal injuries, was denied compensation by the New York Supreme Court, appellate division (Newman v. Newman, 155 N. Y. Supp. 665, affirmed by the court of appeals, 113 N. E. 332), the court saying that he was exposed to no other hazard than that to which any one walking in the same locality would have been exposed, so that it was not an incident of the employment. The supreme court of the State, appellate division, however, allowed compensation in a case (Miller v. Taylor, 159 N. Y. Supp. 999) in which the driver of an express truck was struck by an automobile while crossing the street to deliver a package, distinguishing this from the Newman case above; and the same court affirmed the finding of the industrial commission in a case (Putnam v. Murray, 160 N. Y. Supp. 811) where a driver engaged in collecting dirt from the streets of a city stepped on a rusty nail, the injury resulting in tetanus and death, the contention that the injury was the result merely of conditions to which the public generally was exposed not being admitted as a defense. The employee was held to have been engaged in a hazardous employment under the act, and "the mere fact that a person not engaged in a hazardous employment was exposed to the danger of a similar injury should he chance to travel that way furnishes no argument for a denial of the right of compensation to a person whose hazardous employment compelled his constant presence on the street."

A foreman struck by an automobile while crossing a street from his work place to use a telephone was held by the Supreme Court of Illinois to have been injured in the course of his employment and to be entitled to benefits (Mueller Const. Co. v. Industrial Board, 118 N. E. 1028). So also a Minnesota court ruled that a driver was exceptionally exposed to street risks, so that one hurt by the fall of material from a building which he was passing was held to have been injured by an accident arising out of and in course of the employment (Mahowald v. Thompson-Starrett Co., 134 Minn. 113, 158 N. W. 913; Hansen v. Northwestern Fuel Co., 174 N. W. 726). An award was also made by the Massachusetts board in the case of a street sweeper injured by a runaway horse, over the contention of the city of New Bedford that such an occurrence was not a natural incident of the injured man's employment.

The California commission allowed the claim of a motorman who had reported for work five minutes before starting time, according to rule, but slipped and fell on the street while going from the barn to his car; it was contended that the nature of his employment was not such as to expose him to street risks more than the average man, but the commission stated that this rule should not be applied too broadly, but with reference to the particular circumstances of the case. Where an office employee, after finishing her day's work, took some of her employer's letters to deposit in the post office on the way home and was struck by a train, the New York commission rejected the claim for compensation on the ground that she was following the same route that she would have followed if she had been going home without undertaking to mail the letters; that she was exposed to no unusual hazard due to the employment; and that the injury did not arise out of and in course of the employment.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin made a ruling similar to that of the California commission in the case of the motorman above, in the instance of an employee who reported at 7.30 a. m. for orders as to work which was to begin at 8, and while proceeding along the street under orders to his work place, slipped and fell; the court held that the status of employer and employee existed, and that the accident grew out of and was incidental to his employment (City of Milwaukee v. Althoff, 145 N. W. 238).

Where the injury was due to lightning stroke the Michigan Supreme Court held that the exposure of a railroad section man who sought shelter in a barn which was struck by lightning was in no way different from the risk of other members of the community, and was not caused by or in connection with his employment (Klawinski v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry., 152 N. W. 213)—a position that was assumed also by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin (Hoenig v. Industrial Commission, 150 N. W. 996), deciding on a case in which a workman on a dam was killed by lightning. The Supreme Court of Minnesota, on the other hand, affirmed an award of the lower court in behalf of a claimant, where a man was injured by lightning while seeking shelter under a tree at the time of a storm, the court saying that there was evidence to sustain a finding that the injury arose out of the employment (State ex rel. People's Coal & Ice Co. v. District Court of Ramsey County, 153 N. W. 119).

The Pennsylvania statute provides compensation for accidents in the course of employment, omitting the limitation as to "arising out of." It was held, therefore, by the compensation board of the State that as death by lightning is unquestionably an accident, and the law does not require that it should arise out of the employment, an employee killed by lightning while engaged in the regular course of his employer's business was within the act.

To the same effect was the ruling of a Pennsylvania referee, who held that a delivery boy struck by an automobile on the street and killed was at the time engaged in furthering his employer's interests, and compensation was allowed accordingly. The supreme court of the State affirmed an award in a case where an engineer was found dead from a bullet wound inflicted by an unknown person, holding that it was for the employer to prove that the injury was due to personal reasons; further, the act is not limited to injuries "arising out of" the employment (Keyes v. New York, O. & W. R. Co., 108 Atl. 406).

Compensation was also allowed an employee who was shot by a fellow employee who had gone insane, the board holding that "it is sufficient that he suffer his experience while in the course of his employment (Quam case, 1917). Similarly the Ohio statute does not contain the words "arising out of," but this was held by the supreme court of the State (Fassig v. State, 95 Ohio Stat. 232, 116 N. E. 104) not to warrant the extension of the remedy provided by the act to cases other than those in which the injuries resulted from or were connected with the employment; so that it "would not cover any case which had its cause outside of and disconnected with the employment, although the employee may at the time have been actually engaged in doing the work of his employer in the usual way."

The United States employees' compensation law provides relief for injuries to an employee "sustained while in the performance of his duty," thus adopting a phraseology which differs from that found in the majority of compensation statutes. The absence of judicial construction of these words put upon the commission the duty of adopting a rule for its own guidance, the language being obviously somewhat broader than that generally used. The rule is thus stated:

A personal injury sustained by a civil employee of the United States while on the industrial premises of a navy yard, arsenal, or other place of employment, provided such employee is on such premises for the purpose of going to or returning from his work or performing duties connected with or incidental to his work, and is not on such premises merely for purposes of his own, shall be an injury sustained "while in the performance of his duty" within the meaning of that phrase as used in section 1 of the compensation act of September 7, 1916. This ruling is based upon the responsibility of the United States, as the employer, for the safe and sanitary condition of its premises.

The award in the Minnesota case last named necessarily involved the conclusion that the injured man had not left employment while thus seeking shelter, and this question was also involved in the case of a railroad lineman who took shelter from a storm under cars standing on an adjacent track. The cars moving without warning, he was injured, and the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, affirmed an allowance of compensation on the ground that to seek available shelter was not leaving the employment but was incident thereto (Moore v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 154 N. Y. Supp. 628). And where a workman, chilled by exposure, fell asleep and was burned while sitting by a fire, waiting for an opportunity to use an elevator, the injury was held to have arisen out of the employment (Richards v. Indianapolis Abattoir Co., 92 Conn. 274, 102 Atl. 604); also where an injury occurred to a workman unloading cars at intervals of about 15 minutes, injured by a car running upon him while seeking warmth from the unloaded contents of the previous one (Northwestern Iron Co. v. Industrial Com., 160 Wis. 633, 152 N. W. 416). But an employee taking a rest between the loading of two wagons, and choosing a place on a frequently used track to lie upon, and going to sleep there, was held not to be protected by the act, other places being available, and the unnecessary hazard being the result of his own choice (Weis Paper Mill Co. v. Industrial Com. (Ill.), 127 N. E. 732). Where one's employment is of such a nature as not to involve fixed working hours, difficulty may arise in determining between service for the employer and the pursuit of private ends. Thus a real estate and insurance agent, whose time was occupied largely according to his own judgment, was injured while on his way to keep an appointment with a prospective customer. The injury was held by the California industrial commission to be while in his employer's service, without regard to the time. The same body awarded compensation to a traveling salesman injured in an automobile accident while returning from a search for prospective customers, basing the decision on the same grounds. This principle was also applied by a compensation commissioner of Connecticut in the case of a general manager of his employer's business, who was killed while going on an errand for his employer's benefit after the expiration of the usual working time. The industrial accident board of Texas approved the claim of a traveling salesman who volunteered to assist workmen repairing a bridge which he was to cross on his way from one town to another, a delay of several hours being imminent; and the appellate court of Indiana held that the injury arose out of the employment where an insurance agent slipped on an icy sidewalk on his way from the station to a hotel in the town to which his employer had sent him (In re Harraden, 118 N. E. 142).

Taking a contrary position to that assumed in the foregoing rulings, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts laid down a rule of a strictness that would go far to limit the application of a compensation law in cases where an employee was not restricted in his movements to a set of conditions strictly affected by his employment. The superior court had affirmed the award of the State industrial accident board in a case where a life insurance agent was injured in an automobile accident, he having accepted the invitation of a prospective customer to ride with him and talk over the policy proposed. The court held that the field of the agent's employment was in a sense boundless—that his time and his method of procedure were his own.

He might travel on foot, or horseback, by trolley, train, or automobile. * * * He was wholly free as to time, place, or weather. Under such circumstances, when one accepts an invitation to ride, an injury received is not "occasioned by the nature of the employment." The danger incident to the use of an automobile is not a "causative danger" "peculiar to the work," but is a risk which is common to all persons using one. The injury can not be said reasonably to have been contemplated as the result of the exposure of the employment.

The claim of the injured man was therefore ordered dismissed (Hewitt v. Casualty Co. of America, 113 N. E. 572).

A still different aspect of the question of the nature of the employment calls for consideration where the preservation of discipline or order or the handling of funds giving rise to a temptation to robbery is a factor. The California commission awarded compensation in the case of a city marshal killed while in the performance of duty, even though a premeditated assault could not be classed as an accident. It was said, however, that the injury under such circumstances might be said to be accidental. Similarly a citizen called upon to aid a deputy sheriff in arresting an offender was held to be entitled to compensation as an employee of the municipality, an award to this effect being affirmed by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin (Village of West Salem v. Industrial Commission, 155 N. W. 929); so also of a night marshal or policeman killed while attempting to enforce the speed laws of the State (Village of Kiel v. Industrial Commission, 158 N. W. 68).

Compensation was denied by the commissioner of West Virginia in a case where a night watchman was attacked and went in the darkness to secure his gun, which was accidentally discharged, causing injury to himself, the commissioner saying that the injury was not one received in the course of and by reason of the employment. On the other hand, the industrial board of Illinois awarded compensation in behalf of a railroad watchman who was shot by a thief whom he had taken; and the supreme court of this State (Ohio Building Safety Vault Co. v. Industrial Board, 115 N. E. 149) took the view that the murder of a night watchman might properly be found to be connected with the nature of his employment as the proximate cause, the injury being one to which the employee would not have been equally exposed apart from his employment; so also where a night watchman was killed by a burglar (Supreme Court of California, Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 156 Pac. 491); and where a mill superintendent was murdered by an objectionable person whom he had ordered to leave the mill (Massachusetts Supreme Court, In re Reithel, 109 N. E. 951; see also Hayden v. Keown, 122 N. E. 264); where a foreman was shot by an employee whom he had discharged (Ohio industrial commission); where a foreman was assaulted and seriously injured while trying to compel a discharged workman to leave the place of his former employment (California Supreme Court, Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 151 Pac. 398); where an employee with authority to enforce discipline was attacked after threatening discharge for frolicking during work time (compensation commission of New York); and where a superintendent was killed by a watchman, following a quarrel in which both matters of employment and personal matters were involved (Am. Smelting & Refining Co. v. Cassil (Nebr.), 175 N. W. 1021).

A difficult case within this group was before the Supreme Court of Massachusetts (In re Harbroe, 111 N. E. 709), in which a night watchman was mistakenly shot by officers pursuing burglars who had robbed a safe elsewhere and were being pursued. There was nothing to indicate a fear of robbery of the premises which Harbroe was guarding, and he was not fired upon because of his employment. Shots were exchanged under mutual mistake, and the fatal injury was said not to be an incident reasonably connected with employment of that nature. The claim was therefore rejected on the ground that the injury did not arise out of the employment. Quite similar is a case decided by the Supreme Court of New Jersey (Schmoll v. Weisbrod & Hess Brewing Co., 97 Atl. 730), in which an award approved by a lower court was reversed. The claim arose on account of the death of the employee who was a delivery man and collector for the employing company and who was shot by an unknown person and for an unknown cause while in the service of the company. The man had money on his person, but no attempt at robbery was made, and it was held that there was nothing to indicate that the shooting was in any way connected with the employment.

In another case (Walther v. American Paper Co., 98 Atl. 264) the same court affirmed the award of the court below—a night watchman having been killed by a coemployee for purposes of robbery. It was said that the facts differentiated the case from the Schmoll case above, and the reasoning of the memorandum filed in the lower court was approved. One point emphasized therein was that the assailant gained the knowledge as to the watchman's movements and his possession of his pay from the fact of coemployment, which also gave him access to the building in which the attack was made. "The facts are so interwoven with the question of his employment that it must be determined that the accident arose both out of the and in course of his employment." This case was reversed by the court of errors and appeals (99 Atl. 263), practically without opinion, the court merely saying that it thought the death did not arise out of the employment, and was not distinguishable in this respect from Hulley v. Moosbrugger (p. 180).

Other cases in which robbery appeared as a motive were decided in favor of the claimants by the industrial commission of California, where a street-car conductor whose line terminated in an uninhabited locality was attacked for the purposes of robbery; by the industrial commission of Ohio, where the bookkeeper of a firm was assaulted and robbed while returning from a bank with the weekly pay roll; and by the West Virginia public service commission, where the paymaster of a coal company was ambushed while carrying money for the employees, being killed and robbed. The correctness of such rulings is supported by remarks of the Supreme Court of New Jersey in the Schmoll case above, in which such conditions are discussed and are said to fall within the principle of an approved English case cited.

The presumptions were held by the California commission to be against a claim for the death of a chauffeur, whose body was found after having taken two men out in his employer's machine to an agreed point a few miles outside. The employment was held not to be one giving rise to risk of assault, and in the absence of direct evidence favoring an award the claim was dismissed. Where an intentional assault was committed upon a workman who had been employed in the place of discharged employees, it was held that the positive danger peculiar to the work and not common to the neighborhood was a factor that was present, and also that the injury was incidental to the character of the business and not independent of the relation of master and servant. The injury need not have been foreseen or anticipated, but if it happens it must be seen to have had its origin in a risk incidental to the employment and to have flowed from that source as a rational consequence. The discharged workmen had been reemployed and had shown ill feeling, the injuries being the result of a fight between them and the injured man. The New York commission held that the incident might reasonably have been anticipated and that it arose out of and in the course of the employment. The award was affirmed by the supreme court, appellate division (Hartnett v. Thomas J. Steen Co., 153 N. Y. Supp. 1119).

Where the injury is the result of horseplay, it is quite commonly held that while the accident occurred in the course of the workman's employment it did not arise out of it. The Michigan compensation board was therefore constrained to deny compensation in a case involving the perennially recurring folly of the application of compressed-air hose causing internal injuries to a workman, the case as usual being one of a claim for fatal injury. In a similar though non-fatal case the supreme court of the State disallowed a claim as not arising out of the employment, though it was in evidence that the employees "all had a habit of fooling around at different times." The injured man in this case was attending to his duties, which were in no way connected with the use of the compressed air (Tarpper v. Weston-Mott Co., 166 N. W. 857). The Appellate Court of Indiana, however, took the view that where the injured man was taking no part in the use of the hose or in the so-called sport therewith, he was within the provisions of the act, so that his dependents might claim compensation (Bimel Spoke & Auto Co. v. Loper, 117 N. E. 527).

In support of its position the court said in an earlier opinion on the same case:

The employer, with knowledge of the facts, permitted such practice to continue. It was within his power to have prohibited it. By failing to do so it became an element of the conditions under which the employee was required to work.

In line with the above was a decision by the Supreme Court of Kansas to the effect that where the employer had notice of horseplay as a custom, injuries due thereto are compensable, as arising out of the employment (White v. Kansas City Stockyards Co., 117 Pac. 522). The industrial commission of California, while recognizing that the general rule would be that "skylarking" was out of employment and not compensable, allowed a claim in the case of a man who was known to be peculiarly susceptible of being tickled, and was made to fall by the action of one of his associates, he himself taking no part in any scuffling or diversion. It was said that a rigid application of the general rule would deny compensation to a considerable number of persons who are injured without stepping outside the course of their employment, and without any intent to injure or any seeming likelihood of injury resulting from the act of a fellow employee. In a similar case, however, the same commission denied benefits in the case of an employee of a brewing company who, in accordance with custom, undertook to drink beer from a bottle, and found that a fellow employee had, as a practical joke, put caustic soda used for cleaning the bottles into this bottle, causing injury; and when the first case noted above came before the Supreme Court of California the award was reversed, the court saying that while the accident was undoubtedly in the course of the employment, it did not arise out of it, as there was no causal connection between the accident and the conditions under which the employee was working (Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 158 Pac. 212). The same view was taken in a case (Fishing v. Pillsbury, 158 Pac. 215) where a workman sought compensation for the loss of an eye due to an injury afflicted by a fellow workman who pointed a trick camera at the injured man, from which a spring was ejected when a button was pressed.

The industrial board of Illinois discredited the contention of horseplay where the employer claimed that the injury was received during a scuffle among employees who were at the pay window for the purpose of receiving their pay checks. Employment was said to be continuous during this time, and the claim was allowed.

Two claims passed upon by the industrial accident board of Massachusetts were rejected, one being where workmen were scuffling for possession of a truck, the other that of a man who was tickled by a coworker, he himself taking no active part in the affair. The Supreme Court of Nebraska (Pierce v. Lumber & Coal Co., 156 N. W. 509) ruled that horseplay or anger leading to the injury of an employee by another is not within the act. So also the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey reversed the supreme court of the State in the case of an award made by it allowing a claim where an employee fell and was fatally injured by dodging a playful blow, saying that it was not the employer's duty to prevent playful assaults, and that it was immaterial whether the employee engaged therein or not, the risk not being reasonably incident to the employment (Hulley v. Moosbrugger, 88 N. J. L. 161, 95 Atl. 1007). This corresponds to the action of the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, which reversed an award in behalf of a girl who practically lost the sight of one eye by scissors thrust though a crack toward which she leaned to discover the occasion of a slight disturbance (De Fillipis v. Falkenburg, 155 N. Y. Supp. 761). However, the compensation commission of that State has made other awards in cases coming under this principle which, so far as is now known, have not been reversed. In one instance an employeeslapped a fellow workman who was asleep on a table and walked away while looking backward at him, running into an object, which necessitated the removal of an eye. In another case workmen quarreled as to the performance of a piece of work on which they were jointly engaged; while in the third instance a friendly controversy was in progress when injuries were incurred by one of the parties which might lead to total blindness. The court of appeals of the State took a position more nearly in accord with the rulings of the commission than of the supreme court as expressed above in a case in which an injury to the eye of a stableman, received in the course of a quarrel or argument as to the best method of doing a piece of work, was held compensable (In re Heitz, 112 N. E. 750).

The industrial board of Indiana allowed compensation where an employee was assaulted by his employer, and the department of labor of Minnesota ruled similarly where a bartender was injured by a drunken customer. This latter finding was approved by the supreme court of the State (State v. District Court of Koochiching Co., 158 N. W. 713).

The Ohio commission ruled in favor of a workman struck by a missile thrown in sport by a fellow workman while the former was going from his work place to a locker; also where a man was killed by an enraged fellow workman with whom he had previously had an altercation, though the deceased was engaged in his employment at the time of the attack and was not fighting; and in the case of a stenographer killed by a jealous suitor in the establishment. In this last case the injury was said not to be due to the hazards of the employment, but did occur in the course of it. Where, however, men suspended their work for a brief time and engaged in a friendly boxing bout, one being hurt, the injury was held not to have been received in the course of employment.

The industrial commission of Oklahoma rules that injuries of this sort are not covered, whether only one or both of the employees voluntarily engage in the diversion. The Supreme Court of Wisconsin also denied benefits in the case of a man injured by the sportive application to his body of a compressed-air hose by a fellow employee, the injuries being said not to be a rational consequence of the employment (Federal Rubber Mfg. Co. v. Havolic, 156 N. W. 143).

The Supreme Court of Michigan passed upon a case where a workman voluntarily left his post to participate in an altercation in which his employer was engaged, going to his defense, the court ruling that the man was not injured in the course of his employment (Clark v. Clark, 155 N. W. 507). On the other hand, the industrial commission of New York made an award in such a case (Sassabo case, 1917). The attempted rescue of a fellow workman, resulting in the death of the volunteer, was held to be an act in the line of duty and compensable (Supreme Court of Illinois, Dragovich v. Iroquois Iron Co., 109 N. E. 999). The New York Court of Appeals carried this principle a step further in a case (Waters v. William J. Taylor Co., 112 N. E. 727), in which an award was approved in behalf of a workman who attempted the rescue of a workman on the same building, but employed by another contractor. It was admitted that the man stepped "somewhat beyond the limits which would fix the scope of his employment under ordinary circumstances," but to bar a claim in his behalf would be "narrow and disappointing."

What departure from the strict performance of duty will amount to leaving employment was ruled upon by the California commission in a case in which compensation was allowed where an employee in a canning establishment moved a few steps to hear the remarks of a fellow workman and was injured, the course of employment being held not to be broken by this act; so where a deck hand was in an engine room to help start the engine, as ordered by his superior, though the rules forbade deck hands to be in the engine room. The New York Supreme Court, appellate division, affirmed an award by the commission of that State in behalf of the driver of a truck who was injured while putting his horse in the stable, the court holding that the care of the horse was a part of the operation of the truck, and was therefore covered by the act (Smith v. Price, 153 N. Y. Supp. 221). The public service commission of West Virginia rejected a number of claims on the ground that the injuries were not due to the employment, one instance being that of a miner who while on his way to work stopped at a pump to get some water in a bucket, the pump handle striking his watch pocket and exploding four dynamite caps which were in it, causing serious injury to his hands, it being held that the injury was not received in the course of and resulting from the employment. In another case an employee volunteered to assist a fellow employee in adjusting a kicker on a log deck, and suffered injury, compensation being denied on the ground that the injury was not received in the course of the workman's employment; so also where a lathe operator undertook to operate a machine of a different type. The fourth instance was that of a miner attempting to drill a dynamite cap for a tube for his carbide lamp. The industrial commission of Wisconsin was less stringent in its consideration of a case in which an employee in a packing house, engaged in general lines of service, undertook to kill a hog and cut his hand, the ruling being that as he had not been instructed that it was not his duty to kill the hog, there was a failure on the part of the employer to make the nature of the employment sufficiently specific to lead to the conclusion that this accident was not in the course of employment, and the claim was allowed. But the Supreme Court of Illinois reversed an award in favor of a punch pressman who left his own machine and undertook out of curiosity to operate a similar one, differently equipped, that stood near his own. The injury was said to be due to a voluntary act outside of the duties of his employment, for which the employer was not responsible (Adams & Westlake Co. v. Industrial Commission, 127 N. E. 168).

A case passed upon by the Supreme Court of Michigan presents a construction of a strictness surpassing the usual attitude of the courts on this point, and was dissented to by three of the eight judges before whom it was tried. The claimant was a molder in a foundry, who also as a part of his duties operated a crane used to aid him in his work, such operation being effected from the floor. It was the duty of a machinist to make any needed repairs, and there being need of repairs, notice was given by the claimant, and the machinist, a German, went upon the crane to do the required work. The claimant was a Croatian, and was not able easily to tell the machinist where the difficulty lay, so went upon the crane to point it out, and while descending lost a portion of his hand by the unexpected starting of the crane. The accident board awarded compensation, which the employer contested on the ground that the employee had left his place of employment, so that the injury did not arise out of and in course of the employment, and that he was guilty of intentional and willful misconduct. The majority opinion held that the injury did not arise in the course of the employment, and that being the case, it was immaterial whether or not there was misconduct (Bischoff v. American Car & Foundry Co., 157 N. W. 34). The dissenting judges were of the opinion that there was no other purpose in the man's act than to hasten the repair of the crane, the difficulty with which he knew and which he was not able to indicate clearly by word of mouth. "His effort was made in furtherance of the master's business, and it should not deprive him of the award."

This case has been referred to as being violently out of harmony with the entire spirit of compensation legislation. That the views of the minority are regarded as good law in some jurisdictions is evidenced by a decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin upholding an award to a widow whose husband lost his life in an effort to extinguish a fire which he discovered in his employer's premises after working hours (Belle City Malleable Iron Co. v. Industrial Commission, 174 N. W. 899). In this case the court said:

We do not think that either the letter or the spirit of the workmen's compensation act requires that such employee should be penalized for obeying such a natural and commendable instinct on his part.

See also the view of the New York Court of Appeals in the Waters case, supra, and of the Illinois court in the Dragovich case.

The interruption of employment for a matter of personal convenience has already been noticed in the case of a workman going to the toilet (Zabriskie case, p. 171). Similarly, the public service commission of West Virginia held that a laborer had not left service while on his way to procure a drink of water, this being said to be a necessity and not terminating employment. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts held that an employee going out for lunch by the only means of egress from the shop was within the act, even though the stairway was not a part of the rented establishment nor under the control of the employer (In re Sundine, 105 N. E. 433); and so of a compositor going on a roof on a hot night for fresh air, in accordance with a permitted practice, and falling presumably by reason of a misstep, whereby his death was caused (In re von Ette, 111 N. E. 696). The decision in the Sundine case corresponds with the ruling of a Connecticut commissioner under practically identical circumstances. It was held by the Supreme Court of New Hampshire that a workman did not leave the course of his employment when he went some 20 feet from his work place in a moment of leisure to converse with a friend (Barber v. Jones Shoe Co., 108 Atl. 690). The industrial commission of Michigan awarded compensation in a case where a section hand on a railroad was killed by a train while going home for his lunch at the noon hour; this was reversed by the supreme court of the State on the ground that the employee had not remained on the premises and had broken the status of employer and employee for the time being (Hills v. Blair, 148 N. W. 243).

The California commission held that service had not been suspended in the case of a cook who had left the kitchen to smoke for a time on the adjoining porch, and on attempting to return opened the wrong door and fell downstairs. It was held that what one may reasonably do of a personal nature and not in conflict with specific instructions does not take him out of his employment. The assistant attorney general of Iowa approved a claim for compensation in the case of a workman injured by undertaking to light his pipe while his hands were moist with gasoline with which he had been cleaning clothing; and the California commission allowed a claim where a workman lit a cigarette, setting fire to a bandage on an injured hand, the bandage being soaked with turpentine (Duarte case). The supreme court of the State sustained the award, saying that the habit of smoking was an incident to be reckoned with (Whiting-Mead Commercial Co. v. Ind. Com., 173 Pac. 1105). The Supreme Court of Illinois likewise affirmed an award in a case in which an employee entered the washroom in a factory and struck against a locker, igniting matches that were in his pocket. His clothing was oily and he was fatally burned. The carrying of matches was said to be a common practice, and the employee had a right to be where he was. The injury was therefore held to be within the act (Steel Sales Corp. v. Industrial Commission, 127 N. E. 698). The industrial commission of Iowa took a different stand from that adopted by the attorney general and denied the claim of a workman injured while attempting to light his pipe, on the ground that smoking was not part of his employment, and the employer was not liable for the injury (Rish case, 1917). And the public service commission of West Virginia, in a case in which an employee of a gas company was burned by lighting his pipe near a leaky line, ruled that no compensation was payable, since it was no part of the man's employment to smoke or to light his pipe.

The compensation commissioner of the same State (succeeding the public service commission mentioned above) similarly denied compensation to a plumber who drank a poisonous fluid by mistake, thinking that it was drinking water furnished by the employer for his workmen's use. This action was reversed by the court of appeals of the State, however, and compensation allowed (Archibald v. Ott, 87 S. E. 791). Where accidental poisoning on the premises involved the intervention of a third party the Court of Appeals of New York (O'Neil v. Carley Heater Co., 113 N. E. 406) held that payment of compensation was not warranted. In this case a workman complained of feeling poorly and was told by an employee of another contractor at work on the same premises where about the establishment a remedy might be found. The workman, however, took the wrong substance by mistake, with fatal results. The State commission had made an award, which the court reversed, distinguishing this case from that of Archibald, which had been cited as supporting the award in favor of the claimant.

In line with the position of the court of West Virginia is the ruling of the New York commission in another case of poisoning, or of corrosive effects rather, where an employee in a millinery establishment became nervous, hysterical, and finally fainted after a rebuke from her foreman for talking when she had in fact been speaking on a subject connected with the establishment. Ammonia and water were brought in separate receptacles, but in the confusion the former was dashed on the employee's face in lieu of the latter, with serious results to the eyes, lips, etc. Compensation was awarded as for injuries arising out of and in the course of employment.

The continuity of employment is not broken by reason of the fact that service is being rendered in violation of the Sunday rest law, the employer being also a violator of the law, and the fact of violation not contributing to the injury (Frint Motorcar Co. v. Industrial Commission (Wisconsin), 170 N. W. 285). And this was held to be true even though the injury would not have been received if the workman had remained at the place assigned him by his employer. The employee was a mechanic and volunteered to go to one of his employer's cars on the race track, presumably in need of assistance, and this act was said not to take him out of the scope of his employment. But the Supreme Court of Illinois denied compensation where an employee volunteered to take an implement from a fellow workman and do the work the latter was directed to do, and was killed by accident while attempting to perform the task (Mephram v. Industrial Commission, 124 N. E. 540).

The situation of an employee whose hours of labor are spent under conditions determined by the employer was passed upon by the industrial commission of Wisconsin, the case being that of a lumberman who was injured while in his bunk at the camp by a straw dropping from the bunk above him into his mouth and causing an infection. It appeared that no other sleeping quarters were available than those furnished by the employer, so that the injury was held to arise out of the employment, the employment being regarded as continuous from the time the workman entered the camp until the completion of his contract (Bebeau case, 1917).

This was sustained by the supreme court of the State, as against a contrary decision by a circuit court, the finding being that the employee was under the protection of the company, using the things furnished him for his use during the employment, and that under these circumstances he was performing services incidental to and growing out of the employment (Holt Lumber Co. v. Industrial Commission, 170 N. W. 366).

The Supreme Court of Iowa ruled against a claim on account of the death of a workman killed by lightning while sitting in a lodging tent furnished by his employer, the work of the day being ended (Griffith v. Cole Bros., 165 N. W. 577). It was said here that, though injury occurred in the course of the employment, it did not arise out of it.

Incidents arising before the beginning or after the termination of work form a border area in which individual cases must be considered largely on their own merits, and the fundamental principles can hardly be said to differ from those applicable under the old liability laws. Thus where an employer transports his employees to and from their place of work the responsibility of the employer was ruled upon diversely in two cases before the industrial accident commission of California, in one case the ruling being made that where the employer was in the habit of furnishing such transportation his liability ran during the period of its performance; in the other case it was found that the element of transportation was not a part of the contract of hiring but merely an accommodation granted without cost and terminable without notice, so that no responsibility attached for injuries occurring during its period. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts held that transportation in a wagon furnished by the employer was a collateral or subsidiary part of the contract in the instant case and therefore within the act (In re Donovan, 104 N. E. 431).

In line with the Massachusetts decision are others from Connecticut (Swanson v. Latham & Crane, 101 Atl. 492) and New York (Littler v. Geo. A. Fuller Co., 119 N. E. 554), where it is held that the employment relation continues during the period of transportation by a conveyance furnished or procured for the purpose by the employer.

A man employed by the city and furnishing his own team was held by the Supreme Court of Minnesota not to have been in the course of his employment by the city while feeding his horse in his barn in the evening, so that compensation could be had for his death from injury while so engaged (State ex rel. Jacobson v. District Court, 175 N. W. 110).

Where woodchoppers were allowed time to return to camp from the place of the day's work the commission of California ruled that an injury to an employee who fell from a log while on his way to camp was on the employer's premises and in the course of employment.

The Supreme Court of New Jersey held within the act of that State the action of a girl combing her hair to remove bits of wool at the close of the day's work, the hair being caught in the machinery and injury following (Terlecki v. Strauss, 89 Atl. 1023). A similar ruling was made by the Supreme Court of Michigan in the case of an employee running to punch a time clock at the close of work and colliding with a fellow workman on account of an obstruction that hid him from view (Rayner v. Sligh Furniture Co., 146 N. W. 665). The same court more recently affirmed a decision of an arbitration committee awarding compensation for the death of a railroad laborer whose time of employment was irregular, and who was killed while on his way home at night on the right of way after leaving reports at the station (Papinaw v. Grand Trunk Ry., 155 N. W. 545).

The industrial commission of Ohio allowed benefits in the case of a man killed on a roadway which was on the premises of his employer, and while on his way to work; also in a case in which a workman was hurt, by contact with objects lying on the floor, while going for his coat and hat after the whistle blew; and the Wisconsin commission allowed a claim in the case of a 14-year-old boy returning to work after lunch, who diverged from the most direct route, placing his hand under a machine hood and losing the forearm by the action of the knives therein. It was said that the natural curiosity of a boy of 14 years must be taken into consideration and that a common-sense construction of the law must be made, the responsibility for such accidents resting on employers who place such children in places of danger rather than upon the children themselves.

Admitting that the accident arose out of the course of the employment, but holding that the degree of injury complained of was not due thereto, the Supreme Court of Kansas reversed an award in a claimant's favor where it appeared that total disability would not have resulted from the injury but for the malpractice of the attending physician (Ruth v. Witherspoon-Englar Co., 157 Pac. 403). The case was remanded for a determination of the degree of disability due to the accident as such and a corresponding award.

The law of Washington makes no mention of arising out of employment, but provides for employees "injured in extrahazardous work," so that the law is of broader application than those considered above. The State commission refused the application of a widow for compensation for the death of her husband, who was shot by a discharged workman in a general mêlée, on the ground that the injury was not a direct result of the employment; but the supreme court reversed this ruling, saying that "under our statute the workman is the soldier of organized industry, accepting a kind of pension in exchange for absolute insurance on his master's premises" (Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Com., 158 Pac. 256).

WILLFUL MISCONDUCT.

The term "willful and serious misconduct" is used in the British compensation statute, and these words or words of similar intent have been incorporated in a number of the American laws. What constitutes such conduct as will bar claims is a question that frequently comes up for discussion. The industrial accident commission of California held that an injured employee, who attempted to clear away the sawdust from a saw after having signaled for the power to be shut off and waited the usual time for the saw to cease revolving, was not guilty of willful misconduct, even though negligent, in undertaking to do the work before movement had actually ceased. In another case an award was made where an employee was electrocuted by undertaking repair work without shutting off the current; it was in evidence that this had been the custom, since to do otherwise would bring a considerable amount of work to a standstill, and there was no evidence that the foreman himself had taken such precautions. It was said that in fatal cases evidence regarding willful misconduct must be clear and of the highest character.

Another case of fatal injury passed upon by this commission was that of an employee riding a motor cycle down hill at a claimed excessive speed in violation of an ordinance. The brakes of the motor cycle were defective, so that the speed was not entirely under control of the employee. It was said that a mere violation of an ordinance would not establish willful misconduct, and the defense must prove the element of willfulness by a preponderance of testimony. A somewhat similar award by the commission was reversed by the supreme court of the State where the injury resulted from the driving of an automobile at a rate of from 35 to 45 miles per hour, the court saying that such action was willful misconduct, especially where wholly unnecessary, even if not unusual in the locality and not in violation of rules and orders of the employer (Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 154 Pac. 834).

A district court of appeal of the same State denied the right to compensation where a messenger boy was killed by an elevator which he had been warned not to ride on or to operate, and which he undertook to operate, the court holding this act to be willful misconduct such as to bar recovery (Pacific Coast Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury, 162 Pac. 1040).

A compensation commissioner of Connecticut made an award in the case of a motorman killed in a head-on collision said to be due to his running his car beyond an agreed stopping point. The same view was taken as to the evidence in fatal cases as that indicated by the California commission, pointing out that a distinction should be drawn between a criminal action against a living man and a compensation claim made by dependents of a deceased employee. It was said that "serious and willful misconduct connotes deliberation and intention, mere carelessness or negligence not being sufficient." The Supreme Court of Michigan applied practically this view in the case of a man injured by failure to observe the movements of the crew of a train on a track which he was crossing, the court saying that, though there was gross negligence, it was not willful and intentional misconduct so as to defeat the recovery (Gignac v. Studebaker Corporation, 152 N. W. 1037); while in New Jersey the defense of willful negligence was not allowed where a workman digging at a pier was injured by falling objects, the court saying that intentional self-infliction and intoxication were the only bars to recovery mentioned in the act of that State (Taylor v. Seabrook, 94 Atl. 399).

Less liberal was the ruling of the public service commission of West Virginia where a "pickler" in a sheet-iron mill attempted to secure his tongs, which had slipped from his hand into the acid solution, and was burned thereby. Compensation was refused on the ground that he knew of the injurious nature of the acid, so that reaching his arm into it was equivalent to serious and willful misconduct. The element of disobedience to rules and orders was involved in several cases in hand, the Supreme Court of California denying compensation to a lineman who was killed by contact with a live wire, though he had rubber gloves with him and had been instructed to use them, an award of the commission in favor of his beneficiaries being annulled (Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 149 Pac. 35). The earlier administrative body of the State (the accident board) had formulated a rule that "convincing proof of the deliberate intentional violation of a rule formulated, brought to the attention of those whom it is designed to govern, and diligently enforced, will establish willful misconduct." The later commission, however, made an award in favor of a claimant who was injured while performing a service which it was stated he had been forbidden to render, the commission saying that where it appears that the disobedience of an oral instruction was not actuated by willful desire to disobey an order, but by a wish to further the employer's interests, it is not willful misconduct so as to defeat a claim.

This latter principle was applied by the industrial board of Illinois to the case of a workman who volunteered to operate a punch press whose operator he was to serve by the delivery of material to him, the operator being at that time absent. It was held here that the violation of orders, specific or general, does not amount to willful misconduct or take one out of the course of his employment if it is done in good faith and upon the theory that it is for the best interests or promotes the business of the employer. In another case it was said that to make a ruling that a workman violating instructions or committing acts of negligence or willfulness should not be entitled to compensation would add to the law by the exercise of judicial powers not conferred upon the board by law.

The Supreme Court of New Jersey affirmed an award for the death of a servant killed while attempting to start a fire by the use of wood alcohol, though she had been warned not to use kerosene, "or anything like that." The court held that she was in her line of duty, and that the measure of disobedience was not so great as to bar the claim (Kolasynski v. Klie, 102 Atl. 5). And the Supreme Court of Massachusetts allowed compensation in a case where a man was told that he must do certain work only when the adjacent machinery was at rest, but did not do so and came in contact with a revolving shaft and was killed. The court said in this case that serious and willful misconduct means more than negligence or gross negligence, and that disobedience to orders, to constitute such misconduct, must be deliberate and not merely thoughtless (In re Nickerson, 105 N. E. 604). In a case before the industrial accident board of the State, however, compensation was denied a workman who was injured by contact with a machine which he had no occasion to touch, and which he had been told repeatedly not to touch or work on, and had been threatened with discharge if he used it contrary to orders. The supreme court also denied compensation where a workman incurred injury while attempting to open a window which was nailed down, obviously to prevent its being opened. The plain implication was equivalent to an order, the violation of which would bar his claim (In re Borin, 116 N. E. 817).

Misconduct was charged in the Rayner case (p. 187), where a workman was injured while running to punch the time clock. This, however, the Supreme Court of Michigan disallowed. In two cases the Supreme Court of New Jersey denied compensation, where injuries were fatal, on the ground of disobedience, one being that of an employee using an automobile contrary to specific and immediate orders (Reimers v. Proctor Publishing Co., 89 Atl. 931); the other that of a workman on a building who was of infirm health and had been forbidden to go on any scaffold, and was killed by a fall following disobedience of the order (Smith v. Corson, 93 Atl. 112). In two cases also the industrial commission of Wisconsin denied benefits on account of injuries, one of them fatal, where men undertook the operation of appliances which they had been forbidden to use.

The failure of a workman at a quarry to take shelter from a blast when warned by the usual signal was held by the Supreme Court of Connecticut to be "careless and perhaps negligent," but not such "serious and willful misconduct" as to bar a claim for his death (Merlino v. Connecticut Quarries Co., 104 Atl. 396). Quite similar was the view of the Court of Appeals of Maryland where a shop employee was killed while seeking to pass between moving cars, though warned of his danger. "It was a thoughtless and heedless act, but not a willful breach of a positive rule of conduct or duty" (Baltimore Car Foundry Co. v. Ruzicka, 104 Atl. 167).

Of like tenor with the foregoing are decisions by the Appellate Court of Indiana (Haskell & Barker Car Co. v. Kay, 119 N. E. 811), and by the Supreme Court of Oklahoma (Wick v. Gunn, 169 Pac. 1087), in which the failure to use a guard for the machinery operated resulted in injury. In both cases it was found that the workmen used poor judgment, but not that there was willfulness so as to prevent the making of claims. A district court of appeal of California, on the other hand, found that the removal of a guard by an experienced laundry worker was willful misconduct within the meaning of the compensation act, as well as a violation of the commission's safety orders (Bay Shore Laundry Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 172 Pac. 1128).

That the injury was self-inflicted was made the ground for the denial of benefits in two West Virginia cases, both being cases where the workman opened pimples or blisters, infection following, the public service commission saying that the injury was not the result of employment, but was a self-inflicted injury in nowise connected therewith. The opposite view was taken by the accident commission of California, where a man undertook to remove a sliver from his finger with a pocketknife against the protest of the employer's wife. The commission said that the action was unwise, but did not constitute willful misconduct. In another case metal splinters were extracted from the hand of a toolmaker with forceps, infection and dermatitis following, a Connecticut compensation commissioner here ruling that the employee was guilty of willful misconduct, there being full instructions for reporting injuries in all cases.

Intoxication is mentioned in a number of laws as a bar to claims, or it may be classed in itself as serious misconduct. The California commission rejected this defense in an instance where the only evidence was that of the smell of liquor on the breath and perhaps an admission of the occasional use of beer, it being said that this did not meet the burden of proof required. In three cases reported from two compensation districts of Connecticut claims were disallowed on the ground of the intoxication of the injured man, in one instance the commissioner saying that the employee was guilty of willful misconduct in using intoxicants while in the course of employment; in the second a quarrelsome and abusive man under the influence of liquor was ordered to leave the works, and fell or was thrown down while being ejected; in the third case a teamster under the influence of liquor was permitted to remain at work on the strength of a promise that he would drink no more that day, which promise was broken, and the man fell off the wagon in the afternoon and suffered serious injuries.

The omission of any mention of intoxication or willful misconduct in the law of Illinois, already mentioned, left the industrial board of that State free to approve the claim of a beneficiary of a man who had fallen down a stairway while intoxicated. The law of Massachusetts bars injuries due to serious and willful misconduct, and the degree of intoxication found in two cases, reports of which are at hand, was held by the accident board of the State as sufficient to bar recovery, one instance being that of a man falling from his wagon, while in the second the injured man was struck by an electric truck in the street.

The converse to the barring of claims by reason of the willful misconduct of the employee is the principle of allowing special damages or double compensation where the employer is so careless of the welfare of his employees as to incur such liability under the law. A committee of arbitration under the Massachusetts law had made an award of double damages as for wanton and reckless disregard of an employee's safety in neglecting to furnish a kicking strap for a horse of known vicious disposition. The industrial accident board of the State reversed the penal part of the award, saying that the employee knew of the tendency and should have been cautious, and that the personal injury could not be held to have resulted from the serious and willful misconduct of the superintendent.

The supreme court of the State had a like contention before it in a case in which an award of double benefits had been granted against an employer who maintained an elevator badly out of repair, which was held by the commission to be the cause of the injury for which compensation was sought (Riley v. Standard Accident Ins. Co., 116 N. E. 259). The court ruled that there was evidence of negligence, but not of "serious and willful misconduct," which "involves conduct of a quasi criminal nature," intentionally injurious or with "wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequence," citing Burns's case (218 Mass. 8, 105 N. E. 601).

The Ohio statute allows suit for damages where injury results from the willful acts of the employer; and it was held by a Federal court that it was not necessary that there should be a deliberate intent to do bodily injury, but that liability would lie where there was, as appeared in the instant case, an "utter disregard of consequences" (McWeeney v. Standard Boiler & Plate Co., 210 Fed. 507). It may be noted that the legislature of the State subsequently amended the law by incorporating a definition of the term "willful act," restricting it to "an act done knowingly and purposely with the direct purpose of injuring another," thus controverting the position taken by the court in the McWeeney case. This definition comports with the interpretation placed upon the term "deliberate intention" found in the Oregon statute, the supreme court of that State saying that it does not imply carelessness or negligence, however gross, but a determination to injure (Jenkins v. Carman Mfg. Co., 155 Pac. 703).

An Ohio case that arose subsequent to the amendment referred to above involved the construction of the amendment and of the constitutional provision that permits suits for damages where an injury is due to the failure of the employer to comply with lawful safety requirements. The term "lawful requirement" was held to imply more than a mere common-law rule, and to mean either specific orders or a definite statute or ordinance. An injury due to the negligent piling of lumber on a car and to a defective condition of railway tracks was held therefore not to sustain a suit for damages, as against a claim for compensation (American Woodenware Mfg. Co. v. Schorling, 117 N. E. 366).

LIABILITY OF THIRD PARTIES.

It is commonly provided by the statutes that where the injury to an employee is due to the negligence of a third party, claim may lie against the employer, he being subrogated to the rights of the injured man, and entitled to sue; or the workman himself may sue, the employer being thereby left free from liability. In construing this provision of the Massachusetts statute the supreme court of the State held that the injured employee has the choice of remedies, and if he dies his personal representative has similar rights to elect which of the two remedies he will pursue; an insurer giving relief under his contract is not equitably subrogated to the rights of the injured man, but stands as an assignee of such rights, and may proceed in any amount that the latter could recover, not being limited by what he as insurer has paid or was liable to pay (Turnquist v. Hannon, 107 N. E. 443). The same court had before it a case in which a man injured by the negligence of a third party had recovered from him for the injuries received and subsequently died therefrom. It was held that the widow could look to the employer for benefits under the compensation law, as her rights were independent of her husband's, and were not affected by his receipt of any sum from the third party (In re Cripp, 104 N. E. 565). But the injured man himself, having accepted benefits under the act, can not then have recourse to a suit against the third party (Barry v. Bay State Street Ry. Co., 110 N. E. 1030).

The validity of the corresponding provision of the Minnesota statute was vigorously attacked in a case (Matheson v. Minneapolis Street Ry. Co., 126 Minn. 286, 148 N. W. 71) in which a city employee sued a street railway company for injuries inflicted by one of its cars while he was laying paving near the track. All parties were under the compensation law, which permitted such a suit, but limited recovery to the amount of compensation fixed for a like injury if the employer alone was responsible. This was held to be valid against the injured man's contention that his right to sue could not be thus limited. In a later case before the same court (Hansen v. Northwestern Fuel Co., 174 N. W. 726) a similar situation was involved, a laundry driver being injured by a truck of the fuel company. The third party defendant was under the compensation act, as well as the employer and injured employee. On hearing it developed that the injury arose out of and in course of the injured man's employment, so that he would have been entitled to an award against his employer. The third party moved the dismissal of the suit as a common-law action, and that the court award or deny compensation in accordance with the compensation act. This motion was granted, and the defendant having invited an award of compensation was said to be without power to question its liability up to that of the employer. The only duty devolving on the court, therefore, was to fix the compensation payable.

A New York claimant undertook to recover from both his employer and a third party, which the supreme court of the State, appellate division, held impossible (Miller v. New York Rys. Co., 157 N. Y. Supp. 200). The same court passed upon a case in which the injured man had signed a release to the third party and sued to recover compensation under the law, the court holding that the release would serve only to reduce his claim for compensation by the amount paid for such release, and was not an absolute bar to the claim; on the other hand, the release would be ineffectual as against the insurer's rights to recover from the third party unless the insurer had assented thereto in writing (Woodward v. E. W. Conklin & Son, 157 N. Y. Supp. 948).

A somewhat different aspect of the question was developed in a case in which a workman was injured while engaged in his duties, by reason of an assault by strikers. In passing sentence upon the assailants the court put them on parole on condition that they pay specified sums periodically to the injured man. The injured man also claimed benefits under the compensation law, and an award was made by the industrial commission, which held that the employer should make these payments without regard to the sums received by the workman under the sentence of the court. The employer and insurance carrier complained of this holding, and as the law provides that the employer shall be subrogated to the remedies of the employee against the third party, and makes the employer liable only for any difference between the recovery by suit and the statutory award under the compensation law, it was held by the court that the commission had erred in not applying the sums paid by the assailants to the statutory award, leaving the employer liable only for such balance as might remain due (Dietz v. Solomonwitz, 166 N. Y. Supp. 849).

Quite similar was the decision in a Connecticut case (Rosenbaum v. Hartford News Co., 103 Atl. 120), in which it was held that where the third party had paid a sum for a release before any suit was brought, the employer was entitled to have this sum deducted from the amount to be paid by him as compensation. Conversely, the Supreme Court of Michigan ruled that the amount recoverable by an employer suing the third party was limited by the amount paid by him as compensation to the injured workman (Albert A. Albrecht Co. v. Whitehead & Kales Iron Works, 166 N. W. 855). It was also held in this case that the judgment could not even cover future payments under the award.

The Nebraska statute permits the employer paying compensation to sue such third party without any limitation upon the amount recoverable in the action; but it was held by a United States circuit court of appeals that where the recovery by the employer was for a larger sum than the statutory obligation under the compensation law, he should turn over to the injured workman any excess remaining after deducting his own payment and the costs of the proceedings, such excess to go as an added benefit to the beneficiaries under the compensation law (Otis Elevator Co. v. Miller & Paine, 240 Fed. 376). A point incidentally decided in this case was to the effect that the concurrent negligence of the employer does not bar his right to proceed against a negligent third party.

The Ohio statute permits employers to act as self-insurers on a showing of financial ability, etc. No provision as to injuries by third parties appears in the law, and the industrial commission of the State ruled that an employee injured by the negligence of a third party might proceed both against such party for damages and against his employer for compensation under the act. The Supreme Court of New Jersey passed upon a case which was practically identical in its situation to the facts in the Cripp case above, and the court held that in the existing state of the law not only could a widow recover from the employer under her independent right, but further that the employer was not subrogated to the rights of the injured man as against the third party (Newark Paving Co. v. Klotz, 91 Atl. 91). It was said that double compensation would be possible under the circumstances, just as was allowed under the ruling of the Ohio commission last noted; but it was said that this situation, if it was to be remedied, must be remedied by the legislature. Action was subsequently taken to this end, and an amendment to the law subrogates the employer to the rights of the injured man against the third party, where compensation is claimed under the law.

In West Virginia, as in Ohio, the law omits all reference to injuries due to the negligence of third parties, and the supreme court of that State decided (Mercer v. Ott, 89 S. E. 952) that the personal representative of a man killed by the fault of a third party might recover against the latter, the right of the widow to compensation from the employer under the law being unimpaired thereby.

The Wisconsin statute contains a provision as to subrogation, and in a case in which the employer had settled with his employee and was therefore subrogated to the latter's rights against the third person for the injury, the employer subsequently assigned this right of action to the injured employee; the third person thereupon objected that the employer should be made a party plaintiff, which contention the court rejected, ruling that there had been a full and complete assignment (McGarvey v. Independent Oil & Grease Co., 146 N. W. 895).

The Michigan law permits recovery against either the employer or the third person, and if the employer pays he is entitled to take action against the third person for his own reimbursement. It was contended that this fixed the amount of the recovery against the third person at the amount awarded as compensation and was unconstitutional, as depriving the third party of his right to appear and defend in the action and have his rights determined by a court of competent jurisdiction. The supreme court of the State (Grand Rapids Lumber Co. v. Blair, 157 N. W. 29) held that this was not the proper construction of the law and that as properly construed it was not unconstitutional, merely making the payment of compensation prima facie evidence of the liability of the third party, which was within the power of the legislature.

The same court had before it a case in which a widow had sued the third party and recovered judgment to the amount of $10,000. The widow and her deceased husband's employer had agreed that if her recovery should be less than $3,000, the employer would make good the deficit up to that amount. The defendant offered this agreement as constituting an election to accept compensation in that sum and as a bar to the action. The court rejected this contention, holding the contract void, and declaring the suit the only effective election (Detloff v. Hammond, Standish & Co., 161 N. W. 949).

In a case before the Illinois board the claimant contended that the amount received by him from the third party had nothing to do with his claim against the employer for compensation. This was not allowed by the board, and as the amount so received exceeded the amount recoverable as compensation, no claim was considered, the application being dismissed. The law of this State provides that where the employer, the employee, and the third party are all under the act, the employer shall pay the compensation due, and shall be subrogated to the employee's rights against the negligent third person. This was claimed to be a limitation on the employee's right to recover adequate damages without any benefit to offset the loss. The court pointed out (Friebel v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 117 N. E. 467) that the employer is obligated to make the payment when nothing might be recoverable from the third person; nor is the employee dependent entirely upon the solvency of his employer, since he might proceed against the third party in his employer's name in case of the latter's insolvency and refusal to sue. In any case, the employee took the choice of compensation, with the conditions attached, when he made his election. The provisions of the law in this respect were therefore held valid.

The Kentucky statute differs from the foregoing in that it permits the injured man to sue the third party and also seek compensation from his employer; but the employer is subrogated to the employee's rights to the extent of any compensation paid by him. This is held in no way to limit the amount of the employee's recovery against the third party (Book v. Henderson, 197 S. W. 449). The employer should interplead and set up his cause of action, whereupon it would be the duty of the court to apportion between the employer and the employee the damages recovered; or if the employer did not seek to recover, the third party would be entitled to have credited on his judgment any sum received by the employee in the form of compensation.

The California act of 1913 did not in terms provide for redress against a third party, but did declare the liability of principals and contractors other than the immediate employer, such remedies to be administered by the commission. This provision was held to be unconstitutional, the court declaring that the legislature was not authorized to confer upon the commission any authority to settle liabilities against persons not employers, the constitutional amendment merely permitting legislation to "create and enforce a liability on the part of all employers to compensate their employees" for injury (Carstens v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 572, 158 Pac. 218). A new law was enacted in 1917, embodying provisions to the same effect as those condemned in the Carstens case. The section containing these provisions was held to be unconstitutional for the same reason as previously assigned, "in so far as it attempts to authorize the awarding of compensation against a third person not an employer" (Perry v. Industrial Accident Commission, 181 Pac. 788). This is not to be construed as affecting the succeeding section of the law, which authorizes suits for damages where a third person is liable, and does not attempt to confer on the commission the power to determine liabilities; and the subrogation of the employer who has paid compensation, and seeks to recover from the third party, is likewise constitutional (Western States Gas & Electric Co. v. Bayside Lumber Coal, 187 Pac. 735).

In the case of Bryant v. Fissell (86 Atl. 458), already noticed, the negligence of the independent contractor whose employee caused the death by dropping the piece of metal on the workman below, was offered as a reason why Bryant's employer should not be held as the responsible party. The Supreme Court of New Jersey said on this point that when there has been an acceptance of the elective compensation system provided by the act, it is expressly stated that compensation shall be made by the employer without regard to his negligence.

The fact, if it be a fact, that the representative of the decedent has also a right of action against a third party in no wise militates against the present action. The act under which this suit is brought, and which at best provides only for partial compensation, nowhere provides specifically or by implication that an employee shall be deprived of his right to compensation thereunder merely because the accident gives rise to a right of recovery against a third party.

Another phase of this general question was discussed in a case arising under the law of Washington (Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Meese, 36 Sup. Ct. 223). Action was first brought in the district court of the United States to recover from a railway company for an injury caused by the alleged negligence of its employees in moving cars in a brewery yard, causing a fatal injury to an employee of the brewery. This action was in damages as against a third person. The compensation law of the State provides that all claims against employers for injuries to workmen shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of this act, and civil suits for damages are abolished, with some exceptions. The statute provides that if an injury to a workman occurs away from the plant of his employer, and is due to the negligence or wrong of a third person, action may be brought against the third person or a claim made under the compensation law, at the option of the injured workman or his survivors. In the case at hand the injury did not occur away from but at the plant of his employer, and the court held that as the right of action for fatal injuries was entirely a statutory one, it was within the power of the legislature to make the provisions that it had, and that it was the evident intent to abolish private controversies and civil actions except as specifically provided for, the case in hand not coming within the exception. Since, therefore, the provision of the law was thus clear, the remedy by a claim for compensation was held to be exclusive, and the action against the railroad company was dismissed (206 Fed. 222).

On appeal, however, this decision was reversed by the circuit court of appeals (211 Fed. 254), but the Supreme Court of the United States, on further appeal, adopted the opinion of the trial court, reversing the court of appeals. This accords also with the view taken by the supreme court of the State (Peet v. Mills, 76 Wash. 437, 136 Pac. 685), which declares that the law is exclusive, reaching to "every injury sustained by any workman while engaged in any such [included] industry, regardless of the cause of the injury or the negligence to which it might be attributed."

Not going so far as the above, but representing something of the same attitude, was a case decided by the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division (Winter v. Peter Doelger Brewing Co., 162 N. Y. Supp. 469), in which a driver employed by a brewery was injured by reason of a defective elevator on the premises of a saloon where he was making a delivery. Instead of taking compensation of the employer, he sued the saloon owner as the negligent third party liable for the injury. As it happened, the saloon was owned by the employing brewery company, which resisted suit on the ground that the case was one of compensation for injuries to an employee. This contention was sustained by the court, it saying that the fact that the elevator and saloon were located at some distance from the employer's brewery did not make the employer a third party or in any way change the relation of the plaintiff to his employer, so that his rights were based on the compensation law and not on the law of negligence (reversing appellate term, 159 N. Y. Supp. 113).

Another phase of the question was before the same court in a case (In re Cahill, 159 N. Y. Supp. 1060) where a deceased employee left a widow and a mother entitled to claim benefits. It was held that the widow's action in electing to sue the third party for damages did not debar the mother's claim for compensation under the act.

TEMPORARY DISABILITY.

As compensation usually terminates on recovery from the effects of the injury, it is a fundamental necessity of administration to determine when this occurs, and when there are other causes that intervene to prolong disability, while the matter of malingering must also be taken into consideration.

The industrial commission of California ruled in two very similar cases that the prolongation of disability due to the failure of the injured man to take the necessary exercise required to restore a fractured limb to use was not ground for prolonging payments, saying in one instance that the law does not contemplate compensation for mere pain and inconvenience, but only for disability to labor, which would not exist in the instant case had the injured man possessed the necessary resolution to put the injured member into service. In another case before this commission it was said that the applicant must prove his actual disability as a physical fact as distinguished from an inability to secure employment on account of the scarcity of opportunities, saying, "compensation is payable for inability to do work, not for inability to find work to do." In contrast with this is the ruling of the Supreme Court of Kansas (Gorrell v. Battelle, 144 Pac. 244), in which a man, unable to secure employment after recovery from a total disability by reason of a continuing partial disability, was held entitled to full compensation until work was obtained, the court holding that compensation is to be paid for the loss of earning power as the result of the injury, whether manifested in inability to perform obtainable work or inability to secure work to do. This accords with the ruling of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts that the act of that State covers not only physical incapacity but also inability to obtain work, resulting directly from a physical injury (In re Sullivan, 105 N. E. 463; In re Septimo, 107 N. E. 63).

The California rulings noted above accord with a statement in an opinion by the superior court of New Haven County, Conn., in which it was said that the law was not concerned with the fact of whether an injured man had recovered and was actually earning the same amount as before the injury or whether he had found a position where he could so earn, but that the statute was satisfied with his adequate recovery to be able to do so.

In a case before a compensation commissioner of Connecticut the injured man's action in delaying recovery by the use of intoxicants was held adequate ground for denying a claim for compensation for 16 weeks, the award being for but 6 weeks. In another case a Connecticut commissioner denied disability benefits where a claimant refused to do work that was offered him and which he was able to do, because he had formed the idea that it would interfere with his getting pay for his injury. Apparently departing from the foregoing practice is the ruling in another case before a commissioner of the State in which the former employer had no work for the injured man on the declared termination of his disability, and the latter found other employment which he was compelled to withdraw from after two days, being unable to continue. It was ruled that the injured man was entitled to employment by his former employer, or that suitable work should be found for him. This corresponds also with a ruling by the industrial board of Indiana to the effect that the employer was liable for compensation until such recovery as would enable the injured man to resume his former occupation, though the employer might discharge his liability by furnishing work which the employee could do.

The industrial accident board of Massachusetts required an employer to continue payments in behalf of an employee who lost a foot, beyond the period of the schedule award for partial disability "until occupation suitable for a one-legged man is found."

Taking the same view as that of the California commission above was a ruling by the Massachusetts board terminating benefits on a fixed date, as the continuing incapacity could be attributed to the lack of confidence of the injured man in using his leg; while a finding of a committee of arbitration in this State was affirmed by the board where there was claim of a continuing pain and disability which led the man to stop working, although it was held that "he would be better off if he worked," so that, though he had not entirely recovered, compensation benefits should not be extended beyond an elapsed date, incapacity from the injury having ceased at that time.

Two cases involving alleged simulation required a determination of actual capacity to work where there were vigorous claims of pain and sensitiveness and inability to use the muscles, medical examination showing injuries neither to the physical nor to the nervous system, cases of a class that are so definitely recognized in German practice as to receive the designation "Renten-hysteria" or compensation hysteria.²² The industrial commission of Wisconsin, in commenting on a similar condition, said that "the employee's trouble is largely of the mind, increased perhaps by the prospect of compensation." Compensation for an adequate period of recovery was allowed, but not for the period for which claim was made. The necessity of returning to work, even at the cost of some inconvenience, was emphasized by the commission in another case in which it was said that there would necessarily be some tenderness of amputated fingers, no matter when the injured man returned to work, and compensation was terminated at the time of the healing of the wounds.

A situation the converse to that appearing in some of the foregoing cases was before the industrial board of Illinois in a case in which an employee whose fractured patella had been joined by a silver wire was taking exercise as directed by his physician and felt something give way, an examination showing that the wire had pulled through the bone. As against the contention of the employer that this was a second injury for which he was not liable, the board ruled that the condition of the employee was due to the original injury, and that he was doing what could reasonably be expected, as advised by the physician, and payments were continued. The same view was taken of a case before the California commission, where a broken collar bone parted after a supposed uniting, no accident intervening, and the original employer was held responsible.

PARTIAL DISABILITY.

Where there is a surviving effect of an injury, amounting to a permanent partial disability, the question of the amount of compensation for designated injuries is fixed in many of the laws by schedule, while in other cases proportional awards or estimated rates must be allowed; questions of possible benefits from operations, etc., are also involved. (See "Medical treatment," pp. 232 to 240.)

The original Connecticut statute contained no provision as to partial loss of vision, and in a case before a commissioner an award for the period of temporary total disability was all that was found possible under the act, though there was a 50 per cent impairment of the vision of one eye, which might not, however, and it was testified that it probably would not, interfere with the employee's earning capacity. In a case before another commissioner of the same State there was no evident loss of earning capacity at the time, but it was ordered that in view of the possibility of further decrease or total loss of vision on account of the injury, "this claim remains active in the files and is subject to revision." The Pennsylvania schedule provides only for "the loss of an eye," and it was held by the board that in the absence of proved loss of earning power, a proportionate award for partial loss of vision was not authorized.

The original Illinois statute, likewise, made provision only for the loss of sight of an eye, but the board of that State ruled that for the partial loss there should be a proportional award. The schedule of Michigan makes the same omission, and where the State board allowed a proportional award in the case of the loss of from one-third to one-half the vision of an eye, there being no immediate wage loss, the supreme court disallowed the award except for the period of total disability (Hirschhorn v. Fiege Desk Co., 150 N. W. 851). In another case (Cline v. Studebaker Corporation, 155 N. W. 519), the same court held that where there was a 90 per cent loss of vision which could be reduced to a 50 per cent loss by the use of glasses, it was the duty of the employee to use such a common appliance as glasses, and compensation would be allowed for partial disability on the basis of the wage loss sustained, if any, and not as for the loss of vision, which would be practically total without the aid of the glasses. The Supreme Court of Wisconsin had before it a case involving similar facts, there being a permanent impairment of the vision of one eye, but no present wage loss. The law of this State as it then stood provided for compensation "in all other cases in this class" in an amount proportionate to the awards presented in the schedule, the schedule itself providing for both enucleation and the total blindness of an eye. The industrial commission had made an award on account of the probable difficulty in securing future employment, which the court reversed, as not being judicially aware of the loss of earning power of a man with but one eye. Three judges dissented on the ground that "in the exercise of common knowledge and observation the capacity to obtain employment is impaired" (International Harvester Co. v. Industrial Commission, 147 N. W. 53).

The distinction between the loss of an eye and the loss of sight was considered by the Court of Appeals of Kentucky (Nelson v. Kentucky River Stone & Sand Co., 206 S. W. 473). The law schedules the loss of certain members at a fixed rate, but mentions only the "loss of sight of the eye." Where a workman lost an eye, requiring its removal, the court held that the loss was greater than that covered by the schedule, and should be determined on the basis of "other cases of permanent partial disability."

In a case that came before the New Jersey Supreme Court (Feldman v. Braunstein, 93 Atl. 679) an award had been made as for permanent partial disability, the injury consisting of a 90 per cent loss of the vision of one eye, the partial disability payments to run for not more than 300 weeks, there being an expression of opinion that the disability would be but temporary if an operation was had. The court reversed this award and made the schedule allowance of 100 weeks' benefits as for the loss of an eye, subject to review in case an operation should be had, saying that the award must be made on the basis of existing facts and not on contingencies or the probable effects of an operation. In another case this court considered the method of an award where both eyes were affected, there being an 80 per cent loss of vision. The original award was for 80 per cent of the 100 weeks for each eye, taken alone—i. e., for 160 weeks for the two. The supreme court substituted for this an award of 80 per cent of the compensation allowed for the loss of both eyes—i. e., 400 weeks, which allowed 320 weeks' compensation (Vishney v. Empire Steel & Iron Co., 95 Atl. 143).

The Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, had before it a question as to the nature of the injury where a workman lost the lens of an eye (Frings v. Pierce-Arrow Motorcar Co., 169 N. Y. Supp. 309). An artificial lens gave normal vision, but it could not be coordinated with the other eye, so that he could use but one eye at a time. The court held that, as he had two useful eyes, there was not the loss of an eye within the meaning of the statute, so that compensation was payable only for the period of temporary disability. This case was distinguished from one in which the use of glasses gave the injured eye about one-third normal vision, and that only when the other eye was closed (Smith v. F. & B. Construction Co., 172 N. Y. Supp. 581). In the Frings case either eye could be used as a normal eye; here the good eye must be closed to obtain a one-third vision of the injured eye. An award for permanent loss of use of the eye was affirmed.

The original law of Kansas contained no schedule, but provided for a percentage of the wages for a period not exceeding eight years in cases of partial disability, no reference being made to actual wage loss. The supreme court of the State held (Gailey v. Peet Bros. Mfg. Co., 98 Kans. 53, 157 Pac. 431) that the continuation of an injured man in employment at the same wages would not deprive him of a right to compensation unless the employment continued for the full period for which compensation might be paid; and, even so, the employee might wish to take other employment where the injury would, perhaps, interfere with his earning capacity, in which case recovery of compensation in accordance with the terms of the act would be the only means of discharging the liability of the employer. An award in the claimant's favor was therefore affirmed, at the minimum rate allowed by the law. The same action was taken in the case of a carpenter who lost an eye, but suffered no reduction in earning power, so far as shown; however, he testified that he was not able to "get the focus" so as to drive nails or do similar work with his former facility (Oliver v. Christopher, 159 Pac. 397). In another case partial disability for 80 weeks was estimated and an award made, and the court refused to disturb this, although within that period the injured man was earning more than his original wages (Dennis v. Cafferty, 99 Kans. 810, 163 Pac. 461; see also Hood v. Transit Co., 186 Pac. 977).

An opinion of the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, (Wagner v. American Bridge Co., 158 N. Y. Supp. 1043) corresponds more closely to that of the dissenting opinion in the International Harvester case above than to the decision of the majority. The injury resulted in practically total deafness of one ear. The New York statute presents a schedule of awards for specific permanent partial disabilities, but does not mention deafness as one of them. The injured man sought to recover damages in a suit at law, but the employer claimed the right to settle under the compensation law of the State, whose provisions were applicable to him. This position was sustained by the court, saying that, though there was no mention of this particular injury in the schedule, the enumeration did not profess to be inclusive, the injuries set out being merely examples to aid in administering the statute. The law provides that in other cases where there is a permanent partial disability compensation shall be awarded on the basis of the loss of earning capacity, and the court directed that the industrial commission of the State should take the case under advisement and make such award as the facts indicated, saying that "Total deafness, the gravamen of this complaint, obviously impairs plaintiff's industrial efficiency," thus taking judicial notice of the consequences of such an injury.

The enumeration by schedule of certain frequently occurring injuries and the fixing of stated benefits therefor does not render purely automatic the administration of the laws in this field. Where the awards prescribed are to be used as a standard for disabilities of a comparable nature, it is obvious that the administrative board must use its discretion in determining the amount due according to these standards. The Indiana law fixes specific amounts for the loss of separate fingers, and also for the loss of a hand, the latter being less than the aggregate that would result from the four fingers and the thumb computed separately. The appellate court of the State, however, pronounced absurd a view that would allow such an aggregate award, since it must be assumed that the loss of the hand at the wrist would be a greater loss than that of the fingers and the thumb, unless under extraordinary and unusual circumstances. An award was therefore directed to be made in such amount as the board might find proper, "not to exceed 200 weeks," following the language of the statute applying to cases not specifically provided for; though as the award for the loss of a hand is but 150 weeks, it is clear that the intention of the court could not be carried out if an award in excess of that term was made (In re Maranovitch, 117 N. E. 530).

The law of New Jersey fixes a schedule of benefits for designated injuries and provides that other injuries shall be proportionately compensated. Under these provisions the supreme court reversed a judgment allowing more for a stiffened ankle than the schedule allowance for an amputation between the knee and the ankle, leaving it for the trial judge to decide on reconsideration whether the award should equal such amount or be less (Rakiec v. D., L. & W. R. Co., 88 Atl. 953).

The Appellate Court of Indiana had before it a case in which an award had been made for temporary total disability due to injury to one part of the body, and also for permanent partial disability resulting from the same accident. It was held that the two awards were not to run concurrently, but should be consecutive and within the statutory limitations as to the total term and amount of benefit payments (In re Denton, 117 N. E. 520). A number of the laws are specific in their statement that where there is a schedule of awards for permanent partial disabilities the payment prescribed shall be in lieu of all other compensation for the injury; but where there was an amputation of one finger, compensable under the schedule as a permanent partial disability, and a crushing and laceration of another finger, causing temporary total disability, the industrial accident commission of Maryland awarded benefits for the two injuries independently.

In a somewhat similar case the New York Court of Appeals set aside an award for the temporary total disability period where the commission had awarded for both this and the schedule loss for a permanent partial disability (Marhoffer v. Marhoffer, 116 N. E. 379).

The Supreme Court of Connecticut took a different view, and held that where multiple injuries occurred, one causing temporary partial disability should be compensated independently of another, received at the same time, causing permanent partial disability and compensable at a fixed rate under the schedule (Olmstead v. Lamphier, 104 Atl. 488). This court drew a distinction between an injury requiring an immediate amputation of a finger (Kromer v. Sargent & Co., 104 Atl. 488) and one in which a period of disability preceded the amputation (Franko v. Schollhorn Co., 104 Atl. 485). In the former case the temporary total and permanent partial disability were a single incident, and no separate awards could be made, that for the permanent partial disability being the sole remedy. In the Franko case there were several weeks of disability while a cure was being attempted, and compensation was said to be due for this period, as well as for the schedule period fixed for the loss of the member.

In the New Jersey case of Nitram Co. v. Creagh (86 Atl. 435) an employee was injured by the crushing of certain fingers of his hand, causing a temporary total disability of approximately six months and also a partial but permanent disability, due to the injury to the fingers. The law provides for compensation for temporary total disability at a rate based on the injured employee's earnings, and in another clause for compensation in amounts determined on the basis of a percentage of the employee's wages payable for fixed periods of time for different specific injuries. In the case in hand the award for total disability for the term of its continuance was made, and in addition to this the award under the subsequent clause for permanent disability partial in character. To this the employer objected that compensation could be awarded only under a single clause, which contention the supreme court rejected, sustaining the principle of a combined award, one for total disability during its continuance and one for the partial disability that remains after any degree of maiming.

Much the same question was involved in the case of George W. Helme Co. v. Middlesex Common Pleas (87 Atl. 72), in which an injury involving several fingers was compensated for under provisions of the law which designate the amount to be paid for each separate injury. The injury consisted in the loss of parts of the second and fourth fingers and all of the third finger, and separate awards were made according to the schedule for each finger. It was claimed by the employer that as all three fingers were injured in the same accident the time should run concurrently, so that during the first 15 weeks there would be a total computed compensation of $13.20, reduced to $10 per week by the maximum limitation of the statute, while for the succeeding weeks during which any compensation was allowed there would be the concurrent operation of awards for the designated injuries. This contention was denied in the trial court and on appeal in the Supreme Court of New Jersey. It may be noted that the law of this State has been amended so as to make benefit payments consecutive and not concurrent, allowing first for the temporary total disability and subsequently for such payments as are awarded as compensation for permanent partial disability.

Instead of making the schedule awards a standard by which other injuries of a comparable nature should be compensated, the law of Nebraska enumerates but a brief list of maimings, and directs that other partial disabilities shall be compensated on the basis of the wage loss occasioned thereby. Under this law, the loss of a toe, which is specifically provided for in the laws of several States, was held not to entitle the injured workman to compensation for maiming unless it appeared that his earning power was thereby impaired (Epsten v. Hancock-Epsten Co., 163 N. W. 767). The employee in this case had taken special training and been reemployed at higher wages; but compensation was awarded on the ground that there was evidence of his being unable to perform the duties of his former employment.

The New York cases vary from this point of view, the court of appeals saying that the terms "loss" and "loss of use" used in the law should be given their unrestricted and ordinary meaning, and not limited to mean incapacity merely for the work of a particular employment (Grammici v. Zinn, 219 N. Y. 322, 114 N. E. 397; Modra v. Little, 223 N. Y. 452, 119 N. E. 853). So that the loss of 80 per cent of the vision of the eye, capable of improvement by the use of an artificial pupil, does not warrant compensation as for the loss of an eye; since, the use of an artificial pupil, though not fitting him for a vocation requiring reading or fine work, will qualify him for some employments (Boscarino v. Carfagno & Dragonette, 115 N. E. 710).

A ruling by the Illinois board related to the rating of disability where the four fingers of a hand were lost, claim being submitted as for the complete loss of the use of the hand. Award was made on this basis as against the contention that with the thumb and palm remaining intact the schedule award for individual fingers should control.

Another aspect of the question was before the Supreme Court of Minnesota, which affirmed an award in behalf of a man suffering from an ununited fracture of the leg near the hip. It was held that there was not only the loss of use of the leg (compensable under the law as for the loss of a leg), but there was a greater injury on account of the inconvenience and suffering, occasioning total disability, so that compensation should be the maximum for temporary total disability—300 weeks—and not 175 weeks as for the loss of a leg (State ex rel. Albert Lea Packing Co. v. District Court of Freeborn Co., 178 N. W. 594).

The industrial accident board of Michigan took the same view of the loss of all the fingers of the right hand as constituting loss of the use of the hand as that set forth by the Illinois board above; in this instance, however, there was some impairment of the use of the thumb. In another case before the Michigan board the schedule of maimings was interpreted as having the purpose to furnish indemnity to the person who suffers the loss of members; and the fact that he earned the same wages as before was not admitted to consideration, specific indemnities being "payable not on account of the effect on the earning capacity but because the injured man must go through life without the use of the member lost." A similar view was taken by the Supreme Court of California in a case (Frankfort General Insurance Co. v. Pillsbury, 159 Pac. 150) in which a carpenter was awarded 20½ per cent of disability for the loss of the greater part of a forefinger, though no loss of wages was suffered on account of the maiming. The law of the State has no schedule of awards, but uses a table based on employment, occupation, etc., the immediate effect of the injury on earning capacity not being the sole test.

In contrast with this is a decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin (Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Leipus, 152 N. W. 856), in which an award based on an impairment of function of the arm of the injured man was reversed, the court saying that the basis of compensation was not the impairment of function but the impairment of earning capacity. This diverges again from the opinion of the Supreme Court of New Jersey (Burbage v. Lee, 93 Atl. 859), where it was said that permanent injuries (limitation of wrist motion and shortening of leg in this case), even if not causing wage loss, are to be compensated, as it is not the mere loss of earning power that is considered but also the physical efficiency not so measured, which harmonizes more nearly with the expressions of the Michigan board and the Supreme Court of California.

Another case, involving the construction of the New York schedule, was that of a workman who lost a phalanx of a finger, with injuries stiffening other joints. The supreme court, appellate division, ruled that there should be an award on the schedule basis as for not more than the loss of a finger, and not a compensation on the basis of wage reduction, which might increase the award above that for such a loss (Fineman v. Albert Mfg. Co., 155 N. Y. Supp. 909). The industrial accident board of Vermont made a ruling involving this principle, in which it declared that the schedule of maimings as set forth by the law of that State was the exclusive award in cases to which it was applicable, nothing being allowable for subsequent reduced earning capacity.

The schedule of Connecticut contains a provision for injury to the hand involving partial disability, and an award on the basis of the present condition of the injured hand was made in a case in which it was admitted that an operation might improve the condition, the commissioner ruling that an award on a contingency could not be made.

Questions of fluctuating status were passed upon by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in two cases, in one of which (In re Durney, 111 N. E. 166) it was said that where partial disability is to be compensated for by a payment of one-half of the wage loss, as was required by the law of that State, no account should be taken of the depressed labor market, but the difference between the amount that the injured man would have been able to earn if there had been no depression in employment and his former earning capacity should be made the basis of payments. In the other case (In re Stickley, 107 N. E. 350) a man who returned to work for his former employer with a partial disability and was allowed compensation therefor, at the expiration of this contract found himself unable to obtain work on account of his crippled condition; he was held entitled to compensation as for total disability for an indefinite period, subject to the right of review.

The disposition of cases involving multiple injuries was considered by the supreme courts of Minnesota, New Jersey, and New York in cases at hand. The Supreme Court of Minnesota (State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court of Clay County, 151 N. W. 530) held that an award involving injuries to the hand and arm should be proportionate to the total effects and not to the sum of the items. This was the view taken by the Supreme Court of New Jersey (O'Connell v. Simms Magneto Co., 89 Atl. 922). In both these cases awards made below by addition were in excess of the award computed according to the rules of the courts. In a case before the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, however (Rockwell v. Lewis, 154 N. Y. Supp. 893), separate awards for the loss of several fingers amounted to less than the award for the loss of the hand; on review the injury was found practically to amount to such loss, and the award made on the latter basis was affirmed. In another case before this court there was the loss of a foot, together with injuries to the hands, and concurrent awards had been made. This was reversed by the court, the award for the loss of the foot being allowed to stand, though leaving the matter of other injuries open for subsequent consideration if they should continue beyond the period of the schedule allowance for the loss of the foot, the court saying that a payment of two-thirds of the wages (for 205 weeks in the case of a foot) is the maximum benefit, and concurrent awards leading to an excess of such an allowance would violate the principle of the law, which is not to furnish profit to the employee nor to punish the employer who, though liable under the statute, may not have been negligent (Fredenburg v. Empire United Railways Co., 154 N. Y. Supp. 351).

TOTAL DISABILITY.

A number of States declare total disability as a presumed fact in case of the loss of both eyes, both hands, both feet, a hand and foot, etc. From one point of view it would appear to be one of the simplest problems of workmen's compensation to determine when an employee is to be classed as totally disabled. In practice, however, the question is complicated by reason of the terminology of the laws and perhaps by the point of view of the administrative bodies as well. The point is illustrated by the decision of the Supreme Court of Kansas in Sauvain v. Battelle (164 Pac. 1086), in which it was held that a workman customarily engaged at hard manual labor prior to his injury and totally incapacitated for such labor by reason of an industrial accident was entitled to compensation even though he subsequently obtained employment at better wages than he had earned before (Cf. New York Cases, p. 207). The Wisconsin Supreme Court also was constrained to make an award as for total incapacity in the case of a man who was only partially disabled for employment in many occupations, but would never be able to follow the employment in which he was engaged at the time of his injury (Mellen Lumber Co. v. Industrial Commission, 142 N. W. 187). The adoption of a schedule of maimings eliminated the difficulty which was developed in this particular case; and it is evident that to make an award as for permanent total disability in cases where there is room for readjustment and rehabilitation does not accord with the spirit of the compensation law. Still, the rights of the injured man and the fact that he has suffered serious economic and physical loss can not be overlooked in any settlement of this question.

A result of the form of the Michigan law was considered in a case before the supreme court of the State (Foley v. Detroit United Ry., 157 N. W. 45) in which an injured man suffering permanent partial disability was earning more after the injury than before, though disabled from work in his former employment. The law provides for compensation for partial disability on the basis of the wage loss suffered, but further provides that this shall be computed so that it will "fairly represent the proportionate extent of the impairment of his earning capacity in the employment in which he was working at the time of the accident;" and while the court recognized that the law might work inequitably in its literal application, it was said that this was for the legislature and not for the court, as the law was not contradictory nor impossible as it stood, and an award as for partial disability was approved.

An award of compensation as for permanent total disability, due to injuries to both hands, was held reviewable by the Supreme Court of New Jersey (Safety Insulated Wire & Cable Co. v. Court of Common Pleas, 100 Atl. 846), where the injured man, after about a year and a half, began to do light work, and subsequently secured a position paying more than his wages at the time of injury. The Supreme Court of Wisconsin, on the other hand, refused to hold up a lump-sum award as for permanent total disability where a carpenter was partially paralyzed so as to be unable to do work requiring walking or stooping (McDonald v. Industrial Commission, 162 N. W. 345). The fact that he and his wife might be able to conduct some small business successfully was said not to contradict the finding, even though the law required "other suitable employment" than the vocation of the injured man to be considered. In reaching this conclusion a Kansas case (Moore v. Peet Bros. Mfg. Co., 162 Pac. 295) was referred to. In this case the injured man was awarded full benefits, and was found to have opened a small business in his home, from which he made profit. The court ruled that these profits were not earnings under the law, and refused to disturb the award.

The status of an employee who has previously lost an eye or a hand raises the question of the degree of the award where the second member is subsequently lost. The industrial accident commission of California considered the question at length and reached the conclusion that it would be an injustice to one-eyed workmen in the State seeking employment to hold that there would be a liability as for the loss of both eyes in case of the loss of the second eye, and an award was made as for the loss of one eye. The industrial board of Illinois made a similar ruling in a like case. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts, on the other hand, held that a man with but one eye "had that degree of capacity which enabled him to do the work for which he was hired," and since the loss of the second eye terminates that capacity, it causes total disability, and he should be so compensated (In re Branconnier, 223 Mass. 273, 111 N. E. 792). The Supreme Court of Louisiana took a similar view, saying that a "workman is as totally disabled from work by the loss of one eye as by the loss of two, if he has but one," and should be compensated as for total disability (Brooks v. Peerless Oil Co., 83 So. 663).

The Supreme Court of Illinois (Wabash R. Co. v. Industrial Com., 121 N. E. 569), awarded compensation as for total disability where a man with one arm lost a leg, citing the Massachusetts case as a precedent. The Supreme Court of Rhode Island also followed the Branconnier case in finding total disability to be the result of the loss of a second eye (In re J. & P. Coats (R. I.), Inc., 103 Atl. 833). As the law of this State gives additional benefits in the case of maim-ings, there was also an award for the specific loss of an eye, but not of two.

On the contrary, the Supreme Court of Michigan (Weaver v. Maxwell Motor Co., 152 N. W. 993) and that of Minnesota (State ex rel. Garwin v. District Court of Cass County, 151 N. W. 910) sustained the view enunciated by the California commission, the latter court saying that "If the injury would alone cause partial disability, but with a previous injury causes total disability, the employer is liable for a partial disability," which conforms to the provision of the law of that State. The compensation commissioner of West Virginia adopted the position set forth by the Massachusetts court and made an award for life payment in such a case as for permanent total disability. The department of justice of Iowa ruled in favor of a middle course, holding that a workman having but one eye and losing that was entitled to more compensation than one with two good eyes, but not as much as though he had lost both eyes in the single accident.

The Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, had before it the question of the loss of the hand of a man who had suffered by a previous maiming, and it also followed the doctrine of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, making an award as for total disability, arguing that such a man was presumably paid on the basis of a reduced earning capacity, and to allow merely as for the loss of but one hand of an unmaimed man would be to place him at a double disadvantage, so that he would practically get but half as much for the second hand, which was of double importance, as for the first (Schwab v. Emporium Forestry Co., 153 N. Y. Supp. 234). An amendment of 1915 limits awards to the consequences of the immediate injury, without regard to combined effects.

In 1916 a further amendment provided for payments in addition to the specific loss, such payments to be in compensation for the resultant total disability. The fund for this payment is to be sustained by payments in case of death where no beneficiary survives. A provision comparable to this was embodied in the first Kentucky statute, and was declared unconstitutional by the court of appeals of the State, which was of the opinion that the legislature did not have "the right to take what is due the estate of one man and give it to another" (Kentucky State Journal Co. v. Workmen's Compensation Board, 170 S. W. 1166). The New York Court of Appeals upheld the provision, however, saying that the creation and use of the fund do not differ in principle from those of the State fund, and are "within the letter and spirit of the constitution (Industrial Commission v. Newman, 118 N. E. 794). It was also held that the payment of $100 to an undertaker was not payment to a "person entitled to compensation" so as to relieve from the contribution to the special fund. The fact that the deceased workman received benefits for a time prior to his death is not a bar to the collection of this sum, since he himself is not "a person entitled to compensation" in a "case of injury causing death" (Stempfler v. Rheinfrank & Co., 179 N. Y. Supp. 659).

The creation of a fund derived from employers where the deceased employee leaves no dependents, the money to be used merely as an administrative fund, was held by the Supreme Court of New Jersey to be beyond the power of the legislature, as it was a taxing law resting on no proper basis of classification (Bryant v. Lindsay, 110 Atl. 823).

A case of temporary total disability, involving an award for the entire loss of a previously mutilated but usable member, was passed upon by the Pennsylvania board, the workman having lost in boyhood four fingers at the knuckles and the thumb at the first joint. However, he had acquired such skill as to be able to perform many of the duties of a laborer with this hand until a second injury removed the remainder of the thumb and the entire palm of the hand. It was said that no award could be made for the loss of use of the hand because he had had no hand to lose; but an award was made on the basis of 50 per cent of the wage loss due to the injury for the period of total disability, the award being subject to revision on the basis of the wage loss remaining after the healing and adjustment period had expired, subject to the statutory limitations (Wills case, 1918). This is in contrast with the decision in the Purchase case, decided by the Supreme Court of Michigan, where the loss of a defective eye was compensated for as for the loss of an eye (see p. 134).

A different cause for total disability from any heretofore noted was set up by the employer in a case before the Supreme Court of Kansas (Ruth v. Witherspoon-Englar Co., 157 Pac. 403), where it appeared that the state of total disability was due not to the original injury as a proximate cause, but to the malpractice of the physician who treated the case. The court held that recovery under the compensation law could be had only for the consequences of the accident as such and not for the consequences of an intervening event, such as the failure of the physician to give the injured man proper treatment. A decision of the lower court in favor of the claimant was therefore reversed and a new trial ordered for a determination of the extent of the disability actually due to the original injury. Action was pending at the time to recover from the employer for the injuries due to the malpractice of the physician, who had been furnished by the employer in accordance with the requirements of the act.

Appropriate for consideration in this connection or in connection with the cases in which preexisting conditions due to disease were discussed are a few cases in which the injury affected aged employees. In answering the contention that the injury disabling the employee would not have had that effect but for his senility the industrial board of Illinois ruled that if the injured man was able to do the work for which he had been employed, his disability was chargeable to the accident and not to his physical condition, and compensation was allowed. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts took the same view, saying that the fact that a man's powers are failing and he would soon be unable to work on account of age was no bar to compensation if the present incapacity was the result of injuries (Duprey v. Maryland Casualty Co., 106 N. E. 686). The court in this case also applied a principle already noted in ruling the incapacity total, though the man was able to do certain kinds of work which were not obtainable. A different view was taken by the Supreme Court of New Jersey in the case of a man 73 years old whose broken leg bones would not knit on account of his age and who had been awarded compensation as for total disability. This award the court reversed, allowing compensation only for the loss of a leg (Bateman Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 89 Atl. 979).

Noted here because the same principle is applied, though involving a death claim, is a case that was before the Supreme Court of Wisconsin (City of Milwaukee v. Ritzow, 149 N. W. 480). The law of Wisconsin provides for a scaling of permanent disability payments to aged persons, 5 per cent being deducted if over 55, 10 per cent if over 60, and 15 per cent if over 65 years of age. The deceased was 80 years of age, and the full death award was allowed in his case, the provision for scaling being held not to apply in case of death, since the law does not specifically provide therefor, though it was said that analogy would suggest it. It is of interest to note that the award in this case provided an income, based on the assumed earning capacity of the deceased, for a period of 320 weeks, i. e., in excess of six years, while according to the American experience table of mortality his life expectancy was but 4.4 years. In the New Jersey case above, also, the award for disability as originally made was for 400 weeks, which was in excess of the life expectancy of the workman in that case, though unless the award should be construed to be a vested right in the estate payments would of course terminate with the death of the injured man unless it was found due to the injury.

DEPENDENCE.

Other than as prescribed by the statutes themselves, questions of dependence for purposes of compensation administration involve identical principles with those elsewhere applicable. A somewhat peculiar situation arose in a case passed upon by the Pennsylvania compensation board where a woman had lived apart from her husband and was not dependent; but not having been legally separated she was held by the board to be the widow of a deceased workman in such a sense as to bar the claim of his dependent mother, the law allowing awards to dependent parents only "if there be neither widow, widower, nor children" (Zimmerman case, 1917).

The provision of law declaring that the status of dependents is fixed as of the time of the injury giving rise to the claim was held by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin to bar the claim of a widow who had become the wife of an injured man subsequent to his injury; moreover, the child who was legitimated by the marriage was denied benefits as not a potential dependent at the time of the injury, all compensation going to the dependent father of the deceased (Kuetbach v. Industrial Commission, 165 N. W. 302). On the other hand, the Supreme Court of New York (Crockett v. International Ry. Co., 162 N. Y. Supp. 357) held that, though the law of that State makes a similar provision, this does not affect the status of a widow, who is entitled to benefits as the "surviving wife" of the injured workman, without regard to actual dependency or the date of the marriage.

The determination of benefits payable to survivors of deceased employees was the subject of several cases arising under the New Jersey statute, which in its original form did not make a clear provision for the various classes of survivors. Thus in the case of a dependent mother where the deceased employee left no widow (Blanz v. Erie R. R., 85 Atl. 1030), it was held by a judge of the common pleas that the failure to make a specific provision for a case of this kind left applicable only that section of the law which allows benefits in the amount of $200 in cases in which there are no dependents surviving.

The mother appealed, and the supreme court took the view that the object of the law was clearly to award compensation to actual dependents, and while it made no specific stipulation for a mother alone, it contained no language expressly excluding her if there is no widow, provided, of course, that she is an actual dependent. It follows from the above that where dependence is actual and the law clearly contemplates compensation to actual dependents, specific statutory provision is not necessary. In another case before the same court (Miller v. Public Service R. R. Co., 85 Atl. 1030) the question arose under the law of New Jersey as to the amount payable in a case where the decedent left a childless widow and a father, brothers, and a sister. As already noted, the widow was entitled under the law to a benefit of 25 per cent of her deceased husband's wages, while if there was also a dependent parent the compensation would be 50 per cent. The court below made an award of 50 per cent of the deceased workman's wages on the ground that besides a childless widow there was a father surviving. This ruling was held by the Supreme Court of New Jersey to be erroneous, the mere fact of relationship not being controlling, but a showing of actual dependence.

Another case before the Supreme Court of New Jersey (Batista v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 88 Atl. 954) resulted in reversing a judgment which awarded compensation to a widow who had been abandoned some years before her husband's death, the latter having lived unlawfully with another woman whom he had supported and who had borne him children.

The question of dependence was also involved in a case arising under the Wisconsin statute (Northwestern Iron Co. v. Industrial Commission of Wisconsin, 142 N. W. 271). In this case the beneficiary was a nonresident alien, widow of the deceased workman. The deceased workman had made two remittances to his wife during the time of his employment, at intervals of three months, having made the statement that if he did not send money every three months his wife could not make a living. On the facts the industrial commission ruled that the husband and wife were living together within the meaning of the statute, and that she was therefore an actual dependent entitled to the benefits provided by the law for such persons. The employing company appealed from this ruling and it was set aside by the circuit court as being in excess of the powers of a commission and contrary to the facts. The supreme court considered the language of the law which provides for a conclusive presumption of the dependence of a wife upon a husband with whom she is living at the time of his death. Speaking on this point, the court said:

Proof of total dependency is dispensed with under the statute where the husband and wife are "living together" at the time of the death of the injured employee. It seems, therefore, quite obvious that the legislature intended by the use of the words to include all cases where there is no legal or actual severance of the marital relation, though there may be physical separation of the parties by time and distance. The "living together" contemplated by the statute, we think, was intended to cover cases where no break in the marriage relation existed and therefore physical dwelling together is not necessary in order to bring the parties within the words "living together."

The judgment of the circuit court was therefore reversed and the award of the industrial commission directed affirmed.

The Minnesota statute presumes the dependency of the wife unless shown to be voluntarily living apart from her husband at the time of the injury. Separation for 12 years following an order to leave and threats of shooting was held not to imply a voluntary living apart, and the supreme court of the State affirmed an award in the widow's favor (State ex rel. London, etc., Indemnity Co. v. Dist. Court, 166 N. W. 772).

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts construed the law of that State in a case in which a wife was living apart from her husband for alleged justifiable cause, ruling that under the circumstances the question of dependence would be subject to proof and not conclusively presumed. It was said that such cause may not be sufficient to warrant divorce, but it must be continuing, and if not in existence at the time of the fatality it will not suffice even though once valid (In re Newman, 111 N. E. 359). An award was refused in the case of a nonresident wife to whom the deceased had sent $161 in the course of eight years, there being insufficient evidence as to the wife's circumstances and means of support. It was said that there must be proof of actual dependence and a knowledge of the facts as to the separation of the parties before an award can be made (In re Fierro, 111 N. E. 957). That the intent of the parties will be considered was ruled by the accident board of this State in a case where a wife and children had been left in Syria, but with the definite purpose in mind of a future reunion of the family, an award for the wife's total dependency being made. That such intention must be definite would be concluded from the decision of the Supreme Court of Michigan in a case (Finn v. Detroit, etc., Ry., 155 N. W. 721) in which a wife had left her husband following some friction and resumed teaching, contemplating a reunion as possible some time in the future, the court holding that such indefinite prospect did not bring the case within the act.

In the foregoing case, of course, the wife was earning, but that this of itself would not be a bar to a claim was the ruling of the industrial commissioner of Iowa in applying the law of that State to the case of a claimant widow who was herself a wage earner. It is pointed out that there must be a legal marriage and not a willful desertion without fault of the husband, and that under the provisions of the act of the State it is immaterial that she herself earns and was helping to support herself at the time of the injury.

The Ohio commission awarded benefits in the case of a wife and child deserted and left without support for several months through no fault of her own; in the case of a bigamous wife, ignorant of the fact of the first marriage of the deceased (lawful wife deserted for 18 years ruled not a dependent and was not a claimant); and in the case of a common-law wife and child with whom the deceased had lived and whom he supported. The West Virginia commissioner struck a middle course in the case of a man who had deserted his legal wife and had lived with another woman for 14 years, denying compensation both to the deserted wife and to the common-law wife making claim, but allowing compensation for the benefit of the three young children of the latter. In another case the same law was considered to warrant compensation to the children of the deceased, the widow's claim being denied, where she had deserted her husband two months prior to his death, taking her children with her, and going to live with another man, who supported the family.

Where the commissioner denied compensation to a nonresident widow on the ground that dependency had not been proved, the supreme court of the State reversed him on the widow's testimony that while able to aid herself in part, she was in greater part dependent on her husband for support (Poccardi v. Ott, 96 S. E. 790, Schipani case). Total dependency is not essential to support a claim, the law providing for those dependent "in whole or in part." It was said in another case (Poccardi v. Commissioner, 91 S. E. 663, Cucca case) that it was not a question of being able by skimping to provide the bare necessities of life, but of reasonable support and maintenance, taking into consideration the class and position of the claimant, citing Dazy v. Apponaug Co., 36 R. I. 81, 89 Atl. 160. It was decided in the Cucca case that the mere sending of occasional contributions to the father and mother did not prove dependence upon the son.

The Massachusetts law declares a presumption in favor of the dependence of the widow of a deceased workman and of "a child or children under the age of 18 years * * * upon the parent with whom he is or they are living at the time of the death of such parent, there being no surviving dependent parent. Under this provision of the act it was held that a divided award to a widow and to a child under 18 years of age residing with her was not in accordance with the terms of the law, since the child would be a beneficiary only in case there was no surviving dependent parent, the widow in the present instance being entitled to the entire amount of the benefits (In re Employer's Liability Assurance Corporation, 102 N. E. 697).

Another case under the law of Massachusetts (Coakley v. Coakley, 102 N. E. 930) involved the correlative rights of a dependent daughter of a deceased workman and his widow and children by a second marriage. It was held by the supreme court of the State that the daughter was entirely orphaned and a dependent to share equally with the widow, even though the latter had also dependent children of the deceased dependent on her, the widow and the orphaned daughter representing a case in which "there is more than one person wholly dependent," between whom the law provides that the death benefit should be equally divided.

The Illinois law of 1913 allowed benefits to certain relatives to whose support the deceased had contributed within the four years preceding the injury. This was held to cover the case of an adult daughter who had been self-supporting, but whose father had aided her during illness and an operation, and she had subsequently lived with him for at least a part of the time (Mechanics' Furniture Co. v. Industrial Board, 117 N. E. 986). Awards were also sustained where the deceased father had regularly contributed to the assistance of two married daughters and their families, though they were not dependent upon their father (Peabody Coal Co. v. Industrial Board, 117 N. E. 983). The law was amended in 1917 so as to require actual dependence or a legal obligation to support.

The dependence of children is usually restricted by a provision of the law fixing an age limit, though physical or mental incapacity frequently waives this limitation. The Massachusetts board had before it a case in which the father and mother lived separately, and an 18-year old daughter was unable to work. The mother made a statement that she was not dependent, while the daughter had made a claim on the ground of her total dependence, she having been previously supported by the father, and having no other income. An award was made exclusively for the daughter's benefit on the ground that she was wholly dependent. In a case before the supreme court of this State (In re Herrick, 104 N. E. 432), an adult daughter capable of self-support but living with and caring for her father, both being supported by his earnings, was held a dependent.

An anomalous result follows from the wording of the Colorado law, which stops the payment of awards to children on their reaching the age of 18, unless mentally or physically incapacitated, but makes no such restriction in the case of other minor beneficiaries. An award to a minor sister of the deceased was held therefore not to terminate on her reaching 18, as she was not a "child" of his, though when the beneficiary is the offspring of decedent, the limit would be effective (Hasselman v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 185 Pac. 343). Such a contradiction is safeguarded in the Kansas statute, for instance, by making the 18-year limitation effective in all cases of "minor dependents."

The industrial accident board of Massachusetts denied compensation to an illegitimate child, not living with the deceased but actually supported by him (Olson case, 1920). It was noted illegitimate children had been allowed compensation under similar laws, but on the ground that they were members of the employee's family, and the employee in this case was not the head of any family.

An insane woman supported entirely by the State for several years was held not entitled to be considered as a beneficiary under the Michigan law (Roberts v. Whaley, 158 N. W. 209), but the attorney general of Minnesota held that a man confined in jail was nevertheless entitled to compensation, and the department of labor of the same State awarded compensation to a child in confinement in a reformatory institution.

The question of dependence of parents on their children involves no particular principle peculiar to compensation laws, but a few rulings have been noted. In a case before the Supreme Court of New Jersey (Reardon v. P. & R. R. Co., 88 Atl. 970), the employer contested an award under the law of the State for the death of an unmarried workman. The court held, however, that since the father had been dependent on his son's earnings an award in his behalf was valid. A compensation commissioner of Connecticut awarded benefits to a nonresident alien mother in a case in which the son had been in the habit, while in France, of giving his earnings to his parents, and while in this country had given the money to his father for the support of the family. The industrial accident board of Massachusetts made an award on the claim of the mother where it was shown that the son had contributed to the support of herself and a large family, making contributions in an amount which was found to be more than double the actual cost of the board received by him. Where the father and son worked together, both losing their lives in the same accident, and the son's earnings had gone largely to the family support, the mother was held to be a partial dependent of the son. It was also held that the young man's sister, though 19 years of age and competent to make her own living, was in fact supported by the family and was dependent so as to justify an award in her behalf on account of her brother's death. So, also, under the law of New Jersey an award was made on behalf of a sister who received substantial benefits from her adult brother's earnings, which he had turned over to the father, the question being one of dependence as a fact, and not of minority or incapacity to work (Connors v. Electric Co., 97 Atl. 792). Of course such a ruling depends on the terms of the act.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts made an award as for entire dependency—i. e., based on the full wages of a minor son, where all his earnings had been turned into the family fund, the father and other children also working (In re Murphy, 105 N. E. 635). In another case (Grove v. Royal Indemnity Co., 111 N. E. 702) this court affirmed an award of the State board where a young man had turned over part of his wages to his mother, receiving his board as a member of the family, the father also working. The mother was declared to be a dependent upon the son to the full amount of the wages turned over to her, without deducting therefrom the value of the board received by him, the benefits under the compensation law differing from the judgments allowed under Lord Campbell's act, in that it is not on the amount of injury done to the dependent, but on the amount of the decedent's wages that awards are to be based.

In a third case (In re Murphy, 113 N. E. 283), the deceased workman had lived with a dependent mother, who was an invalid, whose sole support he was. A sister was the housekeeper for the family, there being other members who were, however, self-supporting. Before the final determination of the mother's claim she died and an administrator intervened and secured an award in behalf of the next of kin of the deceased mother. The superior court affirmed this award, but it was reversed by the supreme court on the ground that the mother was the sole next of kin dependent on the deceased workman under the act, the family being not his but his mother's and the determination as to dependence being made necessarily at the time of the injury. In a quite similar case an unmarried son assumed the care of his aged parents and invited his sister to become the housekeeper of the family, not on a wage basis, but with a promise of support. It was held that the sister was a dependent on the brother, but since she had some property of her own the dependence was said to be partial only, and consideration was not to be given to any sum that she might inherit from her brother (Kennedy v. Boston, 111 N. E. 47).

Somewhat in contrast with the ruling in the Murphy case above is the decision of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island in a case (Dazy v. Apponaug Co. (36 R. I. 81; 89 Atl. 160), in which it appeared that there was no actual dependence on a minor son who had turned in his wages to his father, the facts being that without them the father was able to support his family and put by savings. The only allowance made therefore was for last sickness and funeral expenses. A lower court of Minnesota, on the other hand, declared the partial dependency of a mother on her son where she was earning $60 per month, and he had given her $97.50 monthly (Hayden v. Great Northern Power Co.).

The position taken by the commission of Ohio, in a case where a son contributed $7 or $8 per week to the family fund and lived as a member of the family, the father earning $12.50 per week, was the same as that taken by the Massachusetts commission above, holding that the mother was entitled to an award as a partial dependent.

Where the deceased made no contributions and was under no legal obligation to do so in the absence of court proceedings, the Supreme Court of Michigan held that the mother was not a dependent (Pinel v. Rapid Ry. System, 150 N. W. 897).

In the case of Boyd v. Pratt (130 Pac. 371) the construction of the Washington statute as to the duration of benefit payments where the deceased employee was a minor, on whose earnings his mother was dependent, was the question before the court. The deceased was 19 years of age, and on the occurrence of his death by accident an order was made providing for payments to his dependent mother until such time as he would have arrived at the age of 21 years. From this order of the industrial insurance department an appeal was taken to the court, where the order of the department was reversed and a new order entered allowing monthly payments as long as dependency should continue. The statute in question provides that dependents shall receive during dependency 50 per cent of the average monthly support received during the preceding 12 months, but not in excess of $20 per month. It also provides that in the case of the death of unmarried minors their parents shall receive $20 per month for each month after the death until the time at which the deceased would have arrived at the age of 21 years. The Supreme Court of Washington construed the latter clause as being based on the parents' right to the earnings of a minor and not involving the question of dependence. Where, however, there was actual dependence, as in the case in hand, the question of minority was not controlling, and the case would come under the general provision relating to dependence. The judgment of the lower court was therefore affirmed.

Going beyond the narrower bounds of relationship was a ruling of the industrial commission of Ohio to the effect that an invalid father and the stepmother and half brothers and sisters were wholly dependent on the earnings of a 19-year old son of the father by a prior marriage. So also in a case passed upon by the Wisconsin commission, where the employee had been reared by the claimants, but was not their child nor had she been legally adopted. She had, however, regularly turned over a part of her weekly wages for their support, and they were held to be proportionately dependent. An award was made accordingly.

The attorney general of Minnesota ruled on a case in which a child by the first marriage of the deceased had not lived with the family for the past five years though she had not been adopted by others and might be returned any time. The fact of separate residence was held not to bar her dependence under the act, since it was only necessary that she be unmarried and under 18, or incapable of self-support over that age. The child was but 10 years old and compensation was directed in her behalf. Quite similar to the Herrick case above was a decision by the Supreme Court of Minnesota (State v. District Court of Ramsey County, 158 N. W. 798), applying the law of Minnesota as amended by chapter 209, acts of 1915. In this case a widowed daughter was held to be partially dependent on her father where she lived with him and derived part of her support from him, the law providing for such an award without regard to age or inability to earn.

The law of Pennsylvania provides for payments to the widow or dependent widower alone, with additional sums where there is one child, where two children, etc., the phraseology suggesting payments to the head of the family only, if there be one. It was held by a court of common pleas (Irvin v. William M. Frost & Co.) that children are entitled to compensation in their own right no less when there is a parent surviving than where there is none. In the case in hand a posthumous child was held entitled to the award made in its behalf by the State board.

BASIS OF AWARDS.

In practically every law compensation awards are based on the amount of wages received. What shall be considered as the proper wages or earnings comes up for decision in several cases for which reports are available. In a California case passed upon by the State commission the amount of tips or gratuities additional to the salary was held not to be a part of the earnings on which compensation could be based, the ground being taken that if that were allowed there would be room for fraudulent claims. On the other hand, the industrial accident board of Texas took as the basis of an award for a porter in a hotel the amount of his income from tips, he being entirely dependent upon this source of revenue. This accords also with the decision of the industrial accident board of Massachusetts, where tips to a waiter formed a part of his income, allowance being made therefor as included in his regular earnings.

The Pennsylvania compensation board ruled that bonuses regularly paid as an inducement to steady work are to be considered as a part of the wages and used as a basis on which percentage awards are to be computed.

Another case before the California commission was that of a 7-day employee, as to whom it was ruled that the general computation of a 6-day week would not apply, and the commission fixed upon 332 days as the average for a year's work as against 300 days allowed for the 6-day worker.

The converse of the foregoing was passed upon by the New York Court of Appeals, where a bricklayer had been given an award based on 300 working days per year. This was reversed on a showing that the average employment in the trade was 30 weeks annually, and an award directed, based on the "actual annual earning capacity" (Littler v. Geo. A. Fuller Co., 119 N. E. 554).

Where the occupation in which the man is engaged at the time of his injury differs from his usual occupation it was held by the commissions of California and Connecticut that the award must be based on the amount of the earnings in the occupation in which the man was engaged at the time of the injury. In the California case a lineman earning $4.50 per day was injured while in camp with the National Guard, where he received 70 cents per day and board. Compensation was awarded, not on the basis of his earnings as a lineman, but the minimum rate fixed by law was allowed, his employment being considered at the time as in the National Guard. Somewhat similar was the question decided by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, involving the case of a citizen killed while obeying a summons to aid an official in making an arrest. Compensation was awarded not on the basis of his occupational earnings but on the customary pay for police services in the locality (Village of West Salem v. The Industrial Commission, 155 N. W. 929).

On the other hand, it was held by the industrial board of Massachusetts that where a man's average wages were greater than those ordinarily paid for work of the kind on which he was temporarily employed at the time of his injury, the award should be based on such average, the evidence being to the effect that the injured man was competent to earn the higher rate of pay in work for the same employer.

Where an employee is rendering part-time services for one employer, with the privilege of serving other employers, the basis of a compensation award will be the average weekly earnings which he receives from all sources, and not merely the amount received from the employer in whose service he is at the time of the injury (Maryland Industrial Accident Commission).

The same principle was involved in a California case (Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 156 Pac. 491), where a night watchman employed by several parties independently was killed by a burglar on the premises of one, and his beneficiaries were held to be entitled to an award based on his entire earnings but payable by the person on whose premises he was at the time of the fatal injury. This differs in no respect from the question which was considered by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in a case (Gillen v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, 102 N. E. 346), in which the claimant was a longshoreman employed by a company which was insured with the insurance corporation named. His employment being irregular, the question arose as to the amount of compensation payable under the Massachusetts law, the basis provided by the statute being the average weekly wages, for the determination of which various methods are indicated. Owing to the circumstances of the company's business, Gillen while working for it received not more than $8 weekly, while with employments at other jobs his average earnings were $13 per week, which was the average weekly wage earned by other longshoremen in the same class of employment and in the same district. Benefits payable being 50 per cent of the average wages, the insurance company contended that they were liable only to the amount of $4 per week, while the plaintiff Gillen claimed $6.50 per week as being one-half his average weekly earnings as longshoreman from all sources. The latter view was the one adopted by the lower court and sustained by the supreme judicial court, this court holding that the law does not restrict consideration of what constitutes weekly wages to a single employer, but takes into consideration the custom of the employment and has regard for all the wages which the employee received. It was held that this was a case where the condition of the workman is one of continuous labor in regular employment with different employers. "The loss of his capacity to earn, as demonstrated by his conduct in such regular employment, is the basis upon which his compensation should be based."

While this decision apparently works for liberality toward the injured man, the opposite situation certainly works for hardship; and this is the practical result of the findings in a case where a printer was regularly employed for a 5½-day week at $28 per week. He worked Saturday nights for another employer at $9.20 per night and while so employed was fatally injured. Instead of finding that the basis for awards was the total weekly wage, or even the regular weekly wage, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts ruled that the basis must be the wages earned in the employment where the injury happens (King's case, 125 N. E. 153). This was distinguished from Gillen's case, above, on the ground of the difference in the nature of the employment, which brought the cases under different provisions of the law. This rule was also applied to a shipyard worker, killed while in an outside employment. He had been engaged by the owner of a building to wax the floor, for which he was to receive a dollar every two weeks. His widow was awarded the minimum benefit of $4 per week, the court ruling that his average wage was 50 cents per week, his main employment not coming into consideration (Marvin's case, 125 N. E. 154).

Where a workman suffers an injury while receiving compensation for partial disability incurred in a previous employment, and is injured a second time, resulting in total disability, the Supreme Court of Michigan ruled that the combined awards could not exceed the statutory maximum of $10 per week, this rule applying whether there was one employer or several (O'Brien v. A. A. Albrecht Co., 172 N. W. 601).

The inclusion of overtime earnings was passed upon by the commissioner of labor of Minnesota and the industrial commission of Ohio, both holding that such earnings should be considered as a part of the total income on which awards should be based; so also, of the inclusion of the value of board and room, as decided by the commissioner of labor of Minnesota.

There is a wide divergence of opinions expressed on the subject of the anticipation of an increase in earnings of minors, the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, stating that the law of that State provided for such anticipation, and where a boy of 16 was then earning $5.50 per week, it was estimated that in two years he would be earning $12 per week, and in five years from $12 to $18, and an award made on this basis was affirmed (Kilberg v. Vitch, 156 N. Y. Supp. 971); on the other hand, the industrial accident board of Vermont ruled that where a learner was injured the award should be based on his earning capacity at the time, without taking into consideration what he would earn with the increased pay that continuance in his trade would bring.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court ruled that where a man's wage loss for partial disability has been increased on account of business depression, the award should be based on the earnings that would have been possible for the injured man if business had continued as at the time of the injury, and not on the wages he was actually able to earn (In re Durney, 111 N. E. 166), the proper test being the physical condition of the injured man and not the prevalent industrial conditions.

The computation of earnings for seasonal employments is regulated by the law of Pennsylvania by a provision that in such employments the total earnings of the previous year, omitting overtime pay, shall be divided by 50 to determine a week's average earnings; while for regular employments the determination is arrived at by multiplying the average daily earnings by $5\frac{1}{2}$. A mining company gave notice of its intention to pay compensation on the basis of a seasonal occupation, which would effect quite a reduction in the amounts payable; the compensation board of the State ruled against the proposition, however, and declared the employment continuous within the meaning of the act.

The Supreme Court of Iowa in passing on the question of the wage basis in a case involving the earnings of miners, from whose gross earnings deductions are made to pay the cost of powder and of blacksmithing, held that these charges were not to be considered in deciding the amount of weekly earnings as a basis for determining the amount of compensation, but that the award should be made on the amount earned without such deductions (Richards v. Central Iowa Fuel Co., 159 N. W. 696).

SETTLEMENTS.

Various points are involved in the question of settlements and vested rights, and also in the powers of the parties under the act to conclude agreements. Under the last head may be noted the ruling of the industrial commission of Ohio in a case in which a widow made formal claim for compensation, and subsequently undertook to withdraw the claim, alleging that the insurance company had paid her the sum of $2,000 in full settlement. The commission insisted on evidence in the case, and a ruling was made that proceedings brought under the act can not be settled without the consent and approval of the commission. The award finally made was for a sum practically double the amount of the original settlement by the company.

The workmen's compensation board of Pennsylvania passed upon a case in which the employer had continued to pay full wages by voluntary action on his part during the term of the disability of an injured employee, the injured man subsequently claiming compensation. The board ruled that in the absence of proof that the wages had been paid in settlement of the employer's obligation to pay compensation, they would be treated as a gratuity, and an award was allowed the claimant within the terms of the act (Keyser case, 1917). The Indiana statute specifically provides that payments made to an injured employee, not due or payable under the act, may be taken into account in making an award; so that an award deducting the amount advanced by the employer was approved (Underhill v. Central Hospital for the Insane, 117 N. E. 870).

The Ohio commission considered the status of a claim in which an award was made, but at the time of the award the claimant had disappeared without giving information as to his whereabouts. He had undertaken, however, to assign the anticipated award as payment for a board bill; and though the assignment was made in writing for this specific purpose, it was held that it was invalid, since compensation must be paid to the employee only.

Another case involving restricted application of compensation settlements was passed upon by the California commission, in which the employer sought to secure an order deducting a certain indebtedness from the employee to himself from the award of the commission; this the commission denied as being outside its powers.

The effect of a settlement under the Massachusetts statute where the injured person was a minor was considered by the supreme court of that State, the decision being reached that such settlement did not bar the right of a parent to sue under the common law for the loss of the minor's services (King v. Viscoloid Co., 106 N. E. 988).

Whether or not compensation rights are vested so as to survive death or a change of status of the beneficiary is a question that has received conflicting answers from the authorities passing upon it. Thus the Massachusetts board ruled that where an award for a specified time was payable to a widow and her death occurred within the period fixed, the estate had a vested interest, so that the remaining payments should be made to the administrator; and the remarriage of a widow was held by the supreme court of the State not to terminate payments under an award, dependence having been determined as a status at the time of the injury, even though actually relieved by the remarriage (Bott's case, 119 N. E. 755). The Supreme Court of Rhode Island ruled similarly (Newton v. Rhode Island Co., 105 Atl. 363).

However, where a mother was the sole dependent at the time of her son's death an award in her behalf, made by a committee of arbitration, could not be transferred by the board to her heirs in event of her death during the proceedings (In re Murphy, 113

N. E. 283). It was said that the law of Massachusetts differed from that of Ohio, under which an award to a sole dependent, once made, was held to be a vested right and payable without regard to the subsequent death or other change of status of the beneficiary (see State ex rel. Munding v. Industrial Commission, 111 N. E. 299).

A ruling of the Ohio commission also confirmed the right of a widow, whose husband had died before an award was made for an industrial injury, and from another cause than the injury, to receive such disability payments as the injured man might have received if an award had been agreed upon before his death; and it would seem that equity would warrant a readjustment of benefits in cases where a recipient died or from any cause ceased to be eligible for further payments. Lump-sum payments once made have obviously passed beyond the control of the payer, and to cut off continuing payments, as was done in the Murphy case above, places a premium on the lump-sum method of settlement, from the point of view of the recipient. But this is not without its exceptions, as appears from a ruling by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts that such a settlement with full release is binding, even though unanticipated blindness subsequently developed from the injury (In re McCarthy, 115 N. E. 764).

The New Jersey law as originally enacted authorized payments to an injured workman during disability but not beyond 400 weeks. An amendment of 1913 provided that in case of the death of a person from any cause other than accident during the payments for permanent injury surviving dependents should receive any unpaid balance of the award within the term indicated. It was held (Erie R. Co. v. Callaway, 102 Atl. 6) that an award under the unamended law ceased with the death of the injured man, if from some other cause than the injury, even though the death occurred after the enactment of the amendment continuing unaccrued payments to dependents.

A unique decision comes from a trial court in Pennsylvania, holding that the employer is entitled to some protection where the widow has secured a commutation to a lump sum and remarries after receipt of the same. It is admitted that the law does not cover the point, but relief is said to be a matter of right.

The Texas statute names the potential beneficiaries and provides that they shall be entitled to compensation according to the laws of the State governing descent and distribution. This is construed by the industrial accident board of the State to warrant a readjustment of benefits on the lapse of payments to any member of the group, whether by death or otherwise; the survivors taking, however, not as heirs of a deceased beneficiary but by their original right, which was either reduced by a cobeneficiary in being at the time of the earlier award or was entirely in abeyance on account of a superior claimant. The effect of this construction is to continue the payment of the full amount of 60 per cent of the wages as benefits so long as any person of the designated class or classes, entitled thereto if standing alone, is in being, up to the end of the term contemplated by the act. However, the Court of Civil Appeals of Texas ruled against the claim of a widow when she attempted to recover the unpaid portion of an award to her husband on account of injuries, his death occurring from other causes, while he was in receipt of benefits (United States Fidelity & Guaranty v. Salsar, 224 S. W., 557).

Under the law of Washington an injured man dying without heirs after an award has been made but not paid leaves nothing to his administrator (Ray v. Industrial Insurance Commission, 168 Pac. 1121).

In a number of States provision is made for the cessation of payments, either at once or with a commutation for a fixed period, in case of the remarriage of a widow receiving benefits, while in others the matter is left open. Under the Ohio law the industrial commission ruled that benefits are a vested right after an award, and a widow remarrying is entitled to their payment according to the original award, citing the Munding case above. The New Jersey Court of Common Pleas, on the other hand, held that as the law is for the benefit of dependents, payments would cease on the remarriage of a widow, as it would be presumed that she was no longer a dependent, and it was not fair to burden industry for the benefit of such persons. When the question came to the supreme court of the State it ruled that payments should continue as a vested right, having been awarded for the period of 300 weeks without limitation (Hansen v. Brann & Stewart Co., N. J. L. 444, 103 Atl. 696). The fact that the law had in the meantime been amended so as to establish a different rule was held not to affect prior awards. A like position was taken on the question by the Supreme Court of Illinois (Wangler B. & S. Metal Works Co. v. Industrial Commission, 122 N. E. 366), though in this case there had been no change in the law.

Under the law of Maryland, benefits to a widow cease on her remarriage, other beneficiaries receiving benefits for eight years. Under this provision, the accident commission of the State held that the award to a sister became a vested right on its being made, so that her marriage would not terminate it, a ruling which shows an obvious inconsistency of legislation. The trial court to which the case was taken ruled against the continuance of payments, but the court of appeals of the State found nothing in the law that would warrant such action and the right was held to survive (Adleman v. Ocean Ac. & G. Corp., 101 Atl. 529).

The mutual exclusiveness of classes of awards was passed upon by a compensation commissioner of Connecticut in a case in which the disabled workman received compensation during the period of his incapacity, and on his subsequent death the claim was made that this amount should be deducted from the compensation awarded the widow; this contention the commissioner rejected, saying that the rights of the widow are separate and distinct from the rights of the deceased, and the two forms of compensation should be kept separate. This was the position taken by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in a like case (In re Nichols, 104 N. E. 566). So also of a release by an injured man who subsequently died of the injury, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin holding that this was no bar to the widow's claim, which was an independent right, not in being during her husband's lifetime, and not capable of being affected by his acts, and her claim was allowed accordingly (Milwaukee Coke & Gas Co. v. Industrial Commission, 151 N. W. 245).

The law of Oklahoma applies to nonfatal injuries only, and where an injured man had received an award and subsequently died as a result of his injuries, it was held that payments under the award terminated at his death, and any rights that his heirs or dependents might have must be determined by suit under the laws governing recovery on account of death (Lahoma Oil Co. v. Industrial Commission, 175 Pac. 836).

The law of Michigan is construed by a recent decision of the supreme court of the State (Foley v. Detroit United Ry., 157 N. W. 45), in which it was held that an approval by the State board of an agreement between employer and employee covering the period of total incapacity was no bar to a reopening of the case to determine what was a proper award for permanent partial incapacity, and the release given by the injured man as a full discharge against the employer, at the end of total disability payments, not having been approved by the board, was no bar to the claim. Likewise the Supreme Court of Minnesota refused to recognize a release procured by an insurance company, without consideration, and without the approval of the district court (Clarkson v. N. W. Consol. Milling Co., 175 N. W. 997). An award for temporary disability had been made in due order in this case, and payments made, but disability recurred, and the unapproved release was set up as a bar to further claim, but was rejected by the court.

The industrial accident board of Michigan ruled that the employer had no power to regulate the contract for burial expenses under the provision of the law of that State, which limits such expenses to $200 in cases in which the injured man left no dependents, the board pointing out that he could not be required to pay more than $200, but had no right to undertake the control of matters that properly belonged to the next of kin or the relatives or friends.

A very common provision of the laws arranges for the commutation of payments to a lump sum. Under the Massachusetts statute it was held that this matter rested with the parties affected, and in the absence of a submitted agreement the court had no power to act, though it might approve or reject any proposition made by the parties. A case involving this question was before the Supreme Court of Kansas (McCracken v. Missouri Valley Bridge & Iron Co., 150 Pac. 832). There had been an award for death, and the court took the view that the insurer was seeking to prevent commutation and continue periodical payments with the hope that the death of the beneficiary would end the obligation before it was completely discharged. It was said that the insurer was not entitled to raise such an objection, ruling that the mode of payment is in the discretion of the trial court under the law of that State. The Supreme Court of Michigan likewise ruled that lump-sum awards may be ordered without the employer's consent if the board decides that circumstances warrant (McMullen v. Gavette Const. Co., 175 N. W. 120).

An award of a lump sum by the industrial board of Illinois was overthrown by the supreme court of the State where it was not shown that it would be for the best interests of the parties, the request being supported only by a statement by the claimant's attorneys (Goelitz Co. v. Industrial Board, 115 N. E. 855).

The Texas statute authorizes lump-sum settlements in cases of death or of total permanent disability, and the accident board of the States rules that such settlements for temporary or partial disabilities are null as outside the scope of the act.

The compensation commission of Pennsylvania took the view that lump-sum payments should not be favored, refusing its sanction in a case where a widow with children had secured the consent of her former husband's employer to pay in a lump the amount of $6,015 in settlement of an award, which sum she wished to invest. Installment payments as provided by the law were ordered, since "it is well to protect her against herself and an uncertain investment."

The status of an award in case of bankruptcy was decided by a Federal court (Wood v. Camden Works, 221 Fed. 1010), in a ruling to the effect that compensation payments were a charge against the operation of the business, to be paid the same as wages.

Insurance carried by an employer without cost to the workman, payable only in the absence of a recovery of compensation or damages, was held by the Supreme Court of Nebraska to be deductible from the amount of compensation awarded when it had been paid before the right to benefits had been determined (Am. Smelting & Refining Co. v. Cassil, 175 N. W. 102).

MEDICAL TREATMENT.

The fact that an injured workman, claiming compensation on account of his status as an element in the productive forces of society, owes a reciprocal duty to make the most advantageous use of the provisions afforded him would seem to be increasingly recognized. A number of the laws direct compliance with reasonable medical instructions, and provide for the suspension of compensation payments during any period of refusal or neglect.

The refusal of an employee to undergo an operation for the removal of a cataract caused by accidental injury was held by the Supreme Court of Illinois to be so unreasonable, in view of medical experience and testimony, as to warrant the withholding of an award while such refusal continued, the court holding that the loss of sight was probably due to such refusal and not to the accident; if the operation should be a failure, the question of compensation for any existing disability would then be open for a decision in the light of the facts (Joliet Motor Co. v. Industrial Board, 280 Ill. 148, 117 N. E. 423). Similarly, the industrial accident board of Massachusetts directed the discontinuance of compensation payments until a woman who had lost a hand should agree to undertake to wear and accustom herself to the use of an artificial hand furnished by the employer, which, it was expected, would enable her to earn wages and so reduce the amount of compensation necessary, physicians having testified that the stump left by the amputation was suitable for the use of such a hand (Wiaczkis case, 1917). The Superior Court of Rhode Island also refused to allow a claim for permanent total disability where the sensitiveness of an injured finger could probably be remedied by the simple operation of removing a portion of the bone to secure a better flap to cover the end, and ordered compensation to cease after six weeks unless an operation was submitted to.

The constitutionality of the provision requiring submission to medical examinations was upheld by the Texas Court of Civil Appeals (Texas Employers' Ins. Assn. v. Downing, 218 S. W. 112), citing a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States sustaining the validity of an act of the New Jersey Legislature (1896) authorizing such examinations in cases of suits for damages (Camden & Suburban R. Co. v. Stetson, 177 U. S. 172, 20 Sup. Ct. 617). No inherent right to order such examinations exists under the common law, however (Union Pac. Ry. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 11 Sup. Ct. 1000).

Where the employee refuses to accept or act on the advice of the physician the question of actual or estimated consequences comes up for consideration. Thus where the neglect of a fracture led to infection and amputation the commission of California reckoned that recovery would have taken place in five weeks with proper care and allowed compensation only for a temporary total disability for that period and nothing for the loss of the limb. The ruling in another case was that the commission may bar absolutely all claims for compensation for the remaining disability if a probably advantageous operation of comparatively inconsiderable risk is refused; while in a third case payments were suspended until the injured man should consent to undergo a minor operation which medical testimony indicated to be necessary to a recovery of the use of the injured member.

Such, also, was the position of a commissioner of Connecticut in a case where an operation was indicated for the recovery of the use of a fractured limb; but where the testimony was only as to a possible benefit and the injured man declined, it was held that he would not be penalized for the refusal. So also in a case that was before the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, an operation was not required where the evidence of prospective benefit was said to be too slight to warrant an insistence thereon (Floccher v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 108 N. E. 1032). Serious danger attendant on the operation was held to be ground for a refusal to undergo it, especially as the result might not be of curative effect in the case in hand (accident board of Massachusetts); though in a case where there was no such risk the man was required to decide within a period of six days what course he would pursue, at the end of which time, if refusal persisted, compensation would be suspended during its continuance. The industrial commission of Oklahoma also ruled that refusal to observe instructions, leading to the prolongation of disability, did not afford a basis for the extension of the compensation period; and in a case before the industrial commission of Wisconsin the refusal of an injured man to accept the advice of both his employer's and his own physician, causing, as was alleged, a prolongation of the term of incapacity, was held to warrant the rejection of his claim for such excess of time.

The attitude of the Supreme Court of New Jersey differed from the foregoing (Feldman v. Braunstein, 87 N. J. L. 20, 93 Atl. 679). An injury to the eye was found to be permanent, causing a 90 per cent disability, unless an operation was performed, when the injury would be only temporary. The court ruled that the proper award would be the schedule rating of 100 weeks' benefits, as for the loss of an eye; but if a successful operation was had within the 100 weeks a modification of the decree might be secured, reducing the period of compensation. Likewise, when a claimant declined to submit to an operation for hernia, it was held that he should not be deprived of his award, where it was in evidence that, of 230,000 operations, 48 had been unsuccessful or resulted in death. It was held that the injured man was not required to take even this slight risk of an operation classed as major, and that the award should be for permanent disability, with leave to modify in case of a successful operation, and not for six months and then to terminate unless there was an operation that proved unsuccessful (McNally v. Hudson, etc., R. Co., 87 N. J. L. 455, 95 Atl. 122).

The effect of deferring consent to a serious surgical operation was before the Supreme Court of Michigan in Jendrus v. Detroit Steel Products Co. (144 N. W. 563), the physician employed in the case having urged an immediate operation as offering the only opportunity for saving the injured man's life. Assent was refused, but given the next day. The injury was to the intestines, and peritonitis had set in at the time the advice to operate was first given. Vomiting followed, becoming fecal in its nature. Pneumonia next developed, caused, as claimed by all the surgeons who testified, by the entrance into the lungs of this fecal matter. The operation was apparently followed by a measure of favorable results, but death ensued in a few days, chiefly due to the pneumonia. Under these circumstances the employer contended that the action of the injured man in delaying the operation was so unreasonable and persistent as to defeat the claim to compensation made by his widow. In affirming an award of the arbitration committee, approved by the industrial accident board, the court took into consideration the fact that the injured man was a foreigner, little able to understand what was being said, in great pain, and unacquainted with his surroundings, and decided that it could not be held, as a matter of law, either that the conduct of Jendrus was so unreasonable and persistent as to defeat the claim for compensation by his widow, or that in his delay in assenting to the operation he was guilty of intentional and willful misconduct. When, however, a simple operation (loosening the tissue on an injured leg), involving little danger or suffering, is reasonably likely to relieve or terminate the disability, refusal to submit thereto will warrant a suspension of compensation payments (Kricinovitch v. American Car & Foundry Co., 192 Mich. 387, 159 N. W. 302); and this doctrine was carried so far as to withhold benefits unless an operation for hernia be resorted to, requiring the use of a general or local anesthetic, where the physicians representing both parties agreed that an operation was advisable (O'Brien v. A. A. Albrecht Co., 172 N. W. 601).

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin makes a lucid statement of the principles involved in its discussion of a case in which it was found by the State commission on the testimony of three physicians and surgeons that disability subsequent to a date fixed "resulted directly from the injured man's willful refusal to submit himself to safe and simple medical treatment," and rejected his application for permanent disability benefits. The court sustained this view, saying that “where the disability is so related to the accident that it is the natural consequence thereof, then compensation should be awarded”; but holding further when there is an unreasonable refusal to accept a safe and simple operation, fairly certain to remove the difficulty, subsequent disability “is not proximately caused by the accident, but is the direct result of such unreasonable refusal.” The duty of society to carry the burden of a man in such a case was emphatically denied, the court saying that to prolong or probably even increase his disability by such refusal, “and thereby cast the burden of his wrongful act upon society in general, is not only repugnant to all principles of law, but is abhorrent to that sense of justice common to all mankind” (Lesh v. Illinois Steel Co., 157 N. W. 539). It was pointed out that no question of compelling the man to submit to an operation was involved, but only his status as a claimant under the law.

The appellate court of Indiana refused to bar a claim for a serious disability resulting from the claimant's insistence that a finger be not amputated until further efforts to save it, with the result of a spread of infection and an increased disability, such insistence being declared not unreasonable or willful misconduct (Enterprise Fence & Foundry Co. v. Majors, 121 N. E. 6).

What constitutes a sufficient compliance with the law requiring medical treatment to be furnished was considered by the California commission in a ruling that set forth that (1) the physician most quickly obtainable should be summoned; (2) the employer should furnish instruction as to further treatment; (3) if insured, the insurer should furnish the employer with definite instructions to be followed in case of accident. It was also said that the commission will not favor the policy of procuring the cheapest physician. A request by the employee is not required, as the duty of an active compliance with the law rests upon the employer; if he has knowledge of an injury and a reasonable opportunity to furnish the needed service, that is sufficient to charge him with the reasonable expense of any service obtained by the employee in default of the employer's action. Where, however, the employee has secured emergency treatment, and the employer afterwards offers the services of his physician, they must be accepted, as a general proposition, and subsequent services rendered by the employee's physician will be at his risk and cost; but if there has been a capital operation, the physician originally taking charge will not be dismissed unless shown to be wholly unfit to continue the treatment.

In a case in which there was a wrong diagnosis of an injury, this commission ruled that the mistaken advice of the employer's physician could not be used to deprive the injured man of his rights, but was rather an injury to the employer himself. However, where the wrong diagnosis was not corrected until after the expiration of the 90 days during which medical aid was to be furnished, it was held too late to require such treatment, though disability payments must be made; but if the employer tender the necessary treatment, the employee must accept it or forfeit such payments. Where a man suffered from a hernia and chose to take a truss, not desiring an operation at the time for family reasons, he asked to have an award in order to hold the case open for future review. This the commission declined to do, as there had not been a disability of 14 days' duration. It ruled, however, that as hernia was a permanent disability, an award would be considered on that basis unless an operation was tendered, together with temporary disability payments for the time required for recovery therefrom, saying that a cure offers the best service to the community, and accords with the purpose of the law. The discontinuance of medical service was held not to be warranted by the disobedience of hospital rules by an injured man who absented himself without permission and drank several glasses of beer during his absence.

An opinion by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts declares that the mere posting of lists of physicians to whom injured men may go is not a compliance with the requirement to furnish treatment, and in the absence of positive instructions as to the proper course to be taken, the employee may select his physician, and the board will have jurisdiction of the question of the employee's right to recover the costs of the treatment (In re Panasuk, 105 N. E. 368). In a case in which the injured man had been furnished a physician, but called in his own doctor on account of pain during the first night, and continued to have him, the accident board of the State allowed the payment of a fee for the call for relief during the first night, but held that as the employer had furnished a physician, resort should have been had to him for subsequent treatment, and bills therefor were disallowed; and so generally where the employer is prompt to make provision of medical treatment, it can not be rejected unless for sufficient cause shown, except at the employee's own cost. Therefore, while there is an evident movement toward allowing the injured workman a measure of freedom in the selection of his physician, the arrangement for the treatment must be made in conformity with the law, which, while it makes the employer responsible therefor, does not provide for independent action on the part of the employee in this respect. Thus it was held that although the New York law authorizes and requires the employer to furnish medical aid as required or demanded, it does not permit the recovery of medical costs in a separate suit at law, the industrial commission having the duty to make awards in this field and passing upon all fees and charges (Semmen v. Butterick Publishing Co., 166 N. Y. Supp. 993); nor can the employee assign a claim for services to his physician, the law giving the physician no recourse in his own right or by assignment that will permit him to sue the employer for his fees (Bloom v. Jaffe, 157 N. Y. Supp. 926).

The law of Kansas was construed by the attorney general of the State to authorize an injured man to employ his own physician and send the bill to his employer, restricted, of course, by the statutory limitations as to amount and period.

The question of the expense of medical and surgical services was involved in the case of City of Milwaukee v. Miller (144 N. W. 188), in which the Supreme Court of Wisconsin disallowed a claim for services rendered by a physician employed by the claimant, Miller, who gave no notice to the city of his desire for medical attendance, and continued the employment of his physician after the city had voluntarily offered the services of a competent physician. The time during which the claimant could properly employ a physician was held to be limited to such reasonable time as necessarily intervened between his injury and reasonable opportunity, after due notice, for the city to exercise its privilege of furnishing a physician. The injury was a comparatively slight one, and the industrial commission had regarded the charges as quite large, but accepted the attending physician's evidence as controlling in the matter, on account of his greater experience as compared with that of the city's physician, who had testified that practically one-fourth the amount of the claim would have been adequate as the cost of medical attendance. As to balancing the evidence in such a case the court said that where there were great doubts as to the amount, and the truth of the matter rested solely on the word of the interested party, opposed by the evidence of a competent witness who had little or no interest in the result, there should be much hesitation and generally a refusal to decide the matter wholly against the defendant; adding that one who, by reason of special knowledge, might be competent to give opinion evidence might deal in such exaggerations, especially when they favor his selfish interests, as in this case, as to render his evidence of little or no value. It was also said that it did not devolve upon the city to exercise active vigilance to discover the necessities of injured employees, since the language, "neglect or refusal seasonably to do so," was held to necessarily imply that reasonable notice should be given of the employee's needs and of his desire for treatment.

It was held, therefore, that the act did not authorize the payment of medical and surgical costs incurred under the circumstances, and the compensation awarded was confirmed only as to the actual compensation benefits approved by the industrial commission plus the cost of bandages and supplies.

To the same effect was a decision of the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, holding that where suitable provision of medical service is made by the employer, the employee can not refuse the same and claim payment for a physician of his own choosing (Keigher v. General Electric Co., 158 N. Y. Supp. 939).

The Indiana statute provides for medical, etc., services for 30 days immediately following the injury. The appellate court of the State held that where the disability developed sometime after the accident causing it, the date of the beginning of the disability should be taken as the date for the computation of the period of treatment (In re McCaskey, 117 N. E. 268). This also is the position taken by a Connecticut commissioner. However, the Supreme Court of Michigan held (Cooke v. Holland Furnace Co., 166 N. W. 1013) that though the words "accident" and "injury" are not synonymous they are concurrent in point of time; so that though a disability accruing after the expiration of the period for medical treatment was clearly due to the accident it was entitled to no such treatment; nor could an award be extended beyond the statutory period, even though it appears that the legal provision as to furnishing treatment was not fully complied with, the board having no power to assess any form of damages but only to administer the act according to its terms (McMullen v. Gavette Construction Co., 166 N. W. 1019). This agrees with the position taken by the Supreme Court of Maine, the injury being held to be contemporaneous with the accident, even if not immediately developing (In re McKerna, 103 Atl. 69).

Another Indiana case involved an additional factor, immediate medical treatment being afforded, but after a lapse of seven months new disability developed from the injury. However, the appellate court held that inasmuch as service had been rendered within the period fixed from the receipt of the injury, the new disability could not be treated under the act (Schumaker Co. v. Kendrew, 120 N. E. 722). This case was differentiated from the McCaskey case, in which no disability was immediately developed. The payment for medical services in excess of the statutory 30 days was held to be a proper charge against the insurer where the employer furnished the same in order to save the life of the injured man (In re Kelley, 116 N. E. 306). The law permits the employer to furnish additional attendance at his option, and the court pointed out that this might be to the advantage of the employer and the insurer no less than of the injured employee.

Some cases in hand involve the question of the status of the physician himself. Thus an employer in Connecticut disputed a fee on the ground that the services were rendered by a "bonesetter," and not by a regularly qualified physician. A commissioner of the State disallowed the contention on the ground that the services had been rendered at the desire of both parties, with a knowledge of his status, so that any complaint on that point was of no avail. The industrial commission of Ohio, on the other hand, refused any payment to a "bonesetter," on the ground that the law of that State contemplated payments on this account only to persons who have been regularly admitted to practice medicine. Similarly, the Iowa commission ruled that an osteopath does not furnish "medical or surgical service" within the meaning of the act of that State.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin ruled that an employer was liable for the malpractice of a physician furnished by him during the period of service required by law (Pawlak v. Hayes, 156 N. W. 464); while that of Minnesota held that there was no other duty owed by an employer who collected hospital money than to select a competent physician. However, the release to him on settlement for compensation was declared not a bar to an action against the physician for malpractice (Viita v. Dolan, 155 N. W. 1077).

The Pennsylvania statute requires the employer to furnish medical and hospital services during the first 14 days of disability of the injured employee, and also that, in case of death, expenses of last sickness and of burial be met by the employer, the amount not to exceed $100, this sum to be in addition to any benefits payable to the dependents of the deceased. The compensation board of the State held that where payments had been made for medical services during the 14 days succeeding the injury, and death occurred after the expiration of this period, the employer is authorized to deduct the value of the amount so paid from the sum payable as expenses of last sickness and burial.

Nursing is, of course, a part of the provision to be made by the employer in cases requiring the same, and a Connecticut commissioner allowed a man's wife $10 per week for nursing him, estimating this sum to be the cost of nursing in a semiprivate ward in a hospital. The California commission, on the other hand, refused to make allowances for home nursing, on the presumption that the family would render such services without cost, qualifying the rule in another case by saying that allowance would not be made for nursing by members of the family not professional nurses. The Ohio commission also refused to make allowance for nursing by members of the family where no loss of time or wages is involved, as did the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, where a niece voluntarily nursed an injured man and a claim for nursing was afterwards made (City of Milwaukee v. Miller, supra).

Paying for home nursing was considered also by the industrial commission of Utah, the claim for services rendered being allowed the wife of an injured man in a case recognized as a "hospital case" on the testimony of the physician in charge, where it appeared that the wife was competent and actually rendered the services for which payment was claimed (Fowler case). It was said that if the employer objected he should see that such cases are cared for at a hospital.

The matter of fees was involved in the Ohio case last noted, and the ruling was representative of others that have been made by other authorities, taking the ground that there will be a scrutiny of bills submitted, since there is a real discretion in the commission in this matter, and it is not obligated to honor all claims presented, and will only allow rates ordinarily charged for such services in the locality for persons of the station of the persons treated—not of the employer nor of those having the financial resources of the insurer. (See also the case of City of Milwaukee v. Miller, p. 239.)

The Texas board considered railroad fare in transporting an injured employee to a hospital for treatment as a proper charge on account of medical aid, etc., if expended during the statutory first week following the injury.

Bills for dental services are allowed under rulings of the accident board of Massachusetts and the labor commissioner of Minnesota. The attorney general of Iowa said that no disability payments as such would be allowed for injury to the teeth, but that dental work might properly be allowed for under the head of surgical and medical attention. The public service commission of West Virginia refused to allow for gold crowns made necessary by the breaking of two teeth in an accident, holding that the act does not provide for the payment of dental bills.

A question involving fees in another field was passed upon by the commission of the State of New York when it declined to consider any agreement for fees for legal services in advance of the rendering of the services, saying that in all cases claims will be considered solely with reference to the actual service rendered, upon a statement submitted to the commission upon the conclusion of the service.

Some laws specify the supply of artificial limbs, appliances, etc., where of course there is no occasion for construing the law. The Connecticut law calls for such medical and surgical aid as the physician or surgeon shall deem reasonable or necessary, and this was construed by the supreme court of the State to warrant the furnishing of artificial members (Olmstead v. Lamphier, 104 Atl. 488). Doubtless going beyond the law, or at least not provided for by it, was a case approved by a Minnesota judge, where an insurance company settled with an employee whose artificial leg was broken in an accident, by paying for loss of time until a new member could be procured.

ELECTION.

As already noted, election, either passive or active, is required by the laws of a number of States to bring parties within the provisions of the acts. In a Connecticut case it appeared that as employer had mailed a notice, on the prescribed blank, electing not to accept the terms of the law of the State. This was sent by ordinary mail, not by registered mail or served in person, as prescribed by the act. The claimant received the notice and read it, but did not preserve it. It was held by a commissioner of compensation that his claim to compensation was barred, as he was said to have sufficient notice of the employer's rejection; he was accordingly remitted to his rights, if any, in a suit at law. In a case in which the employer contested a claim on the ground that, though he had elected to accept the act, he had not taken the required steps to prove his ability to make compensation payments, the supreme court of this State held that such failure on the part of the employer to comply with the provisions of the act would not deprive the employee relying upon the law of his rights under it (Bayon v. Buckley, 93 Atl. 139). The Supreme Court of Iowa, on the other hand, held the employer liable in a suit for damages where he had failed to procure insurance of his liabilities under the compensation act, the law stating that such failure is to be construed as a rejection of the compensation system (Elks v. Conn., 172 N. W. 173).

The Supreme Court of Kansas held that the employer defending against a claim could not require the claimant to offer proof of the employer's acceptance or rejection of the act; but if he wished to make his alleged rejection a defense he himself should be required to prove it (Gorrell v. Battelle, 144 Pac. 244).

In a case arising under the Wisconsin statute it appeared that the employer had elected to accept the act, while the employee rejected it but subsequently made claim for compensation, which was denied. He then brought suit and recovered damages at law. But on appeal the supreme court reversed the decision of the trial court, since the employer having elected was entitled to all the common-law defenses and the injury was not shown to have been due to the negligence of the employer, while the employee had assumed the risks (Karny v. N. W. Malleable Iron Co., 151 N. W. 786). Another provision of this act allows employees 30 days within which to make their decision following the employer's election to accept the act. It was held by the supreme court (Green v. Appleton Woolen Mills, 155 N. W. 958) that an injury to the employee before the expiration of his 30 days' option is not compensable, but must be passed upon in accordance with the provisions of the liability laws of the State, since, unless the employee has taken action, he may reject within the time fixed.

EXCLUSIVENESS OF REMEDY.

While most of the States provide for the voluntary acceptance of the laws before they are binding, after which it is generally held that suits can not be brought, the law of Washington is explicit in declaring the abrogation of all suits for injuries of employees. This provision was held to reach so far as to bar an action by a brewery employee who was injured by the negligence of a railway company moving cars in the yard of the brewery, so that even the liability of the third person who caused the injury could not be made the basis of an action by the injured workman (Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Meese, 36 Sup. Ct. 223). A Federal court (district) ruled that an action for wrongful death would lie where it was caused by a third party, away from the plant of the employer, if the dependent should elect to sue instead of proceeding under the compensation act (Martin v. Matson Navigation Co., 244 Fed. 976). The supreme court of the State also construed the statute to cover incidental suits, as well as those arising directly from the injury, as where an injured man who had received compensation under the act undertook to sue for the malpractice of the physician engaged by the employer but paid by deductions from the employee's wages, such suit not being allowed (Ross v. Construction Co., 155 Pac. 153).

In another case arising in the same State (Peet v. Mills, 136 Pac. 685), a railway employee sought to hold the president of a railway company personally liable for his injuries, claiming that, though actions against the employing company were abrogated, the president could be sued on an individual liability. This the court denied, emphasizing its ruling as to the constitutionality of the law given in the case, State v. Clausen (65 Wash. 156 117 Pac. 1101) and declaring the new remedy to be exclusive. A provision of the same statute permitting employees to sue an employer who is delinquent in premium payments was held not to warrant such a suit where the delinquent employer makes good his shortage within the period allowed by the rules of the State insurance commission for such payments after notice of delinquency (Barrett v. Grays Harbor Commercial Co., 209 Fed. 95).

If the law of Washington is thus exclusive and other remedies are not available, it may be noted as a complementary fact that it is of broad application, the supreme court of the State calling it a provision for a kind of pension given the workman in exchange for absolute insurance on his master's premises (Stertz v. Industrial Insurance Commission, 158 Pac. 256), thus covering injuries not classed in other jurisdictions as within the scope of acts containing more restrictive terms.

The Supreme Court of New York in special term denied the right of a plaintiff to sue for damages for pain and disfigurement, after having received compensation under the act of the State providing therefor, holding the remedy offered by the statute to be complete and exclusive and enacted with a view to afford certain relief and obviate litigation (Connors v. Semet-Solvay Co., 159 N. Y. Supp. 431).

A similar view of this point was taken by the Supreme Court of Oklahoma in a case in which there was serious disfigurement as well as permanent total disability for the regular employment of the injured man. The claim for additional damages for the disfigurement was met by the court's remark that the law was meant to be exclusive in cases of injury in employment, not dividing up injuries and forms of relief, but abolishing the right of action in the courts (Adams v. Iten Biscuit Co., 162 Pac. 938). Where the disability caused is secondary and the disfigurement much the larger factor, the Louisiana compensation law was held not to be the proper means of redress, but a suit for damages (Boyer v. Crescent Paper Box Factory, 78 So. 596). But the law of this State was held to be exclusive over the contention of a widow that she was in no contractual relationship with the employer of her husband, and was therefore not bound by the latter's election (Colorado v. Iron Works, 83 So. 381).

Election is presumed under the law of Nebraska, and where an employer was sued for damages and answered that he was operating under the compensation act, the jury was discharged, and the court proceeded to make an award of compensation, from which it deducted the costs to which the employer had been put by the unwarranted bringing of the suit by the employee (Beideck v. Acme Amusement Co., 166 N. W. 193).

The constitution of Arizona requires the enactment of a compulsory compensation statute, retaining, however, to the employee the option of suing under the liability law or choosing his right under the compensation statute. The supreme court of the State held (Consol. Arizona Smelting Co. v. Ujack, 139 Pac. 465) that this election may be made after the injury has been received, and the remedy becomes exclusive only by the institution of an action in the chosen form. This option is held to extend only to the employee, however, the personal representative in the case of death having only the right to sue (Behringer v. Copper Co., 149 Pac. 1065).

This is in contrast with the situation in New York, where the court of appeals holds (Shanahan v. Monarch Engineering Co., 219 N. Y. 469, 114 N. E. 795) that the law takes away the right of the next of kin of a deceased workman to sue under the former statute allowing suits for damages on fatal cases, the compensation law being held to cover the entire field of remedy for the death of an employee. There were no dependents in the case in hand. In so holding, this court reversed the supreme court, special term (92 Misc. 466), and appellate division (172 App. Div. 221), both of which had held that the law fixed the rights of certain classes of persons only, leaving the rights of others as they were before its enactment. An amendment of 1916 declared the contrary, and the court of appeals likewise took the view above set forth.

Under the laws of most of the States election is made at the time the contract is entered into either actively or passively, and such election is binding until other action is taken disavowing the same. The supreme court of Kansas held that under its law the remedy by compensation is exclusive, and if one desires to retain the right to sue for damages he must reject the compensation law in advance (Shade v. Ash Grove Lime, etc., Co., 144 Pac. 249). So also the supreme court of Rhode Island held that an employee making a contract in the State of Massachusetts and accepting the compensation law of that State extinguishes his right to sue for damages at common law in that State, and, having lost that right, he can not sue at common law in any other State in which he may reside (Pendar v. H. B. Am. Mach. Co., 87 Atl. 1). Applying the same principle of the control of local law, it was held by the Washington supreme court that its statute, though exclusive where applicable, as already noted, does not bar suits for damages in that State where the cause of action arose in a State permitting such suits, the law of the locality being enforceable in whatever jurisdiction it might be brought (Reynolds v. Day, 140 Pac. 681).

The New York Court of Appeals took the same view of this point in the case of a New Jersey employee of a New Jersey corporation who was killed while in his employment in New York State. His administratrix sued for damages, and recovered in the trial court, but the judgment was declared erroneous, since the right of the employee under the New Jersey law was contractual, and the agreement was enforceable in the courts of New York, so that no right to sue for damages remained (Barnhart v. Am. Concrete Steel Co., 125 N. E. 675).

NOTICE AND CLAIM.

The requirement that notice be given by the injured person of his injury and of his intention to claim compensation is phrased differently in the different acts. Thus the law of Michigan directs that notice be given within three months of the happening of the injury if a claim is to be submitted. This was construed by the court to mean within three months of the happening of the accident causing the injury, and not three months from the time disability commenced or the real seriousness of the injury was understood (Dane v. Michigan United Traction Co., 166 N. W. 1017). The New York law, on the other hand, requires notice of the accident within 10 days after disability, which would obviously imply a different starting point from that fixed by the Michigan statute. In construing its law, the Court of Appeals of New York held that no sufficient notice of an injury had been given in a case where a cloak model claimed that she had spoken of the pricking of her finger with a pin and had asked for peroxide to use on it. Infection resulted, and an employee of the company carried the girl's pay to her and saw that she had a swollen arm, but no connection was made with the alleged pin prick, nor was any claim submitted until some nine months later, when the industrial commission approved the claim on the ground that the employer had not been prejudiced by the lack of notice. This was rejected by the appellate division and by the court of appeals, the latter court saying that the requirement of notice should not be regarded as a mere formality, and that the burden rested on the claimant who had been neglected in the matter of notice to supply evidence and secure a finding that no prejudice had resulted. As to the claim that notice had been given, the court pointed out a distinction between the happening of a trivial accident, liable to occur in any one of many ways, and a statement that a workman at a machine where he was properly employed had been injured by it, saying that in the latter case the employer might properly be assumed to have been put on notice that an industrial accident had taken place, but that in the present circumstances no presumption could be indulged (Bloomfield v. November, 119 N. E. 705).

This question was again before the Supreme Court of Michigan in a case in which the foreman of a plant had knowledge of the original injury, but no serious disability developed for several months. The accident board awarded compensation, but this was reversed by the supreme court which found that "unless we resort to judicial legislation" notice of a claim must be given within three months from the injury, meaning thereby the accident and not the developed disability (Cooke v. Holland Furnace Co., 166 N. W. 1013). This is in contrast with the decision of the Supreme Court of Nebraska, whose law requires claims for compensation to be presented within six months "after the injury occurred." Where a man was the victim of an accident which did not result in noticeable injury for some time afterwards, and gave notice within six months from the later date, but more than six months from the date of the accident, it was held that the law had been complied with (Johansen v. Union Stockyards Co., 156 N. W. 511).

A provision common to several of the laws is that want of or defect in the notice shall not be a bar to a claim unless the employer is prejudiced in his rights thereby. Such a provision is found in the Kansas statute, and the supreme court of that State (Knoll v. City of Salina, 157 Pac. 1167) sustained an award to a claimant in a case where written notice had not been given within the period named in the law, but oral notice had been given, and no right of the employer had been affected. It was also held in this case that an oral demand for compensation was a sufficient claim.

A case involving multiple injuries was before the Supreme Court of California (Ehrhart v. Industrial Accident Commission, 158 Pac. 193), in which an award by the commission was reversed. The injured man had submitted a claim for injuries to a leg, compensation being allowed. Some months later he asked compensation on account of injuries to the chest alleged to have been received at the same time, which the commission allowed on the ground that it had continuing jurisdiction over the case for the period of 245 weeks fixed by law, taking this to cover all injuries received by the injured man at the time of the accident. This contention the court rejected, holding that the commission had jurisdiction of only such injuries as had been called to its attention within the period of six months prescribed as a limitation by the act. This view was held to be necessary to the realization of the intention of the legislature that all injuries for which claims were to be submitted should be subjected to timely investigation, both to prevent the encouragement of false claims and to enable the proper steps to be taken to give remedial treatment.

The Connecticut law made want of notice within the time fixed a bar to the claim to the extent that the employer should be shown to be prejudiced thereby. The phrase "want of notice" was construed by the supreme court of that State to mean absolute lack of notice. It was said, however, that this was not intended by the act to be an absolute bar to the claim, but only a ground for diminution of the award to the extent that the employer should be shown to be prejudiced by the failure to receive notice (Schmidt v. Baking Co., 96 Atl. 963). Where there has been a delay beyond the period fixed by statute, provision is made in the Massachusetts law that the claim may still be renewed if the delay was due to reasonable cause. The supreme court of the State held (In re Fierro, 111 N. E. 957) that the industrial board should not assume that there was reasonable cause or act on a supposed reason, but that it must be positively shown that there was ground for the delay. What was a sufficient notice under the Massachusetts law was passed upon by the industrial accident board, and, where it was shown that oral notice had been given to the manager and also to one of the partners in the business, it was ruled that the employing association had knowledge of the injury under the law, even though no written notice had been given either to the employer, the insurance company, or the board; and the supreme court of the State ruled similarly where the injured man had told a foreman and a timekeeper of the injury (In re Bloom, 111 N. E. 45).

Oral inquiry of the manager of a firm as to "what he was going to do" in the matter of compensating an injury was held by the Supreme Court of Kansas to be sufficient notice (Gailey v. Peet Bros. Mfg. Co., 157 Pac. 431). The effect of such informal but actual notice was discussed by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin (Pellett v. Industrial Commission, 156 N. W. 956), the court saying that the employer would be estopped to plead the lack of statutory notice unless actual prejudice could be proved; in this case the injured workman told one of his employers of the fall causing the injury, and they agreed to pay the doctor's bill, and also made a payment for time lost within the 30 days during which notice might be given, the law of this State providing that such payment shall be equivalent to notice.

A claim was held by the Supreme Court of Michigan not to be barred in a case in which notice of the death of an alien had been timely given, and steps had also been taken to procure letters of administration, though these did not arrive until after the expiration of the prescribed six months' period; it was held that the claim had not been outlawed, as the employer had had opportunity to investigate the facts and had not been prejudiced by the delay, the court ruling that the law ought not to be technically construed (Matwiczuk v. American Car & Foundry Co., 155 N. W. 412). More technical was the ruling in the case of a claim preferred by the Austrian consul at Pittsburgh for compensation under the law of West Virginia, the public service commission ruling that it could not be considered on the ground that the application must be made in due form within six months from the date of the death, as provided by the act.

Another limitation contained in this law barred a claim in the case of the death of a man as the result of an injury, the death not occurring until after expiration of 90 days from the date of the accident causing it. The law provides that compensation is payable only where death supervenes, as a result of the injury, within 90 days after the accident.

In New Jersey, notice is required unless there is "actual knowledge" of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the employer. It was held (Allen v. Millville, 87 N. J. L. 356, 95 Atl. 130), that the law does not require first-hand knowledge by the use of this term, but that it may be understood in the popular sense; and knowledge of a proper corporate agent was held to be knowledge of a corporation.

This principle was applied by the appellate court of Indiana to a case in which a mine employee suffered an injury to his eye, which was known to his superior and to the company's physician, who pronounced the injury slight. After the time for giving formal notice had expired the injured man learned that he had lost the sight of his eye. His claim was allowed, however, and sustained by the court, on the ground that the company's agents and representatives had knowledge of the injury, and that his reliance on the advice of the physician had influenced him to disregard the injury (Vandalia Coal Co. v. Holtz, 120 N. E. 386). A similar view of this question was adopted by the Supreme Court of Maine, where a foreman knew of an injury at the time it occurred, though the infection and loss of use were subsequent (In re Simmons, 103 Atl. 68).

DISPUTES.

There is a considerable variety in the method of determining disputes or reviewing awards on appeal or otherwise, the laws of some States being much more stringent in this respect than others. The power of the industrial commission of Colorado to make awards was passed upon in a case (Industrial Commission v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 185 Pac. 344) in which the supreme court of the State held that a district court had power to set aside the orders of the commission only where there was fraud, lack of jurisdiction, or lack of evidence. The court was without power, therefore, to render judgment on an agreed settlement for a sum less than the commission's award. The contention that the claimant and the insurer are the only parties in interest, so that they are entitled to submit an agreement to the court without the intervention of the commission, was said to ignore the public interest expressed by the law and represented by the commission, whose participation was therefore essential.

The Kansas statute permits the bringing of suits to determine awards under the law "in default of agreement and arbitration." This was held by the supreme court of the State (Halverhout v. S. W. Milling Co., 155 Pac. 916) not to make an attempt to agree or to secure arbitration a condition precedent to the bringing of the suit, but that either in the absence of such action or upon its failure, suit might be brought.

Many of the provisions of the acts indicate a desire to secure the prompt determination of the points in issue, the law of Massachusetts providing that no second hearing shall be had as a matter of right on any question of fact. The supreme court of the State (In re Fierro, 111 N. E. 957) ruled that on an appeal, if there was a full trial of the question in issue there shall not be a rehearing ordered, but a final decree shall be entered. The right of appeal was denied to a railroad company under the New York law in a case in which an award had been made to the injured employee, the supreme court of the State, appellate division, holding that since the employer is protected from all liability by the insurance fund, he has no interest in the award that would give him a right to appeal, the possibility of an increase of the premium rates being too remote to confer such a right (Crockett v. State Insurance Fund, 155 N. Y. Supp. 692).

A provision of the New Jersey law requires the determination of cases before the court within 30 days after final hearing. This was held by the supreme court of the State to be directory only, and not mandatory, so that no invalidity was attached to later decisions (Diskon v. Bubb, 96 Atl. 660).

EVIDENCE.

Procedure under the compensation laws naturally differs largely from the technical court procedure in damage suits, though the courts differ largely as to the real extent of such departure that is proper. The Supreme Court of California (Englebretson v. Industrial Accident Commission, 151 Pac. 421) held that evidence that a certain act might have been a sufficient cause of the injury suffered would not support the claim, being only hearsay, saying that though the commission was not bound by technical rules the rule excluding hearsay was not technical. On the other hand, the Supreme Court of New York, appellate division (Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 155 N. Y. Supp. 1), said that the spirit of the statute is that the commission shall be "wholly unfettered by any law previously invented by man." In the case in hand there was slight evidence of internal injury and some evidence supporting the inference that the man strained himself in his work, which was, however, mainly hearsay and partly "hearsay on hearsay." It was said that "no court would have hesitated a moment to reject it," but that "all the rules of evidence, the accumulation of centuries of experience and wisdom, were ignored by the commission." The decision was affirmed as carrying out the purpose of the legislature in enacting the law. When the case came to the court of appeals, however, it was said that while the law does provide that the commission is "not bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence or by technical or formal rules of procedure," it must be borne in mind that this provision of the statute is meant to enable the commission "to ascertain the substantial rights of the parties." The presumption that the claim comes within the provisions of the act, as the law provides, can not prevail against substantial evidence to the contrary; and while the commission "may in its discretion accept any evidence that is offered, still in the end there must be a residuum of legal evidence to support the claim before an award can be made." Persons present testified that they saw no injury inflicted or accident take place, nor were there any marks as of bruises or abrasions, such as would have existed had the statements of the decedent been correct; so that the reported remarks of a man in a highly nervous condition, verging on delirium tremens, which subsequently developed, were held not sufficient to support an award, and the judgment was reversed with costs against the commission (218 N. Y. 435, 113 N. E. 507).

The industrial commission of Ohio went almost as far as the New York commission and Supreme Court in the above case in making an award for the death of a man from blood poisoning, where there was no one who saw the injury inflicted which was regarded as responsible for the death, and the evidence as to causation was contradictory. A large amount of evidence was considered, both direct and hearsay, but since the commission was not bound by statutory rules of evidence or of procedure it was able to reach the conclusion that the injury should be regarded as the proximate cause of the death, and compensation was awarded accordingly.

Where a car carpenter was seen to fall and was found to be dead it was held that the burden of proof that there was injury in the course of the employment was on the claimant. This demand was said by the Supreme Court of Illinois to be met by the showing that the deceased was a steady workman, in perfect physical condition, and that the circumstances pointed to a fatal electric shock from an exposed end of a cable near his working place (Bloomington, D. & C. R. Co. v. Industrial Board, 114 N. E. 939).

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin sustained presumptions in favor of the claimant in a case in which the trial court had decided that in the absence of witnesses the theory of accident was only equally plausible with that of suicide. The decision of the lower court was reversed on the ground that the burden of proof rested on those advocating the suicide theory, and compensation was allowed (Milwaukee Western Fuel Co. v. Industrial Commission, 150 N. W. 988). This accords with the position taken in a very similar case by the accident board of Michigan, where it was said that the lack of direct evidence would not be allowed to defeat the applicant's claim if the facts and circumstances justify and reasonably require the inference that death was due to drowning as the workman was leaving a lumber dock for dinner. Similar to the foregoing was the conclusion of the Supreme Court of California in a case (Western Grain & Sugar Products Co. v. Pillsbury, 159 Pac. 423) in which an award for the death of a night watchman was allowed, the body not having been found, but evidences of a struggle and other circumstances suggesting murder being disclosed.

The Supreme Court of New York, appellate division, likewise refused to indulge in presumptions unfavorable to the claimant, as being impossible under the law where there was an absence of proof as to the exact cause of the injury, though "many reasons might have made it proper" for the injured man to go to the place where he was injured (Chludzinski v. Standard Oil Co., 162 N. Y. Supp. 225).

On the ground that questions of negligence had nothing to do with the right of the claimant under the compensation act, the Supreme Court of Kansas (Ruth v. Witherspoon-Englar Co., 157 Pac. 403) declared that evidence as to the misconduct of a foreman in ordering the workman into a place of danger was prejudicial to the rights of the company where there was a trial before a jury. But if the findings of the jury are not in reality affected by such evidence, its erroneous admission will not necessitate the reversal of the judgment (Oliver v. Christopher, 159 Pac. 397).

APPEALS.

In the more technical matters of procedure the courts have held that the terms of the law must be strictly complied with, as where a period is fixed within which an appeal must be taken from an award to secure a review by the courts. Delay in this regard was held to be fatal, the provisions of the statute establishing an absolute limitation (Northern Pacific S. S. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 168 Pac. 30; New Dells Lumber Co. v. Industrial Commission, 164 N. W. 824). In an Ohio case (Roma v. Industrial Commission, 119 N. E. 461), however, a claimant was allowed the right of appeal where it was in evidence that his attorney had been informed of the rejection of his claim, and more than 30 days had elapsed before the appeal, it appearing that actual notice was not received by the claimant himself. The court said that to deny the rights of the claimant under such circumstances would be to take advantage of a technicality, whereas the spirit of the law required a determination on the merits of the case, and that it would not be a harsh rule to require the board to assure itself, in the event of a rejection, that the claimant was himself informed of the fact.

This case involved the right of appeal by an employee of an employer who was a self-insurer under the statute, the court of appeals of the State having held that such an appeal was not possible. This point had been decided to the contrary by the State Supreme Court in Reinholz v. Industrial Commission (119 N. E. 129), in which it was said that to deprive employees of self-insurers of a right enjoyed by employees of insurers in the State fund would be to create a discrimination that would lead to the invalidation of the provision of the law permitting self-insurance; but having held this section of the law constitutional, it was the duty of the court, unless the language of the act made it impossible, to give effect to all the provisions of the law by avoiding any construction that would lead to such an unwarranted classification. It was added that if the State authorized the publication of notices by an employer to the effect that he was permitted by the board to carry his own insurance, it became the duty of the State to safeguard the employee's interests under the act; also that the self-insurer's contribution to the surplus fund provides a source from which payments under jury awards on appeal might be paid, while the State might also recoup the fund by an action against the self-insurer or his bondsman. The court of appeals was therefore reversed.

A further point involved in the appeal in the Roma case was the form of the award. The jury had allowed a recovery of $2,000 in a lump sum, but the court found that this method of payment was not in accordance with the spirit of the compensation law, and asserted its authority to modify the award, reducing it to a series of weekly payments of $8 per week for 250 weeks, this appearing to be a reasonable finding under the verdict of the jury, and in accord with the design of the legislature in the enactment of the law.

The purpose of the law to eliminate technicalities was given by the appellate court of Indiana as a reason why a motion for a new trial was not an essential preliminary to an appeal under the rules of procedure in that State. A review by the full board was said to safeguard all rights, so that the appeal could properly be taken directly (Union Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Davis, 114 N. E. 872).

INSURANCE.

The primary importance of securing to the workman the awards potentially provided for by the compensation statutes has led to the enactment of various provisions looking toward the insurance of the employer's obligation or the making of guarantees by him that he will meet the contingent liabilities fixed by the laws. Alternative provisions are made in most States, giving an option or choice to the employer as to the mode of carrying his insurance.

Naturally stock companies writing insurance of this kind are opposed to the idea of a State monopoly, the situation being particularly acute in the State of Ohio, where the question of monopoly was in discussion between the insurance companies and the State authorities, the law being differently interpreted by the two parties. The commission took the view that the intent of the law was that insurance should be taken in the State fund and not elsewhere. The Supreme Court of the State considered the law as permitting stock companies to write insurance, and requiring all employers of five or more workmen regularly in the same business, other than employers providing self-insurance to pay into the State insurance fund the amount of premium determined and fixed by the State authorities. Self-insurers were, moreover, held to be legally required by the law to contribute to the surplus fund, which is a guaranty fund for the State insurance fund. The existing provision of the general code conferring upon employees the rights of the employer under any insurance policy which he may carry after the employee has secured a judgment against his employer for injuries due to the latter's negligence was held not to be repealed by the compensation law but to remain subject to construction in connection with the provisions of the compensation law. Contracts providing indemnity for employers in all cases in which they are required to pay compensation in accordance with the provisions of the compensation act may be written by any insurance company, stock or otherwise. The question as to whether or not employers can insure against other liabilities than those established by the compensation law was left undecided, reargument to be had thereon when the court should again convene.

On the final consideration it was held that civil liability for willful acts or failure to observe safety laws could not be covered by any such policy; also that contracts for insurance could be written only in behalf of contributors to the compensation fund, or legal self-insurers. The right of insurance companies to write any policy other than as should be in line with these rulings was terminated.

These findings are in effect embodied in an opinion handed down in January, 1917 (State v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp., 95 Ohio St. 289, 116 N. E. 513). They clearly left to insurance companies the power to write policies covering compensation liabilities, but only where there is also a contribution made to the State fund or in behalf of self-insurers.

It was undertaken to withdraw even this permission by an initiated act amending the law so as to declare void all insurance contracts covering compensation or liability obligation (act of Feb. 19, 1917). In the meantime the constitutionality of the law permitting self-insurance was again challenged, the case involving also the right of insurance companies to write policies to indemnify such self-insurers in case of loss (State v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 117 N. E. 232). It was held that the provision was constitutional, even though it permitted two forms of insurance to exist side by side—one through the fund, and one by direct payment from the employer. Since both are supervised by the commission, it can not be said that there is any inequality, or that all do not have protection of the laws, the standards of benefits being identical in the two classes. The right of the insurance companies to act was not denied, this case coming up prior to the amendment of February 19, 1917.

A further amendment of March 20, 1917, provided that only such persons should be allowed to be self-insurers as "do not desire to insure the payment thereof or indemnify themselves against loss sustained by the direct payment thereof." The power to enact such legislation was challenged by an employer who was a self-insurer, but carried a policy to protect himself, and injunction was sought to restrain the industrial commission from revoking his permit to act as a self-insurer. The court held that a contract previously entered into and continuously maintained was no bar to legislation, and could have no right of existence contrary to a new law; also that the right to withdraw approval of a self-insurer was properly provided for by the law, and that a duty to do so devolved upon the commission as a result of the amendment. Such amendment being within the power of the legislature, and in line with "the purpose and intent of the constitution and the law to create and maintain one insurance fund, to be administered by the State," no injunction would issue (Thornton v. Duffy, 124 N. E. 54). This apparently ends the conflict arising from the effort to establish exclusive State insurance in Ohio.

Other States offer a variety of options, even specifically saying, as in Michigan, that the purpose is to make a comparative test as to the value and desirability of the different forms. Where a State fund is provided, and subscription thereto is made the essential condition of conduct of an industry, questions of alternative rights are of course foreclosed. This is the case with the Washington statute, and the Supreme Court of the United States in Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington (243 U. S. 219, 37 Sup. Ct. 260) considered the form of a general but graduated tax upon industry as being a proper method of securing the efficient working of the law. The act forbids the employer to deduct any part of the insurance premium payable by him to the State fund from the wages or earnings of his workmen. As to this, the court saw a possible serious question as to the unconstitutional interference with the freedom of contract if the provisions "were to be construed so broadly as to prohibit employers and employees, in agreeing upon wages and other terms of employment, from taking into consideration the fact that the employer was a contributor to the State fund, and the resulting effect of the act upon the rights of the parties." Inasmuch, however, as there was no intimation that the clause had been so construed, the court declined to "assume in advance that a construction will be adopted such as to bring the law into conflict with the Federal Constitution."

Options are given under the New York law, the employer being permitted to insure in a State-administered fund, or in an authorized corporation or association, or to maintain self-insurance, so-called, by furnishing satisfactory proof to the State commission of his financial ability to make such payments as might be anticipated in the conduct of his business. In the last-named case the commission may, in its discretion, require the employer to deposit securities of a kind prescribed by the statute, in an amount to be determined by the commission. Assuming that the method of self-insurance would be open to all employers on reasonable terms, it was held that the other modes of insurance might constitutionally be prescribed as optional alternatives, the rights of the employers not being thus interfered with; while, assuming that the State commission would be diligent in requiring the employer either to furnish satisfactory proof of his ability, or to write insurance in suitable companies, the employee could not be regarded as injuriously affected in a constitutional sense by the granting of options to the employer (New York Central Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 37 Sup. Ct. 247).

The industrial commission of Utah (as in several other jurisdictions) is authorized to fix the premium rates for companies writing compensation insurance. The power of the legislature to pass such a law was denied by an employer, who claimed that the act was unconstitutional in this respect; that the legislature could not delegate the rate-fixing powers to a commission; and that in any case there was no power under the act to fix rates for private companies. The supreme court of the State overruled all these contentions, relying on a decision of the United States Supreme Court relative to the power of a State agency to fix fire insurance rates (German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Kansas, 233 U. S. 409, 36 Sup. Ct. 618), adding that the case is even stronger here, inasmuch as compensation insurance is affected with a public interest. Too low a rate would jeopardize safety, while too high a rate would be an imposition. A proposed participating policy was also ruled out as being a method for avoiding the rates prescribed by the commission (Scranton Leasing Co. v. Industrial Commission, 170 Pac. 976).

The same court had before it the question of the nature of the act as compulsory or elective, and whether the industrial commission could compel an employer to insure his liabilities under the act, or otherwise comply with its provisions. It was held that the act was compulsory, and that the commission was acting within its powers when it sought a mandate to compel conformity to its provisions (Industrial Commission v. Daly Mining Co., 172 Pac. 301). Suing to recover the premiums due was not the proper procedure, as contended by the company, but the commission was entitled to a mandate to compel insurance, where in its discretion it concludes that such security of the employees' right is needed.

The California commission ruled an insurance policy in effect on its delivery and during its existence, even though no premium is paid thereon. The law makes the employer and insurer jointly liable for compensation payable under any policy, and a failure of the former to pay and of the latter to collect his premium is a personal matter between the two parties and does not bar the employee's rights. Quite similar is a ruling construing the Iowa statute to the effect that under the law of that State the employer is primarily liable to the injured employee regardless of any arrangement which he may have with the insurer to carry the risk. He may protect himself by insurance, and, indeed, is required to do so; but if for any reason the insurance company is not able to carry out its contract, the injured person or his beneficiaries still have direct recourse to the employer for the amount of compensation due.

Subject to mention either under this heading or under that of course of employment is a case (Bayer v. Bayer, 158 N. W. 109), in which an employee of a carpenter was injured while doing some work for the latter's brother in an undertaking in no way connected with the business of the injured man's employer. The employer was insured against the risks of his business, and the insurance company was joined in the defense against the enforcement of an award made by a committee of arbitration and approved by the industrial accident board of Michigan. The arbitrators had said that the only question involved was whether the employee was under the employer's control and was paid by him; but the court ruled that the policy was expressly and effectively limited to cases of employment "in the operation of and in connection with the business herein stated." The order of the board for the payment of the award was therefore vacated.

The relation of accident insurance, carried by the injured man, to insurance in the State fund, was considered in a Washington case, the supreme court of the State holding that accident insurance was a matter of private contract, and the law fixing an amount of compensation payable for industrial injury neither affected such a contract nor was affected by it (Ross v. Erickson Construction Co., 89 Wash. 634, 155 Pac. 153).

Incidental questions relating to State funds were passed upon by the Attorney General of the United States, who held that policies issued by a State fund are exempt from the special tax levied by the war-revenue act of October 3, 1917; also that State funds are not subject to the law requiring the payment of an income tax (31 Op. A. G., 308).

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAWS OF CANADA.

PROGRESS OF LEGISLATION.

Compensation legislation in Canada has an earlier origin than in the United States, due undoubtedly to the influence of Great Britain. The British act of 1897, extended in 1900, and replaced by an act of 1906 is of a type quite distinct from that adopted by any of the United States. However, it very naturally furnished a model for the earlier legislation of the Provinces which first took action of this kind. Following is a list of the Provinces having laws of this type, arranged in chronological order of the enactment of the original law:

|-----------------------|------|
| British Columbia..... | 1902 |
| Alberta..... | 1908 |
| Quebec..... | 1909 |
| Manitoba..... | 1910 |
| Nova Scotia..... | 1910 |
| Ontario..... | 1914 |
| Yukon Territory..... | 1917 |
| New Brunswick..... | 1918 |

The act of British Columbia of 1902 continued in force until 1916, and that of Alberta of 1908 was not superseded until 1918. New laws were enacted in Nova Scotia and Manitoba in 1915 and 1916, respectively.

Arbitrators and judges of courts were the recourse for the settlement of disputes under the older laws, and the very limited recoveries provided fell far short of the liberality of the law of Ontario, for instance, which Province first came into line in 1914 with a law patterned after the United States type rather than that of Great Britain. Some of the Provinces appointed commissions to investigate the workings of statutes in the States before revising existing legislation or enacting new laws. This has been influential in establishing throughout the two adjacent countries a system of legislation closely comparable in many aspects. The later laws are administered by special boards in most instances, Yukon Territory being an exception. The statute of Quebec has remained without essential revision since its enactment in 1909, and therefore does not represent the more recent compensation practices. Prince Edwards Island and Saskatchewan are as yet without any compensation legislation, the so-called compensation law of the latter Province being in fact a liability statute.

Beginning with the year 1914, when the Province of Ontario enacted its first law, there is a notable uniformity of legislation throughout the Dominion. Except in Yukon Territory the scope of the laws is determined by the enumeration of the classes of employments to which they apply, though provision is made in most of the laws for the addition of other classes by the action of the boards. The laws are compulsory in their application, and all except Manitoba, Quebec, and Yukon maintain exclusive insurance funds for the payment of benefits, for which the Province assumes liability. All except Quebec and Yukon compensate for enumerated industrial diseases. Administrative boards are of long tenure (during good behavior until retirement for age at 75, except in British Columbia, where the term is 10 years), and have practically full and final power for the determination of cases arising under the acts. The boards are distinctively compensation boards, and not general industrial commissions, though they are given certain powers for accident prevention in British Columbia, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, and Ontario, and of inspection of premises in the foregoing and in Alberta and New Brunswick as well.

An act of the Dominion Parliament of 1918 provides that employees of the Federal Government killed or injured in their work shall come under the compensation law of the Province in which the accident occurred.

On the following pages will be found analyses of the various laws of the same form as for the laws of the various States. The full text of the laws also appears following those of the various States.

ANALYSIS OF THE PRINCIPAL FEATURES OF THE LAWS.

ALBERTA.

Date of enactment.—March 5, 1908; in effect January 1, 1909. New act, April 13, 1918; amended, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment which cause disability for at least four days or death. Those due to the serious and willful misconduct of the workman excepted, unless death or serious injury results. If disability lasts over 10 days, compensation dates from the injury. Enumerated occupational diseases included.

Industries covered.—Enumerated hazardous employments. Itinerant occupations and railroads are excepted. The board may add to, withdraw from, or rearrange the schedule of hazardous employments contained in the act.

Persons compensated.—Workmen engaged in the employments covered, including employers and members of their families if they are occupied as workmen. Traveling salesmen, clerks, outworkers, and casual employees not in the usual course of the employer's business, are excluded.

Government employees.—Covered if employed in establishments or undertakings to which the law applies.

Burden of payment.—Rests upon employer, but employee may be required to contribute to the medical aid under plans approved by the board.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses, maximum $100, and, in the case of no dependents, reasonable expenses of the last sickness.
- (b) To widow or invalid husband $20 monthly, with $5 additional for each child under 16 years; to orphan children, $10 each; maximum monthly, $40; to parents, $20 monthly; to parents and other dependents, maximum monthly, $30; total maximum, $2,500.
- (c) To partial dependents a sum proportionate to the pecuniary loss; maximum monthly, $30, during the period of reasonably expected assistance.
- (d) Payments to children cease at age 16, unless invalid, and to a widow upon remarriage, but she shall receive a lump sum equal to the monthly payments for two years.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Such special medical and surgical treatment and apparatus as the board may deem necessary.
- (b) For total disability, if permanent, $10 weekly, with $2 additional for first and $1 additional for succeeding dependents; maximum weekly, $16; total maximum, $2,500. If temporary, same as for permanent, except that weekly maximum of workmen under 21 years without dependents is fixed at $7.50.
- (c) For partial disability, if permanent, fixed sums for certain injuries as listed in schedule, payments ranging from $50 to $1,000. If temporary, and wage loss exceeds 10 per cent, 55 per cent of wage loss during disability.

Awards may be commuted in whole or in part to lump-sum payments.

Revision of compensation.—Awards may be reviewed by board on its own motion or on motion of workman.

Insurance.—All employers covered by act contribute to provincial accident fund.

Security of payments.—If accident fund is exhausted, advances may be made from general funds of the Province. Payments can not be assigned or attached, nor are they liable to set-off.

Settlement of disputes.—Workmen's compensation board has exclusive and final jurisdiction.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Date of enactment.—May 31, 1916; in effect, January 1, 1917; amended, 1918, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment causing disability for more than three days or death; those due to serious or willful misconduct excepted, unless death or serious and permanent disability results. Includes facial disfigurement and designated occupational diseases.

Industries covered.—Enumerated list; voluntary as to other industries or workmen. Farm labor and domestic service excluded.

Persons compensated.—Workmen engaged in industries and occupations covered by act, not including traveling salesmen, clerks, persons not subject to hazards of industry, or whose work is casual and not for the purpose of the employer's business, outworkers, or members of employer's family.

Government employees.—Included if from the nature of their work they would be covered if working for a private person.

Burden of payment.—On employer, except that employees must contribute to the medical aid.

Compensation for death:

(a) Burial expenses, maximum, $75.

(b) To widow or invalid widower for life, $20 monthly, with $5 additional for each child; to orphan children, $10 each; maximum, $40 monthly; to parents, $20 monthly, or to parents and other dependents, $30 monthly maximum.

(c) To partial dependents a sum proportionate to the pecuniary loss, maximum $30 monthly, during the period of reasonably expected assistance.

(d) Payments to children cease at age 16 unless invalid, and to a widow upon her remarriage, but she shall receive a lump sum equal to the monthly payment for two years.

Compensation for disability:

(a) All reasonable and necessary medical, surgical, etc., aid.

(b) For total disability, during disability, 55 per cent of the average wages; minimum, $5 per week, unless wage is less, then full wages.

(c) For partial disability, during disability, 55 per cent of wage loss; minimum, $5 per week, unless wage is less, then full wages.

Periodical payments may be commuted into lump-sum payments; lump sum also allowable for facial disfigurement.

Revision of compensation.—Awards may be reopened and reviewed at any time for sufficient cause.

Insurance.—All employers under the act must contribute to a provincial accident fund.

Security for payments.—Province is liable for safekeeping of fund. Payments can not be assigned, attached, subjected to set-off, nor shall they pass by operation of law except to personal representatives.

Settlement of disputes.—Workmen's compensation board, a body corporate, has exclusive and final jurisdiction.

MANITOBA.

Date of enactment.—March 16, 1910; in effect January 1, 1911. New act 1916; amended 1917, 1918, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in course of employment, causing disability for at least six days or death; those due solely to the serious and willful misconduct of the workman excepted, unless death or serious disability results. Includes enumerated occupational diseases. All compensation dates from the injury.

Industries covered.—Enumerated list, which the board may add to or take from. Other establishments may be included by election of the employer and approval of the board. Farm labor and domestic service are excluded.

Persons compensated.—Workmen in the industries covered except casual employees for other purposes than the employer's trade or business.

Government employees.—Included if from the nature of their work they would be included if working for a private employer.

Burden of payment.—On employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses not exceeding $75; if no dependents, reasonable expenses for medical aid, nursing, maintenance, and burial.
- (b) To widow or invalid husband, $20 monthly, and $5 for each child under age of 16; orphans, $10 each; the total in no case to exceed $40 monthly nor 55 per cent of the workman's average earnings. To others, in proportion to the pecuniary loss, not over $20 to parents, nor over $30 in all, during the period of reasonably expected assistance.
- (c) Payments to children cease at age of 16, and to a widow on remarriage, when she receives two years' payment in a lump sum.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Medical attendance, care, and maintenance, not to exceed $100 in value.
- (b) For total disability, 55 per cent of the average weekly earnings; during disability, not less than $6 unless earnings are less, then full wages.
- (c) For partial disability, 55 per cent of the wage loss, during such disability; if impairment does not exceed 10 per cent, an equivalent lump sum shall be paid, unless thought not of advantage to the workman.

Earnings in excess of $2,000 are not considered as basis for awards.

Any periodical payment may be commuted to a lump sum.

Revision of compensation.—The board may at any time rescind, alter, or amend any decision or order made by it.

Insurance.—All employers covered by the act contribute to a provincial accident fund. Insurance in an approved company is required, unless self-insurance is permitted.

Security of payments.—Insurance companies and self-insurers maintain deposits for the prompt payment of compensation. Benefits are a preferred claim in bankruptcy, and are exempt from assignment, attachment, etc. All benefits are to be paid through the board.

Settlement of disputes.—Workmen's compensation board has full and final jurisdiction of all questions under the act.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

Date of enactment.—Law enacted April 26, 1918; in effect—; amended in 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in course of the employment causing disability for more than seven days or death, not due to willful misconduct, intoxication, or a fortuitous event not connected with the industry. Includes occupational diseases.

Industries covered.—Industries listed in law or which may be added by orders in council. Farm labor and domestic service excluded. Voluntary as to excluded industries and occupations.

Persons compensated.—Workmen engaged in the included industries and occupations except traveling salesmen, fishermen, clerks, and office workers not subject to the hazards of the industry, outworkers, casual employees employed otherwise than for the purposes of the industry, and members of an employer's family.

Government employees.—Included if engaged in employments such as those included under act, except municipal firemen and policemen.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses, maximum $75.
- (b) To widow or invalid widower, $20 per month for life, with $5 additional for each child under 16 years; not over 55 per cent of average wages, with maximum basic wage of $125; total maximum, $3,500.
- (c) To partial dependents a sum proportionate to the pecuniary loss during the period of reasonably expected assistance.
- (d) Payments to children cease at 16, and to widow upon her remarriage, but she shall receive a lump sum equal to two years' monthly payments.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Such special medical and surgical aid as may reduce the disability and such first aid and hospital service as the board may require.
- (b) For total disability, 55 per cent of the average wages during disability. Basic salary, minimum $6 per week and maximum $125 per month; total maximum, $3,500.
- (c) For partial disability, if temporary, 55 per cent of wage loss; if permanent, according to a schedule to be adopted by the board; total maximum, $1,500. Wage loss must exceed 10 per cent. Maximum monthly basic salary, $125. Periodical payments may be commuted to lump-sum payments, and lump-sum payments may be made subject to periodical payment.

Revision of compensation.—The board may reopen and review awards on its own motion.

Insurance.—All employers covered by the act must contribute to a provincial accident fund. Board may make or sanction arrangements for reinsurance.

Security of payments.—Accident fund under government control; payments may not be assigned, attached, or made subject to pass by operation of law except to a personal representative.

Settlement of disputes.—Workmen's compensation board has exclusive and final jurisdiction over all matters, but appeal may be had to supreme court on questions of law and jurisdiction if permission is secured from a judge of the supreme court.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Date of enactment.—April 23, 1915; in effect January 1, 1917; amended in 1916, 1917, 1918, and 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of or in the course of the employment causing disability for seven days or death. Those due to willful misconduct are excepted unless death or serious permanent disablement results. When compensation is payable it dates from disability. Enumerated occupational diseases are included.

Industries covered.—Compulsory as to all employments listed in act. Voluntary as to excluded industries and workmen, except farm labor and domestic service, which are outside law.

Persons compensated.—Workmen engaged in the included industries and occupations, not including traveling salesmen, casual workers employed otherwise than for the purpose of the employer's business, outworkers, and members of an employer's family.

Government employees.—Included if engaged in occupations such as are included in the act, municipal policemen and firemen excepted.

Burden of payment.—Entire cost rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Burial expenses, maximum $75.
- (b) To widow or widower, $20 per month for life, with $5 additional for each child under 16 years; to orphan children, $10 each per month; maximum monthly, $40, not over 55 per cent of average wages. To parents, $20 per month; to parents and others, maximum $30 per month.
- (c) To partial dependents a sum proportionate to the pecuniary loss, not over $30 per month, during the period of reasonably expected assistance.
- (d) Payments to children cease at 16 unless invalid, and to widow upon remarriage, when she receives continued payments for two years or an equivalent lump sum.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) All necessary medical, surgical, hospital, etc., treatment for 30 days. Additional special treatment may be allowed by board if necessary to reduce disability.
- (b) For total disability, 55 per cent of the average wages during disability. Minimum, $5 weekly, unless wage is less, then full wages.
- (c) For partial disability, 55 per cent of the wage loss during disability. Impairment of capacity without actual wage loss may also be compensated. In no case are wages in excess of $1,200 per annum considered. Periodical payments may be commuted to lump-sum payments and lump-sum payments may be made subject to periodical payment.

Revision of compensation.—Board may reopen and review awards on its own motion.

Insurance.—All employers covered by the act must contribute to the provincial accident fund.

Security of payments.—Accident fund under Government control. Payments may not be assigned, attached, be liable to set-off, nor made subject to pass by operation of law except to a personal representative.

Settlement of disputes.—Workmen's compensation board has exclusive and final jurisdiction over all matters, but appeal may be had to the supreme court on questions of law and jurisdiction if permission is secured from a judge of the supreme court.

ONTARIO.

Date of enactment.—May 1, 1914; in effect January 1, 1915; amended 1915, 1916, 1917, 1919.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in course of employment which cause death or disable a workman for at least seven days; those due to the serious and willful misconduct excepted, unless resulting in death or serious disablement. Where compensation is payable it dates from disability. Enumerated industrial diseases included.

Industries covered.—Extensive list; includes manufacturing, construction, lumbering, mining, quarrying, transportation, navigation, operation of public utilities, etc. Farm labor and domestic service are excluded.

Persons compensated.—All employees in industries covered other than those whose employment is casual and not for the purposes of the employer's trade or business.

Government employees.—Included in so far as their employments would be covered if under private employers.

Burden of payment.—Cost rests entirely on the employer.

Compensation for death:

- (a) Necessary burial expenses, not exceeding $75.
- (b) To a widow or invalid widower, $30 per month until death or remarriage, with $7.50 additional for each child under 16 years of age; orphan children, $10 per month each; no total to exceed $60.
- (c) To other dependents, not over $20 to the parent or parents, and not over $30 per month in all, for not longer than support might be reasonably expected.
- (d) If no dependents, reasonable allowance may be made for medical attendance, care, maintenance, and burial.

The aggregate compensation, except for burial expenses, may not exceed 55 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased.

Payments to children cease at 16 unless invalid, and to widow on remarriage, when she receives two years' benefits.

Compensation for disability:

- (a) Necessary medical and surgical aid, with transportation to hospital or home if needed.
- (b) For total disability 55 per cent of the average weekly earnings, during disability.
- (c) For partial disability, 55 per cent of the weekly wage loss, payable during the continuance of such disability.

Periodical payments may be commuted to a lump sum after six months, or earlier with the consent of the workman and the approval of the board.

In computing compensation no earnings in excess of $2,000 are to be considered in any case.

Revision of compensation.—Awards may be reviewed on the motion of either party in interest; also on the board's own motion if payments are being made from the accident fund.

Insurance.—Payments under the main schedule are made from an accident fund compulsorily maintained by employers under schedule I of the act. Board may require employers under schedule II to insure in an approved company.

Security of payments.—State board administers the accident fund and is required to maintain a reserve. Employers not contributors to the fund may be required to deposit a capital sum to secure payments, or furnish other security. Payments are exempt from assignment, attachment, or set-off, except with the approval of the board; nor may they pass by operation of law to other than a personal representative.

Settlement of disputes.—All disputes are to be settled by the board, suits at law being forbidden except in defined classes of cases of liability for negligence of employers not under schedule I.

QUEBEC.

Date of enactment.—May 29, 1909; in effect January 1, 1910. Amended 1914, 1918.

Injuries compensated.—All injuries happening to workmen by reason of or in the course of their work causing death, or disability lasting over seven days. Injuries intentionally caused by the person injured are not compensated.

Industries covered.—Building, manufacturing, transportation, engineering, and construction work, mining, quarrying; stone, wood, and coal yards; any industrial enterprise using machinery operated by power. Agriculture and navigation of sailing vessels are excluded.

Persons compensated.—Workmen, apprentices, and employees earning not more than $1,200 per annum. Foreign workmen or their representatives are compensated only if and so long as they reside in Canada.

Government employees.—Government employees are not mentioned in the act.

Burden of payment.—The entire expense rests upon the employer.

Compensation for death.

(a) Medical and funeral expenses not in excess of $25, unless same are provided by an association of which the deceased was a member.

(b) Four times average yearly wages, but not less than $1,000 nor more than $2,500 payable to surviving consort, to children under 16 years of age, and dependent ascendants, shares to be agreed upon or determined by court.

All amounts may be decreased or increased by court on account of inexcusable fault of employee or employer.

Payments to children cease at 16, unless invalids.

Payments made for disability before death are deducted.

Compensation for disability:

(a) For permanent total disability, a pension equal to 50 per cent of the yearly wages.

(b) For permanent partial incapacity, a pension equal to 50 per cent of the amount by which the wages have been reduced because of the injury.

(c) For temporary incapacity lasting over seven days, compensation equal to one-half the daily earnings received at the time of the accident, beginning with the eighth day, not less than $4 per week.

(d) In computing pensions only one-fourth the excess of the annual earnings between $800 and $1,200 is considered; the capital of any pension shall not exceed $2,500, unless higher because of accidents due to inexcusable fault of the employer.

All periodical payments may be commuted to lump sums.

Revision of compensation.—Demands for change of amount of compensation may be made within four years.

Insurance.—No reference concerning the insurance of risks under the law is contained in the act, except as to the payment of pensions due, which may be transferred to insurance companies. No release from liability is obtained by the employer by such transfer.

Security of payments.—Claims for compensation or pensions form a lien on the real and personal property of the employer so long as they remain unpaid.

Settlement of disputes.—Superior and circuit courts have jurisdiction over all disputes arising under this act. All proceedings are summary, no trial by jury being allowed.

YUKON TERRITORY.

Date of enactment.—April 24, 1917.

Injuries compensated.—Injuries by accident arising out of and in course of employment, causing disability for at least 14 days, or death, not due to willful misconduct or intoxication. Where compensation is payable, it dates from the disability.

Industries covered.—All, where five or more workmen are employed.

Persons compensated.—All in industries covered except outworkers and casual employees in other than the employer's trade or business.

Government employees.—Included.

Burden of payment.—Rests on employer.

Compensation for death.—If dependents survive, $2,500; if none, burial and medical expenses, nursing, etc., not to exceed $500, of which not over $150 may be for burial expenses.

Compensation for disability:

(a) For permanent total disability, $3,000.

(b) For permanent partial disability, fixed sums for injuries scheduled; others in proportion to degree of disability.

(c) For temporary disability, 50 per cent of wages, payable weekly for not more than six months.

Revision of compensation.—Weekly payment awards may be reviewed at the request of either party.

Insurance.—No provision.

Security of payments.—Claims are not assignable, and awards are exempt from execution, attachment, etc. Judge may order award to be invested or otherwise applied for the benefit of the person entitled thereto.

Settlements of disputes.—If parties do not agree to settlement, application may be made to a judge of the Territorial court, whose decision is final.

APPENDIX.—TEXT OF WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

UNITED STATES.

ALABAMA.

ACTS OF 1919.

No. 245.—Compensation of workman for injuries.

PART 1.—COMPENSATION BY ACTION AT LAW.

SECTION 1. When personal injury or death is caused to an employee by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, of which injury the actual or lawfully imputed negligence of the employer is the natural and proximate cause, he, or in case of death, his personal representative, for the exclusive benefits of the surviving spouse and next of kin, shall receive compensation by way of damages therefor from the employer, provided the injury or death was not caused by the willful misconduct of the employee or was not due to misconduct on his part as hereinafter in section 9 hereof defined. Actions for damages.

SEC. 2. In all cases brought under part 1 of this act it shall not be a defense (a) that the employee was negligent, unless and except it shall also appear that such negligence was willful, or that such employee was guilty of willful misconduct as hereinafter in section 9 hereof defined; (b) that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee; (c) that the employee had assumed the risks inherent in, or incidental to the work, or arising out of his employment or arising from the failure of the employer to provide and maintain safe premises and suitable appliances which grounds of defense are hereby abolished except as provided in section 4. Defenses abolished.

SEC. 3. If the employer elects not to come under part 2 of this act, he loses the right to interpose the three defenses named in section 2 in any action against him for personal injury or death of an employee. Same.

SEC. 4. If the employee elects not to become subject to part 2 of this act, in any action brought to recover damages for personal injury or death by accident against an employer who has elected to come under part 2 of this act, said employee or his personal representative shall proceed as at common law only, and such employee shall have no right of action under sections 3912, 2485, 2486, 3910, 2484 of the Code of 1907 or any other right given by statute, and the employer in such suit may avail himself of all defenses as provided by statute in effect at the adoption of this act or at common law. When available.

SEC. 5. The provisions of sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 shall apply to any claims for death of an employee as covered by sections 3912, 2485, and 2486 of the Code of 1907, and to personal injuries arising under sections 3910 and 2484. Application.

SEC. 5a. The provisions of this act shall apply to employees who are minors and who have been employed in accordance with or contrary to laws regulating the employment of minors. Minors unlawfully employed.

SEC. 5b. When an accident occurs while the employee is employed elsewhere than in this State which would entitle him or his dependents to compensation had it happened in this State, the employee or his dependents shall be entitled to compensation under this act if the contract of employment was made in this State unless otherwise expressly provided by said contract, and such compensation shall be in lieu of any right of action and compensation for injury or death by the laws of any other State. Extraterritorial effect.

Burden of proof. SEC. 6. In all actions of law brought pursuant to part 1 of this act, the burden of proof to establish willful misconduct (or other misconduct as hereinafter in sec. 9) hereof defined of the injured employee shall be upon the defendant.

Attorney's fees. SEC. 7. No part of the compensation payable under this act shall be paid to attorneys for the claimant for legal services unless upon the application of a claimant to a judge of the circuit court such judge shall order or approve of the employment of an attorney by the claimant and in such event the judge upon the hearing of the petition for compensation shall fix the fee of the attorney for the claimant for his legal services, and the manner of its payment, but such fee shall not exceed ten (10) per cent of the compensation awarded or paid.

PART 2.—ELECTIVE COMPENSATION.

Scope of act. SECTION 8. This act shall not be construed or held to apply to any common carrier (doing an interstate business) while engaged in interstate commerce, or to domestic servants, farm laborers or persons whose employment at the time of the injury is casual, and not in the usual course of the trade, business, profession, or occupation of the employer, or to any employer who regularly employs less than 16 employees in any one business, or to any county, city, town, village, or school district: Provided, however, That any employer who regularly employs less than 16 employees in any one business or any county, city, town, village, or school district may accept the provisions of this act by filing written notice thereof with the probate judge of each county in which said employer is located or does business, said notice to be recorded by the judge of probate for which he shall receive the usual fee for recording conveyances, and copies thereof to be posted at the places of business of said employers: And provided further, That said employers who have so elected to accept the provisions of this act may at any time withdraw the acceptance by giving like notice of withdrawal: Provided further, That in no event nor under any circumstances shall this bill apply to farmers and their employees.

Effect of agreement. SEC. 9. If both employer and employee shall by agreement expressed or implied or otherwise as herein provided become subject to part 2 of this act, compensation, according to the schedules hereinafter contained, shall be paid by every such employer in every case of personal injury or death of his employee caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, without regard to any question of negligence, except no compensation shall be allowed for an injury or death caused by the willful misconduct of the employee or by the employee's intention to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another or due to his own intoxication or his willful failure or willful refusal to use safety appliances provided by the employer or due to the willful refusal or willful neglect of the employee or servant to perform a statutory duty or due to any other willful violation of the law by the employee or his willful breach of a reasonable rule or regulation of his employer of which rule or regulation the employee has knowledge. If the employer defends on the ground that the injury arose in any or all of the last above-stated ways the burden of proof shall be on the employer to establish such defense.

Willful misconduct.

Remedy exclusive. SEC. 10. Such agreement or the election hereinafter provided for shall be a surrender by the parties thereto of their rights to any other method, form, or amount of compensation or damages for any injury occasioned by an accident proximately resulting from and while engaged in the actual performance of the duties of his employment, and from a cause originating in such employment, or determination thereof than as provided in part 2 of this act, and shall be an acceptance of all the provisions of part 2 of this act, and shall bind the employee himself, and for compensation of his death shall bind his personal representative, the surviving spouse and next of kin, as well as the employer and those conducting his business during bankruptcy or insolvency, for compensation for death or injury, as provided for by part 2 of this act.

Same. SEC. 10½. The rights and remedies herein granted to an employee shall exclude all other rights and remedies of said employee, his personal representative, parent, dependents, or next of kin, at common law, by statute or otherwise on account of said injury, loss of services or death; and except as herein provided in part (1) and part (2), (as the case may be) of this act, no employer included within the terms of this act shall be held civilly liable for any personal injury to or death of any workman due to accident while engaged in the service or business of the employer, the cause of which accident originates in the employment; but nothing in this section shall be construed to relieve any employer from criminal prosecution for failure or neglect to perform any duty imposed by law.

Sec. 11. All contracts of employment made after the taking effect of this act shall be presumed to have been made with reference to, and subject to, the provisions of part 2, unless otherwise expressly stated in the contract, in writing, or unless written or printed notice has been given by either party to the other, as hereinafter provided, that he does not accept the provisions of part 2. Every employer and every employee is presumed to have accepted and come under part 2 hereof, unless thirty (30) days prior to accident he shall have signified his election not to accept or be bound by the provisions of part 2, but for an accident occurring within the first 30 days after employment notice not to accept given at the time of employment shall be sufficient, and in such event unless such notice has been given at the time of employment, the acceptance and coming under part 2 hereof is conclusively presumed. The notice of election not to accept part 2 shall be given as follows: Any employer and any employee who are parties to a contract of service or employment existing at the time this act goes into effect is conclusively presumed to have accepted and come under part 2 hereof, and said contract of service or employment shall be conclusively presumed to continue under the provisions of part 2 of this act from and after the day it goes into effect unless otherwise expressly stated in writing in the contract of employment, or unless at least thirty (30) days prior to the time this act goes into effect, written or printed notice have been given by either party to the other as hereinafter provided that he does not accept the provisions of part 2. The employer in case he elects not to be bound by the provisions of part 2 hereof shall post and keep posted in his shop or place of business a written or printed notice of his election not to be bound by part 2 hereof and file a duplicate thereof with the probate judge of each county in which the employer does business. Said notice to be recorded by the judge of probate, for which he shall receive the usual fee for recording conveyances. The employee in case he elects not to be bound by the provisions of part 2 hereof shall give written or printed notice to the employer of his election not to be bound by part 2, and file a duplicate with proof of service attached thereto with the probate judge of one county in which the employer does business. A certified copy of said notice so required to be recorded shall be presumptive evidence in any court or proceedings that said employer or employee, as the case may be, has elected not to come under part 2 hereof.

Notice of non-acceptance.

Sec. 12. Either party may terminate his acceptance, or his election, not to accept the provisions of part 2 by thirty (30) days' written notice to the other, such notice to be given as provided in section 11. A duplicate of such notice with proof of service attached thereto shall be filed with the probate judge of the county in which the employee is performing service at the time such notice is given, and shall be recorded, and the time shall not begin to run until such notice is so filed.

Termination of acceptance.

Sec. 12a. Minors shall, for the purposes of part 2 of this act, have the same power to contract, make election of remedy, make settlements, and receive compensation as adult employees; subject, however, to the power of the court, in its discretion at any time to require the appointment of a guardian to make such settlement and to receive moneys thereunder or under an award, and payments or awards made to such minors or their guardians shall exclude any further compensation either to the minors or to their parents for loss of services or otherwise.

Minors.

Sec. 12b. The interested parties shall have the right to settle all matters of compensation and all questions arising hereunder between themselves: Provided, That all settlements made hereunder must be in amount substantially the same as the amounts or benefits stipulated in this act, unless a judge of the circuit court of the county where the claim for compensation under this act is entitled to be made or upon the written consent of the parties a judge of the circuit court or a judge of the probate court of any county determines that it is for the interest of the employee to accept a lesser sum and approves such settlement. Any settlements hereunder may be vacated for fraud, undue influence or coercion upon application made to the judge approving the settlement at any time not later than six months after the date of the settlement. Upon such settlements being approved judgment shall be rendered thereon and duly entered on the records of said court in the same manner and to have the same effect as other judgments or as an award if the settlement is not for a lump sum. The costs of the proceedings which shall not exceed two dollars, shall be borne by the employer. All moneys voluntarily paid by the employer or insurance carrier to an injured employee in advance of agreement or award or under an approved or vacated agreement or award shall be treated as advance payments on account of the compensation due.

tal disability.

SEC. 13. Following is the schedule of compensation: (a) For injury producing temporary total disability, fifty (50) per centum of the average weekly earnings received at the time of injury, subject to a maximum compensation of twelve dollars ($12) per week, except as otherwise provided herein and a minimum of five dollars ($5) per week: Provided, That if at the time of injury the employee receives average weekly earnings of less than five dollars ($5) per week, then he shall receive the full amount of such average weekly earnings per week. This compensation shall be paid during the time of such disability, not, however, beyond three hundred weeks. Payments to be made at the intervals when the earnings were payable, as nearly as may be.

ty.

(b) In all cases of temporary partial disability the compensation shall be fifty (50) per centum of the difference between the average weekly earnings of the workmen at the time of the injury and the average weekly earnings he is able to earn in his partially disabled condition. This compensation shall be paid during the period of such disability, not, however beyond three hundred weeks, payments to be made at the intervals when the earnings were payable as nearly as may be and subject to the same maximum as stated in clause (a). If the injured employee who is receiving such compensation for temporary partial disability should leave the employment of the employer by whom he was employed at the time of the accident for which such compensation is being paid, he shall, upon securing employment elsewhere, give to such former employer an affidavit in writing containing the name of his new employer, the place of the employment and the amount of wages being received at such new employment and until he gives such affidavit the compensation for temporary partial disability shall cease. The employer by whom such employee was employed at the time of the accident for which such compensation is being paid may also at any time demand of such employee, additional affidavit in writing containing the name of his employer, the place of his employment and the amount of wages he is receiving and if the employee, upon such demand, fails or refuses to make and furnish such affidavit his right for compensation for temporary partial disability shall cease until such affidavit is made and furnished.

Schedule for specified injuries.

(c) For permanent partial disability the compensation shall be based upon the extent of such disability. In cases included by the following schedule the compensation shall be that named in the schedule, to-wit: For the loss of a thumb, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during sixty (60) weeks. For the loss of a first finger, commonly called index finger, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during thirty-five weeks (35) weeks. For the loss of a second finger, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during thirty (30) weeks. For the loss of a third finger, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during twenty (20) weeks. For the loss of a fourth finger, commonly called little finger, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during fifteen (15) weeks. The loss of the first phalange of the thumb, or of any finger, shall be considered as equal to the loss of one-half of such thumb or finger, and compensation shall be paid at the prescribed rate during one-half of the time specified above for such thumb or finger. The loss of two or more phalanges shall be considered as the loss of the entire finger or thumb: Provided, however, That in no case shall the amount received for more than one finger exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a hand. For the loss of a great toe, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during thirty (30) weeks. For the loss of one of the toes other than the great toe, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during ten (10) weeks. The loss of the first phalange of any toe shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such toe, and compensation shall be paid at the prescribed rate during one-half the time prescribed above for such toe. The loss of two or more phalanges shall be considered as the loss of the entire toe. For the loss of a hand, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during one hundred and fifty (150) weeks. For the loss of an arm, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during two hundred (200) weeks. For the loss of a foot, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during one hundred and twenty-five (125) weeks. For the loss of a leg fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during one hundred and seventy-five (175) weeks. For the loss of an eye, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during one hundred (100) weeks. For the complete and permanent loss of hearing in both ears, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during one hundred and fifty (150) weeks. For the loss of an eye and a leg, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during three hundred and fifty (350) weeks. For the loss of an eye and an arm, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during three hundred and fifty (350) weeks. For the loss of an eye and a hand fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during three hundred and twenty-five (325) weeks. For the loss of an eye and a foot, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during three hundred (300) weeks. For the loss of two arms other than at the shoulder, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of two hands, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of two legs fifty per centum of the average earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of two feet, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of one arm and the other hand, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of one hand and one foot, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of one leg and the other foot, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of one leg and one hand, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of one arm and one foot, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. For the loss of one arm and one leg, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings during four hundred (400) weeks. Where an employee sustains concurrent injuries resulting in concurrent disabilities, he shall receive compensation only for the injury which produced the longest period of disability, but this section shall not affect liability for the concurrent loss of more than one member for which member, compensation is provided in the specific schedule in subsection (d) below. In all cases the permanent and total loss of the use of a member shall be considered as equivalent to the loss of that member, but in such cases the compensation in and by said schedule shall be in lieu of all other compensations. In cases of permanent disability due to injury to a member resulting in less than total loss of use of such member not otherwise compensated in this schedule, compensation shall be paid at the prescribed rate during that part of the time specified in the schedule for the total loss or total loss of use of the respective member, which the extent of the injury to the member bears to its total loss. If an injured employee refuses employment suitable to his capacity, offered to or procured for him, he shall not be entitled to any compensation at any time during the continuance of such refusal, unless at any time in the opinion of the judge of the circuit court of the county of his residence such refusal is justifiable. All compensations provided in clause (c) of this section for loss of members, or loss of use of members, are subject to the same limitations as to maximum and minimum as are stated in clause (a). In all other cases of permanent partial disability not above enumerated, the compensation shall be fifty per centum of the difference between the average weekly earnings of the workman at the time of the injury and the average weekly earnings he is able to earn in his partially disabled condition, subject to a maximum of twelve ($12) per week as otherwise provided herein. Compensation shall continue during disability, not, however, beyond three hundred (300) weeks. In case the injured employee leaves the services of the employer for whom he was working at the time of the accident and accepts employment elsewhere he shall make and furnish affidavit as to his new employment in the manner as required in subsection (b) of section 13 hereof.

Loss of use.

Refusing employment.

(d) For permanent total disability as defined in subsection (e) below, fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings received at the time of the injury subject to a maximum compensation of twelve dollars ($12) per week except as otherwise provided herein and a minimum compensation of five dollars ($5) per week: Provided, That if at the time of injury the employee was receiving earnings of less than five dollars ($5) per week, then he shall receive the full amount of his earnings per week. This compensation shall be paid during such permanent total disability, not exceeding five hundred and fifty (550) weeks; but in all such cases drawing more compensation than five dollars ($5) per week, the payment after the first four hundred (400) weeks shall be reduced to five dollars ($5) per week for the remainder of the five hundred and fifty weeks (550) weeks, while the permanent total disability continues; payment to be made at the intervals when the earnings was payable as nearly as may be: Provided, however, Such payments with the approval of the circuit judge may be made monthly or quarterly. The total amount of compensation payable under this subsection shall not exceed five thousand (5,000) in any case: Provided, however, That in case an employee, who is permanently and totally disabled becomes an inmate of a public institution, then no compensation shall be payable unless he has wholly dependent on him for support a person or persons named in subsection (1), (2), and (3) of section 14 (whose dependency shall be determined as if the employee were deceased), in which case the compensation provided for in this subsection shall be paid for the benefit of such person so dependent, during dependency, in the manner ordered by the court, while the employee is an inmate of such institution.

(e) The total and permanent loss of the sight of both eyes, or the loss of both arms at the shoulder, or complete and permanent paralysis or total and permanent loss of mental faculties, which totally incapacitates the employee from working at an occupation which brings him an income shall constitute permanent total disability.

Second injuries.

(e) 1. If an employee has a permanent disability or has previously sustained another injury than that in which he received a subsequent permanent injury by accident such as is specified in the sections herein defining permanent injury he shall be entitled to compensation only for the degree of injury that would have resulted from the latter accident if the earlier disability or injury had not existed.

(e) 1½. If an employee has previously lost the sight of one eye or lost one leg or lost one arm, and thereafter in the same employment or in the employment of another he should by accident receive additional injuries so as to proximately cause the loss of the sight of both eyes or the loss of both legs or the loss of both arms said employee shall receive three-fourths of the amount provided hereunder for one who has received a permanent total disability and there shall be credited on said three-fourths amount any payments which said employee had received or may receive for his first disability.

(e) 2. For permanent total disability other than as defined in subsection (e) fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings received at the time of injury subject to a maximum compensation of twelve dollars ($12) per week and a minimum compensation of five dollars

($$5$) per week: Provided, That if at the time of injury the employee was receiving earnings of less than five dollars ($$5$) per week, then he shall receive the full amount of his earnings per week. This compensation shall be paid during the period of such permanent disability not exceeding four hundred (400) weeks; payments to be made at the intervals when the earnings were payable as nearly as may be: Provided, however, Such payments with the consent of the circuit judge may be made monthly or quarterly.

(e) 3. If an employee received an injury for which compensation is payable while he is still receiving or entitled to compensation for a previous injury in the same employment, he shall not at the same time be entitled to compensation for both injuries, unless the later injury be a permanent injury, such as specified in section 13; but he shall be entitled to compensation for that injury and from the time of that injury which will cover the longest period and the largest amount payable under this act.

(e) 4. If an employee receives a permanent injury as specified in section 13 after having sustained another permanent injury in the same employment, he shall be entitled to compensation for both injuries, but the total compensation shall be paid by extending the period and not by increasing the amount of weekly compensation, and in no case exceeding five hundred weeks. When the previous and subsequent permanent injuries received in the same employment result in total disability compensation shall be payable for permanent total disability, but payments made for the previous injury shall be deducted from the total payment of compensation due.

(f) In case a workman sustains an injury occasioned by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment and during the period of disability caused thereby death results proximately therefrom, all payments previously made as compensation for such injury shall be deducted from the compensation, if any, due on account of death. Subsequent death.

(f) 1. In all claims for compensation for hernia resulting from injury by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment it must be definitely proved to the satisfaction of the court: Hernia.

First. That there was an injury resulting in hernia.

Second. That the hernia appeared suddenly.

Third. That it was accompanied by pain.

Fourth. That the hernia immediately followed an accident.

Fifth. That the hernia did not exist prior to the accident for which compensation is claimed.

All hernia, inguinal, femoral, or otherwise, so proved to be the result of an injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment shall be treated in a surgical manner by radical operation. In case the injured employee refuses to undergo the radical operation for the cure of said hernia, no compensation will be allowed during the time such refusal continues. If, however, it is shown that the employee has some chronic disease, or is otherwise in such physical condition that the court considers it unsafe for the employee to undergo said operation, the employee shall be paid as otherwise provided herein.

(g) Compensation hereunder shall be computed on the basis of the average weekly earnings. "Average weekly earnings" shall mean the earnings of the injured employee in the employment in which he was working at the time of the injury during the period of fifty-two weeks immediately preceding the date of the injury divided by fifty-two; but if the injured employee lost more than seven consecutive calendar days during such period although not in the same week, then the earnings for the remainder of such fifty-two weeks shall be divided by the number of weeks remaining after the time so lost has been deducted. Where the employment prior to the injury extended over a period of less than fifty-two weeks, the method of dividing the earnings during that period by the number of weeks and parts thereof which the employee earned wages shall be followed, provided results just and fair to both parties will thereby be obtained. Where by reason of the shortness of the time Wage basis during which the employee has been in the employment of his employer, or the casual nature or terms of the employment, it is impracticable to compute the average weekly earnings as above defined, regard shall be had to the average weekly amount which during the fifty-two weeks prior to the injury was being earned by a person in the same grade, employed at the same work by the same employer, and if there is no such person so employed, by a person in the same grade employed in the same class of employment in the same district. Wherever allowance of any character made to an employee in lieu of wages are specified as part of the wage contract, they shall be deemed a part of his earnings.

Additional allowance for children.

(h) Wherever in this section there is a provision for fifty (50) per centum such per centum shall be increased five (5) per centum for each totally dependent child of the employee under the age of eighteen years at the time of the injury to the employee until such per centum shall reach a maximum of sixty (60) per centum. (2) Wherever in this section a weekly maximum compensation of twelve dollars ($12) is provided such maximum compensation shall be increased in the following cases to the following amounts: Thirteen ($13) dollars in case of an employee with one totally dependent child under the age of eighteen years at the time of the injury to the employee. Fourteen ($14) dollars in case of an employee with two totally dependent children under the age of eighteen years at the time of the injury to the employee. Fifteen ($15) dollars in case of an employee with three or more totally dependent children under the age of eighteen years at the time of the injury to the employee. The increase in the above per centum and in the maximum amount shall be paid only so long as the child upon which the increase is based remain under the age of eighteen years.

Dependents.

Sec. 14. (1) Wife and children conclusively presumed wholly dependent; when. For the purposes of this act the following described persons shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent:

(a) Wife, unless it be known that she was voluntarily living apart from her husband at the time of his injury or death or unless it be shown she was not married to the deceased at the time of the accident or for a reasonable period prior to his death, or unless it be shown that the husband was not in any way contributing to her support.

(b) Children between sixteen and eighteen years of age or those over eighteen, if physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, shall prima facie, be considered dependent.

Total dependents.

(3) Wife, child, husband, mother, father, grandmother, grandfather, sister, brother, mother-in-law and father-in-law who were wholly supported by the deceased workman at the time of his death and for a reasonable period of time immediately prior thereto shall be considered his total dependents, and payment of compensation shall be made to them in the order named.

Partial dependents.

(3A) Any member of a class named in subdivision (3), who regularly derived part of his support from the earnings of the deceased workman at the time of his death and for a reasonable period of time immediately prior thereto, shall be considered his partial dependent and payment of compensation shall be made to such partial dependents in the order named.

Death benefits.

(4) In death cases where the death results proximately from the accident within three years compensation payable to dependents shall be computed on the following basis and shall be paid to the persons entitled thereto without administration.

(5) If the deceased employee leave a dependent widow or dependent husband and no dependent child, there shall be paid to the widow thirty per centum of the average weekly earnings of deceased.

(6) If the deceased employee leave a dependent widow or dependent husband and one dependent child, there shall be paid to the widow for the benefit of herself and such child forty per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased.

(7) If the deceased employee leave a dependent widow or dependent husband and either two or three dependent children, there shall be paid to the widow for the benefit of herself and such children fifty per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased.

(8) If the deceased employee leave a dependent widow or dependent husband and four or more dependent children, there shall be paid to the widow for the benefit of herself and such children sixty per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased.

(8A) In all cases where compensation is payable to a widow for the benefit of herself and dependent child or children the court shall have power to determine in its discretion what portion of the compensation shall be applied for the benefit of any such child or children and may order the same paid to a guardian.

(9) In case of remarriage of a widow of an employee who had dependent children, the unpaid balance of compensation, which would otherwise become due to her, shall be paid to such children.

(10) If the deceased employee leave a dependent orphan, there shall be paid thirty per centum of the average weekly earnings of deceased, with ten per centum additional for each additional orphan with a maximum of sixty per centum of such wages.

(11) If the deceased employee leave a dependent husband and no dependent child, there shall be paid to the husband twenty-five per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased.

(12) If the deceased employee leave no widow or child or husband entitled to any payment hereunder, but should leave a parent or parents, either or both of whom are wholly dependent on the deceased, there shall be paid if only one parent, twenty-five per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased and if both parents, thirty-five per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased to such parent or parents.

(13) If the deceased leave no dependent widow or dependent child or husband or parent entitled to any payment hereunder, but leaves a grandparent, brother, sister, mother-in-law or father-in-law wholly dependent on him for support, there shall be paid such dependent, if but one, twenty per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased, or if more than one, twenty-five per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased, divided between or among them share and share alike.

(14) If compensation is being paid under part 2 of this act to any dependent, such compensation shall cease upon the death or marriage of such dependent, and the dependency of a child shall terminate with the age of 18 unless otherwise provided herein.

(15) Partial dependents shall be entitled to receive only that proportion of the benefits provided for actual dependents which the average amount of the earnings regularly contributed by the deceased to such partial dependent, at and for a reasonable time immediately prior to the injury bore to the total income of the dependent during the same time.

(16) In all cases where death resulted to an employee caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment the employer shall pay, in addition to the medical and hospital expenses provided for in section 18 the expense of last sickness, and burial, not exceeding in amount one hundred dollars ($100), except in cases where an insurer of the deceased or a benefit association is liable therefor, or for a part thereof, in such case the employer shall not be required to pay any part of such expense, for which such insurer or benefit association is liable unless such non-payment by the employer would diminish the benefits received by the dependent of the deceased from any such insurer or benefit association. In case dispute arises as to the reasonable value of the services rendered in connection with the last sickness and burial, the same shall be approved by the court before payment, after such reasonable notice to interested parties as the court may require. If the deceased leaves no dependents no compensation shall be payable, except as provided by this subsection.

(17) The compensation payable in case of death wholly dependent shall be subject to maximum compensation of twelve dollars ($12) per week and a minimum of five dollars ($5) per week: Provided, That if at the time of injury the employee receives earnings of less than five dollars ($5) per week, then the compensation shall be the full amount of such earnings per week. The compensation payable to partial dependents shall be subject to a maximum of twelve dollars ($12) per week and a minimum of five dollars ($5) per week: Provided, That if the income loss of the said partial dependents by such death is less than five dollars ($5) per week, then the dependents shall receive the full amount of their income loss. This compensation shall be paid during dependency not exceeding three hundred (300) weeks, payments to be made at the interval when the earnings were payable as nearly as may be.

(18) In computing and paying compensation to orphans or other children, in all cases, only those under eighteen years of age, or those over eighteen years of age, who are physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, shall be included; the former to receive compensation only during the time they are under eighteen, the latter for the time they are so incapacitated, within the period of three hundred (300) weeks.

(19) Total dependents shall be entitled to take compensation in the order named in subsection (3) above, until the per centum of the average weekly earnings of the deceased during the time and as specified in subsection (17) shall have been exhausted; but the total compensation to be paid to all total dependents of a deceased employee shall not exceed in the aggregate twelve dollars ($12) per week, except as otherwise provided herein.

Preexisting conditions.

(20) If the degree or duration of disability resulting from an accident is increased or prolonged because of a preexisting injury or infirmity the employer shall be liable only for the disability that would have resulted from the accident had the earlier injury or infirmity not existed.

Additional allowance for children.

(21) Wherever in this section there is a provision for fifty (50) per centum such per centum shall be increased five (5) per centum for each totally dependent child of the deceased employee under the age of eighteen years at the time of the death of the employee until such per centum shall reach a maximum of sixty (60) per centum. Wherever in this section a weekly maximum compensation of twelve ($12) dollars is provided such maximum compensation shall be increased in the following cases to the following amounts: Thirteen ($13) dollars in case the deceased employee leaves one totally dependent child under the age of eighteen years at the time of the injury to the deceased employee. Fourteen ($14) dollars in case the deceased employee leaves two totally dependent children under the age of eighteen years at the time of the injury to the deceased employee. Fifteen ($15) dollars in case the deceased employee leaves three or more totally dependent children under eighteen years of age at the time of the injury to the deceased employee. The increase in the above per centum and in the maximum amount shall be paid only so long as the child upon which the increase is based remains under the age of eighteen years.

Limit on payments.

SEC. 14½. In no case hereunder except as otherwise provided herein shall the compensation paid hereunder be more than twelve ($12) dollars per week, nor (except as herein otherwise provided), less than five ($5) dollars per week, and in no case shall the total amount of compensation exceed five thousand ($5,000) dollars.

Payments.

SEC. 15. If compensation is being paid under this act to any dependent, such compensation shall cease upon the death or marriage of such dependent. Where compensation is being paid under this act to any dependent, in no event shall such dependents receive more than the proportion which the amount received of the deceased employee's income during his life bears to the compensation provided hereunder.

Joint employers.

SEC. 16. In case any employee for whose injury or death compensation is payable under part 2 of this act shall, at the time of the injury, be employed and paid jointly by two or more employers subject to this act, such employers shall contribute the payment of such compensation in the proportion of their several earnings liability to such employee. If one or more but not all of such employers should be subject to part 2 of this act, and otherwise subject to liability for compensation hereunder, then the liability of such of them as are so subject, shall be to pay the proportion of the entire compensation which their proportionate earnings liability bears to the entire earnings of the employee: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall prevent any arrangement between such employers for a different distribution, as between themselves, of the ultimate burden of such compensation.

Sec. 17. In case of temporary total or temporary partial disability no compensation shall be allowed for the first two weeks after disability except as provided by section 18, nor in any case unless the employer has actual knowledge of the injury or is notified thereof within the period specified in section 19. Compensation shall begin with the third week and in the event the disability from the injury exists for a period as much as four weeks compensation for the first two weeks after the injury shall be added to and payable with the first installment due the employee after the expiration of the four weeks.

Waiting time.

Sec. 18. In addition to the compensation herein provided the employer shall pay the actual cost of reasonably necessary medical and surgical treatment and attention, medicine, medical and surgical supplies, crutches and apparatus, as may be obtained by the injured employee during the first sixty (60) days of disability (or in case of death within said sixty (60) days, obtained during the period occurring between the time of the injury and his death therefrom): Provided, however, That the total liability of the employer under this section shall not exceed the aggregate of one hundred dollars, and further, that the pecuniary liability of the employer for such services rendered the employee shall be limited to such charges as prevail for similar treatment in the community where the injured employee resides. All cases of dispute as to the value of such services shall be determined by the tribunal having jurisdiction of the claim of the injured employee for compensation: And provided, further, That (except in an emergency it is necessary; or in the event medical and surgical service and attention is not readily obtainable, under contract for same; or the employer does not promptly furnish the same, as hereinafter provided), if the employer shall furnish, free of charge to the injured employee such medical and surgical treatment and attention, medical and surgical supplies, crutches and apparatus, he shall not be liable under this section, except for that he may fail to furnish: And provided, further, In the event the injured employee obtains the same under a contract between him and another (or the employer), existing at the time of the injury, the employer shall be liable to pay (or repay, as the case may be), only the cost of the same under the terms of said contract, but in no event to exceed the aggregate of one hundred dollars as hereinabove provided: Provided, further, That the employer may, if he so elects, furnish proper and efficient medical and surgical treatment and attention and services herein provided for free of charge to the injured employee during such sixty (60) days or such time thereafter as he desires to furnish the same, and such employees shall accept the same. The injured employee must submit himself to the examination by the employer's physician at all reasonable times if requested to do so by the employer, but the employee shall have the right to have a physician of his own selection present at such examination, in which case the employee shall be liable to such physician for his services. The employer shall pay for the services of the physician making the examination at the instance of the employer. And in case of dispute as to the injury, the court may, at the instance of either party or of its own motion, appoint a neutral physician of good standing and ability to make an examination of the injured person and report his findings to the court, the expense of which examination shall be borne equally by the parties. If the injured employee refuses to comply with any reasonable request for examination, or refuses to submit to medical and surgical treatment and attention or refuses to accept the medical service which the employer elects to furnish under the provisions of this act, his right to compensation shall be suspended, and no compensation shall be payable for the period of such refusal. Any physician whose services are furnished or paid for by the employer, or any physician of the injured employee, and who treats or makes or is present at any examination of an injured employee may be required to testify as to any knowledge by him in the course of such treatment or examination as same relates to the injury or disability arising therefrom. In all death claims where the cause of death is obscure or is disputed, any

- interested party may require an autopsy, the cost of which is to be borne by the party demanding the same.
- Notice of accident. Sec. 19. Every injured employee or his representative shall within five days after the occurrence of an accident give or cause to be given to the employer written notice of the accident and the employee if he fails to give such notice shall not be entitled to physicians or medical fees nor any compensation which may have accrued under the terms of this act, unless it can be shown that the party required to give such notice had been prevented from doing so by reason of physical or mental incapacity, other than minority, or fraud or deceit, or equal good reason, but no compensation shall be payable unless such written notice is given within ninety days after the occurrence of the accident, or where death results within ninety (90) days after the death.
- Form, etc. Sec. 20. The notice referred to in section 19 may be served personally upon the employer, or upon any agent of the employer upon whom a summons may be served in civil action, or by sending it by registered mail to the employer at the last known residence or business place thereof within the State, and shall be substantially in the following form: Notice—You are hereby notified that an injury was received by (name) who was in your employ at (place) while engaged as (kind of work) under the superintendency of on or about the day of, 19 . . at about . . . o'clock . . m., and who is now located at (give town, street and number) that so far as now known, the nature of the injury was and that compensation may be claimed therefor. (Signed) (Giving address) Dated, 19 But no variation from this form shall be material if the notice is sufficient to advise the employer that a certain employee, by name, received a specified injury in the course of his employment on or about a specified time, at or near a certain place specified.
- Action in one year. Sec. 20a. In case of a personal injury all claims for compensation shall be forever barred unless within one year after the accident the parties shall have agreed upon the compensation payable under this act or unless within one year after the accident one of the parties shall have filed a verified complaint as provided in section 28 hereof. In case of death all claims for compensation shall be forever barred unless within one year after death, when the death results proximately from the accident within three years, the parties shall have agreed upon the compensation under this act or unless within one year after such death one of the parties shall have filed a verified complaint as provided in section 28 hereof. Where, however, payments of compensations have been made in any case, said limitations shall not take effect until the expiration of one year from the time of making the last payment. In case of physical or mental incapacity, other than minority, of the injured person or his dependents to perform or cause to be performed any act required within the time in this section specified the period of limitation in any such case shall be extended to become effective one year from the date when such incapacity ceases.
- Settlement of disputes. Sec. 21. (1) In case of a dispute between employer and employee or between the dependents of a deceased employee and his employer with respect to the right to compensation under this act or the amount thereof either party may submit the controversy to the circuit court of the county which would have jurisdiction of a civil case in tort between the same parties. Such controversy shall be heard and determined by such judge or judges of said court as would hear and determine a civil action between the same parties arising out of tort and in case there is more than one judge of such court such controversies shall be set and assigned for hearing under the same rules and statutes that civil actions in tort are set and assigned; such court is empowered to hear and determine such controversies in a summary manner, that the decision of the judge hearing the same shall be conclusive and binding between the parties, subject to the right of appeal in this act provided for. When willful misconduct on the part of the employee is set up by the employer as it is provided for herein, the employer may, upon appearing, demand a jury to hear and determine, under the direction of the court, the issues involved in this defense. If the employer fails to demand a jury upon appearing, the employee may demand a jury to try such issues by filing his demand within five days after the appearance of the employer. When a jury is demanded by either party the court must submit the issue of fact as to willful misconduct set up by the employer to the jury, for a special finding of the facts subject to the usual powers of the court over verdicts rendered contrary to the evidence or the law, but the judge must determine all other questions involved in the controversy without a jury. Upon setting up such defense the employer must serve a copy of the plea or answer setting up the defense upon the employee or his attorney of record. For the purpose of hearing and determining controversies between employer and employee or the dependents of a deceased employee and the employer, arising under this act, the circuit court shall be deemed always in session. (2) If at any time there are adverse claimants to compensation hereunder the employer in submitting said claim to said circuit court may suggest in writing said claimants and they shall be required to interplead and said court shall determine and decree to which claimant or claimants such compensation is justly due and said employer upon complying with the order of such judge shall be released from the claims of any other claimants thereto. From such decree any party aggrieved may by certiorari within 30 days thereafter appeal to the Supreme Court of Alabama.

SEC. 22. Compensation for the death of an employee shall be paid only to dependents who at the time of the death of the injured employee were actually residents of the United States. No right of action to recover damages for the death of an employee shall exist in favor or for the benefit of any person who was not a resident of the United States at the time of the death of such employee.

Alien beneficiaries.

SEC. 23. The amounts of compensation payable periodically hereunder, either by agreement of the parties, approved by the court, or by decision of the court, may be commuted to one or more lump sum payments, except compensation due for death or permanent total disability, or for permanent partial disability resulting from total loss of hearing or from the loss of an arm or a hand or a foot or a leg or an eye or of more than one such member. These may be commuted only with the consent of the circuit court. In making such commutations, the lump sum payments shall, in the aggregate, amount to a sum equal to the present value of all future installments of compensation calculated on a six per cent basis.

Lump sums.

SEC. 24. All amounts paid by the employer and received by the employee or his dependents under settlements made under section 12b, shall be final; but the amount of any award payable periodically for more than six months may be modified as follows: (a) At any time by agreement of the parties and approved by the court. (b) If the parties cannot agree, then at any time after six (6) months from the date of the award an application may be made to the court by either party on the ground of increase or decrease of incapacity due solely to the injury. In such case the same procedure shall be followed as in section 28 in case of disputed claim for compensation.

Review of awards.

SEC. 25. At any time after the amount of any award has been agreed upon by the parties, or found and ordered by the court, a sum equal to the present value of all future installments of compensation calculated on a six per cent basis, may (where death or the nature of the injury renders the amount of future payments certain) by leave of court, be paid by the employer to any savings bank or trust company of this State or any national bank doing business in this State to be approved and designated by the court, and such sum, together with all interest thereon, shall thereafter be held in trust for the employee or the dependents of the employee, who shall have no further recourse against the employer. The payment of such sum by the employer, evidenced by the receipts in duplicate of the trustees, one of which shall be filed with the probate judge of the county in which the injury or death occurred, and the other filed with the clerk of the circuit court, shall operate as a satisfaction of said award as to the employer. Payments from said fund shall be made by the trustee in the same amounts and at the same time as are herein required of the employer until said fund and interest shall be exhausted. In the appointment of the trustee, preference shall be given, in the discretion of the court, to the choice of the injured employee or the dependents of the deceased employee, as the case may be: Provided, further, That in the event the right to receive compensation should terminate on account of death, becoming of age, or marriage or for any other cause as provided in this act the balance remaining in said bank or trust company after such termination shall be returned by them to the employer, his successors or assigns.

Payment to trustee.

Security of payments.

Sec. 26. In all cases in which the award or judgment is payable in installments and default has been made in the payment of any installment, the owner or interested party may, upon the expiration of thirty days from said default and upon five days' notice to the defaulting employer or defendant, move for a modification of the judgment or award by ascertaining the cash or present value of same, under the rule of computation contained in section 25, and upon which execution may issue unless the defaulting employer enter into a good and sufficient bond, to be approved by the circuit judge, securing the payment of all future installments, and forthwith pay all past due ones with interest thereon since due. Said bond to be recorded upon the minutes of the circuit court. Claims for compensation or awards, or judgments or agreements to pay compensation owned by an injured employee or his dependents shall not be assignable and shall be exempt from seizure or sale or garnishment for the payment of any debt or liability. There shall be no right to waive this exemption.

Payments preferred.

Sec. 27. The right to compensation and of compensation awarded any injured employee or for death claims to his dependents shall have the same preference against the assets of the employer as other unpaid wages for labor; but such compensation shall not become a lien upon the property of third persons by reason of such preference.

Procedure.

Sec. 28. Procedure in cases of dispute shall be as follows: Either party to a controversy arising under this act may file a verified complaint in the circuit court of the county which would have jurisdiction of an action between the same parties arising out of tort which shall set forth the names and residences of the parties and the circumstances relating to the employment at the time of the injury with a full description of the injury, its nature and extent, the amount of the average earnings received by the employee which would affect his compensation under this act, the knowledge of the employer of the injury or the notice to him thereof, which must be of the kind provided for in this act, and such other facts as may be necessary to enable the court to determine what, if any, compensation the employee, or in case of a deceased employee, his dependents, are entitled to under this act. The complaint shall be filed with the clerk of the court and upon service of such complaint, as hereinafter provided for, any judge of such court shall make an order fixing the time and place for the hearing thereof, which time shall be not less than thirty days after the service of summons to the employer as hereinafter provided for. Summons to answer such complaint shall be issued by the clerk, accompanied by a copy of the complaint, both of which shall be served by the sheriff upon the employer. Within five days prior to the date fixed for the hearing of the controversy the employer shall file a verified answer to the complaint setting up the facts which he relies on in defense thereof. At the time fixed for hearing, or any adjournment thereof, the court shall hear such witnesses as may be presented by each party, and in a summary manner without a jury, unless one is demanded to try the issue of willful misconduct on the part of the employee decide the controversy. This determination shall be filed in writing with the clerk of the said court, and judgment shall be entered thereon in the same manner as in causes tried in the said circuit court, and shall contain a statement of the law and facts and conclusions as determined by said judge. Subsequent proceedings thereon shall only be for the recovery of moneys thereby determined to be due: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as limiting the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court or Court of Appeals to review questions of law by certiorari. Costs may be awarded by said court in his discretion, and when so awarded the same costs shall be allowed, taxed and collected as for like services and proceedings in civil cases: Provided, That if it shall appear that the employer, prior to the commencement of the action, made to the person or persons entitled thereto a written offer of compensation in specific terms, which terms were in accordance with the provisions of this act, then no costs shall be awarded or taxed against such employer. Whenever any decision or order is made and filed by the court upon any matter arising under part 2 of this act, the clerk of the court shall forthwith make and forward to the judge of probate of the county in which the complaint was filed a certified copy of such decision or order with any memorandum of the judge and of any judgment entered. No fee or other charge shall be collected therefor: Provided, The plaintiff or owner of any judgment so certified may have the same registered by the probate judge upon the payment of the fee now fixed by law for registering judgments, and the same shall become a lien in like manner as other registered judgments, unless the same is made a preferred lien by other provisions of some law. When the judgment, however, is for a sum not due, that is payable periodically, the defendant may discharge the registered lien by giving a bond for the payment of same to be approved by the probate judge and recorded and for which he shall receive the same for registration: And provided further, That no execution shall issue where such judgment is payable periodically unless default is made in the payment of one or more of said periodical payments.

Sec. 28A. Any judgment rendered under the provisions of this act, either by award or by settlement, and entered on the minutes of any court shall be by said court discharged and marked satisfied upon presentment to said court or the clerk thereof of a release or discharge of said judgment executed by the party in whose favor the same runs, and acknowledged in the same manner as conveyances are acknowledged, or, upon presentment by the employer or his representative, of an affidavit that said judgment has been in accordance with its terms fully satisfied and discharged, together with satisfactory proof in the way of vouchers or checks duly endorsed by the party in whose favor said judgment ran.

Judgments.

Sec. 29. Every right of action for death by wrongful act or for injury by negligence accruing to an injured employee prior to the taking effect of this act is continued and preserved under the existing law.

Existing rights of action.

Sec. 30. Every employer who accepts the provisions of this act relative to the payment of compensation may at his option insure and keep insured his liability thereunder in some insurance corporation, association, organization or insurance association or corporation or association formed of employers and workmen or formed by a group of employers to insure the risks under part 2 of this act operating by the mutual assessment or other plans or otherwise: Provided, Such insurance association, organization or corporation shall have first had its contract and plan of business approved in writing by the commissioner of insurance of Alabama and have been authorized by said insurance commissioner to transact the business of workman's compensation insurance in this State and under such charter or plan. Those writing such insurance shall in every case be subject to the conditions of this section hereinafter named. Nothing herein contained shall prevent an employer from insuring only a particular class or classes of employees or class, form or kind of risks all or any part thereof or from limiting such insurance either as to maximum or taking out insurance policies with such other limitations as are authorized by law, or from carrying catastrophe insurance. Such policies shall contain a clause to the effect that as between the workman and the insurer, notice to and knowledge by the employer of the occurrence of the injury shall be deemed notice and knowledge on the part of the insurer; that jurisdiction of the employer for the purposes of this act shall be jurisdiction of the insurer, and that the insurer will in all things be bound by and subject to the awards, adjudgment or judgment rendered against such employer upon the risks so insured. Such policies must provide that the workman shall have equitable lien upon any amount which shall become owing on account of such policy to the employer from the insurer, and in case of the legal incapacity or inability of the employer to receive the said amount and pay it over to the workman or dependents, the said insurer will pay the same direct to the said workman or dependents, thereby discharging all obligations under the policy to the employer and all of the obligations of the employer and the insurer to the workman, but such policies shall contain no obligations relieving the insurance company from payment when the employer becomes insolvent or discharged in bankruptcy or otherwise, during the period the policy is in force, if the compensation remains owing. The insurer must be one authorized by law to conduct such business in the State of Alabama, and authority is hereby granted to all insurance companies writing such insurance to include in their policies, in addition to the requirements now provided by law, the additional requirements, terms and conditions in this section provided. Every insurance corporation, mutual corporation, reciprocal exchange or association authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this State and which insures employers against liability for compensation under the provisions of this act shall file with the insurance commissioner its classification of risks and premiums relating thereto and any subsequent proposed classification of risks and premiums, together with the basic rates and merit rating schedules, if a system of schedule rating or merit rating be used by such insurance corporation, exchange or association, none of which shall take effect until the insurance commissioner shall have approved the same as reasonable, adequate and not excessive. And within ten days after such approval of said rates, schedules and system of schedule merit rating by said insurance commissioner, he shall make or cause to be made, a sufficient number of printed or typewritten copies of same, for such purpose, and shall mail at least one copy of each of the same to every insurance carrier writing workmen's compensation business in the State of Alabama, at its last address, or at the last address of its designated agent to receive the same, left in writing by such carrier with said insurance commissioner. And every such insurance carrier shall (or if such insurance carrier be a member of or associated with a rating or inspection bureau, either or both of them or a concern or aggregation of like character, it shall cause such rating and inspection bureau, either or both, or concern or aggregation of like character with which it is affiliated to do so) file with the insurance commissioner a full and complete statement of the actuarial and underwriting experience, data and the like in its possession, from which and upon which said rates, schedules and systems so filed were ascertained, calculated and constructed, and within six months after the expiration of each succeeding six months, file a like statement of all actuarial and underwriting data and the like, pertaining to such rates, schedules and system, accumulated or acquired by it during the preceding six months. Upon failure to file said statement within the time specified above, said rates, schedules or systems may be presumed by the insurance commissioner, without more [examination] to be excessive, unreasonable or inadequate to prove the necessary reserves, or discriminatory as the case may be. The insurance commissioner may withdraw his approval of any premium rate or schedule made by any such insurance corporation, association, mutual corporation or reciprocal exchange if in his judgment such premium rate or schedule is excessive or unreasonable or discriminatory or is inadequate to provide the necessary reserves. Nothing in this act contained or in any other law of this State shall affect the right of any insurance corporation, or any mutual or reciprocal insurance corporation or association to issue participating policies or contracts and to pay savings, refunds or dividends upon such policies or contracts. No agreement by an employee to pay to an employer any portion of the cost of insuring his risk under this act shall be valid unless such agreement between the employer and employee the plan of which is part of a contract [is] approved in writing by the commissioner of insurance of the State of Alabama. But it shall be lawful for the employer and the workman to agree to carry the risks covered by part 2 of this act in conjunction with other and greater risks and providing other and greater benefits such as additional compensation, accident, sickness or old age insurance or benefits, and the fact that such plan involves a contribution by the workman shall not prevent its validity if such plan has been approved in writing by the commissioner of insurance of Alabama. Any employer who shall make any charge or deduction prohibited by this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. If the employer shall insure to his employees the payment of the compensation provided by part 2 of this act and according to the full benefits thereof and with full coverage under this act in a corporation or association authorized to do business in the State of Alabama and approved by the commissioner of insurance of the State of Alabama, and if the employer shall post a notice or notices in a conspicuous place or in conspicuous places about his place of employment, stating that he is insured and by whom insured, and if the employer shall further file a copy of such notice with the commissioner of insurance, then, and in such case, any suits or actions brought by an injured employee or his dependents shall be brought directly against the insurer, and the employer or insured shall be released from any further liability: Provided, That in case of insolvency or bankruptcy of such insurance company or in case it can not be reached by due diligence by process in this State, the employer shall not be released from liability under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That should any recovery had in excess of the amount of the insurance carried the employer shall be liable for such excess. The return of any execution upon any judgment of an employee against any such insurance company unsatisfied in whole or in part shall be conclusive evidence of the insolvency of such insurance company for the purpose of this act and in case of the adjudication of bankruptcy or insolvency of any such insurance company by any court of competent jurisdiction, proceedings may be brought by the employee against the employer in the first instance or against such employer and insurance company jointly or severally or in any pending proceeding against any insurance company, the employer may be joined at any time after such adjudication.

SEC. 31. (1) Any person who creates or carries into operation any fraudulent scheme, artifice or device to enable him to execute work without himself being responsible to the workman for the provisions of this act, shall himself be included in the term "employer," and be subject to all the liabilities of employers under this act. But this section shall not be construed to cover or mean an owner who lets a contract to a contractor in good faith, nor to a contractor who, in good faith, lets to a subcontractor a portion of his contract: Provided, however, That no person shall be deemed a contractor or subcontractor so as to make him liable to pay compensation within the meaning of this section, who performs his work upon the employer's premises, and with the employers' tools or appliances and under the employer's direction; nor one who does what is commonly known as "piecework," or in any way where the system of employment used merely provides a method of fixing the workman's wages. (2) When compensation is claimed from, or proceedings taken against, a person under subdivision 1 of this section, the compensation shall be calculated with reference to the wage the workman was receiving from the person by whom he was immediately employed at the time of the injury. (3) The employer shall not be liable or required to pay compensation for injuries due to the acts or omissions of third persons not at the time in the service of the employer, nor engaged in the work in which the injury occurs, except as provided in section 32.

SEC. 32. (1) Third party under part 2. Where an injury or death for which compensation is payable under part 2 of this act is caused under circumstances also creating a legal liability for damages on the part of any party other than the employer, such party also being subject to the provisions of part 2 of this act, the employee in case of injury, or his dependents in case of death, may, at his or their option, proceed either at law against such party to recover damages, or against the employer for compensation under part 2 of this act, but not against both. If the employee in case of injury, or his dependents in case of death, shall bring an action for the recovery of damages against such party other than the employer or his insurance carrier, the amount thereof, manner in which, and the person to whom the same are payable, shall be as provided for in part 2 of this act and not otherwise: Provided, That in no case shall such party be liable to any person other than the employee or his dependents for any damages growing out of or resulting from such injury or death. If the employee or his dependents shall elect to receive compensation from the employer, then the latter or his insurance carrier shall be subrogated to the right of the employee or his dependents, to recover against such other party, and may bring legal proceedings against such party and recover the aggregate amount of compensation payable by him to such employee or his dependents hereunder, together with the costs of such action and reasonable attorney's fees expended by him therein. (2) Third party not under part 2.—Where the injury or death for which compensation is payable under part 2 of this act was caused under circumstances also creating a legal liability for damages on the part of any party other than the employer, such party not being subject to the provisions of part 2 of this act, legal proceedings may be taken by the employee or dependents against such other party to recover damages, notwithstanding the payment by the employer, or his liability to pay compensation hereunder. But in such case, if the action against such other party is brought by the injured employee, or in case of his death by his dependents, and judgment is obtained and paid, or settlement is made with such other party, either with or without suit, the employer shall be entitled to deduct from the compensation payable by him the amount actually received by such employee or his dependents: Provided, That if the injured employee, or in case of his death his dependents, shall agree to receive compensation from the employer or shall institute proceedings to recover the same, or accept from the employer any payment on account of such compensation, such employer or his insurance carrier shall be subrogated to all the rights of such employee, or dependents, and may maintain, or in case an action has already been instituted, may continue the action either in the name of the employee or dependents, or in his own name against such other party for the recovery of damages, but such employer shall nevertheless pay over to the injured employee or dependents all sums collected from such other party by judgment or otherwise in excess of the amount of such compensation payable by the employer under part 2 of this act, and costs, attorney's fees, and reasonable expenses incurred by such employer in making such collection or enforcing such liability: Provided, That in no case shall such party be liable to any person other than the employee or his dependents for any damages growing out of or resulting from such injury or death.

Rules to be uniform.

Sec. 33. It shall be the duty of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama, from time to time, as he deems it is necessary, to prepare uniform rules for the circuit judges and circuit courts, which may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act including such forms for orders and decrees as said chief justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama deems best, such rules and forms when so prepared and promulgated by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama shall be followed and used by the said judges and courts.

Commissioner.

Sec. 33a. For the purpose of gathering statistics and performing the duties hereinafterwards required there is hereby created an office known and designated as the compensation commissioner of the State Alabama. The director of the department of archives and history of the State of Alabama shall be ex officio the compensation commissioner of the State of Alabama.

Duties.

Sec. 34. The compensation commissioner of the State of Alabama shall prepare and cause to be printed, at the expense of the State and to be paid for as other supplies are paid for, and upon request furnish free of charge to any employee or employer such blank forms and literature as he shall deem requisite to facilitate or promote the efficient administration of this act other than the papers relating to court proceedings, which as set forth in the section 33 are to be prepared by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama.

Records of accidents.

Sec. 35. Every employer shall hereafter keep a record of all injuries, fatal or otherwise, for which compensation is claimed or paid, received by his employees in the course of their employment, on blanks approved by the compensation commissioner of the State of Alabama. Within fifteen days after the occurrence and knowledge thereof by the employer of an injury to an employee, causing his absence from work for more than fourteen days, for which compensation is claimed or paid a report shall be made in writing and mailed to the compensation commissioner of the State of Alabama on blanks to be procured from such commissioner for this purpose.

SEC. 36. Such employer shall within ten days after the settlement of any cause make a report in writing giving the details of such settlement and mail the same to the compensation commissioner of Alabama on blanks to be procured from the commissioner for such purpose.

Settlements to be reported.

SEC. 37. The clerk of the circuit court shall within ten days after the disposition of any case in his court make a report in writing, giving the details of such disposition, and mail the same to the compensation commissioner of Alabama on blanks to be procured from the commissioner for such purpose.

Courts to make reports.

SEC. 38. Upon the termination of the disability of the injured employee or if the disability extends beyond a period of 60 days then also at the expiration of such period the employer shall make a supplementary report to the compensation commissioner of the State of Alabama on blanks to be procured from the commissioner for such purpose.

Supplementary reports.

SEC. 39. It shall be the duty of the compensation commissioner of the State of Alabama from the records of the insurance commissioner of Alabama and from the reports furnished to him and from such other information as he may obtain, to prepare and submit to the next regular session of the legislature of Alabama upon its convening a detailed and statistical report showing the results, as fully as the same can be shown, of the operation of this act, the number of employers carrying their own insurance, the number of employers insuring their risks with insurance companies, the number of insurance companies, association, or corporations engaged in the business of workmen's compensation insurance in the State of Alabama, the extent of such business, the premium rates charged therefor and a comparison of such premium rates with rates charged in other States, and with such recommendations as he desires to make in reference to the amendment or improvement of this act. For preparing said report, printing the same, and furnishing same such compensation commissioner shall be paid out of the State treasury the necessary reasonable expense therefor and in addition such sum of money as may be approved by the governor of the State of Alabama for his services.

Reports to legislature.

SEC. 40. (1) Whoever makes in the verified complaint in section 28 hereof provided for or in any claim for compensation hereunder any statement knowing it to be false shall be guilty of perjury and must, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than three or more than twenty years. (2) Any person entitled to compensation under this act whose compensation by the terms of this act ceases upon marriage or upon his becoming over the age of eighteen years, or for any other cause herein provided for, knowingly accepts any payments or compensation after marriage, or after he becomes over eighteen years of age, or after the disability for which he is receiving compensation has ceased, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction, may be imprisoned in the county jail or sentenced to hard labor for the county for not more than twelve months, and must also be fined not more than five hundred dollars. (3) Any person knowingly guilty of doing an act amounting to fraud in making or perfecting a settlement under the authority of this act, or by means of fraudulent representation obtaining a settlement from any employee shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction may be imprisoned in the county jail or sentenced to hard labor for the county for not more than twelve months, and must also be fined not more than five hundred dollars. (4) Any person who knowingly presents a false or fictitious claim of injury for compensation hereunder or who aids or assists in the presentation of such false or fictitious claim, knowing the same to be false or fictitious, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction, may be imprisoned in the county jail or sentenced to hard labor for the county for not more than twelve months, and must also be fined not more than five hundred dollars. (5) Any person, upon any hearing before the judge of the circuit court or before the circuit court in reference to any compensation claimed or paid hereunder, who knowingly testifies falsely as to any material fact shall be guilty of perjury and must, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than three nor more than twenty years. (6) Any physician who makes any

Definitions.

Sec. 36 [41]. Throughout this act the following words and phrases as used therein shall be considered to have the following meaning, respectively, unless the context shall clearly indicate a different meaning in the connection used. (a) The word "compensation" has been used both in part 1 and part 2 of this act to indicate the money benefits to be paid on account of injury or death. Strictly speaking, the benefit which an employee may receive by action at law under part 1 of this act in [is] damages, and this is indicated in section 1. To avoid confusion, the word "compensation" has been used in both parts of the act, but it should be understood that under part 1 the compensation by way of damages is determined by an action at law. (b) "Child" or "children" includes posthumous children and all other children entitled by law to inherit as children of the deceased, also step children who were members of the family of the deceased at the time of his accident and dependent upon him for support. (c) A dependent child or orphan shall be considered to mean an unmarried child under the age of eighteen years, or one over that age who is physically or mentally incapacitated from earning. (d) The term "employer" as used herein shall mean every person not excluded by section 8, who employs another to perform a service for hire and to whom the "employer" directly pays wages, and shall include any person or corporation, copartnership, or association, or group thereof, and shall, if the employer is insured, include his insurer as far as applicable and shall not include one who employs a less number than sixteen in any one business. (e) The term "physician" shall include "surgeon," and in either case shall mean one authorized by law to practice his profession within one of the United States and in good standing in his profession at the time. (f) The term "workman" shall include the plural and all ages and both sexes. (g) The term "employee" and "workman" are used interchangeably and have the same meaning throughout this act, and shall be construed [so] to mean. (h) The terms "wages," "weekly wages" and such expressions shall in all cases, unless the context clearly indicates a different meaning, be construed to mean "average weekly earning."

(2) Every person not excluded by section 8, in the service of another under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work under the laws of the State. Any reference herein to a workman or employee shall where the employee is dead include a reference to his dependents as herein defined if the context so require. (i) The word "accident" as used in the phrases "personal injuries due to accident" or "injuries or death caused by accident" in this act shall, unless a different meaning is clearly indicated by the context, be construed to mean an unexpected or unforeseen event, happening suddenly and violently, with or without human fault, and producing at the time injury to the physical structure of the body, by accidental means. (j) Personal injuries, etc.—Without otherwise affecting either the meaning or interpretation of the abridged clause, injuries by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, it is hereby declared: Not to cover workmen except while engaged in, on, or about the premises where their services are being performed, or where their service requires their presence as a part of such service at the time of the accident, and during the hours of service as such workmen, and shall not include an injury caused by the act of a third person or fellow employee intended to injure the employee because of reasons personal to him, and not directed against him as an employee, or because of his employment, and it shall not include a disease unless the disease results proximately from the accident. (k) Wherever in this act the singular is used, the plural shall be included; where the masculine gender is used, the feminine and neuter shall be included. (l) Amputation.—Amputations between the elbow and wrist shall be considered as the equivalent to the loss of a hand, and the amputation between the knee and the ankle shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a foot. (m) "The court" as used herein shall mean the circuit court which would have jurisdiction in an ordinary civil case involving a claim for the injuries or death in question, and "the judge" shall mean a judge of said court. (n) As to constitutionality.—In case for any reason any paragraph or any provision of this act shall be questioned in any court of last resort and shall be held by such court to be unconstitutional or invalid, the same shall not be held to affect any other paragraph or provision of this act, except that parts 1 and 2 are hereby declared to be inseparable and if either part be declared void or inoperative in an essential part so that the whole of such part must fall, the other part shall fall with it and not stand alone. Part 1 of this act shall not apply in cases where part 2 becomes operative in accordance with the provisions thereof, but shall apply in all other cases, and in such cases shall be in extension or modification of the common law.

ACTS OF 1915.

CHAP. 71.—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

SECTION 1. Any person or persons, partnership, joint-stock company, association, or corporation employing five or more employees in connection with mining operations carried on in this Territory, who shall not have given notice of his, her, their, or its election to reject the provisions of this act in the manner hereinafter provided, or who having given such notice shall, prior to the time that an employee is injured, as hereinafter referred to, have waived the same in the manner hereinafter provided, shall be liable to pay compensation, in accordance with the schedule herein adopted, to each of his, her, their, or its employees who receives a personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his or her employment, or to the beneficiaries named herein, as the same are hereinafter designated and defined, in all cases where the employee shall be so injured and such injuries shall result in his or her death: Provided, The employee so injured had not, prior to the time of being so injured, given notice of his or her election to reject the provisions of this act in the manner hereinafter provided, or having given such notice had prior to such time waived the same in the manner hereinafter provided.

Employees in mining operations.

The compensation to which such employee so injured, or in case of his or her death, if death results from such injury, such beneficiaries, shall be entitled, and for which such employer shall be legally liable, shall be as follows:

Compensation for—

(A) In the event of the death of any such employee resulting from such injury, where such employee at the time of his death was married, his widow shall be entitled to receive the sum of three thousand ($3,000) dollars.

Death;

(B) (as amended by chapter 44, Acts of 1917). In those cases where such married employee had children under the age of sixteen (16) years at the time of his death, his widow shall be entitled to receive in addition to the sum above specified, the sum of six hundred dollars ($600) for each child under the age of sixteen (16) years, or child wholly dependent upon his or her parents for support by reason of physical or mental incompetency, or unborn or posthumous child which such employee left at the time of his decease, but not to exceed in all the sum of six thousand dollars ($6,000).

(C) In those cases where such employee left either father or mother or both, dependent upon him for support at the time of his death, the sum of six hundred ($600) dollars shall be paid to such father or mother or both, in addition to the sum provided for and made payable to the widow. In no case, however, is the total sum to be paid hereunder to exceed the sum of six thousand ($6,000) and the payments to which the widow and children may be entitled shall be first paid out of said sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars.

(D) In those cases where such deceased employee was unmarried at the time of his or her death survived by either his or her father or mother, who was at the time of his or her death dependent upon him or her for support, such father or mother shall be paid the sum of one thousand two hundred ($1,200) dollars.

(E) Where such deceased employee was survived by his or her father and mother, both dependent upon him or her for support at the time of his or her death, such father and mother dependent upon him or her for support shall be paid the sum of one thousand two hundred ($1,200) dollars each.

(F) In those cases where such deceased employee was a widower at the time of his death, but left one or more minor orphan children, there shall be paid the sum of three thousand ($3,000) dollars, and the further sum of six hundred ($600) dollars for each orphan child under the age of sixteen (16) years: Provided, The total amount paid shall not exceed six thousand ($6,000) dollars; and the judge of the probate court of the precinct wherein such accident or injury occurred shall appoint a guardian for all said children, who shall be entitled to and who shall be paid the amount specified in this paragraph for the benefit of said orphan children, and shall divide three thousand ($3,000) dollars thereof equally among such children and divide the surplus, if any, among the children under sixteen (16) years of age.

(G) In those cases where such deceased employee is at the time of his or her death unmarried, and leaves no children nor father nor mother dependent upon him or her as above specified, the employer shall be required to pay the funeral expenses of the deceased, not to exceed the sum of one hundred fifty ($150) dollars, and such other expenses, if any, arising after the injury and before the death, not to exceed the further sum of one hundred fifty ($150) dollars.

Permanent total disability; Where any such employee receiving an injury arising out of and in the course of his or her employment as the result of which he or she is totally and permanently disabled, he or she shall be entitled to receive compensation as follows:

(a) If such employee was at the time of his injury married, he shall be entitled to receive four thousand eight hundred ($4,800) dollars, with six hundred ($600) dollars additional for each child under the age of sixteen (16) years, but the total to be paid shall not exceed six thousand ($6,000) dollars.

(b) If such employee at the time of his injury had no wife or children, but had a mother or father dependent upon him, four thousand two hundred ($4,200) dollars.

(c) In case where such employee who at the time of his injury had both father and mother dependent upon him, four thousand eight hundred ($4,800) dollars.

(d) In those cases where such employee was at the time of his injury a widower or was divorced, but had minor children, he shall receive the sum of three thousand six hundred ($3,600) dollars, with an additional sum of six hundred ($600) dollars for each child below the age of sixteen (16) years: Provided, That the total sum to be paid such employee shall not in any case exceed the sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars.

(e) In those cases where such employee so injured at the time of his injury was unmarried and had no children nor father nor mother dependent upon him, he shall receive the sum of three thousand six hundred ($3,600) dollars.

Permanent partial disability; Where any such employee receives an injury arising out of or in the course of his or her employment, resulting in his or her partial disability, he or she shall be paid in accordance with the following schedule:

For the loss of a thumb:

(a) In case the employee was at the time of the injury unmarried, $480.

(b) In case the employee was married but had no children, $600.

(c) In case the employee was either married or a widower, but had one or more children, $720.

For the loss of an index finger:

(a) In case the employee was at the time of the injury unmarried, $300.

(b) In case that the employee was married but had no children, $390.

(c) In case the employee was either married or a widower, but had one or more children, $480.

For the loss of any other finger than the index finger and thumb, $180.

For the loss of a great toe, $300.

For the loss of any other toe than the great toe, $120.

For the loss of a hand:

(a) In case the employee was at the time of the injury unmarried, $1,440.

(b) In case the employee was married but had no children, $1,920.

(c) In case the employee was either married or a widower and had one child, $1,920 and $240 additional for each of said children, not to exceed, however, the total sum of $2,400.

For the loss of an arm:

(a) In case that the employee was at the time of the injury unmarried, $1,800.

(b) In case the employee was married but had no children, $2,400.

(c) In case the employee was either married or a widower and had one child, $2,400 and $300 additional for each additional child, the total amount not to exceed, however, $3,000.

For the loss of a foot:

(a) In case that the employee was at the time of the injury unmarried, $1,440.

(b) In case the employee was married but had no children, $1,800.

(c) In case the employee was either married or a widower and had one child, $1,920 and $240 additional for each additional child, but not to exceed the total sum of $2,400.

For the loss of a leg:

(a) In case the employee was at the time of the injury unmarried, $1,800.

(b) In case the employee was married but had no children, $2,400.

(c) In case the employee was either married or a widower and had but one child, $2,400 with $300 for each additional child, not to exceed the total sum of $3,000.

For the loss of an eye:

(a) In case the employee was at the time of the injury unmarried, $1,440.

(b) In case the employee was married but had no children, $1,920.

(c) In case the employee was either married or a widower and had one child, $1,920, plus $240 for each additional child, not to exceed, however, the total sum of $2,400.

For the loss of an ear, $240.

For the loss of the nose, $480.

For all other injuries causing temporary disability the employer shall pay the employee during the period of such disability fifty per cent (50%) of his daily average wages: Provided, however, That the period for the payment for temporary disability shall not exceed six (6) months. And in all cases where the injury develops or proves to be such as to entitle the employee to compensation under some provision in this schedule, relating to cases other than temporary disability, and the employee has been paid compensation for temporary disability, the amount so paid him shall be deducted from the amount to which he shall be entitled under such provision in this schedule. Temporary disability.

The loss of both hands, or both arms, or both feet, or both legs, or both eyes, or any two thereof, shall constitute total and permanent disability and be compensated according to the provisions of this act with reference to total and permanent disability.

Amputation between the elbow and the wrist shall be considered equivalent to the loss of a hand, and amputation between the knee and the ankle shall be considered equivalent to the loss of a foot.

Whenever such employee receives an injury, arising out of and in the course of employment, as a result of which he or she is partially disabled, and the disability so received is such as to be permanent in character and such as not to come wholly within any of the specific cases for which provision is herein made, such employee shall be entitled to receive as compensation a sum which bears the same relation to the amount he or she would be entitled to receive hereunder if he or she were totally and permanently disabled that the loss of earning capacity of such employee, by reason of the accident, bears to the earning capacity such employee would have had had he or she not been injured, the amount to be paid in no case to exceed four thousand eight hundred ($4,800) dollars. Proportionate awards.

To illustrate: If said employee were of a class that would entitle him or her to four thousand eight hundred ($4,800) dollars under this schedule, if he or she were totally and permanently disabled and his or her injury would be such as to reduce his or her earning capacity twenty-five (25%) per cent, he or she would be entitled to receive one thousand two hundred ($1,200) dollars, it being the amount that bears the same relation to four thousand eight hundred ($4,800) dollars that twenty-five (25%) per cent does to one hundred (100%) per cent. Should such employee receive an injury that would impair his or her earning capacity seventy-five (75%) per cent, he or she would be entitled to receive three thousand six hundred ($3,600) dollars, it - being the amount that bears the same relation to four thousand eight hundred ($4,800) dollars that seventy-five (75%) per cent does to one hundred (100%) per cent.

- Right to higher awards. SEC. 2. If an injured employee entitled to compensation hereunder shall be paid compensation under any subdivision or part of this schedule [schedule], and it shall afterwards develop that he or she is or was entitled to a higher rate of compensation under some other part or subdivision of this schedule, then and in that event he or she shall receive such higher rate, after first deducting the amount that has already been paid him or her: Provided, however, That no compensation under such increased rate shall be paid unless the disability entitling the employee thereto shall develop within two (2) years after the injury.
- Settlement by agreement. SEC. 3. At any time subsequent to the injury the employer and the employee shall have the right to compromise and settle any claim for injury hereunder in accordance with schedule herein, and the employee shall have the right to give full satisfaction and acquittance therefor and thereby discharge the employer from further liability, and such satisfaction and acquittance shall be binding upon the said employer, employee beneficiaries under this act, and all other persons whatsoever.
- Willful intention. SEC. 4. No compensation shall be allowed or paid for the injury or death of an employee in any case where such injury or death was occasioned by his or her willful intention to bring about the injury or death of himself or herself or of another, or where the employee's intoxication was the proximate cause of the injury.
- Waiting time. SEC. 5. No compensation shall be paid under this act for an injury which does not incapacitate the employee for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages, but if incapacity extends beyond the period of two weeks, compensation shall begin on the fifteenth day after the injury: Provided, however, That if such disability continues for eight weeks or longer, such compensation shall be computed from the date of the injury.
- Proviso. SEC. 6. No contractor or subcontractor shall be entitled to receive compensation under this act, but shall be deemed to be an employer.
- Contractors. SEC. 7. The right to compensation for an injury and the remedy therefor granted by this act shall be in lieu of all rights and remedies as to such injury now existing either at common law or otherwise, and no rights or remedies, except those provided for by this act, shall accrue to employees entitled to compensation under this act, while it is in effect, nor shall any right or remedy, except those provided for by this act, accrue to the personal or legal representatives, dependents, beneficiaries under this act, or next of kin of such employees.
- Remedy exclusive. SEC. 8. Step-parents shall be regarded in this act as parents; and an adopted child, or adopted children, or a stepchild, or children, shall be regarded in this act as issue of the body.
- Step - parents, etc. SEC. 9. Every employee coming within the provisions of this act shall, either at the time he or she is employed or thereafter, furnish his or her employer with a written statement showing the name or names of each and all persons that would be entitled to benefits under the provisions of this act in case such employee should become deceased as a result of an injury received by him or her arising out of and in the course of his or her employment; such written statement shall bear the date upon which the same shall be furnished to the employer and shall be signed by the employee: Provided, That in cases where such employee is unable to write his or her name, his or her name may be affixed to such statement by another, and such employee shall make his or her mark in the manner customary in such cases, and such mark shall be made in the presence of at least one witness, who shall subscribe such statement as a witness.
- Statement as to dependents. In all cases where there shall be a change of beneficiaries, or a change in the address of any beneficiary, the employee may furnish the employer with a new statement showing such change; such new statement to be so furnished shall in all respects conform and comply with the provisions hereof with reference to the original statement to be furnished.
- In all cases where such statement or statements is or are furnished the employer by the employee, the employer shall, if such employee became deceased as a result of an injury received in the course of his or her employment, notify each beneficiary named in the last statement of that fact; such notice shall be given by sending each beneficiary at the address given in the last statement furnished a copy of such notice by registered mail, and an envelope containing such notice addressed to each beneficiary at the address given in said last statement furnished shall be deposited in the post office and registered within ten days after such employee shall have become deceased.

The notice to be so given shall be substantially in the following form:

To _____ (giving the name of the beneficiary):

This is to advise you that _____ (giving the name of the deceased person) became deceased on the _____ day of _____, as a result of an injury received while in the employ of _____. You will take notice that all persons entitled to benefits because of the fact that the above-named employee was injured and as a result thereof became deceased, under the laws of Alaska, are required to serve notice upon the employer within one hundred and twenty (120) days after the date on which such employee became deceased, in accordance with the provisions of the laws of Alaska upon that subject, and that a failure to serve such notice within the time specified and in the manner specified will result in depriving the beneficiary failing to give such notice within such time and in such manner of his or her rights to compensation under the laws of Alaska.

Any failure on the part of the employee to supply the employer with a statement as hereinabove provided shall not work a forfeiture of the right of his or her beneficiaries to benefits hereunder, but it shall relieve the employer of all obligation to give to any of the beneficiaries of such deceased employee notice of the fact that such deceased employee became deceased.

In cases where the employer shall have been furnished with such statement or statements and shall fail to notify the beneficiaries therein named as shown by the last statement furnished, within the time and in the manner herein provided, such beneficiaries who have not been so notified shall have the right to notify the employer of their claim to benefits and file claims and prosecute actions or other proceedings for the recovery thereof, notwithstanding the fact that such notice was not served, as hereinafter provided, within the period of one hundred and twenty (120) days from and after the time that the employee became deceased.

Upon the trial of any issue relating to a beneficiary's right to compensation under this act, any statement furnished an employer, as hereinabove provided, may be offered in evidence by such employer, and when so offered shall be received in evidence and shall be held to establish the fact that the persons named in the statement bore to the deceased the relation shown by such statement at the date thereof.

In all cases where any person claims to be a beneficiary under this act entitled to compensation because of an injury to an employee coming within its provisions, which resulted in his or her death, such beneficiary, or some one in his or her behalf, shall within one hundred and twenty (120) days from and after the death of such employee serve a written notice upon the employer, which notice shall contain the name and address of the person claiming to be such beneficiary, the relationship existing between such beneficiary and the deceased; and if such beneficiary shall be either the father or mother of the deceased, such notice shall also contain a statement showing that such person was dependent upon the earnings of the deceased. Such notice shall be liberally construed, and no claim for compensation shall be denied because of any defect in the notice: Provided, It appears that a notice was served with a bona fide intention to comply with the provisions of this act. Such notice may be served by any person of legal age by delivering a copy thereof to the employer or the employer's agent in person or by leaving a copy thereof at the employer's principal place of business within the Territory of Alaska with some person over the age of eighteen (18) years in the employ of such employer. If the employer can not be found within the Territory and has no known agent or place of business therein, such beneficiary may serve such notice by publishing the same in one issue of any newspaper of general circulation published in the judicial division where the injury, out of which the right to compensation arose, occurred. Except in the cases in this section otherwise expressly provided, no action or other proceedings to recover such compensation shall be brought or maintained, nor shall any claim for such compensation be filed or allowed, as hereinafter provided, unless such notice shall have been served in the manner and within the time herein provided.

Deposits by employers. SEC. 10. In case one or more beneficiaries serve notice upon an employer, as above provided, of his, her, or their claim to compensation under this act, such employer may at any time during the ten days next following the period of one hundred and twenty (120) days during which such notices could be served, deposit six thousand ($6,000) dollars with the clerk of the district court for the division within which such employee was injured, or such employer may deposit with such clerk of the court a bond in the sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars, signed by such employer as principal and two or more good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the judge of the court, conditioned that such employer will pay the sum or sums that may be finally awarded as compensation under this act under the judgment of the court to the person or persons entitled thereto according to said judgment, and conditioned further that judgment may be entered on said bond, not only against the principal, but against the sureties, and each of them, jointly and severally, as well as by the court in said proceeding and without bringing a separate action on said bond. No action brought to recover such compensation shall be tried until after the expiration of said period of one hundred and twenty (120) days and said period of ten days.

Notice of deposits. SEC. 11. Upon depositing such sum or such bond, as above provided, the employer shall notify in writing any and all persons who shall have served notice upon such employer as herein provided, claiming to be beneficiaries under this act, of the fact that such sum or bond has been so deposited. Such notice may be served by delivering a copy thereof to the person to be served in person or by sending a copy thereof by registered mail to the address given in the notice served upon the employer by the beneficiary to be served.

Actions to abate. SEC. 12. If prior to the time that such sum or such bond is so deposited an action or actions have been commenced against such employer to recover compensation on account of the death of such employee by a person or persons claiming to be a beneficiary or beneficiaries, such action or actions shall thereupon abate, and all proceedings had therein shall be quashed and set aside, and the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall thereupon be required to establish his, her, or their claims to compensation in the manner hereinafter provided. In case where such action or actions is or are so dismissed, and it is afterwards adjudged that the plaintiff or plaintiffs is or are entitled to compensation in connection with the injury which was the subject matter of the action or actions so dismissed, such plaintiff or plaintiffs shall then be awarded his, her, or their costs in the action or actions so dismissed, which the employer shall be required to pay, in addition to the other sum or sums awarded against the employer.

Publication of notice. SEC. 13. The employer by whom such sum or such bond shall have been deposited shall, upon such deposit having been made, give at least sixty (60) days' notice of the fact that such sum or such bond has been so deposited with the clerk of the district court, which notice shall be published in a newspaper published within the commissioner's precinct within which such employee was injured, or, if no newspaper be published in such precinct, then in a newspaper published nearest the place where such employee was injured. The notice shall be published once a week for four (4) consecutive weeks, and the sixty (60) days' period shall commence to run from the date of the first publication. Such notice shall be substantially in the following form:

Notice to beneficiaries by ————, employer, has deposited with the clerk of the district court for the Territory of Alaska, division number ———, the sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars (or a good and sufficient bond in the sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars, as the case may be) in accordance with the provisions of the law relating to employees' compensation, for award and distribution among the beneficiaries thereto entitled because of the death of _____, an employee of said _____, employer; and all persons are notified, cited, and warned to appear before the district court for the Territory of Alaska, division number _____, on or before the _____ day of _____ and make and file their claims, if any, to compensation.

SEC. 14. All beneficiaries shall, within the time fixed by said notice, file his or her or their claim in writing with such district court, which said claim shall be verified by the oath of the claimant or claimants, or some one authorized thereto in his or her or their behalf, and shall set up the facts relied upon as a basis for the claimant's or claimants' claim to such compensation under this act. Two or more claimants may join in the same claim or may file separate claims. A copy of each claim so filed shall be served upon the employer, who shall have twenty days, from and after the time such copy has been so served, to file an answer thereto. Such answer may admit, or deny, the facts set up in said claim, either in whole or in part, or may set up any other defense thereto. And any and all claimants shall have the right within twenty (20) days from and after the date as fixed in the published notice within which claims may be filed, to file an answer thereto admitting or denying the same, either in whole or in part, or setting up any defense whatsoever to the allowance of such claim. The court may, in its discretion and in furtherance of justice, allow the parties to amend the claims or answers filed.

SEC. 15. The court shall upon the application of the employer or any claimant fix a date for a hearing upon the claim or claims so filed, which date shall be not less than thirty (30) days later than the date fixed in the published notice for the filing of such claims. The hearing may be continued at any time by the court for good cause shown as in other cases. Upon the date set for hearing, or at any time prior thereto, the employer or any claimant, who shall have filed his claim, as herein provided, may ask for a jury to try and determine any issue or issues of fact arising upon any of the claims and answers so filed. If no jury is demanded, as above provided, a jury shall be deemed to have been waived, and the trial of all the issues raised shall proceed before the judge of the court as in other cases. Upon a trial, whether before the court or jury, proofs shall be offered by the claimant or claimants in support of his, her, or their claims to compensation under this act in the same manner that proof is heard and received upon the trial of other civil cases. The court shall also hear and receive such proof as may be offered by the employer touching the right of any or all of the claimants to compensation under this act, and the fact that such employer has deposited the sum aforesaid, or the bond as herein provided for, shall not be construed as an admission against such employer.

Upon such trial evidence shall be received in accordance with the rules of evidence touching any issue of fact raised as hereinbefore provided. The order of proof shall rest in the discretion of the court, but such discretion shall be so exercised as to give all parties a full, fair, and complete hearing. Upon the conclusion of such trial the court shall, in all cases tried before the court without a jury, make written findings of fact based upon the evidence before him. And in all cases tried before a jury, the jury shall determine any and all issues of fact under instruction from the court as in other cases. Upon the filing of such findings of fact made by the court, or such verdict rendered by the jury, the court shall, unless a new trial is granted, enter a judgment in accordance therewith.

SEC. 16. If no claim on the part of any dependent be filed with the district court within the time specified by the notice above referred to, or if such claim or claims be filed and it appear from the findings of the court or the verdict of the jury that none of the claimants is entitled to compensation under this act, then the sum deposited by the employer, less the cost of publishing the notice above provided for and the filing, trial, and other fees of court in connection with such proceeding, shall be returned to the employer in cases where such sum was deposited as above provided, and the bond shall be declared void and the sureties thereon exonerated in those cases where a bond was deposited, upon the payment by the employer of the filing, trial, and other fees of court and the cost of publishing the notice as herein provided.

SEC. 17. In all cases where a judgment is entered against the employer and in favor of one or more claimants, and where the sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars was deposited as aforesaid by the employer, the amount to which each, any, and all claimants shall be so adjudged to be entitled shall be paid to such claimant or claimants out of the sum so deposited without costs and without the allowance of interest thereon. And if any part of said six thousand ($6,000) dollars so deposited shall remain after such payments have been made to the claimant or claimants entitled thereto, under the judgment of the court, such amount shall be returned to the employer, less the court costs of any claimant or claimants, in any action or actions which have been dismissed because of the deposit by the employer of such six thousand ($6,000) dollars, as herein previously provided for. Such court costs in such cases so previously dismissed shall be allowed and paid to the claimant or claimants by which the same was or were brought, in addition to the compensation to which such claimant or claimants shall be found entitled, and shall be deducted from the amount deposited in cases where the total amount of the claims allowed plus such court costs does not exceed six thousand ($6,000) dollars. In other cases such claimant or claimants shall have judgment against such employer for the court costs that shall have accrued in such action or actions so dismissed.

Judgments. SEC. 18. In cases where the employer has deposited a bond as herein provided and judgment is entered in favor of one or more claimants as herein provided, such judgment shall be entered in favor of the claimant or claimants found entitled thereto, and shall specify the amount to which each of such claimants, if more than one, is entitled, and shall be against the employer and each of the sureties on the bond so deposited in such a manner that each and all shall be jointly and severally liable under said judgment. In those cases where any one or more claimants had filed actions which were dismissed because of the deposit of a bond as herein provided and such claimant or claimants shall be adjudged entitled to compensation so as to entitle him, her or them to costs in connection with such action under the provisions hereof, and the total amount of claims allowed plus such costs shall be less than six thousand ($6,000) dollars, the amount to which any claimant may be entitled to as such costs shall be added to the amount to which such claimant is entitled as compensation, and included within said judgment in his favor and against the employer, and the sureties as above provided. In all other cases separate judgments shall be entered against the employer only for the amount of such costs in favor of the claimant or claimants entitled thereto because of the dismissal of an action previously brought by such claimant or claimants.

Appeals. SEC. 19. One or more claimants may take an appeal from any judgment rendered under this act as to such claimant or claimants, and any employer may take an appeal from any such judgment, either in whole or in part, that is to say, as to any one or more of the claimants. Such appeal shall be to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and shall be taken up on writ of error, sued out and prosecuted as in other cases. When, however, an employer takes an appeal from such judgment or any part thereof against the allowance in favor of any one or more claimants, and the judgment shall be affirmed as to any such claimant, the claimant in whose favor the judgment has been so affirmed shall be entitled to interest at the rate of eight (8%) per cent on the amount of his claim calculated from the date of the judgment and shall also be entitled to costs on appeal.

Actions to be consolidated. SEC. 20. Whenever two or more persons claiming to be beneficiaries of any deceased employee, whose beneficiaries are entitled to compensation under the provisions of this act, bring separate actions to recover such compensation, such actions shall be consolidated and tried as one action upon the application of any party to either or any of such actions.

Actions brought where. SEC. 21. Actions for the recovery of compensation due under this act, may be brought, maintained and determined in and by the courts of this Territory, and when so brought shall be governed by the law of procedure applicable to other actions for the recovery of money except as herein otherwise expressly provided.

SEC. 22. No action for the recovery of compensation hereunder shall be brought in any court holden outside of the judicial division in which the injury occurred, out of which the right to compensation arises except in cases where service can not be had on the employer in the judicial division where the injury occurred. Any attempt to bring such action in any court outside of the Territory of Alaska shall work a forfeiture of the right of the plaintiff in such action to compensation under this act.

Venue.

SEC. 23. (a) A writ of attachment shall be issued by the clerk of the court in which such action for the recovery of compensation under this act is pending or by the United States commissioner in actions pending in the court of such commissioner. Whenever the plaintiff or anyone in his behalf shall make and file an affidavit showing that he or she is entitled to recover compensation from the defendant, under the provisions of this act, such affidavit must show all the facts necessary to bring the plaintiff within the provisions of this act, and must further set up all the facts necessary to show that a cause of action exists in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the amount sued for and for which the attachment is sought under the provisions of this act.

Procedure.

(b) Upon filing such affidavit in actions pending as aforesaid with the clerk of the court, or the commissioner in actions pending in the court of such commissioner, the plaintiff shall be entitled to have a writ of attachment issued without filing any bond or other security; such writ shall be directed to the marshal, and shall in all respects conform to writs of attachment in other cases and shall be issued, served, executed, and returned in the same manner that writs of attachment in other cases are now issued, served, executed, and returned.

(c) The defendant may, however, file a written undertaking in any pending cause for the benefit of the plaintiff in an amount equal to double the amount sued for, executed by two or more sufficient sureties, to be approved by the judge or commissioner in whose court the action is pending, and conditioned that the defendant will pay any judgment that may be awarded against such defendant in the action. No writ of attachment shall issue after such undertaking has been filed by the defendant, and if such undertaking shall be filed after the writ has been issued such writ shall be quashed, and if property has been attached under such writ at the time of the filing of such undertaking such attachment shall be dissolved and set aside and the property attached returned to the defendant.

SEC. 24. The employee shall, after an injury, at reasonable times during the continuance of his or her disability, if so requested by his or her employer, submit himself or herself to an examination by a physician or surgeon authorized to practice medicine under the laws of the Territory of Alaska, furnished and paid for by the employer. The employee shall have the right to have a physician, provided and paid for by himself or herself, present at such examination or examinations. If any employee refuses to submit himself or herself to any such examination or examinations provided for in this act, or in any way obstructs any such examination or examinations, his or her rights to compensation shall be suspended, and his or her compensation during such period of suspension may, in the discretion of the jury or court determining an action brought for the recovery of compensation under this act, be forfeited.

Medical examinations.

SEC. 25. No agreement by an employee to waive his or her rights to compensation under this act shall be valid, except as herein elsewhere provided, and no employer or employee shall exempt himself, herself, or itself, except in the manner herein elsewhere provided, from the burden or waive the benefits of this act by any contract, agreement, rule, regulation, or device, and any such contract, agreement, rule, regulation, or device shall be absolutely void.

Waivers.

SEC. 26. Any and all claims for compensation under this act shall be barred unless an action for the recovery of the same shall be commenced within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued, or in the event of mental incapacity within two years after the removal of such mental incapacity.

Limitation.

SEC. 27. Where the injury for which compensation is payable under this act was caused under circumstances creating a legal liability in some one other than the employer to pay damages in respect thereof, the employee may take proceedings both against the one so liable to recover damages and against anyone liable to pay compensation under this act, but shall not be entitled to receive both damages and compensation. And if the employee has been paid compensation under this act, the employer by whom the compensation was paid shall be entitled to indemnity from the person, firm, or corporation so liable to pay damages as aforesaid, and to the extent of such indemnity shall be subrogated to the rights of the employee to recover damages therefor.

Liability of third parties.

Election presumed when.

SEC. 28. When five or more employees, as defined by this act, are employed in the same general employment in connection with mining operations carried on in this Territory, and in the usual and ordinary conduct of such operations, it shall be presumed that the employer, as defined by this act, has elected to pay compensation according to the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act to such employees as may sustain personal injury arising out of and in the course of the employment, and in such case the employer shall be relieved from liability for a recovery of damages or other compensation for such personal injuries unless by the terms of this act otherwise provided.

Defenses abrogated.

SEC. 29. If such employer exercise the right to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act, in the manner and form by this act provided, such employer shall not escape liability for personal injury sustained by an employee of such employer when the injury sustained arises out of and in the usual course of the employment because:

(1) The employee assumed the risks inherent to or incidental to or arising out of his or her employment, or the risks arising from the failure of the employer to provide and maintain a reasonably safe place to work, or the risks arising from the failure of the employer to furnish reasonably safe tools or appliances, or because the employer exercised reasonable care in selecting reasonably competent employees in the business;

(2) That the injury was caused by the negligence of a coemployee;

(3) That the employee was negligent, unless and except it shall appear that such negligence was willful and with intent to cause the injury; or the result of intoxication on the part of the injured party;

(4) In actions by an employee against an employer for personal injury sustained arising out of and in the course of the employment where the employer has elected to reject the provisions of this act, it shall be presumed that the injury to the employee was the first result and growing out of the negligence of the employer, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury; and in such case the burden of proof shall rest upon the employer to rebut the presumption of negligence.

Notice of rejection.

SEC. 30. Every such employer shall be conclusively presumed to have elected to pay compensation to employees for injuries sustained arising out of and in the course of the employment according to the provisions of this act, unless and until notice in writing of an election to the contrary shall have been given to the employee by recording said notice with the United States commissioner in whose precinct the employer's operations are carried on; and if such operations are carried on in more than one precinct, then such notice shall be recorded in the office of the commissioner for each precinct in which the same are being conducted, and the notice to reject shall be recorded by the commissioner, who shall be paid a fee of one and one-half dollars therefor, and such notice when so recorded shall be and become a public record. Such recorded notice shall be substantially in the following form, and the signature shall be witnessed by two witnesses:

EMPLOYER'S NOTICE TO REJECT.

To the employees of the undersigned:

You and each of you are hereby notified that the undersigned rejects the terms, conditions, and provisions to pay compensation to employees of the undersigned for injuries received as provided in the act of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, known as "An act relating to the measure and recovery of compensation of injured employees in the mining industry of this Territory, and the compensation to designated beneficiaries where such injuries result in death, defining and regulating the liability of employers to their employees in connection with such industry, and repealing all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act," and that the undersigned employer elects to pay damages for personal injuries of such employees under the common law and statutes of this Territory, modified by the provisions of the act above referred to and the other laws of the Territory of Alaska.

Sec. 31. The notice so recorded shall apply to the employees subsequently employed by the employer with the same fulness and effect and to the same extent and in like manner as employees in the employ at the time the notice was recorded, except as herein provided.

Future hirings.

Sec. 32. Where the employer and employee have not given notice of an election to reject the terms of this act, this act shall constitute a part of every contract of hire, express or implied, and the same shall be construed as an agreement on the part of the employer to pay and on the part of the employee to accept compensation in the manner as by this act provided for all personal injuries sustained arising out of and in the course of the employment.

Terms of contract.

Sec. 33. All employees affected by this act shall be conclusively presumed to have elected to take compensation in accordance with the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act until notice in writing shall have been served upon the employer or his agent in person, and shall also have been recorded in the office of the commissioner for the precinct in which the mining operations of the employer, in connection with which the employee is employed, are conducted; and if such operations are carried on in more than one precinct, then the same shall be recorded in the precinct wherein the employer's principal place of business in the Territory is situate, and the commissioner shall record the same, and shall receive a fee of one dollar and fifty cents therefor, and the same shall be and become a public record. Such notice shall be accompanied with an affidavit thereon showing the date upon which the same was served upon the employer.

Rejection by employees.

(b) In the event that such employee elects to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act, the rights and remedies thereof shall not apply where an employee brings an action or takes proceedings to recover damages or compensation for injuries received growing out of and in the course of his or her employment except as otherwise provided by this act; and in such actions where the employee has rejected the terms of this act the employer shall have the right to plead and rely upon any and all defenses, including those at common law, and the rules and defenses of contributory negligence, assumption of risk, and fellow servant shall apply and be available to the employer, unless otherwise provided in this act: Provided, however, That if an employee sustains an injury as the result of the employer's failure to furnish or fails to exercise reasonable care to keep or maintain any safety device required by statute, or violates any of the statutory provisions or rules and regulations now or hereafter in force relating to safety of employees, the doctrine of assumed risk in such case growing out of the negligence of the employer shall not apply or be available as defensive matter to such offending party. The notice required to be given by an employee shall be substantially in the following form:

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE XVIII.—Employment of labor—Compensation for injuries to workmen.

SECTION 8. The legislature shall enact a workmen's compulsory compensation law applicable to workmen engaged in manual or mechanical labor in such employments as the legislature may determine to be especially dangerous, by which compulsory compensation shall be required to be paid to any such workman by his employer, if in the course of such employment personal injury to any such workman from any accident arising out of, and in the course of, such employment is caused in whole or in part, or is contributed to, by a necessary risk of danger of such employment, or a necessary risk or danger inherent in the nature thereof, or by failure of such employer, or any of his or its officers, agents, or employee, or employees, to exercise due care, or to comply with any law affecting such employment: Provided, That it shall be optional with said employee to settle for such compensation, or retain the right to sue said employer as provided by this constitution.

Compulsory compensation.

REVISED STATUTES—CIVIL CODE—1913.

CHAPTER VII.—Compensation for injuries to workmen.

SECTION 3163. This chapter is a workman's compulsory compensation law as provided in section 8 of Article XVIII of the State constitution.

Title.

SEC. 3164. Compulsory compensation shall be paid by his employer to any workman engaged in any employment declared and determined as in the next section hereof (as provided in sec. 8 of Article XVIII of the State constitution) to be especially dangerous, whether said employer be a person, firm, association, company, or corporation, if in the course of the employment of said employee personal injury thereto from any accident arising out of, and in the course of, such employment is caused in whole, or in part, or is contributed to, by a necessary risk of danger of such employment, or a necessary risk or danger inherent in the nature thereof, or by failure of such employer, or any of his or its officers, agents, or employee or employees, to exercise due care, or to comply with any law affecting such employment.

Compensation to be paid, when.

SEC. 3165. The employments hereby declared and determined to be especially dangerous (as provided in sec. 8 of Article XVIII of the State constitution) within the meaning of this chapter are as follows:

Especially dangerous employment.

(1) The operation of steam railroads, electrical railroads, street railroads, by locomotives, engines, trains, motors, or cars of any kind propelled by a steam, electricity, cable, or other mechanical power, including the construction, use or repair of machinery, plants, tracks, switches, bridges, roadbeds, upon, over, and by which such railway business is operated.

(2) All work when making, using or necessitating dangerous proximity to gunpowder, blasting powder, dynamite, compressed air, or any other explosive.

(3) The erection or demolition of any bridge, building, or structure in which there is, or in which the plans and specifications require, iron or steel frame work.

(4) The operation of all elevators, elevating machinery or derricks or hoisting apparatus used within or on the outside of any bridge, building or other structure for conveying materials in connection with the erection or demolition of such bridge, building or structure.

(5) All work on ladders or scaffolds of any kind elevated twenty (20) feet or more above the ground or floor beneath in the erection, construction, repair, painting or alteration of any building, bridge, structure or other work in which the same are used.

(6) All work of construction, operation, alteration or repair, where wires, cables, switchboards, or other apparatus or machinery are in use charged with electrical current.

(7) All work in the construction, alteration or repair of pole lines for telegraph, telephone or other purposes.

(8) All work in mines; and all work in quarries.

(9) All work in the construction and repair of tunnels, subways and viaducts.

(10) All work in mills, shops, works, yards, plants, and factories where steam, electricity, or any other mechanical power is used to operate machinery and appliances in and about such premises.

Alternative rights of employees.

SEC. 3166. In case such employee or his personal representative shall refuse to settle for such compensation as provided in section 8 of Article XVIII of the State constitution, and chooses to retain the right to sue said employer (as provided in any law provided for in section 7, Article XVIII of the State constitution) he may so refuse to settle and may retain said right.

Failure to exercise due care.

SEC. 3167. It is hereby declared and determined to be contrary to public policy that any employer conducting any especially dangerous industry, through any of his or its officers, agents, or employee or employees, shall fail to exercise due care, or fail to comply with any law affecting such employment, in such manner as to endanger the lives and safety of employees thereof, without assuming the burden of the financial loss through disability entailed upon such employees, or their dependents, through such failure; and it is further declared and determined to be contrary to public policy that the burden of the financial loss to employees in such dangerous employments, or to their dependents, due to injuries to such employees received through such accidents as are hereinbefore mentioned shall be borne by said employees without due compensation paid to said employees, or their dependents, by the employer conducting such employment, owing to the inability of said employees to secure employment in said employments under a free contract as to the conditions under which they will work.

Liability without fault.

SEC. 3168. The common-law doctrine of no liability without fault is hereby declared and determined to be abrogated in Arizona as far as it shall be sought to be applied to the accidents hereinbefore mentioned.

What injuries to be compensated.

SEC. 3169. When, in the course of work in any of the employments described in section 67 of this title, personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of such labor, service, or employment, is caused to or suffered by any workman engaged therein, by any risk or failure specified in section 66 hereof, then such employer shall be liable to and must make and pay compensation to the workman injured, and his personal representative, when death ensues, for the benefit of the estate of the deceased, for such injury at the rates and in the manner hereinafter set out in this chapter.

Waiting time.

Provided, That the employer shall not be liable under this chapter in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least two weeks after the date of the accident from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed at the time of the injury, and

Provided, further, That the employer shall not be liable under this chapter in case the employee refuses to settle for such compensation and retains his right to sue as provided in section 68 of this title.

Amount of compensation—

SEC. 3170. When an injury is received by a workman engaged in any labor or service specified in section 67 of this title, and for which the employer is made liable as specified in section 71 hereof, then the measure and amount of compensation to be made by the employer to such workman or his personal representative for such injuries, shall be as follows:

For total disability.

(1) If the injury by accident does not result in death within six months from the date of the accident, but does produce or result in total incapacity of the workman for work at any gainful employment for more than two (2) weeks after the accident, then the compensation to be made to such workman by his employer shall be a semimonthly payment commencing from the date of the accident and continuing during such total incapacity, of a sum equal to fifty (50) per centum of the workman's average semimonthly earnings when at work on full time during the preceding year, if he shall have been in the employment of such employer for such length of time; but if not for a full year, then fifty (50) per centum of the average wages, whether semimonthly, weekly, or daily, being earned by such workman during the time he was at work for his employer before and at the time of the accident.

(2) In case (1) the accident does not wholly incapacitate the workman from the same or other gainful employment; or (2) in case the workman, being at first wholly incapacitated, thereafter recovers so as to be able to engage at labor in the same or other gainful employment, thereby earning wages, then in each case the amount of the semimonthly payment shall be one-half of the difference between the average earnings of the workman at the time of the accident determined as above provided, and the average amount he is earning or is capable of earning, thereafter, semimonthly in the same or other employment—it being the intent and purpose of this chapter, that the semimonthly payment shall not exceed, but equal, from time to time one-half the difference between the amount of average earnings ascertained as aforesaid at the time of the accident, and the average amount which the workman is earning, or is capable of earning, in the same or other employment or otherwise, after the accident, and at the time of such semimonthly payment. Such payments shall cease upon the workman recovering and earning, or being capable of earning, in the same or other gainful employment or otherwise, wages equal to the amount being earned at the time of the accident.

For partial disability.

Provided, however, That the payments shall continue to be made as herein determined to the workman so long as incapacity to earn wages in the same or other employment continues, but in no case shall the total amount of such payments, as provided in subsections 1 and 2 of this section exceed four thousand ($4,000) dollars.

(3) When the death of the workman results from the accident within six months thereafter, and the workman, at the time of his death, leaves a widow, and a minor [minor] child, or children dependent on such workman's earnings for support and education, then the employer shall pay to the personal representative of the deceased workman for the exclusive benefit of such widow and child, or children, a sum equal to twenty-four hundred times one-half the daily wages or earnings of the decedent, determined as aforesaid, but in no event more than the sum of four thousand dollars ($4,000). Such sum shall be paid in lump and held in trust by such representative for such widow and children and applied by him to the support of the widow while she remains unmarried, and to the support and education of the children so long as necessary, and until eighteen (18) years of age, in such way and manner as to him shall seem best and just, under and in accordance with the directions of the court having jurisdiction of the estate of the decedent; any balance remaining unapplied at the closing of the estate of the decedent shall be distributed to the decedent's widow (if still his widow), and the children or next of kin, as provided by the law of descents. The personal representative may pay out of said fund the reasonable and necessary expenses of medical attendance and burial of the decedent. If the workman leaves no widow or child, or children, but a father or mother or sister dependent on him for support, then said sum shall be for their benefit to be applied as above provided. If the deceased workman leaves no widow, children, or other dependents, then the employer shall pay the reasonable expenses of medical attendance upon the decedent and also provide and secure his burial in a proper cemetery, which may be chosen by the friends of the decedent.

For death.

Sec. 3171. Any workman claiming compensation under the provisions of this chapter shall, if requested by the employer, or upon written notice by him given to the employer, submit himself for bodily examination by some competent licensed medical practitioner or surgeon of the county in which the workman then resides, to ascertain and determine the nature, character, extent, and effect of the injury to such workman at the time of such examination for the purpose of ascertaining the semimonthly compensation then and thereafter to be made. The employer or the workman not having requested the examination may have present at the examination a medical representative, by him chosen. Each party shall pay his chosen representative the expenses of such examination. The said notice shall be given at least ten (10) days before the date fixed for the examination, and the place shall be convenient for the workman to be examined. In case the employer is a corporation, the notice may be served on any officer or agent thereof in the said county, and if none there, then elsewhere in the State.

Medical examinations.

The examiner shall make a verified report in writing in duplicate within ten (10) days after the examination and furnish one copy to the employer and one to the workman. If any workman neglects or refuses to submit to an examination, his right to compensation, if any, shall be suspended until he notifies the employer in writing of his readiness to submit thereto. No persons other than the physicians and surgeons aforesaid shall attend any examination except by agreement of the parties. If the employer and the workman each have an examiner, and they shall agree upon and join in a report, the same shall be conclusive so long as it remains in force. If either the employer or the employee, having opportunity, fails to provide an examiner, then the report of the examiner making such examination shall likewise be conclusive so long as the same remains in force. If the workman and the employer each have an examiner present, and they disagree as to the nature, character, extent, or effect of the injury, and the degree of incapacity, if any, for labor on the part of the workman at the time of such examination, then they shall join in a written report stating the matters in which they agree, and in which they disagree, and mutually select some disinterested medical practitioner or surgeon of the county, to whom the same shall be referred, and who shall proceed promptly to make an examination of the workman as to the matters in disagreement, and the same shall be conclusive so long as such report remains in force, which report shall be made by such disinterested examiner and verified, and a copy thereof furnished to the employer and the workman. For making such examination, such examiner shall be entitled to a fee of ten dollars ($10), to be paid one-half by the employer and one-half by the workman at the time of such examination. Such examination may be required by the workman or the employer at periods not shorter than three months from the date of the last examination. The report of any examination shall supersede all previous reports. When there is disagreement between the examiners aforesaid, and they can not agree upon a third person as above provided, then it shall be the duty of the chairman of the board of supervisors of the county, on written notice of either the workman or employer, to appoint some licensed medical practitioner or surgeon, who shall be a resident of the county, to make such examination, and said appointee shall be entitled to the same compensation.

Notice.

SEC. 3172. Every workman seeking compensation under the provisions of this chapter, where the same is not fatal or does not render him incompetent to give the notice, shall, within two weeks after the day of the accident, give notice in writing to the employer, or his representative employing such workman, or to the foreman or other employee of the employer under whom he was working at the time of the accident, and before the workman has voluntarily left the service of the employer and during his disability. The notice shall state (1) the name and address of such workman, (2) the date and place of the accident, (3) and state in simple words the cause thereof, (4) the nature and degree of the injury sustained, (5) and that compensation is claimed under this chapter. The notice may be written and served personally by the workman or by any one in his behalf on any person named above in this section, or by mail, postpaid, to such person, addressed to the office, place of business or residence of the person notified. No want or defect or inaccuracy of the notice shall be a bar to the right of the workman to claim and receive compensation under this chapter, or to maintain any proceeding to secure the same, unless the employer proves that he has been seriously prejudiced by such lack of notice. No compensation shall be claimed or allowed so long as such notice is not given. If the workman is killed, or otherwise rendered incompetent to give the notice, the same is not hereby required, nor is any notice required to be given by the personal representative of such deceased person. It shall be the duty of any one giving a notice as in this section provided, to mail a duplicate copy to the attorney general of this State.

SEC. 3173. Any question which may arise between the employer and the workman or his personal representative, under this chapter, shall be determined either (1) by written agreement between the parties, or (2) by arbitration, or (3) by reference and submission to the attorney general of this State; and in case of a refusal or failure of the employer and workman, or such personal representative, to agree upon a settlement by either of the modes above provided, then by a civil action at law, showing such refusal or failure as a reason for suit. If any employer fails to make and pay compensation, as in this chapter provided, for a period of three months after the date of the accident, or for any two months or more after payment of the last monthly compensation, then the injured workman, if surviving, or the personal representative, in case of death, may bring an action in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover and enforce the compensation herein provided. Such action shall be conducted as near as may be in the same manner as other civil actions at law. The action shall be brought within one year after the happening of the accident, or after the nonpayment of any semimonthly installment theretofore fixed by agreement or otherwise; or within one year after the appointment of a personal representative of the decedent. The judgment in such action, when in favor of the plaintiff, shall be for a sum equal to the amount of payments then due and prospectively due under the provisions of this chapter. The judgment shall be for the total amount thereof and collectible without relief from valuation or appraisal laws. And the court awarding the judgment shall, by proper order, direct that the same shall be paid ratably to the workman, if living, in semimonthly installments until the determination of the periods provided in this chapter the same as if such payments were being made voluntarily or without suit in conformity with this chapter. The judgment by agreement, if it appears to the court to be for the best interests of the workman, may be paid in lump and not otherwise. The court rendering the judgment is hereby given power from time to time to make such orders touching the matter of payments as may appear best to provide for the maintenance and support of the workman and his family during his infirmity, and for his and their benefit and security. The employer shall have the right to stay the judgment in whole, whether the same is to be paid in lump sum or monthly installments, upon securing the same by one or more freehold sureties or a surety company, to be approved by the court rendering the judgment, who shall enter into a recognizance acknowledging themselves bound for the defendant for the payment of the judgment in lump or in partial payments as the same is, or shall be made, payable, together with interest and costs. On failure of any one or more of such payments by the employer, execution may issue out of said court and cause, against such defendant, and his bail from time to time leviable and collectible without relief from valuation or appraisal or stay laws. The recognizance shall be written upon the order book of the court and immediately following the entry of the judgment and signed by such bail and docketed in the judgment docket of the court against such defendant and bailors, which shall bind the property of the same in the same manner as the judgment binds the property of the employer. In an action by a personal representative of a deceased workman, the court shall determine the proportions of the judgment, whether in lump or in installments, to be distributed between the widow and child, or children, with power to alter and amend the proportionment from time to time on petition of any party interested as the court may deem best for the support, maintenance, and education of such widow and children.

In any action under this chapter the court shall fix and allow, at the time of entering the judgment against the employer, a reasonable fee to the workman's attorney, to be taxed against the employer as costs, and collectible in the same manner. From such allowance there shall be no right of appeal. Such attorney shall have no claim for compensation upon the judgment or its proceeds, other than as herein provided. But no allowance, or any fee payable by the workman to an attorney for services, or any fee payable by the workman to an attorney for services in securing a recovery or disbursement, shall ever exceed twenty-five (25) per centum of the principal of the sum recovered; and the same shall not be made a lien on the recovery of its proceeds, except as may be determined and allowed and fixed by the court.

SEC. 3174. Any workman entitled to monthly or other payments from or to any judgment against any employer as above provided, as com-

Enforcement claims.

Limitation.

Payments.

Distribution.

Attorney's fees.

Payments are preferred claims.

- compensation shall have the same preferential claim therefor against the property and assets of the employer and any bailor, as now is allowed by law for unpaid wages or personal services. No judgment or any part thereof, nor monthly payments due, or coming due, under this chapter shall be assignable by the workman or subject to mortgage, levy, execution, or attachment. But the same shall stand as a continuing provision for the maintenance and support of such injured workman during his incapacity for the periods provided in this chapter.
- Mental incompetence. SEC. 3175. In case an injured workman, having a right of action under the provisions of this chapter, shall be mentally incompetent at the time when any right or privilege accrues thereunder to him, a guardian may be appointed by any court having jurisdiction, to secure and protect the rights of such workman; and the guardian may claim and exercise any and all of such rights or privileges with the same force and effect as if the workman himself had been competent and had claimed or exercised any such right or privilege; and no limitation of time provided in any of the foregoing sections shall run so long as said incompetent workman has no guardian.
- Effect of act. SEC. 3176. This chapter shall be construed as a continuation of the law contained in chapter 14 of the laws of the first legislature of the State of Arizona, second session. All workmen employed by an employer at manual and mechanical labor of the kinds defined in section 67 of this title shall be deemed and held in law to be employed and working subject to the provisions of this chapter, and the employer and the workman shall alike be bound by and shall have each and every benefit and right given in this chapter the same as if a mutual contract to that effect were entered into between the employer and the workman at any time before the happening of any accident. It shall be lawful, however, for the employer and workmen to disaffirm an employment under the provisions of this chapter by written contract between them, or by written notice by one to, and served upon the other to that effect before the day of the accident.
- Substitute schemes. Provided, Such written contract does not provide for less compensation than as provided in this chapter. And in the absence of such written contract or written notice, served as above provided, it shall be taken and held that the employment and service is under this chapter; and the same shall be the sole measure of their respective rights and liabilities when and as provided in this chapter.
- Suits. Provided, If, after the accident, either the employer or the workman shall refuse to make or accept compensation under this chapter or to proceed under or rely upon the provisions hereof for relief, then the other may pursue his remedy or make his defense under other existing statutes, the State constitution, or the common law, except as herein provided, as his rights may at the time exist. Any suit brought by the workman for a recovery shall be held as an election to pursue such remedy exclusively.
- Agreements. SEC. 3177. Any employer employing workmen to perform labor or services of other kinds than as defined in this chapter, and such workmen and employees may, by agreement, at any time during the employment, accept and adopt the provisions of this chapter as to liability for accident, compensation, and the methods and means of paying and securing and enforcing the same. And in every such case the provisions of this chapter shall be taken in law and fact to bind the parties as fully as if they were specifically mentioned and embraced in the provisions of this chapter.
- Nature of act. SEC. 3178. This chapter is remedial in its purpose and shall be construed and applied so as to secure promptly and without burdensome expense to the workmen the compensation herein provided and apportioned so as to provide support during the periods named for the loss of ability to earn full wages.
- Construction. SEC. 3179. Nothing in this chapter shall be deemed or taken to repeal or affect in any way any other acts or laws passed by the first legislature of the State of Arizona, and as [sic] in so far as it refers to the same subject in other acts it shall be deemed to be cumulative only.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE XX.—Compensation and insurance legislation.

SECTION 21. The legislature is hereby expressly vested with plenary power, unlimited by any provision of this constitution, to create and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation, by appropriate legislation, and in that behalf to create and enforce a liability on the part of any or all persons to compensate any or all of their workmen for injury or disability, and their dependents for death incurred or sustained by the said workmen in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party. A complete system of workmen's compensation includes adequate provisions for the comfort, health and safety, and general welfare of any and all workmen and those dependent upon them for support to the extent of relieving from the consequences of any injury or death incurred or sustained by workmen in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party; also full provision for securing safety in places of employment; full provision for such medical, surgical, hospital, and other remedial treatment as is requisite to cure and relieve from the effects of such injury; full provision for adequate insurance coverage against liability to pay or furnish compensation; full provision for regulating such insurance coverage in all its aspects, including the establishment and management of a State compensation insurance fund; full provision for otherwise securing the payment of compensation; and full provision for vesting power, authority, and jurisdiction in an administrative body with all the requisite governmental functions to determine any dispute or matter arising under such legislation, to the end that the administration of such legislation shall accomplish substantial justice in all cases expeditiously, inexpensively, and without incumbrance of any character; all of which matters are expressly declared to be the social public policy of this State, binding upon all departments of the State government.

Power to enact law.

Disputes.

The legislature is vested with plenary powers to provide for the settlement of any disputes arising under such legislation by arbitration, or by an industrial accident commission, by the courts, or by either, any, or all of these agencies, either separately or in combination, and may fix and control the method and manner of trial of any such dispute, the rules of evidence, and the manner of review of decisions rendered by the tribunal or tribunals designated by it: Provided, That all decisions of any such tribunal shall be subject to review by the appellate courts of this State. The legislature may combine in one statute all the provisions for a complete system of workmen's compensation, as herein defined.

Nothing contained herein shall be taken or construed to impair or render ineffectual in any measure the creation and existence of the industrial accident commission of this State or the State compensation insurance fund, the creation and existence of which, with all the functions vested in them, are hereby ratified and confirmed.

Amendment adopted November 5, 1918.

STATUTES.

*Compensation of workmen for injuries.*¹

SECTION 1. This act and each and every part thereof is an expression of the police power and is also intended to make effective and apply to a complete system of workmen's compensation the provisions of section seventeen and one-half of article twenty and section twenty-one of article twenty of the constitution of the State of California. A complete system of workmen's compensation includes adequate provision for the comfort, health, safety, and general welfare of any and all employees and those dependent upon them for support to the extent of relieving from the consequences of any injury incurred by employees in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party; also full provision for securing safety in places of employment, full provision for such medical, surgical, hospital, and other remedial treatment as is requisite to cure and relieve from the effects of such injury, full provision for adequate insurance coverage against the liability to pay or furnish compensation, full provision for regulating such insurance coverage in all its aspects, including the establishment and management of a State compensation insurance fund, full provision for otherwise securing the payment of compensation, and full provision for vesting power, authority, and jurisdiction in an administrative body with all the requisite governmental functions to determine any matter arising under this act to the end that the administration of this act shall accomplish substantial justice in all cases expeditiously, inexpensively, and without incumbrance of any character; all of which matters contained in this section are expressly declared to be the social public policy of this State, binding upon all departments of the State Government.

Purpose of act.

[Ch. 176, 1913.] Short title. SEC. 1. This act shall be known, and may be cited, as the "workmen's compensation, insurance, and safety act" and shall apply to the subjects mentioned in its title.

[Ch. 586, 1917.] Definitions. SEC. 3 (as amended by chapter 471, acts of 1919). The following terms as used in this act shall, unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context, be construed as follows:

(1) The term "commission" means the industrial accident commission of the State of California as created under the provisions of chapter one hundred seventy-six of the laws of 1913.

(2) The term "commissioner" means one of the members of the commission.

(3) The term "compensation" means compensation under this act and includes every benefit or payment conferred by sections six to thirty-one, inclusive; of this act upon an injured employee, or in the event of his death, upon his dependents, without regard to negligence.

(4) The term "injury," as used in this act, shall include any injury or disease arising out of the employment, including injuries to artificial members. In case of aggravation of any disease existing prior to such injury, compensation shall be allowed only for such proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of such prior disease as may reasonably be attributed to the injury.

(5) The term "damages" means the recovery allowed in an action at law as contrasted with compensation under this act.

(6) The term "person" includes an individual, firm, voluntary association, or a public, quasi-public or private corporation.

(7) The term "insurance carrier" includes the State compensation insurance fund and any private company, corporation, mutual association, reciprocal or interinsurance exchange authorized under the laws of this State to insure employers against liability for compensation under this act and any employer to whom a certificate of consent to self-insure has been issued.

(8) Whenever in this act the singular is used, the plural shall be included; where the masculine gender is used, the feminine and neuter shall be included.

[Ch. 176, 1913.] Commission created. SEC. 3. There is hereby created a board to consist of three members who shall be appointed by the governor from the State at large and which shall be known as the "Industrial Accident Commission" and shall have the powers, duties, and functions hereinafter conferred. Within thirty days prior to the first day of January, 1914, the governor shall appoint the three members of said commission, one for the term of two years, one for the term of three years, and one for the term of four years. Thereafter the term of office of each commissioner shall be four years. Vacancies shall be filled by appointment in the same manner for the unexpired term. Each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of five thousand dollars. Each commissioner shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe the constitutional oath of office.

Sec. 4. The commission shall organize by choosing one of its members as chairman. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of any business, for the performance of any duty, or for the exercise of any power or authority of the commission. A vacancy on the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining members to perform all the duties and exercise all the power and authority of the commission. The act of the majority of the commission, when in session as a commission, shall be deemed to be the act of the commission, but any investigation, inquiry, or hearing, which the commission has power to undertake or to hold, may be undertaken or held by or before any member thereof or any referee appointed by the commission for that purpose, and every finding, order, decision, or award made by any commissioner or referee, pursuant to such investigation, inquiry, or hearing, when approved and confirmed by the commission and ordered filed in its office, shall be deemed to be the finding, order, decision, or award of the commission.

Organization,
etc.

Sec. 5. The commission shall have a seal, bearing the following inscription: "Industrial Accident Commission State of California, seal." The seal shall be affixed to all writs and authentications of copies of records and to such other instruments as the commission shall direct. All courts shall take judicial notice of said seal.

Seal.

Sec. 6. The commission shall keep its principal office in the city and county of San Francisco, and shall also keep an office in the city of Los Angeles, and shall provide itself with suitable rooms, necessary office furniture, stationery and other supplies. For the purpose of holding sessions in other places, the commission shall have power to rent temporary quarters.

Offices.

Sec. 7. The commission shall have full power and authority:

(1) To appoint as its attorney an attorney at law of this State, who shall hold office at the pleasure of the commission. It shall be the right and the duty of the attorney to represent and appear for the people of the State of California and the commission in all actions and proceedings involving any question under this act or under any order or act of the commission and, if directed so to do by the commission, to intervene, if possible, in any action or proceeding in which any such question is involved; to commence, prosecute, and expedite the final determination of all actions or proceedings, civil or criminal, directed or authorized by the commission; to advise the commission and each member thereof, when so requested, in regard to all matters in connection with the jurisdiction, powers, or duties of the commission and members thereof; and generally to perform all duties and services as attorney to the commission which may be required of him.

Officers.

Attorney.

(2) To appoint, and it shall appoint, a secretary, who shall hold office at the pleasure of the commission. It shall be the duty of the secretary to keep a full and true record of all the proceedings of the commission, to issue all necessary processes, writs, warrants, and notices which the commission is required or authorized to issue, and generally to perform such other duties as the commission may prescribe. The commission may also appoint such assistant secretaries as may be necessary, and such assistant secretaries may perform any duty of the secretary, when so directed by the commission.

Secretary.

(3) To appoint a manager of the State compensation insurance fund, who shall hold office at the pleasure of the commission. It shall be the duty of such manager to manage, supervise, and conduct, subject to the general direction and approval of the commission, the business and affairs of the State compensation insurance fund and to perform such other duties as the commission may prescribe. Before entering on the duties of his office he must give an official bond in the sum of fifty thousand dollars, and take and subscribe to an official oath. Said bond must be approved by the commission, by written endorsement thereon, and be filed in the office of the secretary of state.

Manager of State fund.

(4) To appoint a superintendent of the department of safety, who shall hold office at the pleasure of the commission and who shall perform such duties as the commission shall prescribe.

(5) To employ such other assistants, officers, experts, statisticians, actuaries, accountants, inspectors, referees, and other employees as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, or to perform the duties and exercise the powers conferred by law upon the commission.

[Ch. 586, 1917.] SEC. 4. The commission shall have power and authority to appoint Assistant attorney.
ney. an assistant to its attorney, who shall be an attorney at law of this State, and who shall hold office at the pleasure of the commission. It shall be the right and duty of such assistant attorney to perform any of the duties of the attorney of the commission under the direction of the commission or its attorney.

[Ch. 586, 1917.] SEC. 5. Said commission is hereby vested with full power, authority, Powers. and jurisdiction under the provisions of this act and charged with the duties defined by the provisions of this act in addition to all other power, authority, jurisdiction, and duties conferred upon it and exercised by it as heretofore created, constituted, and existing.

SEC. 8. All officers and employees of the commission shall receive such compensation for their services as may be fixed by the commission and shall hold office at the pleasure of the commission and shall perform such duties as are imposed on them by law or by the commission.

[Ch. 176, 1913.] The salaries of the members of the commission, its attorney, secretary,
Salaries. and assistant secretary, as fixed by law or the commission, shall be paid in the same manner as are the salaries of other State officers. The salary or compensation of every other person holding office or employment under the commission, as fixed by law or by the commission, shall be paid monthly, after being approved by the commission, upon claims therefor to be audited by the State board of control. All expenses incurred by the commission pursuant to the provisions of this act, including the actual and necessary traveling and other expenses and disbursements of the members thereof, its officers and employees, incurred while on business of the commission, either within or without the state, shall, unless otherwise provided in this act, be paid from the funds appropriated for the use of the commission, after being approved by the commission, upon claims therefor to be audited by the board of control: Provided, however, That no such expenses incurred outside of the State shall be allowed unless prior authorization therefor be obtained from the board of control.

[Ch. 176, 1913.] SEC. 9. In all cases in which salaries, expenses, or outgoings of one Expenses. department under the jurisdiction of the commission are expended in whole or in part on behalf of another department the commission may apportion the same between such departments.

[Ch. 176, 1913.] SEC. 10. The commission shall cause to be printed and furnished Forms. free of charge to any employer or employee, or other person, such blank forms as it shall deem requisite to facilitate or promote the efficient administration of this act; it shall provide a book in which shall be entered the minutes of all its proceedings, a book in which shall be recorded all awards made by the commission, and such other books or records as it shall deem requisite for the proper and efficient administration of this act; all such records to be kept in the office of the commission.

SEC. 11. The commission shall also have power and authority:
[Ch. 176, 1913.] (1) To charge and collect the following fees: For copies of papers
Fees. and records not required to be certified or otherwise authenticated by the commission, ten cents for each folio; for certified copies of official documents and orders filed in its office or of the evidence taken on proceedings had, fifteen cents for each folio.

Reports. (2) To publish and distribute in its discretion from time to time, in addition to its annual report to the governor of the State, such further reports and pamphlets covering its operations, proceedings and matters relative to its work as it may deem advisable.

(3) To fix and collect reasonable charges for publications issued under its authority.

(4) The fees charged and collected under this section shall be paid monthly into the treasury of the State to the credit of the "industrial accident fund" and shall be accompanied by a detailed statement thereof.

SEC. 6 (as amended by chapter 471, acts of 1919). (a) Liability for the compensation provided by this act, in lieu of any other liability whatsoever to any person, shall, without regard to negligence, exist against an employer for any injury sustained by his employees arising out of and in the course of the employment and for the death of any such employee if the injury shall proximately cause death, in those cases where the following conditions of compensation concur:

Compensation
payable when.

(1) Where, at the time of the injury, both the employer and employee are subject to the compensation provisions of this act.

(2) Where, at the time of the injury, the employee is performing service growing out of and incidental to his employment and is acting within the course of his employment.

(3) Where the injury is proximately caused by the employment, either with or without negligence, and is not caused by the intoxication of the injured employee, or is not intentionally self-inflicted.

(4) Where the injury is caused by the serious and willful misconduct of the injured employee, the compensation otherwise recoverable by him shall be reduced one-half: Provided, however, That such misconduct of the employee shall not be a defense to the claim of the dependents of said employee, if the injury results in death, or to the claim of the employee, if the injury results in a permanent partial disability equaling or in excess of seventy per cent of total: And provided further, That such misconduct of said employee shall not be a defense where his injury is caused by the failure of the employer to comply with any provision of law, or any safety order of the commission, with reference to the safety of places of employment: And provided further, That in case of an injury suffered by an employee under sixteen years of age, it shall be conclusively presumed that such injury was not caused by serious and willful misconduct.

(b) Where such conditions of compensation exist, the right to recover such compensation, pursuant to the provisions of this act, shall be the exclusive remedy against the employer for the injury or death: Provided, That where the employee is injured by reason of the serious and willful misconduct of the employer, or his managing representative, or if the employer be a partnership, on the part of one of the partners, or if a corporation, on the part of an executive or managing officer or general superintendent thereof, the amount of compensation otherwise recoverable for injury or death, as hereinafter provided, shall be increased one-half, any of the provisions of this act as to maximum payments or otherwise to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That said increase of award shall in no event exceed two thousand five hundred dollars.

Acts of em-

(c) In all other cases where the conditions of compensation do not concur, the liability of the employer shall be the same as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 7 (as amended by chapter 471, acts of 1919). The term "employer" as used in sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act shall be construed to mean: The State, and each county, city and county, city, school district, irrigation district, all other districts established by law, and all public corporations and quasi-public corporations and public agencies therein, and every person, firm, voluntary association, and private corporation, including any public service corporation, who has any person in service under any appointment or contract of hire, or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written, and the legal representative of any deceased employer.

Employer.

SEC. 8. (a) The term "employee" as used in sections six to thirty one, inclusive, of this act shall be construed to mean: Every person in the service of an employer as defined by section seven hereof under any appointment or contract of hire or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed, and all elected and appointed paid public officers, and all officers and members of boards of directors of quasi-public or private corporations, while rendering actual service for such corporations for pay, but excluding any person whose employment is both casual and not in the course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer, and also excluding any employee engaged in household domestic service, farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural or Employee.

Employments

horticultural labor, in stock or poultry raising and any person holding an appointment as deputy clerk, deputy sheriff or deputy constable appointed for the convenience of such appointee, who receives no compensation from the county or municipal corporation or from the citizens thereof for services as such deputy: Provided, That such last exclusion shall not deprive any person so deputized from recourse against any private person employing him for injury occurring in the course of and arising out of such employment.

Presumption of employment.

(b) Any person rendering service for another, other than as an independent contractor, or as expressly excluded herein, is presumed to be an employee within the meaning of this act. The term "independent contractor" shall be taken to mean, for the purposes of this act, any person who renders service, other than manual labor, for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished. A working member of a partnership receiving wages irrespective of profits from such partnership shall be deemed an employee within the meaning of this section.

Casual workers.

(c) The term "casual" as used in this section shall be taken to refer only to employments where the work contemplated is to be completed in not exceeding ten working days, without regard to the number of men employed, and where the total labor cost of such work is less than one hundred dollars. The phrase "course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer" shall be taken to include all services tending toward the preservation, maintenance or operation of the business, business premises or business property of the employer. The words "trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer" shall be taken to include any undertaking actually engaged in by him with some degree of regularity, the trade name, articles of incorporation or principal business of the employer to the contrary notwithstanding.

Watchmen.

(d) Watchmen for nonindustrial establishments, paid by subscription by several persons, shall not be held to be employees within the meaning of this act. In other cases where watchmen, paid by subscription by several persons, have at the time of the injury sustained by them taken out and maintained in full force and effect insurance upon themselves as self-employing persons conferring benefits equal to those conferred by this act, the employer shall not be liable under this act.

Persons unlawfully employed.

(e) It shall not be a defense to the State, or any political subdivision or institution thereof, or public or quasi-public corporation, that a person injured while rendering service for it was not lawfully employed by reason of the violation of any civil service or other law, rule, or regulation respecting the hiring of employees.

Partnerships of workmen.

(f) Workmen associating themselves under a partnership agreement the principal purpose of which is the performance of the labor on a particular piece of work, shall be deemed employees of the person having such work executed, and, in the event the average weekly earnings are not otherwise ascertainable, shall be deemed to be employed at an average weekly wage of twelve dollars: Provided, however, That if such workmen shall have taken out and maintained in full force and effect insurance, in an insurance carrier as defined in this act, insuring to themselves and all persons employed by them benefits identical with those conferred by this act, the person for whom such work is to be done shall not be liable as an employer under this act.

Medical treatment.

SEC. 9 (as amended by chapter 471, acts of 1919). Where liability for compensation under this act exists, such compensation shall be furnished or paid by the employer and be as provided in the following schedule:

(a) Such medical, surgical and hospital treatment, including nursing, medicines, medical and surgical supplies, crutches and apparatus, including artificial members, as may reasonably be required to cure and relieve from the effects of the injury, the same to be provided by the employer, and in case of his neglect or refusal seasonably to do so, the employer to be liable for the reasonable expense incurred by or on behalf of the employee in providing the same: Provided, That if the employee so requests, the employer shall tender him one change of physicians and shall nominate at least three additional practicing physicians competent to treat the particular case, or as many as may be available if three can not reasonably be named, from whom the employee may choose; the employee shall also be entitled, in any serious case, upon request, to the services of a consulting physician to be provided by the employer; all of said treatment to be at the expense of the employer. If the employee so requests, the employer must procure certification by the commission or a commissioner of the competency for the particular case of the consulting or additional physicians: Provided further, That the foregoing provisions regarding a change of physicians shall not apply to those cases where the employer maintains, for his own employees, a hospital and hospital staff, the adequacy and competency of which have been approved by the commission. Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to limit the right of the employee to provide, in any case, at his own expense, a consulting physician or any attending physicians whom he may desire. Controversies between employer and employee, arising under this section, shall be determined by the commission, upon the request of either party.

(b) If the injury causes temporary disability, a disability payment which shall be payable for one week in advance as wages on the eighth day after the injured employee leaves work as a result of the injury. If the injury causes permanent disability, a disability payment which shall be payable for one week in advance as wages on the eighth day after the injury. Such indemnity shall thereafter be payable on the employer's regular pay day, but not less frequently than twice in each calendar month, unless otherwise ordered by the commission, subject, however, to the following limitations:

(1) If the period of disability does not last longer than seven days from the day the employee leaves work as the result of the injury, no disability payment whatever shall be recoverable. Waiting time.

(2) If the period of disability lasts longer than seven days from the day the employee leaves work as the result of the injury, no disability payment shall be recoverable for the first seven days of disability suffered.

2. The disability payment shall be as follows:

(1) If the injury causes temporary total disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings during the period of such disability, consideration being given to the ability of the injured employee to compete in an open labor market; Temporary disability.

(2) If the injury causes temporary partial disability, sixty-five per cent of the weekly loss in wages during the period of such disability;

(3) If the temporary disability caused by the injury is at times total and at times partial the weekly disability payment during the period of each such total or partial disability shall be in accordance with paragraphs one and two of this subdivision respectively;

(4) Paragraphs one, two, and three of this subdivision shall be limited as follows: Aggregate disability payments for a single injury causing temporary disability shall not exceed three times the average annual earnings of the employee, nor shall the aggregate disability period for such temporary disability in any event extend beyond two hundred forty weeks from the date of the injury. Maximum limits.

(5) If the injury causes permanent disability, the percentage of disability to total disability shall be determined and the disability payment computed and allowed as follows: For a one per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of four weeks; for a ten per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of forty weeks; for a twenty per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of eighty weeks; for a thirty per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of one hundred twenty weeks; for a forty per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of one hundred sixty weeks; for a fifty per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of two hundred weeks; for a sixty per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of two hundred forty weeks; for a seventy per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of two hundred forty weeks, and thereafter ten per cent of such weekly earnings during the Permanent disability.

Rates.

- remainder of life; for an eighty per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of two hundred forty weeks and thereafter twenty per cent of such weekly earnings during the remainder of life; for a ninety per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of two hundred forty weeks and thereafter thirty per cent of such weekly earnings during the remainder of life; for a hundred per cent disability, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for a period of two hundred forty weeks and thereafter forty per cent of such weekly earnings during the remainder of life.
- Intermediate ratings. (6) The payment for permanent disabilities intermediate to those fixed by the foregoing schedule shall be computed and allowed as follows: If under seventy per cent, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for four weeks for each one per cent of disability; if seventy per cent or over, sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings for two hundred forty weeks and thereafter one per cent of such weekly earnings for each one per cent of disability in excess of sixty per cent to be paid during the remainder of life.
- Determining percentages. (7) In determining the percentages of permanent disability, account shall be taken of the nature of the physical injury or disfigurement, the occupation of the injured employee, and his age at the time of such injury, consideration being given to the diminished ability of such injured employee to compete in an open labor market.
- Double injury. (8) Where an injury causes both temporary and permanent disability, the injured employee shall not be entitled to both a temporary and permanent disability payment, but only to the greater of the two.
- (9) The following permanent disabilities shall be conclusively presumed to be total in character: Loss of both eyes or the sight thereof; loss of both hands or the use thereof; an injury resulting in a practically total paralysis; an injury to the brain resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity. In all other cases, permanent total disability shall be determined in accordance with the fact.
- (10) The percentage of permanent disability caused by any injury shall be so computed as to cover the permanent disability caused by that particular injury without reference to any injury previously suffered or any permanent disability caused thereby.
- Schedule. (11) The commission may prepare, adopt, and from time to time amend, a schedule for the determination of the percentages of permanent disabilities, such table to be based upon the proper combinations of the factors indicated in subdivision seven above. Such schedule shall be available for public inspection and without formal introduction in evidence shall be prima facie evidence of the percentage of permanent disability to be attributed to each injury covered by said schedule.
- Accrued benefits. 3. The death of an injured employee shall not affect the liability of the employer under subsections (a) and (b) of this section, so far as such liability has accrued and become payable at the date of the death, and any accrued and unpaid compensation shall be paid to the dependents, if any, or, if there are no dependents, to the personal representative of the deceased employee or heirs or other persons entitled thereto, without administration, but such death shall be deemed to be the termination of the disability.
- Death. (c) If the injury causes death, either with or without disability, the burial expense of the deceased employee as hereinafter limited and a death benefit which shall be payable in installments equal to sixty-five per cent of the average weekly earnings of the deceased employee, upon the employer's regular pay day, but not less frequently than twice in each calendar month, unless otherwise ordered by the commission, which death benefit shall be as follows:
- Dependents. (1) In case the deceased employee leaves a person or persons wholly dependent upon him for support, such dependents shall be allowed the reasonable expense of his burial, not exceeding one hundred dollars, and a death benefit, which shall be a sum sufficient, when added to the disability indemnity which at the time of death has accrued and become payable, under the provisions of subsection (b) hereof, and the said burial expense, to make the total disability indemnity, cost of burial and death benefit equal to three times his average annual earnings, such average annual earnings to be taken at not less than three hundred thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents nor more than one thousand six hundred sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents.

(2) In case the deceased employee leaves no person wholly dependent upon him for support, but one or more persons partially dependent therefor, the said dependents shall be allowed the reasonable expense of his burial, not to exceed one hundred dollars, and in addition thereto, a death benefit which shall amount to three times the annual amount devoted by the deceased to the support of the person or persons so partially dependent: Provided, That the death benefit shall not be greater than a sum sufficient, when added to the disability indemnity which, at the time of the death, has accrued and become payable under the provisions of subsection (b) hereof, together with the cost of the burial of such deceased employee, to make the total disability indemnity, cost of burial and death benefit equal to three times his average annual earnings, such average annual earnings to be taken at not less than three hundred thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents nor more than one thousand six hundred sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents.

Partial dependents.

(3) If the deceased employee leaves no person dependent upon him for support, the death benefit shall consist of the reasonable expense of his burial, not exceeding one hundred dollars and such other benefit as may be provided by law.

No dependents.

(d) Payment of compensation in accordance with the order and direction of the commission shall discharge the employer from all claims therefor.

Sec. 10. The commission shall have power to inspect and determine the adequacy of hospitals and hospital facilities supplied by employers or by mutual associations of employees, with or without the concurrence of the employer, for the treatment of injuries coming within the provisions of this act. No part of any contribution paid by employees or deducted from their wages for the maintenance of such hospital facilities shall be devoted to the payment of any portion of the cost of providing compensation prescribed by this act. Nothing contained in this section shall be taken to prevent any hospital association or medical department furnishing the treatment prescribed in this act free of charge to employees. Every such hospital shall make to the commission from time to time, upon demand, but not less frequently than once a year, reports of receipts, disbursements, and services rendered to or for employees. If, in the judgment of the commission, the services or equipment of any hospital are inadequate to meet the reasonable requirements of medical treatment contemplated in section nine (a) of this act, the commission may, after notice and an opportunity to be heard, declare such facilities to be inadequate and thereafter injured employees of such employer may procure treatment elsewhere, and the reasonable cost thereof shall be a charge against such employer under said section nine (a). Any finding of the commission, after such notice, determining the fact of such inadequacy, shall be conclusive evidence in any proceeding for compensation of the fact of such inadequacy during the period covered by such finding. Such finding of inadequacy may be amended, modified, or rescinded by the commission at any time upon good cause appearing therefor.

Employers' hospitals.

Sec. 11. (a) Unless compensation is paid or an agreement for its payment made within the time limited in this section for the institution of proceedings for its collection, the right to institute such proceedings shall be barred: Provided, That the filing of an application with the commission for any portion of the benefits prescribed by this act shall render this section inoperative as to all further claims of any person or persons for compensation arising from the same transaction, and the right to present such further claims shall be governed by the provisions of section twenty (d) and section sixty-five (b) of this act.

Claims.

(b) The periods within which proceedings for the collection of compensation may be commenced are as follows:

(1) Proceedings for the collection of the benefit provided by subsection (a) of section nine or for the collection of the disability payment provided by subsection (b) of said section nine must be commenced

- In six months. within six months from the date of the injury, except as otherwise provided in this act.
- In one year. (2) Proceedings for the collection of the death benefit provided by subsection (c) of said section nine must be commenced within one year from the date of death, and in any event within two hundred forty weeks from the date of the injury, and can only be maintained when it appears that death ensued within one year from the date of the injury, or that the injury causing death also caused disability which continued to the date of the death and for which a disability payment was made, or an agreement for its payment made, or proceedings for its collection commenced within the time limited for the commencement of proceedings for the recovery of the disability payment.
- Extension of time. of (c) The payment of compensation, or any part thereof, or agreement therefor, shall have the effect of extending the period within which proceedings for its collections may be commenced, six months from the date of the agreement or last payment of such compensation, or any part thereof, or the expiration of the period covered by any such payment: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed to bar the right of any injured employee to institute proceedings for the collection of compensation within two hundred forty-five weeks after the date of the injury upon the grounds that the original injury has caused new and further disability; and the jurisdiction of the commission, in such cases, shall be a continuing jurisdiction at all times within such period: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to an employee who is totally disabled and bedridden as a result of his injury, during the continuance of such condition or until the expiration of six months thereafter.
- Incompetent. (d) If an injured employee, or in the case of his death, one or more of his dependents, shall be under twenty-one years of age or incompetent at any time when any right or privilege accrues to such person under the provisions of this act, a general guardian, appointed by the court, or a guardian ad litem or trustee appointed by the commission or a commissioner may, on behalf of any such person, claim and exercise any such right or privilege with the same force and effect as if no such disability existed; and no limitation of time provided by this act shall run against any such person under twenty-one years of age or incompetent unless and until such guardian or trustee is appointed. The commission shall have power to determine the fact of the minority or incompetency of any injured employee and may appoint a trustee to receive and disburse compensation payments for the benefit of such minor or incompetent and his family.
- Refusal of medical treatment. (e) No compensation shall be payable in case of the death or disability of an employee if his death is caused, or if and so far as his disability is caused, continued, or aggravated, by an unreasonable refusal to submit to medical treatment, or to any surgical treatment, the risk of which is, in the opinion of the commission, based upon expert medical or surgical advice, inconsiderable in view of the seriousness of the injury.
- Pre-existing disability. (f) The fact that an employee has suffered a previous disability, or receives compensation therefor, shall not preclude him from compensation for a later injury, or his dependents from compensation for death resulting therefrom, but in determining compensation for the later injury, or death resulting therefrom, his average annual earnings shall be fixed at such sum as will reasonably represent his annual earning capacity at the time of the later injury.
- Advance payments. (g) Any payment, allowance, or benefit received by the injured employee during the period of his incapacity, or by his dependents in the event of his death, which by the terms of this act was not then due and payable, or when there is any dispute or question concerning the right to compensation, shall not, in the absence of any agreement, be construed to be an admission of liability for compensation on the part of the employer, or the acceptance thereof as a waiver of any right or claim which the employee or his dependents may have against the employer, but any such payment, allowance, or benefit may be taken into account by the commission in fixing the amount of the compensation to be paid.

(h) The running of the period of limitations prescribed by this section is an affirmative defense and operates to bar the remedy and not to extinguish the right of the employee. It may be waived, and failure to present such defense prior to the submission of the cause for decision shall be a sufficient waiver. Limitation as a defense.

SEC. 12. (a) The average annual earnings referred to in section nine hereof shall be fifty-two times the average weekly earnings referred to in said section; in computing such earnings the average weekly earnings shall be taken at not less than six dollars and forty-one cents nor more than thirty-two dollars and five cents, and three times the average annual earnings shall be taken at not less than one thousand dollars nor more than five thousand dollars, and between said limits said average weekly earnings shall be arrived at as follows: [Ch. 586, 1917.]
Average earnings.

(1) If the injured employee has worked in the same employment, whether for the same employer or not, during at least two hundred sixty days of the year preceding his injury his average weekly earnings shall consist of ninety-five per cent of six times the daily earnings at the time of such injury where the employment is for six full working days a week. Where his employment is for five, five and one-half, six and one-half, or seven working days a week the average weekly earnings shall be ninety-five per cent of five, five and one-half, six and one-half, or seven times the daily earnings at the time of the injury, as the case may be.

(2) If the injured employee has not so worked in such employment during at least two hundred sixty days of such preceding year, his average weekly earnings shall be based upon the daily earnings, wage, or salary of an employee of the same class working at least two hundred sixty days of such preceding year in the same or a similar kind of employment in the same or a neighboring place, computed in accordance with the provisions of the preceding subdivision.

(3) If the earnings be irregular or specified to be by the week, month, or other period, then the average weekly earnings mentioned in subdivisions (1) and (2) above shall be ninety-five per cent of the average earnings during such period of time, not exceeding one year, as may conveniently be taken to determine an average weekly rate of pay.

(4) Where the employment is for less than five days per week or is seasonal or where for any reason the foregoing methods of arriving at the average weekly earnings of the injured employee can not reasonably and fairly be applied, such average weekly earnings shall be taken at ninety-five per cent of such sum as shall reasonably represent the average weekly earning capacity of the injured employee at the time of his injury, due consideration being given to his actual earnings from all sources and employments during the year preceding his injury. Provided, That the earnings from other occupations shall not be allowed in excess of the rate of wages paid at the time of the injury.

(b) In determining such average weekly earnings, there shall be included overtime and the market value of board, lodging, fuel, and other advantages received by the injured employee as part of his remuneration which can be estimated in money, but such average weekly earnings shall not include any sum which the employer may pay to the injured employee to cover any special expenses entailed on him by the nature of his employment. Overtime.
Board, etc.

(c) If the injured employee is under twenty-one years of age and his incapacity is permanent his average weekly earnings shall be deemed, within the limits fixed, to be the weekly sum that under ordinary circumstances he would probably be able to earn after attaining the age of twenty-one years in the occupation in which he was employed at the time of the injury or in any occupation to which he would reasonably have been promoted if he had not been injured, and if such probable earnings after attaining the age of twenty-one years can not reasonably be determined, such average weekly earnings shall be based upon three dollars a day for a six-day week. Minors.

SEC. 13. The weekly loss in wages in case of temporary partial disability shall consist of the difference between the average weekly earnings of the injured employee, computed according to the provisions of section nine, and the weekly amount which the injured em- [Ch. 586, 1917.]

ployee will probably be able to earn during the disability, to be determined in view of the nature and extent of the injury. In computing such probable earnings due regard shall be given to the ability of the injured employee to compete in an open labor market. If evidence of exact loss of earnings be lacking, such weekly loss in wages may be computed from the proportionate loss of physical ability or earning power caused by the injury.

Dependents.

SEC. 14 (as amended by chapter 471, acts of 1919). (a) The following shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee: Provided, That these presumptions shall not apply in favor of aliens who are nonresidents of the United States at the time of the injury:

(1) A wife upon a husband with whom she was living at the time of his injury or for whose support such husband was legally liable at the time of his injury.

(2) A child or children under the age of eighteen years, or over said age, but physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, upon the parent with whom he or they are living at the time of the injury of such parent or for whose maintenance such parent was legally liable at the time of injury, there being no surviving dependent parent.

(b) In all other cases, questions of entire or partial dependency and questions as to who constitute dependents and the extent of their dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact as the fact may be at the time of the injury of the employee.

(c) No person shall be considered a dependent of any deceased employee unless in good faith a member of the family or household of such employee, or unless such person bears to such employee the relation of husband or wife, child, posthumous child, adopted child or stepchild, father or mother, father-in-law or mother-in-law, grandfather or grandmother, brother or sister, uncle or aunt, brother-in-law or sister-in-law, nephew or niece.

(d) 1. If there is one or more persons wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee, such person or persons shall receive the entire death benefit, and any person or persons partially dependent shall receive no part thereof.

2. If there is more than one such person wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee, the death benefit shall be divided equally among them.

3. If there is more than one person partially dependent for support upon a deceased employee, and no person wholly dependent for support, the amount allowed as a death benefit shall be divided among the persons so partially dependent in proportion to the relative extent of their dependency.

Adjustments.

(e) The commission may, anything in this act contained to the contrary notwithstanding, set apart or reassign the death benefit to any one or more of the dependents in accordance with their respective needs and as may be just and equitable, and may order payment to a dependent subsequent in right, or not otherwise entitled, upon good cause being shown therefor. Such death benefit shall be paid to such one or more of the dependents of the deceased or to a trustee appointed by the commission or a commissioner for the benefit of the person or persons entitled, as may be determined by the commission. The person to whom the death benefit is paid for the use of the several beneficiaries shall apply the same in compliance with the findings and directions of the commission. In the event of the death of a dependent beneficiary of any deceased employee, if there be no surviving dependent, the death of such dependent shall terminate the death benefit, which shall not survive to the estate of such deceased dependent, except that payments of such death benefit accrued and payable at the time of the death of such sole remaining dependent shall be paid upon the order of the commission to the heirs of such dependent or, if none, to the heirs of the deceased employee, without administration.

Death of beneficiary.

Notice of injury.

SEC. 15. No claim to recover compensation under this act shall be maintained unless within thirty days after the occurrence of the injury which is claimed to have caused the disability or death, notice in writing, stating the name and the address of the person injured, the time and the place where the injury occurred, and the nature of the injury, and signed by the person injured or some one in his behalf, or, in case of his death, by a dependent or some one in his behalf, shall be served upon the employer: Provided, however, That knowledge of such injury, obtained from any source, on the part of such employer, his managing agent, superintendent, foreman, or other person in authority, or knowledge of the assertion of a claim of injury sufficient to afford opportunity to the employer to make an investigation into the facts, shall be equivalent to such service: And provided further, That the failure to give any such notice, or any defect or inaccuracy therein, shall not be a bar to recovery under this act if it is found as a fact in the proceedings for the collection of the claim that there was no intention to mislead or prejudice the employer in making his defense and that he was not in fact so misled or prejudiced thereby.

SEC. 16. (a) Whenever the right to compensation under this act would exist in favor of any employee, he shall, upon the written request of his employer, submit from time to time, as may be reasonable, to examination by a practicing physician, who shall be provided and paid for by the employer, and shall likewise submit to examination from time to time by any physician selected by the commission or any member or referee thereof. [Ch. 586, 1917.]
Medical examination.

(b) The request or order for such examination shall fix a time and place therefor, due consideration being given to the convenience of the employee and his physical condition and ability to attend at the time and place fixed. The employee shall be entitled to have a physician provided and paid for by himself present at any examination required by his employer. So long as the employee, after such written request of the employer, shall fail or refuse to submit to such examination or shall in any way obstruct the same, his right to begin or maintain any proceeding for the collection of compensation shall be suspended; and if he shall fail or refuse to submit to examination after direction by the commission, or any member or referee thereof, or shall in any way obstruct the same, his right to the disability payments which shall accrue during the period of such failure, refusal, or obstruction shall be barred. Any physician who shall make or be present at any such examination may be required to report or testify as to the results thereof.

SEC. 17 (as amended by chapter 471, acts of 1919). (a) Upon the filing with the commission by any party in interest, his attorney, or other representative authorized in writing, of an application in writing stating the general nature of any dispute or controversy concerning compensation, or concerning any right or liability arising out of, or incidental thereto, jurisdiction over which is vested by this act in the commission, a time and place shall be fixed for the hearing thereof, which hearing, unless otherwise agreed to by all the parties thereto, must be held not less than ten days nor more than thirty days after the filing of such application. The person filing such application shall be known as the applicant and the adverse party shall be known as the defendant. A copy of said application, together with a notice of the time and place of hearing thereof, shall forthwith be served upon all adverse parties and may be served either as a summons in a civil action or in the same manner as any other notice that is authorized or required to be served under the provisions of this act. A notice of the time and place of hearing shall also be served upon the applicant. [Ch. 586, 1917.]
Procedure.

(b) The jurisdiction of the commission shall include any controversy relating to or arising out of the provisions of subsection (a) of section nine of this act, unless an express agreement shall have been made between the persons or institutions rendering such treatment and the employer or insurance carrier fixing the amount to be paid for the services.

(c) There shall be but one cause of action for each transaction coming within the provisions of this act, and all claims brought for medical expense, disability payments, death benefits, burial expense, liens or any other matter arising out of such transaction may, in the discretion of the commission, be joined in the same proceeding at any time.

(d) The death of an employer subsequent to the sustaining of an injury by an employee shall not impair the right of such employee to proceed before the commission against the estate of such employer, and the failure of such employee or his dependents to cause the claim to be presented to the executor or administrator of the estate shall not in any way bar or suspend such right.

etc.

SEC. 18. (a) If any defendant desires to disclaim any interest in the subject-matter of the claim in controversy, or considers that the application is in any respect inaccurate or incomplete, or desires to bring any fact, paper or document to the attention of the commission as a defense to the claim, or otherwise, he may, within five days after the service of the application upon him, file with or mail to the commission his answer setting forth the particulars in which the application is inaccurate or incomplete, and the facts upon which he intends to rely. A copy of such answer must be forthwith served upon all adverse parties. Evidence upon matters not pleaded by answer shall be allowed only upon such terms and conditions as may be imposed by the commission or commissioner or referee holding the hearing.

Failure to answer.

(b) If the defendant fails to appear or answer, no default shall be taken against him, but the commission shall proceed to the hearing of the matter upon such terms and conditions as it may deem proper. Such defendant failing to appear or answer, or subsequently contending that no service was made upon him, or claiming to be aggrieved in any other manner by want of notice of the pendency of the proceedings, may apply to the commission for relief substantially in accordance with the provisions of section four hundred seventy-three of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the commission is hereby authorized to afford such relief. No right to relief, including the claim that the findings and award of the commission or judgment entered thereon are void upon their face, shall accrue to such defendant in any court unless prior application shall have been made to the commission in accordance with this subsection, and in no event shall any application to any court be allowed except as prescribed in sections sixty-seven and sixty-eight of this act.

Dismissal of application.

(c) If upon the filing of an application, such application shows upon its face that the applicant is not entitled to compensation, the commission may upon its own motion or upon the motion of the adverse party, and after opportunity to the applicant to be heard orally or in writing, and upon good cause appearing therefor, dismiss the application prior to any hearing thereon. The pendency of such motion or notice of intended dismissal shall not, unless otherwise ordered by the commission, delay the hearing upon the application upon its merits.

Attachments.

(d) Upon the filing of an application by or on behalf of an injured employee or his dependents or any other party in interest, the commission may, in its discretion, in the cases mentioned in section four hundred twelve of the Code of Civil Procedure, direct the county clerk of any county or city and county to issue writs of attachment authorizing the sheriff to attach the property of the defendant in an amount not to exceed the greatest probable award against him in such matter, to be fixed by the commission, as security for the payment of any compensation which may thereafter be awarded. The provisions of part two, title seven, chapter four, of the Code of Civil Procedure of this State, as far as applicable to proceedings before the commission, shall govern the proceedings upon attachment, and the commission shall be substituted for the superior court in said provisions for the purpose of this act. No writ of attachment shall be issued except upon the order of the commission or a commissioner, and such order shall not be made where it appears from the application or affidavit in support thereof that the employer was, at the time of the injury to the employee, insured against liability imposed by this act in any insurance carrier licensed to do business in the State of California. If it should at any time after the levying of an attachment be made to appear that such employer was so insured, and the requisites for dismissing said employer from the proceeding and substituting the insurance carrier as defendant under any of the methods prescribed under section thirty (e) of this act be established, the commission must forthwith discharge the attachment. In levying such attachment, preference must be given to the real property of the employer.

SEC. 19. (a) No pleadings, other than the application and answer, shall be required. The hearing on the application may be adjourned from time to time and from place to place in the discretion of the commission or commissioner or referee holding such hearing. Either party shall have the right to be present at any hearing, in person or by attorney or by any other agent, and to present such testimony as shall be pertinent under the pleadings, but the commission may, with or without notice to either party, cause testimony to be taken, or inspection of the premises where the injury occurred to be made, or the time-books and pay roll of the employer to be examined by any commissioner or referee appointed by the commission, and may from time to time direct any employee claiming compensation to be examined by a regular physician; the testimony so taken and the results of any such inspection or examination to be reported to the commission for its consideration.

Hearings.

(b) The parties to a controversy may stipulate the facts relative thereto in writing and file such stipulation with the commission. The commission may thereupon make its findings and award based upon such stipulation, or may in its discretion set the matter down for hearing and take such further testimony or make such further investigations as may be necessary to enable it to completely determine the matter in controversy.

Stipulated facts.

(c) The commission may receive as evidence, either at or subsequent to a hearing, and use as proof of any fact in dispute, the following matters, in addition to sworn testimony presented in open hearing:

Evidence.

- (1) Reports of attending or examining physicians.
- (2) Reports of special investigators appointed by the commission or a commissioner or referee to investigate and report upon any scientific or medical question.
- (3) Reports of employers containing copies of time sheets, book accounts, reports and other records, properly authenticated.
- (4) Properly authenticated copies of hospital records of the case of the injured employee.
- (5) All publications of the commission.
- (6) All official publications of State and United States Governments.
- (7) Excerpts from expert testimony received by the commission upon similar issues of scientific fact in other cases and the prior decisions of the commission upon such issues: Provided, however, That transcripts of all testimony taken without notice and copies of all reports and other matters added to the record, otherwise than during the course of an open hearing, be served upon the parties to the proceeding, and opportunity be given to produce testimony in explanation or rebuttal before decision is rendered.

(d) The burden of proof lies upon the party holding the affirmative of the issue. The following are affirmative defenses, and the burden of proof shall rest upon the employer to establish them:

Burden of proof.

- (1) That an injured person claiming to be an employee is an independent contractor or otherwise excluded from the protection of this act, where there is proof that such injured person was at the time of his injury actually performing service for the alleged employer.
- (2) Intoxication of an employee causing his injury.
- (3) Willful misconduct of an employee causing his injury.
- (4) Aggravation of disability by unreasonable conduct of the employee.

(5) Prejudice to the employer by failure of the employee to give notice, as required by section fifteen.

(e) Where it is represented to the commission, either before or after the filing of an application, that an employee has died as a result of injuries sustained in the course of his employment, the commission may require an autopsy, and the report of the physician performing such autopsy may be received in evidence in any proceedings theretofore or thereafter brought. If at the time such autopsy is requested the body of such employee be in the custody of the coroner, the coroner must, upon the request of the commission or of any party interested, afford reasonable opportunity for the attendance of any physicians named by the commission at any autopsy ordered by him. If the coroner should not require, or shall have already performed such autopsy, he shall permit an autopsy or reexamination to be performed by physicians named by the commission. No fee shall be charged by the coroner for any service, arrangement or permission given by him.

If the body is not in the custody of the coroner, the commission shall have authority to authorize the performance of such autopsy and the exhumation of the body for such purpose if necessary. If the dependents, or a majority thereof, of any such deceased employee, having the custody of the body of such deceased employee, shall refuse to allow the performance of such autopsy, such autopsy shall not be held; but upon the hearing of any application for compensation it shall be a disputable presumption that the injury or death was not due to causes entitling the claimants to benefits under this act.

Findings.

SEC. 20. (a) After final hearing by the commission, it shall, within thirty days, make and file (1) its findings upon all facts involved in the controversy and (2) its award which shall state its determination as to the rights of the parties.

(b) The commission in its award may fix and determine the total amount of compensation to be paid and specify the manner of payment, or may fix and determine the weekly disability payment to be made and order payment thereof during the continuance of such disability.

(c) If, in any proceeding under sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act, it is proved that an injury has been suffered for which the employer would be liable to pay compensation if disability had resulted therefrom, but it is not proved that any incapacity had resulted, the commission may, instead of dismissing the application, award a nominal disability indemnity, if it appears that disability is likely to result at a future time.

continuing.

(d) The commission shall have continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions, and awards made and entered under the provisions of sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act, and may at any time, upon notice, and after opportunity to be heard is given to the parties in interest, rescind, alter, or amend any such order, decision, or award made by it upon good cause appearing therefor, such power, including the right to review, grant, or regrant, diminish, increase, or terminate, within the limits prescribed by this act, any compensation awarded, upon the grounds that the disability of the person in whose favor such award was made has either recurred, increased, diminished, or terminated: Provided, That no award of compensation shall be rescinded, altered, or amended after two hundred forty-five weeks from the date of the injury. Any order, decision, or award rescinding, altering, or amending a prior order, decision, or award shall have the same effect as is herein provided for original orders, decisions, or awards.

Enforcement of award.

SEC. 21. (a) Any party affected thereby may file a certified copy of the findings and award of the commission with the clerk of the superior court of any county, or city and county, and judgment must be entered by the clerk in conformity therewith immediately upon the filing of such findings and award.

(b) The certified copy of the findings and award of the commission and a copy of the judgment shall constitute the judgment roll. The pleadings, all orders of the commission, its original findings and award, and all other papers and documents filed in the cause shall remain on file in the office of the commission.

(c) The commission, or any member thereof, may stay the execution of any judgment entered upon an award of the commission, upon good cause appearing therefor and upon such terms and conditions as may be imposed. A certified copy of such order shall be filed with the clerk entering judgment. Where it is deemed desirable to stay the enforcement of an award and a certified copy of said findings and award has not been issued by the commission, the commission, or any member thereof, may order such certified copy to be withheld with the same force and under the same conditions as it might issue a stay of execution if said certified copy had been issued and judgment entered thereon.

(d) When a judgment is satisfied in fact, otherwise than upon an execution, the commission may, upon motion of either party or of its own motion, order the entry of satisfaction of the judgment to be made, and upon filing a certified copy of such order with the said clerk, he shall thereupon enter such satisfaction, and not otherwise.

Sec. 22. The orders, findings, decisions, or awards of the commission made and entered under sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act may be reviewed by the courts specified in sections sixty-seven and sixty-eight hereof and within the time and in the manner therein specified and not otherwise. [Ch. 586, 1917.]
Review by courts.

Sec. 23. No fees shall be charged by the clerk of any court for the performance of any official service required by this act, except for the docketing of awards as judgments and for certified copies of transcripts thereof. In all proceedings under this act before the commission, costs as between the parties shall be allowed or not in the discretion of the commission, and the commission may, in its discretion, where payments of compensation have been unreasonably delayed, allow the beneficiary thereof interest thereon, at not to exceed one and one-half per cent per month, during such period of delay. [Ch. 586, 1917.]
Fees, costs, etc.

Sec. 24 (as amended by chapter 586, acts of 1919). (a) No claim for compensation shall be assignable before payment, but this provision shall not affect the survival thereof, nor shall any claim for compensation, or compensation awarded, adjudged, or paid, be subject to be taken for the debts of the party entitled to such compensation, except as hereinafter provided. No compensation, whether awarded or voluntarily paid, shall be paid to any attorney at law, or in fact, or other agent, but shall be paid directly to the claimant entitled to the same, unless otherwise ordered by the commission. Any payment made to such attorney at law or in fact or other agent in violation of the provisions of this section shall not be credited to the employer. [Ch. 586, 1917.]
Assignments of claims.

(b) The commission may fix and determine and allow as a lien against any amount to be paid as compensation. Liens.

(1) A reasonable attorney's fee for legal services pertaining to any claim for compensation or application filed therefor and the reasonable disbursements in connection therewith.

(2) The reasonable expense incurred by or on behalf of the injured employee, as defined in subsection (a) of section nine hereof.

(3) The reasonable value of the living expenses of an injured employee or of his dependents subsequent to the injury.

(4) The reasonable burial expenses of the deceased employee, not to exceed the sum of one hundred dollars.

(5) The reasonable living expenses of the wife or minor children of the injured employee, or both, subsequent to the date of the injury, where such employee has deserted or is neglecting his family, to be allowed in such proportion as the commission shall deem proper, upon application of the wife or guardian of the minor children.

(c) If notice in writing be given to the employer setting forth the nature and extent of any claim that may be allowed as a lien, the said claim shall be a lien against any amount thereafter to be paid as compensation, subject to the determination of the amount and approval thereof by the commission. The commission may, in its discretion, order the amount of such claim as fixed and allowed by it paid directly to the person entitled, either in a lump sum or in installments. Where it appears in any proceeding pending before the commission that a lien should be allowed if the same had been duly requested by the party entitled thereto, the commission may, in its discretion, and without any request for such lien having been made, order the payment of such claim to be made directly to the person entitled, in the same manner and with the same effect as though such lien had been regularly requested, and the award to such person shall constitute a lien against unpaid compensation due at the time of service of said award. Claim a lien, when.

(d) No claim or agreement for the legal services or disbursements mentioned in paragraph (1) of subsection (b) hereof, or for the expense mentioned in paragraph (2) of said subsection (b), in excess of a reasonable amount, shall be valid or binding in any respect, and it shall be competent for the commission to determine what constitutes such reasonable amount.

(e) A claim for compensation for the injury or death of any employee, or any award of judgment entered thereon, shall have preference over all other unsecured debts of the employer or insurance carrier.

Principals and contractors.

SEC. 25. The liability of principal employers and contracting employers, general or intermediate, for compensation under this act, when other than the immediate employer of the injured employee, shall be as follows:

(a) When any such employer undertakes to do, or contracts with another to do, or to have done, any work, either directly or through contractors or subcontractors, then such principal employer or contracting employer shall be liable to pay to any employee injured while engaged in the execution of such work, or to his dependents in the event of his death, or to any other person, any compensation which the immediate employer is liable to pay, and the commission shall have jurisdiction to determine all controversies arising under this section.

(b) The person entitled to such compensation shall have the right to recover the same directly from his immediate employer, and in addition thereto the right to enforce in his own name, in the manner provided by this act, the liability for compensation imposed upon other persons by this section, either by making such other persons parties to the original application or by filing a separate application: Provided, however, That payment in whole or in part of such compensation by either the immediate employer or other person shall, to the extent of such payment, be a bar to recovery against the other.

(c) When any person, other than the immediate employer, shall have paid any compensation for which he would not have been liable independently of this section, he shall, unless he caused the injury, be entitled to recover the full amount so paid from the person primarily liable therefor, and jurisdiction to determine his claim shall be vested in the commission: Provided, That such right of reimbursement against the person primarily liable for compensation shall not exist in favor of any insurance carrier insuring such other persons upon whom liability is imposed by this section, in any case where the immediate employer shall have joined with any of such other persons in taking out such policy of insurance or shall have contributed to the payment of the premium for such insurance, with the intent of securing joint protection thereby, anything in the policy to the contrary notwithstanding.

(d) The liability imposed by this section shall be subject to the following limitations:

(1) Such liability shall exist only in cases where the injury occurred on or in or about the premises on which the principal employer or contracting employer, whether general or intermediate, has undertaken to execute or to have executed any work, or when such premises or work are otherwise under his control or management.

(2) Such liability shall not exist in the event that the immediate employer, or other person primarily liable for the compensation shall, previous to the suffering of such injury, have taken out, and maintained in full force and effect, compensation insurance with any insurance carrier, covering his full liability for compensation.

(3) The commission may, in its discretion, order that execution against such principal employer or contracting employer be stayed until execution against the immediate employer shall be returned unsatisfied.

(e) The findings and award of this commission entered against the immediate employer shall be conclusive for or against all persons upon whom liability is imposed by this section as to the fact and extent of liability of such immediate employer.

[This section is unconstitutional in so far as it attempts to authorize the awarding of compensation against a third person not an employer, Perry v. Industrial Acc. Com., 181 Pac. 788.]

Injuries caused by third parties.

SEC. 26 (as amended by chapter 471, acts of 1919). The term "employee," as used in this section, shall include the person injured and any other person in whom a claim may arise by reason of the injury or death of such injured person. The death of the employee, or of any other person, shall not abate any right of action established by this section. The claim of an employee for compensation shall not affect his right of action for damages arising out of injury or death against any person other than the employer; and any employer having paid, or having become obligated to pay, compensation, may likewise bring an action against such other person to recover said damages. If either such employee or such employer shall bring such action against such third person, he shall forthwith notify the other in writing, by personal service or registered mail, of such fact and of the name of the court in which such suit is brought, filing proof thereof in such action, and if the action be brought by either, the other may, at any time before trial on the facts, join as party plaintiff or must consolidate his action, if brought independently. If the suit be prosecuted by the employer alone evidence of any expenditures which the employer has paid or become obligated to pay by reason of said injury or death shall be admissible, and such expenditures shall be deemed a part of the damages, including a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court; and if in such suit the employer shall recover more than the amount he has paid or become obligated to pay as compensation he shall pay the excess to the injured employee or other person entitled. If the employee joins in or prosecutes such suit, evidence of the amount of disability indemnity or death benefit paid by the employer shall not be admissible, but proof of all other expenditures on account of said injury or death shall be admissible and shall be deemed part of the damages. The court shall, on application, allow as a first lien against any judgment recovered by the employee the amount of the employer's expenditures for compensation. When any injury or death shall have been suffered by an employee, no release or settlement of any claim for damages by reason of such injury or death and no satisfaction of judgment in such proceedings, shall be valid without the written consent of either both employer and employee, or one of them, together with the consent of the commission or the court in which any such action may be pending.

Sec. 27. (a) No contract, rule, or regulation shall exempt the employer from liability for the compensation fixed by this act, but nothing in this act contained shall be construed as impairing the right of the parties interested to compromise, subject to the provisions herein contained, any liability which may be claimed to exist under this act on account of such injury or death, or as conferring upon the dependents of any injured employee any interest which such employee may not divert by such compromise or for which he or his estate shall, in the event of such compromise by him, be accountable to such dependents or any of them.

Waivers.

(b) The compensation herein provided shall be the measure of the responsibility which the employer has assumed for injuries or death that may occur to employees in his employment when subject to the provisions of this act, and no release of liability or compromise agreement shall be valid unless it provide for the payment of full compensation in accordance with the provisions of this act or unless it shall be approved by the commission.

Agreements to be approved.

(c) A copy of such release or compromise agreement signed by both parties shall forthwith be filed with the commission. When such release or compromise agreement is filed with the commission and approved by it, the commission may of its own motion, or on the application of either party, without notice, enter its award based upon such release or compromise agreement.

(d) Every such release or compromise agreement shall be in writing, duly executed and attested by two disinterested witnesses, and shall specify the date of the accident, the average weekly wages of the employee, determined according to section twelve hereof, the nature of the disability, whether total or partial, permanent or temporary, the amount paid or due and unpaid to the employee up to the date of the release or agreement or death, as the case may be, and, if any, the amount of the payment or benefits then or thereafter to be made and the length of time that such payment is to continue. In case of death there shall also be stated in such release or compromise agreement the date of death, the name of the widow, if any, the names and ages of all children, if any, and the names of all other dependents, if any, and whether such dependents be total or partial, and the amount paid or to be paid as a death benefit and to whom such payment is to be made.

Sec. 28. (a) At the time of making its award, or at any time thereafter, the commission, on its own motion, either with or without notice, or upon application of either party with due notice to the other, may, in its discretion, commute the compensation payable under this act to a lump sum, if it appears that such commutation is necessary for the protection of the person entitled thereto, or for the best interest of either party, or that it will avoid undue expense or hardship to either party or that the employer has sold or otherwise disposed of the greater part of his assets, or is about to do so, or that the employer is not a resident of this State, and the commission may order such compensation paid forthwith or at some future time.

Lump sums.

(b) The amount of the commuted payment shall be determined in accordance with the following provisions:

(1) If the injury causes temporary disability, the commission shall estimate the probable duration thereof and the probable amount of the temporary disability payments therefor, in accordance with the provisions of section nine hereof, and shall fix the lump sum payment at such amount so determined.

(2) If the injury causes permanent disability or death, the commission shall fix the total amount of the permanent disability payment or death benefit payable therefor in accordance with the provisions of said section nine, and shall estimate the present value thereof, assuming interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, disregarding the probability of the beneficiary's death in all cases except where the percentage of permanent disability is such as to entitle the beneficiary to a life pension, and then taking into consideration the probability of the beneficiary's death only in estimating the present value of such life pension.

(c) The commission in its discretion may order the lump sum payment, determined as hereinbefore provided, paid directly to the injured employee or his dependents or deposited with any savings bank or trust company authorized to transact business in this State that will agree to accept the same as a deposit bearing interest, or the commission may order the same deposited with the State compensation insurance fund. Any such amount so deposited, together with all interest derived therefrom, shall thereafter be held in trust for the injured employee or, in the event of his death, for his dependents, and the latter shall have no further recourse against the employer. Payments from said fund, when so deposited, shall be made by the trustee only in the same amounts and at the same time as fixed by order of the commission and until said fund and interest thereon shall be exhausted. In the appointment of the trustee preference shall be given, in the discretion of the commission, to the choice of the injured employee or his dependents. Upon the making of such payment, the employer shall present to the commission a proper receipt evidencing the same, executed either by the injured employee or his dependents, or by the trustee, and the commission shall thereupon issue its certificate in proper form evidencing the same, and such certificate, upon filing with the clerk of the superior court in which any judgment upon an award may have been entered, shall operate as a satisfaction of said award and shall fully discharge the employer from any further liability on account thereof.

(d) The commission may, where the employer is uninsured and the payments of compensation awarded are to be paid for a considerable time in the future, determine the present worth of said future payments, discounted at the rate of three per cent per annum, and order the said present worth paid into the State compensation insurance fund, which fund shall thereafter pay to the beneficiaries of said award the future payments as they become due.

Payments to be secured.

Sec. 29 (as amended by chapter 471, acts of 1917). (a) Every employer as defined in section seven hereof, except the State and all political subdivisions or institutions thereof, shall secure the payment of compensation in one or more of the following ways:

1. By insuring and keeping insured against liability to pay compensation in one or more insurance carriers duly authorized to write compensation insurance in this State.

2. By securing from the commission a certificate of consent to self-insure, which may be given upon his furnishing proof satisfactory to the commission of ability to carry his own insurance and pay any compensation that may become due to his employees, the commission may, in its discretion, require such employer to deposit with the State treasurer a bond or securities, but not both a bond and securities, approved by the commission, in an amount to be determined by the commission. Such certificate may be revoked at any time for good cause shown. So long as the certificate of consent to self-insure has not been revoked, and the self-insurer has deposited with the State treasurer such bond or securities, the self-insurer shall not be required or obliged to pay into the State compensation insurance fund any sums covering liability for compensation, excepting life pensions; but shall be permitted, and such permission is hereby given the self-insurer, to fully administer any and all such compensation benefits assessed against the said insurer.

(b) If any employer shall fail so to secure the payment of compensation any injured employee or his dependents may proceed against such employer by filing an application for compensation with the commission, and, in addition thereto, such injured employee or his dependents may bring an action at law against such employer for damages, the same as if this act did not apply, and shall be entitled in such action to the right to attach the property of the employer, at any time upon or after the institution of such action, in an amount to be fixed by the court, to secure the payment of any judgment which may ultimately be obtained. Such judgment shall include a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, except in so far as they may be inconsistent with this act, shall govern the issuance of and proceedings upon such attachment: Provided, That if as a result of such action for damages a judgment is obtained against such employer in excess of the compensation awarded under this act, the compensation awarded by the commission, if paid, or if security approved by the court be given for its payment, shall be credited upon such judgment: Provided, further, That in such action it shall be presumed that the injury to the employee was a direct result and grew out of the negligence of the employer, and the burden of proof shall rest upon the employer to rebut the presumption of negligence. In such proceeding it shall not be a defense to the employer that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence, or assumed the risk of the hazard complained of, or that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant. No contract, rule or regulation shall be allowed to restore to the employer any of the foregoing defenses.

Failure to secure payments.

Sec. 30. (a) Nothing in this act shall affect the organization of any mutual or other insurance company, or any existing contract for insurance, or the right of the employer to insure in mutual or other companies, in whole or in part, against liability for the compensation provided by this act; or to provide by mutual or other insurance, or by arrangement with his employees, or otherwise, for the payment to such employees, their families, dependents or representatives, of sick, accident or death benefits, in addition to the compensation provided for by this act; or the right of the employer to waive the waiting period provided for herein by insurance coverage: Provided, however, That it shall be unlawful for any employer to exact or receive from any employee any contribution, or make or take any deduction from the earnings of any employee, either directly, or indirectly, to cover the whole or any part of the cost of compensation under this act, and it shall be a misdemeanor so to do.

Insurance.

(b) Liability for compensation shall not be reduced or affected by any insurance, contribution, or other benefit whatsoever due to or received by the person entitled to such compensation, except as otherwise provided by this act, and the person so entitled shall, irrespective of any insurance or other contract, except as otherwise provided in this act, have the right to recover such compensation directly from the employer, and in addition thereto, the right to enforce in his own name, in the manner provided in this act, either by making the insurance carrier a party to the original application or by filing a separate application, the liability of any insurance carrier, which may, in whole or in part, have insured against liability for such compensation: Provided, however, That payment in whole or in part of such compensation by either the employer or the insurance company shall, to the extent thereof, be a bar to recovery against the other of the amount so paid: And provided, further, That as between the employer and the insurance company, payment by either directly to the employee, or to the person entitled to compensation, shall be subject to the conditions of the insurance contract between them.

Provisions of policies.

(c) Every contract insuring against liability for compensation, or insurance policy evidencing the same, must contain a clause to the effect that the insurance carrier shall be directly and primarily liable to the employee and, in the event of his death, to his dependents, to pay the compensation, if any, for which the employer is liable; that, as between the employee and the insurance carrier, the notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the employer shall be deemed notice or knowledge, as the case may be, on the part of the insurance carrier; that jurisdiction of the employer shall, for the purpose of this act, be jurisdiction of the insurance carrier; and that the insurance carrier shall in all things be bound by and subject to the orders, findings, decisions or awards rendered against the employer under the provisions of this act.

(d) Such policy must also provide that the employee shall have a first lien upon any amount which shall become owing on account of such policy to the employer from the insurance carrier, and that in case of the legal incapacity or inability of the employer to receive the said amount and pay it over to the employee or his dependents, the said insurance carrier may and shall pay the same directly to the said employee or his dependents, thereby discharging, to the extent of such payment, the obligations of the employer to the employee; and such policy shall not contain any provisions relieving the insurance carrier from payment when the employer becomes insolvent or is discharged in bankruptcy, or otherwise, during the period that the policy is in operation or the compensation remains owing. Every contract insuring against liability for compensation, provided by this act, or insurance policy evidencing the same shall be conclusively presumed to contain all of the provisions required by this act.

Employer relieved, when.

(e) (1) If the employer shall be insured against liability for compensation with any insurance carrier, and if after the suffering of any injury such insurance carrier shall serve or cause to be served upon any person claiming compensation against such employer a notice that it has assumed and agreed to pay the compensation, if any, for which the employer is liable, and shall file a copy of such notice with the commission, such employer shall thereupon be relieved from liability for compensation to such claimant and the insurance carrier shall, without notice, be substituted in place of the employer in any proceeding theretofore or thereafter instituted by such person to recover such compensation, and the employer shall be dismissed therefrom. Such proceedings shall not abate on account of such substitution but shall shall not abate on account of such substitution but shall be continued against such insurance carrier. If at the time of the suffering of an injury for which compensation is claimed, or may be claimed, the employer shall be insured against liability for the full amount of compensation payable, or that may become payable, the employer may serve or cause to be served upon any person claiming compensation on account of the suffering of such injury and upon the insurance carrier a notice that the insurance carrier has in its policy contract or otherwise, assumed and agreed to pay the compensation, if any, for which the employer is liable, and may file a copy of such notice with the commission. If it shall thereafter appear to the satisfaction of the commission that the insurance carrier has, through the issuance of its contract of insurance or otherwise, assumed such liability for compensation, such employer shall thereupon be relieved from liability for compensation to such claimant and the insurance carrier shall, after notice, be substituted in place of the employer in any proceeding theretofore or thereafter instituted by such person to recover such compensation, and the employer shall be dismissed therefrom. Such proceeding shall not abate on account of such substitution, but shall be continued against such insurance carrier.

(2) The commission may, with or without the filing of the notice required by the preceding paragraph, enter its order relieving the employer from liability where it appears from the pleadings, stipulations, or proof that an insurance carrier joined as party to the proceeding is liable for the full compensation which the employer in such proceeding is liable to pay.

(f) Where any employer is insured against liability for compensation with any insurance carrier and such insurance carrier shall have assumed the liability of the employer therefor in the manner provided by this section, or shall have paid any compensation for which the employer is liable, or furnished or provided any medical services required by this act, such insurance carrier shall be subrogated to all the rights and duties of such employer and may enforce any such rights of its own name.

Insurer's rights.

(g) The State compensation insurance fund may insure against any liability fixed under this act to the same extent as any insurance carrier.

Reinsurance by State fund.

Sec. 31. (a) If any insurance policy shall be issued covering liability for compensation, which policy shall contain any limitation as to the compensation payable, such limitation shall be printed in the body of such policy in bold-face type and in addition thereto the words "limited compensation policy" shall be printed on the top of the policy in bold-face type not less than eighteen point in size. Failure to observe the foregoing requirement shall render such policy unlimited.

[Ch. 586, 1917.] Limited policies.

(b) No insurance carrier shall insure against the liability of the employer for the additional compensation recoverable under the provisions contained in section six (b) hereof.

Sec. 32. Nothing contained in this act shall be taken or construed to limit, interfere with, disturb, or render ineffective in any degree, the creation, existence, organization, control, management, contracts, rights, powers, duties, and liabilities of the State compensation insurance fund, but all such matters and things are hereby expressly confirmed, saved, and continued.

[Ch. 586, 1917.] State fund unaffected.

Sec. 36 (as amended by chapter 607, acts of 1915). There is hereby created and established a fund to be known as the "State compensation insurance fund," to be administered by the industrial accident commission of the State, without liability on the part of the State beyond the amount of said fund, for the purpose of insuring employers against liability for compensation under this act and against the expense of defending any suit for damages under the optional provisions of section twelve hereof (subdivision b), and insuring to employees and other persons the compensation fixed by this act for employees and their dependents.

[Ch. 176, 1913.] State insurance fund.

Sec. 37 (as amended by chapter 607, acts of 1915). (a) The State compensation insurance fund shall be a revolving fund and shall consist of such specific appropriations as the legislature may from time to time make or set aside for the use of such fund, all premiums received and paid into the said fund for compensation insurance issued, all property and securities acquired by and through the use of moneys belonging to said fund and all interest earned upon moneys belonging to said fund and deposited or invested, as herein provided.

[Ch. 176, 1913.] State insurance fund.

(b) Said fund shall be applicable to the payment of losses sustained on account of insurance and to the payment of the salaries and other expenses to be charged against said fund in accordance with the provisions contained in this act.

(c) Said fund shall, after a reasonable time during which it may establish a business, be fairly competitive with other insurance carriers, and it is the intent of the legislature that said fund shall ultimately become neither more nor less than self-supporting. In order that the State compensation insurance fund shall ultimately become neither more nor less than self-supporting, the actual loss experience and expense of the fund shall be ascertained on or about the first of January in each year for the year preceding, and should it then be shown that there exists an excess of assets over liabilities, such liabilities to include the necessary reserves, and a reasonable surplus for the catastrophe hazard, then, in the discretion of the commission, a cash dividend shall be declared to, or a credit allowed on the renewal premium of each employer who has been insured with the fund, such cash dividend or credit to be such an amount to which, as in the discretion of the commission, such employer may be entitled as the employer's proportion of divisible surplus.

To be competitive.

Powers of commission.

SEC. 38. (a) The commission is hereby vested with full power, authority and jurisdiction over the State compensation insurance fund and may do and perform any and all things whether herein specifically designated, or in addition thereto, which are necessary or convenient in the exercise of any power, authority or jurisdiction over said fund in the administration thereof, or in connection with the insurance business to be carried on by it under the provisions of this act, as fully and completely as the governing body of a private insurance carrier might or could do.

(b) The commission shall have full power and authority, and it shall be its duty, to fix and determine the rates to be charged by the State compensation insurance fund for compensation insurance, and to manage and conduct all business and affairs in relation thereto, all of which business and affairs shall be conducted in the name of the State compensation insurance fund, and in that name, without any other name or title, the commission may:

(1) Sue and be sued in all the courts of the State in all actions arising out of any act, deed, matter or thing made, omitted, entered into, done, or suffered in connection with the State compensation insurance fund, the administration, management or conduct of the business or affairs relating thereto.

(2) Make and enter into contracts of insurance as herein provided, and such other contracts or obligations relating to the State compensation insurance fund as are authorized or permitted under the provisions of this act.

(3) Invest and reinvest the moneys belonging to said fund as herein-after provided.

(4) Conduct all business and affairs, relating to the State compensation insurance fund, whether herein specifically designated or in addition thereto.

(c) The commission may delegate to the manager of the State compensation insurance fund, or to any other officer, under such rules and regulations and subject to such conditions as it may from time to time prescribe, any of the powers, functions or duties, conferred or imposed on the commission under the provisions of this act in connection with the State compensation insurance fund, the administration, management and conduct of the business and affairs relating thereto, and the officer or officers to whom such delegation is made may exercise the powers and functions and perform the duties delegated with the same force and effect as the commission, but subject to its approval.

(d) The commission shall not, nor shall any commissioner, officer or employee thereof, be personally liable in his private capacity for or on account of any act performed or contract or other obligation entered into or undertaken in an official capacity, in good faith and without intent to defraud, in connection with the administration, management or conduct of the State compensation insurance fund, its business or other affairs relating thereto.

Powers of manager.

SEC. 39. In conducting the business and affairs of the State compensation insurance fund, the manager of the said fund or other officer to whom such power and authority may be delegated by the commission, as provided by subsection (c) of section thirty-eight thereof, shall have full power and authority:

(1) To enter into contracts of insurance, insuring employers against liability for compensation and insuring to employees and other persons the compensation fixed by this act.

(2) To sell annuities covering compensation benefits.

(3) To decline to insure any risk in which the minimum requirements of the commission with regard to construction, equipment and operation are not observed, or which is beyond the safe carrying of the State compensation insurance fund, but shall not have power or authority, except as otherwise provided in this subdivision, to refuse to insure any compensation risk tendered with the premium therefor.

(4) To reinsure any risk or any part thereof.

(5) To inspect and audit, or cause to be inspected and audited the pay rolls of employers applying for insurance against liability for compensation.

(6) To make rules and regulations for the settlement of claims against said fund and to determine to whom and through whom the payments of compensation are to be made.

(7) To contract with physicians, surgeons, and hospitals for medical and surgical treatment and the care and nursing of injured persons entitled to benefits from said fund.

Sec. 40. (a) It shall be the duty of the commission to fix and determine the rates to be charged by the State compensation insurance fund for compensation insurance coverage as herein provided, and such rates shall be fixed with due regard to the physical hazards of each industry, occupation, or employment and, within each class, so far as practicable, in accordance with the elements of bodily risk or safety or other hazard of the plant or premises or work of each insured and the manner in which the same is conducted, together with a reasonable regard for the accident experience and history of each such insured, and the means and methods of caring for injured persons, but such rates shall take no account of the extent to which the employees in any particular establishment have or have not persons dependent upon them for support.

Rates.

(b) The rates so made shall be that percentage of the pay roll of any employer which, in the long run and on the average, shall produce a sufficient sum, when invested at three and one-half per cent interest:

(1) To carry all claims to maturity; that is to say, the rates shall be based upon the "reserve" and not upon the "assessment" plan;

(2) To meet the reasonable expenses of conducting the business of such insurance;

(3) To produce a reasonable surplus to cover the catastrophe hazard.

Sec. 41. The insurance contracts entered into between the State compensation insurance fund and persons insuring therewith may be either limited or unlimited, and issued for one year or, in the form of stamps or tickets or otherwise, for one month or any number of months less than one year, or for one day or any number of days less than one month, or during the performance of any particular work, job, or contract. Provided, That the rates charged shall be proportionately greater for a shorter than for a longer period and that a minimum premium charge shall be fixed in accordance with a reasonable rate for insuring one person for one day. Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any person applying for compensation insurance from being covered temporarily until the application is finally acted upon, or to prevent the insured from surrendering any policy at any time and having returned to him the difference between the premium paid and the premium at the customary short term for the shorter period which such policy has already run. The State compensation insurance fund may at any time cancel any policy, after due notice, upon a pro rata basis of premium repayment.

Contracts.

Sec. 42. The State compensation insurance fund may issue policies, including with their employees, employers who perform labor incidental to their occupations, and including also members of the families of such employers engaged in the same occupation, such policies insuring to such employers and working members of their families the same compensations provided for their employees, and at the same rates: Provided, That the estimations of their wage values, respectively, shall be reasonable and separately stated in and added to the valuation of their pay rolls upon which their premium is computed. Such policies may likewise be sold to self-employing persons and to casual employees, who, for the purpose of such insurance, shall be deemed to be employees within the meaning of sections twelve to thirty-five, inclusive, of this act.

Who may be insured.

Sec. 43. The treasurer of the State shall be custodian of all moneys and securities belonging to the State compensation insurance fund, except as otherwise provided in this act, and shall be liable on his official bond for the safe-keeping thereof. All moneys belonging to said fund collected or received by the commission, or the manager of the State compensation insurance fund, under and by virtue of the provisions of this act, shall be delivered to the treasurer of the State or may be deposited to his credit in such bank or banks throughout the State as he may, from time to time, designate, and such moneys when so delivered or deposited shall be credited by the treasurer to the said fund and no moneys received or collected on account of such fund shall be expended or paid out of such fund without first passing into the State treasury and being drawn therefrom as provided in this act. In like manner there shall be delivered to the treasurer all securities belonging to said fund which shall be held by him until otherwise disposed of as provided in this act.

Monthly estimates. SEC. 44. (a) The commission shall submit each month to the State board of control an estimate of the amount necessary to meet the current disbursements from the State compensation insurance fund during each succeeding calendar month and, when such estimate shall be approved by the State board of control, the controller is directed to draw his warrant on said fund in favor of said commission for such amount, and the treasurer is authorized and directed to pay the same.

(b) At the end of each calendar month the commission shall account to the State board of control and the State controller for all moneys so received, furnishing proper vouchers therefor.

(c) During the months of January and July of each year the State board of control or the commission shall cause a valuation to be made of the properties and securities which have been acquired and which are held for said fund, and shall report the results of the same to the State controller, whose duty it shall be to keep a special ledger account showing all of the assets pertaining to the State compensation insurance fund. In the controller's general ledger this fund account may be carried merely as a cash account, like other accounts of funds in the State treasury, and therein only the actual cash coming into the State compensation insurance fund shall be credited to such fund.

Investments. SEC. 45. (a) The commission shall cause all moneys in the State compensation insurance fund, in excess of current requirements, to be invested and reinvested, from time to time, in the securities now or hereafter authorized by law for the investment of funds of savings banks.

(b) The commission shall, from time to time, submit to the State board of control an estimate of the amount required by it for investment, which estimate shall be accompanied by a full description of the kind and character of the investments to be made and, when such estimate shall be approved by the State board of control, the controller is directed to draw his warrant on the State compensation insurance fund in favor of the commission for such amount and the treasurer is authorized and directed to pay the same.

(c) At the end of each calendar month the commission shall account to the said board of control and the State controller for all moneys so received, furnishing proper vouchers therefor.

(d) All moneys in said fund, in excess of current requirements and not otherwise invested, may be deposited by the State treasurer from time to time in the banks authorized by law to receive deposits of public moneys under the same rules and regulations that govern the deposit of other public funds and the interest accruing thereon shall be credited to the State compensation insurance fund.

[Ch. 176, 1913.]
Municipalities. SEC. 46 (as amended by chapter 607, acts of 1915). Each county, city and county, city, school district, or other public corporation or quasi-public corporation within the State, not including, however, any public-utility corporation, may insure against its liability for compensation with the State compensation insurance fund and not with any other insurance carrier unless such fund shall refuse to accept the risk when the application for insurance is made, and the premium therefor shall be a proper charge against the general fund of each such political subdivision of the State.

Schedules of rates to be furnished. SEC. 47. When the premium rates for insurance in the State compensation insurance fund shall have been established the commission shall furnish schedules of rates and copies of the forms of policy to the commissioner of labor, to the clerk and to the treasurer of every county, city and county, and city in the State, and it shall be the duty of every public officer to whom the foregoing may be furnished to fill out and transmit to the manager of the State compensation insurance fund applications for compensation insurance in such fund and to receive and transmit to said manager all premiums paid on account of any policy issued or applied for, and for this service such officials may be allowed such commission or other compensation as the commission may from time to time direct.

Sec. 48. The commission shall each quarter make to the governor of the State, reports of the business done by the State compensation insurance fund during the previous quarter, and a statement of the fund's resources and liabilities, and it shall be the duty of the State board of control to audit such reports and to cause an abstract thereof to be published one or more times in at least two newspapers of general circulation in the State. The commission shall likewise make to the State insurance commissioner all reports required by law to be made by other insurance carriers.

Reports.

Sec. 49. Any employer who shall willfully misrepresent the amount of the pay roll upon which his premium under this act is to be based shall be liable to the State in ten times the amount of the difference in premium paid and the amount the employer should have paid had his pay roll been correctly computed, and the liability to the State under this section shall be enforced in a civil action in the name of the State compensation insurance fund and any amount so collected shall become a part of said fund.

Misrepresenting pay roll.

Sec. 50. Any person who willfully misrepresents any fact in order to obtain insurance at less than the proper rate for such insurance, or in order to obtain any payments out of such fund, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

[Ch. 176, 1913.]
Fraud.

[Here follow sections 33 to 54 of chapter 586, acts of 1917. They relate to safety provisions, inspections, accident reporting and investigation, and are printed in Bulletin No. 244, Labor Legislation of 1917.]

Sec. 55. (a) All proceedings for the recovery of compensation, or concerning any right or liability arising out of or incidental thereto, or for the enforcement against the employer or an insurance carrier of any liability for compensation imposed upon him by this act in favor of the injured employee, his dependents or any third person, or for the determination of any question as to the distribution of compensation among dependents or other persons, or for the determination of any question as to who are dependents of any deceased employee, or what persons are entitled to any benefit under the compensation provisions of this act, or for obtaining any order which by this act the commission is authorized to make, or for the determination of any other matter, jurisdiction over which is vested by this act in the commission, shall be instituted before the commission, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise in this act provided, and the commission is hereby vested with full power, authority and jurisdiction to try and finally determine all such matters, subject only to the review by the courts in this act specified and in the manner and within the time in this act provided.

Proceedings before commission.

(b) All orders, rules and regulations, findings, decisions and awards of the commission shall be in force and shall be prima facie lawful; and all such orders, rules and regulations, findings, decisions and awards shall be conclusively presumed to be reasonable and lawful, until and unless they are modified or set aside by the commission or upon a review by the courts in this act specified and within the time and in the manner herein specified.

Sec. 56. (a) Any notice, order or decision required by this act to be served upon any person or party either before, during or after the institution of any proceeding before the commission, may be served in the manner provided by chapter five, title fourteen of part two of the Code of Civil Procedure of this State, unless otherwise directed by the commission or a member thereof, in which event the same shall be served in accordance with the order or direction of said commission or member thereof. The commission or a commissioner may also, in the cases mentioned in the Code of Civil Procedure of this State, order service to be made by publication of the notice of time and place of hearing. Where service is ordered to be made by publication the date of the hearing may be fixed at more than thirty days from the date of filing the application.

Service of notices, etc.

(b) Any such notice, order or decision affecting the State or any city and county, city, school district or public corporation therein, shall be served upon the same officer, officers, person or persons, upon whom the service of similar notices, orders or decisions is authorized by law.

(c) The secretary, assistant secretaries and the inspectors appointed by the commission shall have all the powers conferred by law upon peace officers to carry weapons, make arrests and serve warrants and other process in this State.

[Ch. 586, 1917.]
mission.

SEC. 57. (a) The commission shall have full power and authority:

(1) To adopt reasonable and proper rules of practice and procedure.
(2) To regulate and provide the manner, and by whom, minors and incompetent persons shall appear and be represented before it.

(3) To appoint a trustee or guardian ad litem to appear for and represent any such minor or incompetent upon such terms and conditions as it may deem proper; and such guardian or trustee must, if required by the commission or a commissioner, give a bond in the same form and of the same character required by law from a guardian appointed by the courts and in such an amount as the commission or a commissioner may fix and determine, such bond to be approved by the commission or a commissioner, and such guardian or trustee shall not be discharged from liability until he shall have filed an account with the commission or with the probate court and such account shall have been approved. The trustee or guardian shall be entitled to receive such compensation for his services as shall be fixed and allowed by the commission or by the probate court.

(4) To provide for the joinder in the same proceeding of all persons interested therein, whether as employer, insurance carrier, employee, dependent, creditor or otherwise.

(5) To regulate and prescribe the kind and character of notices, where not otherwise prescribed by this act, and the service thereof.

(6) To regulate and prescribe the nature and extent of the proofs and evidence.

(b) The commission shall also have jurisdiction to determine controversies arising out of insurance policies issued to self-employed persons, conferring benefits identical with those prescribed by this act.

The commission may try and determine matters referred to it by the parties under the provisions of part three, title ten, of the Code of Civil Procedure, with respect to controversies arising out of insurance issued to self-employed persons under the provisions of this act. Such controversies may be submitted to it by the signed agreement of the parties, or by the application of one party and the submission of the other to its jurisdiction, with or without an express request for arbitration. The State compensation insurance fund must submit to the commission, the consent of the other party being obtained, all controversies susceptible of being arbitrated under this section. In acting as arbitrator under the provisions of this section, the commission shall have all the powers which it may lawfully exercise in compensation cases, and its findings and award upon such arbitration shall have the same conclusiveness and be subject to the same mode of reopening, review and enforcement as in compensation cases. No fee or cost shall be charged by the commission to any party for arbitrating the issues presented under this section.

Injuries outside
State.

SEC. 58. The commission shall have jurisdiction over all controversies arising out of injuries suffered without the territorial limits of this State in those cases where the injured employee is a resident of this State at the time of the injury and the contract of hire was made in this State, and any such employee or his dependents shall be entitled to the compensation or death benefits provided by this act.

[This section is unconstitutional, as it discriminates between residents of the State and nonresident citizens of other States. Quong Ham Wah Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 59 Cal., Dec. 18.]

References.

SEC. 59. The commission may upon the agreement of the parties, upon the application of either, or of its own motion, and either with or without notice, direct and order a reference in the following cases:

(1) To try any or all of the issues in any proceeding before it, whether of fact or of law, and to report a finding, order, decision or award to be based thereon.

(2) To ascertain a fact necessary to enable the commission to determine any proceeding before it or to make any order, decision or award that the commission is authorized to make under this act, or that is necessary for the information of the commission.

(b) The commission may appoint one or more referees in any proceeding, as it may deem necessary or advisable, and may refer matters arising out of the same proceeding to different referees. It may also, in its discretion, appoint general referees who shall hold office during the pleasure of the commission. Any referee appointed by the commission shall have such powers, jurisdiction and authority as is granted under the law, by the order of appointment and by the rules of the commission, and shall receive such salary or compensation for his services as may be fixed by the commission.

Power of referees.

(c) Any party to the proceeding may object to the appointment of any person as referee upon any one or more of the grounds specified in section six hundred forty-one of the Code of Civil Procedure and such objection must be heard and disposed of by the commission. Affidavits may be read and witnesses examined as to such objections.

(d) Before entering upon his duties, the referee must be sworn before an officer authorized to administer oaths, faithfully and fairly to hear and determine the matters and issues referred to him, and to make just findings and report according to his understanding.

(e) The referee must report his findings in writing to the commission within fifteen days after the testimony is closed. Such report shall be made in the form prescribed by the commission and shall include all matters required to be included in the order of reference or by the rules of the commission. The facts found and conclusions of law must be separately stated.

(f) Upon the filing of the report of the referee, the commission may confirm, adopt, modify or set aside the same or any part thereof and may, either with or without further proceedings, and either with or without notice, enter its order, findings, decision or award based in whole or in part upon the report of the referee, or upon the record in the case.

(g) The provisions of the preceding subdivisions of this section shall not be construed to prevent the commission from requiring its referees merely to hold hearings and to make return of the testimony to the commission.

Sec. 60. (a) All hearings and investigations before the commission or any member thereof, or any referee appointed thereby, shall be governed by this act and by the rules of practice and procedure adopted by the commission, and in the conduct thereof neither the commission nor any member thereof, nor any referee appointed thereby, shall be bound by the common law or statutory rules of evidence and procedure, but may make inquiry in such manner, through oral testimony and written and printed records, as is best calculated to ascertain the substantial rights of the parties and carry out justly the spirit and provisions of this act. No informality in any proceeding or in the manner of taking testimony shall invalidate any order, decision, award, rule or regulation made, approved or confirmed by the commission; nor shall any order, award, rule or regulation be invalidated because of the admission into the record, and use as proof of any fact in dispute, of any evidence not admissible under the said common law or statutory rules of evidence and procedure.

Procedure.

(b) The commission, or a commissioner or referee, or any party to the action or proceeding, may, in any investigation or hearing before the commission, cause the deposition of witnesses residing within or without the State to be taken in the manner prescribed by law for like depositions in civil actions in the superior courts of this State, and to that end may compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, documents, papers and accounts: Provided, That depositions taken outside of the State may be taken before any officers authorized to administer oaths.

Sec. 61. The commission and each member thereof, its secretary, assistant secretaries and referees, shall have power to administer oaths, certify to all official acts, and to issue subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, books, accounts, documents and testimony in any inquiry, investigation, hearing or proceeding in any part of the State. Each witness who shall appear, by order of the commission or a member thereof, or a referee appointed thereby, shall be entitled to receive, if demanded, for his attendance the same fees and mileage allowed by law to a witness in civil cases, which amount shall be paid by the party at whose request such witness is subpoenaed, unless otherwise ordered by the commission. When any witness who has not been required to attend at the request of any party is subpoenaed by the commission, his fees and mileage may be paid from the funds appropriated for the use of the commission in the same manner as other expenses of the commission are paid. Any witness subpoenaed, except one whose fees and mileage may be paid from the funds of the commission, may, at the time of service, demand the fee to which he is entitled for travel to and from the place at which he is required to appear, and one day's attendance. If such witness demands such fees at the time of service, and they are not at that time paid or tendered, he shall not be required to attend before the commission, member thereof, or referee as directed in the subpoena. All fees and mileage to which any witness is entitled, under the provisions of this section, may be collected by action therefor instituted by the person to whom such fees are payable.

Courts to aid.

SEC. 62. The superior court in and for the county, or city and county, in which any inquiry, investigation, hearing or proceeding may be held by the commission or any member thereof or referee appointed thereby, shall have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses, the giving of testimony and the production of papers, including books, accounts and documents, as required by any subpoena issued by the commission or member thereof or referee. The commission or any member thereof or the referee, before whom the testimony is to be given or produced, in case of the refusal of any witness to attend or testify or produce any papers required by such subpoena, may report to the superior court in and for the county, or city and county, in which the proceeding is pending, by petition, setting forth that due notice has been given of the time and place of attendance of said witness, or the production of said papers, and that the witness has been subpoenaed in the manner prescribed in this act, and that the witness has failed and refused to attend or produce the papers required by the subpoena, or has refused to answer questions propounded to him in the course of such proceeding, and ask an order of said court, compelling the witness to attend and testify or produce said papers before the commission. The court, upon the petition of the commission or such member thereof or referee, shall enter an order directing the witness to appear before the court at a time and place to be fixed by the court in such order, the time to be not more than ten days from the date of the order, and then and there show cause why he had not attended and testified or produced said papers before the commission, member thereof or referee. A copy of said order shall be served upon said witness. If it shall appear to the court that said subpoena was regularly issued by the commission or member thereof or referee and that the witness was legally bound to comply therewith, the court shall thereupon enter an order that said witness appear before the commission or member thereof or referee at a time and place to be fixed in such order, and testify or produce the required papers, and upon failure to obey said order, said witness shall be dealt with as for contempt of court. The remedy provided in this section is cumulative, and shall not be construed to impair or interfere with the power of the commission or a member thereof to enforce the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, and to punish for contempt in the same manner and to the same extent as courts of record.

General powers.

SEC. 63. (a) The commission is hereby vested with full power, authority and jurisdiction to do and perform any and all things, whether herein specifically designated, or in addition thereto, which are necessary or convenient in the exercise of any power, authority or jurisdiction conferred upon it under this act.

(b) The commission and each member thereof shall have power to issue writs or summons, warrants of attachment, warrants of commitment and all necessary process in proceedings for contempt, in like manner and to the same extent as courts of record. The process issued by the commission or any member thereof shall extend to all parts of the State and may be served by any persons authorized to serve process of courts of record, or by any person designated for that purpose by the commission or any member thereof. The person executing any such process shall receive such compensation as may be allowed by the commission, not to exceed the fees now prescribed by law for similar services, and such fees shall be paid in the same manner as provided herein for the fees of witnesses.

Sec. 64. (a) Any party or person aggrieved directly or indirectly by any final order, decision, award, rule or regulation of the commission, made or entered under any provision contained in this act, may apply to the commission for a rehearing in respect to any matters determined or covered by such final order, decision, award, rule or regulation and specified in the application for rehearing within the time and in the manner hereinafter specified, and not otherwise.

Rehearings.

(b) No cause of action arising out of any such final order, decision or award shall accrue in any court to any person until and unless such person shall have made application for such rehearing, and such application shall have been granted or denied: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the enforcement of any such final order, decision, award, rule or regulation in the manner provided in this act.

(c) Such application shall set forth specifically and in full detail the grounds upon which the applicant considers said final order, decision, award, rule or regulation is unjust or unlawful, and every issue to be considered by the commission. Such application must be verified upon oath in the same manner as required for verified pleadings in courts of record and must contain a general statement of any evidence or other matters upon which the applicant relies in support thereof. The applicant for such hearing shall be deemed to have finally waived all objections, irregularities and illegalities concerning the matter upon which such rehearing is sought other than those set forth in the application for such rehearing.

(d) A copy of such application for rehearing shall be served forthwith upon all adverse parties by the party applying for such rehearing, and any such adverse party may file an answer thereto within ten days thereafter. Such answer must likewise be verified. The commission may require the application for rehearing to be served on such other persons or parties as may be designated by it.

(e) Upon filing of an application for a rehearing, if the issues raised thereby have theretofore been adequately considered by the commission, it may determine the same by confirming without hearing its previous determination, or if a rehearing is necessary to determine the issues raised, or any one or more of such issues, the commission shall order a rehearing thereon and consider and determine the matter or matters raised by such application. If at the time of granting such rehearing it shall appear to the satisfaction of the commission that no sufficient reason exists for taking further testimony, the commission may reconsider and redetermine the original cause without setting a time and place for such further rehearing. Notice of the time and place of such hearing, if any, shall be given to the applicant and adverse parties, and to such other persons as the commission may order.

(f) If after such rehearing and a consideration of all the facts, including those arising since the making of the order, decision, or award involved, the commission shall be of the opinion that the original order, decision, or award, or any part thereof, is in any respect unjust or unwarranted, or should be changed, the commission may abrogate, change, or modify the same. An order, decision, or award made after such rehearing, abrogating, changing, or modifying the original order, decision, or award, shall have the same force and effect as an original order, decision, or award, but shall not affect any right or the enforcement of any right arising from or by virtue of the original order, decision, or award, unless so ordered by the commission. An application for a rehearing shall be deemed to have been denied by the commission unless it shall have been acted upon within thirty days from the date of filing: Provided, however, That the commission may, upon good cause being shown therefor, extend the time within which it may act upon such application for not exceeding thirty days.

Grounds for re-hearing.

SEC. 65. (a) At any time within twenty days after the service of any final order or decision of the commission awarding or denying compensation, or arising out of or incidental thereto, any party or parties aggrieved thereby may apply for such rehearing upon one or more of the following grounds and upon no other grounds:

- (1) That the commission acted without or in excess of its powers.
- (2) That the order, decision, or award was procured by fraud.
- (3) That the evidence does not justify the findings of fact.
- (4) That the applicant has discovered new evidence, material to him, which he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at the hearing.
- (5) That the findings of fact do not support the order, decision, or award.

(b) Nothing contained in this section shall, however, be construed to limit the grant of continuing jurisdiction contained in subsection (d) of section twenty of this act.

Same subject.

SEC. 66. (a) At any time within twenty days after the service of any final order, decision, rule, or regulation, other than an order or award pertaining to compensation, any party or parties, person or persons aggrieved thereby or otherwise affected, directly or indirectly, may apply for such rehearing upon one or more of the following grounds and upon no other grounds:

- (1) That the commission acted without or in excess of its powers.
- (2) That the order or decision was procured by fraud.
- (3) That the order, decision, rule, or regulation is unreasonable.
- (b) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to limit the right of the commission, at any time and from time to time, to adopt new or different rules or regulations or new or different standards of safety, or to abrogate, change, or modify any existing rule, regulation, or standard, or any part thereof, or to deprive the commission of continuing jurisdiction over the same, or to prevent the enforcement in the manner provided by this act, of any rules, regulations, or standards of the commission, or any part thereof, when so adopted, or changed, or modified.

Appeal to courts.

SEC. 67. (a) Within thirty days after the application for a rehearing is denied, or, if the application is granted within thirty days after the rendition of the decision on the rehearing, any party affected thereby may apply to the supreme court of this State, or to the district court of appeal of the appellate district in which such person resides, for a writ of certiorari or review, hereinafter referred to as a writ of review, for the purpose of having the lawfulness of the original order, rule, regulation, decision, or award, or the order, rule, regulation, decision, or award on rehearing inquired into and determined.

(b) Such writ shall be made returnable not later than thirty days after the date of the issuance thereof, and shall direct the commission to certify its record in the case to the court. On the return day the cause shall be heard in the court unless for good cause the same be continued. No new or additional evidence may be introduced in such court, but the cause shall be heard on the record of the commission as certified to by it. The review shall not be extended further than to determine whether:

- (1) The commission acted without or in excess of its powers.
- (2) The order, decision, or award was procured by fraud.
- (3) The order, decision, rule, or regulation was unreasonable.
- (4) If findings of fact are made, such findings of fact support the order, decision, or award under review.

(c) The findings and conclusions of the commission on questions of fact shall be conclusive and final and shall not be subject to review; such questions of fact shall include ultimate facts and the findings and conclusions of the commission. The commission and each party to the action or proceeding before the commission shall have the right to appear in the review proceeding. Upon the hearing the court shall enter judgment either affirming or setting aside the order, decision, or award or may remand the case for further proceedings before the commission.

(d) The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of this State relating to writs of review shall, so far as applicable and not in conflict with this act, apply to proceedings in the courts under the provisions of this section. No court of this state, except the supreme court and the district courts of appeal to the extent herein specified, shall have jurisdiction to review, reverse, correct, or annul any order, rule, regulation, decision, or award of the commission, or to suspend or delay the operation or execution thereof, or to restrain, enjoin, or interfere with the commission in the performance of its duties: Provided, That a writ of mandamus shall lie from the supreme court or the district courts of appeal in all proper cases.

SEC. 68. (a) The filing of an application for a rehearing shall have the effect of suspending the order, decision, award, rule, or regulation affected, in so far as the same applies to the parties to such application, unless otherwise ordered by the commission, for a period of ten days, and the commission may, in its discretion and upon such terms and conditions as it may by order direct, stay, suspend, or postpone the same during the pendency of such rehearing. [Ch. 586, 1917.] Suspension.

(b) The filing of an application for, or the pendency of, a writ of review, shall not of itself stay or suspend the operation of the order, decision, award, rule or regulation of the commission subject to review, but the court before which such application is filed may, in its discretion, stay or suspend in whole or in part the operation of the order, decision, award, rule or regulation of the commission subject to review, upon such terms and conditions as it may by order direct, except as provided in the following subsection.

(c) The operation of any order or award entered by the commission under the provisions of sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act, or any judgment entered thereon, shall not at any time be stayed by the court to which petition is made for a writ of review, unless a written undertaking be executed on the part of the petitioner by two or more sureties, to the effect that they are bound in double the amount named in such order, award or judgment; that if the order, award or judgment appealed from, or any part thereof, be affirmed, or the proceeding upon review be dismissed, the petitioner shall pay the amount directed to be paid by the order, award or judgment, or the part of such amount as to which the order, award or judgment is affirmed, if affirmed only in part, and all damages and costs which may be awarded against the petitioner; and that, if the said petitioner does not make such payment within thirty days after the filing with the commission of the remittitur from the reviewing court, judgment may be entered, on motion of the adverse party, in his favor, and to which the said undertaking may be transferred, in any superior court in which a certified copy of the order or award may be filed against the sureties for such amount, together with interest that may be due thereon, and the damages and costs which may be awarded against the said petitioner. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, except in so far as they may be inconsistent with this act, are applicable to said undertaking. Such undertaking shall be filed with the commission, and the certificate of the commission, or any proper officer thereof, of the filing and approval of such undertaking, is sufficient evidence of the compliance of the petitioner with the provisions of this subsection.

SEC. 69. (a) Whenever this act, or any part or section thereof, is interpreted by a court, it shall be liberally construed by such court with the purpose of extending the benefits of the act for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment. [Ch. 586, 1917.]
Construction.

(b) If any section, subsection, subdivision, sentence, clause or phrase of this act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of this act. The legislature hereby declares that it would have passed this act, and each section, subsection, subdivision, sentence, clause or phrase thereof, irrespective of the fact that any one or more sections, subsections, subdivisions, sentences, clauses or phrases is declared unconstitutional.

(c) This act shall not be construed to apply to employers or employments which, according to law, are so engaged in interstate commerce as not to be subject to the legislative power of the State, or to employees injured while they are so engaged, except in so far as this act may be Interstate commerce.

permitted to apply under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States or the acts of Congress.

[Ch. 586, 1917.]
Election in excluded employments.

SEC. 70. (a) Any employer, having in his employment any employee not included within the term "employee" as defined by section eight of this act or not entitled to compensation under this act, and any such employee, may, by their joint election, elect to come under the compensation provisions of this act in the manner hereinafter provided.

(b) Such election on the part of the employer shall be made by filing with the commission a written statement to the effect that he accepts the compensation provisions of this act, which, when filed, shall operate within the meaning of section six of this act, to subject him to the compensation provisions thereof, and of all acts amendatory thereof, for the term of one year from the date of filing, and thereafter without further act on his part, for successive terms of one year each, unless such employer shall, at least sixty days prior to the expiration of such first or succeeding year, file in the office of the commission a notice in writing that he withdraws his election. Such acceptance shall be held to include employees whose employment is both casual and not in the course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of the employer, unless expressly excluded therefrom. In case any employer is insured against liability for compensation under this act, he shall be deemed to have so elected during the period that such policy shall remain in force, without filing such written notice with the commission, as to all classes of employees covered by such policy of insurance, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

(c) Any employee in the service of any employer who has made an election in either of the modes above prescribed, shall be deemed to have accepted, and shall, within the meaning of section six of this act, be subject to the compensation provisions of this act, and of any act amendatory thereof, if, at the time of the injury for which liability is claimed:

(1) The employer charged with such liability is subject to the compensation provisions of this act, whether the employee has actual notice thereof or not; and

(2) Such employee shall not, at the time of entering into the employment, have given to his employer notice in writing that he elects not to be subject to the compensation provisions of this act; or, in the event that such employment was entered into in advance of the election by the employer, such employee shall have given to his employer notice in writing that he elects to be subject to such provisions, or without giving either of such notices shall have remained in the service of such employer for five days after the employer has filed his election, in which case the time at which the employee becomes subject to said compensation provisions shall be deemed to be at the beginning of said period.

(d) The State, and all political or other subdivisions thereof, as defined in section seven, and all State institutions, shall be conclusively presumed to have elected to come within the provisions of this act as to all employments otherwise excluded from this act.

(e) All written acceptances filed by employers with the commission prior to the taking effect of this act, accepting the provisions of the workmen's compensation, insurance and safety act, chapter one hundred seventy-six, statutes of 1913, and all acts amendatory thereof, shall, unless written notice be given to the contrary by said employer within sixty days after the taking effect of this act, be deemed acceptances of the provisions of this act, and all acts amendatory thereof, in accordance with the provisions of this section.

Reports.

SEC. 88. The commission shall, not later than the first day of December of each calendar year, subsequent to the year 1913, make a report to the governor of the State covering its entire operations and proceedings for the previous fiscal year, with such suggestions or recommendations as it may deem of value for public information. Such report shall be printed and a copy thereof furnished to all applicants within this State.

ACTS OF 1919.

CHAPTER 183.—Vocational rehabilitation.

SECTION 1. Whenever any fatal compensable injury is suffered by any employee coming under the provisions of said compensation, insurance and safety act and such deceased employee does not leave surviving him any person entitled to a death benefit, the employer, or his insurance carrier, if he be insured under said compensation act, shall pay into the treasury of the State of California the sum of three hundred fifty dollars for each such fatal injury in addition to any other payments under the provisions of said compensation act: Provided, That the total payments shall not exceed three times the average annual earnings of said deceased employee. Said moneys paid into the State treasury under the provisions of this section shall be covered into a special fund to be known as the "industrial rehabilitation fund," which fund is hereby created and appropriated for the purposes set forth in this act. Rehabilitation fund.

SEC. 2. The industrial accident commission may draw upon said fund for the promotion of vocational reeducation and rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry in this State, in addition to any other money appropriated for such purposes. The controller is hereby ordered to draw his warrant on said fund from time to time in accordance with the direction of the commission, and the treasurer is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same. Use of fund.

SEC. 3. The treasurer shall place the remainder, if any, of the fund, after making the payments required by the preceding sections of this act, semiannually, to the credit of the accident prevention fund, established by said compensation act. Surplus.

SEC. 4. As soon as the sum of five thousand dollars shall have accumulated in said fund, the treasurer shall, upon the order of the industrial accident commission, deposit the same with the State compensation insurance fund as a revolving fund. The State compensation insurance fund shall, upon the order or award of the industrial accident commission, make the payments required by sections two, three, and four from said revolving fund, accounting therefor to the State board of control as in other cases, and the State treasurer shall from time to time, upon the order of the commission, reimburse said State compensation insurance fund from the industrial rehabilitation fund for expenditures made from said revolving fund. The reasonable expense of administration of the said State compensation insurance fund in carrying out the duties imposed by this act shall, upon the auditing and approval thereof by the State board of control, be paid from said industrial rehabilitation fund in the same manner as is provided in this section for other payments. The controller is hereby directed to draw his warrant from time to time in favor of the State compensation insurance fund in accordance with the direction of said commission, and the treasurer is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same. To be a revolving fund.

SEC. 5. If any proceedings are necessary to collect from any employer the amount mentioned in the preceding section, or to determine the liability of any employer under said compensation act with respect to said amount, such proceedings shall be instituted before the industrial accident commission of its own motion or by the attorney general on behalf of the people of the State of California and such proceedings shall be tried and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as any other proceeding to collect compensation: Provided, That if proceedings be instituted by any other person to collect benefits under the compensation act on account of such fatal injury, the commission may, if it finds said sum of three hundred fifty dollars payable to the State treasurer, award said sum to the State of California without the people of the State of California being a party to said proceedings: And provided further, That if said sum of three hundred fifty dollars shall be paid into the treasury and at any time thereafter any person claiming to be a dependent of the deceased employee shall establish such dependency and secure an award therefor, the commission may make an award against the State of California in Collection of fund.

favor of said dependent for said sum of three hundred fifty dollars, or as much thereof as may be necessary to meet the claim of such dependent, said sum to be applied to said death benefit and to relieve to that extent the employer or his insurance carrier against liability therefor.

Powers of commission.

SEC. 6. The industrial accident commission of the State of California is hereby vested with full jurisdiction and authority to hear and determine any and all questions and controversies arising under this act and to make and enter all orders and awards necessary to carry out the purposes herein set forth.

Approved May 5, 1919.

COLORADO.

ACTS OF 1915.

CHAPTER 180.—Industrial commission.

SECTION 5. There is hereby created a board which shall be known as the "Industrial Commission of Colorado." Within thirty days after the passage of this act the governor, by and with the consent of the senate, shall appoint one member whose term of office shall expire March 1, 1917; a second member whose term of office shall expire March 1, 1919; and a third member whose term of office shall expire March 1, 1921. Upon the expiration of each appointment the governor shall appoint members of the commission, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, for terms of six years each. Vacancies shall be filled in the same manner for unexpired terms. Not more than two of the commissioners shall be members of the same political party. Not more than one of the appointees to such commission shall be a person who, on account of his previous vocation, employment, or affiliations, can be classed as a representative of employers, and not more than one of such appointees shall be a person who, on account of his previous vocation, employment, or affiliations, can be classed as a representative of employees. Commission created.

Each member of the commission, before entering upon the duties of his office, shall take the oath prescribed by the constitution, and shall give good and sufficient bond running to the people of the State of Colorado, in the penal sum of ten thousand dollars, conditioned that he shall faithfully discharge the duties of his office and shall account for and pay over to the person entitled thereto such moneys as shall come into his possession; said bond shall be signed by a surety company duly authorized to do business in this State or by two or more individuals as surety or sureties and shall be subject to approval by the governor and shall then be filed with the secretary of state. If surety company bonds shall be furnished, the premium therefor shall be paid by the State as other expenses of the commission are paid. In case of a vacancy the remaining two members of the commission shall exercise all the powers and authority of the commission until such vacancy is filled. Each member of the commission shall receive an annual salary of not to exceed four thousand dollars and actual expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of his duties, which shall be in full for all services performed. The commissioners shall devote their entire time to the duties of their office. Oath. Bond. Salaries.

A majority of said commissioners shall constitute a quorum to transact business and for the exercise of any of the powers or authority conferred by this act.

Approved April 12, 1915.

ACTS OF 1919.

CHAPTER 210.—Compensation of workmen for injury.

SECTION 1. This act shall be known and may be cited as "Workmen's Compensation Act of Colorado." Title.

SEC. 2. The industrial commission of Colorado, created by the act of the general assembly of Colorado, shall enforce and administer the provisions of this act. The said commission, in the administration of this act shall be governed by its provisions if there be conflict between the same and the provisions of the act creating said commission. Administration.

SEC. 3. The term "commission" when used in this act shall mean the industrial commission of Colorado. Definitions.

- Number and gender. SEC. 4. Unless the context otherwise requires, a word used in this act in the singular number shall also include the plural; and the masculine gender shall include feminine and neuter.
- Order. SEC. 5. The term "order" shall mean and include any decision, finding and award, classification, rate, rule, regulation, direction, requirement or standard of the commission, or any other determination arrived at or decision made by such commission.
- Place of employment. SEC. 6. The term "place of employment" shall mean and include every place whether indoors or outdoors or underground, and the premises, work places, works and plants appertaining thereto or used in connection therewith, where either temporarily or permanently any industry, trade or business is carried on, or where any process or operation directly or indirectly relating to any industry, trade, or business is carried on, or where any person is directly or indirectly employed by another for direct or indirect gain or profit, except as otherwise expressly provided in this act.
- Employment. SEC. 7. The term "employment" shall mean and include any trade, occupation, job, or position, or process of manufacture, or any method of carrying on any such trade, occupation, job, or position, or process of manufacture in which any person may be engaged, except as otherwise expressly provided in this act.
- Employer. SEC. 8. The term "employer" shall mean and include:
 (a) The State, and each county, city, town, irrigation, drainage and school district therein, and all public institutions and administrative boards thereof without regard to the number of persons in the service of any such public employer: And provided, That all such public employers shall be at all times subject to the compensation provisions of this act.
 (b) Every person, association of persons, firm and private corporation (including any public service corporation), personal representative, assignee, trustee or receiver, who has four or more persons engaged in the same business or employment (except as otherwise expressly provided in this act), in service under any contract of hire, express or implied, and who, at or prior to the time of the accident to the employee for which compensation is claimed under this act, has elected to become subject to the provisions of this act, and who shall not, prior to such accident, have effected a withdrawal of such election in the manner provided in this act.
- Exemptions. (c) This act is not intended to apply to employers of private domestic servants or farm and ranch labor, nor to employers who employ less than four employees in the same business, or in or about the same place of employment: Provided, That any such employer may elect to accept the provisions of this act in the manner herein provided.
- Employee. SEC. 9. The term "employee" shall mean and include:
 (a) Every person in the service of the State, or of any county, city, town, irrigation, drainage, or school district therein, or any public institution or administrative board thereof, under any appointment or contract of hire, express or implied, except an elective official of the State, or any county, city, town, irrigation, drainage, or school district therein, or of any public institution or administrative board thereof; except all officers and enlisted men of the National Guard of the State of Colorado. Policemen and firemen shall be deemed employees, within the meaning of this paragraph: Provided, That any policeman or fireman, or if killed, any dependent, claiming compensation under this act shall have deducted from such compensation any sum which such policeman or fireman, or their dependent may receive from any pension or any benefit fund to which the municipality may contribute.
 (b) Every person in the service of any other person, association of persons, firm, private corporation, including any public service corporation, personal representative, assignee, trustee, or receiver, under any contract of hire, express or implied, including aliens and also including minors, whether lawfully or unlawfully employed (who for the purpose of this act shall be considered the same, and shall have the same power of contracting with respect to their employment, as adult employees), but not including any persons, who are expressly
- Casual workers. excluded from this act or whose employment is but casual and not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer.

Sec. 10. The provisions of this act shall not apply to common carriers engaged in interstate commerce nor to their employees. Interstate commerce.

Sec. 11. Where an employer, who has accepted the provisions of this act and has complied therewith, shall loan the service of any of his employees who have accepted the provisions of this act, to any third person, he shall be liable for any compensation thereafter for any injuries or death of said employee as in this act provided, unless it shall appear from the evidence in said case that said loaning constitutes a new contract of hire, express or implied, between the employee whose services were loaned and the person to whom he was loaned. Loaned employees.

Sec. 12. In an action to recover damages for a personal injury sustained by an employee on and after the first day of August, 1915, while engaged in the line of his duty as such, or for death resulting from personal injuries so sustained, in which recovery is sought upon the ground of want of ordinary care of the employer, or of the officer, agent, or servant of the employer, it shall not be a defense: Defenses abrogated.

(a) That the employee, either expressly or impliedly, assumed the risk of the hazard complained of as due to the employer's negligence.

(b) That the injury or death was caused, in whole or in part, by the want of ordinary care of a fellow servant.

(c) That the injury or death was caused, in whole or in part, by the want of ordinary care of the injured employee where such want of care was not willful.

Sec. 13. Any employer who has elected to and has complied with the provisions of this act, including the provisions relating to insurance, shall not be subject to the provisions of section 12 of this act; nor shall such employer be subject to any other liability whatsoever for the death of or personal injury to any employee, except as in this act provided; and all courses of action, actions at law, suits in equity, and proceedings whatever, and all statutory and common law rights and remedies for and on account of such death or personal injury to any such employee are hereby abolished except as in this act provided. Remedy exclusive.

Sec. 14. If an employer has elected to and has complied with the provisions of this act, including the provisions thereof relating to insurance, and an action is brought against such employer to recover damages for personal injuries or death sustained by an employee who has elected not to come under this act, then such employer shall have all the defenses to such an action which he would have had if this act and that certain other act entitled, "An act concerning assumption of risk," being chapter 43, page 115, of the Session Laws of 1913, and an act entitled, "To give a right of action against an employer for injuries or death resulting to his agents, employees, or servants, etc.," same being chapter 113, page 294 of the Session Laws of 1911, and also an act entitled, "To relieve employees and workmen from assuming the risk of injury or death, etc.," same being chapter 72, page 197, Session Laws of 1915, had not been enacted. Defenses valid, when.

Sec. 15. The right to the compensation provided for in this act, in lieu of any other liability whatsoever, to any and all persons whomsoever, for any personal injury accidentally sustained or death resulting therefrom, on and after August 1, 1915, shall obtain in all cases where the following conditions occur: Application of act.

(a) Where, at the time of the accident, both employer and employee are subject to the provisions of this act; and where the employer has complied with the provisions thereof regarding insurance.

(b) Where, at the time of the accident, the employee is performing service arising out of and in the course of his employment.

(c) Where the injury or death is proximately caused by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and is not intentionally self-inflicted.

Sec. 16. On and after August 1, 1915, every employer of four or more employees, not including private domestic servants and farm and ranch laborers, engaged in a common employment, shall be conclusively presumed, when he becomes the employer of four or more persons, to have accepted the provisions of this act, unless prior to that Election presumed.

date such employer shall have filed with the commission a notice in writing to the effect that he elects not to accept the provision of this act: Provided, however, That any employer commencing business subsequent to August 1, 1915, or not having in his employ four or more employees on said date, may make his election not to become subject to the provisions of this act at any time prior to becoming an employer of four or more employees, in a common employment, exclusive of private domestic servants, and farm and ranch laborers, by giving written notice as above provided. If such written notice is not given prior to said employer becoming the employer of four or more employees, said employer shall be conclusively presumed to have accepted the provisions of this act, subject, however, to the right of withdrawal, as herein provided.

Voluntary election.

SEC. 17. Election on the part of any employer to be subject to this act, including the employer of private domestic servants, farm and ranch laborers or of three or less employes, may be made by filing with the commission a written statement to the effect that he accepts the provisions of this act, the filing of which statement shall operate to subject such employer to the provision of this act for the term of one (1) year from the date of filing such statement, and thereafter, without further act on his part, for successive terms of one year each, unless such employer shall, at least sixty days prior to the expiration of such first or any succeeding year, file in the office of said commission a notice in writing to the effect that he desires to withdraw his election to be subject to the provisions of this act.

Employees under act, when.

SEC. 18. Any employee may become subject to the provisions of this act, and shall be deemed to have accepted, and shall be subject to the provisions thereof if at the time of the accident upon which liability is claimed—

(a) His employer is subject to the provisions of this act and has complied with the requirements thereof, including insurance; and if,

(b) Such employee shall not, at the time of entering into his contract of hire, expressed or implied with such employer, have given to his employer notice in writing that he elects not to be subject to the provisions of this act.

Suits barred.

SEC. 19. Such election and compliance with the provisions of this act, including the provisions for insurance, shall be, and be construed to be, a surrender by the employer and the employee of their rights to any other method, form or amount of compensation or determination thereof, or to any cause of action, action at law, suit in equity or statutory or common law right or remedy or proceeding whatever for or on account of such personal injuries or death of such employee than as provided in this act, and shall be an acceptance of all of the provisions of this act, and shall bind the employee himself, and for compensation for his death, shall bind his personal representatives, his widow and next of kin, as well as the employer, and those conducting his business during bankruptcy or insolvency.

Notice of non-election.

SEC. 20. Every employer, not electing to accept or rejecting the provisions of this act, shall cause printed notices thereof to be kept posted in and about his place of employment in a conspicuous manner and in sufficient places frequented by his employees, as to reasonably notify such employees that he is not subject to the provisions of this act, and shall likewise cause similar notice to be given of the filing of any change of such election on his part.

Insurance.

SEC. 21. Any employer electing to become subject to the provisions of this act shall secure compensation for his employees in one of the following ways, which shall be deemed to be compliance with the insurance requirements of this act:

(a) By insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation in the State compensation insurance fund; or,

(b) By insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation with any stock or mutual corporation authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this State. If insurance be so effected in such stock or mutual corporation, the employer or insurer shall forthwith file with the commission, in form prescribed by it, a notice specifying the name of the insured and the insurer, the business and place of business of the insured and the effective and termination dates of the policy, also, when requested, a copy of the contract or policy of insurance.

(c) By procuring a self-insurance permit from the commission as hereinafter provided: Provided, however, That the State itself, and each county, city, town, irrigation, drainage and school district therein and each public institution and each administrative board thereof shall, at all times, insure and keep insured the payment of such compensation in the State compensation insurance fund.

Sec. 22. Every contract for the insurance of compensation herein provided for, or against liability therefor, shall be deemed to be made subject to all the provisions of this act, and all provisions in such contract for insurance, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be void. The industrial commission shall from time to time approve and prescribe a standard or universal form, as nearly as possible, for every contract or policy of insurance, indorsement, rider, letter, or other document affecting such contract, for use in insuring the compensation herein provided for. Contracts for insurance.

Sec. 23. Every insurance carrier authorized to transact business in this State, which insures employers against liability for compensation, under the provisions of this act, shall file with the commission its classification of risks, and premiums relating thereto, and any subsequent proposed classification of risks and premiums together with all rates and any system or systems of rating, none of which shall take effect until approved by the industrial commission, and said commission shall have the power to disapprove same as inadequate. The commission may, at any time, withdraw its approval of any rate or system of rating. Rates, etc., to be filed.

Sec. 24. Every insurance carrier writing compensation insurance shall write said insurance at the rate or rates approved as adequate by the industrial commission, and the cutting of rates or rebating, or any other method whereby directly or indirectly any employer is given the benefit of, or obtains a rate lower than that approved by the industrial commission is hereby prohibited. Any insurance carrier or any employer or any officer, agent, or employee of either, violating any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and may be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for a period not longer than thirty days, or both such fine and imprisonment. Rebating, etc., forbidden.

Sec. 25. Every contract insuring against liability for compensation or insurance policy evidencing the same, must contain a clause to the effect that the insurance carrier shall be directly and primarily liable to the employee, and in the event of his death, to his dependents, to pay compensation, if any, for which the employer is liable, thereby discharging to the extent of such payment the obligations of the employer to the employee; that, as between the employee and the insurance carrier, the notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the employer shall be deemed notice or knowledge, as the case may be, on the part of the insurance carrier; that jurisdiction of the employer shall, for the purpose of this act, be jurisdiction of the insurance carrier, and that the insurance carrier shall in all things be bound by and subject to the orders, findings, decisions, or awards rendered against the employer under the provisions of this act. Direct liability.

Such policy must also provide that the employee shall have a first lien upon any amount which shall become owing to the employer from the insurance carrier, and the said insurance carrier may and shall pay the same directly to the said employee or his dependents, thereby discharging to the extent of such payment the obligation of the employer to the employee, and such policy shall not contain any provisions relieving the insurance carrier from payment when the employer becomes legally incapable, insolvent, or is discharged in bankruptcy, or otherwise, during the period that the policy is in operation or the compensation remains owing. Award a lien.

Sec. 26. If any insurance carrier intentionally, knowingly, or willfully violates any of the provisions of this act, the insurance commissioner, on the request of the industrial commission, shall suspend or revoke the license or authority of such carrier to do a compensation business in this State. Violations.

Failure to insure. Sec. 27. In any case where the employer is subject to the provisions of this act by election or by nonrejection, and at the time of an injury has not complied with the insurance provisions of this act, or has allowed his insurance to terminate or has not effected a renewal thereof, the employee, if injured, or if killed, his dependents, if such employee has not rejected this act as herein provided, may claim the compensation and benefits provided in this act, and in any such case the amounts of compensation or benefits provided in this act shall be increased fifty per cent.

Access to books. Sec. 28. Any insurance carrier operating under the terms and provisions of the workmen's compensation act shall have the right to apply to the industrial commission for permission to examine any of the books, pay rolls, or other documents of any employer insured by such carrier, or of any contractor, subcontractor, lessee, sublessee, person, or persons, covered by the employer's compensation insurance to determine the amount of wage expenditure of such employer, or of any contractor, subcontractor, lessee, sublessee, person, or persons during any period that such employer, or contractor, subcontractor, lessee, sublessee, person, or persons was insured by such insurance carrier, and the commission may grant such carrier authority in writing to make such investigation, or may appoint any of its agents to conduct such investigation.

Self-insurance. Sec. 29. The commission in its discretion may grant to any employer, who has accepted the provisions of this act, permission to be its own insurance carrier for the payment of the compensation and benefits herein provided. Such permission may be granted by the commission after the filing by such employer of such statement or statements and the giving of such information as may be required by the commission. The commission shall have the sole power to prescribe the rules, regulations, orders, terms, and conditions upon which said permit shall be granted or continued. Such permission for self-insurance may be revoked at any time by the commission and such employer shall upon notice of revocation immediately insure otherwise his liability.

Injuries to be reported. Sec. 30. Every employer shall keep a record of all injuries, fatal or otherwise, received by his employees in the course of their employment. Within 10 days after the occurrence of an accident resulting in personal injury a report thereof shall be made, in writing by the employer to the commission, upon forms prescribed by the commission for that purpose. Such report shall contain such information as shall be required by the commission.

Notice to employer. Sec. 31. Every employee who sustains an injury shall notify his employer of said injury within two days of its occurrence, unless said employee shall be physically or mentally unable to do so, or unless his employer or his foreman, superintendent, manager, or other person in charge shall have actual notice of said injury. If said employee shall fail to report said injury, he shall lose one day's compensation for each day's failure to so report: Provided, however, That if anyone shall report the said accident for said injured employee within the time above specified to his employer, then the injured employee shall be relieved from reporting the accident as provided above.

Employers to furnish information. Sec. 32. Every employer shall furnish the commission, upon request, all information required by it, to accomplish the purposes of this act, which information shall be for the confidential use of said commission, unless otherwise ordered by it, and shall not be open to the public nor used in any court, or any action or proceeding pending therein, unless the commission is a party to such action or proceeding.

Same. Sec. 33. Every employer receiving from the commission any blanks with directions to fill out the same or requests for information required for the purposes of this act shall properly fill out said blanks and furnish said information so requested fully and correctly. The commission may require that any information requested by it be verified under oath and may fix the time within which said information shall be returned to it.

Inspection of plant. Sec. 34. The commission, or any of its agents, may enter into any place of employment for the purpose of collecting facts and statistics, examining the provisions made for the health, protection, and safety of the employees, and bringing to the attention of every employer any rule, order, or requirement of the commission, or any law, or any failure on the part of any employer to comply therewith.

Sec. 35. All books, records, and pay rolls of employers, or of any contractor, subcontractor, lessee, sublessee, person or persons, showing or reflecting in any way upon the amount of wage expenditure of such employers, contractor, subcontractor, lessee, sublessee, person or persons, and all other facts, data, and statistics appertaining to the purposes of this act, shall always be open for inspection by the commission, or any of its agents, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of the reported wage expenditure, number of men employed, and such other information as may be necessary for the uses and purposes of the commission in its administration of this act. Books to be open.

Sec. 36. In case any person fails or refuses to comply with any order of the commission or obey any subpoena issued by it or its agents or to furnish the statistics, data, and information required to be furnished to the commission by the provisions of this act, or refuse to permit an inspection as provided in this act, or being in attendance refuses to be sworn or examined or answer a question or produce a book or paper when ordered so to do by the commission or any of its deputies, agents, or referees, the commission may apply to the district court upon proof by affidavit of the facts for an order returnable in not less than three days nor more than five days directing such person to show cause before the district court which made the order why he should not be committed to jail. Upon the return of such order the district court shall examine under oath such person and give him an opportunity to be heard, and if the court determine that he has refused without legal excuse in any one of the foregoing matters, it may forthwith by warrant commit the offender to jail, there to remain until he submits to do the act which he was required to do or until he is discharged according to law. Refusing inspection. in-

Sec. 37. All expenses incurred by the commission pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be paid from funds appropriated for the use of the commission upon claims therefor, itemized and sworn to, made by the person who incurred the same, which shall be allowed by the commission subject to the approval of the State auditing board; Provided, That the traveling expenses of any member or members of the commission or of any employee or employees thereof incurred while on business of the commission outside the State of Colorado shall be paid in the manner aforesaid, but only when such expenses are in advance authorized to be incurred by the commission and by the State auditing board. Expenses of commission.

Sec. 38. All orders of the commission shall be valid and in force, and prima facie reasonable and lawful until they are found otherwise in an action brought for that purpose, pursuant to the provisions of this act, or until altered or revoked by the commission. Orders.

Sec. 39. A substantial compliance with the requirements of this act shall be sufficient to give effect to the orders or awards of the commission, and they shall not be declared inoperative, illegal, or void for any omission of a technical nature in respect thereto. Compliance.

Sec. 40. For the purpose of making any investigation or conducting any hearing with regard to any matter or matters contemplated by the provisions of this act, the commission shall have power to appoint, by an order in writing, any competent person as an agent or referee whose duties shall be prescribed in such order. Agents.

(a) In the discharge of his duties such agent or referee shall have every power whatsoever for obtaining information granted in this act to the commission and all powers granted by law to officers authorized to take depositions are hereby granted to such agent.

(b) The commission may conduct any number of such investigations contemporaneously through different agents or referees and may delegate to such agents the subpoenaing and swearing of witnesses, and the taking of all testimony bearing upon any investigation or hearing. The decision of the commission shall be based upon its examination of all testimony and records. The recommendations made by such agents or referees shall not preclude any further investigation or the taking of further testimony, if the commission so order.

- Regulations. SEC. 41. The commission shall have power to adopt reasonable and proper rules and regulations relative to the exercise of its powers and authorities and proper rules to govern its proceedings and to regulate the mode and manner of investigations and hearings, and to alter and amend said rules from time to time in its discretion; such rules and regulations, amendments and alterations shall be effective 10 days after same are adopted and posted. A copy of such rules and regulations shall be delivered to every person making application therefor, and to every insurance carrier doing business in this State by mailing a copy thereof to such insurance carrier at the address within this State as furnished the commission by such insurance carrier.
- Actuary. SEC. 42. The commission may employ and maintain in the department a compensation actuary who shall be experienced and skilled and fully competent to perform the duties of the position and who shall assist in or take charge of the practical operation of the State compensation insurance fund under the general direction of the commission. The actuary shall receive such salary as may be agreed upon by the commission.
- Employees. SEC. 43. The commission shall have power to employ during their pleasure such deputies, experts, statisticians, accountants, actuaries, inspectors, clerks, and other employees as they may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act or to perform the duties and exercise the powers conferred by law upon the commission. Such deputies, statisticians, accountants, inspectors, clerks, and all other employees, except experts and actuaries in the employ of the commission, shall have been for two years prior to such employment or appointment bona fide residents of the State of Colorado, and each and all of them, except only the experts, shall, while in the employ of the commission, devote their entire time to the service of the commission.
- Salaries. SEC. 44. All deputies, statisticians, accountants, actuaries, clerks, experts, and all other employees of the commission shall receive such compensation as may be fixed by law or by the commission, and their salaries so fixed, as aforesaid shall be paid monthly from the funds appropriated for the use of the commission, after being approved by the commission.
- Duty of employees. SEC. 45. It shall be the duty of all officers and employees of the State, counties, and municipalities, upon the request of the commission to enforce in their respective departments all lawful orders of the commission in so far as the same may be applicable and consistent with the general duties of such officers and employees, and it shall also be their duty to make to the commission such reports as it may require concerning matters within their knowledge appertaining to the purposes of this act, and to furnish to it such facts, data, statistics, and information as may from time to time come to them appertaining to the purposes of this act, and the duties of the commission thereunder, and particularly all information coming to their knowledge respecting the condition of all places of employment subject to the provisions of this act, as regards the health, protection, and safety of employees, and the hazard and risk of such places of employment.
- Bonds. SEC. 46. Such employees of the commission as shall be directed by the commission shall furnish surety company bonds in such sum as may be fixed by the commission, the premiums therefor to be paid as other expenses of the commission are paid.
- Computation of wages. SEC. 47. The average weekly wage of the injured employee shall be taken as the basis upon which to compute benefits and shall be determined as follows:
 (a) Whenever the term "wages" is used it shall be construed to mean the money rate at which the services rendered are recompensed under the contract of hire in force at the time of the accident, either express or implied, and shall not include gratuities received from employers or others, nor shall it include the amounts deducted by the employer under the contract of hire for material, supplies, tools, and other things furnished and paid for by the employer and necessary for the performance of such contract by the employee; but the term "wages" shall include the reasonable value of board, rent, housing, lodging, or any other similar advantages received from the employer, the reasonable value of which shall be fixed and determined from the facts by the commission in each particular case.

(b) The total amount earned by the injured or killed employee in the six months preceding the accident shall be computed, which sum shall be divided by 26, and the result thus ascertained shall be considered as the average weekly wage of said injured or deceased employee, for the purpose of computing the benefits provided by this act, except as hereinafter provided.

(c) Provided further, however, That in any case where the foregoing method of computing the average weekly wage of the employee by reason of the nature of the employment or the fact that the injured employee has not worked a sufficient length of time to enable his earnings to be fairly computed thereunder or has been ill or in business for himself, or where for any other reason said methods will not fairly compute the average weekly wage, the commission may in each particular case compute the average weekly wage of said employee by taking the daily earnings at the time of the accident or compute it in such other manner and by such other method as will in the opinion of the commission, based upon the facts presented, fairly determine such employee's average weekly wage.

(d) Where an employee is a minor the average weekly wage of such minor shall be determined by this commission on the basis of the earnings that such minor, if not disabled or killed, would probably have earned during the period for which compensation is granted.

Minors.

Sec. 48. The fact that an employee has suffered a previous disability or received compensation therefor, shall not preclude compensation for a later injury or for death; but in determining compensation for the later injury or death his average weekly earnings shall be such sum as will reasonably represent his average weekly earning capacity at the time of the latter injury and shall be arrived at according to and subject to the limitations in the foregoing sections.

Second injuries.

Sec. 49. Any person, company, or corporation operating or engaged in or conducting any business by leasing or contracting out any part or all of the work thereof to any lessee, sublessee, contractor or subcontractor, shall irrespective of the number of employees engaged in such work, be construed to be and be an employer as defined in this act, and shall be liable as provided in this act to pay compensation for injury or death resulting therefrom to said lessee, sublessee, contractors and subcontractors and their employees; and such employer as in this section defined shall, before commencing said work, insure and shall keep insured his liability as herein provided, and such lessee, sublessee, contractor or subcontractor, as well as any employee of such lessee, sublessee, contractor or subcontractor, shall each and all of them be deemed employees as defined in this act. Such employer shall be entitled to recover the cost of such insurance from said lessee, sublessee, contractor or subcontractor, and may withhold and deduct the same from the contract price or any royalties or other money due, owing or to become due said lessee, sublessee, contractor or subcontractor: Provided, however, That if said lessee or sublessee, contractor or subcontractor doing any work as in this section provided shall himself be an employer as defined in this act in the doing of such work, and shall, before commencing said work, insure and shall keep insured his liability for compensation as herein provided, then, and in that case, such person, company, or corporation operating, engaged in, or conducting said business shall not be subject to the provisions of this section.

Contractors and lessees.

Sec. 50. Every person, company, or corporation that owns any real property or improvements thereon and that contracts out any work done on and to said property to any contractor, subcontractor, person or persons, who shall hire or use four or more employees or workmen (including himself if working thereon) in the doing of such work, shall be deemed to be an employer under the terms of this act, and every such contractor or subcontractor, person or persons, as well as his or their employees shall each and all of them be deemed to be employees as defined in this act, and such employer shall be liable as provided in this act to pay compensation for injury or death resulting therefrom to said contractor and subcontractor and their employees, and shall before commencing said work insure and shall keep insured his liability as herein provided. Such employer shall be entitled to recover the cost of such insurance from said contractor, subcontractor, person or persons, and may withhold and deduct the same from the contract price or any royalties or other money due, owing, or to become due said contractor or subcontractor, person or persons: Provided, however, That if said contractor, subcontractor, person or persons doing or undertaking to do any work for an owner of property as above provided shall himself be an employer as defined in this act, and shall, before commencing said work, insure and shall keep insured his liability for compensation as herein provided, then, and in that case, said owner of said property shall not be subject to the provisions of this section.

Medical, surgical and hospital aid.

SEC. 51. Every employer regardless of his method of insurance shall furnish such medical, surgical, nursing and hospital treatment, medical hospital and surgical supplies, crutches and apparatus, as may reasonably be needed at the time of the injury and thereafter during the disability, but not exceeding sixty days from the date of the accident and $200 in value to cure and relieve from the effects of the injury: Provided, however, That every employer subject to the terms and provisions of this act must insure his liability for the medical, surgical, and hospital expenses herein provided for, unless permission is given by the industrial commission to such employer to operate under a medical plan as hereinafter set forth.

Every plan which is in force at the time of the adoption of this act, or which is hereafter agreed to between employer and employee, for the furnishing of medical, surgical, and hospital treatment whether the employee is to pay any part of the expense of such treatment or not shall before being put into effect, receive the approval of the industrial commission, which shall have full power and authority to formulate the terms and conditions under which any such plan may operate and the essentials thereof, and it may at any time order modifications or changes in any said plan or withdraw its approval thereof: Provided, however, That no plan shall be approved by the commission which relieves the employer from the burden of assuming and paying for any part of the medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies hereinabove required.

The commission shall have the power to establish a schedule fixing the fees for which all medical, surgical, and hospital treatment rendered to employees under this section shall be compensated.

Dependents.

SEC. 52. For the purposes of this act the following described persons shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent:

(a) Wife, unless it be shown that she was voluntarily separated and living apart from the husband at the time of his injury or death and was not dependent in whole or in part on him for support.

(b) Minor children of the deceased under the age of eighteen years. The term "minor child" shall include posthumous children or a child legally adopted prior to the injury.

Same.

SEC. 53. Children eighteen years of age or over, husband, mother, father, grandmother, grandfather, sister, or brother, who were wholly or partially supported by the deceased employee at the time of his death and for a reasonable period of time immediately prior thereto, shall be considered his actual dependents. If such dependents be a son eighteen years of age or over, a husband, father, grandfather, or brother to be entitled to compensation, they must prove that they were incapable of or actually disabled from earning their own living during the said time: Provided, however, If said incapacity or disability is temporary only, compensation shall be paid only during the period of such temporary incapacity or disability.

Benefits for death.

SEC. 54. In case of death, the dependents of deceased entitled thereto shall receive as compensation or death benefits 50 per cent of the deceased employee's average weekly wages not to exceed a maximum of $10 per week and not less than a minimum of $5 per week, for a period not to exceed six years from the date of the death of the injured employee, less any sums paid to the employee prior to his death as compensation for his disability as in this act provided.

Remarriage.

SEC. 55. In the case of remarriage of the husband or wife of a deceased employee without children he or she shall receive at the time of marriage, a lump sum settlement without commutation equal to one-half of the amount of compensation then remaining unpaid: Provided, however, That if such husband or wife has had a lump sum or lump sums granted to him or her during a six months period immediately preceding said remarriage, the lump sum settlement shall be determined by following basis:

The commission shall determine the amount of compensation which would have been unpaid at the date of remarriage under the terms of the award if a lump sum or lump sums had not been granted within said six months period. From one-half of said sum the commission shall then deduct the actual amount paid to such husband or wife on all lump sums granted during said six months period and the balance of said one-half, if any, shall be paid to said husband or wife at the time of remarriage without commutation.

In case of remarriage of husband or wife of a deceased employee, who has a dependent child or children, the entire unpaid balance of compensation shall be paid such child or children.

SEC. 56. Partial dependents shall be entitled to receive only that portion of the benefits provided for those wholly dependent which the average amount of the wages regularly contributed by the deceased to such partial dependents at and for a reasonable time immediately prior to the injury bore to the total income of the dependents during the same time. The commission shall have the power and discretion to determine the proper elements to be considered as income of said dependents in each particular case. Where there are persons both wholly dependent and partially dependent, only those wholly dependent shall be entitled to compensation. Partial dependents.

SEC. 57. The question as to who constitute dependents and the extent of their dependency shall be determined as of the date of the accident to the injured employee, and the right to death benefit shall become fixed as of said date irrespective of any subsequent change in conditions, and such death benefit shall be directly payable to the dependent or dependents entitled thereto or to their legal representatives. Current status.

SEC. 58. When the right to a death benefit shall become fixed it shall cease, lapse, or terminate upon the happening of any of the following contingencies: Lapse of benefits.

(a) Upon marriage, with the exception as to lump-sum settlement, as herein provided.

(b) Upon the death of any dependent: Provided, however, That in any case where the share of any dependent shall cease, lapse, or terminate it shall survive to the remaining dependents.

(c) When a son of the deceased reaches the age of 18 years, except as otherwise provided in section 53 hereof.

SEC. 59. When as a proximate result of an accident death occurs to an injured employee, there shall be paid in one lump sum within 30 days after his death the sum of $75, for his reasonable funeral and burial expenses. Said sum may be paid to the undertaker, or to any other person who may have paid the undertaker, if the commission so orders. If the employee leaves no dependents compensation shall be limited to said sum, and the compensation, if any, which has accrued to date of death, and the medical, surgical, and hospital expenses herein provided. If the deceased employee leaves dependents said sum shall be paid in addition to all other sums of compensation herein provided for. Funeral expenses, etc.

SEC. 60. No dependent of an injured employee shall be deemed, during the life of the employee, a party in interest to any proceeding by him for the enforcement of any claim for compensation nor as respects any settlement thereof by said employee. Rights distinct.

SEC. 61. Illegitimate minor children of deceased putative father shall be entitled to compensation in the same respect as a legitimate minor child of said decedent, when it is proved to the satisfaction of the commission that the father has, during his lifetime, acknowledged said child or children to be his and has regularly contributed to its or their support and maintenance for a reasonable period of time prior to his death. Illegitimate children.

SEC. 62. In case death occurs more than two years after the date of receiving of any injury such death shall be prima facie presumed not to be due to such injury. Death after two years.

Death within two years. SEC. 63. In case death proximately results from the injury within a period of two years, the benefits shall be in the amounts and to the persons following:

(a) If there be no dependents compensation shall be limited to the expenses provided for medical, hospital, and funeral of deceased, together with such sums as may have accrued or been paid to deceased during his lifetime for disability.

(b) If there are wholly dependent persons at the time of death the payment shall be 50 per cent of the average weekly wages, subject to the limitations of this act as to maximum and minimum weekly amount, and to continue for the remainder of the period from the date of the death and not to exceed six years after the date of injury and not to amount to more than a maximum of $3,125, less the sums, if any, paid to deceased during his lifetime.

(c) If there are partly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be not to exceed 50 per cent of the average weekly wages subject to the limitations of the minimum and maximum weekly amount and to continue for such portion of six years after the date of the injury as shall be required to pay at the said weekly rate, the total amount awarded by the commission to be paid to such partial dependent or partial dependents.

Death from other cause. SEC. 64. If death occurs to an injured employee other than as a proximate result of accident before disability indemnity ceases, and the deceased leaves a person or persons wholly dependent upon him for support, death benefits shall be as follows:

(a) Where the accident proximately caused permanent total disability, the death benefit shall consist of the unpaid and unaccrued portion of the permanent total disability benefit which the employee would have received had he lived until he had received the sum of $3,125.

(b) Where the accident proximately caused permanent partial disability, the death benefit shall consist of the unpaid and unaccrued portion of the permanent partial disability benefit which the employee would have received had he lived.

Same. SEC. 65. If death occurs to an injured employee other than as a proximate result of the accident before disability indemnity ceases, and the deceased leaves a person or persons partially dependent upon him for support, death benefits shall be as follows:

(a) Where the accident proximately caused permanent total disability, the death benefit shall consist of that proportion of the unpaid and unaccrued portion of the permanent total disability benefit which the employee would have received had he lived until he had received the sum of $3,125 as the amount devolved by the deceased for the support of such person or persons for the year immediately prior to the accident bears to the total income of the person or persons during said year.

(b) Where the accident caused permanent partial disability the death benefit shall consist of that proportion of the unpaid and unaccrued portion of the permanent partial disability benefit which the employee would have received if he had lived, as the amount devolved by the deceased to the support of such person or persons for the year immediately prior to the accident bears to the total income of the person or persons during said year.

Nonresident aliens. SEC. 66. Death benefits under the provisions of this act to dependents who are nonresidents of the United States at the time of the death of the injured employee shall be one-third of the amount or amounts provided herein: Provided, That, in no event, shall death benefits to dependents who are nonresidents of the United States exceed the aggregate sum of $1,041.66.

Mode of payment. SEC. 67. Death benefits shall be paid to such one or more of the dependents of the decedent for the benefit of all the dependents entitled to such compensation as may be determined by the commission who may apportion the benefits among such dependents in such manner as it may deem just and equitable. Payment to a dependent subsequent in right may be made, if the commission deems it proper, which payment shall operate to discharge all other claims therefor. The dependents or persons to whom benefits are paid shall apply the same to the use of the several beneficiaries thereof, according to their respective claims upon the decedent for support in compliance with the finding and direction of the commission.

Sec. 68. In all cases of death where the dependents are one or more minor children, it shall be sufficient for the widow or a friend to make application and claim on behalf of said minor children. The commission, for the purpose of protecting the rights and interests of any dependent whom it may deem incapable of fully protecting his or her own interests, may provide for the manner and method of safeguarding the payments due such dependent or dependents in such manner as it may see fit.

If minor children.

Sec. 69. Payment of death benefits to one or more dependents shall protect and discharge to that extent all compensation under this act, unless and until any other person claiming to be a dependent shall have given the commission notice of his claim and until the commission shall have notified the employer or his insurance carrier of such claim. In such case the commission shall determine the respective rights of the said rival claimants, and thereafter such death benefits shall be paid to such dependents as it may find so entitled, under the provisions of this act.

Payment as discharge.

Sec. 70. If the accident causes disability, a disability indemnity shall be payable as wages, upon the 18th day after the injured employee leaves work as the result of the injury and thereafter regularly but not less frequently than once in each calendar month, unless otherwise ordered by the commission, subject, however, to the following limitations:

Disability benefits.

(a) If the period of disability does not last longer than 10 days from the day the employee leaves work as the result of the injury, no disability indemnity whatever shall be recoverable except the disbursement in this act provided for medical, surgical, nursing, and hospital services, apparatus and supplies; nor in any case unless the commission has actual knowledge of the injury or is notified thereof within the period specified in this act.

(b) If the period of disability lasts longer than 10 days from the day the injured employee leaves work as the result of the injury no disability indemnity shall be recoverable for the first 10 days of disability.

Sec. 71. In case of temporary disability of more than 10 days duration, the employee shall receive 50 per cent of his average weekly wages so long as such disability is total not to exceed a maximum of $10 per week and not less than a minimum of $5 per week unless the employee's wages shall be less than $5 per week, in which event he shall receive compensation equal to his average weekly wages.

Temporary disability.

Sec. 72. In case of injury resulting in temporary partial disability, the employee shall receive 50 per cent of the impairment of his earning capacity during the continuance thereof, not to exceed the maximum sum of $10 per week, or the aggregate sum of $1,300.

Temporary partial disability.

Sec. 73. In cases included in the following schedule the disability in each case shall be deemed to continue for the period specified and the compensation to be paid for such loss shall be as specified herein, to wit:

Schedule.

The loss of one arm between elbow and shoulder, 208 weeks; the loss of forearm between wrist and elbow, 139 weeks; the loss of a hand, 104 weeks; the loss of a palm, where thumb remains, 70 weeks; the loss of a thumb and the metacarpal bone thereof, 50 weeks; the loss of a thumb at the proximal joint, 35 weeks; the loss of a thumb the second or distal joint, 18 weeks; the loss of an index finger and the metacarpal bone thereof, 26 weeks; loss of an index finger at the proximal joint, 18 weeks; loss of an index finger at the second joint, 13 weeks; loss of an index finger at the distal joint, 9 weeks; loss of a second finger and the metacarpal bone thereof, 18 weeks; loss of a middle finger at the proximal joint, 13 weeks; loss of the middle finger at the second joint, 9 weeks; loss of the middle finger at the distal joint, 5 weeks; loss of a third or ring finger and the metacarpal bone thereof, 11 weeks; loss of a ring finger at the proximal joint, 7 weeks; loss of a ring finger at the second joint, 7 weeks; loss of a ring finger at the distal joint, 4 weeks; loss of a little finger and the metacarpal bone thereof, 13 weeks; loss of a little finger at the proximal joint, 9 weeks; loss of a little finger at the second joint, 9 weeks; loss of a little finger at the distal joint, 4 weeks; loss of all the fingers of one hand where the thumb and palm remains, 52 weeks; loss of a leg at the hip joint or so near thereto as to preclude the use of an artificial limb, 208 weeks; the loss of a leg at or above the knee, where the stump remains sufficient to permit the use of an artificial limb, 139 weeks; the loss of a foot at the ankle, 104 weeks; the loss of a great toe with the metatarsal bone thereof, 26 weeks; the loss of a great toe at the proximal joint, 18 weeks; the loss of a great toe at the second joint, 9 weeks; the loss of any other toe with the metatarsal bone thereof, 11 weeks; the loss of any other toe at the proximal joint, 4 weeks; the loss of any other toe at the second or distal joint, 4 weeks; the loss of all the toes of one foot, 35 weeks; the loss of an eye by enucleation (including disfigurement resulting therefrom), 139 weeks; total blindness of one eye, 104 weeks; total deafness of both ears, 139 weeks; total deafness of one ear, 35 weeks; where workman prior to injury has suffered a total loss of hearing in one ear and as a result of the accident loses total hearing in remaining ear, 139 weeks.

(a) The periods of time specified in the foregoing schedule shall commence to run from the date of actual loss of any member or members.

(b) For the purpose of this schedule, permanent and complete paralysis of any member as the proximate result of accidental injury shall be deemed equivalent to the loss thereof.

(c) Whenever amputation is made between any two joints mentioned in this schedule (except amputation between the knee and hip joint) the resulting loss shall be estimated as if the amputation had been made at the joint nearest thereto.

(d) The amounts specified in this section are all subject to the limitations as to weekly maximum and minimum indemnity provided herein for injuries causing temporary total disability.

(e) When by reason of infection or any other cause resulting from such injury, which is not due to the neglect or misconduct of the injured employee, he is actually disabled longer than the time specified in the foregoing schedule, compensation may be awarded by the commission for the period of additional disability within the limits otherwise provided in this act.

(f) When an injured employee sustains two injuries coming under this schedule, the disabilities specified herein shall be added and the injured employee shall receive the sum of the two.

(g) Where an injury causes the loss of use or partial loss of use of any member or members specified in the foregoing schedule, the commission may determine the disability suffered and the amount of compensation to be awarded, by awarding compensation which shall bear such relation to the amount stated in the above schedule for the loss of a member or members as the disabilities bear to the loss produced by the injuries named in the schedule, or the commission may award compensation under the permanent partial disability section of this statute as the commission in its discretion may determine from the particular facts in each case.

Injury to teeth. SEC. 74. When an accident causes injury to the teeth of an employee, he shall, in addition to receiving compensation for disability and the medical, surgical, and hospital services provided herein, be entitled with the prior approval and consent of the commission to receive such dental treatment and services as may reasonably be necessary to repair and alleviate the effects of the injury, not to exceed $100 in value.

Disfigurements. SEC. 75. If any employee is seriously permanently disfigured about the head or face, the commission may allow, in addition to all other compensation benefits provided herein, such sum for compensation on account thereof as it may deem just, not exceeding $500.

Second injuries. SEC. 76. Where an employee has previously suffered the loss of one hand or one arm or one foot or one leg or the vision of one eye, and, as a result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, he suffers the loss of another hand, arm, foot, leg, or the vision of an eye, he shall be compensated as follows:

If the employee has previously lost vision of one eye and loses the vision of the remaining eye, he shall receive compensation for 312 weeks.

If the employee previously lost the vision of one eye and loses a hand, arm, foot, or leg, he shall be compensated by receiving the scheduled number of weeks for the loss of such member plus 50 per cent.

If the employee has previously lost the right hand and loses the left hand or arm or vice versa, he shall receive the schedule number of weeks for the loss of such member, plus 50 per cent.

If the employee has previously lost the right arm and loses the left hand or arm, or vice versa, he shall receive twice the number of scheduled weeks for the loss of such member.

If the employee has previously lost a hand or arm and loses one foot or leg or the vision of one eye, he shall receive as compensation the scheduled number of weeks for the loss of such member or loss of vision, plus 50 per cent.

If the employee has previously lost the right foot and loses the left leg or foot, or vice versa, he shall receive the scheduled number of weeks for the loss of such member, plus 25 per cent.

If the employee has previously lost the right leg and loses the left leg or foot, or vice versa, he shall receive the scheduled number of weeks for the loss of such member, plus 50 per cent.

If the employee has previously lost one leg or foot and loses one hand or arm or the vision of one eye, he shall receive compensation for the scheduled number of weeks for the loss of such member or loss of vision, plus 50 per cent.

Compensation awarded in this section is subject to the maximum and minimum weekly amounts herein specified for accidents causing temporary total disability.

Sec. 77. In cases of permanent total disability the award shall be 50 per cent of the average weekly wages of the injured employee and shall continue until death of such person so totally disabled, but not in excess of the weekly maximum and not less than the weekly minimum indemnity specified herein for injuries causing temporary total disability. Permanent total disability.

The loss of both hands or both arms or both feet or both legs or both eyes, or of any two thereof, shall prima facie constitute total and permanent disability to be compensated according to the provisions of this section: Provided, however, That where the disability comes under this section and where the employer or the commission obtains suitable employment for such disabled person which he can perform and which in all cases shall be subject to the sole approval of the commission, the disabilities set out in this paragraph shall not constitute total disability during the continuance of the commission's approval of said employment, but such partial disability as may be determined by the commission after a finding of the facts.

Sec. 78. Where an accident causes injury resulting in permanent partial disability (except the sustaining of any one of the specific injuries set forth in the schedule herein), the injured employee shall be deemed to be permanently partially disabled from the time he is so declared by the commission and from said time shall be entitled to compensation for permanent partial disability in addition to any compensation theretofore allowed. In determining permanent partial disability the commission shall ascertain in terms of percentage the extent of general permanent disability which the accident has caused, taking into consideration not only the general physical condition but the mental training, ability, former employment, and education of the injured employee. The commission shall then determine the injured employee's expectancy of life from recognized expectancy tables and such other evidence relating to his expectancy as may be presented; it shall then ascertain the total amount which said employee would receive during the balance of his expectancy if permanently totally disabled at not more than the maximum nor less than the minimum weekly indemnity specified in this act for temporary total disability and shall then take that percentage of the total sum so arrived at as is indicated by the percentage of general permanent disability found to exist in the manner as hereinabove set forth, not to exceed in any event, however, the aggregate sum of $2,600. Said sum to be paid at a weekly rate not more than the maximum nor less than the minimum herein specified for injuries causing total disability. Injuries not scheduled.

Multiple inju- SEC. 79. Where an injured employee sustains a loss set forth in the ries. schedule herein, but in addition thereto receives other injuries which are sufficient in their nature to alone cause temporary total disability, said employee shall receive in addition to the amounts specified in said schedule, compensation for temporary total disability as long as said disability may be found to exist as a result of said other injuries.

Hernia. SEC. 80. An employee in order to be entitled to compensation for hernia must clearly prove—first, that its appearance was accompanied by pain; second, that it was immediately preceded by some accidental strain suffered in the course of the employment. If an employee, after establishing his right to compensation for hernia as above provided, elected to be operated upon, a special operating fee of not to exceed $50 shall be paid by the employer, insurer, or commission as the case may be. In case the employee elects not to be operated upon and the hernia becomes strangulated in the future the results from such strangulation will not be compensated.

Medical exami- SEC. 81. Whenever, in case of injury, the right to compensation nations. under this act would exist in favor of an employee, he shall upon the written request of his employer, or the insurer carrying such risk, submit himself from time to time to examination by a physician or surgeon, who shall be provided and paid for by the employer or insurer, and shall likewise submit to examination from time to time by any regular physician selected and paid for by said commission, or a member or examiner thereof. The employee shall be entitled to have a physician provided and paid for by himself present at any such examination. So long as the employee, after such written request of the employer or insurer, shall refuse to submit himself to such examination, or shall in any way obstruct the same, his right to collect or to begin or to maintain any proceeding for the collection of compensation shall be suspended; and if he shall refuse to submit to such examination, after direction by the commission, or any member or examiner thereof, or shall, in any way obstruct the same, his right to weekly indemnity which shall accrue and become payable during the period of such refusal or obstruction, shall be barred. If any employee shall persist in any unsanitary or injurious practice which tends to imperil or retard his recovery or shall refuse to submit to such medical or surgical treatment as is reasonably essential to promote his recovery, the commission may, in its discretion, reduce or suspend the compensation of any such injured employee. Any physician who shall make or be present at any such examination may be required to testify as to the results thereof. Any physician having attended an employee in a professional capacity may be required to testify before the commission when it shall so direct. A physician will not be required, however, to disclose confidential communications imparted to him for the purpose of treatment and which are unnecessary to a proper understanding of the case. In all cases of injury the employer or insurer, as the case may be, shall have the right in the first instance to select the physician who shall attend said injured employee: Provided, however,
That if the services of a physician are not tendered at the time of injury, the employee shall have the right to select his own physician, and may upon the proper showing to the commission procure its permission at any time to have a physician of his own selection attend him, and in any nonsurgical case the employee with such permission in lieu of medical aid may procure any nonmedical treatment recognized by the laws of this State as legal, the practitioner administering such treatment to receive such fees therefor under the medical provisions of this act as may be fixed by the commission.

Lump sums. SEC. 82. At any time after six months have elapsed from the date of the injury the commission may, in the exercise of its discretion, after five days' prior notice to the parties, order payment of all or any part of the compensation awarded in a lump sum, or in such manner as it may determine to be for the best interests of the parties concerned, and its discretion so exercised shall be final and not subject to review.
When payment in a lump sum is ordered, the commission shall fix the amount to be paid based on the present worth of partial payments, considering interest at 4 per cent per annum, and less deductions for the contingencies of death and remarriage.

The aggregate of all lump sums granted to a claimant who has been found and declared by the commission to be permanently and totally disabled shall not exceed $3,125.

Sec. 83. The compensation provided for herein shall be reduced 50 per cent:

Willful acts.

(a) Where injury is caused by the willful failure of the employee to use safety devices provided by the employer.

(b) Where injury results from the employee's willful failure to obey any reasonable rule adopted by the employer for the safety of the employee.

(c) Where injury results from the intoxication of the employee.

Claims.

Sec. 84. No claim to recover compensation under this act shall be maintained unless notice in writing in form as prescribed by the commission, and making claim for compensation with respect to the injury and signed by the injured person or by some one in his behalf, or, in case of death, by a dependent or some one in his behalf, shall be served upon the commission either by delivering to and leaving with it a copy of such notice or by mailing to it by registered mail a copy thereof in a sealed and postpaid envelope addressed to its office in State capitol building, Denver, Colo.: Provided, however, That if no payment of compensation has been made, other than medical, funeral, surgical, nursing, dental, and hospital services, crutches, apparatus and supplies, such notice or claim must be filed within one year from the date of the accident, or, if death result therefrom, within one year after such death, or the right to compensation therefor shall be wholly barred; and, further, that any disability beginning more than five years from the date of the accident shall be conclusively presumed not to be due to such accident. The claim provided for in this section may be filed by anyone, including the commission or any of its agents, on behalf of such injured employee or on behalf of dependents in case of his death, and shall be considered as having been filed by said injured person, or, in case of death, by his dependents if subsequently ratified, such ratification to be in writing filed with the commission within two years from the date of accident or from date of death if death results therefrom.

Sec. 85. The limitation of time provided for in this act as against any person who is mentally incompetent or a minor dependent shall be eighteen months instead of one year.

Incompetents.

Sec. 86. Claims for compensation or benefits due under this act shall not be assigned, released, or commuted except as provided in this act, and shall be exempt from all claims of creditors and from levy, execution, and attachment or other remedy or recovery or collection of a debt, which exemption may not be waived.

Assignments,
etc.

The power given in any power of attorney or other authority from any injured employee or the dependents of any killed employee, purporting to authorize any other person to receive, be paid, or receipt for any compensation benefits awarded any such claimant shall be wholly void, illegal, and of no force and effect.

Sec. 87. If an employee entitled to compensation under this act be injured or killed by the negligence or wrong of another not in the same employ, such injured employee, or, in case of death, his dependents, shall, before filing any claim under this act, elect in writing whether to take compensation under this act or to pursue his remedy against such other. Such elections shall be evidenced in such manner as the commission may by rule or regulation prescribe. If such injured employee, or, in case of death, his dependents, elect to take compensation under this act, the awarding of compensation shall operate as and be an assignment of the cause of action against such other to the Industrial Commission of Colorado if compensation be payable from the State compensation insurance fund, and otherwise to the person, association, corporation, or insurance carrier liable for the payment of such compensation; "however, said insurance carrier shall not be entitled to recover any sum in excess of the amount of compensation for which said carrier is liable under this act to the injured employee, but to that extent said carrier shall be subrogated to the rights of the injured employee against said third party causing the injury;" if the injured employee elects to proceed against such other, the State compensation insurance fund, person, association, corporation, or insurance carrier, as the case may be, shall contribute only the deficiency, if any, between the amount of the recovery against such other person actually collected, and the compensation provided by this act in such case. Such a cause of action assigned to the commission may be prosecuted or compromised by it. A compromise of any such cause of action by the employee or his dependents at an amount less than the compensation provided for by this act shall be made only with the written approval of the commission, if the deficiency of compensation would be payable from the State compensation insurance fund, and otherwise with the written approval of the person, association, corporation, or insurance carrier liable to pay the same. Whenever an employee is killed by the negligence or wrong of another not in the same employ and the dependents of such employee entitled to compensation under this act are minors, such election to take compensation and the assignment of the cause of action against such other and such notice of election to pursue a remedy against such other shall be made by such minor, or shall be made on his behalf by a parent of such minor, or by his next friend or duly appointed guardian, as the commission may determine by rule in each case.

Awards preferred.

SEC. 88. The right of compensation granted by this act and any awards made thereunder shall have the same preference or lien without limit of amount against the assets of employer or insurer or both as is now or hereafter may be allowed by law for a claim for unpaid wages for labor.

Failure to insure.

SEC. 89. Any employer subject to the terms and provisions of this act who fails to insure or to keep the insurance required by this act in force or who allows the same to lapse or fails to effect a renewal thereof, shall not continue any of his business operations while such default in effective insurance continues. The commission in its own name as party plaintiff may institute the proper action to enjoin any such employer from continuing his business operations during any such default.

Attorneys' fees.

SEC. 90. Unless previously authorized by the commission, no lien shall be allowed nor any contract be enforceable for any attorney's fees, contingent or otherwise, for services rendered for the enforcement or collection of any claim for compensation or other proceedings under the workmen's compensation act, and then only as provided by rules of the commission.

Trust fund.

SEC. 91. The commission may, in its discretion, at any time, any provisions in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, by unanimous consent of all the members thereof, and with the approval of a majority of the State auditing board, compute and require to be paid to it to be held by it in trust, an amount equal to the present value of all unpaid compensation or other benefits in any case, computed at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. Such action may be taken after a finding by the commission as to the insolvency, threatened insolvency, or any other condition or danger which may cause the loss of, or which has delayed or may impede, hinder or delay prompt payment of compensation or benefits by any insurance carrier or employer. The action and finding of the commission shall not be subject to review, nor shall the commission be required to give any notice of hearing or hold any hearing prior to taking such action or making its finding as aforesaid. The order of the commission requiring said payment shall be valid, effective, and in force from and after the approval thereof by the State auditing board.

All moneys so paid in shall constitute a separate trust fund, and after any such payment is so ordered the employer or insurance carrier shall thereupon be discharged from any further liability under such award, for which payment is made, to the extent of the payment made, and the payment of the award shall then be assumed to the extent of payment made by the special trust fund so created.

If, for any reason, a beneficiary's right to the compensation awarded and ordered paid into said special trust fund, ceases, lapses, or in any manner terminates by virtue of the terms and provisions of this act so that a surplus not surviving or accruing to any other beneficiary remains in said trust fund of the amount ordered paid into it on behalf of the beneficiary, the insurance carrier, or employer who has made said payment shall be entitled to a refund of the present value of said surplus, if any, computed at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. Any portion of the special trust fund may, pursuant to resolution of the commission, be invested in any securities of the State of Colorado or of the United States of America.

SEC. 92. Any dispute or controversy concerning compensation under this act shall be submitted to the commission in the manner and with the effect as provided herein. Procedure.

SEC. 93. If the insured employee or his dependents and the employer or his insurer reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act the agreement shall be filed with the commission and after approval by it shall be enforceable as are all the awards of the commission. All such agreements shall be subject to the approval of the commission, shall be upon and in form as prescribed by it, and approval shall be given only when the terms thereof conform to the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations of the commission. Such approval of the commission shall be evidenced by the signature of its chairman thereon. Agreements to be approved.

SEC. 94. Hearings upon claims arising under this act shall be held by the commission upon its own motion or upon the motion of any party interested therein. The commission shall cause reasonable notice of such hearing, embracing a general statement of such claim to be given to each party interested, by service of such notice on him personally, or by mailing a copy thereof to him at his last known post office address, at least 10 days before such hearing. Such hearings may be adjourned from time to time in the discretion of the commission, and may be held at such place or places as the commission shall designate. Either party shall have the right to be present at any hearing in person or by attorney or by any other agent, and to present such testimony as may be pertinent to the controversy before the commission, and shall have the right of cross-examination: Provided, however, That the commission may with summary notice to either party cause testimony to be taken or an examination to be made of the person of the injured employee, or with or without notice an inspection of the premises where the injury occurred to be had, or the time books and pay roll of the employer to be examined; the testimony so taken and the results of any such inspection or examination shall be reported to the commission for its consideration upon final hearing and determination of the cause. All ex parte testimony taken by the commission shall be reduced to writing and either party shall have an opportunity to examine and rebut the same on final hearing, by cross-examination or otherwise. Hearings.

SEC. 95. All hearings arising under this act may be held before the commission or any two commissioners or before any referee or referees appointed by the commission. Such hearings may also be held by any commissioner as referee when he has been especially appointed by the commission to hold any such hearing. Same.

SEC. 96. The commission shall have the power and authority to appoint one or more referees to hold any of the hearings provided for in this act. Such referee or referees shall have full power and authority to call, preside at, and conduct such hearings, as the said commissioner would have. After the close of any such hearing the referee shall make his findings of fact as to the issues involved in said hearing and his determination and award, which said finding and award so made shall be taken as a part of the record in said cause, and shall be considered as the final finding and award of the industrial commission in said cause unless a review thereof is prayed for in the manner and within the time as herein provided. Referees.

SEC. 97. Any party in interest to any proceeding who is dissatisfied with the finding and award entered by any referee or referees of said commission may petition the industrial commission as a commission to review the finding and award of such referee or referees and the entire record in said cause, or the commission on its own motion upon five days' notice to the parties may review any case, and the commission in its discretion, may grant an oral hearing. Such petition shall be in writing and shall specify in detail the particular errors complained of in the finding and award and in the conduct and hearing of such cause. Such petition must be filed within 10 days after the rendition of any finding Review of referees' findings.

or award by the referee unless further time is granted by the referee or the commission within said 10 days, and, unless so filed, the finding and award of the referee shall be considered as the final finding and award of the commission in said cause. All parties in interest shall be given due notice of the rendition of any finding or award by the referee, and said period of 10 days shall begin to run only after such notice, and the mailing of a copy of said finding or award addressed to the last known address of any party in interest shall be completed notice. Upon the filing of any such petition the commission shall review the entire record of proceedings in said cause and in its discretion may take or order the taking of additional testimony and shall either affirm the finding and award of the referee or may enter a new finding and award, affirming or reversing the finding or award of the referee in whole or in part.

Suits restricted. SEC. 98. No action, proceeding, or suit to set aside, vacate, or amend any finding, order, or award of the commission, or referee, or to enjoin the enforcement thereof, shall be brought unless the plaintiff shall have first applied to the commission for a review as herein provided. Such action, proceeding, or suit must be commenced within 20 days after the final finding, order, or award entered by the commission upon such review.

Appeal to court. SEC. 99. Any person in interest being dissatisfied with any such finding, order, or award of the commission issued or promulgated by virtue of the authority conferred in this act, may commence an action in the district court in and for the county wherein the injury was sustained or in the district court in and for the city and county of Denver, against the commission as defendant to modify or vacate the same on the grounds herein specified in which action any adverse party shall also be made a defendant.

Actions to have precedence. SEC. 100. All such actions shall have precedence over any civil cause of a different nature pending in such court, and the district court shall always be deemed open for the trial thereof, and the same shall be tried and determined by the district court in manner as provided for other civil actions.

Procedure. SEC. 101. In such action, a copy of the complaint, which shall state the grounds upon which a review is sought, shall be served with the summons. The commission shall file its answer within 20 days after the service of the complaint. With its answer the commission shall make return to said court of all documents and papers on file in the matter, and of all testimony which may have been taken therein, and a certified copy of its order, finding, and award. Such return of the commission when filed in the office of the clerk of the district court shall constitute the judgment roll in such action; and it shall not be necessary to settle a bill of exceptions in order to make such return part of the record of such court in such action. Such action may be thereupon brought on for hearing before said court on such record by either party upon notice and in the manner as provided in said court in other civil actions, subject, however, to the provisions of laws for a change of place of trial or the calling in of another judge.

Same. SEC. 102. If upon trial of such action it shall appear that all issues arising in such action have not theretofore been presented to the commission in the petition filed as provided in this act, or that the commission has not theretofore had an ample opportunity to hear and determine any issues raised in such action, or has for any reason, not in fact heard and determined the issues raised, the court shall, before proceeding to render judgment, unless the parties to such action stipulate to the contrary, transmit to the commission a full statement of such issue or issues not adequately considered, and shall stay further proceedings in such action until such issues are heard by the commission and returned to said court.

Upon receipt of such statement the commission shall hear and consider the issues not theretofore heard and considered, and may alter, affirm, modify, amend, or rescind its finding, order, or award complained of in said action; and it shall report its action thereon to said court within a reasonable time after its receipt of the statement from the court.

The court shall thereupon order such amendment or other proceeding as may be necessary to raise the issues as presented by such modification of the finding, order, or award as may have been made by the commission upon the hearing, if any such modification has in fact been made, and shall thereupon proceed with the trial of such action.

Sec. 103. Upon such hearing, the court may affirm or set aside such order or award; but only upon the following grounds: Power of court limited.

- (a) That the commission acted without or in excess of its powers.
- (b) That the finding, order, or award was procured by fraud.
- (c) That the findings of fact by the commission do not support the order or award.

Sec. 104. Any action commenced in court under this section to set aside or modify any order or award of the commission shall be brought to trial within 30 days after issue shall be joined, unless continued on order of the court for good cause shown. No continuance shall be for longer than 30 days at one time. Trial in 30 days.

Sec. 105. Trial shall be to the court without a jury and upon the record of the commission returned to said court. Upon the trial of any such action the court shall disregard any irregularity or error of the commission unless it be made affirmatively to appear that the party complaining was damaged thereby. Proceedings summary.

Sec. 106. The record in any case shall be transmitted to the commission within 20 days after the order or judgment of the court, unless, in the meantime, a writ of error addressed to the district court shall be obtained from the supreme court, for the review of such order or judgment. Transmitting record.

Sec. 107. Upon setting aside of any order or award, the court may recommit the controversy and remand the record in the case to the commission for further hearing or proceedings; or it may order said commission to enter the proper award upon the findings, as the nature of the case shall demand: Provided, however, That in no event shall such order for award be for a greater amount of compensation than allowed by this act, or in any manner conflict with the provisions thereof. Remanding case.

Sec. 108. The commission or any party who may consider himself aggrieved by a judgment entered upon the review of any such order or award, may have questions of law only reviewed summarily by the supreme court, by writ of error, as provided by law, and said cause shall be advanced upon the calendar of the supreme court, and a final decision rendered within 60 days from date of issuance of the writ. It shall not be necessary for said commission or any party aggrieved by said action to execute, serve, or file any undertaking in order to obtain such a writ of error. Review by supreme court.

Sec. 109. No fee shall be charged by the clerk of any court for the performance of any official service required by this act. On proceedings to review any order or award, costs as between the parties shall be allowed, or not, in the discretion of the court, but no costs shall be taxed against said commission. In any action for the review of any order or award, and upon any review thereof by the supreme court, it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the county wherein said action is pending, or of the attorney general, if requested by the commission, to appear on behalf of the commission, whether any other party defendant should have appeared or be represented in the action or not. Fees, etc.

Sec. 110. Upon its own motion on the ground of error, mistake, or a change in conditions, the commission may at any time after notice of hearing to the parties interested, review any award, and on such review may make an award ending, diminishing, maintaining, or increasing the compensation previously awarded, subject to the maximum and minimum provided in this act, and shall state its conclusions of facts and rulings of law, and shall immediately send to the parties a copy of the award. No such review shall affect such award as regards any moneys already paid. Review of awards.

Sec. 111. The commission, or any agent, deputy, or referee designated by it shall have power and authority to issue subpoenas, to compel the attendance of witnesses or parties, and the production of books, papers, or records and to administer oaths. Any person who Power as to oaths, etc.

serves a subpoena shall receive the same fee as the sheriff. Each witness who is subpoenaed on behalf of the commission, and who appears in obedience thereto, shall receive for his attendance the fees and mileage provided for witnesses in civil cases in the district court, which shall be audited and paid from the State treasury in the same manner as other expenses are audited and paid, upon the presentation of proper voucher approved by the commission.

The commission may, in its discretion, assess the cost of attendance and mileage of witnesses subpoenaed by either party to any proceeding, against the other party to such proceeding, when in its judgment the necessity of subpoenaing such witnesses arises out of the raising of any incompetent, irrelevant, or sham issues by such other party.

Disobedience of summons.

SEC. 112. Any person who shall willfully fail or neglect to appear and testify or to produce books, papers, or records, as required by such subpoena duly served upon him, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100, or imprisoned in the county jail not longer than 30 days for each such offense, or both such fine and imprisonment. Each day such person shall so refuse or neglect shall constitute a separate offense.

Courts to aid.

SEC. 113. The district court of the county wherein such person resides, or district court of the city and county of Denver, upon application of the commission or its agent, shall issue an order compelling the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, or records before such commission or any such agent.

Depositions.

SEC. 114. The commission or any party may, in any investigation or hearing, cause the depositions of witnesses residing within or without the State to be taken in the manner prescribed by law for like depositions in civil actions in district courts. All such depositions shall be taken upon commission issued by the commission, and shall be taken in accordance with the laws and rules of court covering depositions in civil cases in the district courts of this State.

Records.

SEC. 115. A full and complete record shall be kept of all proceedings had before the commission on any hearing, and all testimony shall be taken down and transcribed by a stenographer appointed by the commission.

Evidence.

SEC. 116. A transcribed copy of the evidence and proceedings, or any specific part thereof, of any investigation or hearing taken by a stenographer appointed by the commission, being certified by such stenographer to be a true and correct transcript of the testimony on the investigation or hearing of a particular witness, or of a specific part thereof, carefully compared by him with his original notes, and to be a correct statement of the evidence and proceedings had on such investigation or hearing so purporting to be taken and subscribed, may be received as evidence by the commission and by any court with the same effect as if such stenographer were present and testified to the facts so certified. A copy of such transcript shall be furnished on demand to any party upon the payment of 10 cents per folio. Fees received from the sale of transcripts shall be applicable to the expenses of the commission in addition to all sums which may be appropriated for its use.

General penalty.

SEC. 117. If any employer or insurer, or any officer or agent of either, or any employee, or any other person shall violate any provision of this act, or shall do any act prohibited thereby, or shall fail or refuse to perform any duty lawfully enjoined, within the time prescribed by the commission, for which no penalty has been specifically provided, or shall fail, neglect, or refuse to obey any lawful order made by the commission, or any judgment or decree made by any court as provided by this act, for each such violation, failure, or refusal such employer or insurer, or any officer or agent of either, or any employee or any person shall be punished by a penalty of not more than $100 for each such offense.

Each day an offense.

SEC. 118. Every day during which any employer or insurer or officer or agent of either or any employee, or any other person shall fail to comply with any lawful order of the commission or shall fail to perform any duty imposed by this act, shall constitute a separate and distinct violation thereof: Provided, however, That in any action which may be brought to enforce the same, or to enforce any penalty provided for in this act, such violations shall be considered cumulative, and may be joined in such action.

SEC. 119. All penalties provided for in this act, except fines in cases of misdemeanor, shall be collected in a civil action brought against the employer, or insurer or any officer or agent of either, or of any employee or any other person as the case may be, in the name of and by the commission, and all such penalties, when collected, shall be applicable to the expense of the commission, in addition to all sums which may be appropriated for its use. Collection of penalties.

SEC. 120. Upon the request of the commission the attorney general or the district attorney of any district, or any attorney at law in the regular employ of the commission, shall institute and prosecute the necessary actions or proceedings for the enforcement of any of the provisions of this act or award or order of the commission, or for the recovery of any money due the State compensation insurance fund, or any penalty herein provided, and shall defend in like manner all suits, actions, or proceedings brought against the commission or any member thereof in his official capacity. Who to prosecute actions.

SEC. 121. If, for the purpose of obtaining any order, benefit, award, or compensation or payment under the provisions of this act, either for himself or for any other person, anyone willfully makes under oath a false statement or representation, he shall be guilty of perjury and punished accordingly, and he shall forfeit all right to compensation under this act upon conviction of such offense. False statements.

SEC. 122. There is hereby established a fund, to be known as the State compensation insurance fund, for the benefit of injured and the dependents of killed employees, which shall be administered in accordance with the following provisions, without liability on the part of the State, beyond the amount of said fund, constituted as provided in this act. State fund.

SEC. 123. The commission is hereby vested with full power, authority, and jurisdiction over the State compensation insurance fund, and may do and perform any and all things, whether herein specifically designated or in addition thereto, which are necessary or convenient in the exercise of any power, authority, or jurisdiction over said fund in the administration thereof under the provisions of this act, as fully and completely as the governing body of a private insurance company might or could do, subject, however, to all the provisions of this act. Power of commission.

SEC. 124. The commission shall have full power and authority, and it shall be its duty, to fix and determine the rates to be charged by the State compensation insurance fund for compensation insurance, and to manage and conduct all business and affairs in relation thereto, all of which business and affairs shall be conducted in the name of the commission, and in that name, without any other name or title, the commission may: Same.

(a) Sue and be sued in all the courts of the State and in actions arising out of any act, deed, matter, or thing made, omitted, entered into, done, or suffered in connection with the State compensation insurance fund, the administration, management, or conduct of the business or affairs relating thereto.

(b) Make and enter into contracts of insurance with employers as herein provided, and such other contracts or obligations relating to the State compensation insurance fund as are authorized or permitted under the provisions of this act; but the commission shall not, nor shall any officer or employee thereof be personally liable in his private capacity for or on account of any act done or omitted or contract or other obligation entered into or undertaken in an official capacity, in good faith and without intent to defraud in connection with the administration, management, or conduct of the State compensation insurance fund, its business, or other affairs relating thereto.

(c) Contract with physicians, surgeons, and hospitals for medical and surgical treatment, services, and supplies, crutches and apparatus, and the care and nursing of injured persons entitled to benefits from said fund, and may contract for medical, surgical, hospital, and nursing services and supplies in excess of the amount and period otherwise limited herein, whenever said commission may determine that the contracting of such extra medical, surgical, hospital, and nursing services

- and supplies might tend to reduce the period of disability for which said fund would be liable for the payment and compensation.
- Fund to be continuing. SEC. 125. The State compensation insurance fund shall be a continuing fund, and shall consist of all premiums received and paid into said fund for compensation insurance, all property and securities acquired by and through the use of moneys belonging to said fund, and all interest earned upon moneys belonging to said fund and deposited or invested as herein provided. Said fund shall be applicable to the payment of losses sustained on account of compensation and benefit insurance in accordance with the provisions of this act.
- Classifications. SEC. 126. The commission shall from time to time classify the places of employment of employers insured in the State compensation insurance fund into classes in accordance with the nature of the business in which they are engaged and the probable hazard of risk of injury to their employees. It shall determine the amount of the premiums which such employers shall pay to said State compensation insurance fund, and may prescribe in what manner such premiums shall be paid, and may change the amount thereof both in respect to any or all of such employers, from time to time, as circumstances may require, and the condition of their respective plants, establishments, or places of work in respect to the safety of their employees may justify, but all such premiums shall be levied on a basis that shall be fair, equitable, and just as among such employers.
- Subclasses. SEC. 127. It shall also be its duty to divide each of such classes under said classification into as many subclasses as may be necessary, upon such terms and conditions as will enable it to determine the risks and fix the rates of premium of the different employers in the same class of employment, with respect to the conditions of said places of employment as regards the several requirements upon which the rates of premium of risks are based and determined, as provided in this act.
- Maintenance rates only. SEC. 128. It shall be the duty of the commission in the exercise of the powers and discretion conferred upon it by this act, ultimately to fix and maintain for each class and subclass of occupation, the lowest possible rates of premium consistent with the maintenance of a solvent State compensation insurance fund, and the creation and maintenance of a reasonable surplus after the payment of legitimate claims for injury and death that may be authorized to be paid from the State compensation insurance fund for the benefit of injured and dependents of killed employees.
- Basis of rates. SEC. 129. Such rates shall take no account of the extent to which the employees in any particular establishment have or have not persons dependent upon them for support, nor of whether such employees have dependents who are nonresidents of the United States, nor of whether such employees are married or single, nor the age of any such employees. The rates so made shall be that percentage of the pay roll of any employer which, on the average, shall produce a sufficient sum:
- (a) To carry all claims to maturity; that is to say, the rates shall be based upon the "reserve" and not upon the "assessment" plan;
 - (b) To produce a reasonable surplus as provided in this act and to cover the catastrophe hazard and to insure the payment to employees and their dependents of the compensation herein provided.
 - (c) In determining the amount of reserve to be laid aside to meet deferred payments according to awards, such reserve shall be ascertained by finding the present worth of such deferred payments calculated at a rate of interest not higher than 4 per cent per annum, and such calculations shall be made according to a table of mortality not lower than the American Experience Table of Mortality, and, in the discretion of the commission, by such other and further methods as will result in the establishment of adequate reserves.
- Separate accounts. SEC. 130. The commission shall keep an accurate account of the money paid in premiums by each of the several classes and subclasses of occupations or industries, and the disbursements on account of injuries and death of employees thereof; and it shall also keep an account of the money received from each individual employer and the amount disbursed from the State compensation insurance fund on account of injuries and death of the employees of such employer: Provided, That the State compensation insurance fund, including such portions of said fund as may be derived from premiums paid by the State, and its political subdivisions, shall be one fund, indivisible.

It is the intention that the amounts raised for such State compensation insurance fund shall ultimately become neither more nor less than to make said fund self-supporting, and the premiums or rates levied for such purpose shall be subject to readjustment from time to time by the commission, as may become necessary.

Sec. 131. The commission shall set aside such proportion as it may deem necessary, of the earned premiums paid into the State compensation insurance fund, as a contribution to the surplus of the fund: Provided, That until the surplus of the fund shall amount to the sum of five hundred thousand ($500,000) dollars, at least 10 per cent of the earned premiums paid into the State compensation insurance fund shall be so set aside.

Surplus.

Sec. 132. The commission may, in its discretion, amend at any time the rate or rates for any class or classes, subclass or subclasses: Provided further, That no contract of insurance between the State compensation insurance fund and any employer shall be in effect until a policy or binder has been actually issued by the commission and the premium therefor paid as and when required by this act: And provided further, That after the inspection of the premises of any employer, or after considering the experience of such employer, the commission may quote with respect to his risk a rate higher or lower than that indicated by its manual as applicable to his risk. Twice a year the commission shall tabulate the earned premiums paid by policyholders of the State compensation insurance fund, by classes and subclasses, and shall also tabulate the losses incurred by the fund by classes and subclasses. Should the experience of the fund show a balance to the credit of the policyholders of any class or subclass after the before mentioned amounts have been credited to the surplus fund, and after payment of all amounts which have fallen due because of injury or death and after setting aside proper reserves, then the commission shall distribute such credit balance to the policyholders of such classes as have a balance to their credit in proportion to the premium paid by each such policyholder during the preceding insurance period and in proportion to the credit balance earned by the class or subclass as a credit upon the premium or premiums next due from him: Provided, however, That in the event any such policyholder fails to renew his policy in the State compensation insurance fund for the six-months' period following the period in which said dividends were earned, he shall not be entitled to said credit dividend: And provided, further, That in the event an employer actually discontinues business, his policy shall be canceled and the dividend if any, when ascertained, returned to him.

Amending and adjusting rates.

Sec. 133. If any employer shall be in arrears for more than 20 days in any payment required to be made by him to the State compensation insurance fund as provided in this act, he shall by virtue of such arrearage be in default of such payment and any policy issued to him by said fund shall thereupon be canceled without notice as of the effective or renewal date of said policy. In the event cancellation of policy is made as herein provided and the State compensation insurance fund is required to make any expenditures for the benefits provided by this act for any accident causing injury or death within said 20-day period said fund shall be entitled to reimbursement from the employer for all amounts so paid which may be collected by said fund in civil action brought against the employer: Provided, however, That the employer shall be primarily liable to any injured employee or the dependents of a killed employee for the payment of the compensation and benefits provided by this act during said 20-day period.

Default in premiums.

Sec. 134. In the event the amount of premium collected by the fund from any employer at the beginning of any period of six months as ascertained and calculated by using the estimated expenditure of wages for the period of time covered by such premium payments as a basis, shall differ from the earned premium based upon the actual wage expenditure for such six-months' period, an adjustment of the amount of such premium shall be made at the end of such six-months' period and the actual amount of such premium shall be determined in accordance with the amount of actual expenditure of wages for such period; and, in the event such actual wage expenditure for such period is less than the amount on which such estimated premium was collected, then such employer shall be entitled to have the amount of the difference in premium repaid to him or credited on succeeding premium payments; and should the earned premium, where ascertained as aforesaid, exceed in amount the premium so paid by such employer at the beginning of each such six-months' period, such employer shall upon being advised of the true amount of such premium due, forthwith pay to said State compensation insurance fund an amount equal to the difference between the amount actually found to be due and the amount so paid by him at the beginning of said six-months' period.

ments. Sec. 135. Every employer insured in the State compensation insurance fund shall semiannually, on the first day of January and July of each year pay into the State compensation insurance fund in advance the amount of premium determined and fixed by the commission for the ensuing period. The amount of the premium to be paid by every such employer at the rates fixed and established by the commission for said State compensation insurance fund shall be on the basis of the annual expenditure of money by said employer for the services of persons engaged in his employment. The amount of premium to be so paid by each such employer shall be determined by the classifications, rules, and rates made and published by the commission. Payment shall be made within the time fixed by this act and a receipt or certificate certifying that such payment has been made shall be mailed to such employer by the commission, which receipt or certificate shall be prima facie evidence of the payment of such premium.

Municipalities. Sec. 136. The amount of money to be contributed by the State itself, and by each county, city, town, irrigation or school district, or other taxing district of the State, shall be determined and fixed by said industrial commission by any of the methods herein provided for the determination of premiums and rates for private employers: Provided, however, That the commission shall make such readjustment of premiums heretofore paid in by public employers and of premiums now due from public employers under the prior statute, after the same are actually paid in, as it may deem equitable and just.

Raising money. Sec. 137. The officials of the State, county, city, town, irrigation or school district, or other taxing district of the State, who are charged by law with the duties of raising and appropriating funds of each such subdivision for the payment of expenditures authorized on behalf of each such subdivision shall cause to be raised and appropriated sufficient moneys for the payment of any sum of money required to purchase compensation insurance from said fund for any such subdivision, and the officials who are charged with the duty of issuance and payment of the warrants of each such subdivision shall pay same when due: Provided, however, The commission shall communicate to the general assembly, within the first 10 days of each regular session thereof, an estimate of the aggregate amount of money necessary to be contributed by the State during the two years next ensuing as its proper payments due to said fund.

be furnished. Sec. 138. All officials of the State, county, city, town, irrigation or school district, or other taxing district of the State, who are charged by law with the duty of keeping or preparing any or all of the books or records of any such subdivision shall upon request furnish to the industrial commission of Colorado such information as may be required by the commission relative to the expenditure of money by any such subdivision for the services of any and all persons in its employ.

It shall be the duty of the public examiner of the State of Colorado to audit and examine, at least once a year, all of the books, records, and other documents of every public employer as hereinabove set forth as far as they relate to the wage expenditure or pay roll of any and all such public employers during the year preceding said examination or audit, and said public examiner shall furnish to the commission in form as prescribed by it a verified statement of the total wage expenditure of each and all such subdivisions for the period covered by said examination and audit.

Reinsurance. Sec. 139. The commission may secure reinsurance covering the catastrophe hazard with respect to any risk or risks carried by the State compensation insurance fund, and the State treasurer shall pay the premium for such reinsurance from the State compensation insurance fund in the manner provided by this act for other disbursements from said fund.

SEC. 140. The State treasurer shall be the custodian of the State compensation insurance fund, and all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon warrants of the State auditor upon vouchers issued by the commission, and the State auditor is hereby authorized and directed to draw warrants upon the State compensation insurance fund for payment thereof, upon order of the commission.

Custody of funds.

SEC. 141. The commission shall in writing authorize and direct the State treasurer to invest any portion of the State compensation insurance fund which in the judgment of the commission is not needed for immediate use. Said fund, including its surplus and reserves, or any portion thereof, may be invested in any warrants or bonds of the State of Colorado or of the United States of America at market price, as may be determined by the commission. All interest earned upon such portion or portions of the fund as may be deposited or invested shall be collected by the State treasurer and placed to the credit of such fund: Provided, however, That none of the funds belonging to the State compensation insurance fund shall be used for any other purpose whatsoever save those of said fund. Upon the direction of the commission, with the approval of the State auditing board, the State treasurer shall sell or dispose of such portion of the investments of said fund at market price as he may be directed.

Investments.

SEC. 142. The State treasurer shall give a separate and additional bond in such amount as may be fixed by the commission, with sureties to be approved by the governor, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as custodian of the State compensation insurance fund and as custodian of all the bonds, warrants, investments, and moneys of, or belonging to said fund, subject to all provisions of law governing bonds of the State treasurer, and the premium on said bond shall be paid from the State treasury upon warrant issued by the State auditor upon voucher approved by the commission.

Bond.

SEC. 143. The State compensation insurance fund shall be open to visitation by the insurance commissioner at all reasonable times, and the insurance commissioner may require from the commission reports as to the condition of such fund, as required by law to be made by other insurance carriers doing business in this State, so far as applicable to said fund. A thorough examination of said fund shall be made whenever the industrial commission and the insurance commissioner deem it necessary, but not less often than once in every two years. Such examination shall be made by a competent, fair, and impartial examiner, selected by agreement of the insurance commissioner and the commission, and it shall be an actuary of recognized standing and free from any connection with any interest opposed to the State compensation insurance fund.

Examination of fund.

SEC. 144. Any employer who intentionally misrepresents to the commission the amount of pay roll or wage expenditure upon which any premium under this act is based, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or jail sentence of not more than 30 days, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Misrepresenting pay roll.

SEC. 145. The commission shall prepare and furnish to employers, at the expense of the State, all such blanks as may be necessary to carry out the terms and provisions of this act in connection with the operation and maintenance of the State compensation insurance fund.

Blanks.

SEC. 146. The commission shall cause to be prepared proper schedules showing its classification, rates, and regulations which shall be effective at such time or times as may be ordered by the commission, said classifications, rates, and regulations shall be published by posting a copy thereof on the bulletin board in the offices of said commission.

Acts continued.

the Session Laws of Colorado of 1915, and the amendments thereto of 1917, is hereby ratified, confirmed, and validated.

Pending and decided cases.

SEC. 148. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to limit, interfere with, disturb, or render ineffective in any degree, any matter, proceeding, or transaction pending before, or done or performed under the provisions of chapter 179 of the Session Laws of 1915 and all acts amendatory thereof, by the industrial commission of Colorado or any department thereof, including the State compensation insurance fund, or to effect [affect] any right accrued or accruing or to accrue under said acts, but each and every part thereof are hereby expressly saved and continued under the jurisdiction of said industrial commission of Colorado, with full power, authority, and jurisdiction and with the right and duty in said commission to dispose of the same.

Provisions not retroactive.

SEC. 149. The compensation provisions of this act, except the procedural provisions, shall not apply to any injury sustained prior to the taking effect hereof.

Provisions severable.

SEC. 150. If any part, section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase of this act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of this act. The general assembly hereby declares that it would have passed this act and each part, section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase irrespective of the fact that any one or more other parts, section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase be declared unconstitutional.

CONNECTICUT.

GENERAL STATUTES, 1918.

CHAPTER 284.—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

PART A—EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

SECTION 5339. In an action to recover damages for personal injury sustained by an employee arising out of and in the course of his employment, or for death resulting from injury so sustained, it shall not be a defense—(a) that the injured employee was negligent; (b) that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee; (c) that the injured employee had assumed the risk of the injury. Abrogation of defenses.

SEC. 5340. The provisions of section 5339 shall not apply to actions to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by employees of any employer having regularly less than five employees, by casual employees, or by outworkers; nor shall the same provisions apply to actions against any employer who shall have accepted part B of this chapter in the manner hereinafter prescribed. Does not apply when.

PART B—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

SECTION 5341 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). When any persons in the mutual relation of employer and employee shall have accepted part B of chapter 284 of the general statutes the employer shall not be liable to any action for damages on account of personal injury sustained by an employee arising out of and in the course of his employment or on account of death resulting from injury so sustained; but the employer shall pay compensation on account of such injury in accordance with the scale hereinafter provided, except that no compensation shall be paid when the injury shall have been caused by the willful and serious misconduct of the injured employee or by his intoxication. If an injury arises out of and in the course of the employment it shall be no bar to a claim for compensation that it can not be traced to a definite occurrence which can be located in point of time and place. Any disease, which is caused by an injury arising out of and in the course of the employment, shall be deemed to be a natural consequence of such injury, but in any case of aggravation of a disease existing prior to such injury, compensation shall be allowed only for such proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of such prior disease as may reasonably be attributed to the injury. The acceptance of part B of chapter 284 of the general statutes by employers and employees shall be understood to include the mutual renunciation and waiver of all rights and claims arising out of injuries sustained in the course of employment as aforesaid, other than rights and claims given by part B of said chapter, including the right of jury trial on all questions affecting compensation and all right of appeal from the compensation commissioners except as hereinafter established. Election of compensation.

SEC. 5342 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). All contracts of employment between an employer and an employee, as such terms are defined in section 5338 of the general statutes, except those made between an employer having regularly less than five employees and any such employer and employee, shall be conclusively presumed to include a mutual agreement between employer and employee to accept part B and become bound thereby, unless either employer or employee shall, by written stipulation in the contract, or by such notice as is prescribed in section 5343 of the general statutes, indicate his refusal to accept the provisions of said part B. No provision of said part B shall apply to any employer having regularly less than five employees unless such employer shall, in the manner hereinafter provided, accept Election presumed. Employers of less than five employees.

- the provisions of part B and become bound thereby. All contracts of employment between an employer having regularly less than five employees and any such employee, shall be conclusively presumed to include the following mutual agreements between employer and employee: (1) That the employer may accept the provisions of part B and become bound thereby by forthwith complying with section 5369 of the general statutes; (2) that if the employer so accepts the provisions of part B the employee shall thereupon be deemed to accept such provisions and shall be bound thereby; unless the employer shall neglect or refuse to furnish, forthwith, to the employee, on his written request, evidence of compliance with section 5369 of the general statutes in the form of a certificate from the compensation commissioner, the insurance commissioner, or the insurer, as the case may be; (3) that the employee may at any time withdraw his acceptance of such provisions and become released therefrom by giving written or printed notice of such withdrawal to the commissioner having jurisdiction, and also to the employer, and such withdrawal shall take effect forthwith from the time of its service on the commissioner and the employer; and (4) that the employer may withdraw his acceptance and the acceptance of the of the employee by filing a written or printed notice of his withdrawal with such commissioner and with such employee, which withdrawal shall become effective forthwith from the time of its service on the commissioner and the employee. The notices of acceptance and withdrawal to be given by an employer having regularly less than five employees and the notice of withdrawal to be given by the employee, as herein provided, shall be served upon such commissioner, employer, or or employee, either by personal presentation or by registered mail; and notices in behalf of a minor shall be given by or to his parent or guardian, or, if there be no parent or guardian, by or to such minor. The manner of acceptance of or withdrawal from the provisions of part B, prescribed in said section 5343, shall not apply to employers having regularly less than five employees, or to such employees. In determining the number of employees regularly employed by an individual, the employees of a partnership of which he is a member shall not be included.
- Withdrawals. SEC. 5343 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). Acceptance of part B may be withdrawn by written or printed notice from either employer or employee to the other party and to the compensation commissioner of the district in which the employee is employed. Notice of withdrawal may be served by personal presentation or by registered letter addressed to the person on whom it is to be served at his last known residence or place of business; and such notice shall become effective 30 days after service. Either employer or employee who has withdrawn acceptance may renew the same by the same notice and procedure as is prescribed for withdrawals. Notices in behalf of a minor shall be given by or to his parent or guardian, or, if there be no parent or guardian, then by or to such minor.
- How withdrawal may be made.
- Effect of non-acceptance. SEC. 5344. Every employer not accepting part B shall be liable to action for damages on account of personal injury to his employees in accordance with the provisions of part A, and every employee not accepting part B shall lose all rights and benefits of part A with reference to any employer who continues to accept part B.
- Contractors. SEC. 5345. When any principal employer procures any work to be done, wholly or in part for him, by a contractor, or through him by a subcontractor, and the work so procured to be done is a part or process in the trade or business of such principal employer, and is performed in, on or about premises under his control, then such principal employer shall be liable to pay all compensation under this chapter to the same extent as if the work were done without the intervention of such contractor or subcontractor.
- Liability of third persons. SEC. 5346. When any injury for which compensation is payable under the provisions of this chapter shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employee may claim compensation under the provisions of this chapter, but the payment or award of compensation shall not affect the claim or right of action of such injured employee against such other person, but such injured employee may proceed at law against such person to recover damages for such injury; and any employer having paid, or by award having become obligated to pay, compensation under the provisions of this chapter may bring an action against such other person to recover any amount that he has paid or by award has become obligated to pay as compensation to such injured employee: Provided, If either such employee or such employer shall bring such action against such third person, he shall forthwith notify the other, in writing, by personal presentation or by registered mail, of such act and of the name of the court to which the writ is returnable, and such other may join as a party plaintiff in such action, within thirty days after such notification, and if such other fails to join as a party plaintiff, his right of action against such third person shall abate. In the event that such employer and employee shall join as parties plaintiff in such action and any damages are recovered, such damages shall be so apportioned that the claim of the employer shall take precedence over that of the injured employee, and if the damages shall not be sufficient, or shall be only sufficient to reimburse him for the compensation which he has paid, or by award has become obligated to pay, with a reasonable allowance for an attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, and his costs, such damages shall be assessed in his favor; but if the damages shall be more than sufficient to reimburse him, damages shall be assessed in his favor sufficient to reimburse him for the money he has paid, with a reasonable allowance for an attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, and his costs, and the excess shall be assessed in favor of the injured employee. No compromise with such third person by either employer or employee shall be binding upon or affect the rights of the other, unless assented to by him.

Sec. 5347 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). Any employee who has sustained an injury in the course of his employment shall forthwith notify his employer, or some person representing him, of such injury; and on his failure to give such notice, the commissioner may reduce the award of compensation proportionately to any prejudice which he shall find the employer has sustained by reason of such failure; but the burden of proof with respect to such prejudice shall rest upon the employer. The employer, as soon as he has knowledge of any such injury, shall provide a competent physician or surgeon to attend the injured employee, and, in addition, shall furnish such medical and surgical aid or hospital service as such physician or surgeon shall deem reasonable or necessary. In the event of the failure of the employer promptly to provide such physician or surgeon or medical, surgical or hospital service, the injured employee may provide such physician or surgeon or medical, surgical or hospital service at the expense of the employer; or, at his option, the injured employee may refuse the medical, surgical and hospital service provided by his employer and provide the same at his own expense. The commissioner may, when he finds that good reasons exist therefor, authorize or direct a change of such physician or surgeon, or such hospital service. If it shall appear to the commissioner that an injured employee has refused to accept and failed to provide such reasonable medical, surgical, or hospital service, all rights of compensation under the provisions of said chapter shall be suspended during such refusal and failure. The pecuniary liability of the employer for the medical, surgical, or hospital service herein required shall be limited to such charges as prevail in the same community or similar communities for similar treatment of injured persons of a like standard of living when such treatment is paid for by the injured persons. In the case of a seaman employed upon any enrolled vessel of the United States and entitled, by the provisions of any law of the United States, to medical or surgical aid or hospital service without charge, such medical or surgical aid or hospital service may be substituted for that provided for in this section so far as it may answer the requirements of the provisions of this section, but nothing herein shall excuse the employer in such cases from giving emergency treatment when required; and any employer desiring to take advantage of this provision shall ascertain that such services as are provided for by the laws of the United States are rendered. If, after due knowledge that an employee has suffered injury arising out of and in the course of his employment, an employer has failed to provide medical care promptly, and the injured employee has provided such medical care, then the employer shall not compel the employee to change his physician, surgeon, or hospital, except upon the order or approval of the commissioner.

Waiting time.

SEC. 5348 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). No compensation shall be payable for total or partial incapacity under the provisions of chapter 284 of the general statutes on account of any injury which does not incapacitate the injured employee for a period of more than seven days from earning full wages at his customary employment; but if incapacity extends beyond a period of seven days compensation shall begin at the expiration of the first seven days of total or partial incapacity: Provided, If such incapacity extends beyond a period of four weeks, compensation shall begin from the day of the injury. In all contracts between parties subject to part B, the injured employee shall be entitled to full wages, for the entire day of the injury and said day shall not be counted as a day of incapacity.

Death benefits.

SEC. 5349 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). Compensation shall be paid on account of death resulting from injuries within two years from date of injury as follows: (a) For burial expenses, $100; (b) to those wholly dependent upon the deceased employee at the time of his injury, a weekly compensation equal to half of the average weekly earnings of the deceased at the time of his injury; (c) in case there is no one wholly dependent upon the deceased employee, to those partially dependent upon the deceased employee at the time of his injury, a weekly compensation equal to half of the average weekly earnings of the deceased at the time of the injury: Provided, The amount so paid shall not be more than $18 weekly, nor less than $5 weekly; nor if the average weekly sum contributed by the deceased at the time of the injury to those partially dependent be more than $5 weekly, not more than said sum so contributed; but the compensation payable on account of death resulting from injuries shall in no case be more than $18 or less than $5 weekly, and such compensation shall not continue longer than 312 weeks after death. The compensation on account of death payable under the provisions of chapter 284 of the general statutes to a widow or widower of a deceased employee shall not cease with the death of such widow or widower, but, upon her or his death within the period during which such compensation is payable, it shall continue to be paid for the remainder of such period to the other dependents of the deceased employee as defined in section 5388 of the general statutes.

Dependents.

SEC. 5350. The following persons shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee: (a) A wife upon a husband with whom she lives at the time of his injury or from whom she receives support regularly; (b) a husband upon a wife with whom he lives at the time of her injury or from whom he receives support regularly; (c) any child under the age of 18 years, or over said age but physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, upon the parent with whom he is living or from whom he is receiving support regularly at the time of the injury of such parent, there being no surviving dependent parent. In case there is more than one child thus dependent the death benefit shall be divided equally among them. In all other cases, questions of dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact, as the fact may be at the time of the injury. In such other cases, if there is more than one person wholly dependent, the compensation in case of death shall be divided equally among them, and persons partially dependent, if any, shall receive no part thereof. If there is no person wholly dependent and more than one person partially dependent, the compensation in case of death shall be divided among them according to the relative degree of their dependence. For the purpose of this chapter the dependence of a widow or widower of a deceased employee shall be construed to terminate with remarriage, but upon remarriage within the period during which such compensation is payable, it shall continue to be paid for the remainder of such period to other dependents of the deceased employee, as defined in section 5388: Provided, There are any such dependents. The presumptive dependence of a child as hereinbefore defined, except a child physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, shall be construed to terminate at the age of 18 years. Compensation under the provisions of this chapter shall be paid to alien dependents in half the amounts indicated in this chapter unless such alien dependents are residents of the United States, or its dependencies, or Canada, such alienage to be determined as of the date of the injury. The other half of the normal compensation may be paid in accordance with the rules of apportionment herein provided to such persons resident in the United States, or its dependencies, or Canada, if any there be, as would be entitled to compensation were there no such nonresident alien dependents.

Sec. 5351. In case the injury results in total incapacity to work, there shall be paid to the injured employee a weekly compensation equal to half of his average weekly earnings at the time of the injury; but the compensation shall in no case be more than $14 or less than $5 weekly; and such compensation shall not continue longer than the period of total incapacity, or in any event longer than 520 weeks. The following injuries of any person shall be considered as causing total incapacity and compensation shall be paid accordingly: (a) Total and permanent loss of sight in both eyes, or the reduction to one-tenth or less of normal vision with glasses; (b) the loss of both feet at or above the ankle; (c) the loss of both hands at or above the wrist; (d) the loss of one foot at or above the ankle; (e) any injury resulting in permanent and complete paralysis of the legs or arms or of one leg and one arm; (f) any injury resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity.

Total disability.

Sec. 5352 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). In case the injury results in partial incapacity, there shall be paid to the injured employee a weekly compensation equal to half the difference between his average weekly earnings before the injury and the amount he is able to earn thereafter. Such compensation shall in no case be more than $18 weekly and shall continue during the period of partial incapacity, but no longer than 520 weeks. If the employer procures for an injured employee employment suitable to his capacity the wages offered in such employment shall be taken as the earning capacity of the injured employee. In case of the following injuries the compensation, in addition to the usual compensation for total incapacity, but in lieu of all other payments for compensation, shall be half of the average weekly earnings of the injured employee, prior to such injury for the terms, respectively, indicated, but in no case more than $18 or less than $5 weekly: (a) For the loss of one arm at or above the elbow, or the complete and permanent loss of the use of one arm, 208 weeks; (b) for the loss of one hand at or above the wrist, or the complete and permanent loss of the use of one hand, 156 weeks; (c) for the loss of one leg at or above the knee, or the complete and permanent loss of the use of one leg, 182 weeks; (d) for the loss of one foot at or above the ankle, or the complete and permanent loss of the use of one foot, 130 weeks; (e) for the complete and permanent loss of hearing in both ears, 156 weeks; (f) for the complete and permanent loss of hearing in one ear, 52 weeks; (g) for the complete and permanent loss of sight in one eye, or the reduction in one eye to one-tenth or less of normal vision with glasses, 104 weeks; (h) for the loss of, or the complete and permanent loss of the use of, a thumb, 38 weeks; (i) for the loss of, or the complete and permanent loss of the use of, a first finger or a great toe, 38 weeks; (j) for the loss of, or the complete and permanent loss of the use of, a second finger, 30 weeks; a third finger, 25 weeks; a fourth finger, 20 weeks; (k) for the loss of, or the loss of the use of, any toe except the great toe, 13 weeks. The loss of, or the loss of the use of, one phalanx of a thumb shall be construed as half of the loss of the thumb; the loss of, or the loss of the use of, one phalanx of a finger shall be construed as one-third of the loss of the finger; the loss of, or the loss of the use of, two phalanges of a finger shall be construed as two-thirds of the loss of the finger; the loss of, or the loss of the use of, one phalanx of a great toe shall be construed as half of the loss of a great toe; and the loss of the greater part of a phalanx shall be construed as the loss of a phalanx; and shall be compensated accordingly. In case the injury shall consist of the loss of a substantial part of a member resulting in a permanent partial loss of use of the member, or in case the injury results in a permanent partial loss of function, the commissioner may, in his discretion, in lieu of other compensation, award to the injured person such a proportion of the sum herein provided for the total loss or loss of use of such

- member or for incapacity or both as shall represent the proportion of total loss or loss of use found to exist, and any voluntary agreement submitted in which the basis of settlement is such proportionate payment may, if otherwise conformable to the chapter, be approved by the commissioner in his discretion. The word "member" shall include all portions of the human body referred to in subsections (a) to (k) inclusive.
- Computation of earnings. Sec. 5353 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). For the purposes of said chapter, the average weekly wage shall be ascertained by dividing the total wages received by the injured workman from the employer in whose service he is injured during the 26 calendar weeks immediately preceding that during which he was injured, by the number of said calendar weeks during which, or any portion of which, said workman was actually employed by said employer: Provided, In making such computation, absence for seven consecutive calendar days, although not in the same calendar week, shall be considered as absence for a calendar week. When the employment commenced other than at the beginning of a calendar week, such calendar week and the wages earned during such week shall be excluded in making the above computation. When the employment, previous to injury as provided above, is computed to be less than a net period of two calendar weeks, then his weekly wage shall be considered to be equivalent to the average weekly wage prevailing in the same or similar employment in the same locality at the time of injury. For the purpose of determining the amount of compensation to be paid in the case of a minor under the age of 18 years who has sustained an injury entitling him to compensation for total or partial incapacity for a period of 52 or more weeks, or to specific indemnity for any of the injuries enumerated in subsections (a) to (k), inclusive, or in any other portion following subdivision (k), of the preceding section, the commissioner may add 50 per cent to his average weekly wage.
- Advance payments. Sec. 5354. In fixing the amount of any compensation under this chapter due allowance shall be made for any sum which the employer may have paid to any injured employee or to the dependents on account of the injury, except such sums as the employer may have expended or directed to be expended for medical, surgical, or hospital service.
- Review. Sec. 5355. Any award of, or voluntary agreement concerning compensation made under the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to modification, upon the request of either party and in accordance with the procedure for original determinations, whenever it shall appear to the compensation commissioner that the incapacity of an injured employee has increased, decreased or ceased, or that the measure of dependence, on account of which the compensation is paid, has changed, or that changed conditions of fact have arisen which necessitate a change of such agreement or award in order properly to carry out the spirit of this chapter. The commissioner shall also have the same power to open and modify an award as any court of the State has to open and modify a judgment of such court. The compensation commissioner shall retain jurisdiction over claims for compensation, awards, and voluntary agreements, for any proper action thereon, during the whole compensation period applicable to the injury in question.
- Commissioners. Sec. 5356 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). There shall continue to be five compensation commissioners, one for each of the five congressional districts as constituted October 1, 1913. On or before January 1 of each year the governor shall appoint a competent person to be compensation commissioner for the term of five years. Said commissioners shall be sworn to a faithful performance of their duties. Vacancies occurring during a term shall be filled by the governor. After due notice and public hearing the governor may remove any commissioner for cause and the good of the public service.
- Powers. Sec. 5357. Each commissioner shall, for the purposes of this chapter, have power to summon and examine under oath such witnesses, and may direct the production of, and examine or cause to be produced or examined, such books, records, vouchers, memoranda, documents, letters, contracts, or other papers in relation to any matter at issue as he may find proper, and shall have the same powers in reference thereto as are vested in magistrates taking depositions. He shall have power to certify to official acts, and all powers necessary to enable him to perform the duties imposed upon him by the provisions of this chapter. The commissioners shall reside in the districts for which they are severally appointed, and each shall have jurisdiction of all claims and questions arising in such district under part B of this chapter. The commissioner for the first congressional district shall maintain an office at some convenient location in the city of Hartford; the commissioner for the second district, an office similarly located in the city of Norwich; the commissioner for the third district, in the city of New Haven; the commissioner for the fourth district, in the city of Bridgeport; and the commissioner for the fifth district, in the city of Waterbury. Each commissioner shall keep his office open during reasonable business hours of every day except Sundays and legal holidays, but may hear and decide cases at any other place within his district. In case a commissioner is disqualified or temporarily incapacitated from hearing any matter, he shall designate some other commissioner to hear and decide such matter, and such other commissioner shall possess the same jurisdiction and power, for the purpose of such hearing, as such incapacitated or disqualified commissioner. The superior court, on application of a commissioner or the commission, or of the attorney general, may enforce, by appropriate decree or process, any provision of this chapter or any proper order of a commissioner or the commission rendered in pursuance of any such provision.

Residence.

Enforcement of orders.

Sec. 5358 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). Acting together, the commissioners shall have power to adopt and change such common rules, procedure, and forms as they shall deem expedient for the purposes of said chapter. Biennially the commissioners shall prepare and submit to the governor a report of their doings, including such recommendations as they shall think proper for the improvement of said chapter or its administration.

Regulations.

Sec. 5359 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). Every employer who has accepted the provisions of part B of said chapter shall keep a record of such injuries sustained by his employees in the course of their employment as result in incapacity for one day or more; and every such employer shall send to the commissioner, in duplicate, each week, or oftener if so directed, such report of such injuries as the rules prescribed by the board of commissioners shall determine, with such notices of claims for compensation as have been served upon him within one week, in conformity with the provisions of section 5360 of the general statutes. No other report of injuries to employees shall be required by any department or office of the State from such employers as have accepted part B. The duplicates of such reports shall be transmitted to the commissioner of labor and factory inspection.

Reports of accidents.

Sec. 5360. No proceedings for compensation under the provisions of this chapter shall be maintained unless a written notice of claim for compensation is made within one year from the date of the injury. Such notice shall state in simple language the date, place, and nature of the injury, the name and address of the injured employee, and the person in whose interest compensation is claimed. Notices may be served in the same manner as notices of withdrawal from the provisions of part B; and, in cases of fatal injuries, notice may be served either by any one of the dependents under the provisions of this chapter as provided in section 5343 or by the legal representative of the deceased employee; but where there has been a hearing or a written request for a hearing or an assignment for hearing within one year from the date of the injury, or where a voluntary agreement has been submitted within said period of one year, no want of such notice of claim shall be a bar to the maintenance of proceedings, and in no case shall any defect or inaccuracy of such notice of claim be a bar to the maintenance of proceedings unless the employer shall show that he was ignorant of the injury and was prejudiced thereby. Upon satisfactory showing of such ignorance and prejudice, the employer shall receive allowance to the extent of such prejudice. Within one week after the receipt by an employer of such notice of claim for compensation, he shall report the substantial facts of such notice to the commissioner.

Claims.

Sec. 5361 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). If an employer and an injured employee, or in case of fatal injury his legal representative, shall, at a date not earlier than the expiration of the waiting period, reach an agreement in regard to compensation, such agreement shall, by the employer, be submitted in writing to the commissioner, with a statement of the time, place, and nature of the injury upon which it is based; and if said commissioner shall find such agreement to conform to the provisions of said chapter in every regard he shall so approve it. Every agreement thus approved shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court for the county in which the injury occurred if such injury occurred within this State, otherwise in the office of the clerk of the superior court for the county in which the office of the commissioner making the award is located. A copy of such agreement shall be retained by the commissioner, and a like copy delivered to each of the parties, and thereafter it shall be as binding upon both parties as an award by the commissioner. Before discontinuing payment on account of total or partial incapacity under any such agreement, the employer, if it is claimed by or on behalf of the injured person that his incapacity still continues, shall notify the commissioner and the employee of the discontinuance of such payments, with the date of such discontinuance and the reason therefor, and until such notices are sent to the commissioner and said employee the liability for such payments shall continue, unless otherwise ordered by the commissioner.

Medical examinations.

SEC. 5362. At any time while claiming or receiving compensation, upon the reasonable request of the employer or at the direction of the commissioner, an injured employee shall submit himself to examination by a reputable practicing physician or surgeon provided and paid by the employer, with a view to a determination of the nature of the injury and the incapacity resultant therefrom. At any such examination the injured employee shall be allowed to secure the attendance of any reputable practicing physician or surgeon provided and paid by himself. The refusal of an injured employee thus to submit himself to a reasonable examination shall suspend his right to compensation during such refusal.

Hearings.

SEC. 5363. If an employer and his injured employee, or his legal representative as the case may be shall fail to reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this chapter, either party may notify the commissioner of the failure. Upon such notice, or upon other knowledge that an agreement has not been reached in a case in which compensation is claimed, the commissioner shall appoint an early hearing upon the matter, giving both parties due notice of time and place not less than 10 days prior to the date appointed. Hearings shall be held, if practicable, in the town in the State in which the injured employee resides; and, if such place is not practicable, in such other convenient place as the commissioner may prescribe. Sufficient notice of such hearing may be given to the parties in interest by a brief written statement in ordinary terms of the date, place, and nature of the injury upon which the claim for compensation is based.

hearings.

SEC. 5364. Both parties may appear at any hearing, either in person or by attorney or other accredited representative, and no formal pleadings shall be required beyond such informal notices as the commissioner shall approve. In all cases and hearings under the provisions of this chapter the commissioner shall proceed, so far as possible, in accordance with the rules of equity. He shall not be bound by the ordinary common law or statutory rules of evidence or procedure, but may make inquiry in such manner, through oral testimony or written and printed records, as is best calculated to ascertain the substantial rights of the parties and carry out justly the spirit of this chapter. No fees shall be taxed or charged to either party by the commissioner in connection with any hearing or other procedure, but the commissioner shall furnish at cost certified copies of any testimony, award, or other matter which may be of record in his office. Witnesses subpoenaed by the commissioner shall be allowed such fees and traveling expenses as are allowed in civil actions, to be paid by the party in whose interest such witnesses are subpoenaed.

Awards.

SEC. 5365 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). As soon as may be after the conclusion of any hearing the commissioner shall send to each party a written copy of his findings and award, and shall file a third copy in his office. The original award shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court for the county in which the injury occurred if such injury occurred within this State. If such injury occurred outside of the State and under such circumstances as to authorize an award under the provisions hereof, the original award may be filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court in the county in which the office of the commissioner making the award is located. If no appeal from his decision is taken by either party within 10 days thereafter, such finding and award shall be final and may be enforced in the same manner as a judgment of the superior court. The superior court is authorized to issue execution upon any uncontested or final award of a commissioner in the same manner as in cases of judgments rendered in the superior court. In cases where, through the fault or neglect of the employer or insurer, adjustments of compensation have been unduly delayed, or where, through such fault or neglect, payments have been unduly delayed, the commissioner may include in his award interest at 6 per centum per annum. In cases where there has been delay in either adjustment or payment, which delay has not been due to the fault or neglect of the employer or insurer, whether such delay was caused by appeals or otherwise, the commissioner may allow interest at such rate, not to exceed 6 per centum per annum, as may be fair and reasonable, taking into account whatever advantage the employer or insurer, as the case may be, may have had from the use of the money, the burden of showing that the rate in such case should be less than 6 per centum per annum to be upon the employer or insurer.

SEC. 5366 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). At any time within 10 days after entry of such finding and award by the commissioner either party may appeal therefrom to the superior court for the county in which the award was filed. The clerk of said court shall notify the adverse party of such appeal. No bond for prosecution shall be required on any such appeal unless property of the defendant is attached therein. Actions brought to the superior court under the provisions of this section shall be privileged in respect to their assignment for trial over all other actions except writs of habeas corpus and actions brought by or on behalf of the State, including informations on the relation of private individuals. No costs shall be taxed in favor of either party on any such appeal either in the superior court or in the supreme court of errors, nor shall either party be liable to pay any fees or costs of any kind whatsoever, except the record fee on appeal to the supreme court of errors: Provided, Whenever any appeal shall be taken to the superior court from the finding and award of a compensation commissioner, and such appeal shall be found by said court to be either frivolous, or taken for the purpose of vexation or delay, said court may tax costs in its discretion against the person so taking such appeal. When any appeal is pending, and shall appear to the court that any part of the award appealed from is not affected by the issues raised by such appeal, the court may, on motion or of its own motion, render a judgment directing compliance with any portions of such award not affected by such appeal. In all appeals where one of the parties is not represented by counsel, and where the party taking the appeal shall not claim the case for trial within a reasonable time from the return day, the court may of its own motion affirm the award. When an appeal is taken to the superior court the clerk thereof shall forthwith notify the commissioner from whose award the appeal is taken, in writing, of such fact, and shall thereafter notify such commissioner, in writing, of any action of the court thereupon and of the final disposition of said appeal, whether by judgment, withdrawal, or otherwise, and shall, upon the decision of the appeal, furnish the commissioner with a copy of such decision.

SEC. 5367. When he finds it just or necessary the commissioner may approve or direct the commutation, in whole or in part, of weekly compensations under the provisions of this chapter into monthly or quarterly payments, or into a single lump sum, which may be paid to the one then entitled to the compensation, and such commutation shall be binding upon all persons who may be entitled to compensation for the injury in question. In any such case of commutation a true equivalence of value shall be maintained, with due discount of sums payable in the future; and when commutation is made into a single lump sum the commissioner may direct that it be paid into any savings bank, trust company, or life insurance company which is authorized to do business within this State, to be held in trust for the beneficiary or beneficiaries under the provisions of this chapter and paid in conformity with the provisions of this chapter.

Substitute schemes.

SEC. 5368. With the approval of the State insurance commissioner any employer subject to the provisions of part B may enter into an agreement with his employees to provide a system of compensation, benefit, and insurance in lieu of the compensation and insurance provided by this chapter. No such substitute system shall be approved unless it confers benefits upon injured employees at least equivalent to the benefits provided by this chapter, nor shall any such substitute system be approved which contains an obligation of employees to join in it as a condition of employment, or which in that case does not contain equitable provision for the withdrawal of employees from it and the distribution of its assets. If any such system requires contributions from employees it shall not be approved unless it confers benefits in addition to those provided under this chapter at least commensurate with such contributions. The insurance commissioner, having given his approval of such substitute system, shall have over it all the jurisdiction given him by section 4064 over insurance companies. He may withdraw his approval upon reasonable notice to the employer and order a distribution of the assets, subject to the right of any party in interest to take an appeal to the superior court for Hartford County.

payments.

SEC. 5369. Every employer subject to part B who shall not furnish to the commissioner satisfactory proof of his solvency and financial ability to pay directly to injured employees or other beneficiaries the compensation provided by this chapter shall insure his full liability under part B in one or both the following ways: (1) By filing with the insurance commissioner in form acceptable to him security guaranteeing the performance of the obligations of this chapter by said employer; or, (2) by insuring his full liability under part B in such stock or mutual companies or associations as are or may be authorized to take such risks in this State, or by such combination of the above-mentioned two methods as he may choose, subject to the approval of the insurance commissioner.

Provisions of policies.

SEC. 5370. Every policy insuring the payment of compensations under this chapter shall contain a clause to the effect that as between the employee and the insurer notice and knowledge of the occurrence of injury by the insured shall be deemed notice and knowledge by the insurer, that jurisdiction of the insured for the purposes of this chapter shall be jurisdiction of the insurer, and that the insurer shall in all things be bound by and subject to the findings, judgments, and awards rendered against such insured.

Same.

SEC. 5371. No policy of insurance against liability under part B except as provided in section 5369, shall be made unless the same shall cover the entire liability of the employer thereunder and shall contain an agreement by the insurer that, in case the insured shall become insolvent or be discharged in bankruptcy during the period that the policy is in operation, or the compensation, or any part of it, is due and unpaid, or in case an execution upon a judgment for compensation is returned unsatisfied, an injured employee or other person entitled to compensation under the provisions of this chapter, may enforce his claim to compensation against the insurer to the same extent that the insured could have enforced his claim against such insurer had he paid compensation. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the issuance of an insurance policy, insuring any employer having ordinarily and regularly less than five employees against such liability under part B as he may incur by reason of employing five or more employees at irregular intervals or from time to time.

Waivers.

SEC. 5372. No contract, expressed or implied, no rule, regulation, or other device shall in any manner relieve any employer, in whole or in part, of any obligation created by this chapter, except as herein set forth.

Sec. 5373. When any employee affected by the provisions of this chapter, or any person entitled to compensation hereunder, shall be a minor, or mentally incompetent, his parent, or guardian duly appointed, may, on his behalf, perform any act or duty required or exercise any right conferred by the provisions of this chapter with the same effect as if such person were legally capable to act in his own behalf and had so acted. The commissioner may, for just cause shown, authorize or direct the payment of compensation directly to a minor, or to some person nominated by the minor and approved by the commissioner, which person shall act in behalf of such minor.

Incompetents.

Sec. 5374. All fees of attorneys, physicians or other persons for services under this chapter shall be subject to the approval of the commissioner.

Fees.

Sec. 5375. All sums due for compensation under the provisions of this chapter shall be exempt from levy, attachment, and execution and shall be nonassignable before or after award. The rights of compensation granted by this chapter, reckoned at their present value, shall have the same preference against the assets of an employer as may be allowed by law to a claim for the unpaid wages of workmen earned within three months.

Status of payments.

Sec. 5376. Compensations payable under this chapter shall be paid at such particular times in the week and in such manner as the commissioner may order, and shall be paid directly to the persons entitled to receive them unless the commissioner, for good reason, shall order payment to those entitled to act for such persons.

Mode of payment.

Sec. 5377. Any notice under this chapter required to be served upon employer, employee, or commissioner may be served in the manner prescribed in section 5343, unless the circumstances of the case or the rules of the commission shall direct otherwise.

Service of notice.

Sec. 5378. The town clerks of the several towns are authorized and directed to receive from the commission such blank forms as may be prepared for use under this chapter and to distribute the same to persons making proper application for them.

Duty of town clerks.

Sec. 5379. This chapter shall not affect the liability of employers to employees engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, for death or injury in case the laws of the United States provide for compensation or for liability for such death or injury.

Interstate commerce.

Sec. 5380. If an employer has accepted the provisions of part B of this chapter and thereafter fails to conform to any provision of section 5369, an employee shall have the option to elect, either to claim his right to compensation under the terms of this chapter, or to bring an action to recover damages under the terms of part A, and if such employer be a corporation or joint stock association, such action may be brought against any or all the directors of such corporation, or joint stock association, who shall be individually and jointly and severally liable for any damage suffered by such employee. If the injury sustained results in death, the option to elect shall be exercised by those persons entitled to compensation under the terms of section 5349. In the event of a failure by such persons to agree upon the election, the commissioner shall decide and his decision shall be final. The option to elect to bring an action to recover damages under the terms of part A shall be exercised by notifying the employer within 30 days after receiving the injury upon which such claim is based, and such action shall be brought within one year from the date of such injury. If the employer is not so notified, there shall remain only the right to compensation under the terms of this chapter. If an employer has accepted the provisions of part B of this chapter and thereafter fails to conform to any provision of part B, he shall be fined not more than $100 for each such failure.

Failure to comply with act.

Sec. 5381 (as amended, ch. 142, acts of 1919). Any employer who has complied with the provisions of section 5368 of the general statutes by entering into an agreement with his employees to provide a system of compensation, benefit, and insurance in lieu of the compensation and insurance provided by chapter 284 of the general statutes, which agreement has been approved by the insurance commissioner; or any employer who has complied with the provisions of section 5369 of the general statutes by filing with the insurance commissioner security guaranteeing the performance of his obligations under chapter 284 of the general statutes; or by insuring his full liability, or by a combination of the two last-named methods approved by the insurance commissioner, may file in the office of the commissioner, who may have jurisdiction in case of injury, a certificate issuing out of the office of the insurance commissioner stating that such substitute system has been approved or that such security guaranteeing the performance of the obligations of said chapter has been filed with and accepted by said insurance commissioner, or that a combination of the methods contemplated in section 5369 of the general statutes has been approved. Any employer who has insured his full liability may file a certificate, in the manner prescribed in section 5414 of the general statutes, setting forth such fact and stating the date of expiration of such insurance, which certificate shall thereupon become a part of the records of the office of said compensation commissioner.

Attachments.

Sec. 5382. When any person shall present in writing to the commissioner a claim for compensation, either for injury sustained by himself arising out of and in the course of his employment or for injury resulting in the death of some person of whom he is an alleged dependent, he may ask that a writ of attachment issue to secure the payment of such claim or claims for compensation as may arise out of such injury. Unless it shall appear from the records of said commissioner that there has been a compliance with the provisions of section 5368 or 5369, which compliance is then effective, said commissioner may issue a writ of attachment in the manner and form of writs of attachment in civil actions, and said commissioner is vested with the same jurisdiction as authorities authorized to issue writs of attachment in civil actions. Should any such writ be issued and should it thereafter appear to the satisfaction of the commissioner that there has been a compliance with the provisions of section 5368 or 5369, which compliance was then effective and applicable to the injury in question, the commissioner may thereupon vacate such writ of attachment on the payment by the employer of the expense actually incurred under said writ of attachment. The several compensation commissioners are vested with the authority of the various courts to dissolve attachments made under the authority hereinbefore conferred, and on the dissolution of an attachment may require the substitution of a bond in the same manner as any court upon the dissolution of attachments in civil actions.

Reference to supreme court.

Sec. 5383 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). When, in any case arising under the provisions of said chapter, the superior court shall be of opinion that the decision involves principles of law which are not free from reasonable doubt, and which public interest requires shall be determined by the supreme court of errors, in order that a definite rule be established applicable to future cases, said court may, on its own motion and without any agreement or act of the parties or their counsel, reserve such case for the opinion of the supreme court of errors. Upon a reservation so made, no costs shall be taxed in favor of either party, and no entry fee, record fee, judgment fee or other clerk's fee in either court shall be taxed. Where the commissioner shall find that a claim before him involves a doubtful question of law, which the public interest requires should be finally and definitely determined, he may find the facts as in other cases and make his award, indicating that it is pro forma. A pro forma award shall be of the same effect as an award in ordinary cases except in the following particulars: On the filing of a pro forma award the question shall come before the superior court as though an appeal had been taken, and said court shall thereupon reserve the case for the opinion of the supreme court of errors in the manner herein indicated: Provided, In the opinion of the superior court the principles of law involved in the decision are in fact free from reasonable doubt, and the public interest does not in fact require that they be determined by the supreme court of errors, the superior court may, in its discretion, hear and determine the controversy as in other cases. Whenever a compensation commissioner shall have reason to believe that any employer who has furnished, in accordance with the provisions of section 5369 of the general statutes, satisfactory proof of his solvency and financial ability to pay compensation direct to injured employees or other beneficiaries, is dilatory in investigating or adjusting claims, or making payments, or fails to comply with the provisions of said chapter or the rules, procedure and forms adopted by the commission, he may, after due hearing, find the facts, and, in case he finds proven the neglect or misconduct hereinbefore set forth, may revoke any certificate which may have been granted to such employer, even though the solvency and financial condition of such employer be beyond question.

SEC. 5384. Whenever any person having a contract of employment, or desiring to enter into a contract of employment, shall have any physical defect which imposes upon his employer or prospective employer an undue or unusual hazard, it shall be permissible for such person to waive in writing for himself or his dependents, or both, any rights to compensation under the provisions of this chapter for any personal injury arising out of and in the course of his employment which may be found by the commissioner having jurisdiction to be directly due to such physical defect. No such waiver shall become effective unless the physical defect in question shall be plainly described therein, nor until the commissioner having jurisdiction shall find that the person signing such waiver fully understands the meaning thereof, nor until such commissioner shall, in writing, approve thereof and furnish each of the parties thereto with a copy thereof. No such waiver shall be a bar to a claim by the person signing the same, or his dependents, for compensation for any injury arising out of and in the course of his employment, which injury shall not be found to be directly due to the particular condition described therein.

Waivers allowed, when.

SEC. 5385 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). Whenever the compensation commissioners, or a majority of them, shall find that any insurance company or association insuring the liability of an employer under the provisions of said chapter is conducting such business improperly or is dilatory in investigating and adjusting claims or making payments, or fails to comply with the provisions of said chapter or the rules, procedure and forms adopted by the commission, then said commissioners, or a majority of them, shall notify the insurance commissioner, in writing, setting forth the facts, and thereupon the insurance commissioner shall fix a time and place for a hearing thereon, giving reasonable notice to the commissioners and to such company or association of such hearing, and if he shall find the allegations to be true, he may either suspend for a time or revoke the license of such company or association to transact such business in this State. Whenever the compensation commissioners, or a majority of them, shall have reason to believe that any employer who has filed with the insurance commissioner security for the performance of the obligations of said chapter in accordance with section 5369 of the general statutes, is dilatory in investigating or adjusting claims, or in making payments, or fails to comply with the provisions of said chapter, or the rules, procedure and forms adopted by the commission, they may notify the insurance commissioner, in writing, setting forth the facts, and thereupon the insurance commissioner shall fix the time and place for a hearing thereon, giving reasonable notice to the commissioners and to such employer, and if he shall find the allegations to be true, then after ten days from the notice of such finding to such employer, the compliance of such employer with the terms of section 5369 of the general statutes shall be, as to any future injuries, null and void.

Power over insurance companies.

SEC. 5386. Whenever any fees or expenses are, under the provisions of this chapter, to be paid by the employer or insurer, and not by the employee, the commissioner may make an award directly in favor of the person entitled, which award shall be filed in court, shall be subject to appeal, and shall be enforceable by execution as in other cases. Such award may be combined with an award for compensation in favor of or against the injured employee or the dependent or dependents of a deceased employee or be the subject of an award covering only such fees and expenses.

Fees and expenses.

SEC. 5387. The comptroller is directed to cause a digest of the decisions of the compensation commissioners to be compiled, either in one volume or in parts, to include also decisions of the superior court in compensation cases and decisions or references to decisions of the supreme court of errors in such cases, and to have published 2,500

Digest of decisions.

copies thereof for distribution by him as follows: To the commissioners, 700 copies; to the State librarian, 300 copies; and to the secretary of the State, for sale by him at cost, 1,500 copies.

Definitions.

SEC. 5388 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). Terms in said chapter are defined as follows: "Commissioner" shall mean that compensation commissioner who has jurisdiction in the matter referred to in the context. "Commission" shall mean the five commissioners, or a majority of them, acting as a board. "Dependents" shall mean members of the injured employee's family or next of kin who were wholly or partly dependent upon the earnings of the employee at the time of the injury. "Employee" shall mean any person who has entered into or works under any contract of service or apprenticeship with an employer, whether such contract contemplated the performance of duties within or without the State, but shall not be construed to include either (a) an outworker, or (b) one whose employment is of a casual nature, and who is employed otherwise than for the purposes of the employer's trade or business, or (c) a member of the employer's family dwelling in his house. "Employer" shall mean any person, corporation, firm, partnership, or joint-stock association, the State and any public corporation within the State using the services of another for pay; it shall include also the legal representatives of any such employer. Masculine terms shall include males, females, and legal persons. "Outworker" shall mean a person to whom articles or materials are given to be treated in any way on premises not under the control or management of the person who gave them out. As the natural interpretation of the context may require, singular terms may be taken to include the plural, and plural the singular. The word "injury" as the same is used in said chapter shall be construed to include any disease which is due to causes peculiar to the occupation and which is not of a contagious, communicable, or mental nature.

SEC. 5389. [Repealed by ch. 142, sec. 20, acts of 1919.]

Provisions severable.

SEC. 5390. In case any provision of this chapter shall be held by the courts to be unconstitutional and invalid, the invalidity of such provision shall not affect any other provision which can be given effect without the provision held invalid.

PART C—EMPLOYERS' MUTUAL INSURANCE.

Mutual associations authorized.

SECTION 5391. With the approval of the insurance commissioner, employers who have accepted the provisions of part B of this chapter and are bound to pay compensations to their employees thereunder, may associate themselves, in accordance with the law for the formation of corporations without capital stock, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining mutual associations to insure their liabilities under this chapter, but no such association shall be formed to include employers not in the same or similar trade or business or in trades or businesses with substantially similar degrees of hazard of injury to employees.

To be approved.

SEC. 5392. With a view to his approval, the insurance commissioner may require the incorporators of any such association to include in their proposed certificate of incorporation such lawful provisions for the regulation of the affairs of the association and the definition of its powers and the powers of its officers, directors, and incorporators as shall satisfy him that it is well designed and wisely adapted to its proposed purposes. When such a certificate, in form and substance acceptable to the insurance commissioner, has been approved by and filed with the secretary of the State, the incorporators shall forthwith cause copies thereof to be filed in the offices of the insurance commissioner and each of the compensation commissioners.

Membership.

SEC. 5393. Membership in such associations shall be limited to such employers as are subject to part B of this chapter, and each association shall have power, by appropriate by-laws, to provide for the admission, suspension, withdrawal, or expulsion of members.

Control.

SEC. 5394. Except as herein otherwise provided, such associations shall be subject to the same regulation and control as is or may be imposed by law upon other corporations or associations taking similar risks in this State, and over them the insurance commissioner shall have all the jurisdiction given him by section 4064 over insurance companies.

Sec. 5395. No policies shall be issued by any such association until members in such numbers and with such numbers of employees as the insurance commissioner may decide will give a fair diffusion of risks shall have obligated themselves to take policies immediately upon their authorization, nor shall any policies be issued except such as the insurance commissioner shall have approved as conforming in all respects to the requirements of this chapter. Conformably to the provisions of section 5369 policies may be issued covering claims only in excess of a certain amount. If at any time, by the retirement of members, reduction of number of employees, or other cause, the membership of any association shall appear to the insurance commissioner no longer to afford a fair diffusion of risks, he may suspend or forbid the further issue of policies until the former conditions of the association have been restored.

Policies to issue when.

Sec. 5396. The affairs of all associations incorporated under this chapter shall be managed by such officers and directors as may be chosen in manner prescribed by the by-laws of the association: Provided, Every member shall be entitled to cast at least one ballot in all elections and votes; that any member having had for six months an average of more than 100 and not more than 500 employees to whom he is bound to pay compensation under this chapter shall be entitled to cast two ballots; that each additional 500 employees shall entitle such member to an additional ballot; and that no member shall be entitled to cast more than eight ballots.

Officers.

Votes.

Sec. 5397. Each association shall have power to prescribe and enforce reasonable rules for safety regulations on the premises of its members, and for that purpose its inspectors shall have free access to all such premises during regular working hours.

Rules for safety.

Sec. 5398. Each association shall have power to determine the comparative premium rates for each occupation or risk insured by it and to prescribe rates of cash premiums sufficient to cover the current cost. Said premium rates shall prevail for the fiscal year of the association, but annually they may be changed at any time by the directors. The current cost herein specified shall be such an amount as is estimated to cover the expenses and the claims or portions of claims payable within the same fiscal year within which they originated. Members of each association shall be required to pay yearly in advance cash premiums for current costs, and in addition thereto an amount in negotiable notes sufficient to maintain a reserve equal to that required of stock or commercial casualty companies by the general statutes for similar classes of risks. These notes shall be payable on the call of the treasurer of the association, as they may be required to meet estimated losses or expenses in excess of the current cost or to meet claims covering losses not payable within the same fiscal year within which the claim originated. The directors may, in their discretion, fix rates of interest on either notes or balances.

Premiums.

Sec. 5399. If an association is not possessed of funds sufficient for the payment of incurred losses and expenses, it shall make an assessment for the amount needed to pay such losses and expenses, upon the members liable to assessment therefor, in proportion to their several liabilities.

Assessments.

Sec. 5400. The funds of each association shall be invested by the directors in the same classes as securities and in the same manner in which the funds of domestic life insurance companies are by law required or permitted to be invested.

Investments.

Sec. 5401. Each association shall have power to determine the premiums, contingent liabilities, assessments, penalties, and dividends of its members and to enforce or administer the same without the limitations imposed upon corporations without capital stock by section 5356. It shall also have power to make and amend by-laws or regulations not inconsistent with its certificate of incorporation for the prompt, economical, and safe conduct of its affairs. All by-laws and regulations of each association shall be filed with the insurance commissioner, and shall be subject to his approval. If not disapproved by him, they shall go into effect 30 days after filing, or at such later date as may be indicated in the by-laws or regulations.

By-laws and regulations.

Appeals.

SEC. 5402. From any decision or order of the insurance commissioner affecting any association, such association shall have the right of appeal to the superior court for Hartford County.

PART D—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION INSURANCE.

Effect of insurance contract.

SECTION 5403. Whenever any employer of labor as defined in this chapter shall insure his liability under this chapter with any company authorized to transact a compensation insurance business in this State, the contract of insurance between such employer of labor and such insurer shall be a contract for the benefit of any employee, who shall sustain an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment by such insured by reason of the business operations described in the policy while conducted at any working place therein described or elsewhere in connection therewith, or in the event of such injury resulting in death, for the benefit of the dependents of such employee. Every such policy shall contain an agreement by the insurer to the effect that the insurer shall be directly and primarily liable to the employee and, in the event of his death, to his dependents to pay to him or to them the compensation, if any, for which the employer is liable: Provided, Payment in whole or in part of such compensation by either the employer or the insurer shall to the extent thereof be a bar to the recovery against the other of the amount so paid.

Notice of hearings.

SEC. 5404. When a claim for compensation by any such injured employee or the dependent of an injured employee of an employer who has insured his liability as aforesaid, shall not result in a voluntary agreement and a hearing before a compensation commissioner shall be necessary to determine such claim, the insurer shall receive the same notice of such hearing as is by law required to be given to the employer and shall thereupon be a party to the proceeding.

Awards.

SEC. 5405. In any such hearing the commissioner having jurisdiction may make his award directly against such employer, insurer or both, and such award shall be enforceable in all respects as provided by law for enforcing awards against an employer, and the proceedings on hearing, finding, award, appeal and execution shall be in all respects similar to that provided by law as between employer and employee.

Scope and validity of contract.

SEC. 5406. As between any such injured employee or his dependent and the insurer every such contract of insurance shall be conclusively presumed to cover the entire liability of the insured, and no question as to breach of warranty, coverage or misrepresentation by the insured shall be raised by the insurer in any proceeding before the compensation commissioner or on appeal therefrom.

False statements.

SEC. 5407. No statement in an application for a policy of compensation insurance shall vitiate such policy as between the insurer and the insured, unless such statement shall be false and shall materially affect either the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by the insurer.

Forms to be approved.

SEC. 5408. No insurer shall issue any policy of insurance purporting to cover the liability of an employer under the provisions of this chapter, until a copy of the form of such policy shall have been filed with and approved by the insurance commissioner.

Damages for misstatements.

SEC. 5409. When any insured shall knowingly make a material misstatement to any insurer to the damage of such insurer, such insurer may recover just damages resulting from such misstatement.

Duty of insurance companies.

SEC. 5414 (as amended by ch. 142, acts of 1919). Every insurance company writing compensation insurance shall report in writing to the board of commissioners, in accordance with rules by them prescribed, the name of the person or corporation insured, the day on which the policy shall become effective, and the date of its expiration, which report shall be made within one week from the date of the policy. The cancellation of any policy so written and reported shall not become effective until one week after notice of such cancellation has been filed with the commissioner or commissioners with whom such report is filed. Any insurance company violating any provision of this section shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars for each offense.

ACTS OF 1919.

CHAPTER 251.—Claims of injured workmen against the State.

SECTION 1. It shall be the duty of any compensation commissioner, immediately upon receiving from any department of the state notice by any employee of said department, of claim for compensation, to serve a copy of such notice by mail upon the attorney general, and the awards of the commissioners shall be paid from the funds of the State appropriated by the general assembly for such purpose. Compensation for State employ-ees.

SEC. 2. The sum of $10,000 is appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act and to be available until the rising of the general assembly at its January session, 1921. Appropriation.

DELAWARE.

ACTS OF 1917.

CHAPTER 233.—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

|---------------------------|--|
| New article. | Chapter 90 of the Revised Code of the State of Delaware is hereby amended by adding a new article thereto, entitled, "Masters, Apprentices and Employees—Article 5—The Delaware Workmen's Compensation Law of 1917," and the following new sections to be styled as 3193 a. section 94 to 3193 xx. section 143, inclusive. |
| Title. | 3193 a. SECTION 94. This act shall be called and cited as "The Delaware Workmen's Compensation Law of 1917," and shall apply to all accidents occurring within this State, irrespective of the place where the contract of hiring was made, renewed or extended, and shall not apply to any accident occurring outside of this State. |
| Application. | 3193 b. SEC. 95. In any action instituted by any person whatsoever on or after the first day of September, A. D. 1917, to recover damages for personal injury sustained by an employee by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within this State on or after said date, or for death resulting from injury so sustained, it shall not be a defense— |
| Defenses abrogated. | (a) That the injury or death was caused in whole or in part by the want of ordinary or reasonable care of, or by the negligence of, a fellow employee; or (b) That the employee had either expressly or impliedly assumed the risk of the injury; or (c) That injury was caused in any degree by the negligence of such employee; but the foregoing provisions of this section shall not apply to an action instituted by any person whatsoever to recover damages for injuries to or death of an employee who shall have elected not to operate under the compensatory provisions of the subsequent sections of this article, nor to an action instituted against any employer to recover damages for injuries to or death of an employee, when such employer shall have elected to operate under the compensatory provisions of the subsequent sections of this article: Provided, however, That when both the employer and the employee shall have elected not to operate under the compensatory provisions of the subsequent sections of this article, then and in such case the employer shall be deprived of the right of interposing the defenses mentioned in this section the same as though he alone had rejected the terms or the subsequent sections of this article. |
| Exceptions. | 3193 c. SEC. 96. In any action at law contemplated by the last preceding section the plaintiff shall be required to file with his declaration or other first pleading a certificate of the industrial accident board showing the status of the injured employee and his employer at the time of the injury, with respect to election or refusal of the employee and employer to be bound by the compensatory provisions of this article. |
| Plaintiff to show status. | 3193 d. SEC. 97. Every employer and employee shall be conclusively presumed to have elected to be bound by the compensatory provisions of this article and to have accepted the provisions of this article, respectively, to pay and to accept compensation for personal injury or death by accident arising out of the course of the employment, regardless of the question of negligence, and to the exclusion of all other rights and remedies, unless, prior to such injury or death, either party shall have given notice to the other party in the time and manner hereinafter specified. A like presumption shall exist in the case of all minors employed unless the notice above referred to be given by or to the parent or guardian of such minor. Every election to be bound by the compensatory provisions of this article shall be | conclusively presumed to be coextensive with the contract of hire between the employer and employee.

3193 e. SEC. 98. Either an employer or an employee who has excepted himself, by proper notice, from the operation of the compensatory provisions of this article, may at any time, waive such exemption and thereby accept the compensatory provisions of this article by giving the notice provided in 3193 f. section 99 hereof. Waiving exemptions.

3193 f. SEC. 99. Notice of election not to be bound as set forth in 3193 d. section 97 hereof, and notice of acceptance as set forth in 3193 e. section 98 hereof, shall be made in the following manner: Notice of rejection:

(a) By the employer by causing a printed notice thereof, in large type, to be posted in a conspicuous place in the plant, shop, office, room, or place where the employee is employed, and where it may readily be seen by his employees, or by serving such notice personally upon the employee. The employer shall also immediately following the posting or serving of such notice, file with the industrial accident board an affidavit showing compliance with the above provisions of this section with respect to the posting or serving of such notice. By employer;

(b) By the employee by mailing to his employer at the place where said employee is employed, or to the employer's office or place of business, a written declaration in ordinary language of such election or acceptance; or by serving such written declaration personally upon the employer or any of his agents upon whom a summons in a civil action may be served under the laws of the State. The employee shall also immediately following the mailing or serving of such notice, file with the industrial accident board an affidavit showing compliance with the above provisions of this section with respect to mailing or serving of such notice. Any such notice mentioned in this section shall be given thirty days prior to any accident resulting in injury or death: Provided, That if any such injury occurred less than thirty days after the date of employment notice of such exemption or acceptance given at the time of employment shall be sufficient notice thereof. Election by both the employer and employee to be bound as set forth in this section shall operate as a surrender by said parties of their rights to any other form or amount of compensation or damages for any injury or death arising out of and in the course of the employment or to any method of determination thereof other than as provided in the compensatory provisions of this article, and when at the time of any injury, both the employer and employee are bound as aforesaid, all other persons whatsoever having any rights of any character, with respect to, or growing out of such injury, or death resulting therefrom, shall also be bound. By employee.

3193 g. SEC. 100. No agreement, rule, regulation, or other device shall in any manner operate to relieve any employer or employee in whole or in part from any liability created by this article, except as herein specified. Waivers.

3193 h. SEC. 101 (as amended by chapter 203, acts of 1919). No compensation shall be paid for any injury which does not incapacitate the employee for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages, but if incapacity extends beyond the period of two weeks, compensation shall begin on the fifteenth day after the injury: Provided, however, that if such disability continues for four weeks or longer, such compensation shall be computed from the date of the injury. During the first two weeks after the injury, the employer shall furnish reasonable surgical, medical, and hospital services, medicines and supplies, as and when needed, unless the employee refuse to allow them to be furnished by the employer. The cost of such services, medicines and supplies shall not exceed seventy-five dollars. If the employer shall, upon application made to him, refuse to furnish such services, medicines, and supplies, the employee may procure the same, and shall receive from the employer the reasonable cost thereof within the above limitations. If the employee shall refuse reasonable surgical, medical, and hospital services, medicines, and supplies tendered to him by his employer, he shall forfeit the right to compensation for any injury or any increase in his incapacity shown to have resulted from such refusal. Waiting time.

Medical, etc.,
aid.

Refusal.

- Funeral, etc., expenses. 3193 i. SEC. 102. If death results from the injury within one year, the employer shall pay the reasonable expenses of the last sickness and burial of an injured employee, not exceeding one hundred dollars, but without deduction of any amount theretofore paid for compensation or for medical expenses.
- Compensation benefits. 3193 j. SEC. 103 (as amended by chap. 203, acts of 1919). The following schedule of compensation is hereby established for injuries resulting in total disability:
- Total disability; (a) For the first four hundred and seventy-five weeks of total disability, fifty per centum of the wages of the injured employee as defined by this act as amended; but the compensation shall not be more than fifteen dollars per week nor less than five dollars per week, and shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of four thousand dollars: Provided, That if at the time of injury, the employee receives wages of less than five dollars per week, then he shall receive the full amount of such wages per week as compensation. Nothing in this paragraph (a) shall require the payment of compensation after disability shall cease. Should partial disability be followed by total disability, the period of four hundred and seventy-five weeks mentioned in this paragraph (a) of this section shall be reduced by the number of weeks during which compensation was paid for such partial disability.
- Partial disability. (b) For disability for work partial in character (except the particular cases mentioned in the next succeeding subsection (c) of this section), fifty per centum of the difference between the wages received by the injured employee before the injury and the earning power of the employee thereafter, but such compensation shall not be more than fifteen dollars per week. This compensation shall be paid during the period of such partial disability for work; not, however, beyond two hundred and eighty-five weeks. Should total disability for work be followed by partial disability for work, the period of two hundred and eighty-five weeks mentioned in this subsection (b) shall be reduced by the number of weeks during which compensation was paid for such total disability.
- Schedule. (c) For all permanent injuries of the following classes, the compensation, regardless of the earning power of such injured employee after such injury, shall be exclusively as follows:
- For the loss of a hand, fifty per centum of wages during one hundred and fifty-eight weeks.
- For the loss of an arm, fifty per centum of wages during one hundred and ninety-four weeks.
- For the loss of a foot, fifty per centum of wages during one hundred and thirty-five weeks.
- For the loss of a leg, fifty per centum of wages during one hundred and ninety-four weeks.
- For the loss of an eye, fifty per centum of wages during one hundred and thirteen weeks.
- For the loss of two or more of such members, not constituting total disability, fifty per centum of wages during the aggregate of the period specified for each.
- Unless the board shall otherwise determine from the facts, the loss of both hands or both arms, or both feet, or both legs, or both eyes, or an injury to the spine resulting in permanent and complete paralysis of both legs, or both arms, or of one leg and one arm, or an injury to the skull resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity, shall constitute total disability for work, to be compensated according to the provisions of subsection (a) of this section. Amputation between the elbow and the wrist shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a hand, and amputation between the knee and ankle shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a foot. Amputation at or above the elbow shall be considered as the loss of an arm, and amputation at or above the knee shall be considered as the loss of a leg. Permanent loss of the use of a hand, arm, foot, leg, or eye shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of such hand, arm, foot, leg, or eye.
- This compensation shall not be more than fifteen dollars per week, nor less than five dollars per week: Provided, That, if at the time of injury, the employee receives wages of less than five dollars per week, then he shall receive the full amount of such wages per week as compensation.

(d) Should the employee die as a result of the injury, the period during which compensation shall be payable to his dependents under the next succeeding section shall be reduced by the period during which compensation was paid to him in his lifetime under this section of this article. No reduction shall be made for the amount which may have been paid for medical, surgical, and hospital services and medicines, nor for the expenses of last sickness and burial as hereinbefore provided. Should the employee die from some other cause than the injury as herein defined, the liability for compensation, expenses of last sickness, and burial of such employee shall cease.

Compensation
for death.

1393 k. SEC. 104 (as amended by ch. 203, acts of 1919). In case of death, compensation shall be computed on the following basis and distributed to the following persons:

Benefits.

1. To the child or children, if there be no widow nor widower entitled to compensation, twenty-five per centum of wages of deceased, with ten per centum additional for each child in excess of two, with a maximum of sixty per centum, to be paid to their guardian.

2. To the widow or widower, if there be no children, twenty-five per centum of wages.

3. To the widow or widower, if there be one child, forty per centum of wages.

4. To the widow or widower, if there be two children, forty-five per centum of wages.

5. To the widow or widower, if there be three children, fifty per centum of wages.

6. To the widow or widower, if there be four children, fifty-five per centum of wages.

7. To the widow or widower, if there be five children or more, sixty per centum of wages.

Such compensation to the widow or widower shall be for the use and benefit of such widow or widower and of the dependent children, and the industrial accident board may from time to time, apportion such compensation between them in such way as it deems best. The industrial accident board, in its discretion, may require payments to be made direct to a minor who has been injured, and may also require payments to be made to the person caring for any dependent minor, when, in the opinion of the industrial accident board, the expense of securing the appointment of a guardian would be disproportionate to the amount of compensation payable to such minor.

8. If there be neither widow, widower, nor children, then to the father and mother, or the survivor of them, if dependent to any extent upon the employee for support at the time of his death, twenty per centum of wages.

9. If there be neither widow, widower, children, nor dependent parent, then to the brothers and sisters, if actually dependent to any extent upon the decedent for support at the time of his death, fifteen per centum of wages for one brother or sister, and five per centum additional for each additional brother or sister, with a maximum of twenty-five per centum; such compensation to be paid to their guardian.

Compensation shall be payable under this section to or on account of any child, brother, or sister, only if and while such child, brother, or sister, is under the age of sixteen years. No compensation shall be payable under this section to a widow, unless she was living with her deceased husband at the time of his death or was then actually dependent upon him for support, but in such case, compensation shall be distributed to the persons who would be dependents in case there were no widow. No compensation shall be payable under this section to a widower, unless he be incapable of self-support at the time of his wife's death, and be at such time dependent upon her for support.

The terms "child" and "children" shall include stepchildren and adopted children and children to whom the deceased stood in loco parentis, if members of the decedent's household at the time of his death and shall include posthumous children, but shall not include married children.

Should any dependent of a deceased employee die, or should the widow or widower remarry, or should the widower become capable of self-support, the right of such dependent or such widow or widower to compensation under this section shall cease.

Readjustments. If the compensation payable under this section to or on account of any person shall for any cause cease, the compensation of the remaining persons entitled thereunder shall thereafter be the same as would have been payable to them had they been the only persons entitled to compensation at the time of the death of the deceased: Provided, however, That the period shall be reduced by the number of weeks during which payments were made to the deceased or to any other person or class of persons entitled.

Basic wages. The wages upon which death compensation shall be based shall not in any case be taken to exceed thirty dollars per week nor to be less than ten dollars per week. Subject to the provisions of subsection (d) of the last preceding section, this compensation shall be paid during two hundred and eighty-five weeks, and in the case of children entitled to compensation under this section the compensation of each child shall continue after such period of two hundred and eighty-five weeks until such child shall reach the age of sixteen years, at the rate of fifteen per centum of wages if there be but one child, with ten per centum additional for each additional child, with a maximum of sixty per centum. Children are not entitled to compensation during the period that compensation is payable to their mother or father, except as herein provided.

Notice of accidents. 3193 l. Sec. 105. Unless the employer shall have actual knowledge of the occurrence of the injury, or unless the employee or some one on his behalf, or some of the dependents, or some one on their behalf, shall give written or printed notice thereof to the employer within fourteen days after the accident, no compensation shall be due until such notice be given or knowledge obtained. If such notice be given or the knowledge obtained after fourteen days, but within thirty days after the accident, the delay shall not bar compensation unless the employer shall show that he was prejudiced thereby, and then only to the extent of such prejudice. If such notice be given or the knowledge obtained after thirty days but within ninety days after the accident, and if the employee or other beneficiary shall show that his delay in giving notice was due to his mistake or ignorance of fact or of law, or to his physical or mental inability, or to fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit, of the employer of some one authorized to represent such employer, or to any other reasonable cause or excuse, then compensation shall be allowed, except to the extent that the employer shall show that he was prejudiced by such delay. Unless knowledge be obtained or such notice given within ninety days after the accident, no compensation shall be allowed.

The notice referred to in this section shall be in writing and shall be sufficient to inform the employer that a certain employee, by name and residence, received an injury by accident (the character of which is described in ordinary language), arising out of and in the course of his employment on or about a time specified and at or near a place specified.

Medical examinations. 3193 m. Sec. 106. After an injury, and during the period of resulting disability, the employee, if so requested by his employer, or ordered by the industrial accident board, must submit himself for examination at reasonable times and places and as often as may be reasonably requested, to a physician or physicians legally authorized to practice his or their profession under the laws of such place, who shall be selected and paid by the employer. If the employee requests, he shall be entitled to have a physician or physicians, qualified as aforesaid, of his own selection, to be paid by him, present to participate in such examination. For all examinations after the first the employer shall pay the reasonable traveling expenses and loss of wages incurred by the employee in order to submit to such examination. The refusal of the employee to submit to such examination or his obstruction of such examination shall deprive him of the right to compensation under this act during the continuance of such refusal or obstruction, and the period of such refusal or obstruction shall be deducted from the period during which compensation would otherwise be payable. No fact communicated to or otherwise learned by any physician or surgeon who may have attended or examined the employee, or who may have been present at any examination, shall be privileged either in the hearings provided for in this article, or in any action at law.

3193 n. SEC. 107. If the employer and the injured employee, or his dependents in case of his death, reach an agreement in regard to compensation in accordance with the provisions of this article, a memorandum of such agreement, signed by the parties in interest, shall be filed with the industrial accident board, and if approved by it, shall be deemed final and binding unless modified as provided in 3193 p. section 109. Such agreement shall be approved by said board only when the terms thereof conform to the provisions of this article.

Agreements.

3193 o. SEC. 108. If the employer and the employee, or his dependents in case of his death, fail to reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this article, or if, after they reach such an agreement, the industrial accident board shall refuse to approve the same, either party may notify the industrial accident board of the facts, and the said board shall thereupon, after notice of the time and place of hearing served on all parties in interest, hear and determine the matter in accordance with the facts and the law, and state its conclusion of fact and rulings of law.

Notice of disagreement.

Decision.

3193 p. SEC. 109. On the application of any party in interest on the ground that the incapacity of the injured employee has subsequently terminated, increased, diminished or recurred, or that the status of the dependent has changed, the board may at any time, but not oftener than once in six months, review any agreement or award, and on such review may make an award ending, diminishing, increasing, or renewing the compensation previously agreed upon or awarded, and designating the persons entitled thereto, subject to the provisions of this article, and shall state its conclusions of fact and rulings of law, and immediately send to the parties a copy of the award; but this section shall not apply to a commutation of payments under 3193 t. section 113.

Review.

3193 q. SEC. 110. In all hearings before the board it shall make such inquiries and investigations as it shall deem necessary. The hearings of the board shall be held at some reasonable location in the city or county where the injury occurred, and each award of the board shall be in writing and shall be filed among its records, and a copy thereof shall be served on each of the parties in interest within one week after the making of such award.

Procedure.

3193 r. SEC. 111. An award of said board in the absence of fraud shall be final and conclusive between the parties, except as provided in 3193 p. section 109, unless, within ten days after a copy thereof has been sent to the parties, either party appeals to the superior court for the county in which the injury occurred. In case of every such appeal the cause shall be determined by the court from the record (which shall include a typewritten copy of the evidence and the finding and award of the board), without the aid of a jury, and the court may reverse, affirm, or modify the award of the board, or remand the cause to the board for a rehearing. In case any cause shall be remanded to the board for a rehearing, the procedure and the rights of all parties to such cause shall be the same as in case of the original hearing before the board. The prothonotary shall not require any deposit or security to cover the costs incident to the taking of any appeals under this article.

Awards.

Appeals.

The superior courts for the several counties of the State of Delaware are hereby vested with jurisdiction to hear and determine all appeals taken pursuant to this article. Said courts may, by proper rules, prescribe the procedure to be followed in the case of such appeals: Provided, however, That the court shall fix a time for such hearings at the pending or next term of said court after the date of such appeal, but the court may extend the time for adequate cause shown.

The decision of the court shall be in writing and shall show conformity to the provisions of this article, and shall be filed with the prothonotary of said court, and such prothonotary shall file a certified copy thereof with the industrial accident board. When any such certified copy of the decision of said court shall be filed as aforesaid it shall be subject to the provisions of 3193 p. section 109, and if the board

Decisions of courts.

- shall, in accordance with the provisions of 3193 p. section 109, end, diminish, increase, or renew the compensation, then and in such case there shall be the same right of appeal as is provided in this section.
- Costs. Costs may be awarded by said court in its discretion, and when so awarded the same costs shall be allowed, taxed, and collected as are allowed, taxed, and collected for like services in the same court.
- Medical advisers. Upon the hearing of any appeal the court may, in its discretion, appoint one or more impartial physicians or surgeons to examine the injuries of the claimant and to report thereon to the court. Said court shall have power to fix the compensation of such physicians or surgeons, and to tax the same as a part of the costs of the proceedings. Such report shall not be conclusive of the facts therein stated, but shall be advisory only.
- Alien beneficiaries. 3193 s. SEC. 112. Compensation under this article to alien dependent widows and children not residents of the United States, shall be one-half of the amount provided in each case for residents; and the employer may at any time commute all future installments of compensation payable to alien dependents, not residents of the United States, by paying to such alien dependents the then value thereof, calculated in accordance with the provisions of 3193 t. section 113 of the act to which this is an amendment. Alien widowers, parents, brothers, and sisters, not residents of the United States, shall not be entitled to any compensation. Nonresident alien dependents may be officially represented by the consular officers of the nation of which such alien or aliens may be citizens or subjects, and in such cases, the consular officers shall have the right to receive for distribution to such nonresident alien dependents, all compensation awarded hereunder, and the receipt of such consular officers shall be a full discharge of all sums paid to and received by them.
- Lump sums. 3193 t. SEC. 113. The compensation contemplated by this article may be commuted by said industrial accident board at its present value when discounted at five per cent interest, with annual rests, disregarding (except in commuting payments due under subsection (a) 3193 j, sec. 103, of this article) the probability of the beneficiary's death, upon application of either party, with due notice to the other, if it appear that such commutation will be for the best interest of the employee or the dependents of the deceased employee, or that it will avoid undue expense or undue hardship to either party, or that such employee or dependent has removed or is about to remove from the United States, or that the employer has sold or otherwise disposed of the whole or the greater part of his business or assets.
- Upon paying such amount the employer shall be discharged from all further liability on account of the injury or death. Commutation shall not be allowed for the purpose of enabling the injured employee or the dependents of a deceased employee to satisfy a debt (other than a mortgage upon his or their home or household furniture, created before the accident).
- Deposits. 3193 u. SEC. 114 (as amended by chap. 203, acts of 1919). At any time after the entry of the award, or after the filing of the agreement for compensation, a sum equal to all future installments of compensation, may (where death or the nature of the injury renders the amount of future payments certain) by leave of the industrial accident board, be paid by the employer to any savings bank or trust company approved by said board and chartered and doing business in this State and having an office in the county in which the award was entered, and such sum, together with all interest arising from the investment thereof, shall thereafter be held in trust for the employee, or his dependents, who shall have no further recourse against the employer.
- Such payment of such sum by the employer shall operate as a satisfaction of such award or agreement as to the employer.
- Payments from said fund shall be made by the said trustee on orders from the industrial accident board in the same amounts and at the same periods as are herein required of the employer. If, after liability shall have ceased, any balance of said fund shall remain, the same shall be returned to the employer who deposited the same, on an order signed as aforesaid.

3193 v. SEC. 115. In case of personal injury, all claims for compensation shall be forever barred unless, within one year after the accident, the parties shall have agreed upon the compensation as before provided, or unless, within one year after the accident, one or more of the interested parties shall have appealed to the industrial accident board as in this article provided. In case of death, all claims for compensation shall be forever barred, unless, within one year after the death, the parties shall have agreed upon the compensation as before provided, or unless, within one year after the death, one or more of the interested parties shall have appealed to the industrial accident board as in this article provided. Where, however, payments of compensation have been made in any case, said limitation shall not take effect until the expiration of one year from the time of the making of the last payment.

Limitation of one year.

3193 w. SEC. 116. The governor shall, within thirty days after the approval of this article by the governor, appoint three competent persons to be known as the "Industrial Accident Board," which board shall have jurisdiction of all cases arising under the compensation schedule of this article. Such appointments shall originally be as follows: One member shall be appointed for the term of two years, another for the term of four years, and another for the term of six years. Thereafter, as the terms of office of members expire, either by death, resignation, removal from the State, or otherwise, appointments shall be made for terms of six years each.

Industrial accident board.

Term.

Each person appointed under the provisions of this section shall hold office until his successor is appointed and qualified. The governor may remove any member of said board with or without cause. Each member, before entering upon the duties of his office, shall take the constitutional oath required of State officers. Said board shall provide itself with a seal for authentication of its orders, awards, and proceedings, upon which shall be inscribed the words—"Industrial Accident Board—Delaware—Seal."

The board shall organize by choosing one of its members as president and may appoint a secretary to be selected by the board at a salary not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars per year, and may remove said secretary with or without cause, and appoint a successor. The board may also employ such clerical and other assistants as it may deem necessary, and subject to like approval, fix the compensation of all persons so employed.

Organization.

The members of said board and its assistants shall be entitled to receive from the State, their actual and necessary expenses while traveling on the business of the board, but such expense shall be sworn to by the person who incurred the same, and any such person falsely making any such report shall be guilty of perjury and punishable accordingly. The salary of the members of the board and its assistants shall be paid monthly in the same manner as the salaries of State officers are paid, and the expenses of said board, after approval by two members and the State auditor, shall be paid by the State treasurer out of the general funds of the State.

Expenses.

It shall be the duty of said board to maintain and keep open during reasonable hours an office adequate for the transaction of its business. It shall keep a record of all its proceedings and such other books and records as shall be required by the proper and efficient administration of this article.

Duties.

It shall hear disputes as to compensation to be paid under the provisions of this article, make its own rules of procedure for carrying out the provisions of this article, furnish blanks for information, record all awards, and shall have power to compel the attendance of witnesses.

It shall have the power to issue subpoenas and administer oaths in any proceeding and in all other cases where it may be necessary in the exercise of its powers and duties, and to examine persons as witnesses, take evidence, require the production of documents, and do all other things conformable to law which may be necessary to enable it effectively to discharge the duties of office. Such oaths may be administered and such subpoenas issued by any member of said board. Any subpoena, process, or order of said board, or any notice or paper requiring service, may be served by any sheriff, deputy sheriff, constable, or any employee of the board, and return thereof made to said board. Such officer shall receive the same fees as are now provided by law for like service in civil actions: Provided, however, That the employee of the board serving such notice shall not receive any fee, but shall be paid his actual expenses. If any person shall, in proceedings before said board, disobey or resist any lawful order or process, or misbehave during a hearing or so near the place thereof as to obstruct the same, neglect to produce after having been ordered to do so, any pertinent document, or refuse to appear after having been subpoenaed, or upon appearing, refuse to take the oath as a witness, or after having taken the oath, refuse to be examined according to law, said board shall certify the facts under the hand of its secretary or president to any judge of the Supreme Court of the State of Delaware, who shall thereupon hear the evidence as to the acts complained of, and if the evidence so warrant, punish such person in the same manner and to the same extent as for a contempt committed before the Superior Court of the State of Delaware, or commit such person upon the same conditions as if the doing of the forbidden act had occurred with reference to the process of, or in the presence of said court.

The board may, with or without notice to either party, cause testimony to be taken or inspection of the premises where the injury occurred to be had, or the time-books or the pay roll of the employer to be examined.

- Quorum. A majority of the board shall constitute a quorum for the exercise of any of the powers or authority conferred by this article, and a decision or an award by a majority shall be valid. Each member of the board shall receive an annual salary of twenty-five hundred dollars. Said board, may in any case, upon the application of either party, or on its own motion, appoint a disinterested and duly qualified physician to make any necessary medical examination of the employee, and testify in respect thereto. Said physician shall be allowed a reasonable fee, to be fixed by said board, not exceeding five dollars for each examination, which shall be included by said board in its expense account: Provided, however, That said board shall in every case receive the testimony of any physician called by either the employer, or the employee, or the dependents of such employee.
- Witness fees. Costs. Witness fees and mileage shall be computed at the rate allowed to witnesses in the Superior Court of the State of Delaware. Costs legally incurred may be taxed against either party, or apportioned between the parties in the sound discretion of said board, as the justice of the case may require.
- Study of accidents. Said board shall inquire into the causes and results of industrial accidents of every character, study the most advanced methods of safeguarding against such accidents, inquire into the subject of fair compensation for those who are injured in such accidents, and for the families of those who shall be killed as a result thereof, study the operation and effect of this article, and make a full report in writing of its findings, together with such recommendations as it may deem proper, at each session of the General Assembly of the State of Delaware. The board shall prepare and cause to be printed and upon request, furnish free of charge, to any employer or employee, such blank forms and literature as it shall deem requisite to facilitate and promote the efficient administration of this article.
- Accidents to be reported. 3193 x. Sec. 117. Every employer bound by the compensatory provisions of this article shall hereafter keep a record of all injuries, fatal or otherwise, received by his employees in the course of their employment. Within ten days after knowledge of the occurrence of an accident resulting in personal injury a report thereof shall be made in writing by the employer to the industrial accident board on blanks to be procured from said board for that purpose. Upon the termination of the disability of the injured employee the employer shall make a supplemental report to the board. The said reports shall contain the name and nature of the business of the employer, the location of his establishment or place of work, the name, age, sex, and occupation of the injured employee, and state the time, the nature, and cause of the injury, and such other information as may be required for properly carrying out the provisions of this article. Any employer who refuses or neglects to make a report required by this section shall, upon conviction before any justice of the peace of this State, be punished by a fine of not less than ten dollars nor more than fifty dollars for each offense, and in default of the payment of such fine may be imprisoned for any period not exceeding twenty days.

Reports made in accordance with this section shall not be evidence against the employer in any proceedings under this article or otherwise, but shall be exclusively for the information of said board in securing data to be used in connection with the performance of their duties in making recommendations to the general assembly as hereinbefore provided. Not to be used as evidence.

3193 y. Sec. 118. Every employer who accepts the compensation provisions of this article shall insure the payment of compensation to his employees, or their dependents, in the manner hereinafter provided, and, while such insurance remains in force, he shall be liable to any employee, or his dependents for personal injury or death by accident only to the extent and in the manner herein specified. Insurance.

3193 z. Sec. 119 (as amended by chapter 203, acts of 1919). Every employer under this article shall either insure or keep insured his liability hereunder in some corporation, association, or organization approved by the industrial accident board and authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this State, or shall furnish to the industrial accident board satisfactory proof of his financial ability to pay direct the compensation in the amount and manner and when due as provided for in this article. In the latter case the board may, in its discretion, require the deposit of an acceptable security, indemnity, or bond to secure the payment of compensation liabilities as they are incurred. Same.

Whenever a self-insurer under this section shall enter into an agreement to pay compensation to an injured employee or his dependents in case of his death, or whenever an award shall be made by the board in favor of such injured employee or his dependents in case of his death, the employer shall pay the full liability under said agreement or award to a savings bank or trust company in accordance with the provisions of 3193 u. section 114, and the said fund, together with all interest arising from the investment thereof, shall be held and paid out in accordance with the provisions of said last-mentioned section. Failure on part of the employer to make such payment within 30 days after such an agreement or award shall forthwith terminate the right of such employer to carry his own insurance. Self-insurance.

3193 aa. Sec. 120. Every employer accepting the compensation provisions of this article shall within 60 days after this article takes effect file with said board in form prescribed by it, and thereafter annually or as often as may be required by said board, evidence of his compliance with the provisions of 3193 z. section 119 of this article and all other sections relating thereto. Evidence of compliance.

If an employer refuses or neglects to comply with these provisions, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of ten cents per day for each employee in his service at the time when the insurance became due, but not less than one dollar nor more than fifty dollars for each day of such refusal or neglect and until the same ceases, and shall be liable, during continuance of such neglect or refusal, to his injured employees, either for compensation under this article or in an action at law for damages, in which last case, upon proof that he has not complied with this section, it shall not be a defense in such action: Failure.

- (a) That the employee was negligent; or
- (b) That the employee had assumed the risk of the injury; or
- (c) That the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee. Suits.

Furthermore, if after the first day of January, 1918, any employer shall be in default under 3193 z. section 119 for a period of thirty days, he may be enjoined by the court of chancery of this State from carrying on his business while such default continues.

3193 bb. Sec. 121. Whenever an employer has complied with the provisions of 3193 z. section 119 of this article relating to self-insurance, the industrial accident board shall issue to such employer a certificate. Certificate.

tificate which shall remain in force for a period fixed by the board, but the board may, upon at least sixty days' notice and a hearing to the employer, revoke the certificate upon satisfactory evidence for such revocation having been presented. After the expiration of one year from such revocation the board may grant a new certificate to the employer upon his petition.

tions.

3193 cc. SEC. 122. For the purpose of complying with the provisions of 3193 z. section 119, of this article, groups of employers may form mutual insurance associations under the laws of this State, subject to such reasonable conditions and restrictions as may be fixed by the industrial accident board. Membership in such mutual insurance associations, so approved, together with evidence of the payment of premium dues, shall be evidence of compliance with the provisions of 3193 z. section 119, of this article.

Benefit schemes.

3193 dd. SEC. 123. Subject to the approval of the industrial accident board, any employer may enter into or continue an agreement with his employees to provide a system of compensation, benefit, or insurance, in lieu of the compensation and insurance provided by this article.

No such substitute system shall be approved unless it confers benefits upon injured employees at least equivalent to the benefits provided by this article, nor if it requires contributions from the employees, unless it confers benefits in addition to those provided under this article at least commensurate with such contributions. Such substitute system may be terminated by the industrial accident board on reasonable notice and hearing to the interested parties, if it shall be shown that the same is not fairly administered or if its operation shall disclose latent defects threatening its solvency, or if for any substantial reason it fails to accomplish the purposes of this article; and in this case the board shall determine upon the proper distribution of all remaining assets if any, subject to the right of any party in interest to take an appeal to the superior court of this State.

Insurer bound.

3193 ee. SEC. 124. All policies insuring the payment of compensation under this article must contain a clause to the effect that as between the employee and the insurer, the notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury or death on the part of the insured shall be deemed notice or knowledge, as the case may be, on the part of the insurer; that jurisdiction of the insured for the purposes of this article shall be jurisdiction of the insurer; and that the insurer shall in all things be bound by and subject to the awards, judgments, or decisions rendered against such insured.

Provisions of policies.

3193 ff. SEC. 125. No policy of insurance against liability arising under this article shall be issued, unless it contains the agreement of the insurer that it will promptly pay to the person entitled to same all benefits conferred by this article and all installments of the compensation that may be awarded or agreed upon, and that the obligation shall not be affected by any default of the insured after the injury, or by any default in the giving of any notice required by such policy or otherwise. Such agreement shall be construed to be a direct promise by the insurer to the person entitled to compensation enforceable in his name.

Policies subject to act.

3193 gg. SEC. 126. Every policy for insurance of the liability herein specified shall be deemed to be subject to the provisions of this article. No corporation, association, or organization shall issue any such policies of insurance unless the form of policy and the stability of the company shall have been approved by the industrial accident board: Provided, however, That the industrial accident board may permit the issuance of policies insuring against the loss from segregated risks of employment if in the judgment of the board all the risks of the same employment are sufficiently covered by other policies of insurance or otherwise insured by the employer. Such policies for segregated risks shall be deemed to be limited in their scope to the particular risks mentioned therein. All questions as to the liability under such policies for segregated risks and other policies or forms of insurance shall be determined by the industrial accident board.

Payment of benefits.

3193 hh. SEC. 127. Except as herein otherwise provided, all compensation payable under the compensatory provisions of this article shall be payable in periodical installments, as the wages of the employee were payable before the accident: Provided, however, That the industrial accident board may, in its discretion, having regard to the welfare of the employee and the convenience of the employer, authorize compensation to be paid monthly or quarterly instead of weekly.

3193 ii. Sec. 128. No contractor or subcontractor shall receive compensation under this article, but shall be deemed to be an employer, and all rights of compensation of the employees of any such contractor or subcontractor shall be against their said employer and not against any other employer.

Contractors.

3193 jj. Sec. 129. If any employee be injured as a result of his intoxication, or because of his deliberate and reckless indifference to danger, or because of his willful intention to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another, or because of his willful failure or refusal to use a reasonable safety appliance provided for him, or to perform a duty required by statute, he shall not be entitled to recover damages in an action at law, or compensation, or medical or hospital service under the compensatory provisions of this article. The burden of proof under the provisions of this section shall be on the defendant employer.

Intoxication, etc.

3193 kk. Sec. 130. Whenever an employee for whose injury or death compensation is payable under this article, at the time of the injury, be in the joint service of two or more employers subject to this article, such employers shall contribute to the payment of such compensation in proportion to their wage liability to such employee, regardless of the question for whom such employee was actually working at the time of the injury.

Joint employment.

3193 ll. Sec. 131. Whenever an injury for which compensation is payable under this article shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employee may, at his option, either claim compensation under this article, or obtain damages from or proceed at law against such other person to recover damages, but he shall not proceed against both; and if compensation is awarded under this article, the employer having paid the compensation or having become liable therefor, shall be subrogated to the rights of the injured employee, or of his dependents to recover damages against such third person, and may recover in his own name or that of the injured employee from the other person in whom legal liability for damages exists the indemnity paid or payable to the injured employee. Any recovery against such third person in excess of the compensation theretofore paid and thereafter payable by the employer (less the cost of securing and collecting the same) shall be paid forthwith, when collected, to the employee or the dependents.

Actions against third parties.

3193 mm. Sec. 132. The right of compensation granted by this article shall have the same preference or priority for the whole amount thereof against the assets of the employer as is now or hereafter may be allowed by law for unpaid wages for labor.

Status of payments.

Claims or payment for compensation due or to become due under this article shall not be assignable, and all compensation and claims therefor shall be exempt from all claims of creditors. If default shall be made by the employer for thirty days after demand in the payment of any amount due under this article, the same may be recovered in the same manner as claims for wages are now collectible.

Fees of attorneys and physicians for services under the provisions of this article shall be subject to the approval of the industrial accident board.

Fees.

3193 nn. Sec. 133. If an injured employee refuses employment suitable to his capacity, procured for him, he shall not be entitled to any compensation at any time during the continuance of such refusal unless, in the opinion of the industrial accident board, such refusal was justifiable; and if an employee receives an injury for which compensation is payable, after having received an injury in another employment, he shall be entitled to compensation by the subsequent employer (not being the employer for whom he worked at the time of the former injury) for the subsequent injury in the same amount as if the previous injury had not occurred.

Suspension of payments.

- Construction. 3193 oo. SEC. 134. Whenever in this article the singular is used, the plural shall be included; where the masculine gender is used, the feminine and neuter gender shall be included.
- Employers. 3193 pp. SEC. 135. The following shall constitute employers subject to the provisions of this article:
 Every person, firm, association, and corporation (excepting the employers mentioned in 3193 vv. sections 141 and 3193 ww. section 142 hereof), having in his or its service any employee as defined in 3193 qq., section 136 of this article. If the employer is insured, it shall include his insurer as far as practicable.
- Employees. 3193 qq. SEC. 136. The term "employee" as used in this article shall be construed to mean—Every person in the service of every natural person, firm, association, and corporation (excepting the employees mentioned in 3193 vv. section 141 and 3193 ww. section 142 hereof) under any contract of hire for a valuable consideration, but not including any person whose employment is casual and not in the regular course of the trade, business, profession, or occupation of his employer, and not including persons to whom articles or materials are given out to be made up, cleaned, washed, altered, ornamented, finished, or repaired, or adapted for sale in the workers' own home, or on other premises not under the control or management of the employer.
- Injury. 3193 rr. SEC. 137. The terms "injury" and "personal injury" as used in this article shall be construed to mean only violence to the physical structure of the body and such disease or infection as naturally results directly therefrom when reasonably treated, and whenever death is mentioned as a cause for compensation under this article it shall mean only death resulting from such violence and its resultant effect when reasonably treated as aforesaid, and occurring within two hundred and eighty-five weeks after the accident.
- Restrictive clause. 3193 ss. SEC. 138. The term "personal injury" sustained by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment:
 (a) Shall not cover an employee except while he is engaged in, on, or about the premises where his services are being performed, which are occupied by, or under the control of, the employer (his presence being required by the nature of his employment), or while he is engaged elsewhere in or about his employer's business where his services require his presence as a part of such service at the time of the injury.
 (b) It shall not include any injury caused by the willful act of another directed against him by reasons personal to such employee and not directed against him as an employee or because of his employment.
 (c) It shall not include a disease or infection, except as it shall result from the injury when reasonably treated.
- Dependent. 3193 tt. SEC. 139. The term "dependent" shall include all persons other than the injured employee who are entitled to compensation under the provisions of the elective schedule set forth in this article, and wherever the context requires it shall be held to include the personal representatives, and the widow or widower of the deceased, and guardians of infants or trustees for incompetent persons.
- Wages. 3193 uu. SEC. 140 (as amended by chapter 203, acts of 1919). Wherever in this act the term "wages" is used it shall be construed to mean the money rate at which the service rendered is recompensed under the contract of hiring in force at the time of the accident, and shall not include gratuities received from the employer or others; nor shall it include board, lodging, or similar advantages received from the employer, unless the money value of such advantages shall have been fixed by the parties at the time of hiring; nor shall it include amounts deducted by the employer, under the contract of hiring, for labor, material, supplies, tools, or other things furnished or paid for by the employer, and necessary for the performance of such contract by the employee. In occupations involving seasonal employment or employment dependent upon the weather, the employee's weekly wages shall be taken to be one-fiftieth of the total wages which he has earned from all occupations during the year immediately preceding the accident, unless it be shown that during such year, by reason of exceptional causes, such method of computation does not ascertain fairly the earnings of the employee, in which case the period for calculation shall be extended so far as to give a basis for the fair ascertainment of his average weekly earnings. In continuous employments, if immediately prior to the accident, the rate of wages was fixed by the day or hour, or by the output of the employee, his weekly wages shall be taken to be five and one-half times his average earnings at such rate for a working day of ordinary length, excluding earnings from overtime, and using as a basis of calculation his earnings during so much of the preceding six months as he worked for the same employer.

3193 vv. Sec. 141. This article shall not apply to farm laborers, domestic servants, officers, and servants of the State, or any governmental agency created by it, nor to their respective employers, nor to the employers or employees in any employment in which less than five persons are employed.

Exemptions.

3193 ww. Sec. 142. This article shall not apply to employees injured or killed while engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, nor to their employers in case, and whenever, the laws of the United States provide for compensation or for liability for such injury or death.

Interstate commerce.

3193 xx. Sec. 143 (as amended by chapter 203, acts of 1919). This act shall begin and take effect from the first day of January, A. D. 1918.

Act in effect.

If any provision of this article shall be held to be void or unconstitutional it is hereby provided that all other portions of the same, which are not expressly held to be void or unconstitutional, shall continue in full force and effect.

ACTS OF 1915.

Act No. 221.—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

SECTION 1 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). This act shall apply to any and all industrial employment, as hereinafter defined. If a workman receives personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment, or by disease proximately caused by such employment, or resulting from the nature of such employment, his employer or the insurance carrier shall pay compensation in the amounts and to the person or persons hereinafter specified. Scope of law.

SEC. 2. This act shall apply to employees (other than officials as hereinafter defined) of the Territory, and all counties, and all other political subdivisions within the Territory now existing or which may hereafter be created. Public employments.

SEC. 3. No compensation shall be allowed for an injury caused (1) by the employee's willful intention to injure himself or to injure another, or (2) by his intoxication. If the employer claims an exemption or forfeiture under this section the burden of proof shall be upon him. Injuries not covered.

SEC. 4. The rights and remedies herein granted to an employee on account of a personal injury for which he is entitled to compensation under this act shall exclude all other rights and remedies of such employee, his personal representatives, dependents, or next of kin, at common law or otherwise, on account of such injury. Remedy exclusive.

Employers who hire workmen within this Territory to work outside of the Territory may agree with such workmen that the remedies under this act shall be exclusive as regards injuries received outside this Territory by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment; and all contracts of hiring in this Territory shall be presumed to include such an agreement.

SEC. 5. When any injury for which compensation is payable under this act shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employee may, at his option, either claim compensation under this act or obtain damages from or proceed at law against such other person to recover damages; and if compensation is claimed and awarded under this act any employer having paid the compensation or having become liable therefor shall be subrogated to the rights of the injured employee to recover against that person: Provided, If the employer shall recover from such other person damages in excess of the compensation already paid or awarded to be paid under this act, then any such excess shall be paid to the injured employee, less the employer's expenses and costs of action. Liability of third persons.

SEC. 6. No contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever shall operate to relieve the employer in whole or in part from any liability created by this act. Contracting out.

SEC. 7. If death results from the injury within six months, the employer or the insurance carrier shall pay to the persons entitled to compensation or, if there be none, then to the personal representative of the deceased employee, burial expenses not to exceed one hundred dollars ($100); and shall also pay to or for the following persons for the following periods a weekly compensation equal to the following percentages of the deceased employee's average weekly wages as defined in section 15: Death benefits.

(a) To the dependent widow or widower, if there be no dependent children, forty per centum.

(b) To the dependent widow or widower, if there be one or two dependent children, fifty per centum, or if there be three or more dependent children, sixty per centum. Such compensation to the widow or widower shall be for the use and benefit of such widow or widower and of the dependent children, and the industrial accident board may from time to time apportion such compensation between them in such way as it deems best.

(c) If there be no dependent widow or widower, but a dependent child or children, then to such child or children thirty per centum, with ten per centum additional for each child in excess of two, with a maximum of fifty per centum, to be divided equally among such children if more than one.

(d) If there be neither dependent widow, widower, nor child, but there be a dependent father or mother, then to such parent, if wholly dependent forty per centum, or if partially dependent twenty-five per centum, or if both parents be dependent then one-half of the foregoing compensation to each of them; or, if there be no such parents, but a dependent grandparent, then to every such grandparent the same compensation as to a parent.

(e) If there be neither dependent widow, widower, child, parent, or grandparent, but there be a dependent grandchild, brother, or sister, or two or more of them, then to such dependents twenty-five per centum for one such dependent and five per centum additional for each additional such dependent, with a maximum of forty per centum, to be divided equally among such dependents if more than one.

Dependents.

SEC. 8. The following persons, and they only, shall be deemed dependents and entitled to compensation under the provisions of this act:

A child if under sixteen years of age, or incapable of self-support and unmarried, whether ever actually dependent upon the deceased or not.

The widow only if living with the deceased, or actually dependent, wholly or partially, upon him.

The widower only if incapable of self-support and actually dependent, wholly or partially, upon the deceased at the time of her injury.

A parent or grandparent only if actually dependent, wholly or partially, upon the deceased.

A grandchild, brother, or sister only if under sixteen years of age, or incapable of self-support, and wholly dependent upon the deceased. The relation of dependency must exist at the time of the injury.

An alien shall not be considered a dependent within the meaning of this act unless actually residing within the United States, and any alien dependent leaving the United States shall thereupon lose all right to any benefits under this act.

Periods of compensation.

SEC. 9. The compensation herein provided for shall be payable during the following periods:

To a widow, until death or remarriage, but in no case to exceed three hundred and twelve weeks.

To a widower, during disability or until remarriage, but in no case to exceed three hundred and twelve weeks.

To or for a child, until sixteen years of age, but in the case of a child incapable of self-support and unmarried as long as so incapable, but in no case to exceed one hundred and four weeks beyond said age of sixteen years.

To a parent or grandparent, during the continuation of a condition of actual dependency, but in no case to exceed three hundred and twelve weeks.

To or for a grandchild, brother, or sister, during dependency as hereinbefore defined, but in no case to exceed three hundred and twelve weeks.

Upon the cessation of compensation under this section to or on account of any person, the compensation of the remaining persons entitled to compensation for the unexpired part of the period during which their compensation is payable shall be that which such persons would have received if they had been the only persons entitled to compensation at the time of the decedent's death.

Definitions.

SEC. 10. As used in this act the term "child" includes stepchildren, adopted children, posthumous children, and illegitimate children, acknowledged previous to the injury, but does not include married children unless dependent. The terms "brother" and "sister" include stepbrothers and stepsisters, half-brothers and half-sisters, and brothers and sisters by adoption, but do not include married brothers nor married sisters unless dependent. The term "grandchild" includes children of adopted children and children of stepchildren, but does not include stepchildren of children, stepchildren of stepchildren, stepchildren of adopted children, nor married grandchildren, unless dependent. The term "parent" includes step-parents and parents by adoption. The term "grandparent" includes parents of parents by adoption, but does not include parents of step-parents, step-parents of parents, nor step-parents of step-parents.

Sec. 11. In computing death benefits the average weekly wages of the deceased employee shall be considered not to be more than thirty-six dollars ($36) nor less than five dollars ($5); but the total weekly compensation shall not exceed in any case the average weekly wages computed as provided in section 15, nor shall the amount of compensation paid in any case exceed in the aggregate the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000).

Basic wages.

Payment of death benefits by an employer in good faith to a dependent subsequent in right to another or other dependent shall protect and discharge the employer unless and until such dependent or dependents prior in right shall have given him notice of his or their claim. In case the employer is in doubt as to the respective rights of rival claimants he may apply to the industrial accident board to decide between them.

What payments a defense.

In case death occurs after a period of disability, either total or partial, the period of disability shall be deducted from the total periods of compensation respectively stated in section 9.

Subsequent death.

The compensation of a person who is insane shall be paid to his or her guardian.

Sec. 12 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). During the disability the employer shall furnish reasonable surgical, medical, and hospital services and supplies not exceeding the amount of one hundred fifty dollars ($150). The pecuniary liability of the employer for the medical, surgical, and hospital service herein required shall be limited to such charges as prevail in the same community for similar treatment of injured persons of a like standard of living when such treatment is paid for by the injured person.

Medical attendance.

In the event of the failure of the employer promptly to provide such physician or surgeon or such medical, surgical, or hospital services, the injured employee may provide the same at the expenses of the employer.

If it shall appear to the board that the injured employee has refused to accept the services of a competent physician or surgeon, or has refused the reasonable surgical, medical, or hospital services provided by the employer, the board may in its discretion reduce the amount provided for medical attendance to which said employee might otherwise be entitled or consider such refusal on the part of the employee to be a waiver by him of any right to medical attendance hereunder.

Refusal to accept.

Sec. 13 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). Where the injury causes total disability for work the employer during such disability, but not including the first seven days thereof, shall pay the injured employee a weekly compensation equal to sixty per centum of his average weekly wages, but not more than eighteen dollars ($18) nor less than three dollars ($3) a week. In no case shall the weekly payments continue after the disability ends, nor longer than three hundred and twelve weeks, nor shall the amount of compensation paid in any case exceed in the aggregate the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000). But no adjudication of permanent disability shall be made until after two weeks from the date of injury.

Total disability.

In case of an employee whose average weekly wages are less than three dollars ($3) a week the weekly compensation shall be the full amount of such average weekly wages, but where the disability is permanent the weekly compensation in such cases shall be three dollars. In case the total disability begins after a period of partial disability, the period of partial disability shall be deducted from such total period of three hundred and twelve weeks.

In the case of the following injuries the disability caused thereby shall be deemed total and permanent, to wit:

- (1) The total and permanent loss of sight in both eyes.
- (2) The loss of both feet at or above the ankle.
- (3) The loss of both hands at or above the wrist.
- (4) The loss of one hand and one foot.
- (5) An injury to the spine resulting in permanent and complete paralysis of both legs or both arms or of one leg and one arm.
- (6) An injury to the skull resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity.

The above enumeration is not to be taken as exclusive.

Partial disability.

Sec. 14 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). (a) Partial disability. Where the injury causes partial disability for work, the employer, during such disability and for a period of three hundred and twelve weeks beginning with the first day of disability, shall pay the injured workman a weekly compensation equal to fifty per centum of the difference between his average weekly wages before the accident and the weekly wages he will most probably be able to earn thereafter, but not more than twelve dollars ($12) a week. In no case shall the weekly payments continue after the disability ends, and in case the partial disability begins after a period of total disability the period of total disability shall be deducted from such total period of three hundred and twelve weeks, nor shall the amount of compensation paid in any case exceed in the aggregate the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000). But no adjudication of disability shall be made until after two weeks from the date of injury.

Schedule.

(b) Permanent partial disability. In case of disability partial in character but permanent in quality the compensation shall be fifty per centum of the average weekly wages and shall be paid to the employee for the period named in the schedule as follows:

Thumb. For the loss of a thumb, sixty weeks.

First finger. For the loss of a first finger, commonly called index finger, forty-six weeks.

Second finger. For the loss of a second finger, thirty weeks.

Third finger. For the loss of a third finger, twenty-five weeks.

Fourth finger. For the loss of a fourth finger, commonly called the little finger, fifteen weeks.

Phalange of thumb or finger. The loss of the first phalange of the thumb or finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such thumb or finger, and compensation shall be one-half of the amount above specified. The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire thumb or finger: Provided, however, That in no case shall the amount received for more than one finger exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a hand.

Great toe. For the loss of a great toe, thirty-eight weeks.

Other toes. For the loss of one of the toes other than the great toe, sixteen weeks.

Phalange of toe. The loss of the first phalange of any toe shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of said toe, and the compensation shall be one-half of the amount specified. The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire toe.

Hand. The loss of a hand, two hundred and forty-four weeks.

Arm. For the loss of an arm, three hundred and twelve weeks.

Foot. For the loss of a foot, two hundred and five weeks.

Leg. For the loss of a leg, two hundred and eighty-eight weeks.

Eye. For the loss of an eye, one hundred and twenty-eight weeks.

Ear. The permanent and complete loss of hearing in both ears, three hundred and twelve weeks. The permanent and complete loss of hearing in one ear, sixty weeks. The loss of both ears, one hundred and twenty-eight weeks. The loss of one ear, sixty weeks.

Loss of use. Permanent loss of the use of hand, arm, foot, leg, eye, thumb, finger, toe, or phalange shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of such hand, arm, foot, leg, eye, thumb, finger, toe, or phalange.

Amputation. Amputation between the elbow and the wrist shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of hand. Amputation between the knee and the ankle shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a foot. Amputation at or above the elbow shall be considered as the loss of an arm. Amputation at or above the knee shall be considered as the loss of the leg.

The compensation for the foregoing specific injuries shall be in lieu of all other compensation, except the benefits provided in section 13 of this act.

In case of an injury resulting in serious facial or head disfigurement the board may, in its discretion, make such award or compensation as it may deem proper and equitable, in view of the nature of the disfigurement, but not to exceed five thousand dollars ($5,000).

Other cases. In all other cases in this class of disability the compensation shall be fifty per centum of the difference between his average weekly wages and his wage-earning capacity thereafter in the same employment or otherwise, payable during the continuance of such partial disability, but subject to reconsideration of the degree of such impairment by the board on its own motion or upon application of any party in interest.

Sec. 15. Average weekly wages shall be computed in such a manner as is best calculated to give the average weekly earnings of the workman during the twelve months preceding his injury: Provided, That where, by reason of the shortness of the time during which the workman has been in the employment, or the casual nature of the employment, or the terms of the employment, it is impracticable to compute the rate of remuneration, regard may be had to the average weekly earnings, which, during the twelve months previous to the injury, were being earned by a person in the same grade employed at the same work by the employer of the injured workman, or if there is no person so employed, by a person in the same grade employed in the same class of employment and in the same district.

Computation of wages.

If a workman at the time of the injury is regularly employed in a higher grade of work than formerly during the year and with larger regular wages, only such larger wages shall be taken into consideration in computing his average weekly wages.

Sec. 16. Any payments made by the employer or his insurer to the injured workman during the period of his disability, or to his dependents which, by the terms of this act, were not due and payable when made, may, subject to the approval of the board, be deducted from the amount to be paid as compensation: Provided, That in case of disability such deduction shall be made by shortening the period during which compensation must be paid, and not by reducing the amount of the weekly payments under sections 13 and 14.

Advances.

Sec. 17. The board, upon the application of either party, may, in its discretion, having regard to the welfare of the employee and the convenience of the employer, authorize compensation to be paid monthly or quarterly instead of weekly.

Time of payments.

Sec. 18. Whenever the board determines that it is for the best interest of all parties, the liability of the employer for compensation may, on application to the board by any party interested, be discharged in whole or in part by the payment of one or more lump sums to be fixed by the board.

Lump sums.

Sec. 19. Whenever for any purpose the board deems it expedient, any lump sum which is to be paid as provided in section 18 shall be paid by the employer to some suitable person or corporation appointed by the circuit court in the jurisdiction of which the injury occurred as trustee to administer or apply the same for the benefit of the person or persons entitled thereto in the manner provided by the board. The receipt of such trustee for the amount so paid shall discharge the employer or any one else who is liable therefor.

Trustees.

Sec. 20. After an injury and during the period of disability, the workman, whenever ordered by the board, shall submit himself to examination, at reasonable times and places, to a duly qualified physician or surgeon designated and paid by the employer. The workman shall have the right to have a physician or surgeon designated and paid by himself present at such examination, which right, however, shall not be construed to deny to the employer's physician the right to visit the injured workman at all reasonable times and under all reasonable conditions during total disability. If a workman refuses to submit himself

Medical examinations.

- to or in any way obstructs such examination, his right to take or prosecute any proceeding under this act shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases, and no compensation shall be payable for the period during which such refusal or obstruction continues.
- Notice and claim. SEC. 21. No proceedings under this act for compensation for an injury shall be maintained unless a notice of the injury shall have been given to the employer as soon as practicable after the happening thereof, and unless a claim for compensation with respect to such injury shall have been made within three months after the date of the injury; or, in case of death, then within three months after such death, whether or not a claim had been made by the employee himself for compensation. Such notice and such claim may be given or made by any person claiming to be entitled to compensation or by some one on his behalf. If payments of compensation have been made voluntarily the making of a claim within said period shall not be required.
- Form. SEC. 22. Such notice and such claim shall be made in writing, and such notice shall contain the name and address of the employee, and shall state in ordinary language the time, place, nature, and cause of the injury, and shall be signed by him or by a person on his behalf, or, in the event of his death, by any one or more of his dependents or by a person on their behalf. The notice may include the claim.
- How given. SEC. 23. Any notice under this act shall be given to the employer, or if the employer be a partnership, then to any one of the partners. If the employer be a corporation, then the notice may be given to any agent, of the corporation upon whom process may be served, or to any officer of the corporation, or any agent in charge of the business at the place where the injury occurred. Such notice shall be given by delivering it or by sending it by mail by registered letter addressed to the employer at his or its last known residence or place of business. The foregoing provisions shall apply to the making of a claim.
- Sufficiency of notice. SEC. 24. A notice given under the provisions of section 21 of this act shall not be held invalid or insufficient by reason of any inaccuracy in stating the time, place, nature, or cause of the injury, or otherwise, unless it is shown that the employer was in fact misled to his injury thereby. Want of notice or delay in giving notice shall not be a bar to proceedings under this act if it be shown that the employer, his agent or representative, had knowledge of the accident or that the employer has not been prejudiced by such delay or want of notice.
- Incompetents. SEC. 25. No limitation of time provided in this act shall run as against any person who is mentally incompetent or a minor dependent so long as he has no guardian, or next friend.
- Industrial accident board. SEC. 26. There shall be a board created, to be known as the industrial accident board, in each county, consisting of five members to be appointed by the governor, as provided by section 80 of the Organic Act. Each board shall elect its own chairman. Members of the boards shall hold office for five years except that when the boards are first constituted one member for each board shall be appointed for one year, one for two years, one for three years, one for four years, and one for five years. Thereafter one member shall be appointed to each board every year for the full term of five years. Outgoing members shall be eligible for reappointment. It shall be the duty of the county or city and county attorney, as the case may be, to act as attorney for the board in all matters coming before the board whenever requested to so act.
- Jurisdiction. SEC. 27. Each board shall have jurisdiction over the injuries occurring within the county for which it is appointed, or occurring to employees of residents of the county while such employees are without the Territory, or on vessels operated by residents of such county: Provided, That if the principal business or occupation of the employer concerned or of the owner of the vessel is carried on in another county, the board of such other county shall have such jurisdiction.
- Salaries and expenses. SEC. 28. The members of such boards shall serve without remuneration, except that they may be allowed their reasonable traveling and other expenses while proceeding to, attending, and returning from attendance of meetings of the board, or reasonably incurred in the discharge of their duties, which board may employ such assistance and clerical help as it may deem necessary, and fix the compensation of all persons so employed. All such salaries and expenses shall be paid out of such funds as shall be appropriated by the legislature for the use of such boards.

Sec. 29. Each board may make rules not inconsistent with this act for carrying out the provisions of this act. Process and procedure under this act shall be as summary and simple as reasonably may be. The board, or any member thereof, shall have the power to subpoena witnesses, administer oaths, and to examine such of the books and records of the parties to a proceeding as relate to the questions in dispute. The circuit court shall have power to enforce by proper proceedings the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production and examination of books, papers and records. The board shall cause to be printed and furnished free of charge to any employer or employee such blank forms as it shall deem requisite to facilitate or promote the efficient administration of this act. Such blanks shall also be furnished by the board to the clerk of the circuit court who shall furnish the same to any employer or employee free of charge, but subject, however, to any rules and regulations the board shall make relating thereto.

Rules.

Powers.

Blanks.

Sec. 30 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). If the employer and the injured employee reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act, a memorandum of the agreement shall be filed with the board, and, if approved by it, thereupon the memorandum shall for all purposes be enforceable under the provisions of section 39, unless modified as provided in section 37.

Agreements.

Such agreements shall be approved by the board only when the terms conform to the provisions of act 221 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1915, as amended.

No agreement between the parties for a lesser sum than that which may be determined by the board to be due shall operate as a bar to the determination of the controversy upon its merits, or to the award of a larger sum, if it be determined by the board that the amount agreed upon is less than the injured employee or his dependents are properly entitled to receive

Sec. 31 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). If the compensation is not settled by agreement, the board shall upon the filing with the board of a copy of the claim for compensation allow a full trial and shall make an award which shall be filed with the record of proceedings, and shall state its conclusions of fact and rulings of law and shall immediately send to the parties a copy of the award: Provided, however, That at any time prior to the filing with the board of a copy of the claim for compensation, either party may make application to the board for the formation of a committee of arbitration. Such committee shall consist of three members, one of whom shall be a member of the industrial accident board, or appointed by it, who shall act as chairman. The other two members shall be named, respectively, by the parties. If a vacancy occurs, it shall be filled in the same way as the original appointment.

Awards.

Committee of arbitration.

Sec. 32. Immediately after such application the board shall designate one of its members, or a substitute, to act as chairman of the committee of arbitration, and shall request the parties to appoint their respective representatives. If within seven days after such request, or after a vacancy has occurred, either party does not appoint his representative the board shall fill the vacancy and notify the parties to that effect.

How formed.

Sec. 33. The committee on arbitration shall make such inquiries and investigations as it shall deem necessary. The hearings of the committee, unless otherwise agreed, shall be held in the city or town where the injury occurred if within this Territory, and the award of the committee, together with a statement of its findings of fact, rulings of law, and any other matters pertinent to the question arising before it, shall be filed with the industrial accident board of the respective county. A copy of the award shall be immediately sent to the parties. Unless a claim for a review is filed by either party within ten days after the sending of the award, it shall be enforceable under the provisions of section 39.

Hearings and awards.

Sec. 34 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). Each industrial accident board may appoint a duly qualified impartial physician to examine the injured employee and to report.

Medical examination.

- Fees and ex- Sec. 35. The fees and expenses of arbitrators under section 33 and penses. of physicians under section 34 shall be paid from the funds appropriated by the legislature for the use of the respective boards.
- Review of Sec. 36. If an application for review is made to any board, or if the award. committee fails to make an award within thirty days after its formation, the board shall allow a full trial and shall make an award which shall be filed with the record of proceedings, and shall state its conclusions of fact and rulings of law, and shall immediately send to the parties a copy of the award.
- Modification. Sec. 37. On the application of any party on the ground of a change of conditions, the board may at any time, but not oftener than once in six months, review any agreement or award, and on such review may make an award ending, diminishing, or increasing the compensation previously agreed upon or awarded subject to the maximum and minimum provided in this act, and shall state its conclusions of fact and rulings of law, and immediately send to the parties a copy of the award, but this section shall not apply to a commutation of payments under section 18.
- Appeals. Sec. 38. An award of the board, in the absence of fraud shall be final and conclusive between the parties except as provided in section 37, unless within ten days after a copy has been sent to the parties either party appeals to the circuit court of the circuit in which said board is located. In the County of Hawaii the circuit court shall be that of the fourth circuit. In case of every such appeal the right of a trial by jury shall be deemed to be waived unless claimed within ten days from the date such appeal is entered. Said court may by proper rules prescribe the procedure to be followed in the case of such appeals.
- Enforcement of Sec. 39 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). Any party in award. interest may file in the circuit court in the jurisdiction of which the injury occurred a certified copy of a decision of the board awarding compensation, from which no appeal has been taken within the time allowed therefor, or a certified copy of a decision of the board awarding compensation from which decision an appeal has been taken, but as to which decision neither the board nor the court has ordered that the appeal therefrom shall operate as a supersedeas or stay, or a certified copy of a decision of an arbitration committee awarding compensation from which no claim for review has been filed within the time allowed therefor, or a certified copy of a memorandum of agreement approved by the board, whereupon said court shall render a decree or judgment in accordance therewith and notify the parties thereof. Such decree or judgment shall have the same effect, and all proceedings in relation thereto shall thereafter be the same, as though said decree or judgment had been rendered in a suit duly heard and determined by said court, except that there shall be no appeal therefrom: Provided, however,
That in all cases where an appeal from the decision of the board has been taken within the time provided therefor, but where neither the board nor the court has ordered that such appeal shall operate as a supersedeas or stay, the decree or judgment of said circuit court shall provide that said decree or judgment shall become null and void in the event that the court shall set aside the decision or award of the board.
- Costs. Sec. 40. If the committee of arbitration, industrial accident board, or any court before whom any proceedings are brought under this act determines that such proceedings have been brought, prosecuted, or defended without reasonable ground it may assess the whole cost of the proceedings upon the party who has so brought, prosecuted, or defended them.
- Powers of Sec. 41. All questions arising under this act, if not settled by agree-board. ment of the parties interested therein with the approval of the board, shall, except as otherwise herein provided, be determined by the board.
The decisions of the board shall be enforceable by the circuit court under the provisions of section 39. There shall be a right of appeal from decisions of the board to the circuit court as provided in section 38, but in no case shall such an appeal, either under this section or under section 38, operate as a supersedeas or stay unless the board or the circuit court shall so order.

Sec. 42. The circuit court, upon the filing with it of a certified copy of a decision of the industrial accident board ending, diminishing, or increasing compensation previously awarded, shall revoke or modify its prior decree or judgment so that it will conform to said decision. Revision of decrees.

Sec. 43. If a workman who has been hired in this Territory receives personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment, he shall be entitled to compensation according to the law of this Territory, even though such injury was received outside this Territory. Injuries outside the Territory.

If a workman who has been hired outside of this Territory is injured while engaged in his employer's business, and is entitled to compensation for such injury under the law of the State or Territory where he was hired, he shall be entitled to enforce against his employer his rights in this Territory if his rights are such that they can reasonably be determined and dealt with by the board and the court in this Territory.

Sec. 44. All rights of compensation granted by this act shall have the same preference or priority for the whole thereof against the assets of the employer as is allowed by law for unpaid wages for labor. Preferences.

Sec. 45 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). No claims for compensation under this act shall be assignable, and all compensation and claims therefor shall be exempt from all claims of creditors. Claims of attorneys and of physicians for services under this act shall not be a valid claim against the person to or for whom said services were rendered unless and until approved by the board. Assignments.
Fees.

Sec. 46. Employers, but not including the territorial or the municipal bodies mentioned in section 2, shall secure compensation to their employees in one of the following ways: Security for payments.

(1) By insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation with any stock corporation or mutual association authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this Territory; or

(2) By obtaining and keeping in force guarantee insurance with any company authorized to do such guarantee business within the Territory; or

(3) By depositing and maintaining with the territorial treasurer security satisfactory to the board securing the payment by said employer of compensation according to the terms of this act.

(4) Upon furnishing satisfactory proof to the board of his solvency and financial ability to pay the compensation and benefits herein provided, no insurance or security shall be required, and the employer shall make such payments directly to his employees as they may become entitled to receive under the terms and conditions of this act.

Any person who willfully misrepresents any fact in order to obtain the benefits of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Any decision of the board rendered under the provisions of subdivisions 3 and 4 of this section with respect to the amount of security required or refusing to permit no security to be given shall be subject to review on appeal by the circuit court in like manner as appeals are permitted under section 38 of this act.

Sec. 47 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). If the insurance so effected is not under subdivisions 3 or 4 of section 46 the employer shall forthwith file with the board in form prescribed by the board a notice of his insurance, together with a copy of the contract or policy of insurance. Notice of insurance.

Sec. 48. If an employer fails to comply with the provisions of section 46 he shall be liable to a penalty for every day during which such failure continues, of one dollar ($1) for every employee, to be recovered in an action brought by the chairman of the board in the name of the Territory, and the amounts so collected shall be paid into the territorial treasury and be a special fund for the use of the board. It shall be the duty of the county attorney of each county to prosecute such suits, if so requested by the board. The board may, however, in its discretion, for good cause shown, remit any such penalty in whole or in part, provided the employer in default forthwith secures compensation as provided in section 46. Failure to secure compensation.

- Furthermore, if any employer shall be in default under section 46, for a period of thirty days, he may be enjoined by the circuit court from carrying on his business while such default continues.
- Provisions of policies. of Sec. 49 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). Every policy of insurance and every guarantee contract covering the liability of the employer for compensation, whether issued by a stock company, or by a mutual association authorized to transact workmen's compensation or guarantee insurance in this Territory shall cover the entire liability of the employer to his employees covered by the policy or contract, and also shall contain a provision setting forth the right of the employees to enforce in their own names either by at any time filing a separate claim or by at any time making the insurance carrier a party to the original claim, the liability of the insurance carrier in whole or in part for the payment of such compensation: Provided, however, That payment in whole or in part of such compensation by either the employer or the insurance carrier shall, to the extent thereof, be a bar to the recovery against the other of the amount so paid.
- From and after the thirtieth day of June, 1918, all insurance policies shall be of a standard form, said form to be designated by and approved by the commissioner of insurance of the Territory of Hawaii. No policy of insurance different in form from said designated and approved form shall be approved by the board.
- Knowledge of employer. of Sec. 50. Every such policy and contract shall contain a provision that, as between the employee and the insurance carrier, the notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the employer shall be deemed notice or knowledge, as the case may be, on the part of the insurance carrier; that jurisdiction of the employer shall, for the purpose of this act, be jurisdiction of the insurance carrier, and that the insurance carrier shall in all things be bound by and subject to the orders, findings, decisions, or awards rendered against the employer for the payment of compensation under the provisions of this act.
- Insolvency of employer. of Sec. 51. Every such policy and contract shall contain a provision to the effect that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the employer and his discharge therein shall not relieve the insurance carrier from the payment of compensation for injuries or death sustained by an employee during the life of such policy or contract.
- Notice of cancellation. Sec. 52. No policy or contract of insurance or guaranty issued by a stock company or mutual association against liability arising under this act shall be canceled within the time limited in such contract for its expiration until at least ten days after notice of intention to cancel such contract, on a date specified in such notice, shall have been filed in the office of the Territorial treasurer and also served on the board and the employer.
- Public employees. Sec. 53. The Territory, and each county, and any other political subdivision of the Territory, which is liable to its employees for compensation may insure with any authorized insurance carrier.
- Burden of cost. Sec. 54. No agreement by an employee to pay any portion of the premium paid by his employer, to contribute to a benefit fund or department maintained by such employer, or to the cost of mutual or other insurance maintained for or carried for the purpose of securing compensation as herein required shall be valid; and any employer who makes a deduction for such purpose from the wages or salary of any employee entitled to the benefits of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not to exceed two hundred and fifty dollars ($250.).
- Inspections. Sec. 55. The board shall have the right to inspect the plants and establishments of all employers in the Territory, and the inspectors designated by the board shall have free access to such premises during regular working hours and at other reasonable times.
- Report of accidents. Sec. 56. Every employer shall hereafter keep a record of all injuries, fatal or otherwise, received by his employees in the course of their employment, when known to him or brought to his attention. As soon as practicable after the occurrence of an injury causing absence from work for one day or more a report thereof shall be made in writing by the employer to the board on blanks to be procured from the board for the purpose.

Upon the termination of the disability of the injured employee, the employer shall make a supplemental report upon blanks to be procured from the board for that purpose. If the disability extends beyond a period of sixty days, the employer shall report to the board at the end of such period that the injured employee is still disabled, and upon the termination of the disability shall file a final supplemental report as provided above.

The said reports shall contain the name and nature of the business of the employer, the situation of the establishment, the name, age, sex, wages, and occupation of the injured employee, and shall state the date and hour of the accident causing the injury, the nature and cause of the injury, and such other information as may be required by the board.

Any employer who refuses or neglects to make the report required by this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than twenty-five dollars ($25) for each offense.

Within sixty days after the termination of the disability of the injured employee the employer or other party liable to pay the compensation provided for by this act shall file with the board a statement showing the total payments made or to be made for compensation and for medical services for such injured employee.

SEC. 57. This act shall affect the liability of employers to employees engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or otherwise only so far as the same is permissible under the laws of the United States.

Interstate commerce.

SEC. 58. Annually on or before the first day of February the board of each county shall make a report to the governor, which shall be transmitted to the legislature and which shall include a properly classified statement of the expenses of the board, together with any other matters which the board deems proper to report, including any recommendations it may desire to make.

Reports of industrial accident boards.

SEC. 59. Whenever under this act any award, order, rule, regulation, or decision is required or authorized to be made by the board or by a committee of arbitration the action of a majority of the members of such board or committee shall be considered as the action of such board or committee, respectively, as the case may be.

Acts of majority.

SEC. 60 (as amended by act No. 227, acts of 1917). In this act, unless the context otherwise requires:

Definitions.

(a) "Employer," unless otherwise stated, includes any body of persons, corporate or unincorporated, public or private, and the legal representative of a deceased employer. It includes the owner or lessee of premises, or other person who is virtually the proprietor or operator of the business there carried on, but who, by reason of there being an independent contractor, or for any other reason, is not the direct employer of the workmen there employed. If the employer is insured it includes his insurer as far as applicable.

(b) "Workman" is used as synonymous with "employee" and means any person who has entered into the employment of, or works under contract of service or apprenticeship with, an employer. It does not include a person whose employment is purely casual or not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business, or whose remuneration from any one employer, excluding pay for overtime, exceeds thirty-six dollars ($36) a week. Any reference to a workman who has been injured shall, where the workman is dead, include a reference to his dependents as herein defined, if the context so requires, or, where the employee is a minor or incompetent, to his guardian or next friend.

(c) "Injury" or "personal injury" includes death resulting from injury within six months.

(d) The words "personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment" shall include an injury caused by the willful act of a third person directed against an employee because of his employment.

(e) "Industrial employment," in the case of private employers, includes employment only in a trade, occupation, or profession which is carried on by the employer for the sake of pecuniary gain.

Public employment means employment by the Territory, or by a county, or by any political subdivision of the Territory now existing or which may hereafter be created. It does not include the employment of public officials who are elected by popular vote or who receive salaries exceeding eighteen hundred dollars ($1,800) a year.

(f) The word "board" or words "industrial accident board," whenever used in this act, unless the context shows otherwise, shall be taken to mean the industrial accident board of the respective county.

(g) "Partial disability." Diminished ability to obtain employment owing to disfigurement resulting from an injury may be held to constitute partial disability.

(h) "Wages" shall include the market value of board, lodging, fuel, and other advantages which can be determined in money which the employee receives from the employer as a part of his remuneration. "Wages" shall not include any sums which the employer has paid to the employee to cover any special expenses entailed on him by the nature of his employment.

(i) "Insurance carrier" shall include stock corporations or mutual associations from any of which employers have obtained workmen's compensation insurance or guaranty insurance in accordance with the provisions of this act.

(j) The word "county" includes the city and county of Honolulu.

(k) Any term shall include the singular and plural and both sexes where the context so requires.

Provisions sev-erable.

SEC. 61. If any part or section of this act be decided by the courts to be unconstitutional or invalid, the same shall not affect the validity of the act as a whole or any part thereof which can be given effect without the part so decided to be unconstitutional or invalid.

False representations.

SEC. 62. If for the purpose of obtaining any benefit or payment under the provisions of this act, either for himself or for any other person, anyone willfully makes a false statement or representation, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a fine of not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars ($250).

Prior injuries.

SEC. 63. The provisions of this act shall not apply to injuries sustained, or accidents which occur, prior to the taking effect hereof.

Rules of construction.

SEC. 64. (a) The rule that statutes in derogation of the common law are to be strictly construed shall have no application to this act.

(b) This act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effect its general purpose to make uniform the law of those States which enact it.

Title.

SEC. 66. This act may be cited as the "Workmen's compensation act."

Approved this 28th day of April, 1915.

IDAHO.

ACTS OF 1917.

CHAPTER 81.—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

PART I.

SECTION 1. (a) This act shall apply to all public employment, as defined in section 2 and to all private employment in a trade or occupation which is carried on by the employer for the sake of pecuniary gain, not expressly excepted by the provisions of section 3.

Scope of act.

(b) The common-law system governing the remedy of workmen against employers for injuries received in industrial and public work is inconsistent with modern industrial conditions. The administration of the common-law system in such cases has produced the result that little of the cost to the employer has reached the injured workman, and that little at large expense to the public. The remedy of the workman has been uncertain, slow and inadequate. Injuries in such employments formerly occasional, have become frequent and inevitable. The welfare of the State depends upon its industries, and even more upon the welfare of its wageworkers. The State of Idaho, therefore, exercising herein its police and sovereign power, declares that all phases of the premises are withdrawn from private controversy, and sure and certain relief for injured workmen and their families and dependents is hereby provided regardless of questions of fault and to the exclusion of every other remedy, proceeding or compensation, except as is otherwise provided in this act, and to that end all civil actions, and civil causes of action for such personal injuries, and all jurisdiction of the courts of the State over such causes are hereby abolished, except as in this act provided.

Common - law system abolished.

Sec. 2. This act shall apply to employees of the State and of all counties, cities, cities under special charter or commission form of government, villages, school districts, irrigation districts, drainage districts, highway districts, road districts and other public and municipal corporations within the State; but not to public officials who are elected by popular vote or who receive salaries exceeding twenty-four hundred dollars a year. Policemen and firemen and others entitled to pensions shall be deemed employees within the meaning of this act. If, however, any policeman or fireman or other person entitled to a pension claims compensation under this act there shall be deducted from such compensation any sum which such policeman or fireman or other person may be entitled to receive from any pension or other benefit fund to which the State or municipal body may contribute.

Public employ- ment.

Sec. 3. None of the provisions of this act shall apply to:

Em ployments excluded.

- (a) Agricultural pursuits;
- (b) Household domestic service;
- (c) Casual employment;
- (d) Employment by charitable organizations; or
- (e) Employment of outworkers, or of
- (f) Members of the employer's family dwelling in his house;

Unless the employer and employee expressly agree in writing filed with the board that the provisions of the act shall apply. Any such agreement may be terminated by either party upon sixty days' notice to the other and to the board in writing prior to any accident.

PART II.

SECTION 4. If a workman receives personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of any employment covered by this act his employer or the surety shall pay compensation in the amounts and to the person or persons hereinafter specified.

Right accrues, when.

Injuries not covered. Sec. 5. No compensation shall be allowed for an injury caused (1) by the employe's willful intention to injure himself or to injure another, or (2) by his intoxication. If the employer claims an exemption or forfeiture under this section the burden of proof shall be upon him.

Remedy exclusive. Sec. 6. The rights and remedies herein granted to an employe on account of a personal injury for which he is entitled to compensation under this act shall exclude all other rights and remedies of such employe, his personal representatives, dependents, or next of kin, at common law or otherwise, on account of such injury.

Employers, who hire workmen within this State to work outside of the State, may agree with such workmen that the remedies under this act shall be exclusive as regards injuries received outside this State by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment; and all contracts of hiring in this State shall be presumed to include such an agreement.

Injuries by third persons. Sec. 7. When an injury for which compensation is payable under this act shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employe may, at his option, either claim compensation under this act or obtain damages from or proceed at law against such other person to recover damages; and if compensation is claimed and awarded under this act any employer having paid the compensation or having become liable therefor shall be subrogated to the rights of the injured employe to recover against that person: Provided, If the employer shall recover from such other person damages in excess of the compensation already paid or awarded to be paid under this act, then any such excess shall be paid to the injured employe less the employer's expenses and costs of action.

Contracting out. Sec. 8. No contract, rule, regulation, or devise whatsoever shall operate to relieve the employer in whole or in part from any liability created by this act, other than as provided in sections 9 and 17.

Substitute systems. Sec. 9. With the approval of the board, an employer who is subject to the provisions of this act, may enter into an agreement with his employes to provide a system of compensation or benefits in lieu of the compensation provided by this act, subject, however, to the following restrictions:

(a) The benefits to injured employes shall be at least equivalent to those herein provided.

(b) If contributions are required from employes the additional benefits shall be commensurate with such contributions.

(c) If acceptance of such substitute system is made a condition of employment, equitable provision shall be made for the withdrawal of employes from it and the distribution of its assets. An employer who is authorized to substitute a plan under the provisions of this section shall give his employes notice thereof in the form prescribed by the board and a statement of the plan approved shall be filed with the board. Copies of settlements made under the provisions of this section shall be filed with the board.

PART III.

Compensation for death. SECTION 10. If death results from the injury within two years, the employer or the surety shall pay to the person entitled to compensation or, if there are none, then to the personal representative of the deceased employe, burial expenses not to exceed one hundred dollars; and shall also pay to or for the following persons for the following periods, a weekly compensation equal to the following percentages of the deceased employe's average weekly wages as defined in section 24:

(a) To the dependent widow or widower, if there be no dependent children, forty-five per cent.

(b) To the dependent widow or widower, if there be a dependent child or children, fifty-five per cent for such widow or widower and children. Such compensation to the widow or widower shall be for the use and benefit of such widow or widower and of the dependent children, and the board may from time to time apportion such compensation between them in such way as it deems best. If a child has a guardian other than the surviving widow or widower, the compensation payable on account of such child shall be paid to such guardian.

(c) If there be no dependent widow or widower, but a dependent child or children, twenty-five per cent for one child and ten per cent for each additional child, not to exceed a total of fifty-five per cent to be divided equally among such children if more than one.

(d) To the parents, if one be wholly dependent for support upon the deceased employee at the time of his death and the other is not dependent to any extent, twenty-five per cent; if both are wholly dependent, twenty per cent to each; if one be or both are partly dependent, a proportionate amount in the discretion of the board.

The above percentages shall be paid if there be no dependent widow, widower, or child. If there be a widow, widower, or child, there shall be paid so much of the above percentages as, when added to the total percentages payable to the widow, widower, and children, will not exceed a total of fifty-five per cent.

(e) To the brothers, sisters, grandparents, and grandchildren, if one be wholly dependent upon the deceased employee for support at the time of his death, twenty per cent to such dependent; if more than one be wholly dependent, thirty per cent, divided among such dependents share and share alike; if there be no one of them wholly dependent, but one or more partly dependent, ten per cent divided among such dependents share and share alike.

The above percentages shall be paid if there be no dependent widow, widower, child or parent. If there be a dependent widow, widower, child, or parent, there shall be paid so much of the above percentages as, when added to the total percentage payable to the widow, widower, children, and dependent parents, will not exceed a total of fifty-five per cent.

(f) In case there are two or more classes of persons entitled to compensation under this section and the apportionment of such compensation, above provided, would result in injustice, the board may, in its discretion, modify the apportionment to meet the requirements of the case.

(g) In case there are no dependents of the deceased employee, the employer shall pay into the State treasury to be deposited in the industrial administration fund the sum of one thousand dollars.

Sec. 11. The following persons, and they only, shall be deemed dependents and entitled to compensation under the provisions of this act:

A child if under 18 years of age, or incapable of self-support and unmarried, whether actually dependent upon the deceased or not.

The widow only if living with the deceased, or actually dependent wholly or partially, upon him.

The widower only if incapable of self-support and actually dependent, wholly or partially, upon the deceased at the time of her injury.

A parent or grandparent only if actually dependent, wholly or partially, upon the deceased.

A grandchild, brother, or sister only if under 18 years of age, or incapable of self-support, and wholly dependent upon the deceased.

The relation of dependency must exist at the time of the injury.

Sec. 12. The compensation herein provided for shall be payable during the following periods:

To a widow, until death or remarriage, but in no case to exceed 400 weeks.

To a widower, during disability or until remarriage, but in no case to exceed 400 weeks.

To or for a child, until 18 years of age, but in the case of a child incapable of self-support and unmarried as long as so incapable, but in no case to exceed 400 weeks beyond said age of 18 years.

To a parent or grandparent, during the continuation of a condition of actual dependency, but in no case to exceed 400 weeks.

To or for a grandchild, brother, or sister, during dependency as hereinbefore defined, but in no case to exceed 400 weeks.

Upon the cessation of compensation under this section to or on account of any person, the compensation of the remaining persons

Dependents.

Periods of compensation.

entitled to compensation for the unexpired part of the period, during which their compensation is payable shall be that which such persons would have received if they had been the only persons entitled to compensation at the time of the decedent's death.

Aliens.

Sec. 13. Except as otherwise provided by treaty, whenever, under the provisions of this act, compensation is payable to a dependent who is an alien not residing in the United States, the employer shall pay fifty per cent of the compensation herein otherwise provided to such dependent and the remaining fifty per cent into the State treasury to be deposited in the industrial administration fund. But if a non-resident alien dependent is a citizen of a Government having a compensation law which excludes citizens of the United States, either resident or nonresident, from partaking of the benefit of such law in as favorable a degree as herein extended to nonresident aliens, then all of the compensation which would otherwise be payable to such dependent shall be paid into the industrial administration fund.

Definitions.

Sec. 14. As used in the foregoing sections the term child includes stepchildren, adopted children, posthumous children, and acknowledged illegitimate children, but does not include married children unless dependent. The terms "brother" and "sister" include step-brothers and stepsisters, half brothers and half sisters, and brothers and sisters by adoption, but do not include married brothers nor married sisters unless dependent. The term "grandchild" includes children of adopted children and children of stepchildren; but does not include stepchildren of children, stepchildren of stepchildren, stepchildren of adopted children, nor married grandchildren, unless dependent. The term "parent" includes step-parents and parents by adoption. The term "grandparent" includes parents of parents by adoption, but does not include parents of step-parents, step-parents of parents, nor step-parents of step-parents. The words "adopted" and "adoption" as used in this act shall include cases where persons are treated as adopted as well as those of legal adoption.

Maximum and minimum benefits.

Sec. 15. In computing death benefits the total weekly compensation shall be subject to a maximum of twelve dollars per week and a minimum of six dollars per week, but if at the time of the injury the employee received wages of less than six dollars per week, then the compensation shall not exceed the full amount of such wages.

Payment of death benefits by an employer in good faith to a dependent subsequent in right to another or other dependents shall protect and discharge the employer unless and until such dependent or dependents prior in right shall have given him notice of his or their claim. In case the employer is in doubt as to the respective rights of rival claimants he may apply to the board to decide between them.

In case death occurs after a period of disability, either total or partial, the period of disability shall be deducted from the total periods of compensation respectively stated in section 12.

The compensation of a person who is insane shall be paid to his or her guardian.

Medical, etc., attendance.

Sec. 16. The employer shall provide for an injured employee such reasonable medical, surgical or other attendance or treatment, nurse and hospital service, medicines, crutches and apparatus, as may be required or be requested by the employee immediately after an injury, and for a reasonable time thereafter. If the employer fails to provide the same, the injured employee may do so at the expense of the employer. All fees and other charges for such treatment and services and compensation therefor shall be subject to regulation by the board. The pecuniary liability of the employer for the treatment and other service herein required shall be limited to such charges as prevail in the same community for similar treatment of injured persons of a like standard of living when such treatment is paid for by the injured person. In determining what fees and charges are reasonable, the board shall consider the increased security of payment afforded by this act.

Hospital contracts.

Sec. 17. Nothing in this act shall be construed as preventing employers and workmen from waiving the provisions of section 16 of this act and entering into mutual contracts or agreements providing for hospital benefits and accommodations to be furnished to the employee.

Such hospital contracts or agreements must provide for medical, hospital and surgical attendance for such employee for sickness contracted during the employment (except venereal diseases and sickness as a result of intoxication), as well as for injuries received arising out of and in the course of the employment.

No assessment of employee for such hospital contracts or benefits shall exceed one dollar per month for each employee, except in cases where it shall appear to the satisfaction of the board, after a hearing had for that purpose, that the actual cost of such service exceeds the said sum of one dollar per month, and any such finding of the board may be modified at any time when justified by a change of conditions, or otherwise, either upon the board's own motion, or the application of any party in interest.

Employees' payments.

No profit, directly or indirectly, shall be made by any employer as a result of such hospital contract or assessment. It is the purpose and intent of this act to provide that each and every hospital maintained wholly or in part by payments from workmen, which furnishes treatment and services to employees for sickness and injury, as provided in this act shall be under the supervision of the board as to services and treatment rendered such employees, and shall, from time to time make reports of such services, attendances, treatments, receipts and disbursements as the board may require.

SEC. 18. Where the injury causes total disability for work the employer during such disability, but not including the first seven days thereof, shall pay the injured employee a weekly compensation equal to fifty-five per cent of his average weekly wages, but not more than twelve dollars nor less than six dollars a week for a period not exceeding 400 weeks, and thereafter a weekly compensation of six dollars a week. In no case shall the weekly payments continue after the disability ends.

Total disability.

In case of an employee whose average monthly wages are less than six dollars a week the weekly compensation shall be the full amount of such average weekly wages, but where the disability is permanent the weekly compensation in such cases shall be six dollars.

In case the total disability begins after a period of partial disability, the period of partial disability shall be deducted from such total period of 400 weeks.

SEC. 19. In the case of the following injuries in the absence of conclusive proof to the contrary the disability caused thereby shall be deemed total and permanent; to wit:

Presumptions.

- (a) The total and permanent loss of sight in both eyes.
- (b) The loss of both feet at or above the ankle.
- (c) The loss of both hands at or above the wrist.
- (d) The loss of one hand and one foot.

(e) An injury to the spine resulting in permanent and complete paralysis of both legs or arms or of one leg and one arm.

- (f) An injury to the skull resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity.

The above enumeration is not to be taken as exclusive.

SEC. 20. Where the injury causes partial disability for work, the employer, during such disability and for a period not exceeding 150 weeks beginning on the eighth day of disability, shall pay the injured workman a weekly compensation equal to fifty-five per cent of the difference between his average weekly wages before the accident and the weekly wages he is most probably able to earn thereafter, taking into account the nature of the physical injury or disfigurement, the occupation of the injured employee and his age at the time of the injury, not exceeding, however, the difference between the wages which the injured employee is most probably able to earn after the injury and the maximum compensation allowed in cases of total disability: Provided, however, That such a sum shall be paid as compensation in each case, which, when added to the wages which the injured employee is able to earn after the injury, will equal the minimum compensation allowed in cases of total disability. In no case shall the weekly payments continue after the disability ends, and in case the partial disability begins after a period of total disability the period of total disability shall be deducted from such total period of 150 weeks.

Partial disability.

Schedule.

SEC. 21. In the case of the following injuries the compensation shall be fifty-five per cent of the average weekly wages, but not more than twelve dollars, to be paid weekly for the periods stated against such injuries respectively, to wit:

| For the loss of— | For the following number of weeks. |
|--|---------------------------------------|
| One arm at or near the shoulder..... | 200 |

| One toe other than great toe at proximal joint..... | 6 |
| One toe other than great toe at second or distal joint..... | 3 |
| One eye by enucleation..... | 120 |
| Total blindness of one eye..... | 100 |

In all other cases in this class, compensation shall bear such relation to the amount stated in the above schedule as the disabilities bear to those produced by the injuries named in the schedule.

Hernia.

SEC. 22. In all cases of hernia resulting from injury alleged to have been sustained in the course of and resulting from employee's employment, it must be proven:

(1) That it was an injury resulting in hernia; (2) that the hernia appeared suddenly and immediately following the injury; (3) that the hernia did not exist in any degree prior to the injury for which compensation is claimed.

Malingering.

SEC. 23. If a partially disabled employee refuses to seek suitable work or refuses or neglects to work after suitable work is offered to, procured by, or secured for him, he shall not be entitled to any compensation.

Computation of wages.

SEC. 24. Average weekly wages shall be computed in such a manner as is best calculated to give the average weekly earnings of the workman during the twelve months preceding his injury: Provided, That where by reason of the shortness of the time during which the workman has been in the employment, or the casual nature of the employment, it is impracticable to compute the rate of remuneration, regard may be had to the average weekly earnings which, during the twelve months previous to the injury, were being earned by a person in the same grade employed at the same work by the employer of the injured workman, or if there is no person so employed, by a person in the same grade employed in the same class of employment and in the same district.

If a workman at the time of the injury is regularly employed in a higher grade of work than formerly during the year and with large[r] regular wages, only such larger wages shall be taken into consideration in computing his average weekly wages.

SEC. 25. Any payments made by the employer or his insurer to the injured workman during the period of disability, or to his dependents, which, by the terms of this act, were not due and payable when made, may, subject to the approval of the board, be deducted from the amount to be paid as compensation: Provided, That in case of disability such deduction shall be made by shortening the period during which compensation must be paid, and not by reducing the amount of the weekly payments. Voluntary payments.

SEC. 26. The board, upon the application of either party, may in its discretion, having regard to the welfare of the employee and the convenience of the employer, authorize compensation to be paid monthly or quarterly instead of weekly. Times of payments.

SEC. 27. Whenever the board determines that it is for the best interest of all parties, the liability of the employer for compensation may, on application to the board by any party interested, be discharged in whole or in part by the payment of one or more lump sums to be determined by or with the approval of the board. Lump sums.

Any such lump-sum payment shall not exceed the present value of all future payments of compensation computed at four per cent true discount compounded annually. The probability of the beneficiary's death before the expiration of the period [within] which he is entitled to compensation shall be determined according to the American experience table of mortality; but in the case of compensation to the widow or widower of the deceased employee, such lump sum shall not exceed 100 weeks' compensation. The probability of the happening of any other contingency affecting the amount or duration of the compensation shall be disregarded. The board shall not commute any payments to a widow or widower except at her or his request.

SEC. 28. Whenever for any reason the board deems it expedient any lump sum which is to be paid as provided in section 27 shall be paid by the employer to some suitable person or corporation appointed by the probate court as trustee to administer or apply the same for the benefit of the person or persons entitled thereto in the manner provided by the board. The receipt of such trustee for the amount so paid shall discharge the employer or anyone else who is liable therefor. Trustees.

PART IV.

SEC. 29. After an injury and during the period of disability, the workman, if so requested by his employer, or ordered by the board, shall submit himself to examination, at reasonable times and places, to a duly qualified physician or surgeon designated and paid by the employer. The workman shall have the right to have a physician or surgeon designated and paid by himself present at such examination, which right, however, shall not be construed to deny to the employer's physician the right to visit the injured workman at all reasonable times and under all reasonable conditions during total disability. If a workman refuses to submit himself to or in any way obstructs such examination, his right to take or prosecute any proceeding under this act shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases, and no compensation shall be payable for the period during which such refusal or obstruction continues. If an injured workman persists in insanitary, injurious or unreasonable practices which tend to imperil or retard his recovery, the board may, in its discretion, order the compensation of such workman to be suspended or reduced. Medical examinations.

SEC. 30. No proceedings under this act for compensation for any injury shall be maintained unless a notice of the injury shall have been given to the employer as soon as practicable after the happening Notice and claim.

thereof, and unless a claim for compensation with respect to such injury shall have been made within one year after the date of the injury; or, in the case of death, then within one year after such death, whether or not a claim had been made by the employee himself for compensation. Such notice and such claim may be given or made by any person claiming to be entitled to compensation or by some one on his behalf. If payments of compensation have been made voluntarily the making of a claim within said period shall not be required.

Form.

SEC. 31. Such notice and such claim shall be in writing, and such notice shall contain the name and address of the employee, and shall state in ordinary language the time, place, nature, and cause of the injury, and shall be signed by him or by a person on his behalf, or, in the event of his death, by any one or more of his dependents, or by a person on their behalf. The notice may include the claim.

Giving of notice.

SEC. 32. Any notice under this act shall be given to the employer, or, if the employer be a partnership, then to any one of the partners. If the employer be a corporation, then the notice may be given to any agent of the corporation upon whom process may be served, or to any officer of the corporation, or any agent in charge of the business at the place where the injury occurred. Such notice shall be given by delivering it or by sending it by mail by registered letter addressed to the employer at his or its last known residence or place of business. The foregoing provisions shall apply to the making of a claim.

Sufficiency.

SEC. 33. A notice given under the provisions of section thirty of this act shall not be held invalid or insufficient by reason of any inaccuracy in stating the time, place, nature, or cause of the injury, or otherwise, unless it is shown that the employer was in fact misled to his injury thereby. Want of notice or delay in giving notice shall not be a bar to proceedings under this act if it be shown that the employer, his agent or representative, had knowledge of the accident, or that the employer has not been prejudiced by such delay or want of notice.

Incompetents.

SEC. 34. No limitation of time provided in this act shall run as against any person who is mentally incompetent or a minor dependent so long as he has no committee, guardian, or next friend.

PART V.

Industrial accident board created.

SECTION 35. A board is hereby created to be known as the industrial accident board, consisting of three members, to be appointed by the governor, with the approval of the senate. The term of office of each member of said board shall be six years, excepting that of the members of said board first appointed, one shall be appointed to hold office until the second Monday of January, 1919, one until the second Monday of January, 1921, and one until the second Monday of January, 1923. Not more than one of the appointees to such board shall be a person who, on account of his previous vocations, employment or affiliations can be classed as a representative of employers, and not more than one of such appointees shall be a person who, on account of his previous vocation, employment or affiliations can be classed as a representative of workmen; not more than two of the members of the board shall belong to the same political party. Any vacancy during a term may be filled by appointment by the governor with the approval of the senate. If any appointment is made during the recess of the legislature it shall be subject to confirmation by the senate during its next ensuing session. After due notice and public hearing the governor may remove any commissioner for cause and the good of the public service.

No person shall be eligible to appointment as a member of the board unless he shall be at least thirty (30) years of age, a qualified elector of the State of Idaho and a resident of Idaho not less than three years consecutively next preceding his appointment, of good moral character and of a previous experience and training to qualify him to efficiently and justly discharge the duties of his office.

No person accepting appointment as a member of the board and qualifying as such shall be eligible to election or appointment to any public office during any calendar year which shall include any part of the term of membership on the board for which he may have been appointed and qualified and in which such election shall be held or appointment made. Resignation from membership on the board shall not relieve such member from any of the provisions of this act, and the acceptance of appointment and qualification as a member of the board shall constitute a valid waiver of any and all statutory or constitutional rights to or eligibility for holding any other public office during such time.

Sec. 36. The salary of each member of the board shall be three thousand dollars per year. Salaries.

Sec. 37. A majority of the board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The members of the board shall select one of their number as chairman. A vacancy on the board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to perform all the duties and exercise all the powers and authority of the board. The act of a majority of the board, when in session as a board, shall be deemed to be the act of the board, but any investigation, inquiry or hearing which the board has power to undertake or to hold may be undertaken or held by or before any member thereof or any examiner or referee appointed by the board for that purpose. Every finding, order, decision or award made by any commissioner, examiner, or referee pursuant to such investigation, inquiry or hearing, when approved and confirmed by the board and ordered filed in its office shall be deemed to be the finding, order, decision or award of the board. General provisions.

Sec. 38. The board shall have a seal bearing the following inscription: "Industrial accident board, State of Idaho, seal." The seal shall be affixed to all writs and authentications of copies of records and to such other instruments as the board shall direct. All courts shall take judicial notice of said seal. Seal.

Sec. 39. The board shall keep its principal office in the capital of the State and shall be provided with suitable rooms, necessary office furniture, stationery and other supplies. For the purpose of holding sessions in other places the board shall have power to rent temporary quarters. Office.

Sec. 40. The board shall employ such assistance and other employees as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. Employees.

Sec. 41. All officers and employees of the board shall receive such compensation for their services as may be fixed by the board, shall hold office at the pleasure of the board, and shall perform such duties as are imposed on them by law or by the board. Salaries, etc.

Sec. 42. The salaries of every person holding office or employment under the board, as fixed by law or by the board, shall be paid monthly after being approved by the board upon claims therefor to be audited approved by the State board of examiners. Payment of salaries.

Sec. 43. All expenses incurred by the board pursuant to the provisions of this act, including the actual and necessary traveling and other expenses and disbursements of the members thereof, its officers and employees incurred while on business of the board, either within or without the State, shall, unless otherwise provided in this act, be paid from the industrial administration fund after being approved by the board upon claims therefor to be audited and approved by the State board of examiners. Expenses.

Sec. 44. The board shall cause to be printed such blank forms as it shall deem requisite to facilitate or promote the efficient administration of this act. It shall provide a book in which shall be entered the minutes of all its proceedings, a book of record in which shall be recorded all awards made by the board and such other books or records as it shall deem requisite for the purpose and efficient administration of this act. All such records are to be kept in the office of the board. Forms.

Sec. 45. The board shall have the power and authority to publish and distribute at its discretion from time to time, in addition to its annual report, such further reports and bulletins covering its operations, proceedings and matters relative to its work as it may deem advisable. Reports.

Sec. 46. The board shall have power and authority to charge and collect the following fees: Fees.

(1) For copies of papers and records not required to be certified or otherwise authenticated by the board, fifteen cents for each folio; for certified copies of official documents and orders filed in its office or of the evidence taken at any hearing, twenty cents for each folio.

(2) To fix and collect reasonable charges for publications issued under its authority.

(3) The fees charged and collected under this section shall be paid monthly into the treasury of the State to the credit of the industrial administration fund and shall be accompanied by a detailed statement thereof.

Legal adviser. SEC. 47. The attorney general shall be the legal adviser of the board and shall represent it in all proceedings whenever so requested by the board or any member thereof.

PART VI.

Procedure. SECTION 48. Process and procedure under this act shall be as summary and simple as reasonably may be and as far as possible in accordance with the rules of equity. The board or any member thereof shall have the power to subpoena witnesses, administer oaths, and to examine such of the books and records of the parties to a proceeding as relate to the questions in dispute. The district court shall have power to enforce by proper proceedings the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production and examination of books, papers and records. Upon request of any party, a stenographic report of the testimony at any hearing shall be taken at the cost of such party.

Witnesses subpoenaed by the board or a member thereof shall be allowed such fees and traveling expenses as are allowed in civil actions, to be paid by the party in whose interest such witnesses are subpoenaed.

Agreements. SEC. 49. If the employer and the injured employee reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act, a memorandum of the agreement shall be filed with the board and, if approved by it, thereupon the memorandum shall for all purposes be enforceable under the provisions of section 58 unless modified as provided in section 56.

Such agreements shall be approved by the board only when the terms conform to the provisions of this act.

Committees of arbitration. SEC. 50. If the compensation is not settled by agreement, either party may make an application to the board for the formation of a committee of arbitration. Such committee shall consist of three members, one of whom shall be a member of the industrial accident board, or appointed by it, who shall act as chairman. The other two members shall be named, respectively, by the parties. If a vacancy occurs it shall be filled in the same way as the original appointment.

Appointment. SEC. 51. Immediately after such application the board shall designate one of its members, or a substitute, to act as chairman of the committee of arbitration, and shall request the parties to appoint their respective representatives. If within seven days after such request, or after a vacancy has occurred, either party does not appoint his representative the board shall fill the vacancy and notify the parties to that effect.

Hearings and awards. SEC. 52. The committee on arbitration shall make such inquiries and investigations as it shall deem necessary. The hearings of the committee, unless otherwise agreed, shall be held in the city or town where the injury occurred if within this State, and the award of the committee, together with a statement of its findings of fact, ruling of law, and any other matters pertinent to the questions arising before it, shall be filed with the industrial accident board. A copy of the award shall be immediately sent to the parties. Unless a claim for a review is filed by either party within thirty days the award shall be enforceable under the provisions of section 56.

Medical examination. SEC. 53. The industrial accident board, or any member thereof, may appoint a duly qualified impartial physician to examine the injured employee and to report. The fee for this service shall be ten dollars and traveling expenses, but the board may allow additional reasonable amounts in extraordinary cases.

Fees. SEC. 54. The fees and expenses of arbitrators under section 52 and of physicians under section 53 shall be paid by the State, as the other expenses of the board are paid.

Review. SEC. 55. If an application for review is made to the board, or if the committee fails to make an award within thirty days after its formation, the board shall allow a full trial and shall make an award which shall be filed with the record of proceedings and shall state its conclusions of fact and rulings of law, and shall immediately send to the parties a copy of the award.

Sec. 56. On the application of any party on the ground of a change in conditions, the board may at any time, but not oftener than once in six months, review any agreement or award, and on such review may make an award ending, diminishing, or increasing the compensation previously agreed upon or awarded, subject to the maximum and minimum provided in this act, and shall state its conclusions of fact and rulings of law, and immediately send to the parties a copy of the award, but this section shall not apply to a commutation of payments under section 27.

Modifications.

Sec. 57. An award of the board in the absence of fraud, shall be final and conclusive between the parties except as provided in section 56, unless within thirty days after a copy has been sent to the parties, either party appeals to the district court. On such appeal the jurisdiction of said court shall be limited to a review of questions of law.

Appeals.

Sec. 58. Any party in interest may file in the district court for the county in which the injury occurred, if such injury occurred within the State, otherwise in the district court for the county where the employer and employee resides, a certified copy of a decision of the board awarding compensation, from which no appeal has been taken within the time allowed therefor, or a certified copy of a memorandum of agreement approved by the board, whereupon said court shall render a decree or judgment in accordance therewith and notify the parties thereof. Such decree or judgment shall have the same effect and all proceedings in relation thereto shall thereafter be the same, as though said decree or judgment had been rendered in a suit duly heard and determined by said court, except that there shall be no appeal therefrom, and the same shall not constitute a lien upon the real property of the employer unless execution shall be levied thereon.

Enforcement.

Sec. 59. If the committee of arbitration, the board or any court before whom any proceedings are brought under this act, determines that such proceedings have been brought, prosecuted, or defended without reasonable ground, he or it may assess the whole cost of the proceedings upon the party who has so brought, prosecuted or defended them.

Costs.

Sec. 60. All questions arising under this act, if not settled by agreement of the parties interested therein, with the approval of the board, shall, except as otherwise herein provided, be determined by the board. The decisions of the board shall be enforceable by the district court under the provisions of section 58. There shall be a right of appeal from decisions of the board to the district court as provided in section 57, but in no case shall such an appeal, either under this section or under section 57, operate as a supersedeas or stay unless the board or the district court shall so order.

Powers of board.

Sec. 61. The district court, upon the filing with it of a certified copy of a decision of the board, ending, diminishing, or increasing compensation previously awarded, shall revoke or modify its prior decree or judgment so it will conform to said decision.

Revision of decrees.

Sec. 62. If a workman who has been hired in this State receives personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment, he shall be entitled to compensation according to the law of this State even though such injury was received outside of this State.

Injuries outside of State.

If a workman who has been hired outside of this State is injured while engaged in his employer's business, and is entitled to compensation for such injury under the law of the State where he was hired, he shall be entitled to enforce against his employer his rights in this State if his rights are such that they can reasonably be determined and dealt with by the board and the courts in this State.

PART VII.

SECTION 63. All rights of compensation granted by this act shall have the same preference or priority for the whole thereof against the assets of the employer as is allowed by law for any unpaid wages for labor.

Status of awards.

Exemption, etc., of payments. SEC. 64. No claims for compensation under this act shall be assignable, and all compensation and claims therefor shall be exempt from all claims of creditors. Claims of attorneys and of physicians for services under this act shall be subject to the approval of the board.

PART VIII.

Security of pay- SECTION 65. Employers, but not including the State or the municipal ments. bodies mentioned in section 2, shall secure compensation to their employees in one of the following ways:

(a) By insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation in the State insurance fund, or

(b) By depositing and maintaining with the State insurance manager security satisfactory to the board securing the payment by said employer of compensation according to the terms of this act. Such security may consist of a surety bond or guaranty contract with any company authorized to do surety or guaranty business in Idaho and having a sufficient deposit with the State treasurer upon which execution may lawfully be issued against said company on behalf of any workman secured under said bonds or contracts.

No company shall be permitted to write surety bonds or guarantee contracts covering the liability hereunder of employees of this State unless it shall have been authorized to do business under the laws of this State and until it shall have received the approval of the board. The board is hereby authorized to make and change such reasonable regulations as they may deem necessary with reference to the capital stock, surplus, and reserves of such companies, to the end that the workmen secured under this act by any such company, shall be adequately protected. The approval by the board of any such company, may be withdrawn if it shall appear to the board that workmen secured therein under this act are not fully protected.

The board is also authorized to make and change such rules and regulations as they shall deem necessary to secure the prompt payment of compensation awards under this act, and shall withdraw their approval of any company, whenever it appears that such company unnecessarily delays the payment of such awards.

Notice. SEC. 66. If the security so effected is not with the State insurance fund, the employer shall forthwith file with the State insurance manager, in form prescribed by the board, a notice of his security.

Notice to be posted. SEC. 67. Every employer who has complied with section 65 of this act shall post and maintain in a conspicuous place or places in and about his place or places of business typewritten or printed notices in form prescribed by the board, stating the fact that he has complied with the law as to securing the payment of compensation to his employees and their dependents in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Failure to secure compensation. SEC. 68. If an employer subject to the provisions of this act fails to comply with the provisions of section 65 he shall be liable to a penalty for every day during which such failure continues, of one dollar for every employee to be recovered in an action brought by the State insurance manager in the name of the State or in his own name, and the amount so collected shall be paid into the State insurance fund.

The State insurance manager may, however, in his discretion, for good cause shown, remit any such penalty in whole or in part, provided, the employer in default secures compensation, as provided in section 65.

Furthermore, if any employer shall be in default under section 65 for a period of thirty days, he may be enjoined by the district court from carrying on his business while such default continued.

Provisions of contracts. SEC. 69. Every policy of insurance in the State insurance fund and every guarantee contract or surety bond covering the liability of the employer for compensation, shall cover the entire liability of the employer to his employees covered by the policy, bond, or contract, and also shall contain a provision setting forth the right of the employees to enforce in their own names either by at any time filing a separate claim or by at any time making the surety a party to the original claim, the liability of the surety in whole or in part for the payment of such compensation: Provided, however, That payment in whole or in part of such compensation by either the employer or the surety shall, to the extent thereof, be a bar to the recovery against the other of the amount so paid.

Sec. 70. Every such policy and contract shall contain a provision that, as between the employee and the surety, the notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the employer shall be deemed notice or knowledge, as the case may be, on the part of the surety; that the jurisdiction of the employer shall, for the purpose of this act, be jurisdiction of the surety, and that the surety shall in all things be bound by and subject to the orders, findings, decisions, or awards rendered against the employer for the payment of compensation under the provisions of this act. Effect of notice to employer.

Sec. 71. Every such policy and contract shall contain a provision to the effect that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the employer and his discharge therein shall not relieve the surety from the payment of compensation for injuries or death sustained by an employee during the life of such policy or contract. Insolvency.

Sec. 72. No policy of insurance or guaranty contract or surety bond issued against liability arising under this act shall be canceled within the time limited in such contract for its expiration until at least ten days after notice of intention to cancel such contract on a date specified in such notice, shall have been filed in the office of the State insurance manager, and also served on the employer. Notice of cancellation.

Sec. 73. Any sums necessary to be paid under the provisions of this act by any public corporation for premiums or compensation shall be considered to be ordinary and necessary expenses of such corporation, and the governing body of such public corporation shall make appropriation of and pay such sums whenever necessary, notwithstanding that such governing body may have failed to anticipate such ordinary and necessary expense in any budget, estimate of expenses, appropriation ordinance, or otherwise. Public corporations.

Sec. 74. No agreement by an employee to pay any portion of the premiums paid by his employer to the State insurance fund or to contribute to a benefit fund or department maintained by such employer, except as authorized by sections 9 and 17, or to the cost of other security maintained for or carried for the purpose of securing compensation as herein required shall be valid; and any employer who makes a deduction for such purpose from the wages or salary of any employee entitled to the benefits of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Deductions from wages.

PART IX.

SECTION 75. There is hereby created a fund, to be known as "The State insurance fund," for the purpose of insuring employers against liability for compensation under this workmen's compensation act and of assuring to the persons entitled thereto the compensation provided by said act. Such fund shall consist of all premiums and penalties received and paid into the fund, of property and securities acquired by and through the use of moneys belonging to the fund, and of interest earned upon moneys belonging to the fund and deposited or invested as herein provided. State insurance fund.

Such fund shall be administered by the State insurance manager without liability on the part of the State beyond the amount of such fund. Such fund shall be applicable to the payment of losses sustained on account of insurance and to the payment of compensation under the workmen's compensation act and of expenses of administering this part, which part may be cited as the "State insurance act."

Sec. 76. The governor, with the approval of the senate, shall appoint a manager of the State insurance fund, who shall hold office for the term of five years unless sooner removed by the governor for cause stated. Any vacancy in said office may be filled at any time by appointment made by the governor with the approval of the senate. If such an appointment is made during a recess of the legislature it shall be subject to confirmation by the senate at its next ensuing session. Manager.

Sec. 77. It shall be the duty of such State insurance manager to conduct the business of the State insurance fund and he is hereby vested with full authority over the said fund, and may do any and all things which are necessary or convenient in the administration Powers and duties.

- thereof, or in connection with the insurance business to be carried on by him under the provisions of this act.
- Rates. SEC. 78. The State insurance manager shall have full power to determine the rates to be charged for insurance in said fund, and to conduct all business in relation thereto, all of which business shall be conducted in his official name of State insurance manager.
- Power as to suits. SEC. 79. The State insurance manager may in his official name sue and be sued in all the courts of the State, and before the industrial accident board in all actions or proceedings arising out of anything done or offered in connection with the State insurance fund or business relating thereto.
- Contracts. SEC. 80. The State insurance manager may in his official name make contracts of insurance as herein provided and such other contracts relating to the State insurance fund as are authorized or permitted under the provisions of this act.
- Employees. SEC. 81. The State insurance manager may employ such assistants, experts, statisticians, actuaries, accountants, inspectors, clerks, and other employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act or to perform the duties imposed upon him by this act.
- Personal liability. SEC. 82. The State insurance manager shall not, nor shall any person employed by him, be personally liable in his private capacity for or on account of any act performed or contract entered into in an official capacity in good faith and without intent to defraud, in connection with the administration of the State insurance fund or affairs relating thereto.
- Salary. SEC. 83. The salary of the State insurance manager shall be four thousand per year. His salary, and the salaries or compensation of his several employees, and all expenses incurred by him shall be audited and paid in the first instance out of the State treasury in the manner prescribed for similar expenditures in other departments or branches of the State service.
- Delegation of powers. SEC. 84. The State insurance manager may act through proper deputies and may delegate to such deputies such powers as he deems necessary or convenient.
- Among the powers which may be so delegated shall be the power to enter into contracts of insurance, insuring employers against liability for compensation under the workmen's compensation act, and insuring to employees the compensation fixed by said act; also the power to make agreements, subject to the approval of the industrial accident board having jurisdiction, for the settlement of claims against said fund for compensation for injuries in accordance with the provisions of said act; also the power to determine to whom and through whom payments of such compensation shall be made; and also the power to contract with physicians, surgeons, and hospitals for medical and surgical treatment and care and nursing of injured persons entitled to compensation from said fund.
- Bond. SEC. 85. Before entering on the duties of his office the State insurance manager shall give an official bond in the sum of fifty thousand dollars and shall take and subscribe an official oath. Said bond shall approved and filed as in the case of other official bonds required of State officials.
- Custody of fund. SEC. 86. The State treasurer shall be the custodian of the State insurance fund; and all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon warrants or vouchers authorized and signed by the State insurance manager, and also signed by the State auditor. The State treasurer shall give a separate and additional bond in an amount to be fixed by the governor, and with sureties approved by him, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty as custodian of the State insurance fund. The State treasurer may deposit any portion of the said fund not needed for immediate use, in the manner and subject to all the provisions of law respecting the deposit of other State funds by him. Interest earned by such portion of the State insurance fund deposited by the State treasurer shall be collected by him and placed to the credit of the fund.
- Surplus and reserve. SEC. 87. Ten per cent of the premiums collected from employers insured in the fund shall be set aside by the State insurance manager for the creation of a surplus, until such surplus shall amount to the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, and thereafter five per cent of such premiums, until such time as in the judgment of the State insurance manager such surplus shall be sufficiently large to cover the catastrophe hazard and all other unanticipated losses. The State insurance manager shall also set up and maintain a reserve adequate to meet anticipated losses and carry all claims and policies to maturity. The amount of such surplus and reserve shall be subject to the approval of the State insurance commissioner.

Sec. 88. The State insurance manager may invest any of the surplus or reserve funds belonging to the State insurance fund in the same securities and investments authorized for investments by savings banks. All such securities or evidences of indebtedness shall be placed in the hands of the State treasurer, who shall be the custodian thereof. He shall collect the principal and interest thereof, when due, and pay the same into the State insurance fund. The State treasurer shall pay all warrants or vouchers drawn on the State insurance fund for the making of such investments when signed by the State insurance manager and by the State auditor. The State insurance manager, with the consent of the State auditor, may sell any of such securities, the proceeds thereof to be paid over to the State treasurer for said State insurance fund.

Investments.

Sec. 89. The entire expense of administering the State insurance fund shall be paid in the first instance by the State, out of moneys appropriated therefor. In the month of July, nineteen hundred eighteen, and semiannually thereafter in such month, the State insurance manager shall ascertain the just amount of expense incurred by him during the preceding calendar year, in the administration of the State insurance fund, including expense incurred for the examination, determination, and payment of losses and claims, and shall refund such amount to the State treasury.

Expenses.

Sec. 90. Employments insured in the State insurance fund shall be divided by the State insurance manager, for the purposes of the said fund, into classes. Separate accounts shall be kept of the amounts collected and expended in respect to each such class for convenience in determining equitable rates; but for the purpose of paying compensation the State insurance fund shall be deemed one and indivisible. The State insurance manager shall have power to rearrange any of the classes by withdrawing any employment embraced in it and transferring it wholly or in part to any other class, and from such employments to set up new classes in his direction [discretion]. The State insurance manager shall determine the hazards of the different classes and fix the rates of premiums therefor based upon the total pay roll and number of employees in each of such classes of employment at the lowest possible rate consistent with the maintenance of a solvent State insurance fund and the creation of a reasonable surplus and reserve; and for such purpose may adopt a system of schedule rating in such a manner as to take account of the peculiar hazard of each individual risk.

Classifications.

Sec. 91. The State insurance manager shall keep an account of the money paid in premiums by each of the several classes of employments, and the expense of administering the State insurance fund and the disbursements on account of injuries and deaths of employees in each of said classes, including the setting up of reserves adequate to meet anticipated and unexpected losses and to carry the claims to maturity; and also an account of the money received from each individual employer; and of the amount disbursed from the State insurance fund for expenses, and on account of injuries and death of the employees of such employer, including the reserves so set up.

Separate accounts.

Sec. 92. At the end of every year, and at such other times as the State insurance manager in his discretion may determine, a readjustment of the rate shall be made for each of the several classes of employments or industries. If at any time there is an aggregate balance remaining to the credit of any class of employment or industry which the State insurance manager deems may be safely and properly divided, he may in his discretion credit to each individual member of such class who shall have been a subscriber to the State insurance fund for a period of six months or more, prior to the time of such readjustment, such proportion of such balance as he is properly entitled to, having regard to his prior paid premiums since the last readjustment of rates.

Dividends.

Sec. 93. If the premiums fixed for any class and collected from its members are subsequently found by the State insurance manager to have been too small for any period, he may determine what additional premiums are required from said class for said period, and may make assessments accordingly, and each of the members of such class shall be liable to the said manager to pay such assessment so made upon him within thirty days after notice thereof.

Readjustments. SEC. 94. If the amount of premium collected from any employer at the beginning of any period is ascertained by using the estimated expenditure of wages for the period of time covered by such premium payment as a basis, an adjustment of the amount of such premium shall be made at the end of such period and the actual amount of such premium shall be determined in accordance with the amount of the actual expenditure of wages for such period; and if such wage expenditure for such period is less than the amount on which such estimated premium was collected, such employer shall be entitled to receive a refund from the State insurance fund of the difference between the amount so paid by him and the amount so found to be actually due, or to have the amount of such difference credited on succeeding premium payments at his option; and if such actual premium, when so ascertained, exceeds in amount a premium so paid by such employer at the beginning of such period, such employer shall immediately, upon being advised of the true amount of such premium due, forthwith pay to the State insurance manager an amount equal to the difference between the amount actually found to be due and the amount paid by him at the beginning of such period.

Policies. SEC. 95. (1) Every employer insuring in the State insurance fund shall receive from the State insurance manager a contract or policy of insurance in a form to be approved by the State insurance commissioner.

Payment of premiums. (2) Except as otherwise provided in this act, all premiums shall be paid by every employer who elects to insure with the State insurance fund to the State insurance manager on or before January first, nineteen hundred and eighteen, and semiannually thereafter or at such other times as may be prescribed by the State insurance manager. Receipts shall be given for such payments and the money shall be paid over to the State treasurer to the credit of the State insurance fund.

Defaults. SEC. 96. If an employer shall default in any payment required to be made by him to the State insurance fund, the amount due from him shall be collected by civil action against him in the name of the State or of the State insurance manager, and it shall be the duty of the State insurance manager forthwith to bring or cause to be brought against each such employer a civil action in the proper court for the collection of such amount so due; and the same, when collected by the State insurance manager, shall be paid into the State insurance fund, and such employer's compliance with the provisions of this act requiring payments to be made to the State insurance fund shall date from the time of the payment of said money so collected to the State insurance manager.

An employer who is in default for ten days in payment of any premium shall also be liable to a penalty for every day during which such failure continues of one dollar for every employee, to be recovered in an action brought by the State insurance manager in the name of the State, or in his own name and the amounts so collected shall be paid into the State insurance fund.

The State insurance manager may, however, in his discretion for good cause shown, remit any such penalty in whole or in part, provided the employer in default subsequently pays the premium.

Withdrawal from fund. SEC. 97. Any employer may, upon complying with subdivision (b) of section 65 of this act, withdraw from the fund by turning in his insurance contract or policy for cancellation: Provided, He is not in arrears for premiums due to the fund and has given to the State insurance manager written notice of his intention to withdraw thirty days before the expiration of the period for which he has elected to insure in said fund; And also provided, That in case any employer so withdraws, his liability to assessments shall continue after the date of such withdrawal as against all liabilities for such compensation accruing prior to such withdrawal.

Any employer so withdrawing may, however, terminate his entire liability by paying to the State insurance manager such sum as said manager may deem sufficient to cover such liabilities.

Sec. 98. The State insurance manager may reinsure any risk, or any part thereof, and may enter into agreements of reinsurance in the same way and to the same extent as other insurance carriers.

Reinsurance.

Sec. 99. Every employer who is insured in the State insurance fund shall keep a true and accurate record of the number of his employees and the wages paid by him, and shall furnish to the State insurance manager, upon demand, a sworn statement of the same. Such record shall be open to inspection at any time and as often as the State insurance manager shall require to verify the number of employees and the amount of pay roll.

Pay rolls.

Sec. 100. An employer who shall willfully misrepresent the amount of the pay roll upon which the premiums chargeable by the State insurance fund are to be based shall be liable to the State in ten times the amount of the difference between the premiums paid and the amount the employer should have paid had his pay roll been correctly computed; and the liability to the State under this section shall be enforced in a civil action by the State insurance manager in the name of the State, or in his own name, and any amount so collected shall become a part of State insurance fund.

Misrepresentations.

Sec. 101. Any person who willfully misrepresents any fact in order to obtain insurance in the State insurance fund at less than the proper rate for such insurance, or in order to obtain payment out of such fund, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Same.

Sec. 102. The State insurance manager shall have the right to inspect the plants and establishments of employers insured in the State insurance fund; and the inspectors designated by the State insurance manager shall have free access to such premises during regular working hours, and at other reasonable times.

Inspection.

Sec. 103. Information acquired by the State insurance manager or his officers or employees from employers or employees pursuant to this act shall not be open to public inspection, and any officer or employee of the State insurance manager who, without authority of the State insurance manager or pursuant to his rules, or as otherwise required by law, shall disclose the same shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Information confidential.

Sec. 104. All premium rates fixed by the State insurance manager for the State insurance fund shall be subject to the approval of the insurance commissioner in the same way and to the same extent as may be provided by law in the case of private insurance carriers.

Premium rates to be approved.

Sec. 105. The State insurance manager shall submit each month to the State board of examiners an estimate of the amount necessary to meet the current disbursements for insurance losses and workmen's compensation from the State insurance fund, during each succeeding calendar month, and when such estimate shall be approved by the State board of examiners, the State treasurer is authorized to pay the same out of the State insurance fund. At the end of each calendar month the State insurance manager shall account to the State board of examiners for all moneys so received, furnishing proper vouchers therefor.

Allotments for payments.

Sec. 106. The State insurance manager shall file with the State insurance commissioner such reports as may be required of other insurance carriers; and shall also, whenever so requested by the State insurance commissioner, furnish him with such further information as he may need for the performance of the duties imposed upon him by this act.

Reports.

Sec. 107. A public corporation may insure against its liability for compensation with the State insurance fund and not with any other insurance carrier, unless such fund shall refuse to accept the risk when the application for insurance is made.

Public corporations.

PART X.

SECTION 108. Every employer shall hereafter keep a record of all injuries, fatal or otherwise, received by his employees in the course of their employment. Within forty-eight hours, not counting Sundays and legal holidays, after the occurrence of an injury causing absence from work for one day or more, a report therefor shall be made in writing to the board in the form prescribed by the board.

Upon the termination of the disability of the injured employee, the employer shall make a supplemental report to the board, in form prescribed by the board. If the disability extends beyond a period of sixty days, the employer shall report to the board at the end of such period that the injured employee is still disabled, and upon the termination of the disability shall file a final supplemental report as provided above.

The said reports shall contain the name and nature of the business of the employer, the situation of the establishment, the name, age, sex, wages and occupation of the injured employee, and shall state the date and hour of the accident causing the injury, the nature and cause of the injury, and such other information as may be required by the board.

Any employer who refuses or neglects to make the report required by this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars for each offense.

Within sixty days after the termination of the disability of the injured employee, the employer or other party liable to pay the compensation provided by this act shall file with the board a statement showing the total payments made or to be made for compensation and for medical services for such injured employee.

Interstate commerce.

SEC. 109. This act shall affect the liability of employers to employees engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or otherwise, only so far as the same is permissible under the laws of the United States.

Definitions.

SEC. 110. In this act, unless the context otherwise requires, words and phrases shall have the following meanings:

Employer.

SEC. 110-a. "Employer" unless otherwise stated, includes any body of persons, corporate or unincorporated, public or private, and the legal representative of a deceased employer. It includes the owner or lessee of premises, or other person who is virtually the proprietor or operator of the business there carried on, but who, by reason of there being an independent contractor, or for any other reason, is not the direct employer of the workmen there employed. If the employer is secured it includes his surety so far as applicable.

Workman.

SEC. 110-b. "Workman" is used as synonymous with "employee" and means any person who has entered into the employment of, or works under contract of service or apprenticeship with, an employer. It does not include any person engaged in any of the accepted employments enumerated in section 3, unless an agreement as provided in said section is in force between employer and employee making the provisions hereof applicable, nor does it include a person whose remuneration exceeds twenty-four hundred dollars a year. Any reference to a workman who has been injured shall, where the workman is dead, include a reference to his dependents as herein defined, if the context so requires, or, where the employee is a minor or incompetent, to his committee or guardian or next friend.

A minor working at an age legally permitted under the laws of this State shall be deemed sui juris for the purpose of this act, and no other person shall have any cause of action or right to compensation for an injury to such minor workman except as expressly provided in this act, but in the event of a lump-sum payment becoming due under this act to such minor workman, the management of the sum shall be within the probate jurisdiction of the courts the same as other property of minors.

Outworkers.

SEC. 110-c. An "outworker" is a person to whom articles or materials are given to be treated in any way on premises not under the control or management of the person who gave them out.

Injury.

SEC. 110-d. "Injury" or "personal injury" includes death resulting from injury within two years.

Scope.

SEC. 110-e. The words "personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment" shall include an injury caused by the willful act of a third person directed against an employee because of his employment. They shall not include a disease except as it shall result from the injury.

Employment.

SEC. 110-f. "Employment," in the case of private employers, includes employment only in a trade or occupation which is carried on by the employer for the sake of pecuniary gain. It shall also include any of the pursuits specified in section 3 when the employer and the employee shall have elected to come under the act as in said section provided.

Sec. 110-g. The word "board," whenever used in this act, unless the context shows otherwise, shall be taken to mean the industrial accident board. Board.

Sec. 110-h. "Partial disability." Diminished ability to obtain employment owing to disfigurement resulting from an injury may be held to constitute partial disability. Partial disability.

Sec. 110-i. "Wages" shall include the market value of board, lodging, fuel, and other advantages which can be estimated in money which the employee receives from the employer as a part of his remuneration. "Wages" shall not include any sums which the employer has paid to the employee to cover any special expenses entailed on him by the nature of his employment. Wages.

Sec. 110-j. "Surety" shall include the State insurance manager, representing the State insurance fund, and also any companies from any of which employers have obtained surety bonds or guaranty contracts in accordance with the provisions of this act. Surety.

Sec. 110-k. Any terms shall include the singular and both sexes where the context so requires. Number and sex.

Sec. 111. If any part or section of this act be decided by the courts to be unconstitutional or invalid, the same shall not affect the validity of the act as a whole, or any part thereof which can be given effect without the part so decided to be unconstitutional or invalid. Provisions severable.

Sec. 112. If for the purpose of obtaining any benefit or payment under the provisions of this act, either for himself or for any other person, any one willfully makes a false statement or representation, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and he shall forfeit all right to compensation under this act after conviction for such offense. False statements.

Sec. 113. The provisions of this act shall not apply to injuries sustained, or accidents which occur, prior to the taking effect hereof. Prior injuries.

Sec. 114. This act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effect its general purpose to make uniform the law of those States which enact it. Construction.

Sec. 115. For the purpose of carrying out Part IX of this act there is hereby appropriated out of the funds in the State treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of twenty thousand dollars or so much thereof as may be necessary to be placed in the State insurance fund and to be refunded as provided in section 89 of this act. There is also hereby appropriated out of the funds in the State treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be placed in the industrial administration fund. Appropriation.

Sec. 116. This act may be cited as the "Workman's compensation act." Title.

ILLINOIS.

ACTS OF 1913.

Compensation of workmen for injuries.

Election by certain employers.

SECTION 1 (as amended by act, p. 505, acts of 1917). Any employer in this State who does not come within the classes enumerated by section three (3) of this act may elect to provide and pay compensation for accidental injuries sustained by any employee arising out of and in the course of the employment according to the provisions of this act, and thereby relieve himself from any liability for the recovery of damages, except as herein provided.

(a) Election by any employer to provide and pay compensation according to the provisions of this act shall be made by the employer filing notice of such election with the industrial board.

(b) Every employer within the provisions of this act who has elected to provide [provide] and pay compensation according to the provisions of this act, shall be bound thereby as to all his employees covered by this act until January 1st of the next succeeding year and for terms of each year thereafter: Provided, Any such employer who may have once elected, may elect not to provide and pay the compensation herein provided for accidents resulting in either injury or death and occurring after the expiration of any such calendar year by filing notice of such election with the industrial board at least sixty days prior to the expiration of any such calendar year, and by posting such notice at a conspicuous place in the plant, shop, office, room or place where such employee is employed, or by personal service, in written or printed form, upon such employee, at least sixty (60) days prior to the expiration of any such calendar year.

Presumption as to employees.

(c) In the event any employer mentioned in this section elects to provide and pay the compensation provided in this act, then every employee of such employer, as a part of his contract of hiring or who may be employed at the time of the taking effect of this act and the acceptance of its provisions by such employer, shall be deemed to have accepted all the provisions of this act and shall be bound thereby unless within thirty (30) days after such hiring or after the taking effect of this act, and its acceptance by such employee, he shall file a notice to the contrary with the industrial board, whose duty it shall be to immediately notify the employer, and until such notice to the contrary is given to the employer, the measure of liability of such employer shall be determined according to the compensation provisions of this act: Provided, however, That any employee may withdraw from the operation of this act upon filing a written notice of withdrawal at least ten (10) days prior to January 1 of any year with the industrial board, whose duty it shall be to immediately notify such employer by registered mail, and, until such notice to the contrary is given to such employer, the measure of liability of such employer shall be determined according to the compensation provisions of this act.

Withdrawals.

(d) Any such employer or employee may, without prejudice to any existing right or claim, withdraw his election to reject this act by giving thirty (30) days' written notice in such manner and form as may be provided by the industrial board.

SEC. 2. [Repealed.]

Employments automatically covered.

SEC. 3 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). The provisions of this act hereinafter following shall apply automatically, and without election to the State, county, city, town, township, incorporated village or school district, body politic or municipal corporation, and to all employers and their employees, engaged in any of the following enterprises or businesses which are declared to be extrahazardous, namely:

1. The erection, maintaining, removing, remodeling, altering, or demolishing of any structure, except as provided in subparagraph 8 of this section.
2. Construction, excavating or electrical work, except as provided in subparagraph 8 of this section.
3. Carriage by land or water and loading or unloading in connection therewith, including the distribution of any commodity by horse-drawn or motor-driven vehicle where the employer employs more than three employees in the enterprise or business, except as provided in subparagraph 8 of this section.
4. The operation of any warehouse or general terminal storehouses.
5. Mining, surface mining, or quarrying.
6. Any enterprise in which explosive materials are manufactured, handled, or used in dangerous quantities.
7. In any enterprise wherein molten metal, or explosive or injurious gases or vapors, or inflammable vapors or fluids, or corrosive acids are manufactured, used, generated, stored, or conveyed in dangerous quantities.
8. In any enterprise in which statutory or municipal ordinance regulations are now or shall hereafter be imposed for the regulating, guarding, use or the placing of machinery or appliances or for the protection and safeguarding of the employees or the public therein; each of which occupations, enterprises or businesses are hereby declared to be extra hazardous: Provided, Nothing contained herein shall be construed to apply to any work, employment, or operations done, had, or conducted by farmers and others engaged in farming, tillage of the soil, or stock raising, or to those who rent, demise, or lease land for any such purposes, or to any one in their employ or to any work done on a farm, or country place, no matter what kind of work or service is being done or rendered.

SEC. 3½ (added by act, p.490, acts of 1917). (a) If the plaintiff in any action mentioned in section 3 shall in his declaration or in his other pleading allege that the employer has filed notice of his election not to provide and pay compensation according to the provisions of the workmen's compensation act and such allegation be not denied by a verified pleading, then such employer shall for the purpose of that action be conclusively presumed to have filed his notice of nonelection.

Pleadings.

(b) A certificate of the fact of the filing by an employer of the notice of nonelection provided in section 2 and of the nonwithdrawal thereof shall be prima facie proof in any action mentioned in section 3 of the fact of the filing of such notice of nonelection and of the nonwithdrawal thereof. Such certificate may be under the seal of the industrial board and signed by any member or the secretary thereof, of which seal and signature as such officer the court shall take judicial notice. Said certificate may be in substantially the following form:

Certificate.

This is to certify that the attached is a correct copy of notice filed with the industrial board by on the .. day of, 19 .. electing not to provide and pay compensation according to the provisions of the workmen's compensation act of Illinois, and that the original of said notice is now on file in the office of the industrial board and has not been withdrawn since the date of the filing thereof.

In witness whereof, this certificate has been subscribed and the seal of the industrial board affixed this .. day of, 19 ..

.....
..... of Industrial Board.

SEC. 4 (as amended by act, p. 505, acts of 1917). The term "employer" as used in this act shall be construed to be:

Employers.

1. The State, and each county, city, town, township, incorporated village, school district, body politic, or municipal corporation therein.
2. Every person, firm, public or private corporation, including hospitals, public service, eleemosynary, religious, or charitable, corporations or associations who has any person in service or under any contract for hire, express or implied, oral or written, and who is engaged in any of the enterprises or businesses enumerated in section three (3) of this act, or who at or prior to the time of the accident to the employee for which compensation under this act may be claimed, shall in the manner provided in this act, have elected to become subject to the provisions of this act, and who shall not, prior to such accident, have effected a withdrawal of such election in the manner provided in this act.

Employees.

SEC. 5 (as amended by act, p. 505, acts of 1917). The term "employee" as used in this act, shall be construed to mean:

1. Every person in the service of the State, county, city, town, township, incorporated village or school district, body politic or municipal corporations therein, under appointment, or contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, except any official of the State, or of any county, city, town, township, incorporated village, school district, body politic or municipal corporation therein: Provided, That any such employee, his personal representative, beneficiaries or heirs, who is, are or shall be entitled to receive a pension or benefit for or on account of disability or death arising out of or in the course of his employment from a pension or benefit fund to which the State or any county, town, township, incorporated village, school district, body politic or municipal corporation therein is a contributor, in whole or in part, shall be entitled to receive only such part of pension or benefit as is in excess of the amount of compensation recovered and received by such employee, his personal representative, beneficiaries or heirs under this act: And provided further, That one employed by a contractor who has contracted with the State, or a county, city, town, township, incorporated village, school district, body politic or municipal corporation therein through its representatives, shall not be considered as an employee of the State, county, city, town, township, incorporated village, school district, body politic or municipal corporation which made the contract.

2. Every person in the service of another under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and minors who are legally permitted to work under the laws of the State, who, for the purpose of this act, shall be considered the same and have the same power to contract, receive payments and give quittances therefor, as adult employees, but not including any person who is not engaged in the usual course of the trade, business, profession, or occupation of his employer: Provided, That employees shall not be included within the provisions of this act when excluded by the laws of the United States relating to liability of employers to their employees for personal injuries where such laws are held to be exclusive.

Suits abolished.

SEC. 6. No common law or statutory right to recover damages for injury or death sustained by any employee while engaged in the line of his duty as such employee other than the compensation herein provided shall be available to any employee who is covered by the provisions of this act, to any one wholly or partially dependent upon him, the legal representatives of his estate, or any one otherwise entitled to recover damages for such injury.

Compensation for death.

SEC. 7 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). The amount of compensation which shall be paid for an injury to the employee resulting in death shall be:

(a) If the employee leaves any widow, child or children whom he was under legal obligations to support at the time of his injury, a sum equal to four times the average annual earnings of the employee, but not less in any event than one thousand six hundred and fifty dollars and not more in any event than three thousand five hundred dollars. Any compensation payments other than necessary medical, surgical or hospital fees or services shall be deducted in ascertaining the amount payable on death.

(b) If no amount is payable under paragraph (a) of this section and the employee leaves any parent, husband, child or children who at the time of injury were totally dependent upon the earnings of the employee, then a sum equal to four times the average annual earnings of the employee, but not less in any event than one thousand six hundred and fifty dollars, and not more in any event than three thousand five hundred dollars.

(c) If no amount is payable under paragraphs (a) or (b) of this section and the employee leaves any parent, child, or children, grandparent or grandchild, who at the time of injury were dependent upon the earnings of the employee, then such proportion of a sum equal to four times the average annual earnings of the employee as such dependency bears to total dependency, but not less in any event than one thousand six hundred fifty dollars and not more in any event than three thousand five hundred dollars. Any compensation payments other than necessary medical, surgical or hospital fees or services shall be deducted in ascertaining the amounts payable on death.

(d) If no amount is payable under paragraphs (a), (b), or (c) of this section and the employee leaves collateral heirs dependent at the time of the injury to the employee upon his earnings, such a percentage of the sum provided in paragraph (a) of this section as the average annual contributions which the deceased made to the support of such dependent collateral heirs during the two years preceding the injury bears to his average annual earnings during such two years.

(e) If no amount is payable under paragraphs (a), (b), (c), or (d) of this section, a sum not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars for burial expenses to be paid by the employer to the undertaker or to the person or persons incurring the expense of burial.

(f) All compensation, except for burial expenses provided in this section to be paid in case injury results in death, shall be paid in installments equal to one-half the average earnings, at the same intervals at which the wages or earnings of the employee were paid; or if this shall not be feasible, then the installments shall be paid weekly: Provided, Such compensation may be paid in a lump sum upon petition as provided in section 9 of this act.

(g) The compensation to be paid for injury which results in death, as provided in this section, shall be paid to the persons who form the basis for determining the amount of compensation to be paid by the employer, the respective shares to be in the proportion of their respective dependency at the time of the injury on the earnings of the deceased: Provided, That the industrial commission or an arbitrator thereof may, in its or his discretion, order or award the payment to the parent or grandparent of a child for the latter's support the amount of compensation which but for such order or award would have been paid to such child as its share of the compensation payable, which order or award may be modified from time to time by the commission in its discretion with respect to the persons to whom shall be paid the amount of said order or award remaining unpaid at the time of said modification.

The payments of compensation by the employer in accordance with the order or award of the industrial commission shall discharge such employer from all further obligation as to such compensation.

In a case where any of the persons who would be entitled to compensation is living at any place outside of the United States, then payment shall be made to the personal representative of the deceased employee. The distribution by such personal representative to the persons entitled shall be made to such persons and in such manner as the commission shall order.

(h) 1. Whenever in paragraph (a) of this section a minimum of one thousand six hundred fifty dollars is provided, such minimum shall be increased in the following cases to the following amounts:

One thousand seven hundred fifty dollars in case of a widow and one child under the age of 16 years at the time of the death of the employee.

One thousand eight hundred fifty dollars in case of a widow and two or more children under the age of 16 years at the time of the death of the employee.

2. Wherever in paragraph (a) of this section a maximum of three thousand five hundred dollars is provided, such maximum shall be increased in the following cases to the following amounts:

Three thousand seven hundred fifty dollars in case of a widow and one child under the age of 16 years at the time of the death of the employee.

Four thousand dollars in case of a widow and two or more children under the age of 16 years at the time of the death of the employee.

Increase for children.

- Disability. SEC. 8 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). The amount of compensation which shall be paid to the employee for an injury not resulting in death shall be:
- Medical, etc., aid. (a) The employer shall provide the necessary first aid medical and surgical services; all necessary hospital services during the period for which compensation may be payable; also all necessary medical and surgical services for a period not longer than eight weeks, not to exceed, however, an amount of two hundred dollars, and in addition such medical or surgical services in excess of such limits as may be necessary during the time such hospital services are furnished. All of the foregoing services shall be limited to those which are reasonably required to cure and relieve from the effects of the injury. The employee may elect to secure his own physician, surgeon or hospital services at his own expense.
- Temporary disability. (b) If the period of temporary total incapacity for work lasts for more than six working days, compensation equal to fifty per centum of the earnings, but not less than $7 nor more than $12 per week, beginning on the eighth day of such temporary total incapacity, and continuing as long as the temporary total incapacity lasts, but not after the amount of compensation paid equals the amount which would have been payable as a death benefit under paragraph (a), section 7, if the employee had died as a result of the injury at the time thereof, leaving heirs surviving as provided in said paragraph (a), section 7: Provided, That in the case where temporary total incapacity for work continues for a period of four weeks from the day of the injury, then compensation shall commence on the day after the injury.
- Disfigurement. (c) For any serious and permanent disfigurement to the hand, head or face, the employee shall be entitled to compensation for such disfigurement, the amount fixed by agreement or by arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this act, which amount shall not exceed one-quarter of the amount of the compensation which would have been payable as a death benefit under paragraph (a), section 7, if the employee had died as a result of the injury at the time thereof, leaving heirs surviving, as provided in said paragraph (a), section 7: Provided, That no compensation shall be payable under this paragraph where compensation is payable under paragraphs (d), (e), or (f) of this section: And provided further, That when the disfigurement is to the hand, head, or face as a result of any injury, for which injury compensation is not payable under paragraph (d), (e), or (f) of this section, compensation for such disfigurement may be had under this paragraph.
- Partial disability. (d) If, after the injury has been sustained, the employee as a result thereof becomes partially incapacitated from pursuing his usual and customary line of employment, he shall, except in the cases covered by the specific schedule set forth in paragraph (e) of this section, receive compensation, subject to the limitation as to time and maximum amounts fixed in paragraphs (b) and (h) of this section, equal to fifty per centum of the difference between the average amount which he earned before the accident, and the average amount which he is earning or is able to earn in some suitable employment or business after the accident.
- Schedule. (e) For injuries in the following schedule, the employee shall receive in addition to compensation during the period of temporary total incapacity for work resulting from such injury, in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section, compensation, for a further period, subject to the limitations as to time and amounts fixed in paragraphs (b) and (h) of this section, for the specific loss herein mentioned, as follows, but shall not receive any compensation for such injuries under any other provisions of this act:
1. For the loss of a thumb, or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during sixty weeks.
 2. For the loss of a first finger, commonly called the index finger, or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during thirty-five weeks.
 3. For the loss of a second finger, or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during thirty weeks.

4. For the loss of a third finger, or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during twenty weeks.

5. For the loss of a fourth finger, commonly called the little finger, or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during fifteen weeks.

6. The loss of the first phalange of the thumb, or of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such thumb or finger and compensation shall be one-half the amounts above specified.

7. The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire finger or thumb: Provided, however, That in no case shall the amount received for more than one finger exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a hand.

8. For the loss of a great toe, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during thirty weeks.

9. For the loss of one toe other than the great toe, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during ten weeks, and for the additional loss of one or more toes other than the great toe, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during an additional ten weeks.

10. The loss of the first phalange of any toe shall be considered to be the equal to the loss of one-half of such toe, and compensation shall be one-half of the amount above specified.

11. The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire toe.

12. For the loss of a hand, or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during one hundred and fifty weeks.

13. For the loss of an arm or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during two hundred weeks.

14. For the loss of a foot, or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during one hundred and twenty-five weeks.

15. For the loss of a leg, or the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during one hundred and seventy-five weeks.

16. For the loss of the sight of an eye or for the permanent and complete loss of its use, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during one hundred weeks.

17. For the permanent partial loss of use of a member or sight of an eye, fifty per centum of the average weekly wage during that portion of the number of weeks in the foregoing schedule provided for the loss of such member or sight of an eye which the partial loss of use thereof bears to the total loss of use of such member or sight of eye.

18. The loss of both hands, or both arms, or both feet, or both legs, or both eyes, or of any two thereof, or the permanent and complete loss of use thereof, shall constitute total and permanent disability, to be compensated according to the compensation fixed by paragraph (f) of this section: Provided, That these specific cases of total and permanent disability shall not be construed as excluding other cases.

(f) In case of complete disability, which renders the employee wholly and permanently incapable of work, compensation equal to fifty per centum of his earnings, but not less than $7 nor more than $12 per week, commencing on the day after the injury, and continuing until the amount paid equals the amount which would have been payable as a death benefit under paragraph (a), section 7, if the employee had died as a result of the injury at the time thereof, leaving heirs surviving as provided in said paragraph (a), section 7, and thereafter a pension during life annually equal to 8 per cent of the amount which would have been payable as a death benefit under paragraph (a), section 7, if the employee had died as a result of the injury at the time thereof, leaving heirs surviving, as provided in said paragraph (a), section 7. Such pension shall not be less than $10 per month and shall be payable monthly.

total disability.

(g) In case death occurs as a result of the injury before the total of the payments made equals the amount payable as a death benefit, then in case the employee leaves any widow, child, or children, parents, grandparents, or other lineal heirs, entitled to compensation under section 7, the difference between the compensation for death and the sum of the payments made to the employee shall be paid, at the option of the employer, either to the personal representative or to the beneficiaries of the deceased employee, and distributed, as provided in paragraph (f) of section 7, but in no case shall the amount payable under this paragraph be less than $500.

period.

Maximum benefits.

(h) In no event shall the compensation to be paid exceed fifty per centum of the average weekly wage or exceed $12 per week in amount; nor, except in case of complete disability, as defined above, shall any payments extend over a period of more than eight years from the date of the accident. In case an injured employee shall be incompetent at the time when any right or privilege accrues to him under the provisions of this act a conservator or guardian may be appointed, pursuant to law, and may, on behalf of such incompetent, claim and exercise any such right or privilege with the same force and effect as if the employee himself had been competent and had claimed or exercised said right or privilege; and no limitations of time by this act provided shall run so long as said incompetent employee is without a conservator or a guardian.

Payments.

(i) All compensation provided for in paragraphs (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f) of this section, other than cases of pension for life, shall be paid in installments at the same intervals at which the wages or earnings of the employee were paid at the time of the injury, or if this shall not be feasible, then the installments shall be paid weekly.

Amounts for children.

(j) 1. Wherever in this section there is a provision for fifty per centum, such per centum shall be increased five per centum for each child of the employee under 16 years of age at the time of the injury to the employee until such per centum shall reach a maximum of sixty-five per centum.

2. Wherever in this section a weekly minimum of $7 is provided; such minimum shall be increased in the following cases to the following amounts:

$8 in case of any employee having one child under the age of 16 years at the time of the injury to the employee.

$9 in a case of an employee having two children under the age of 16 years at the time of the injury to the employee.

$10 in a case of an employee having three or more children under the age of 16 years at the time of the injury to the employee.

3. Wherever in this section a weekly maximum of $12 is provided, such maximum shall be increased in the following cases to the following amounts:

$13 in case of an employee with one child under the age of 16 years at the time of the injury to the employee.

$14 in case of an employee with two children under the age of 16 years at the time of the injury to the employee.

$15 in case of an employee with three or more children under the age of 16 years at the time of injury to the employee.

4. The increases in the above per centum and the minimum and maximum amounts shall be paid only so long as the child upon which the increase is based remains under the age of 16 years.

Lump sums.

SEC. 9 (as amended by act, p. 400, acts of 1915).—Any employer or employee or beneficiary who shall desire to have such compensation, or any unpaid part thereof, paid in a lump sum, may petition the industrial board, asking that such compensation be so paid, and if, upon proper notice to the interested parties and a proper showing made before such board, it appears to the interest of the parties that such compensation be so paid, the board may order the commutation of the compensation to an equivalent lump sum, which commutation shall be an amount which will equal the total sum of the probable future payments capitalized at their present value upon the basis of interest calculated at three per centum per annum with annual rests: Provided, That in cases indicating complete disability no petition for a commutation to a lump sum basis shall be entertained by the industrial board until after the expiration of six months from the date of the injury, and where necessary, upon proper application being made, a guardian, conservator or administrator, as the case may be, may be appointed for any person under disability who may be entitled to any such compensation, and an employer bound by the terms of this act, and liable to pay such compensation, may petition for the appointment of the public administrator, or a conservator, or guardian, where no legal representative has been appointed or is acting for such party or parties so under disability. Either party may reject an award of a lump sum payment of compensation, except an award for compensation under section 7 or paragraph (e) of section 8 or for the injuries defined in the last paragraph of paragraph (e) of section 8 as constituting total and permanent disability, by filing his written rejection thereof with the said board within ten days after notice to him of the award, in which event compensation shall be payable in installments as herein provided.

Sec. 10. The basis for computing the compensation provided for in sections 7 and 8 of the act shall be as follows: Computing compensation.

(a) The compensation shall be computed on the basis of the annual earnings which the injured person received as salary, wages or earnings if in the employment of the same employer continuously during the year next preceding the injury.

(b) Employment by the same employer shall be taken to mean employment by the same employer in the grade in which the employee was employed at the time of the accident, uninterrupted by absence from work due to illness or any other unavoidable cause.

(c) If the injured person has not been engaged in the employment of the same employer for the full year immediately preceding the accident, the compensation shall be computed according to the annual earnings which persons of the same class in the same employment and same location (or if that be impracticable, of neighboring employments of the same kind) have earned during such period.

(d) As to employees in employments in which it is the custom to operate throughout the working days of the year, the annual earnings, if not otherwise determinable, shall be regarded as 300 times the average daily earnings in such computation.

(e) As to employees in employments in which it is the custom to operate for a part of the whole number of working days in each year, such number, if the annual earnings are not otherwise determinable, shall be used instead of 300 as a basis for computing the annual earnings: Provided, The minimum number of days which shall be so used for the basis of the year's work shall not be less than 200.

(f) In the case of injured employees who earn either no wage or less than the earnings of adult day laborers in the same line of employment in that locality, the yearly wage shall be reckoned according to the average annual earning of adults of the same class in the same (or if that is impracticable then of neighboring) employments.

(g) Earnings, for the purpose of this section, shall be based on the earnings for the number of hours commonly regarded as a day's work for that employment, and shall exclude overtime earnings. The earnings shall not include any sum which the employer has been accustomed to pay the employee to cover any special expense entailed on him by the nature of his employment.

(h) In computing the compensation to be paid to any employee, who, before the accident for which he claims compensation, was disabled and drawing compensation under the terms of this act, the compensation for each subsequent injury shall be apportioned according to the proportion of incapacity and disability caused by the respective injuries which he may have suffered.

(i) To determine the amount of compensation for each installment period, the amount per annum shall be ascertained pursuant hereto, and such amount divided by the number of installment periods per annum.

Sec. 11 (as amended by act, p. 505, acts of 1917). The compensation herein provided, together with the provisions of this act shall be the measure of the responsibility of any employer engaged in any of the enterprises or businesses enumerated in section three (3) of this act, or of any employer who is not engaged in any such enterprises or businesses, but who has elected to provide and pay compensation for accidental injuries sustained by any employee arising out of and in the course of Limit of liability.

the employment according to the provision of this act, and whose election to continue under this act, has not been nullified by any action of his employees as provided for in this act.

Medical examinations.

Sec. 12 (as amended by act, p. 400, acts of 1915). An employee entitled to receive disability payments shall be required, if requested by the employer, to submit himself, at the expense of the employer, for examination to a duly qualified medical practitioner or surgeon selected by the employer, at a time and place reasonably convenient for the employee, as soon as practicable after the injury, and also one week after the first examination and thereafter at intervals not oftener than once every four weeks, which examination shall be for the purpose of determining the nature, extent, and probable duration of the injury received by the employee, and for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of compensation which may be due the employee from time to time for disability according to the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That such examination shall be made in the presence of a duly qualified medical practitioner or surgeon provided and paid for by the employee, if such employee so desires. In all cases where the examination is made by a surgeon engaged by the employer, and the injured employee has no surgeon present at such examination, it shall be the duty of the surgeon making the examination at the instance of the employer to deliver to the injured employee, upon his request or that of his representative, a statement in writing of the condition and extent of the injury to the same extent that said surgeon reports to the employer. If the employee refuses so to submit himself to examination or unnecessarily obstructs the same, his right to compensation payments shall be temporarily suspended until such examination shall have taken place, and no compensation shall be payable under this act for such period. It shall be the duty of surgeons treating an injured employee who is likely to die and treating him at the instance of the employer to have called in another surgeon, to be designated and paid for by either the injured employee or by the person or persons who would become his beneficiary or beneficiaries, to make an examination before the death of such injured employee.

Industrial board.

Sec. 13 (as amended by act, p. 505, acts of 1917). (a) There is hereby created a board which shall be known as the industrial board to consist of five members to be appointed by the governor, by and with the consent of the senate, two of whom shall be representative citizens of the employing class operating under this act, and two of whom shall be representative citizens of the class of employees operating under this act and one of whom shall be a representative citizen not identified with either the employing or employee classes and who shall be designated by the governor as chairman. Appointment of members to places on the first board or to fill vacancies on said board may be made during recesses of the senate, but shall be subject to confirmation by the senate at the next ensuing session of the legislature.

Change of designation.

(b) When there shall become effective the act known as "The Civil Administrative Code of Illinois," being an act entitled "An act in relation to the civil administration of the State government," there shall thereupon be vested in the industrial commission and the industrial officers thereof by said act created, all of the powers and duties vested in the industrial board by the workmen's compensation act, and thereupon wherever in the workmen's compensation act reference shall be made to the industrial board, the board or to any member thereof, it shall be construed as referring and shall apply to the said industrial commission, the said commission and any industrial officer thereof, respectively.

Salaries, etc.

Sec. 14 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). The salary of each of the members of the commission appointed by the governor shall be five thousand dollars ($5,000) per year. The commission shall appoint a secretary and shall employ such assistants and clerical help as may be necessary.

The salary of the arbitrators designated by the commission shall be at the rate of three thousand dollars ($3,000) per year.

The members of the commission and the arbitrators shall have reimbursed to them their actual traveling expenses and disbursements made or incurred by them in the discharge of their official duties while away from their places of residence in the performance of their duties. The commission shall provide itself with a seal for the authentication of its orders, awards, and proceedings, upon which shall be inscribed all the duties imposed upon it by this act, and such further duties as may hereafter be imposed by law and the rules of the board not inconsistent therewith.

Sec. 15. The industrial commission shall have jurisdiction over the operation and administration of this act, and said board shall perform all the duties imposed upon it by this act, and such further duties as may hereafter be imposed by law and the rules of the board not inconsistent therewith.

Jurisdiction.

Sec. 16 (as amended by act, p. 490, acts of 1917). The board may make rules and orders for carrying out the duties imposed upon it by law, which rules and orders shall be deemed prima facie reasonable and valid; and the process and procedure before the board shall be as simple and summary as reasonably may be. The board upon application of either party may issue dedimus potestatem directed to a commissioner, notary public, justice of the peace, or any other officer authorized by law to administer oaths, to take the depositions of such witness or witnesses as may be necessary in the judgment of such applicant. Such dedimus potestatem may issue to any of the officers aforesaid in any State or Territory of the United States or in any foreign country. The board shall have the power to adopt necessary rules to govern the issue of such dedimus potestatem. The board, or any member thereof, or any arbitrator designated by said board shall have the power to administer oaths, subpoena and examine witnesses, to issue subpoenas duces tecum, requiring the production of such books, papers, records, and documents as may be evidence of any matter under inquiry, and to examine and inspect the same and such places or premises as may relate to the question in dispute. Said board, or any member thereof, or any arbitrator designated by said board, shall, on written request of either party to the dispute, issue subpoenas for the attendance of such witnesses and production of such books, papers, records, and documents as shall be designated in said applications: Providing, however, That the parties applying for such subpoena shall advance the officer and witness fees provided for in suits pending in the circuit court. Service of such subpoenas shall be made by any sheriff or constable or other person. In case any person refuses to comply with an order of the board or subpoena issued by it or any member thereof, or any arbitrator designated by said board or to permit an inspection of places or premises, or to produce any books, papers, records, or documents, or any witness refuses to testify to any matters regarding which he may be lawfully interrogated, the county court of the county in which said hearing or matter is pending, on application of any member of the board or any arbitrator designated by the board, shall compel obedience by attachment proceedings, as for contempt, as in a case of disobedience of the requirements of a subpoena from such court on a refusal to testify therein.

Powers.

Records.

The board at its expense shall provide a stenographer to take the testimony and record of proceedings at the hearings before an arbitrator, committee of arbitration, or the board, and said stenographer shall furnish a transcript of such testimony or proceedings to any person requesting it upon payment to him thereof of five cents per one hundred words for the original and three cents per one hundred words for each copy of such transcript.

The board shall have the power to determine the reasonableness and fix the amount of any fee or compensation charged by any person for any service performed in connection with this act, or for which payment is to be made under this act or rendered in securing any right under this act.

Fees.

Sec. 17. The board shall cause to be printed and furnish free of charge upon request of any employer or employee such blank forms as it shall deem requisite to facilitate or promote the efficient administration of this act, and the performance of the duties of the board; it shall provide a proper record in which shall be entered and indexed the name of any employer who shall file a notice of declination or withdrawal under this act, and the date of the filing thereof; and a proper record in which shall be entered and indexed the name of any employee who shall file such a notice of declination or withdrawal, and the date of the filing thereof; and such other notices as may be required by the terms and intentment of this act; and records in which shall be recorded all proceedings, orders, and awards had or made by the board, or by the arbitration committees, and such other books or records as it shall deem necessary, all such records to be kept in the office of the board.

Disputes.

SEC. 18. All questions arising under this act, if not settled by agreement of the parties interested therein, shall, except as otherwise provided, be determined by the industrial board.

SEC. 19 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). Any disputed question of law or fact shall be determined as herein provided:

Arbitration.

(a) It shall be the duty of the industrial commission upon notification that the parties have failed to reach an agreement, to designate an arbitrator: Provided, That if the compensation claimed is for a partial permanent or total permanent incapacity or for death, then the dispute may, at the election of either party, be determined by a committee of arbitration, which election for determination by a committee shall be made by petitioner filing with the commission his election in writing with his petition or by the other party filing with the commission his election in writing within five days of notice to him of the filing of the petition, and thereupon it shall be the duty of the industrial commission, upon either of the parties having filed their election for a committee of arbitration as above provided, to notify both parties to appoint their respective representatives on the committee of arbitration. The commission shall designate an arbitrator to act as chairman, and if either party fails to appoint its member on the committee within seven days after notification as above provided, the commission shall appoint a person to fill the vacancy and notify the parties to that effect. The party filing his election for a committee of arbitration shall with his election deposit with the commission the sum of twenty dollars, to be paid by the commission to the arbitrators selected by the parties as compensation for their services as arbitrators, and upon a failure to deposit as aforesaid, the election shall be void and the determination shall be by an arbitrator designated by the commission. The members of the committee of arbitration appointed by either of the parties or one appointed by the commission to fill a vacancy by reason of the failure of one of the parties to appoint, shall not be a member of the commission or an employee thereof.

(b) The arbitrator or committee of arbitration shall make such inquiries and investigations as he or they shall deem necessary, and may examine and inspect all books, papers, records, places or premises relating to the questions in dispute, and hear such proper evidence as the parties may submit. The hearings before the arbitrator or committee of arbitration shall be held in the vicinity where the injury occurred, after ten days' notice of the time and place of such hearing shall have been given to each of the parties or their attorneys of record. The decision of the arbitrator or committee of arbitration shall be filed with the industrial commission, which commission shall immediately send to each party or his attorney a copy of such decision, together with a notification of the time when it was filed, and unless a petition for a review is filed by either party within fifteen days after the receipt by said party of the copy of said decision and notification of time when filed, and unless such party petitioning for a review shall within twenty days after the receipt by him of the copy of said decision, file with the commission either an agreed statement of the facts appearing upon the hearing before the arbitrator or committee of arbitration, or if such party shall so elect, a correct stenographic report of the proceedings at such hearings, then the decision shall become the decision of the industrial commission and in the absence of fraud shall be conclusive: Provided, That such industrial commission may for sufficient cause shown grant further time, not exceeding thirty days, in which to petition for such review or to file such agreed statement or stenographic report. Such agreed statement of facts or correct stenographic report, as the case may be, shall be authenticated by the signatures of the parties or their attorneys and in the event they do not agree as to the correctness of the stenographic report it shall be authenticated by the signature of the arbitrator designated by the commission.

(c) The industrial commission may appoint, at its own expense, a duly qualified, impartial physician to examine the injured employee and report to the commission. The fee for this service shall not exceed five dollars and traveling expenses, but the commission may allow additional reasonable amounts in extraordinary cases. The fees and the payment thereof of all attorneys and physicians for services authorized by the commission under this act shall, upon request of either the employer or the employee or the beneficiary affected, be subject to the review and decision of the industrial commission.

Physician.

(d) If any employee shall persist in insanitary or injurious practices which tend to either imperil or retard his recovery or shall refuse to submit to such medical or surgical treatment as is reasonably essential to promote his recovery, the commission may, in its discretion, reduce or suspend the compensation of any such injured employee.

Insanitary practices.

(e) If a petition for review and agreed statement of facts or stenographic report is filed, as provided herein, the industrial commission shall promptly review the decision of the arbitrator or committee of arbitration and all questions of law or fact which appear from the said statement of facts or stenographic report, and such additional evidence as the parties may submit. After such hearing upon review, the commission shall file in its office its decision thereon, and shall immediately send to each party or his attorney a copy of such decision and a notification of the time when it was filed.

Review.

Such review and hearing may be held in its office or elsewhere as the commission may deem advisable: Provided, That the taking of testimony on such hearing may be had before any member of the commission and in the event either of the parties may desire an argument before others of the commission such argument may be had upon written demand therefor filed with the commission within five days after the commencement of such taking of testimony, in which event such argument shall be had before not less than a majority of the commission: Provided, That the commission shall give ten days' notice to the parties or their attorneys of the time and place of such taking of testimony and of such argument.

In any case the commission in its decision may in its discretion find specially upon any question or questions of law or fact which shall be submitted in writing by either party, whether ultimate or otherwise. Any party may, within twenty days after receipt of notice of the commission's decision, or within such further time, not exceeding thirty days, as the commission may grant, file with the commission either an agreed statement of the facts appearing upon the hearing, or, if such party shall so elect a correct stenographic report of the additional proceedings presented before the commission, in which report the party may embody a correct statement of such other proceedings in the case as such party may desire to have reviewed, such statement of facts or stenographic report to be authenticated by the signatures of the parties or their attorneys, and in the event that they do not agree, then the authentication of such stenographic report shall be by the signature of any member of the commission. The applications for adjustment of claim and other documents in the nature of pleadings filed by either party, together with the decisions of the arbitrator and of the industrial commission and the statement of facts or stenographic reports hereinbefore provided for in paragraphs (b) and (c) shall be the record of the proceedings of said commission, and shall be subject to review as hereinafter provided.

(f) The decision of the industrial commission, acting within its powers, according to the provisions of paragraph (e) of this section shall, in the absence of fraud, be conclusive, unless reviewed as in this paragraph hereinafter provided.

Decision conclusive.

(1) The circuit court of the county where any of the parties defendant may be found shall by writ of certiorari to the industrial commission have power to review all questions of law presented by such record, except as arise in a proceeding in which under paragraph (b) of this section a decision of the arbitrator or committee of arbitration has become the decision of the industrial commission. Such writ shall be issued by the clerk of such court upon praecipe. Service upon any member of the industrial commission or the secretary thereof shall be service on the commission and service upon other parties interested shall be by scire facias, or service may be made upon said commission and other parties in interest by mailing notice of the commencement of the proceedings and the return day of the writ to the office of said commission and the last known place of residence of the other parties in interest at least ten days before the return day of said writ. Such writ by writ of certiorari shall be commenced within twenty days of the receipt of notice of the decision of the commission.

The industrial commission shall not be required to certify the record of their proceedings to the circuit court, unless the party commencing the proceedings for review in the circuit court, as above provided, shall pay to the commission the sum of five cents per one hundred words of testimony taken before said commission and three cents per one hundred words of all other matters contained in such record.

(2) No such writ of certiorari shall issue unless the one against whom the industrial commission shall have rendered an award for the payment of money shall upon the filing of his praecipe for such writ filed with the clerk of said court a bond conditioned that if he shall not successfully prosecute said writ, he will pay the said award, and the costs of the proceedings in said court. The amount of the bond shall be fixed by any member of the industrial commission and the surety or sureties on said bond shall be approved by the clerk of said court.

The court may confirm or set aside the decision of the industrial commission. If the decision is set aside and the facts found in the proceedings before the commission are sufficient, the court may enter such decision as is justified by law, or may remand the cause to the industrial commission for further proceedings, and may state the questions requiring further hearing, and give such other instructions as may be proper.

Judgments and orders of the circuit court under this act shall be reviewed only by the supreme court upon a writ of error which the supreme court in its discretion may order to issue, if applied for not later than the second day of the first term of the supreme court following the rendition of the circuit court judgment or order sought to be reviewed: Provided, That if the first day of said term is less than thirty days from the rendition of said judgment or order, then application for said writ of error may be made not later than the second day of the second term following the rendition of said judgment or order.

The writ of error when issued shall operate as a supersedeas.

The bond filed with the praecipe for the writ of certiorari or order in this paragraph shall operate as a stay of the judgment or order of the circuit court until the time shall have passed within which an application for a writ of error can be made, and until the supreme court has acted upon the application for a writ of error if such application is made.

The decision of a majority of the members of a committee of arbitration or of the industrial commission shall be considered the decision of such committee or commission, respectively.

Judgment.

(g) Either party may present a certified copy of the decision of the industrial commission, when no proceedings for review thereof have been taken, or of the decision of such arbitrator or committee of arbitration when no claim for review is made, or of the decision of the industrial commission after hearing upon review, providing for the payment of compensation according to this act, to the circuit court of the county in which such accident occurred or either of the parties are residents, whereupon said court shall render a judgment in accordance therewith; and in case where the employer does not institute proceedings for review of the decision of the industrial commission and refuses to pay compensation according to the award upon which such judgment is entered, the court shall, in entering judgment thereon, tax as costs against him the reasonable costs and attorney fees in the arbitration proceedings and in the court entering the judgment, for the person in whose favor the judgment is entered, which judgment and costs, taxed as herein provided shall, until and unless set aside, have the same effect as though duly rendered in an action duly tried and determined by said court, and shall, with like effect, be entered and docketed. The circuit court shall have power, at any time, upon application, to make any such judgment conform to any modification required by any subsequent decision of the supreme court upon appeal, or as the result of any subsequent proceedings for review, as provided in this act.

Judgment shall not be entered until fifteen days' notice of the time and place of the application for the entry of judgment shall be served upon the employer by filing such notice with the industrial commission; which commission shall, in case it has on file the address of the employer or the name and address of its agent, upon whom notices may be served, immediately send a copy of the notice to the employer or such designated agent; and no judgment shall be entered in the event the employer shall file with the said commission its bond, with good and sufficient surety in double the amount of the award, conditioned upon the payment of said award in the event the said employer shall fail to prosecute with effect proceedings for review of the decision, or the said decision, upon review, shall be affirmed.

(h) An agreement or award under this act, providing for compensation in installments, may at any time within eighteen months after such agreement or award be reviewed by the industrial commission at the request of either the employer or the employee, on the ground that the disability of the employee has subsequently recurred, increased, diminished or ended; and on such review, compensation payments may be reestablished, increased, diminished or ended: Provided, That the commission shall give fifteen days' notice to the parties of the hearing for review. And provided, further, Any employee, upon any petition for such review being filed by the employer, shall be entitled to one day's notice for each one hundred miles necessary to be traveled by him in attending the hearing of the commission upon said petition and three days in addition thereto, and such employee, shall, at the discretion of the commission, also be entitled to five cents per mile, necessarily traveled by him in attending such hearing not to exceed a distance of 300 miles, to be taxed by the commission as costs and deposited with the petition of the employer.

(i) Each party, upon taking any proceedings or steps whatsoever before any arbitrator, committee of arbitration, industrial commission or court, shall file with the industrial commission his address, or the name and address of an agent upon whom all notices to be given to such party shall be served, either personally or by registered mail addressed to such party or agent at the last address so filed with the industrial commission. Provided, That in the event such party has not filed his address, or the name and address of an agent, as above provided, service of any notice may be had by filing such notice with the industrial commission.

(j) Whenever in any proceeding testimony has been taken or a final decision has been rendered, and after the taking of such testimony, or after such decision has become final, the injured employee dies, then in any subsequent proceeding brought by the personal representative or beneficiaries of the deceased employee, such testimony in the former proceeding may be introduced with the same force and effect as though the witness having so testified were present in person in such subsequent proceeding and such final decision, if any shall be taken as a final adjudication of any of the issues which are the same in both proceedings.

(k) In any case where there has been any unreasonable or vexatious delay of payment or intentional underpayment of compensation, or proceedings have been instituted or carried on by the one liable to pay the compensation, which do not present a real controversy, but are merely frivolous or for delay, then the commission may award compensation additional to that otherwise payable under this act equal to 50 per centum of the amount payable at the time of such award.

SEC. 20. The industrial commission shall report in writing to the governor on the 30th day of June, annually, the details and results of its administration of this act, in accordance with the terms of this act, and may prepare and issue such special bulletins and reports from time to time as in the opinion of the commission, seems advisable.

SEC. 21 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). No payment, claim, award or decision under this act shall be assignable or subject to any lien, attachment or garnishment, or be held liable in any way for any lien, debt, penalty or damages. A decision or award of the industrial commission against an employer for compensation under this act, or a written agreement by an employer to pay such compensation shall, upon the filing of a certified copy of the decision or said agreement, as the case may be, with the recorder of deeds of the county, constitute a lien upon all property of the employer within said county, paramount to all other claims or liens, except mortgages, trust deeds, or for wages or taxes, and such liens may be enforced in the manner provided for the foreclosure of mortgages under the laws of this State. Any right to receive compensation hereunder shall be extinguished by the death of the person or persons entitled thereto, subject to the provisions of this act relative to compensation for death received in the course of employment: Provided, That upon the death of a beneficiary, who is receiving compensation provided for in section 7, leaving surviving a parent, sister or brother of the deceased employee, at the time of his death dependent upon him for support, who were receiving from such beneficiary a contribution to support, then that proportion of the compensation of the beneficiary which would have been paid but for the death of the beneficiary, but in no event exceeding said unpaid compensation, which the contribution of the beneficiary to the dependent's support within one year prior to the death of the beneficiary bears to the compensation of the beneficiary within that year, shall be continued for the benefit of such dependents, notwithstanding the death of the beneficiary.

Review of awards.

Reports.

Exemption, etc., of payments.

Agreements within seven days. SEC. 22. Any contract or agreement made by any employer or his agent or attorney with any employee or any other beneficiary of any claim under the provisions of this act within seven days after the injury shall be presumed to be fraudulent.

Waivers. SEC. 23. No employee, personal representative, or beneficiary shall have power to waive any of the provisions of this act in regard to the amount of compensation which may be payable to such employee's personal representative or beneficiary hereunder except after approval by the industrial commission.

Notice. SEC. 24 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). No proceedings for compensation under this act shall be maintained unless notice of the accident has been given to the employer as soon as practicable, but not later than 30 days after the accident. In cases of mental incapacity of the employee, notice must be given within six months after such accident. No defect or inaccuracy of such notice shall be a bar to the maintenance of proceedings by arbitration or otherwise by the employee unless the employer proves that he is unduly prejudiced in such proceedings by such defect or inaccuracy. Notice of the accident shall state the name and address of the employee injured, the approximate date and place of the accident, if known, and in simple language the cause thereof; which notice may be served personally or by registered mail, addressed to the employer at his last known residence or place of business: Provided, That the failure on the part of any person entitled to such compensation to give such notice shall not relieve the employer from his liability for such compensation, when the facts and circumstances of such accident are known to such employer, his agent or vice principal in the enterprise. No proceedings for compensation under this act shall be maintained unless claim for compensation has been made within six months after the accident, or in the event that payments have been made under the provisions of this act unless written claim for compensation has been made within six months after such payments have ceased and a receipt therefor or a statement of the amount of compensation paid shall have been filed with the commission: Provided, That no employee who after the accident returns to the employment of the employer in whose services he was injured shall be barred for failure to make such claim if an application for adjustment of such claim is filed with the industrial commission within eighteen months after he returns to such employment and the said commission shall give notice to the employer of the filing of such application in the manner provided in this act.

SEC. 25. Any employer against whom liability may exist for compensation under this act, may, with the approval of the industrial commission, be relieved therefrom by: Employers' options.

(a) Depositing the commuted value of the total unpaid compensation for which such liability exists, computed at three per centum per annum in the same manner as provided in section 9, with the State treasurer, or county treasurer in the county where the accident happened, or with any State or national bank or trust company doing business in this State, or in some other suitable depository approved by the industrial commission: Provided, That any such depository to which such compensation may be paid shall pay the same out in installments as in this act provided, unless such sum is ordered paid in, and is commuted to, a lump-sum payment in accordance with the provisions of this act.

(b) By the purchase of an annuity, in an amount of compensation due or computed, under this act within the limitation provided by law, in any insurance company granting annuities and licensed or permitted to do business in this State, which may be designated by the employer, or the industrial commission.

SEC. 26 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). (a) Any employer who shall come within the provisions of section 3 of this act, and any other employer who shall elect to provide and pay the compensation provided for in this act shall: Guaranty of payments.

(1) File with the commission a sworn statement showing his financial ability to pay the compensation provided for in this act; or

(2) Furnish security, indemnity, or a bond guaranteeing the payment by the employer of the compensation provided for in this act; or

(3) Insure to a reasonable amount his liability to pay such compensation in some corporation or organization authorized, licensed or permitted to do such insurance business in this State; or

(4) Make some other provisions for the securing of the payment of compensation provided for in this act; and

(5) Upon becoming subject to this act and thereafter as often as the commission may in writing demand, file with the commission in form prescribed by it evidence of his compliance with the provisions of this paragraph.

(b) The sworn statement of financial ability, or security, indemnity or bond, or amount of insurance, or other provisions, filed, furnished, carried, or made by the employer, as the case may be, shall be subject to the approval of the commission, upon the approval of which the commission shall send to the employer written notice of its approval thereof. The filing with the commission of evidence of compliance with paragraph (a) of this section as therein provided shall constitute such compliance until 10 days after written notice to the employer of the disapproval by the commission. Approval by commission.

(c) Whenever the industrial commission shall find that any corporation, company, association, aggregation of individuals, or other insurer affecting workmen's compensation insurance in this State shall be insolvent, financially unsound, or unable to fully meet all payments and liabilities assumed or to be assumed for compensation insurance in this State, or shall practice a policy of delay or unfairness toward employees in the adjustment, settlement, or payment of benefits due such employees, the said industrial commission may, after reasonable notice and hearing, order and direct that such corporation, company, association, aggregation of individuals, or insurer shall from and after a date fixed in such order discontinue the writing of any such workmen's compensation insurance in this State. Subject to such modification of said order as the commission may later make on review of said order, as herein provided, it shall thereupon be unlawful for any such corporation, company, association, aggregation of individuals, or insurer to effect any workmen's compensation insurance in this State. Any such order made by said industrial commission shall be subject to review by the courts, as in the case of other orders of said industrial commission: Provided, That upon said review the circuit court shall have power to review all questions of fact as well as of law. Ouster of insolvent, etc., insurers.

Failure to provide guaranty.

(d) The failure or neglect of an employer to comply with the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section shall be deemed a misdemeanor punishable by a fine equal to ten cents per each employee of such employer, at the time of such failure or neglect, but not less than one dollar not more than fifty dollars, for each day of such refusal or neglect until the same ceases. Each day of such refusal shall constitute a separate offense.

Insurance.

SEC. 27. (a) This act shall not affect or disturb the continuance of any existing insurance, mutual aid, benefit or relief association or department, whether maintained in whole or in part by the employer or whether maintained by the employees, the payment of benefits of such association or department being guaranteed by the employer or by some person, firm, or corporation for him: Provided, The employer contributes to such association or department an amount not less than the full compensation herein provided, exclusive of the cost of the maintenance of such association or department and without any expense to the employee. This act shall not prevent the organization and maintaining under the insurance laws of this State of any benefit or insurance company for the purpose of insuring against the compensation provided for in this act, the expense of which is maintained by the employer. This act shall not prevent the organization or maintaining under the insurance laws of this State of any voluntary mutual aid, benefit, or relief association among employees for the payment of additional accident or sick benefits.

(b) No existing insurance, mutual aid, benefit or relief association or department shall, by reason of anything herein contained, be authorized to discontinue its operation without first discharging its obligations to any and all persons carrying insurance in the same or entitled to relief or benefits therein.

(c) Any contract, oral, written, or implied, of employment providing for relief benefit, or insurance or any other device whereby the employee is required to pay any premium or premiums for insurance against the compensation provided for in this act shall be null and void, and any employer withholding from the wages of any employee any amount for the purpose of paying any such premium shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine of not less than ten dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail for not more than six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Insurer liable, when.

SEC. 28 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). In the event the employer does not pay the compensation for which he is liable, then an insurance company, association, or insurer which may have insured such employer against such liability shall become primarily liable to pay to the employee, his personal representative or beneficiary the compensation required by the provisions of this act to be paid by such employer. The insurance carrier may be made a party to the proceedings to which the employer is a party and an award may be entered jointly against the employer and the insurance carrier.

Liability of third persons.

SEC. 29 (as amended by act, p. 505, acts of 1917). Where an injury or death for which compensation is payable by the employer under this act, was not proximately caused by the negligence of the employer or his employees, and was caused under circumstances creating a legal liability for damages in some person other than the employer to pay damages, such other person having also elected to be bound by this act, or being bound thereby under section three (3) of this act, then the right of the employee or personal representative to recover against such other person shall be subrogated to his employer and such employer may bring legal proceedings against such other person to recover the damages sustained in an amount not exceeding the aggregate amount of compensation payable under this act, by reason of the injury or death of such employee. Where the injury or death for which compensation is payable under this act was not proximately caused by the negligence of the employer or his employees and was caused under circumstances creating a legal liability for damages on the part of some person other than the employer to pay damages, such other person having elected not to be bound by this act, then legal proceedings may be taken against such other person to recover damages notwithstanding such employer's payment of or liability to pay compensation under this act, but in such case if the action against such other person is brought by the injured employee or his personal representative and judgment is obtained and paid, or settlement is made with such other person, either with or without suit, then from the amount received by such employee or personal representative there shall be paid to the employer the amount of compensation paid or to be paid by him to such employee or his personal representative: Provided, That if the injured employee or his personal representative shall agree to receive compensation from the employer or to institute proceedings to recover the same or accept from the employer any payment on account of such compensation, such employer shall be subrogated to all the rights of such employee or personal representative and may maintain, or in case an action has already been instituted, may continue an action either in the name of the employee or personal representative or in his own name against such other person for the recovery of damages to which but for this section the said employee or personal representative would be entitled, but such employer shall nevertheless pay over to the injured employee or personal representative, all sums collected from such other person by judgment or otherwise in excess of the amount of such compensation paid or to be paid under this act, and all cost, attorneys' fees, and reasonable expenses incurred by such employer in making such collection and enforcing such liability.

SEC. 30. It shall be the duty of every employer within the provisions of this act to send to the industrial board in writing an immediate report of all accidental injuries arising out of or in the course of the employment and resulting in death; it shall also be the duty of every such employer to report between the 15th and the 25th of each month to the industrial board all accidental injuries for which compensation has been paid under this act, which injuries entail a loss to the employee of more than one week's time, and in case the injury results in permanent disability, a further report shall be made as soon as it is determined that such permanent disability has resulted or will result from such injury. All reports shall state the date of the injury, including the time of day or night, the nature of the employer's business, the name, address, the age, sex, conjugal condition of the injured person, the specific occupation of the injured person, the direct cause of the injury, and the nature of the accident, the character of the injury, the length of disability, and, in case of death, the length of disability before death, the wages of the injured person, whether compensation has been paid to the injured person, or to his legal representatives or his heirs or next of kin, the amount of compensation paid, the amount paid for physicians', surgeons', and hospital bills, and by whom paid, and the amount paid for funeral or burial expenses, if known. The making of reports as provided herein shall release the employer covered by the provisions of this act from making such reports to any other officer of the State. Accidents to be reported.

SEC. 31 (as amended by act, p. 538, acts of 1919). Anyone engaging in any business or enterprise referred to in subsections 1 and 2 of section 3 of this act who undertakes to do any work enumerated therein, shall be liable to pay compensation to his own immediate employees in accordance with the provisions of this act, and in addition thereto if he directly or indirectly engages any contractor, whether principal or subcontractor, to do any such work, he shall be liable to pay compensation to the employees of any such contractor or subcontractor unless such contractor or subcontractor shall have insured, in any company or association authorized under the laws of this State to insure the liability to pay compensation under this act, or guaranteed his liability to pay such compensation. Contractors.

In the event any such person shall pay compensation under this section he may recover the amount thereof from the contractor or subcontractor, if any, and in the event the contractor shall pay compensation under this section he may recover the amount thereof from the subcontractor, if any.

This section shall not apply in any case where the accident occurs elsewhere than on, in, or about the immediate premises on which the principal has contracted that the work shall be done.

Rights of action safeguarded.

SEC. 32 (as amended by act, p. 505, acts of 1917). If any of the provisions of this act providing for compensation for injuries to or death of employees shall be repealed or adjudged invalid or unconstitutional, the period intervening between the occurrence of any injury or death and such repeal or final adjudication of invalidity shall not be computed as a part of the time limited by law for the commencement of any action relating to such injury or death, but the amount of any compensation which may have been paid for any such injury shall be deducted from any judgment for damages recovered on account of such injury. Any claim, disagreement, or controversy existing or arising under "An act to promote the general welfare of the people of this State, by providing compensation for accidental injuries or death suffered in the course of employment," approved June 10, 1911, in force May 1, 1912, shall be adjusted in accordance with the provisions of said act, notwithstanding the repeal thereof, or may by agreement of the parties be adjusted in accordance with the method of procedure provided in this act for the adjustment of differences, jurisdiction to adjust such differences so submitted by the parties being hereby conferred upon the industrial commission or committee of arbitration provided for in this act.

Penalties.

SEC. 33. Any willful neglect, refusal, or failure to do the things required to be done by any section, clause, or provision of this act, on the part of the persons herein required to do them, or any violation of any of the provisions or requirements hereof, or any attempt to obstruct or interfere with any court officer, or any other person charged with the duty of administering or enforcing the provisions of this act, shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $500 at the discretion of the court.

Title.

INDIANA.

ACTS OF 1915.

CHAPTER 106.—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

PART I.

SECTION 1. This act shall be known as "The Indiana Workmen's Title.
Compensation Act."

SEC. 2 (as amended by chapter 165, acts of 1917). From and after the taking effect of this act every employer and every employee, except as herein stated, shall be presumed to have accepted the provisions of this act respectively to pay and accept compensation for personal injury or death by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment, and shall be bound thereby, unless he shall have given prior to any accident resulting in injury or death notice to the contrary in the manner herein provided. This act shall not apply to railroad employees engaged in train service. Acceptance presumed.

SEC. 3. Either an employer or an employee, who has excepted himself, by proper notice, from the operation of this act, may at any time waive such exemption and thereby accept the provisions of this act by giving notice as herein provided. Waiver by notice.

The notice of exemption and the notice of acceptance heretofore referred to shall be given 30 days prior to any accident resulting in injury or death: Provided, That if any such injury occurred less than 30 days after the date of employment, notice of such exemption or acceptance given at the time of employment shall be sufficient notice thereof. The notice shall be in writing or print in a substantial form prescribed by the industrial board and shall be given by the employer by posting the same in a conspicuous place in the plant, shop, office, room, or place where the employee is employed, or by serving it personally upon him; and shall be given by the employee by sending the same in registered letter addressed to the employer at his last known residence or place of business, or by giving it personally to the employer, or any of his agents upon whom a summons in civil action may be served under the laws of the State.

A copy of the notice in prescribed form shall also be filed with the industrial board.

SEC. 4. Every contract of service between any employer and employee covered by this act, written or implied, now in operation or made or implied prior to the taking effect of this act, shall, after the act has taken effect, be presumed to continue; and every such contract made subsequent to the taking effect of this act shall be presumed to have been made subject to the provisions of this act, unless either party shall give notice, as provided in section 3, to the other party to such contract that the provisions of this act other than sections 10, 11, and 67 are not intended to apply. Presumption as to contracts.

A like presumption shall exist equally in the case of all minors unless notice of the same character be given by or to the parent or guardian of the minor.

SEC. 5 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). Every employer who accepts the compensation provisions of this act shall insure the payment of compensation to his employees and their dependents in the manner hereinafter provided, or procure from the industrial board a certificate authorizing him to carry such risk without insurance, and while such insurance or such certificate remains in force he or those conducting his business shall be liable to any employee and his dependents for personal injury or death by accident arising out of and in the course of employment only to the extent and in the manner herein specified. Insurance required.

- Remedy ex-clusive. SEC. 6. The rights and remedies herein granted to an employee subject to this act on account of personal injury or death by accident shall exclude all other rights and remedies of such employee, his personal representatives, dependents, or next of kin, at common law or otherwise on account of such injury or death.
- Violation of statute. SEC. 7. Nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve any employer or employee from penalty for failure or neglect to perform any statutory duty.
- Willful misconduct, etc. SEC. 8 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). No compensation shall be allowed for an injury or death due to the employee's intentionally self-inflicted injury, his intoxication, his commission of a felony or misdemeanor, his willful failure or refusal to use a safety appliance, his willful failure or refusal to obey a reasonable written or printed rule of the employer which has been posted in a conspicuous place, his willful failure or refusal to perform any statutory duty or to any other willful misconduct on his part. The burden of proof shall be on the defendant.
- Exemptions. SEC. 9 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). This act, except section 67, shall not apply to casual laborers, as defined in clause (b) of section 76, nor to farm or agricultural employees, nor to domestic servants, nor to the employers of such persons, unless such employees and their employers file with the industrial board their voluntary joint election to be so bound.
- Defenses abrogated. SEC. 10. Every employer who elects not to operate under this act shall not in any suit at law by an employee to recover damages for personal injury or death by accident be permitted to defend any such suit at law upon any one or all of the following grounds:
 (a) That the employee was negligent.
 (b) That the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee.
 (c) That the employee had assumed the risk of the injury.
- Employee rejecting act. SEC. 11. Every employee who elects not to operate under this act shall, in any action to recover damages for personal injury or death brought against an employer accepting the compensation provisions of this act, proceed at common law, and the employer may avail himself of the defenses of contributory negligence, negligence of a fellow servant and assumption of risk, as such defenses exist at common law.
- Rejection by both parties. SEC. 12. When both the employer and employee elect not to operate under this act, the liability of the employer shall be the same as though he alone had rejected the terms of this act, and in any suit brought against him the employer shall not be permitted to avail himself of any of the common-law defenses cited in section 11.
- Liability of third persons. SEC. 13 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). Whenever an injury or death, for which compensation is payable under this act, shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employee, or his dependents, in case of death, at his or their option, may claim compensation from the employer or proceed at law against such other person to recover damages or may proceed against both the employer and such other person at the same time, but he or they shall not collect from both; and, if compensation is awarded and accepted under this act, the employer, having paid compensation or having become liable therefor, may collect in his own name or in the name of the injured employee, or, in case of death, in the name of his dependents from the other person in whom legal liability for damage exists, the compensation paid or payable to the injured employee or his dependents.
- Principals and contractors. SEC. 14 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). The State, any political division thereof, any municipal corporation, any corporation, partnership, or person, contracting for the performance of any work without exacting from the contractor a certificate from the industrial board showing that such contractor has complied with section 68 of this act, shall be liable to the same extent as the contractor for compensation, physician's fees, hospital fees, nurse's charges, and burial expenses on account of the injury or death of any employee of such contractor, due to an accident arising out of and in the course of the performance of the work covered by such contract.

Any principal contractor, intermediate contractor, or subcontractor, who shall sublet any contract for the performance of any work, without requiring from such subcontractor a certificate from the industrial board, showing that such subcontractor has complied with section 68 hereof, shall be liable to the same extent as such subcontractor for the payment of compensation, physician's fees, hospital fees, nurse's charges, and burial expenses on account of the injury or death of any employee of such subcontractor due to an accident arising out of and in the course of the performance of the work covered by such subcontract.

The State, any political division thereof, any municipal corporation, any corporation, partnership, person, principal contractor, intermediate contractor, or subcontractor, paying compensation, physician's fees, hospital fees, nurse's charges, or burial expenses under the foregoing provisions of this section, may recover the amount paid from any person who, independently of such provisions, would have been liable for the payment thereof.

Every claim, filed with the industrial board under this section, shall be instituted against all parties liable for payment, and said board, in its award, shall fix the order in which said parties shall be exhausted, beginning with the immediate employer.

SEC. 15 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). No contract or agreement, written or implied, no rule, regulation or other device, shall in any manner operate to relieve any employer in whole or in part of any obligation created by this act.

SEC. 16. All rights of compensation granted by this act shall have the same preference or priority for the whole thereof against the assets of the employer as is allowed by law for any unpaid wages for labor.

SEC. 17. No claim for compensation under this act shall be assignable, and all compensation and claims therefor shall be exempt from all claims of creditors.

SEC. 18 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). The provisions of this act except sections 3, 4, 10, 11, and 12, shall apply to the State, to all political divisions thereof, to all municipal corporations within the State, to persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in mining coal, and to the employees thereof.

SEC. 19. This act, except section 67, shall not apply to employees engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, nor to their employers, in case the laws of the United States provide for compensation or for liability for injury or death by accident of such employees.

SEC. 20. Every employer and employee under this act, except as provided in section 19, shall be bound by the provisions of the act whether injury by accident or death resulting from such injury occurs within the State or in some other State or in a foreign country.

SEC. 21. The provisions of this act shall not apply to injuries or death nor to accidents which occurred prior to the taking effect of the act.

PART II.

SECTION 22 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). Unless the employer or his representative shall have actual knowledge of the occurrence of an injury or death at the time thereof or shall acquire such knowledge afterward, the injured employee or his dependents, as soon as practicable after the injury or death resulting therefrom, shall give written notice to the employer of such injury or death.

Unless such notice is given or knowledge acquired within 30 days from the date of the injury or death, no compensation shall be paid until and from the date such notice is given or knowledge obtained. No lack of knowledge by the employer or his representatives and no want, failure, defect or inaccuracy of the notice shall bar compensation, unless the employer shall show that he is prejudiced by such lack of knowledge or by such want, failure, defect or inaccuracy of the notice, and then only to the extent of such prejudice.

SEC. 23 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). The notice provided for in the preceding section shall state the name and address of the employees, the time, place, nature, and cause of the injury or death, and shall be signed by the injured employee or by some one

- in his behalf or by one or more of the dependents, in case of death, or by some person in their behalf. Said notice may be served personally upon the employer, or upon any foreman, superintendent or manager of the employer to whose orders the injured or deceased employee was required to conform or upon any agent of the employer upon whom a summons in a civil action may be served under the laws of the State, or may be sent to the employer by registered letter, addressed to his last known residence or place of business.
- Claim. Sec. 24. The right to compensation under this act shall be forever barred unless within two years after the injury, or if death results therefrom, within two years after such death, a claim for compensation thereunder shall be filed with the industrial board.
- Medical, etc., aid. Sec. 25 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). During the first 30 days after an injury the employer shall furnish or cause to be furnished free of charge to the injured employee an attending physician for the treatment of his injuries, and in addition thereto such surgical, hospital and nurse's services and supplies as the attending physician or the industrial board may deem necessary.
- Refusal by employee. And during the whole or any part of the remainder of the period of disability or impairment resulting from the injury, the employer may continue to furnish such physician, services, and supplies. If, by reason of the nature of the injury or the process of recovery treatment is necessary for a longer period than thirty days, the industrial board may require the employer to furnish such treatment for an additional period, not exceeding thirty days. The refusal of the employee to accept such service and supplies, when so provided by the employer, shall bar the employee from all compensation during the period of such refusal unless, in the opinion of the industrial board, the circumstances justify such refusal.
- Emergency service. If in an emergency or because of the employer's failure to provide such attending physician or such surgical, hospital, or nurse's services and supplies as herein specified, or for other good reason, a physician other than that provided by the employer treats the injured employee within the first thirty days or necessary and proper surgical, hospital, or nurse's services and supplies are procured within said period, the reasonable cost of such service and supplies shall, subject to the approval of the industrial board, be paid by the employer.
- Charges. Sec. 26. The pecuniary liability of the employer for medical, surgical, and hospital service herein required shall be limited to such charges as prevail in the same community for similar treatment of injured persons of a like standard of living when such treatment is paid for by the injured person.
- Medical examination. Sec. 27. After an injury and during the period of resulting disability, the employee, if so requested by his employer or ordered by the industrial board, shall submit himself to examination, at reasonable times and places, by a duly qualified physician or surgeon designated and paid by the employer or the industrial board. The employee shall have the right to have present at any such examination any duly qualified physician or surgeon provided and paid by him. No fact communicated to, or otherwise learned by any physician or surgeon who may have attended or examined the employee, or who may have been present at any examination, shall be privileged, either in the hearings provided for in this act, or any action at law brought to recover damages against any employer who may have accepted the compensation provisions of this act. If the employee refuses to submit himself to or in any way obstructs such examination, his right to compensation and his right to take or prosecute any proceeding under this act shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases, and no compensation shall at any time be payable for the period of suspension unless in the opinion of the industrial board the circumstances justify the refusal or obstruction.
- Autopsies. The employer, or the industrial board, shall have the right in any case of death to require an autopsy at the expense of the party requiring same.
- Waiting time. Sec. 28 (as amended by chapter 81, acts of 1917). No compensation shall be allowed for the first seven calendar days of disability resulting from an injury, except the benefits provided for in section 25; but if disability extends beyond that period compensation shall commence with the eighth day after the injury.

SEC. 29 (as amended by chapter 81, acts of 1917). Where the injury causes total disability for work, there shall be paid to the injured employee during such total disability, but not including the first seven days thereof, a weekly compensation equal to fifty-five per cent of his average weekly wages for a period of not to exceed five hundred weeks. Total disability.

SEC. 30 (as amended by chapter 81, acts of 1917). Where the injury causes partial disability for work, there shall be paid to the injured employee during such disability, but not including the first seven days thereof, a weekly compensation equal to one-half of the difference between his "average weekly wages" and the weekly wages at which he is actually employed after the injury, for a period not to exceed three hundred weeks. Partial disability.

In case the partial disability begins after a period of total disability, the latter period shall be deducted from the maximum period allowed for partial disability.

SEC. 31 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). For injuries in the following schedule the employee shall receive in lieu of all other compensation, on account of said injuries, a weekly compensation of fifty-five per cent of his average weekly wages for the periods stated for said injuries respectively, to wit: Schedule.

(a) Amputations: For the loss by separation, of the thumb sixty weeks, of the index finger forty weeks, of the second finger thirty-five weeks, of the third or ring finger thirty weeks, of the fourth or little finger twenty weeks, of the hand by separation below the elbow joint two hundred weeks, of the arm above the elbow joint two hundred and fifty weeks, of the big toe sixty weeks, of the second toe thirty weeks, of the third toe twenty weeks, of the fourth toe fifteen weeks, of the fifth or little toe ten weeks, of the foot below the knee joint one hundred and fifty weeks, and of the leg above the knee joint two hundred weeks. The loss of more than one phalange of a thumb or toe shall be considered as the loss of the entire thumb or toe. The loss of more than two phalanges of a finger shall be considered as the loss of the entire finger. That the loss of not more than one phalange of a thumb or toe shall be considered as the loss of one half of the thumb or toe and compensation shall be paid for one half of the period for the loss of the entire thumb or toe. That the loss of not more than two phalanges of a finger shall be considered as the loss of one half the finger and compensation shall be paid for one half of the period for the loss of the entire finger.

(b) Loss of use: The total permanent loss of the use of an arm, hand, thumb, finger, leg, foot, toe, or phalange shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss, by separation, of the arm, hand, thumb, finger, leg, foot, toe, or phalange, and the compensation shall be paid for the same period as for the loss thereof by separation. Loss of use.

(c) Partial loss of use: For the permanent partial loss of the use of an arm, hand, thumb, finger, leg, foot, toe, or phalange, compensation shall be paid for the proportionate loss of the use of such arm, hand, thumb, finger, leg, foot, toe, or phalange.

(d) For injuries resulting in total permanent disability five hundred weeks. Permanent total disability.

(e) For the loss of both hands, or both feet, or the sight of both eyes or any two of such losses in the same accident five hundred weeks.

(f) For the permanent loss of the sight of an eye or its reduction to one-tenth of normal vision with glasses, one hundred and fifty weeks, and for any other permanent reduction of the sight of an eye compensation shall be paid for a period proportionate to the degree of such permanent reduction.

(g) For the permanent and complete loss of hearing, one hundred weeks.

(h) In all other cases of permanent partial impairment, compensation proportionate to the degree of such permanent partial impairment, in the discretion of the industrial board, not exceeding five hundred weeks. Other injuries.

(i) In all cases of permanent disfigurement, which may impair the future usefulness or opportunities of the employee, compensation, in Disfigurement.

- the discretion of the industrial board, not exceeding two hundred weeks.
- Temporary total disability. (j) For injuries causing temporary total disability for work there shall be paid to the injured employee during such total disability, but not including the first seven calendar days thereof, a weekly compensation equal to fifty-five per cent of his average weekly wages for a period not to exceed five hundred weeks.
- Temporary partial disability. (k) For injuries causing temporary partial disability for work, compensation shall be paid to the injured employee during such disability, but not including the first seven calendar days, a weekly compensation equal to fifty-five per cent of the difference between his average weekly wages and the weekly wages at which he is actually employed after the injury, for a period not to exceed three hundred weeks. In case the partial disability begins after the period of temporary total disability, the latter period shall be deducted from the maximum period allowed for partial disability.
- First seven days. (l) No compensation shall be allowed on account of injuries producing only temporary total disability to work or temporary partial disability to work for the first seven calendar days of disability resulting from such injuries except the benefits provided for in section 25; but if disability extends beyond that period, compensation shall commence with the beginning of the eighth day of such disability.
- Refusing employment. SEC. 32. If an injured employee refuses employment suitable to his capacity procured for him, he shall not be entitled to any compensation at any time during the continuance of such refusal, unless in the opinion of the industrial board such refusal was justifiable.
- Subsequent injuries. SEC. 33. If an employee has sustained a permanent injury in another employment than that in which he received a subsequent permanent injury by accident, such as specified in section 31, he shall be entitled to compensation for the subsequent injury in the same amount as if the previous injury had not occurred.
- Double injuries. SEC. 34. If an employee received an injury for which compensation is payable while he is still receiving or entitled to compensation for a previous injury in the same employment, he shall not at the same time be entitled to compensation for both injuries, unless it be for a permanent injury, such as specified in section 31; but he shall be entitled to compensation for that injury and from the time of that injury which will cover the longest period and the largest amount payable under this act.
- Two permanent injuries. SEC. 35. If an employee receives a permanent injury such as specified in section 31, after having sustained another permanent injury in the same employment, he shall be entitled to compensation for both injuries, but the total compensation shall be paid by extending the period and not by increasing the amount of weekly compensation.
- When the previous and subsequent permanent injuries result in total permanent disability, compensation shall be payable for permanent total disability, but payments made for the previous injury shall be deducted from the total payment of compensation due.
- Death during compensation period. SEC. 36. When an employee receives or is entitled to compensation under this act for an injury and dies from any other cause than the injury for which he was entitled to compensation, payment of the unpaid balance of compensation shall be made to his next of kin dependent upon him for support.
- Death benefits. SEC. 37 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). When death results from the injury within three hundred weeks, there shall be paid a weekly compensation equal to fifty-five per cent of the deceased's average weekly wages during such remaining part of three hundred weeks as compensation shall not have been paid to the deceased on account of the injury, in equal shares to all dependents of the employee wholly dependent upon him for support at the time of the death. If the employee leaves dependents only partially dependent upon his earning for support at the time of his injury, the weekly compensation to those dependents shall be in the same proportion to the weekly compensation for persons wholly dependent as the average amount contributed weekly by the deceased to such partial dependent bears to his average weekly wages at the time of the injury.

SEC. 38 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). The following persons shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee:

Dependents.

(a) A wife upon a husband with whom she is living at the time of his death, or upon whom the laws of the State impose the obligation of her support at such time.

(b) A husband, who is both physically and financially incapable of self-support, upon his wife with whom he is living at the time of her death.

(c) A child under the age of eighteen years upon the parent with whom he or she is living at the time of the death of such parent.

(d) A child under eighteen years upon the parent with whom he or she may not be living at the time of the death of such parent, but upon whom, at such time, the laws of the State impose the obligation to support such child.

(e) A child over the age of eighteen years who is either physically or mentally incapacitated from earning his or her own support, upon a parent with whom he or she is living at the time of the death of such parent, or upon whom the laws of the State at such time impose the obligation of the support of such child.

As used in this section, the term "child" shall include stepchildren, legally adopted children, posthumous children, and acknowledged illegitimate children, but shall not include married children; the term "parent" shall include step-parents and parents by adoption.

In all other cases questions of total dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact as the fact may be at the time of the death, and the question of partial dependency shall be determined in like manner as of date of the injury. If there is more than one person wholly dependent, the death benefit shall be divided equally among them; and persons partially dependent shall receive not [no] part thereof.

If there is no one wholly dependent and more than one person partially dependent, the death benefit shall be divided among the partial dependents according to the relative extent of their dependency.

The dependency of a widow, widower, or child shall terminate with his or her marriage subsequent to the death of the employee.

The dependency of a child, except a child physically or mentally incapacitated from earning shall terminate with the attainment of eighteen years of age.

SEC. 39 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). In all cases of the death of an employee from an injury by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment under such circumstances that the employee would have been entitled to compensation if death had not resulted, the employer shall pay the burial expenses of such employee, not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Burial expenses.

SEC. 40. In computing compensation under the foregoing sections the average weekly wages of an employee shall be considered not to be more than twenty-four dollars nor less than ten dollars: And provided further, That the total compensation payable under this act shall in no case exceed five thousand dollars ($5,000).

Basic wages.

SEC. 41. Any payments made by the employer to the injured employee during the period of his disability, or to his dependents, which by the terms of this act were not due and payable when made, may, subject to the approval of the industrial board, be deducted from the amount to be paid as compensation: Provided, That in case of disability such deduction shall be made by shortening the period during which compensation must be paid and not by reducing the amount of the weekly payments, unless otherwise hereinafter specified.

Maximum benefits.

Advance payments.

SEC. 42 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). When so provided in the compensation agreement or in the award of the industrial board, compensation may be paid semimonthly or monthly instead of weekly.

Time of payments.

SEC. 43 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). After the lapse of twenty-six compensation weeks and the payment in full of twenty-six weeks' compensation, the remainder of the compensation in unusual cases, upon the agreement of the employer and the employee or his dependents, and the approval of the industrial board, may be redeemed, in whole or in part, by the cash payment, in a lump sum, of the commutable value of the installments to be redeemed.

Lump sums.

The board may, at any time, in the case of permanently disabling injuries of a minor, require that he be compensated by the cash payment in a lump sum of the commutable value of the unredeemed installments of the compensation to which he is entitled.

In all such cases, the commutable value of the future, unpaid installments of compensation shall be the present value thereof, at the rate of three per cent interest, compounded annually.

Trustees

SEC. 44. Whenever the industrial board deems it expedient, any lump sum under the foregoing section shall be paid by the employer to some suitable person or corporation appointed by the circuit or superior court, as trustee, to administer the same for the benefit of the person entitled thereto, in the manner provided by the board. The receipt of such trustee for the amount as paid shall discharge the employer or anyone else who is liable therefor.

Reviews.

SEC. 45 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). The power and jurisdiction of the industrial board over each case shall be continuing, and, from time to time, it may, upon its own motion or upon the application of either party, on account of a change in conditions, make such modification or change in the award, ending, lessening, continuing, or extending the payments, previously awarded, either by agreement or upon hearing, as it may deem just, subject to the maximum and minimum provided for in this act.

Upon making any such change, the board shall immediately send to each of the parties a copy of the modified award. No such modification shall affect the previous award as to any money paid thereunder.

The board shall not make any such modification upon its own motion, nor shall any application therefor be filed by either party after the expiration of one year from the termination of the compensation period fixed in the original award, made either by an agreement or upon hearing. The board may at any time correct any clerical or mistake of fact in any finding or award.

Small awards.

SEC. 46 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). When the aggregate payments of compensation awarded by agreement or upon hearing to an employee or dependent under eighteen years of age, do not exceed one hundred dollars, the payment thereof may be made directly to such employee or dependent, except when the industrial board shall order otherwise.

Payments to minors.

Whenever the aggregate payments of compensation, due to any person under eighteen years of age, exceed one hundred dollars, the payment thereof shall be made to a trustee, appointed by the circuit or superior court, or to a duly qualified guardian, or to a parent upon the order of the industrial board. The payment of compensation, due to any person eighteen years of age or over, may be made directly to such person.

Incompetents.

SEC. 47 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). If an injured employee or a dependent is mentally incompetent or a minor at the time when any right or privilege accrues to him under this act, his guardian or trustee may, in his behalf, claim and exercise such right or privilege.

Limitation not to run.

SEC. 48 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). No limitation of time provided in this act shall run against any person who is mentally incompetent or a minor dependent, or a minor, so long as he had no guardian or trustee.

Two or more employers.

SEC. 49. Whenever any employee for whose injury or death compensation is payable under this act shall at the time of the injury be in the joint service of two or more employers subject to this act, such employers shall contribute to the payment of such compensation in proportion to their wage liability to such employees: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall prevent any reasonable arrangement between such employers for a different distribution as between themselves of the ultimate burden of compensation.

PART III.

Board created.

SECTION 50 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). There is hereby created the industrial board of Indiana, which shall consist of five members, two of whom shall be attorneys, and not more than three of whom shall be of the same political party, appointed by the governor, one of whom he shall designate as chairman.

The chairman of said board shall be an attorney of recognized qualifications.

Each member of the board shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified, unless removed by the governor, except that the three present members of said board shall continue to serve for and during the terms for which they have been appointed, unless removed as hereinafter provided, and of the two additional members hereby provided for, one shall be appointed for two years and one for four years. Thereafter, upon the expiration of the term of any member, the governor shall appoint his successor for the full term of four years.

Each member of the board shall devote his entire time to discharge of the duties of his office and shall not hold any other position of trust or profit or engage in any occupation or business interfering with or inconsistent with the discharge of his duties as such member.

Any member of said board may be removed by the governor at any time for incompetency, neglect of duty, misconduct in office, or other good cause, to be stated in writing in the order of removal.

In case of a vacancy in the membership of said board, the governor shall appoint for the unexpired term.

Sec. 51 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). The annual salary of each member of the board shall be four thousand dollars.

Salaries, etc.

The board may appoint a secretary at a salary of not more than twenty-five hundred dollars a year and may remove him. The secretary shall have the authority to administer oaths and issue subpoenas.

The board, subject to approval of the governor, may employ and fix the compensations of such clerical and other assistants as it may deem necessary. The clerical and other assistants shall be employed with special reference to their qualifications for the discharge of the duties assigned to them, and without regard to their political affiliations, except that not more than sixty per cent of such employees shall be of the same political party: Provided, That none of the present employees shall be discharged merely to establish such political proportion.

The members of the board and its assistants shall be entitled to receive from the State their actual and necessary expenses while traveling on the business of the board, but such expenses shall be sworn to by the person who incurred the same and shall be approved by the chairman of the board before the payment is made.

All salaries and expenses of the board shall be audited and paid out of the State treasury in the manner prescribed for similar expenses in other departments or branches of the State service.

Sec. 52. The rights, powers, and duties conferred by law upon the State bureau of inspection of the State of Indiana are hereby continued in full force and are hereby transferred to the industrial board hereby created and shall be held and exercised by them under the laws heretofore in force and the said State bureau of inspection is hereby abolished. The present chief inspector of said State bureau of inspection is hereby made a member of said industrial board until the expiration of one year from the date of the taking effect of this act and until his successor is appointed and qualified. The deputy inspectors heretofore appointed by the governor as deputy inspectors in said State bureau of inspection, to wit: Inspector of buildings, factories and workshops, inspector of boilers, and inspector of mines and mining, together with their assistant inspectors, are hereby continued in their respective office, at their present salaries, until the expiration of the terms for which they are respectively appointed and until their successors are appointed and qualified, and each of them respectively shall have and perform all the rights, powers, and duties now held and performed by each of them respectively, together with such other rights, powers, and duties as may be prescribed by said industrial board. Upon the terminations of the said terms of office for which said deputy inspectors have been appointed, said industrial board, with the concurrence of the governor, shall appoint their successors to serve during the pleasure of said industrial board.

Transfer of powers.

Labor commis- Sec. 53. All the rights, powers, and duties of the labor commission abolished. of the State of Indiana, heretofore created and subsequently transferred to and vested in the State bureau of inspection, are hereby abolished.

Offices. Sec. 54. The board shall be provided with adequate offices in the capitol or some other suitable building in the city of Indianapolis in which the records shall be kept and its official business be transacted during regular business hours; it shall also be provided with necessary office furniture, stationery, and other supplies.

The board or any member thereof may hold sessions at any place within the State as may be deemed necessary.

Rules. Sec. 55. The board may make rules not inconsistent with this act for carrying out the provisions of this act. Processes and procedure under this act shall be as summary and simple as reasonably may be.

Powers. The board or any member thereof shall have the power for the purpose of this act to subpoena witnesses, administer or cause to have administered oaths, and to examine or cause to have examined such parts of the books and records of the parties to a proceeding as relate to questions in dispute.

The county sheriff shall serve all subpoenas of the board and shall receive the same fees as now provided by law for like service in civil actions; each witness who appears in obedience to such subpoena of the board shall receive for attendance the fees and mileage for witnesses in civil cases in the courts.

The circuit or superior court shall, on application of the board or any member thereof, enforce by proper proceedings the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production and examination of books, papers and records.

Forms. Sec. 56 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). The board shall prepare and cause to be printed, and upon request furnish free of charge to any employer or employee, such blank forms and literature as it shall deem requisite to facilitate or promote the efficient administration of this act. The accident reports and reports of attending physicians shall be the private records of the board, which shall be open to the inspection of the employer, the employee and their legal representatives, but not to the public unless, in the opinion of the board, the public interest shall so require.

Records. That the board shall make to the governor annually, on or before the first day of December, a report of its work during the preceding fiscal year, in such form as it may determine, with the approval of the governor. In order to prevent the accumulation of unnecessary and useless files of papers, the board, in its discretion, may destroy all papers which have been on file for more than two years, when there is no claim for compensation pending, or, when compensation has been awarded either by agreement or upon hearing, and more than one year has elapsed since the termination of the compensation period as fixed by such board.

Reports. Sec. 57 (as amended by chapter 81, acts of 1917). If after seven days from the date of the injury or at any time in case of death, the employer and the injured employee or his dependents reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act, a memorandum of the agreement in the form prescribed by the industrial board shall be filed with the board; otherwise such agreement shall be voidable by the employee, or his dependents.

If approved by the board, thereupon the memorandum shall for all purposes be enforceable by court decree as hereinafter specified. Such agreement shall be approved by said board only when the terms conform to the provisions of this act.

Agreements to be filed. Sec. 58 (as amended by chapter 57, acts of 1919). If the employer and the injured employee or his dependents fail to reach an agreement in regard to the compensation payable under this act, or, if they have reached such an agreement, which has been signed by them, filed with and approved by the industrial board, and then disagree as to the continuance of payments under such agreement, because of a change in conditions since the making of such agreement, either party may make an application, to the industrial board, for the determination of the matters in dispute.

Reference to board.

Upon the filing of such application, the board shall set the date of hearing, which shall be as early as practicable, and shall notify the parties in the manner prescribed by the board of the time and place of hearing. The hearing of all claims for compensation, on account of injuries occurring within the State, shall be held in the county in which the injury occurred, except when the parties consent to a hearing elsewhere.

Hearing.

Sec. 59 (as amended by chapter 63, acts of 1917). The board by any or all of its members shall hear the parties at issue, their representatives and witnesses, and shall determine the dispute in a summary manner. The award shall be filed with the record of proceedings, and a copy thereof shall immediately be sent to each of the parties in dispute.

Awards.

Sec. 60 (as amended by chapter 63, acts of 1917). If an application for review is made to the board within seven days from the date of an award, made by less than all the members, the full board, if the first hearing was not held before the full board shall review the evidence, or if deemed advisable, hear the parties at issue, their representatives and witnesses as soon as practicable and shall make an award and file the same with a finding of the facts on which it is based and the rulings of law by the full board, if any, and send a copy thereof to each of the parties in dispute, in like manner as specified in the foregoing section.

Review.

Sec. 61 (as amended by chap. 63, acts of 1917). An award of the board, by less than all of the members, as provided in section 59, if not reviewed as provided in section 60, shall be final and conclusive.

Appeals.

An award by the full board shall be conclusive and binding as to all questions of the fact, but either party to the dispute may within thirty days from the date of such award appeal to the appellate court for errors of law under the same terms and conditions as govern appeals in ordinary civil actions.

The board, of its own motion, may certify questions of law to said appellate court for its decision and determination.

An assignment of errors that the award of the full board is contrary to law shall be sufficient to present both the sufficiency of the facts found to sustain the award and the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding of facts.

All such appeals and certified questions of law shall be submitted upon the date filed in the appellate court, shall be advanced upon the docket of said court, and shall be determined at the earliest practicable date, without any extensions of time for filing briefs.

An award of the full board affirmed on appeal shall be increased thereby five per cent.

Sec. 62. Any party in interest may file in the circuit or superior court of the county in which the injury occurred, a certified copy of a memorandum of agreement approved by the board or of an order or decision of the board, or of an award of the board unappealed from, or of an award of the board rendered upon an appeal, whereupon said court shall render judgment in accordance therewith and notify the parties. Such judgment shall have the same effect and all proceedings in relation thereto shall thereafter be the same as though said judgment had been rendered in a suit duly heard and determined by said court.

Enforcement.

Any such judgment of said circuit or superior court unappealed from or affirmed on appeal or modified in obedience to the mandate of the appellate court shall be modified to conform to any decision of the industrial board, ending, diminishing or increasing any weekly payment under the provisions of section 45 of this act, upon the presentation to it of a certified copy of such decision.

Sec. 63 (as amended by chap. 57, acts of 1919). In all proceedings before the industrial board or in a court under this act the costs shall be awarded and taxed as provided by law in ordinary civil action in the circuit court.

Costs.

Sec. 64. The board or any member thereof may, upon the application of either party or upon its own motion, appoint a disinterested and duly qualified physician or surgeon to make any necessary medical examination of the employee and to testify in respect thereto. Said physician or surgeon shall be allowed traveling expenses and a reasonable fee to be fixed by the board not exceeding ten dollars for each examination and report, but the board may allow additional reasonable amounts in extraordinary cases.

Medical examination.

- The fees and expenses of such physician or surgeon shall be paid by the State.
- Fees. SEC. 65 (as amended by chap. 57, acts of 1919). The fees of attorneys and physicians and charges of nurses and hospitals for services under this act shall be subject to the approval of the industrial board. When any claimant for compensation is represented by an attorney in the prosecution of his claim, the industrial board shall fix and state in the award, if compensation be awarded, the amount of the claimant's attorney's fee. The fee so fixed shall be binding upon both the claimant and his attorney, and the employer shall pay to the attorney out of the award, the fee so fixed and the receipt of the attorney therefor shall fully acquit the employer for an equal portion of the award. The industrial board may withhold the approval of the fees of the attending physician in any case until he shall file report with the industrial board on the form prescribed by such board.
- Settlement of disputes. SEC. 66. All questions arising under this act, if not settled by agreement of the parties interested therein with the approval of the board, shall be determined by the board except as otherwise herein provided for.
- Reports of injuries. SEC. 67. Every employer shall hereafter keep a record of all injuries, fatal or otherwise, received by his employees in the course of their employment. Within one week after the occurrence and knowledge thereof, as provided in section 22, of an injury to an employee causing his absence from work for more than one day, a report thereof shall be made in writing and mailed to the industrial board on blanks to be procured from the board for the purpose.
- Upon the termination of the disability of the injured employee, or if the disability extends beyond a period of 60 days, then also at the expiration of such period the employer shall make a supplementary report to the board on blanks to be procured from the board for the purpose.
- The said same report shall contain the name, nature, and location of the business of the employer, and name, age, sex, wages, and occupation of the injured employee, and shall state the date and hour of the accident causing the injury, the nature and cause of the injury, and such other information as may be required by the board.
- Any employer who refuses or neglects to make the report required by this section shall be liable for a penalty of not more than twenty-five dollars for each refusal or neglect, to be recoverable in any court of competent jurisdiction in a suit by the the board.

PART IV.

- Registration of employers. SECTION 68 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). Every employer of the State, except agricultural employers and the employers of domestic servants, shall register annually on or before the first day of September, with the industrial board, and procure the certificate of said board showing such registration. Each such employer shall file an application with the industrial board annually on or before the first day of September, for registration and a certificate thereof, upon a form therefor, prescribed by the industrial board and furnished by it, in which the employer shall state the following facts, to wit: The correct name of the employer, and, if a partnership, both the firm name and the names of the partners. The post-office address of the employer, and, when a partnership, the post-office address of each partner; the nature and location of the business in which the employer is engaged; the number of employees; the sex of employees and the number of each sex, when both sexes are employed. Any employer failing to so file such application with the industrial board and procure a certificate of registration shall be fined not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars.
- The industrial board shall keep registry by cards of the employers of the State, by counties, arranged in alphabetical order as to the names of the counties and the names of the employers.
- Insurance required. Every employer under this act shall either insure or keep insured his liability hereunder in some corporation, association, or organization authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this State, or shall furnish to the industrial board satisfactory proof of his financial ability to pay direct the compensation in the amount and manner and when due as provided for in this act. In the latter case the board may in its discretion require the deposit of an acceptable security indemnity or bond to secure the payment of compensation liabilities as they are incurred.

Self-insurers.

Sec. 69 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). Every employer who does not exempt himself from the compensation provisions of this act and who does not procure from the industrial board a certificate of his financial ability to pay compensation direct, without insurance, shall within ten days after this act takes effect file with the industrial board in the form prescribed by it, and thereafter within ten days after the termination of his insurance by expiration or cancellation, evidence of his compliance with the insurance provisions of section 68 hereof, and all others relating to the insurance under this act.

Evidence of compliance.

That any employer hereafter coming under the compensation provisions hereof shall in a like manner file like evidence of such compliance on his part.

If such employer refuses or neglects to comply with these provisions he shall be punished by a fine of ten cents for each employee at the time of the insurance becoming due, but not less than ten dollars nor more than fifty dollars for each day of such refusal or neglect and until the same ceases, and he shall be liable during continuance of such refusal or neglect to an employee either for compensation under this act or at law in the same manner as provided for in section 10.

Violations.

Sec. 70 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). Whenever an employer has complied with the provisions of section 68 relating to self-insurance, the industrial board shall issue to such employer a certificate which shall remain in force for a period fixed by the board, but the board may upon at least ten days' notice and a hearing to the employer, revoke the certificate upon satisfactory evidence for such revocation having been presented. At any time after such revocation the board may grant a new certificate to the employer upon his petition and satisfactory proof of his financial ability.

Certificates.

Sec. 71. For the purpose of complying with the provisions of section 68, groups of employers, to form mutual insurance associations or reciprocal insurance associations subject to such reasonable conditions and restrictions as may be fixed by the industrial board, are hereby authorized. Membership in such mutual insurance associations or reciprocal insurance associations so approved, together with evidence of the payment of premiums due, shall be evidence of compliance with section 68.

Mutual, etc., companies.

Sec. 72. Subject to the approval of the industrial board any employer may enter into or continue any agreement with his employees to provide a system of compensation, benefit, or insurance in lieu of the compensation and insurance provided by this act. No such substitute system shall be approved unless it confers benefits upon injured employees at least equivalent to the benefits provided by this act, nor if it requires contributions from the employees unless it confers benefits in addition to those provided under this act at least commensurate with such contributions.

Substitute schemes.

Such substitute system may be terminated by the industrial board on reasonable notice and hearing to the interested parties if it shall appear that the same is not fairly administered or if its operation shall disclose latent defects threatening its solvency, or if for any substantial reason it fails to accomplish the purposes of this act; and in this case the board shall determine upon the proper distribution of all remaining assets, if any, subject to the right of any party in interest to take an appeal to the appellate court.

Sec. 73 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). No insurer shall enter into or issue any policy of insurance under this act until its policy form shall have been submitted to and approved by the industrial board. The industrial board shall not approve the policy form of any insurance company until such company shall file with it the certificate of the auditor of State showing that such company is authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in the State. That the filing of a policy form by any insurance company or reciprocal insurance association with the industrial board for approval shall constitute on the part of such company or association a conclusive and unqualified acceptance of each and all of the provisions of this act, and an agreement by it to be bound thereby.

Policies.

All policies of insurance companies and of reciprocal insurance associations, insuring the payment of compensation under this act, shall be conclusively presumed to cover all the employees and the entire compensation liability of the insured.

Any provision in any such policy attempting to limit or modify the liability of the company or association issuing the same shall be wholly void.

Provisions re- Every policy of any such company or association must contain the quired. following provisions:

(a) The insurer hereby assures in full all the obligations to pay physician's fees, nurse's charges, hospital services, hospital supplies, burial expenses, compensation or death benefits imposed upon or accepted by the insured under the provisions of "The Indiana workmen's compensation act."

(b) That this policy is made subject to the provisions of "The Indiana workmen's compensation act," and the provisions of said act relative to the liability of the insured to pay physician's fees, nurse's charges, hospital services, hospital supplies, burial expenses, compensation, or death benefits to and for said employees, the acceptance of such liability by the insured, the adjustment, trial, and adjudication of claims for such physician's fees, nurse's charges, hospital services, hospital supplies, burial expenses, compensation, or death benefits and the liability of the insurer to pay the same are and shall be a part of this policy contract as fully and completely as if written herein.

(c) That, as between this insurer and the employee, notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the insured (the employer) shall be notice or knowledge thereof, as the case may be, on the part of the insurer, that the jurisdiction of the insured (the employer) for the purpose of "The Indiana workmen's compensation act," shall be the jurisdiction of this insurer, and this insurer shall in all things be bound by and shall be subject to awards, judgments, and decrees rendered against the insured (the employer) under said act.

(d) That this insurer will promptly pay to the person entitled to the same, all benefits conferred by "The Indiana workmen's compensation act," including physician's fees, nurse's charges, hospital services, hospital supplies, burial expenses and all installments of compensation or death benefits that may be awarded or agreed upon under said act; that the obligation of this insurer shall not be affected by any default of the insured (the employer) after the injury or by any default in the giving of any notice required by this policy, or otherwise; that this policy is and shall be construed to be a direct promise by this insurer to the person entitled to physician's fees, nurse's charges, fees for hospital services, charges for hospital supplies, charges for burial, compensation or death benefits, and shall be enforceable in the name of such person.

(e) That any termination of this policy either by cancellation or expiration shall not be effective as to employees of the insured covered hereby until ten days after written notice of such termination has been received by the industrial board of Indiana, at its office in Indianapolis, Indiana.

That all claims for compensation, nurse's charges, hospital services, hospital supplies, physician's fees, or burial expenses may be made directly against either the employer or the insurer or both, and the award of the industrial board may be made against either the employer or the insurer or both.

That if any insurer shall fail or refuse to pay any final award or judgment (except during the pendency of an appeal) rendered against it, or its insured, or, if it shall fail or refuse to comply with any provision of this act, the industrial board shall revoke the approval of its policy form, and shall not accept any further proofs of insurance from it until it shall have paid said award or judgment or complied with the violated provision of the act, and shall have resubmitted its policy form and received the approval thereof by the industrial board.

Agreements to pay.

Sec. 74. No policy of insurance against liability arising under this act shall be issued unless it contains the agreement of the insurer that it will promptly pay to the person entitled to same all benefits conferred by this act, and all installments of the compensation that may be awarded or agreed upon, and that the obligation shall not be affected by any default of the insured after the injury, or by any default in the giving of any notice required by such policy, or otherwise. Such agreement shall be construed to be a direct promise by the insurer to the person entitled to compensation enforceable in his name.

SEC. 75. Every policy for the insurance of the compensation herein provided or against liability thereof shall be deemed to be made subject to the provisions of this act. No corporation, association, or organization shall enter into any such policy of insurance unless its form shall have been approved by the industrial board.

Presumptions.

PART V.

SECTION 76 (as amended by ch. 57, acts of 1919). In this act unless the context otherwise requires:

Definitions.

(a) "Employer" shall include the State and any political division, any municipal corporation within the State, any individual, firm, association, or corporation or the receiver or trustee of the same, or the legal representatives of a deceased person using the services of another for pay. If the employer is insured it shall include his insurer so far as applicable.

(b) "Employee" shall include every person, including a minor, lawfully in the service of another under any contract of hire or apprenticeship, written or implied, except one whose employment is both casual and not in the usual course of the trade, business, occupation, or profession of the employer. Any reference to an employee who has been injured shall, when the employee is dead, also include his legal representatives, dependents, and other persons to whom compensation may be payable.

(c) "Average weekly wages" shall mean the earnings of the injured employee in the employment in which he was working at the time of the injury during the period of 52 weeks immediately preceding the date of injury, divided by 52; but if the injured employee lost seven or more calendar days during such period, although not in the same week, then the earnings for the remainder of such 52 weeks shall be divided by the number of weeks and parts thereof remaining after the time so lost has been deducted. Where the employment prior to the injury extended over a period of less than 52 weeks, the method of dividing the earnings during that period by the number of weeks and parts thereof during which the employee earned wages shall be followed: Provided, Results just and fair to both parties will thereby be obtained. Where by reason of the shortness of the time during which the employee has been in the employment of his employer or of the casual nature or terms of the employment it is impracticable to compute the average weekly wages as above defined, regard shall be had to the average weekly amount which during the 52 weeks previous to the injury was being earned by a person in the same grade employed at the same work by the same employer, or if there is no person so employed, by a person in the same grade employed in the same class of employment in the same district.

Wherever allowances of any character made to an employee in lieu of wages are specified part of the wage contract, they shall be deemed a part of his earnings.

(d) "Injury" and "Personal injury" shall mean only injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment and shall not include a disease in any form except as it shall result from the injury.

SEC. 77. If any section or provision of this act be decided by the courts to be unconstitutional or invalid, the same shall not affect the validity of this act as a whole or any part thereof other than the part so decided to be unconstitutional or invalid.

Provisions severable.

SEC. 78. [Repealed.]

SEC. 80. For the purpose of paying the salaries and expenses of the members of the industrial board and its employees, the sum of $70,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

Appropriation.

SEC. 81. The provisions of this act shall not affect pending litigation.

Pending cases.

ACTS OF 1913.

CHAPTER 147 (codified).—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

PART I.

- Election presumed. SECTION 2477-m (as amended by chap. 418, acts of 1917). (a) Except as by this act otherwise provided, it shall be conclusively presumed that every employer as defined by this act has elected to provide, secure, and pay compensation according to the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act for any and all personal injuries sustained by an employee arising out of and in the course of the employment; and in such cases the employer shall be relieved from other liability for recovery of damages or other compensation for such personal injury, unless by the terms of this act otherwise provided; but this act shall not apply to any household or domestic servant, farm or other laborer engaged in agricultural pursuits, nor persons whose employment is of a casual nature. The provisions of this act shall not apply as between a municipal corporation, city, or town and any person or persons receiving any benefits under, or who may be entitled to, benefits from any "firemen's pension fund" or "policemen's pension fund" of any municipal corporation, city or town.
- Compulsory as to municipalities. (b) Where the State, county, municipal corporation, school district, cities under special charter and commission form of government is the employer, the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act for the payment of compensation and amount thereof for such injury sustained by an employee of such employer shall be exclusive, compulsory, and obligatory upon both employer and employee.
- Defenses abrogated, when. (c) An employer having the right under the provisions of this act to elect to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions thereof and [who] in such case exercises the right in the manner and form by this act provided, such employer shall not escape liability for personal injury sustained by an employee of such employer when the injury sustained arises out of and in the usual course of the employment because—
- (1) The employee assumed the risks inherent in or incidental to or arising out of his or her employment, or the risks arising from the failure of the employer to provide and maintain a reasonably safe place to work, or the risks arising from the failure of the employer to furnish reasonably safe tools or appliances, or because the employer exercised reasonable care in selecting reasonably competent employees in the business.
- (2) That the injury was caused by the negligence of the coemployee.
- (3) That the employee was negligent unless and except it shall appear that such negligence was willful and with intent to cause the injury; or the result of intoxication [on] the part of the injured party.
- Suits. (4) [d] In actions by an employee against an employer for personal injury sustained arising out of and in the course of the employment where the employer has elected to reject the provisions of this act, it shall be presumed that the injury to the employee was the direct result and growing out of the negligence of the employer; and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury; and in such cases the burden of proof shall rest upon the employer to rebut the presumption of negligence.
- Rejection of law by employer. Every such employer shall be conclusively presumed to have elected to provide, secure, and pay compensation to employees for injuries sustained arising out of and in the course of the employment according to the provisions of this act, unless and until notice in writing of an election to the contrary shall have been given to the employees by posting the same in some conspicuous place at the place where the business is carried on, and also by filing notice with the Iowa industrial commissioner with return thereon by affidavit showing the date that notice was posted as by this act provided: Provided, however, That any employer beginning business after the taking effect of this act and giving notice at once of his desire not to come under the provisions of this act, shall not be considered as under the act: Provided, however, That such employer shall not be relieved of the payment of compensation as by this act provided until thirty days after the filing of such notice with the Iowa industrial commissioner, which notice shall be substantially in the following form:

EMPLOYERS' NOTICE TO REJECT.

To the employees of the undersigned, and the Iowa industrial commissioner: Form.

You and each of you are hereby notified that the undersigned rejects the terms, conditions, and provisions to provide, secure, and pay compensation to employees of the undersigned for injuries received as provided in the acts of the _____ (thirty-fifth) general assembly known as chapter — (one hundred forty-seven), and elects to pay damages for personal injuries received by such employee under the common law and statutes of this State modified by subdivisions one, two, three, and four of section one, chapter — (one hundred forty-seven) of the acts of the — (thirty-fifth) general assembly and acts amendatory thereto.

Signed _____

State of Iowa, — County, ss:

The undersigned being first duly sworn deposes and says that a true, correct, and verbatim copy of the foregoing notice was on the — day of _____, 19—, posted at _____. (State fully place where posted.)

Subscribed and sworn to before me by _____, this — day of _____, 19—.

Notary Public.

The employer shall keep such notice posted in some conspicuous place, which shall apply to the employees subsequently employed by the employer with the same force and effect and to the same extent and in like manner as employees in the employ at the time the notice was given.

Where the employer and employee have not given notice of an election to reject the terms of this act, every contract of hire, express or implied, shall be construed as an implied agreement between them and a part of the contract on the part of the employer to provide, secure, and pay, and on the part of the employee to accept compensation in the manner as by this act provided for all personal injuries sustained arising out of and in the course of the employment.

Sec. 2477-m1. No compensation under this act shall be allowed Willful injuries, etc. for an injury caused:

(a) By the employee's willful intention to injure himself or to willfully injure another; nor shall compensation be paid to an injured employee if injury is sustained where intoxication of the employee was the proximate cause of the injury.

Sec. 2477-m2. (a) The rights and remedies provided in this act for Remedies exclusive. an employee on account of injury shall be exclusive of all other rights and remedies of such employee, his personal or legal representatives, dependents, or next of kin, at common law or otherwise, on account of such injury; and all employees affected by this act shall be conclusively presumed to have elected to take compensation in accordance with the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act until notice in writing shall have been served upon his employer, and also on the Iowa industrial commissioner, with return thereon by affidavit showing the date upon which notice was served upon the employer.

(b) In the event such employee elects to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act, the rights and remedies thereof shall not Rejection by employee. apply where an employee brings an action or takes proceedings to recover damages or compensation for injuries received growing out of and in the course of his employment, except as otherwise provided by this act; and in such actions where the employee has rejected the terms of this act the employer shall have the right to plead and rely upon any and all defenses, including those at common law, and the rules and defenses of contributory negligence, assumption of risk and fellow-servant shall apply and be available to the employer as by statute authorized unless otherwise provided in this act: Provided, however, That if an employee sustains an injury as the result of the employer's failure to furnish or failure to exercise reasonable care to keep or maintain any safety device required by statute or rule, or violation of any of the statutory provisions or rules and regulations now or hereafter in force relating to safety of employees, the doctrine of assumed risk in such case growing out of the negligence of the employer shall not apply or be available as defensive matter to such offending party. The notice required to be given by an employer shall be substantially in the following form:

Form.

Information required.

In any case where an employee or one who is an applicant for employment elects to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act, he shall, in addition to the notice required by subdivision (b) of section three of this act, state in an affidavit to be filed with said notice who, if any person, requested, suggested, or demands of such person to exercise the right to reject the provisions of this act. And if request, suggestion, or demand has been made of such employee by any person, such employee shall give and state the name of the person who made the request, suggestion, or demand, and all of the circumstances relating thereto, the date and place when and where made, and persons present, and if it be found that the employer of such employee, or an employer to whom an applicant for employment, or any person a member of the firm, association, corporation, or agent or official of such employer, made a request, suggestion, or demand of such employee or applicant for employment to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act, such request, suggestion, or demand if made under such conditions shall be conclusively presumed to have been sufficient to have unduly influenced such employee or an applicant for employment to exercise the right to reject the terms of this act, and the rejection made under such circumstances shall be conclusively presumed to have been procured through fraud and thereby fraudulently procured, and such rejection shall be null and void and of no effect.

No person interested in the business of such employer, financially or otherwise, shall be permitted to administer the oath to the affidavit required in case as [an] employee or applicant for employment elects to exercise the right to reject the provisions of this act. And the person administering such oath in making such affidavit, shall carefully read the notice and affidavit to such person making such rejection, and shall explain that the purpose of the notice is to bar such person from recovering compensation in accordance with the schedule and terms of this act in the event that he sustains an injury in the course of such employment. All of which shall be shown by certificate of the person administering the oath herein contemplated. The Iowa industrial commissioner, or any person acting for such commissioner, shall refuse to file the notice and affidavit, unless such notice, affidavit, and certificate fully, and in detail, comply with the requirements hereof. And if such rejection, affidavit, and certificate is found insufficient for any cause [it] shall be returned by mail or otherwise to the person who executed the instrument.

Administration of oath.

SEC. 2477-m3. (a) When the employer or employee has given notice in compliance with this act electing to reject the terms thereof such election shall continue and be in force until such employer or employee shall thereafter elect to come under the provisions of this act as is provided in subdivision (b) of this section.

Rejection in force.

(b) When an employer or employee rejects the terms, conditions, or provisions of this act, such party may at any time thereafter elect to waive the same by giving notice in writing in the same manner required of the party in electing to reject the provisions of the act and which shall become effective when filed with the Iowa industrial commissioner.

Waiver.

SEC. 2477-m4. Where the employer and employee elect to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act, the liability of the employer shall be the same as though the employee had not rejected the terms, conditions, and provisions thereof.

Rejection by both parties.

SEC. 2477-m5. An employer having come under this act, who thereafter elects to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions thereof, shall not be relieved from the payment of compensation to such employee who sustains an injury in the course of the employment before the election to reject becomes effective; and in such cases the employer shall be required to secure the payment of any compensation due or that may become due to such workman, subject to the approval of the Iowa industrial commissioner.

Rejection after election.

SEC. 2477-m6. Where an employee coming under the provisions of this act receives an injury for which compensation is payable under this act and which injury was caused under circumstances creating a legal liability in some person other than the employer, to pay damages in respect thereof.

Liability of third parties.

(a) The employee or beneficiary may take proceedings both against that person to recover damages and against the employer for compensation, but the amount of the compensation to which he is entitled under this act shall be reduced by the amount of damages recovered.

(b) If the employee or beneficiary in such case recovers compensation under this act, the employer by whom the compensation was paid or the party who has been called upon to pay the compensation, shall be entitled to indemnity from the person so liable to pay damages as aforesaid, and shall be subrogated to the rights of the employee to recover therefor.

SEC. 2477-m7. No contract, rule, regulation or device whatsoever shall operate to relieve the employer, in whole or in part, from any liability created by this act except as herein provided.

Waivers.

SEC. 2477-m8. Unless the employer or representative of such employer shall have actual knowledge of the occurrence of an injury, or unless the employee or some one on his behalf, or some of the dependents or some one on their behalf, shall give notice thereof to the employer within fifteen days of the occurrence of the injury, then no compensation shall be paid until and from the date such notice is given or knowledge obtained; but if notice is given or the knowledge obtained within thirty days from the occurrence of the injury, no want, failure, or inaccuracy of a notice shall be a bar to obtaining compensation, unless the employer shall show that he was prejudiced by such want, defect, or inaccuracy, and then only to the extent of such prejudice: Provided, That if the employee or beneficiary shall show that his failure to give prior notice was due to mistake, inadvertence, ignorance of fact or law, or inability, or to the fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit of another, or to any other reasonable cause or excuse, then compensation may be allowed, unless and then to the extent only that the employer shall show that he was prejudiced by failure to receive such notice: Provided further, Unless knowledge is obtained or notice given within ninety days after the occurrence of the injury, no compensation shall be allowed. No form of notice shall be required, but may substantially conform to the following form:

Notice.

FORM OF NOTICE.

Form. To
 You are hereby notified that on or about the .. day of 19.., personal injury was sustained by while in your employ at (Give name of place employed and point where located when injury occurred.) and that compensation will be claimed therefor
 Signed

but no variation from this form of notice shall be material if the notice is sufficient to advise the employer that a certain employee, by name, received an injury in the course of his employment on or about a specified time at or near a certain place. Notice served upon one on whom an original notice may be served in civil cases shall be a compliance with this act.

The notice required to be given to the employer may be served by any person over sixteen years of age, who shall make return upon a copy of the notice, properly sworn to, showing the date of service where and upon whom served, but no special form of the return of service of the notice shall be required. It shall be sufficient if the facts therefrom can be reasonably ascertained. The return of service may be amended at any time.

Compensation payable, when. Sec. 2477-m9 (as amended by ch. 220, acts of 1919). If any employee has not given notice to reject the terms, conditions, and provisions of this act, or has given such notice and waived the same as by this act provided, and the employer has not rejected the terms, conditions, and provisions of the act or has given such notice and waived the same and the employee receives a personal injury arising out of and in the course of the employment, compensation shall be paid as herein provided.

Amount. (a) The compensation provided for in this act shall be paid in accordance with the schedule unless otherwise provided.

Medical, etc., aid. (b) At the time of the injury and thereafter during the disability, but not exceeding four weeks of incapacity, the employer, if so requested, by the employee, or anyone for him, or if so ordered by the court or Iowa industrial commissioner, shall furnish reasonable surgical, medical, and hospital services, and supplies therefor, not exceeding one hundred ($100) dollars: Provided, however, That in exceptional cases, an application may be made in writing to the Iowa industrial commissioner for additional surgical, medical, and hospital services, and supplies therefor, in which case a copy of such application shall be mailed to the employer or his insurer. If such application is approved by the commissioner, then the employer shall furnish such additional services and supplies for such period and in such amount as the Iowa industrial commissioner shall order, but in no event to exceed one hundred ($100) dollars.

(c) Where the injury causes death the compensation under this act shall be as follows:

Funeral, etc., expenses. The employer shall in addition to any other compensation pay the reasonable expense of the employee's last sickness and burial not to exceed one hundred dollars. If the employee leaves no dependents this shall be the only compensation.

Death benefits. (d) If death results from the injury, the employer shall pay the dependents of the employee wholly dependent upon his earnings for support at the time of the injury, a weekly payment equal to sixty per cent of his average weekly wages, but not more than fifteen ($15) dollars nor less than six ($6) dollars per week for a period of three hundred weeks.

(e) If the employee leaves dependents only partially dependent upon his earnings for support at the time of the injury, the weekly compensation to be paid as aforesaid shall be equal to the same proportion of the weekly payments for the benefit of persons wholly dependent as the amount contributed by the employee to such partial dependents bears to the annual earnings of the deceased at the time of the injury. When weekly payments have been made to an injured employee before his death, the compensation to dependents shall begin from the date of the last of such payments, but shall not continue more than three hundred weeks from the date of the injury.

(f) Where injury causes death to an employee, a minor, whose earnings were received by the parent, the compensation to be paid the parent shall be two-thirds of the amount provided for payment in subdivision (d), section ten [nine].

Minors.

(g) No compensation shall be paid for an injury which does not incapacitate the employee for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages: Provided, however, That this provision shall not apply to those injuries resulting in disability partial in character and permanent in quality and compensated according to the schedule found in section twenty-four hundred seventy-seven-m-9 (J) (2477-m-9-j), Supplement to the Code, 1913. Should such incapacity extend beyond a period of two weeks, compensation shall begin on the fifteenth day after the injury: Provided, however, That if the period of incapacity extends beyond the thirty-fifth day following the date of the injury, then the compensation for the fifth week of incapacity shall be increased by adding thereto an amount equal to two-thirds ($\frac{2}{3}$) of the weekly compensation; if the period of incapacity extends beyond the forty-second (42d) day following the date of the injury, then the compensation for the sixth week of incapacity shall be increased by adding thereto an amount equal to two-thirds ($\frac{2}{3}$) of the weekly compensation; if the period of incapacity extends beyond the forty-ninth (49th) day following the date of the injury, then the compensation for the seventh week of incapacity shall be increased by adding thereto an amount equal to two-thirds ($\frac{2}{3}$) of the weekly compensation; if the period of incapacity extends beyond the forty-ninth (49th) day following the date of the injury, then the compensation thereafter shall be only the weekly compensation provided for in this law.

Waiting time.

Increased benefits.

(h) For injury producing temporary disability, sixty per cent of the average weekly wages received at the time of the injury, subject to a maximum compensation of fifteen dollars and a minimum of six dollars per week: Provided, That if at the time of injury the employee receives wages less than six dollars per week, then he shall receive the full amount of wages per week. This compensation shall be paid during the period of such disability, not, however, beyond three hundred weeks.

Temporary disability.

(i) For disability total in character and permanent in quality, sixty per cent of the average weekly wages received at the time of the injury, subject to a maximum compensation of fifteen dollars per week, and a minimum of six dollars per week: Provided, That if, at the time of injury, the employee receives wages less than six dollars per week, then he shall receive the full amount of wages per week. This compensation shall be paid during the period of such disability, not, however, beyond four hundred weeks.

Permanent total disability.

(j) For disability partial in character and permanent in quality the compensation shall be as follows:

Partial disability.

For all cases included in the following schedule compensation shall be paid as follows, to wit:

- (1) For the loss of a thumb, sixty per cent of daily wages during forty weeks.
- (2) For the loss of a first finger, commonly called the index finger, sixty per cent of daily wages during thirty weeks.
- (3) For the loss of a second finger, sixty per cent of daily wages during twenty-five weeks.
- (4) For the loss of a third finger, sixty per cent of daily wages during twenty weeks.

(5) For the loss of a fourth finger, commonly called the little finger, sixty per cent of daily wages for fifteen weeks.

(6) For the loss of the first phalange of the thumb or of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such thumb or finger and compensation shall be one-half of the amounts above specified.

(7) The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire finger or thumb: Provided, however, That in no case shall the amount received for more than one finger exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a hand.

(8) For the loss of a great toe, sixty per cent of daily wages during twenty-five weeks.

(9) For the loss of one of the toes other than the great toe, sixty per cent of daily wages during fifteen weeks.

(10) For the loss of the first phalange of any toe shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such toe, and the compensation shall be one-half of the amount above specified.

(11) The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of the entire toe.

(12) For the loss of a hand, sixty per cent of daily wages during one hundred fifty weeks.

(13) The loss of two-thirds of that part of an arm between the shoulder joint and the elbow joint shall constitute the loss of an arm, and the compensation therefor shall be sixty (60) per cent of the average weekly wages during two hundred twenty-five (225) weeks.

(14) For the loss of a foot, sixty per cent of daily wages during one hundred twenty-five weeks.

(15) The loss of two-thirds of that part of a leg between the hip joint and the knee joint shall constitute the loss of a leg, and the compensation therefor shall be sixty (60) per cent of the average weekly wages during two hundred (200) weeks.

(16) For the loss of any [an] eye, sixty per cent of daily wages during one hundred weeks.

(a) For the loss of a second or last eye, the other eye having been lost prior to the injury resulting in the loss of the second eye, sixty (60) per cent of the average weekly wages during two hundred (200) weeks.

(17) For the loss of hearing in one ear, sixty (60) per cent of daily wages during fifty (50) weeks, and for the loss of hearing in both ears, fifty (50) per cent of the daily wages during one hundred fifty (150) weeks.

(18) The loss of both arms, or both hands, or both feet, or both legs, or both eyes, or of any two thereof, caused by a single accident, shall constitute total and permanent disability, to be compensated according to the provisions of section twenty-four hundred seventy-seven-m-9 (I) (2477-m-9-i), supplement to the code, 1913.

Other injuries. (19) In all other cases in this, clause (j), the compensation shall bear such relation to the amount stated in the above schedule as the disability bears to those produced by the injuries named in the schedule. Should the employee and employer be unable to agree upon the amount of compensation to be paid in cases not specifically covered by the schedule, the amount of compensation shall be settled according to provisions of this act as in other cases of disagreement.

Amounts. (20) The amounts specified in this clause (j) and subdivisions thereof, shall be subject to the same limitations as to maximum and minimum weekly payments as are stated in clause (h), section ten [nine] hereof.

Death during compensation period. SEC. 2477-m10. Where an employee is entitled to compensation under this act for an injury received, and death ensues from any cause not resulting from the injury for which he was entitled to the compensation, payments of the unpaid balances for such injury shall cease and all liability therefor shall terminate.

Medical examinations. SEC. 2477-m11. After an injury, the employee, if so requested by his employer, shall submit himself for examination at some reasonable time and place within the state and as often as may be reasonably requested, to a physician or physicians authorized to practice under the laws of this State, without cost to the employee; but if the employee request, he shall, at his own cost, be entitled to have a physician or physicians of his own selection present to participate in such examination. The refusal of the employee to submit to such examination shall deprive him of the right to compensation during the continuance of such refusal. When a right to compensation is thus suspended no compensation shall be payable in respect to the period of suspension.

Refusal.

SEC. 2477-m12. The compensation herein provided shall be the measure of the responsibility which the employer has assumed for injuries or death that may occur to employees in his employment, subject to the provisions of this act, and it shall not be in any wise reduced by contribution from employees.

Burden on employer.

SEC. 2477-m13 (as amended by ch. 270, 336, acts of 1917). When an injured minor employee or a minor dependent or one physically or mentally incapacitated from earning is entitled to compensation under this act, payment shall be made to a trustee appointed by the judge of the district court for each county in the respective judicial districts, and the money coming into the hands of the said trustees shall be expended for the use and benefit of the person entitled thereto under the direction and orders of the judge during term time or in vacation. The trustee shall make annual reports to the court of all money or property received and expended for each person, and for services rendered as trustee shall be paid such compensation by the county as the court may direct by written order directed to the auditor of the county who shall issue a warrant therefor upon the treasurer of the county in which the appointment is made. If the judge making the appointment deems it advisable, a trustee may be appointed to serve for more than one county in the district, and the expenses shall be paid ratably by each county according to the amount of work performed in each county. The trustee shall qualify and give bond in such amount as the judge may direct, which may be increased or diminished from time to time as the court may deem best.

Payments to trustees, when.

In case a deceased employee for whose injury or death compensation is payable leaves surviving him an alien dependent or dependents residing outside the United States, the consul-general, consul, vice-consul or consular agent of the nation of which the said dependent or dependents are citizens shall be regarded as the exclusive representative of such dependent or dependents. Such consular officer, or his duly appointed representative residing in the State of Iowa, shall have the exclusive right in behalf of such nonresident dependents to present, prosecute, litigate, adjust, and settle all claims for compensation provided by this act, and to receive for distribution to such dependent or dependents all compensation arising thereunder.

Aliens.

Such consular officer or his duly appointed representative shall file with the industrial commissioner a copy of his exequatur or evidence of his authority and the industrial commissioner shall notify such consular officer or his said representative of the death of all employees leaving alien dependent or dependents residing in the country of said consular officer so far as the same shall come to his knowledge: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall abridge the right of any relative of such decedent who may reside in the State of Iowa to take out administration upon the estate of such decedent, and as such receive the funds due said estate: And provided further, That before said consular agent or his representative shall have the right to receive funds due the estate of said decedent he shall regularly take out administration in the county where decedent last resided, and give bond as administrator for the protection of such funds as provided by law.

SEC. 2477-m14 (as amended by ch. 270, acts of 1917). In any case where the period of compensation can be determined definitely either party may, upon due notice to the other, apply to any judge of the district court for the county in which the accident occurred for an order commuting future payments to a lump sum: Provided, however, That no judge of the district court shall consider any such application until there is endorsed thereon by the Iowa industrial commissioner his approval of such commutation, and no order shall be issued by such judge contrary to the endorsement of said industrial commissioner. And such judge may make such an order when it shall be shown to his satisfaction that the payment of a lump sum in lieu of future monthly or weekly payments, as the case may be, will be for the best interest of the person or persons receiving or dependent upon said compensation, or that the continuance of periodical payments will, as compared with lump-sum payments, entail undue expense or undue hardship upon the employer liable therefor. Where the commutation is ordered, the court shall fix the lump sum to be paid at an amount which will equal the total sum of the probable future payments capitalized at their present value and upon the basis of interest, calculated at five per cent per annum. Upon the payment of such amount the employer shall be discharged from all further liability on account of such injury or death, for which said compensation was being paid, and be entitled to a duly executed release, upon filing which the liability of such employer under any agreement, award, finding, or judgment shall be discharged of record.

Computing payments.

SEC. 2477-m15 (as amended by ch. 220, acts of 1919). The basis for computing compensation provided for in this act shall be as follows:

(a) The compensation shall be computed on the basis of the annual earnings which the injured person received as salary, wages or earnings in the employment of the same employer during the year next preceding the injury.

(b) Employment by the same employer shall be taken to mean employment by the same employer in the grade in which the employee was employed at the time of the accident, uninterrupted by absence from work due to illness or any other unavoidable cause.

(c) The annual earnings, if not otherwise determinable, shall be regarded as three hundred times the average daily earnings in such computation.

(d) If the injured person has not been engaged in the employment for a full year immediately preceding the accident, the compensation shall be computed according to the annual earnings which persons of the same class in the same or in neighboring employments of the same kind have earned during such period. And if this basis of computation is impossible, or should appear to be unreasonable, three hundred times the amount which the injured person earned on an average of those days when he was working during the year next preceding the accident, shall be used as a basis for the compensation.

(e) In case of injured employees who earn either no wages or less than three hundred times the usual daily wage or earnings of the adult day laborer in the same line of industry of that locality, the yearly wage shall be reckoned as three hundred times the average daily local wages of the average wage earner in that particular kind or class of work; or if information of that class is not obtainable, then of the class or kindred or similarity in the same general employment in the same neighborhood.

Seasonal employments.

(f) As to employees employed in a business or enterprise which customarily shuts down and ceases operation during a season of each year, the number of working days which it is the custom of such business or enterprise to operate each year shall be used instead of three hundred as a basis for computing the annual earnings; Provided, The minimum number of days which shall be used as a basis for the year's work shall not be less than two hundred.

Overtime, etc.

(g) Earnings, for the purpose of this section, shall be based on the earnings for the number of hours commonly regarded as a day's work for that employment, and shall exclude overtime earnings. The earnings shall not include any sum which the employer has been accustomed to pay the employee to cover any special expense entailed on him by the nature of the employment.

Second injuries.

(h) In computing the compensation to be paid to any employee who, before the accident for which he claims compensation, was disabled and drawing compensation under the terms of this act, the compensation for each subsequent injury shall be apportioned according to the proportion of incapacity and disability caused by the respective injuries which he may have suffered.

Definitions.

SEC. 2477-m16 (as amended by ch. 270, acts of 1917). In this act unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Employer" includes and applies to any person, firm, association or corporation, and includes State, counties, municipal corporations, cities under special charter and under commission form of government and shall include school districts and the legal representatives of a deceased employer. Whenever necessary to give effect to section 7 of this act, it includes a principal or intermediate contractor.

(b) "Workman" is used synonymously with "employee," and means any person who has entered into the employment of, or works under contract of service, express or implied, or apprenticeship for an employer, except a person whose employment is purely casual or not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business or those engaged in clerical work only, but clerical work shall not include one who may be subjected to the hazards of the business, or one holding an official position or standing in a representative capacity of the employer, or an official elected or appointed by the State, county, school district, municipal corporation, cities under special charter and commission form of government: Provided, That one who sustains the relation of contractor with any person, firm, association, corporation or the State, county, school district, municipal corporation, cities under special charter or commission form of government, shall not be considered an employee thereof.

The term "workman" shall include the singular and plural of both sexes. Any reference to a workman who has been injured shall, where the workman is dead, include a reference to his dependents as herein defined, legal representatives or where the workman is a minor or incompetent to his guardian or next friend.

(c) The following shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent upon a deceased employee:

Dependents.

(1) The surviving spouse, unless it be shown that the survivor willfully deserted deceased without fault upon the part of the deceased, and if it be shown that the survivor deserted deceased without fault upon the part of deceased, the survivor shall not be regarded as a dependent in any degree. No surviving spouse shall be entitled to the benefits of this act unless she shall have been married to the deceased at the time of the injury, and should the deceased employee leave no dependent children, and should the surviving spouse remarry, then all compensation payable to her shall terminate on the date of such remarriage.

(2) A child or children under sixteen years of age (and over said age if physically or mentally incapacitated from earning) whether actually dependent for support or not upon the parent at the time of his or her death.

(3) A parent of a minor entitled to the earnings of the employee at the time when the injury occurred, subject to provisions of subdivision (f), section 10 [nine] hereof.

(4) If the deceased employee leaves dependent surviving spouse, the full compensation shall be paid to such spouse; but if the dependent surviving spouse dies before payment is made in full, the balance remaining shall be paid to the person or persons wholly dependent, if any, share and share alike. If there be no person or persons wholly dependent, then payment shall be made to partial dependents.

(5) In all other cases, questions of dependency in whole or in part shall be determined in accordance with the fact as the fact may be at the time of the injury; and in such other cases if there is more than one person wholly dependent, the death benefit shall be equally divided among them, and persons partially dependent, if any, shall receive no part thereof. If there is no one wholly dependent and more than one person partially dependent, the death benefit shall be divided among them according to the relative extent of their dependency: Provided, however, That when a lump sum is paid as contemplated by this act, the court or commissioner, in making distribution thereof, shall take into consideration the contingent rights of partial beneficiaries or the rights of those who may become such after a wholly dependent child or children become sixteen years of age.

(6) Step-parents shall be regarded in this act as parents.

(7) Adopted child or children or stepchild or children shall be regarded in this act the same as if issue of the body.

(d) "Injury" or "personal injury" includes death resulting from injury.

Injury.

(e) The words "personal injury arising out of and in the course of such employment" shall include injuries to employees whose services are being performed on, in or about the premises which are occupied, used or controlled by the employer, and also injuries to those who are engaged elsewhere in places where their employer's business requires their presence and subjects them to dangers incident to the business.

(f) The words "injury" and "personal injury" shall not include injury caused by the willful act of a third person directed against an employee for reasons personal to such employee or because of his employment.

Disease.

(g) They shall not include a disease except as it shall result from the injury.

(h) The word "court" whenever used in this act, unless the context shows otherwise, shall be taken to mean the district court.

Employees' contributions.

SEC. 2477-m17. (a) Any contract of employment, relief benefit or insurance or other device whereby the employee is required to pay any premium or premiums for insurance against the compensation provided for in this act shall be null and void; and any employer withholding from the wages of any employee any amount for the purpose of paying any such premium shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punishable by a fine not less than ten dollars nor more than fifty dollars for each offense, in the discretion of the court.

No employee or beneficiary shall have power to waive any of the provisions of this act in regard to the amount of compensation which may be payable to such employee or beneficiary hereunder to whom the act applies.

Agreements within 12 days.

SEC. 2477-m18. Any contract or agreement made by any employer or his agent or attorney with any employee or any other beneficiary of any claim under the provisions of this act within twelve days after the injury shall be presumed to be fraudulent.

SEC. 2477-m19. [Repealed.]

Attorneys' fees.

SEC. 2477-m20. No claim of an attorney at law for services in securing a recovery under this act shall be an enforceable lien thereon unless the amount of the same be approved in writing by a judge of a court of record or the Iowa industrial commissioner, which approval may be made in term time or vacation.

Commerce.

SEC. 2477-m21. The provisions of this act shall apply to employers and employees as defined in this act engaged in intrastate commerce and also to those engaged in interstate or foreign commerce for whom a rule or method of compensation has been or may be established by the Congress of the United States, only to the extent that their mutual connection with intrastate work or foreign commerce shall be clearly separable and distinguishable from interstate or foreign commerce: Provided, That any such employer and workman of such employer working only in this State may, subject to the approval of the Iowa industrial commissioner, and so far as not forbidden by any act of Congress or permitted, voluntarily by written agreement, accept and become bound by the provisions of this act in like manner and with the same force and effect in every respect as by this act provided for other employers and employees.

PART II.

Industrial commissioner.

SECTION 2477-m22 (as amended by ch. 272, acts of 1919). There is hereby created the office of Iowa industrial commissioner, to be appointed by the governor, by and with the consent of the senate. The term of office of the commissioner shall be six years. An appointment may be made to fill a vacancy or otherwise when the senate is not in session, but shall be acted upon at the next session thereof.

The Iowa industrial commissioner shall appoint a deputy, for whose acts he shall be held responsible, who shall hold office during the pleasure of said industrial commissioner. Such appointment shall be made in writing, and must be approved by the executive council of the State of Iowa. The deputy, in the absence or disability of the Iowa industrial commissioner, shall have all the powers and perform all of the duties of the industrial commissioner pertaining to his office, and shall receive an annual salary of twenty-four hundred dollars, payable in equal monthly installments, out of the State treasury and in the same manner as are the salaries of other State officials.

Salary, etc.

SEC. 2477-m23. The salary and actual necessary expenses of the commissioner shall be paid by the State, and he shall be provided with adequate and necessary office rooms, furniture, equipment, supplies, and other necessaries in the transaction of the business. The annual salary of the commissioner shall be thirty-three hundred dollars. The commissioner, by and with the consent of the executive council, may fix the salary and appoint a secretary and other assistants and clerical help as may be required and needed: Provided, That the salary of the secretary shall not exceed eighteen hundred dollars per annum. The salary and actual personal expense account of the commissioner shall be itemized and sworn to and filed as other current bills as provided by statute, and warrant therefor shall be issued by the auditor upon the treasurer of the State for the payment thereof at the end of each calendar month: Provided, however, That the expense account may be audited, allowed, and paid at the end of each week. The commissioner shall provide himself with a seal, which shall be used to authenticate his orders, decisions, and other proceedings deemed necessary, upon which shall be inscribed the words, "Iowa Industrial Commissioner's Seal" and the date of organization. All other accounts made by, through, or under the commissioner for salaries (and) expenditures, unless otherwise by this act provided, shall be itemized and sworn to by the parties entitled thereto, audited by the commissioner, attested by the secretary, filed as other bills are required by statute; and a warrant shall issue therefor by the auditor of State upon the treasurer, who shall pay the same out of the funds appropriated for the use of the commissioner as by this act provided. The salaries of all persons under the commissioner shall be audited, allowed, and paid at the end of each month, and expense accounts may be audited, allowed, and paid at the end of each week. The commissioner shall have the power to remove the secretary or any other person appointed to an office by him at any time the commissioner may see fit.

Seal.

Accounts.

It shall be unlawful for any appointee by the commissioner to espouse the election or appointment of any candidate for or to any political office, or to contribute to the campaign fund of any political party, or to the campaign fund of any person who is a candidate for election or appointment to any political office, and any person performing the duties as an appointee under the commissioner violating the provisions of this act shall be sufficient cause for dismissal and removal from office.

Political activity.

Before entering upon his duties the commissioner shall qualify by taking the oath of his office, that he will support the Constitution of the United States and of the State of Iowa, and will faithfully and impartially, without fraud, fear, or favor, discharge the duties of his office incumbent upon him, as provided by the law of the State of Iowa, to the best of his ability and understanding.

Oath.

There is hereby appropriated out of any money not otherwise appropriated for the use of the commissioner, as contemplated within the terms of this act or acts amendatory thereof, or other statutes relating to the commissioner, his duties and responsibilities empowered by law, the sum of twenty thousand dollars annually, and in addition thereto the executive council shall provide and furnish the commissioner with such printing as may be necessary in the transaction of the business within the contemplation of law.

Appropriation.

SEC. 2477-m24 (as amended by chs. 188, 270, 409, acts of 1917). The commissioner may make rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act for carrying out the provisions of the act. The employer shall furnish upon request of an injured employee or dependent or any legal representative acting for such person, a statement of the earnings, wages, or salary and other matters relating to such earnings, wages, or salary during the year or part of the year that such employee was in the employment of such employer for the year preceding the injury: Provided, however, That not more than one report shall be required for each on account of any one injury. Process and procedure under this act shall be as summary as reasonably may be. While sitting as an arbitration committee, or when conducting a hearing upon review, or in the making of any investigation or inquiry, neither the commissioner nor the arbitration committee shall be bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence, or by technical or formal rules of procedure, but may hold such arbitrations or conduct such hearings and make such investigations and inquiries in the manner best suited to ascertain the substantial rights

Regulations.

Procedure.

- Oaths. of the parties. The commissioner shall have the power to subpoena witnesses, administer oaths and to examine such books and records of the parties to a proceeding or investigation as relate to questions in dispute or under investigation. The fees for attending as a witness before the industrial commissioner shall be one dollar and fifty cents per diem; for attending before an arbitration committee, one dollar per diem; in both cases five cents per mile for traveling to and from the place of hearing. The district court is hereby empowered to enforce by proper proceedings the provisions of this section relating to the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the examination of books and records. The deposition of any witness may be taken and used as evidence in any hearing pending before a board of arbitration in workmen's compensation proceeding in connection herewith. Such deposition shall be taken in the same manner as provided for the taking of depositions in the district court, and when so taken shall be admissible in evidence in such hearings in the same manner subject to the same rules governing the evidence in the district court. Application for permission to take depositions in such case shall be filed in the district court of the county wherein the case for arbitration shall be heard. The commissioner shall make biennial reports to the governor, who shall transmit the same to the general assembly, in which, among other things, the commissioner shall recommend such changes in the law covered by this act as he may deem necessary.
- Fees.
- Memoranda of agreements. Sec. 2477-m25 (as amended by ch. 270, acts of 1917). If the employer and the employee reach an agreement in regard to the compensation under this act, a memorandum thereof shall be filed with the Iowa industrial commissioner by the employer or employee, and unless the commissioner shall, within twenty days, notify the employer and employee of his disapproval of the agreement by registered letter sent to their addresses as given on the memorandum filed, the agreement shall stand as approved and be enforceable for all purposes under the provisions of this act. In case the injured employee is a minor, either he or the trustee provided for in section twenty-four hundred seventy-seven-m-13 (2477-m-13), supplement to the code, 1913, may execute the memorandum of agreement provided for herein, and may give a valid and binding release for the compensation paid on his account under the terms of this act. Such agreement shall be approved by said commissioner only when the terms conform to the provisions of this act.
- Arbitrations. Sec. 2477-m26. If the employer and the injured employee or representatives or dependents fail to reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act, either party may notify the industrial commissioner, who shall thereupon call for the formation of a committee of arbitration. The arbitration committee shall consist of three persons, one of whom shall be the industrial commissioner, who shall act as chairman. The other two shall be named, respectively, by the two parties. If a vacancy occurs it shall be filled by the party whose representative is unable to act.
- Oath of arbitrators. Sec. 2477-m27. The arbitrators appointed by the parties shall be sworn by the chairman to take the following oath:
I, _____, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully perform my duties as arbitrator and will not be influenced in my decision by any feeling of friendship or partiality toward either party.
(Signed)
- Committee. Sec. 2477-m28. It shall be the duty of the industrial commissioner, upon notification that the parties have failed to reach an agreement, to request both parties to appoint their respective representatives on the committee of arbitration. The commissioner shall act as chairman, and, if either party does not appoint its member on this committee within seven days after notification as above provided, or after a vacancy has occurred, the commissioner shall fill the vacancy and notify the parties to that effect.
- Powers. Sec. 2477-m29 (as amended by ch. 220, acts of 1919). The committee of arbitration shall make such inquiries and investigations as it shall deem necessary. The hearings of the committee shall be in the city, town, or place where the injury occurred, if within the State. If the injury occurred outside this State the hearings of the committee shall be held in the county seat of this State which is nearest to the place where the injury occurred unless the interested parties and the Iowa industrial commissioner mutually agree by written stipulation that the same may be held at some other place. The decision of the committee, together with the statement of evidence submitted before it, its findings of fact, rulings of law, and any other matters pertinent to questions arising before it, shall be filed with the industrial commissioner. Unless a claim for review is filed by either party within five days from the date of filing the decision with said commissioner, such decision shall be enforceable under the provisions of this chapter.

Sec. 2477-m30. The industrial commissioner may appoint a duly qualified impartial physician to examine the injured employee and make report. The fee for this service shall be five dollars, to be paid by the industrial commissioner, together with traveling expenses, but the commissioner may allow additional reasonable amounts in extraordinary cases. Any physician so examining any injured employee shall not be prohibited from testifying before the Iowa industrial commissioner or any other person, commission, or court, as to the results of his examination or the condition of the injured employee. Medical examination.

Sec. 2477-m31. The arbitrators named by or for the parties to the dispute shall each receive five dollars as a fee for his services, but the industrial commissioner may allow additional reasonable amounts in extraordinary cases. The fees shall be paid by the employer, who may deduct an amount equal to one-half of the sum from any compensation found due the employee. And all other costs incurred in the hearing before the board of arbitration shall be taxed to the losing party, or an equitable apportionment made thereof by the committee according to the facts. Arbitrators' fees.

Sec. 2477-m32. If a claim for review is filed, the industrial commissioner shall hear the parties and may hear evidence in regard to any or all matters pertinent thereto and may revise the decision of the committee in whole or in part, or may refer the matter back to the committee for further findings of fact, and shall file its decision with the records of the proceedings and notify the parties thereof. No party shall as a matter of right be entitled to a second hearing upon any question of fact. Review.

Sec. 2477-m33 (as amended by ch. 270, acts of 1917). Any party in interest may present a certified copy of an order or decision of the commissioner, or an award of an arbitration committee from which no claim for review has been filed within the time allowed therefor, or a memorandum of agreement approved by the commissioner, and all papers in connection therewith, to the district court of the county in which the injury occurred, whereupon said court shall render a decree in accordance therewith and notify the parties. Such decree, in the absence of an appeal from the decision of the industrial commissioner, shall have the same effect, and in all proceedings in relation thereto shall thereafter be the same as though rendered in a suit duly heard and determined by said court. Upon the presentation to the court of a certified copy of a decision of the industrial commissioner, ending, diminishing, or increasing a weekly payment under the provisions of this act, the court shall revoke or modify the decree to conform to such decision. Filing orders in court.

No order or award of an arbitration committee is appealable direct to the courts, but if any party in interest is aggrieved thereby he may, within five (5) days from the date thereof, apply to the industrial commissioner for a review of the same by such industrial commissioner in the manner as hereinbefore provided. If any such party is aggrieved by reason of an order or decree of the Iowa industrial commissioner, such party may appeal therefrom to the district court of Iowa, only in the manner and upon the grounds following: Review.

Within thirty (30) days from the date of such order or decree of the industrial commissioner, the party aggrieved may file an application in writing with the Iowa industrial commissioner asking for an appeal from such order or decree, stating generally the grounds upon which such appeal is sought. In the event such application is filed as hereinbefore provided, the industrial commissioner shall, Appeals.

within thirty days from the filing of same, cause certified copies of all documents and papers then on file in his office in the matter, and a transcript of all testimony taken therein, to be transmitted with his findings and order or decree to the clerk of the district court of Iowa in and for that county wherein the injury occurred. The application for such appeal may thereupon be brought on for hearing before said district court upon such record by either party on ten (10) days' written notice to the other; subject, however, to the provisions of law for a change of the place of trial or the calling of another judge. The findings of fact made by the industrial commissioner within his powers shall, in the absence of fraud, be conclusive, but upon such hearing the court may confirm or set aside such order or decree of the industrial commissioner, if he finds:

(1) That the industrial commissioner acted without or in excess of his powers; or

(2) That the order or decree was procured by fraud; or

(3) That the facts found by the industrial commissioner do not support the order or decree.

(4) That there is not sufficient competent evidence in the record to warrant the industrial commissioner in making the order or decree complained of.

No order or decree of the industrial commissioner shall be set aside by the court upon other than the grounds just stated.

Further hearing.

Upon the setting aside of any such order or decree, the court may recommit the controversy to the industrial commissioner for further hearing or proceedings, or it may enter the proper judgment upon the findings, as the nature of the case may demand. Such decree shall have the same effect and in all proceedings in relation thereto shall thereafter be the same as though rendered in a suit duly heard and determined by said court. An abstract of the judgment entered by the trial court upon the appeal from any order or decree shall be made by the clerk thereof upon the docket entry of any judgment which may hereinbefore have been rendered upon it. Such order or decree and transcript of such abstract may thereupon be obtained for like entry upon the dockets of the courts of other counties within the State.

Any party in interest who is aggrieved by a judgment entered by the district court upon the appeal of an order or decree, may appeal therefrom within the time and in the manner provided for in appeal from the orders, judgments, and decrees of the district court of Iowa; but all such appeals shall be placed on the calendar of the supreme court and brought to a hearing in the same manner as criminal causes on such calendar.

Fees.

No fee shall be charged by the clerk of any district court for the performance of any official service required by this act, except for the docketing of judgments and for certified copies or transcripts thereof. In proceeding on appeal from an order or decree, costs as between the parties shall be allowed or not, in the discretion of the court.

Review of awards.

SEC. 2477-m34 (as amended by ch. 270, acts of 1917). (a) Any payment required to be made under this act, which has not been commuted, may be reviewed by the industrial commissioner at the request of the employer or of the employee, and if on such review the commissioner finds the condition of the employee warrants such action, he may end, diminish, or increase the compensation, subject to the maximum or minimum amounts provided for in this act. All hearings upon review of the Iowa industrial commissioner under the provisions of this section, or under section twenty-four hundred seventy-seven-m-32 (2477-m-32), supplement to the code, 1913, shall be held at Des Moines, Iowa, unless the interested parties and the Iowa industrial commissioner mutually agree by written stipulation that the same may be held at some other place.

Upon the presentation to the court of a certified copy of a decision of the industrial commissioner ending, diminishing, or increasing a weekly payment under the provisions of this act, the court shall revoke or modify any judgment or decree then on record in his court to conform to such decision.

(b) Any notice to be given by the commissioner or court provided for in this act shall be in writing, but service thereof shall be sufficient if registered and deposited in the mail, addressed to the last known address of the parties.

Sec. 2477-m35. Fees of attorneys and physicians for services under this act shall be subject to the approval of the industrial commissioner unless otherwise provided in this act. Fees to be approved.

Sec. 2477-m36 (as amended by ch. 270, acts of 1917). Every employer shall hereafter keep a record of all injuries, fatal or otherwise, sustained by his employees in the course of their employment and resulting in incapacity for a longer period than one day. Within forty-eight hours, not counting Sundays and legal holidays, after the employer has knowledge of the occurrence of an accident resulting in personal injury, causing incapacity for a longer period than one day, a report shall be made in writing by the employer to the industrial commissioner on blanks to be procured from the commissioner for that purpose. Reports of accidents.

Upon the termination of the disability of the injured employee, or if such disability extends beyond a period of sixty days, at the expiration of such period the employer shall make a supplemental report on blanks to be procured from the commissioner for that purpose. The said reports shall contain the name and nature of the business of the employer, the location of the establishment, the name, age, sex, and occupation of the injured employee, and shall state the date and hour of the accident, the nature and cause of the injury, and such other information as may be required by the commissioner. Any employer who refuses or neglects to make the report required by this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than fifty dollars for each offense.

All books, records, and pay rolls of the employers, coming under this act showing or reflecting in any way upon the amount of wage expenditure of such employer, shall always be open for inspection by the industrial commissioner, or any of his representatives presenting a certificate of authority from said commissioner for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of the wage expenditure, the number of men employed and such other information as may be necessary for the uses and purposes of the commissioner in his administration of the law. But information obtained within the contemplation of this act shall be used for no other purpose than the information of the commissioner or insurance association with reference to the duties imposed upon such commissioner. A refusal on the part of the employer to submit his books, records, or pay rolls for the inspection of the commissioner, or his authorized representative presenting written authority from the commissioner, shall subject the employer to a penalty of one hundred dollars for each such offense, to be collected by civil action in the name of the State, and paid into the State treasury. Access to books, etc.

Sec. 2477-m37. It shall be unlawful for the commissioner, during his term of office, to serve upon any committee of any political party or espouse the election or appointment of any person for any political office or contribute to any campaign fund of any political party, or to the campaign fund of any person who is a candidate for election or appointed to any political office. A violation of this section shall be deemed a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined one hundred dollars. Political activity.

Sec. 2477-m38. It shall be unlawful for any person who is a candidate for the appointment as commissioner to make any promise to another, expressed or implied, in consideration of any assistance or influence given or recommendation made that the candidate will, if appointed as commissioner, vote to appoint such person or one whom he may recommend to an office within the power of the commissioner to appoint. A violation thereof shall be deemed a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined one hundred dollars. Pledges.

Sec. 2477-m39. All recommendations made by any person to the commissioner asking the appointment of another as commissioner shall be reduced to writing signed by the person presenting the same, which shall be filed by the governor in his office and open at all reasonable times for public inspection, and all recommendations made by any person to the commissioner for the appointment of another within the Recommendations.

power of the commissioner to appoint, shall be reduced to writing, signed by the person presenting the same, and filed by the commissioner and open for public inspection at all reasonable times and hours. If any person recommending the appointment of another within the contemplation of this act refuse to reduce the same to writing, it shall be the duty of the person to whom the recommendation is made, to make a brief memorandum thereof, stating the name of the person recommended and the name of the person who made the same, which shall be filed as by this act in other cases provided. It shall be unlawful for the commissioner to be financially interested in any business enterprise coming under or affected by this act during his term of office, and any member offending this statute, it shall be sufficient grounds [sic] for his removal from office, and in such case the governor shall at once declare the office vacant and appoint another to fill the vacancy.

Business interests. SEC. 2477-m40. The governor shall remove from office the commissioner on the grounds of inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office, upon written charges having been filed with the executive council and sustained by proofs; but written notice of such charges, together with a copy thereof, shall be served upon the accused ten (10) days before the time fixed for hearing. The executive council shall have jurisdiction to hear the case, and shall make such finding in accordance with justice and the law. The finding shall be reduced to writing, and report and finding filed with the governor.

Removal from office.

PART III.

Insurance. SECTION 2477-m41 (as amended by ch. 270, acts of 1917). Every employer, subject to the provisions of this act shall insure his liability thereunder in some corporation, association, or organization approved by the State department of insurance. Every such employer shall within thirty days after this act goes into effect exhibit on demand of the State insurance department evidence of his compliance with this section; and if such employer refuses or neglects to comply with this section, he shall be liable in case of injury to any workman in his employ under the common law as modified by statute, and in the same manner and to the same extent as though such employer had legally exercised his right to reject the compensation provisions of chapter eight (8)-A, title XII, supplement to the code, 1913.

Any employer who fails to insure his liability as required herein shall post and keep posted a sign of sufficient size and so placed as to be easily seen by his employees in the immediate vicinity where working, which sign shall read as follows:

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES.

Notice of non-insurance. You are hereby notified that the undersigned employer has failed to insure his liability to pay compensation as required by law, and that because of such failure he is liable to his employees in damages for personal injuries sustained by his employees in the same manner and to the same extent as though he had legally exercised his right to reject the compensation provisions of chapter eight-a (8-A), title XII, supplement to the code, 1913.

(Signed) _____

Any employer coming under the provisions of this act who fails to comply with this section or to post and keep posted the above notice in the manner and form herein required shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Mutual companies. SEC. 2477-m42. For the purpose of complying with the foregoing section, groups of employers by themselves or in an association with any or all of their workmen, may form insurance associations as hereafter provided, subject to such reasonable conditions and restrictions as may be fixed by the State insurance department and membership in such mutual insurance organization as approved, together with evidence of the payment of premiums due, shall be evidence of compliance with the preceding section.

Approved schemes. SEC. 2477-m43. Subject to the approval of the Iowa industrial commissioner, any employer or group of employers may enter into or continue an agreement with his or their workmen to provide a scheme of compensation, benefit or insurance in lieu of the compensation and insurance provided by this act; but such scheme shall in no instance provide less than the benefits here secured, nor vary the period of compensation provided for disability or for death, or the provisions of this act with respect to periodic payments, or the percentage that such payments shall bear to weekly wages, except that the sums required may be increased: Provided, further, That the approval of the Iowa industrial commissioner shall be granted, if the scheme provides for contribution by workmen, only when it confers benefits in addition to those required by this act commensurate with such contributions.

Sec. 2477-m44. Whenever such scheme or plan is approved by the Iowa industrial commissioner, he shall issue a certificate to that effect, whereupon it shall be legal for such employer, or group of employers, to contract with any or all of his or their workmen to substitute such scheme or plan for the provisions of this act during a period of time fixed by said department.

Certificates.

Sec. 2477-m45. Such scheme or plan may be terminated by the Iowa industrial commissioner on reasonable notice to the interested parties if it shall appear that the same is not fairly administered, or if its operation shall disclose latent defects threatening its solvency, or if for any substantial reason it fails to accomplish the purpose of this act, but from any such order of said Iowa industrial commissioner the parties affected, whether employer or workmen, may, upon the giving of proper bond to protect the interests involved, appeal for equitable relief to the district court of this State.

Termination.

Sec. 2477-m46. No insurer of any obligation under this act shall either by himself or through another, either directly or indirectly, charge or accept as a commission or compensation for placing or renewing any insurance under this act more than fifteen per cent of the premium charged.

Commission for reinsuring.

Sec. 2477-m47. Every policy issued by any insurance corporation, association or organization to assure the payment of compensation under this act shall contain a clause providing that between any employer and the insurer, notice to and knowledge of the occurrence of injury or death on the part of the insured shall be notice and knowledge on the part of the insurer; and jurisdiction of the insured for the purpose of this act shall be jurisdiction of the insurer and the insurer shall be bound by every agreement, adjudgment, award or judgment rendered against the insured.

Provisions of policies.

Sec. 2477-m48. No policy of insurance issued under this act shall contain any provision relieving the insurer from payment if the insured becomes insolvent or discharged in bankruptcy during the period that the policy is in operation, or the compensation, or any part of it, is due and unpaid. Every policy shall provide that the workman shall have a first lien upon any amount becoming due on account of such policy to the insured from the insurer, and that in case of the legal incapacity, inability or disability of the insured to receive the amount due and pay it over to the insured workman, or his dependents, said insurer shall pay the same directly to such workman, his agent, or to a trustee for him or his dependents, to the extent of discharging any obligation of the insured to said workman or his dependents.

Insolvency of employer.

Sec. 2477-m49. When an employer coming under this act furnishes proofs to the insurance department satisfactory to the insurance department and Iowa industrial commissioner, of such employer's solvency and financial ability to pay the compensation and benefits as by this act provided and to make such payments to the parties when entitled thereto, or when such employer deposits to such insurance department security satisfactory to such insurance department and the Iowa industrial commissioner as will secure the payment of such compensation, such employer shall be relieved of the provision of section forty-two of this act: Provided, That such employer shall from time to time, as may be required by such insurance department and Iowa industrial commissioner, furnish such additional proof of solvency and financial ability to pay as by this section of this act provided.

Insurance not required, when.

The insurance department and Iowa industrial commissioner may, at any time, upon reasonable notice to such employer and upon hearing revoke for cause any order or approval theretofore made, as by this act provided and within the contemplation of this section.

ACTS OF 1917.

CHAPTER 67.—Compensation payments to State employees.

Payment of claims. SECTION 1. All valid claims now due or which may hereafter become due employees of the State of Iowa under the provisions of [the Iowa workmen's compensation statute], chapter 8-A, Title XII, Supplement to the Code, 1913, shall be paid out of any funds in the State treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mode. SEC. 2. The auditor of State is hereby authorized and directed to draw warrants on the State treasury for any and all amounts due such employees under the Iowa workmen's compensation act, upon there being filed in his office, either a memorandum of settlement approved by the commissioner, or of an award made by an arbitration committee, for which no review is pending, or an order of the industrial commissioner from which no appeal has been taken, or a judgment of any court of the State, accompanied by a certificate of the Iowa industrial commissioner setting forth the amount of compensation due and the statutory provisions under which the same should be paid.

Approval not required. SEC. 3. The provisions found in section one hundred seventy-s (170-s), Supplemental Supplement to the Code, 1915 [requiring approval of warrants by the State board of audit], shall not apply to the compensation claims referred to herein.

Approved March 23, 1917.

GENERAL STATUTES—1915.

Compensation of workmen for injuries.

SECTION 5896 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). If in any employment to which this act applies, personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation to the workman in accordance with this act. Save as herein provided no such employer shall be liable for any injury for which compensation is recoverable under this act: Provided, That (a) the employer shall not be liable under this act in respect of any injury which does not disable the workman for a period of at least one week from earning full wages at the work at which he is employed; (b) if it is proved that the injury to the workman results from his deliberate intention to cause such injury, or from his willful failure to use a guard or protection against accident required pursuant to any statute and provided for him, or a reasonable and proper guard and protection voluntarily furnished him by said employer, or solely from his deliberate breach of statutory regulations affecting safety of life or limb, or from his intoxication, any compensation in respect to that injury shall be disallowed.

Compensation payable, when.

Sec. 5897. Nothing in this act shall affect the liability of the employer or employee to a fine or penalty under any other statute.

Fines, etc.

Sec. 5898. (a) Where any person (in this section referred to as principal) undertakes to execute any work which is a part of his trade or business or which he has contracted to perform and contracts with any other person (in this section referred to as the contractor) for the execution by or under the contractor of the whole or any part of the work undertaken by the principal, the principal shall be liable to pay to any workman employed in the execution of the work any compensation under this act which he would have been liable to pay if that workman had been immediately employed by him; and where compensation is claimed from or proceedings are taken against the principal, then, in the application of this act, references to the principal shall be substituted for references to the employer, except the amount of compensation shall be calculated with reference to the earnings of the workman under the employer by whom he is immediately employed. (b) Where the principal is liable to pay compensation under this section, he shall be entitled to indemnity from any person who would have been liable to pay compensation to the workman independently of this section, and shall have a cause of action therefor. (c) Nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing a workman from recovering compensation under this act from the contractor instead of the principal. (d) This section shall not apply to any case where the accident occurred elsewhere than on or in, or about the premises on which the principal has undertaken to execute work or which are otherwise under his control or management, or on, in, or about the execution of such work under his control or management. (e) A principal contractor, when sued by a workman of a subcontractor, shall have the right to implead the subcontractor. (f) The principal contractor who pays compensation voluntarily to a workman of a subcontractor shall have the right to recover over against the subcontractor.

Contractors.

Sec. 5899. Where the injury for which compensation is payable under this act was caused under circumstances creating a legal liability against some person other than the employer to pay damages in respect thereof: (a) The workman may take proceedings against that person to recover damages and against any person liable to pay compensation under this act for such compensation, but shall not be entitled to recover both damages and compensation; and (b) if the workman has recovered compensation under this act, the person by whom the compensation was paid, or any person who has been called on to indemnify him under the section of this act relating to subcontracting, shall be entitled to indemnity from the person so liable to pay damages as aforesaid, and shall be subrogated to the rights of the workman to recover damages therefor.

Injuries by third parties.

Scope of law.

SEC. 5900 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). This act shall apply only to employment in the course of the employer's trade or business on, in or about a railway, factory, mine or quarry, electric, building or engineering work, laundry, natural gas plant, county and municipal work, and all employments wherein a process requiring the use of any dangerous explosive or inflammable materials is carried on, which is conducted for the purpose of business, trade or gain; each of which employments is hereby determined to be especially dangerous, in which from the nature, conditions or means of prosecution of the work therein, extraordinary risk to the life and limb of the workman engaged therein are inherent, necessary, or substantially unavoidable, and as to each of which employments it is deemed necessary to establish a new system of compensation for injuries to workmen. This act shall not apply in any case where the accident occurred before this act takes effect, and all rights which have accrued, by reason of any such accident, at the time of the publication of this act, shall be saved the remedies now existing therefor and the court shall have the same power as to them as if this act had not been enacted.

Exempt employments. em-gricultural pursuits and employments incident thereto are hereby declared to be nonhazardous and exempt from the provisions of this act: Provided, That employers whose work, trade or business is not such as described and included in this section of this act, and employers commencing or renewing in this State any work, trade or business, may elect to come within the provisions of this act by filing with the secretary of state a written statement of election to accept thereunder, and such election shall be effective when so filed, and such election shall continue in effect unless and until such employer thereafter desiring to change his election shall do so by filing a written declaration thereof with the secretary of state, and the employee of any such employer so filing such election shall be included herein unless such employee elects not to come within this act as provided by section * * * [5939], and if the employee of such employer elects not to come within the provisions of this act, as herein provided, such election shall continue in effect unless and until such employee thereafter desiring to change his election shall do so by filing a written declaration thereof with the secretary of state.

Interstate commerce.

SEC. 5901. This act shall not be construed to apply to business or employments which, according to law, are so engaged in interstate commerce as to be not subject to the legislative power of the State, nor to persons injured while they are so engaged.

Small employers.

SEC. 5902. It is hereby determined that the necessity for this law and the reason for its enactment, exist only with regard to employers who employ a considerable number of persons. This act, therefore, shall only apply to employers by whom five or more workmen have been (employed) continuously for more than one month at the time of the accident: Provided, however, That employers having less than five workmen may elect to come within the provisions of this act in which case his employees shall be included herein, as hereinafter provided: And, provided further, That this act shall apply to mines without regard to the number of workmen employed.

Definitions.

SEC. 5903 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). In this act, unless the context otherwise requires: (a) "Railway" includes street railways and interurbans; and "employment on railways" includes work in depots, power houses, roundhouses, machine shops, yards, and upon the right of way, and in the operation of its engines, cars and trains, and to employees of express companies while running on railroad trains, except as provided in section 5901 of General Statutes of 1915. (b) "Factory" means any premises wherein power is used in manufacturing, making, altering, adapting, ornamenting, finishing, repairing or renovating any article or articles for the purpose of trade or gain or of the business carried on therein, including expressly any brickyard, meat-packing house, foundry, smelter, oil refinery, lime-burning plant, steam heating plant, electric lighting plant, electric power plant, and water power plant, grain elevator, powder plant, blast furnace, paper mill, printing plant, flour mill, glass factory, beet sugar factory, cement plant, artificial gas plant, machine or repair shop, salt plant, and chemical manufacturing plant. (c) "Mine" means any opening in the earth for the purpose of extracting any minerals and all underground workings, slopes, shafts, galleries and tunnels, and other ways, cuts and openings connected therewith, including those in the course of being opened, sunk or driven; and includes all the appurtenant structures at or about the openings of the mine, and any adjoining adjacent work place where the material from a mine is prepared for use or shipment. (d) "Quarry" means any place, not a mine, where stone, slate, clay, sand, gravel, or other solid material is dug or otherwise extracted from the earth for the purpose of trade or bargain or of employer's trade or business. (e) "Electrical work" means any kind of work in or directly connected with the construction, installation, operation, alteration, removal, or repair of wires, cables, switchboards or apparatus used for the transmission of electrical current, or operation of telegraph or telephone lines. (f) "Building work" means any work in the erection, construction, extension, decoration, alteration, repair or demolition of any building or structural appurtenances. (g) "Engineering work" means any work in the construction, alteration, extension, repair or demolition of a railway (as hereinbefore defined), bridge, jetty, dike, dam, reservoir, underground conduit, pole lines conduit, or used for carrying conductors, sewer, oil or gas well, oil tank, gas tank, water tower, or water-works (including stand pipes or mains), any caisson work or work in artificially compressed air, any work in dredging, pile driving, moving buildings, moving safes, construction and repairing of streets, roads and highways, or in laying, repairing or removing underground pipes and connections; the erection, installing, repairing, or removing of boilers, furnaces, engines and power machinery (including belting and other connections), and any work in grading or excavating where shoring is necessary or power machinery or blasting powder, dynamite or other high explosives are in use (excluding mining and quarrying). (h) "Employer" includes any person or body of persons, corporate or unincorporate, and the legal representatives of a deceased employer or the receiver or trustee of a person, corporation, association or partnership; and when any mine, quarry, factory, or other place, covered by the provisions of this act in which work is being or to be performed, is leased or let to any lessee or lessees under any form of contract or agreement other than on a royalty basis, then and in all such cases the lessee or lessees and the lessor or lessors shall be deemed to be operating said mine, quarry, factory or other place described above as employers jointly. (i) "Workman" means any person who has entered into the employment of or works under contract of service or apprenticeship with an employer, but does not include a person who is employed otherwise than for the purpose of the employer's trade or business. Any reference to a workman who has been injured shall, where the workman is dead, include a reference to his dependents, as hereinafter defined, or to his legal representatives, or where he is a minor or incompetent, to his guardian. (j) "Dependents" means such members of the workman's family as were wholly or in part dependent upon the workman at the time of the accident. "Members of a family," for the purpose of this act means only widow or husband, as the case may be, and children; or if no widow, husband or children, then parents or grandparents; or if no parents or grandparents, then grandchildren; or if no grandchildren, then brothers and sisters. In the meaning of this section parents include stepparents, children include stepchildren, and grandchildren include step-grandchildren, and brothers and sisters include stepbrothers and stepsisters, and children and parents include that relation by legal adoption. In the meaning of this section a widow shall not be regarded as a dependent of a deceased workman nor as a member of his family, if she shall have for more than six months willfully or voluntarily deserted or abandoned him prior to the date of his death; and a husband, whether he be capable of wage earning or not, shall not, within the meaning of this section, be regarded as a dependent of his deceased wife, nor as a member of her family, if he shall have for more than six months willfully or voluntarily deserted or abandoned her prior to the time of her death. (k) The words "arising out of and in the course of employment" as used in this act shall not be construed to include injuries to the employee occurring while he is on his way to assume the duties of his employment or after leaving such duties, the approximate cause of which injury is not the employer's negligence.

Incompetent persons. SEC. 5904. In case an injured workman is mentally incompetent or a minor, or where death results from the injury, in case any of his dependents as herein defined is mentally incompetent or a minor, at the time when any right, privilege or election accrues to him under this act, his guardian may, in his behalf, claim and exercise such right, privilege, or election, and no limitation of time, in this act provided for, shall run, so long as such incompetent or minor has no guardian.

Medical, etc., treatment. SEC. 5905 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). The amount of compensation under this act shall be: 1. On demand, the employer shall pay the cost, not exceeding $150, of a physician and all such medical, surgical and hospital treatment, including nursing, medicines, medical and surgical supplies, crutches and apparatus as may be reasonably necessary for a period of not longer than 50 days, to cure and relieve from the effects of the injury, and in case of the refusal or neglect of the employer to reasonably do so, the employer shall be liable for the reasonable expenses incurred by or on behalf of the employee in providing the same within the limits as to time and amount hereinbefore expressed: Provided, That no employer shall be liable for any medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, including nursing, medicines, medical and surgical supplies, crutches and apparatus, nor for any physician's or surgeon's fees in excess of the amount hereinbefore set forth. 2. (a) If a workman leaves any dependents wholly dependent upon his earnings, a sum equal to three times his average yearly earnings, computed as provided in section * * * [5906], but not exceeding thirty-eight hundred dollars ($3800) and not less than fourteen hundred dollars ($1400): Provided, That any payment under this act on account of any injury from which death shall thereafter result, except such payments as may be made under paragraph 1 of this section, shall be deducted from such sum: And provided, however, That if the workman does not leave any dependents citizens of and residing at the time of the accident and injury in the United States or the Dominion of Canada, the amount of compensation shall not exceed in any case the sum of seven hundred fifty dollars ($750). (b) If a workman does not leave any such dependents, but leaves dependents in part dependent on his earnings, such proportion of the amount payable under the provisions of paragraph 2 (a) of this section as may be agreed upon or determined to be proportionate to the degree of dependency of the said dependents. (c) If a workman does not leave any dependents, the reasonable expense of his burial, not exceeding one hundred and fifty dollars ($150). (d) Marriage of any dependent shall terminate all compensation of such dependent, but shall not affect the compensation allowed other dependents. When any minor dependent, not physically or mentally incapable of wage earning, shall become eighteen (18) years of age, such compensation shall cease. 3. (a) Where total permanent disability results from the injury, no compensation shall be paid during the first week of disability, except that provided in paragraph 1 of this section, but after the expiration of said first week, payment shall be made as provided in section 5907 of the General Statutes of 1915 during such permanent total disability of a sum equal to sixty per cent (60%) of the average weekly earnings of the injured workman, computed as provided in section * * * [5906], but in no case less than $6 per week nor more than $15 per week. The payment of compensation for total permanent disability shall not extend over a period exceeding eight years from the date of injury. Loss of both eyes, both hands, both arms, both feet or both legs shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, constitute total permanent disability. Substantially total paralysis, or incurable imbecility or insanity, resulting from an injury independent of all other causes, shall constitute total permanent disability. In all other cases total permanent disability shall be determined in accordance with the facts. (b) Where temporary total disability results from the injury no compensation shall be paid during the first week of disability, except that provided in paragraph 1 of this section, but after the expiration of said first week payment shall be made in accordance with the provisions of section 5907 of the General Statutes of 1915, during such temporary total disability, of a sum equal to sixty per cent of the average weekly earnings of the injured workman, computed as provided in section * * * [5906], but in no case less than $6 per week nor more than $15 per week: Provided, that if such temporary total disability is followed by a permanent partial disability resulting from the injury, payment for such permanent partial disability shall be made as provided in clause (c) of this paragraph of this section. (c) Where disability, partial in character but permanent in quality, results from the injury, the injured workman shall be entitled to the compensation provided in paragraph 1 of this section, but shall not be entitled to any other or further compensation for or during the first week following the injury. Thereafter, compensation in a lump sum shall be paid as provided in the following schedule, the average weekly wages to be computed as provided in section * * * [5906], and the compensation to be in no case less than $6 per week nor more than $12 per week.

Compensation for death.

Permanent total disability.

Temporary total disability.

Permanent partial disability.

(1) For the loss of a thumb, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 60 weeks.

Schedule.

(2) For the loss of a first finger, commonly called the index finger, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 37 weeks.

(3) For the loss of a second finger, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 30 weeks.

(4) For the loss of a third finger, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 20 weeks.

(5) For the loss of a fourth finger, commonly called the little finger, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 15 weeks.

(6) The loss of the first phalange of the thumb or of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such thumb or finger, and the compensation shall be one-half of the amounts specified above. The loss of the first phalange and any part of the second phalange of any finger, which includes the loss of any part of the bone of such second phalange, shall be considered to be equal to the loss of two-thirds of such finger, and the compensation shall be two-thirds of the amount specified above. The loss of the first phalange and any part of the second phalange of the thumb, which includes the loss of any part of the bone of such second phalange, shall be considered to be equal to the loss of the entire thumb. The loss of the first and second phalanges and any part of the third proximal phalanges of any finger, which includes loss of any part of the bone of the third or proximal phalange, shall be considered as the loss of the entire finger.

(7) For the loss of a great toe, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 30 weeks.

(8) For the loss of any other toe than the great toe, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 10 weeks.

(9) The loss of the first phalange of any toe shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such toe, and the compensation shall be one-half of the amounts above specified.

(10) The loss of more than one phalange of a toe shall be considered to be equal to the loss of the entire toe.

(11) For the loss of a hand, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 150 weeks.

(12) For the loss of an arm, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 210 weeks.

(13) For the loss of a foot, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 125 weeks.

(14) For the loss of a leg, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 200 weeks.

(15) For the loss of an eye, or the complete loss of the sight thereof, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 110 weeks.

(16) Amputation or severance between elbow and wrist shall be considered as the loss of a hand. Amputation at or above the elbow shall be considered as the loss of an arm. Amputation between knee and ankle shall be considered as the loss of a foot. Amputation at or above the knee shall be considered as the loss of a leg.

(17) For the complete loss of hearing of both ears, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 100 weeks.

(18) For the complete loss of hearing of one ear, 50 per cent of the average weekly wages during 25 weeks.

Injuries not covered.

(19) Should the employer and employee be unable to agree upon the amount of compensation to be paid in any case of injury not covered by the schedule, the amount of compensation shall be settled according to the provisions of this act as in other cases of disagreement: Provided, however, In case of partial disability not covered by schedule the workman shall receive during such period of partial disability not exceeding eight (8) years, 60 per cent of the difference between the amount he was earning prior to said injury as in this act provided and the amount he is able to earn after such injury.

Death during term of compensation.

(20) If a workman has received an injury for which compensation is being paid him, and his death is caused by other and independent causes, any payments of compensation already due him at the time of his death and then unpaid, shall be paid to his dependents direct, or to his legal representatives if he left no dependents, but the liability of the employer for payments of compensation not yet due and payable at the time of the death of such workman shall cease and be abrogated by his death.

Second injuries.

(21) If a workman has suffered a previous disability and receives a later injury, the effects of which together with the previous disability shall result in total permanent disability, then and in that event the compensation due said workman shall be the difference between the amount provided in the schedule of this section for his prior injury and the total sum which would be due said employee for such total disability computed as provided in section * * * [5906], but in no case less than $6 per week nor more than $15 per week.

Loss of use.

(22) Permanent loss of the use of a hand, arm, foot, leg, or eye, as a direct result of an injury, shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of such hand, arm, foot, leg or eye.

Schedule benefits exclusive.

Minors.

(23) The compensation for the foregoing specific injuries shall be in lieu of all other compensation, except the benefits provided in paragraph 1 of this section. Where the said minor or his dependents are entitled to compensation under the provisions of this act, such compensation shall be exclusive of all other remedies or causes of action for such injury or death, and no claim or cause of action shall inure or accrue to, or exist in favor of the parent or parents of such minor employee on account of any damage resulting to such parent or parents on account of the loss of earnings or loss of service of such minor employee resulting from or growing out of the injury to or death of such minor employee. In any case of injury to or death of a female employee, where the said female employee or her dependents are entitled to compensation under the provisions of this act, such compensation shall be exclusive of all other remedies or causes of action for such injury or death, and no claim of action shall inure or accrue to or exist in favor of the surviving husband or any relative or next of kin of such female employee on account of any damage resulting to such surviving husband or any relative or next of kin on account of the loss of earnings, services or society of such female employee or on any other account resulting from or growing out of the injury or death of such female employee.

Females.

Earnings computed, how.

SEC. 5906 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). The average annual earnings of a workman shall, for the purpose of the provisions of this act, be computed as follows: (a) Where the workman has been continuously employed by the same employer for one year or longer, the actual amount of money paid by the employer to the employee as wages or remuneration for his services during the year immediately preceding the injury, undiminished by loss due to absence from work on account of illness or other unavoidable cause. (b) Where the workman has been employed less than one year by the employer in whose employ he received the injury, 52 times the average weekly amount which, during the twelve months immediately preceding the accident, was being earned by a person in the same grade employed at the same work by the same employer, undiminished by loss due to absence from work on account of illness or other unavoidable cause; and if there is no person in the same grade employed at the same work by the same employer, then 52 times the average weekly earnings of a person in the same grade employed by the same or other employer in the same district at the same or similar work or employment. (c) Where the workman had entered into concurrent contracts of service with two or more employers under which he worked at one time for one such employer and at another time for another such employer, his average annual earnings shall be computed as if his earnings under all such contracts were earnings in the employment of the employer for whom he was working at the time of the injury. (d) Where the employer has been accustomed to pay to the workman a sum to cover any special expenses entailed upon him by the nature of his employment, the sums so paid shall not be reckoned as part of the earnings of the workman; nor shall tips or gratuities received from the employer or other persons be considered or included as part of the workman's earnings, but reasonable value of board, rent, housing, lodging, fuel or other similar advantages received from the employer as a part of remuneration of the employee and the value of which can be estimated in money, shall be considered and included as a part of the workman's earnings. (e) If arbitration or litigation is necessary to establish the amount of compensation, credit shall be given to the employer by the arbitrator, arbitration committee or court for any amounts paid under this act prior to the date of the award or prior to the trial and judgment.

2. The average weekly wages of a workman shall be one fifty-second part of his average annual earnings computed as provided by paragraph 1 of this section.

3. In computing average earnings of a workman under the preceding paragraphs of this section regard shall be had to the earnings for what is commonly regarded as a day's work or a week's work for the employment on which the average earnings are calculated.

4. If a workman has suffered a previous disability and receives a later injury, his average earnings used as a basis for the compensation for such later injury shall be such amount as will reasonably represent his earning capacity at the time of the later injury in the employment at which he was working at such time.

SEC. 5907. The payments shall be made at the same time, place and in the same manner as the wages of the workman were payable at the time of the accident, but a judge of any district court having jurisdiction upon the application of either party may modify such regulation in a particular case as to him may seem just.

Payments.

SEC. 5908. Where death results from the injury and the dependents of the deceased workman, as herein defined, have agreed to accept compensation, and the amount of such compensation and the apportionment thereof between them has been agreed to or otherwise determined, the employer may pay such compensation to them accordingly (or to an administrator if one be appointed) and thereupon be discharged from all further liability for the injury. Where only the apportionment of the agreed compensation between the dependents is not agreed to, the employer may pay the amount into any district having jurisdiction, or to the administrator of the deceased workman, with the same effect. Where the compensation has been so paid into court or to an administrator, the proper court, upon the petition of such administrator or any of such dependents, and upon such notice and proof as it may order shall determine the distribution thereof among such dependents. Where there are no dependents, medical and funeral expenses may be paid and distributed in like manner.

Payments to dependents.

Medical examinations.

SEC. 5911 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). (a) After an injury to an employee, he shall, upon request of the employer, submit himself for examination at some reasonable time and place, to a reputable physician or surgeon selected by the employer, and shall so submit himself for examination thereafter at intervals during the pendency of his claim for compensation and during the receipt by him of payments under this act, upon request of the employer, but he shall not be required to submit himself for examination oftener than once in four weeks unless in accordance with such orders as may be made by the judge of the district court wherein proceedings may be had for the determination or collection of his compensation. Either party may upon demand require a report of any examination made by the physician or surgeon selected by the other party, upon payment of a fee of $1 therefor, but the employee shall not be liable for any fees or charge of any physician or surgeon selected by the employer for making any examination of the employee. (b) If the employee requests he shall be entitled to have a physician or surgeon of his own selection present at the time to participate in such examination. (c) Unless there be a reasonable opportunity thereafter for such physician selected by the employee to participate in the examination in the presence of the physician selected by the employer, the physician selected by the employer shall not be permitted afterwards to give evidence of the condition of the employee in a dispute as to the injury. (d) Except as provided herein, there shall be no other disqualification or privilege preventing the testimony of a physician who actually makes an examination.

nations.

SEC. 5912. In case of a dispute as to the injury, the committee, or arbitrator as hereinafter provided, or the judge of the district court shall have the power to employ a neutral physician of good standing and ability, whose duty it shall be, at the expense of the parties to make an examination of the injured person, as the court may direct, on the petition of either or both the employer and employee or dependents.

Evidence not admitted, when.

SEC. 5913 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). If the employer or the employee has a physician or surgeon make such examination and no reasonable opportunity is given to the other party to have his physician or surgeon make examination, then, in case of a dispute as to the injury, the physician of the party making such examination shall not give evidence before the court in any action for compensation.

Refusing medical examination.

SEC. 5914 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). If the employee refuses to submit himself for examination upon request of the employer as provided for in section * * * [5911], or if the employee or his physician or surgeon unnecessarily obstructs or prevents such examination by the physician or surgeon of the employer, the employee's right to payment of compensation shall be and remain suspended until he shall submit to examination and until such examination shall have taken place, and no compensation shall be payable under this act during the period of suspension.

Certificates not evidence, when.

SEC. 5915 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). No report of any examination of any employee by a physician or surgeon, as hereinbefore in this act provided for, nor any certificate issued or given by the physician or surgeon making such examination, shall be competent evidence in any court proceeding for the determining or collection of compensation unless supported by the testimony of such physician or surgeon, if his testimony is admissible, nor competent evidence in any case where the testimony of such physician or surgeon is not admissible.

Notice and claim.

SEC. 5916. Proceedings for the recovery of compensation under this act shall not be maintainable unless written notice of the accident, stating the time, place and particulars thereof, and the name and address of the person injured, has been given within ten days after the accident, and unless a claim for compensation has been made within three months after the accident or in case of death, within six months from the date thereof. Such notice shall be delivered by registered mail, or by delivery to the employer. The want of, or any defect in such notice, or in its service, shall not be a bar unless the employer proves that he has, in fact, been thereby prejudiced, or if such want or defect was occasioned by mistake, physical or mental incapacity or other reasonable cause, and the failure to make a claim within the period above specified shall be a bar: Provided, however, That in case of incapacity of an injured employee the limitation herein shall not run during such incapacity.

SEC. 5917 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). Compensation due under this act may be settled by agreement.

Agreements.

SEC. 5918 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). If compensation be not so settled by agreement: (a) If any committee representative of the employer and the workman exists, organized for the purpose of settling disputes under this act, said committee shall have the power to adopt rules governing its procedure and action, and the matter shall unless either party objects by notice in writing delivered or sent by registered mail to the other party before the committee meets to consider the matter, be settled in accordance with said rules by such committee or by an arbitrator selected by it. (b) If either party objects or there is no such committee, or the committee or the arbitrator to whom it refers the matter fails to settle it within sixty days from the date of the claim, the matter shall be settled by a single arbitrator agreed on by the parties, or appointed by any judge of a court where an action might be maintained upon the written application of either party to said court. The consent to arbitration shall be in writing and signed by the parties, and may limit the fees of the arbitrator and the time within which the award must be made, and unless such consent or order of appointment expressly refers other questions, only the question of the amount of compensation shall be deemed to be in issue, but either party shall have the right to require that the arbitrator shall also find the character and quality of the disability and the period for which payments of compensation shall continue in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Arbitration.

SEC. 5919 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). The committee or arbitrator shall not be bound by technical rules of procedure or evidence but shall give the parties reasonable opportunity to be heard and to present evidence, and shall act reasonably and without partiality and shall make and file an award, with the consent to arbitration or the order of the court appointing the arbitrator attached, in the office of the clerk of the proper district court within sixty days after the committee meets to consider the claim or after the selection of the arbitrator, and shall give notice of such filing to the parties by mail. The parties may agree in writing to extend the time for filing the award, and if so, the award shall be filed within such extended time as is so agreed upon. If any committee or arbitrator to whom a claim for compensation shall have been submitted shall fail or neglect to file its or his award within the time fixed by this section, the court shall, upon the application of either party, order such committee or arbitrator to file such award within such time as the court shall by such order fix, which time shall in no case be greater than ten days from the date of such order.

Procedure

SEC. 5920. The arbitrator's fees shall be fixed by the consent to arbitration or be agreed to by the parties before the arbitration and if not so fixed or agreed to, they shall not exceed ten dollars per day, for not to exceed ten days, and disbursements for expense. The arbitrator shall tax or apportion the costs of such fees in his discretion and shall add the amount taxed or apportioned against the employer to the first payment made under the award, and he shall note the amount of his fees on the award and shall have a lien therefor on the first payments due under the award.

Fees.

SEC. 5921 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). Every award of compensation made by any committee representing the employer and workman, or by any arbitrator selected by such committee, or by any arbitrator selected by the employer and the employee, or appointed by order of court, shall be in writing, signed and acknowledged by the arbitrator or by the secretary of the committee hereinbefore referred to, and shall specify the amount due and unpaid by the employer to the workman up to the date of the award, and, if any, the amount of the payments thereafter to be paid by the employer to the workman and the length of time such payment shall continue. No award shall be or provide for payment of compensation in a lump sum, except as to such portion of the compensation as shall be found to be due and unpaid at the time of the award, and credit shall be given to the employer in such award for any amount or amounts paid by him to the employee as compensation prior to the date of the award.

Modification. SEC. 5922 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). Any award of compensation may be modified by subsequent written agreement of the parties, but no such agreement modifying an award shall be valid as against the workman unless such agreement or a verified copy thereof be filed by the employer in the office of the clerk of the district court in the county in which the accident occurred, within sixty days after the execution of such agreement.

Final receipts. At the time of making any final payment of compensation, the employer shall be entitled to a final receipt for compensation, executed and acknowledged or verified by the workman, which final receipt may be in form a release of liability under this act, and every such final receipt for compensation or release of liability or a duly verified copy thereof shall be filed by the employer in the office of the clerk of the district court wherein the accident occurred, within sixty days after the date of execution of such final receipt or release of liability, and if the employer shall fail or neglect to so file such final receipt or release of liability, same shall be void as against the workman. The said clerk of the district court shall accept, receipt for, and file every award, agreement modifying an award, final receipt for compensation or release of liability or verified copy thereof, without fee, and record and index same in a book kept for that purpose. All records and books necessary for the clerk of the district court in order to carry out all of the provisions of this law, shall be furnished to said clerk upon request, by the board of county commissioners.

Review, etc. SEC. 5923 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). At any time before the final payment has been made under or pursuant to any award or modification thereof agreed upon by the parties, it may be reviewed by the judge of the district court having jurisdiction, upon the application of either party, and in connection with such review the court may appoint a physician or surgeon or two physicians or surgeons to examine the workman and report to the court, and the court shall hear all competent evidence offered, and if the court shall find that the award has been obtained by fraud or undue influence or that the committee or arbitrator making the award acted without authority or was guilty of serious misconduct or that the award is grossly excessive or grossly inadequate, or that the incapacity or disability of the workman has increased or diminished, the court may modify such award, upon such terms as may be just, by increasing or diminishing the compensation, subject to the limitations hereinbefore provided in this act; and, if the court shall find that the workman has returned to work for the same employer in whose employ he was injured or for another employer and is earning the same or higher wages than he did at the time of the accident or injury, or is gaining an income from any trade or employment which is equal to or greater than the wages he was earning at the time of the accident or injury, or shall find that the workman has absented himself and continues to absent himself so that a reasonable examination can not be made of him by a physician or surgeon selected by the employer, or has departed beyond the boundaries of the United States or Dominion of Canada, the court may cancel the award and end the compensation: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to awards of compensation provided for in the schedule of specific injuries in section * * * [5905].

SEC. 5924. [Repealed by chapter 226, acts of 1917.]

Judgments for lump sum. SEC. 5925 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). At any time before final payment of compensation has been made under or pursuant to any award, or agreement of the parties modifying same, the workman may, upon notice to the employer, apply to the said district court for judgment against the employer for a lump sum equal to 80 per cent of the amount of payments due and unpaid and prospectively due under said award; and unless the proceedings be stayed as hereinafter provided in [this] section * * * or unless said award be canceled as provided in section * * * [5923], or the liability thereunder redeemed as provided in section * * * [5927], the court shall hear all competent evidence offered, and if satisfied that the workman's application for judgment is made because of doubt as to the security of his compensation, shall compute the sum and enter judgment accordingly, as if in an action: Provided, That if the employer shall give a good and sufficient bond, approved by the court, no execution shall issue on such judgment so long as the employer continues to make payments in accordance with the original award undiminished by the discount.

In any proceeding upon the application of a workman for a judgment against his employer upon an award, as provided in section * * * [5925], and before judgment has been granted, the employer may stay the proceedings upon such application by filing in the office of the clerk of the district court wherein the proceedings are pending: (a) A certificate of a licensed or authorized insurance company, or reciprocal or interinsurer's exchange or association that the amount of the compensation to the workman is insured by it; or (b) a proper bond undertaking to secure the payment of the compensation. Such certificate or bond shall first be approved by the judge of the said district court. Stay.

SEC. 5926. [Repealed by chapter 226, acts of 1917.]

SEC. 5927 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). Where payments under an award have been made for not less than six months, the liability under such award may be redeemed by the employer at his option by the payment to the workman of a lump sum equal to 80 per cent of the amount of payments due and unpaid and prospectively due under the award, such amount to be determined by agreement, or, in default thereof, upon application of either party, upon notice to the other party by the judge of the district court having jurisdiction. Upon paying such amount, the employer shall be discharged of and from all further liability under said award. Lump-sum payments after six months.

SEC. 5928. Where the payment of compensation to the workman is insured, by a policy or policies, at the expense of the employer, the insurer shall be subrogated to the rights and duties under this act of the employer, so far as appropriate. Insurer's rights and duties.

SEC. 5929. All references hereinbefore to a district court of the State of Kansas having jurisdiction of a civil action between the parties shall be construed as relating to the then existing code of civil procedure. Such court shall make all rules necessary and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act. Courts.

SEC. 5930 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). A workman's right to compensation under this act may, in default of agreement or if the employer shall have refused to consent to an arbitration of the workman's claim for compensation, be determined and enforced by action in any court of competent jurisdiction, but no such action shall be maintained until and unless the workman shall have consented to an arbitration or applied to the court as hereinbefore provided for an arbitrator. In every such action the right to trial by jury shall be deemed waived and the case tried by the court without a jury, unless either party shall within ten days after issues are joined demand a jury trial. The judgment in the action, if in favor of the plaintiff, shall be for a lump sum equal to the amount of the payments then due under this act, with interest on the payments overdue, or, in the discretion of the trial judge, for periodical payments, as in an award: Provided, In no case shall a lump-sum judgment be rendered for any injury not ascertainable by objective examination, but in such cases the court may order periodical payments during incapacity of such sums as may be due under the provisions of section * * * [5906] and such judgment may be reviewed at any time after the expiration of six months upon the application of either party and the amount allowed by the court reduced or raised in accordance with the evidence introduced at the time of such review. Where death results from injury, the action shall be brought by the dependent or the dependents entitled to the compensation or by the legal representative of the deceased for the benefit of the dependents as herein defined; and in such action the judgment may provide for the proportion of the compensation Legal enforcement.

to be distributed to or between the several dependents; otherwise such proportion shall be determined by the proper probate court. An action to set aside a release or other discharge of liability on the ground of fraud or mental incompetency may be joined with an action for compensation under this act. No action or proceeding provided for in this act shall be brought or maintained outside of the State of Kansas, and notice thereof may be given by publication against non-residents of the State in the manner now provided by article 6 of chapter 93, General Statutes of Kansas of 1915, so far as the same may be applicable, and by service of a true copy of the first publication within twenty-one days after the date of the said first publication unless excused by the court upon proper showing that such service can not be made.

- Rights accrue, when. SEC. 5931 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). The cause of action shall be deemed in every case, including a case where death results from the injury, to have accrued to the injured workman or his dependents or legal representatives at the time of the accident; and the time limit in which to commence an action for compensation therefor shall run as against him, his legal representatives and dependents from the date of the accident.
- Attorneys' fees. SEC. 5932 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). No claim of any attorney at law for services rendered in or about securing any compensation or agreement, award or judgment for compensation shall be an enforceable lien thereon unless the services were rendered pursuant to and under the terms of a written contract between such attorney at law and the workman or the guardian of the workman, if the latter be a minor or incompetent, nor unless such written contract be approved in writing by the judge of the court where the action brought by the workman be tried, or, if no trial is had, then by the judge of the district court in the county where the workman resided at the time of the injury, to which judge the matter may be regularly submitted on due notice to the party or parties in interest of such submission.
- Certified schemes. SEC. 5933. If the superintendent of insurance by and with the advice and written approval of the attorney general certifies that any scheme of compensation, benefit or insurance for the workman of an employer in any employment to which this act applies, whether or not such scheme includes other employers and their workmen, provides scales of compensation not less favorable to the workmen and their dependents than the corresponding scales contained in this act, and that, where the scheme provides for contributions by the workman, the scheme confers benefits at least equivalent to those contributions, in addition to the benefits to which the workmen would have been entitled under this act or their equivalents, the employer may, while the certificate is in force, contract with any of his workmen that the provisions of the scheme shall be substituted for the provisions of this act; and thereupon the employer shall be liable only in accordance with that scheme; but, save as aforesaid, this act shall not apply notwithstanding any contract to the contrary made after this act becomes a law.
- Provisions to be equitable. SEC. 5934. No scheme shall be so certified which does not contain suitable provisions for the equitable distribution of any moneys or securities held for the purpose of the scheme, after due provision has been made to discharge the liabilities already accrued, if and when such certificate is revoked or the scheme otherwise terminated.
- Certificate may be revoked. SEC. 5935. If at any time the scheme no longer fulfills the requirements of this article, or is not fairly administered, or other valid and substantial reasons therefor exist, the superintendent of insurance by and with the attorney general shall revoke the certificate and the scheme shall thereby be terminated.
- Reports. SEC. 5936. Where a certified scheme is in effect the employer shall answer all such inquiries and furnish all such accounts in regard thereto as may be required by the superintendent.
- Rules. SEC. 5937. The superintendent of insurance may make all rules and regulations necessary to carry out the purposes of the four preceding sections.
- Election by employers. SEC. 5938 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). Every employer entitled to come within the provisions of this act, as defined and provided by this act, shall be presumed to have done so, except such employer privileged to elect to come within the provisions of this act, as provided in section * * * [5900] and section 5902 of the General Statutes of 1915, unless such employer shall file with the secretary of state at Topeka, Kansas, a written statement that he elects not to accept thereunder, and thereafter any such employer desiring to change his election shall only do so by filing a written declaration thereof with the secretary of state. Notice of such election shall be forthwith posted by such employer in conspicuous places in and about his place of business.

SEC. 5939 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). Every employee entitled to come within the provisions of this act shall be presumed to have done so unless such employee shall file with the secretary of state, before injury, a written declaration that he elects not to accept thereunder and at the same time file a duplicate of said election with his employer, and thereafter any such employee desiring to change his election shall only do so by filing a written declaration thereof with the secretary of state, and a duplicate of same with his employer. Any contract wherein an employer requires of an employee as a condition of employment that he shall elect not to come within the provisions of this act shall be void.

By employees.

SEC. 5940 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). In an action to recover damages for a personal injury sustained within this State by an employee (entitled to come within the provisions of this act) while engaged in the line of his duty as such or for death resulting from personal injury so sustained, in which recovery is sought upon the ground of want of due care of the employer, or of any officer, agent or servant of the employer, where such employer is within the provisions hereof, it shall not be a defense to any employer (as herein in this act defined) who shall have elected, as hereinbefore provided, not to come within the provisions of this act: (a) That the employee either expressly or impliedly assumed the risk of the hazard complained of. (b) That the injury or death was caused in whole or in part by the want of due care of a fellow servant. (c) That such employee was guilty of contributory negligence.

Abrogation of defenses.

SEC. 5941 (as amended by chapter 226, acts of 1917). In an action to recover damages for a personal injury sustained within this State by an employee (entitled to come within the provisions of this act) while engaged in the line of his duty as such, or for death resulting from personal injury so sustained in which recovery is sought upon the ground of want of due care of the employer or of any officer, agent or servant of the employer, and where such employer at the time of the injury is operating under the provisions of this act and has not filed his election not to accept thereunder, it shall be a defense for such employer in all cases where said employee has elected not to come within the provisions of this act: (a) that the employee either expressly or impliedly assumed the risk of the hazard complained of; (b) that the injury or death was caused in whole or in part by the want of due care of the fellow servant; (c) that the said employee was due of contributory negligence: Provided, however, That none of these defenses shall be available where the injury was caused by the willful negligence of such employer or of any managing officer, or of managing agent of said employer.

Defenses allowed, when.

SEC. 5942. Nothing in this act shall be construed to amend or repeal section 6999 of the General Statutes of Kansas of 1909 or house bill No. 240 of the session of 1911, the same being "An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroads to their employees in certain cases, and repealing all acts and parts of acts so far as the same are in conflict herewith."

ACTS OF 1919.

CHAPTER 222.—Waiver of compensation or damages by blind persons.

SECTION 1. It shall hereafter be lawful for any blind person over the age of 18 years to agree to and with his or her employer to waive his or her right to damages or compensation for any personal injury arising out of or in the course of his or her employment, for which injury such blindness was the direct cause, and any such agreement shall be valid and binding upon the parties thereto.

Waiver permitted.

ACTS OF 1916.

CHAPTER 33.—Compensation for injuries to workmen.

Scope.

SECTION 1 (as amended by ch. 176, acts of 1918). This act shall apply to all employers having three or more employees regularly engaged in the same occupation or business and to their employees, except that it shall not apply to domestic employment, agriculture, steam railways, or such common carriers, other than steam railways, for which a rule of liability is provided by the laws of the United States. It shall affect the liability of the employers subject thereto to their employees for personal injuries sustained by the employee by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment or for death resulting from such accidental injury: Provided, however, That personal injury by accident as herein defined shall not include diseases except where the disease is the natural and direct result of a traumatic injury by accident, nor shall they include the results of a preexisting disease.

tion.

Any employers and employees who are, by the provisions of this section, excepted from the provisions of this act may subject themselves thereto by joint voluntary application to the board, in writing, for such period as may be stated in the application, which shall be irrevocable during such period and effective thereafter until a written revocation be filed with the board or the employment be terminated.

Public employ-
ments.

SEC. 2. The term "employer" as used in this act shall be construed to include municipal corporations and any political subdivision or corporation thereof, and any election with reference to this act shall be exercised by the lawmaking or other governing body thereof: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as amending or repealing any statute or ordinance relating to associations or funds for the relief, pensioning, retirement, or other benefit of any employees of such municipal employer, or of the widows, children, or dependents of such employees, or as in any manner interfering with the same as now or hereafter established.

Act exclusive.

SEC. 3. Whereas at the time of the injury, both employer and employee have elected to furnish or accept compensation under the provisions of this act for a personal injury, received by an employee by accident and arising out of and in the course of his employment, or for death resulting from such injury, within two years thereafter, the employer shall be liable to provide and pay compensation under the provisions of this act and shall be released from all other liability whatsoever: Provided, however, That if injury or death result to an employee through the deliberate intention of his employer to produce such injury or death, the employee or his dependent as herein defined shall receive the amount provided in this act in a lump sum to be used, if they so desire to prosecute the employer, and said dependents shall be permitted to bring suit against said employer for any amount they may desire, that if injury or death results to an employee through the deliberate intention of his employer to produce such injury or death, the employee or his dependents as herein defined shall have the privilege to take under this act, or in lieu thereof, to have a cause of action at law against such employer as if this act had not been passed for such damages so sustained by the employee, his dependents or personal representatives as may be recoverable at law. If a suit is brought under this section, all right to compensation under the provisions of this act shall thereby be waived and void as to all persons, and if a claim is made for the payment of compensation or any other benefit provided by this act, all rights to sue the employer for damages on account of such injury or death shall thereby be waived and void as to all persons.

Intentional injuries.

Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore or hereafter contained no employee or dependent of any employee shall be entitled to receive compensation on account of any injury to or death of an employee caused by a willful self-inflicted injury, willful misconduct, or intoxication of such employee.

Willful miscon-

Sec. 4. In addition to all other compensation herein provided, such medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, including nursing, medical and surgical supplies and appliances as may reasonably be required at the time of the injury and thereafter during disability, but not exceeding 90 days unless the board shall, by order made within that time, otherwise direct, not exceeding a total expense to the employer of more than $100 on account of the benefits provided by this section, to cure and relieve from the effects of the injury shall be furnished by the employer, and, in case of his refusal or neglect reasonably to do so, the employer shall be liable for the reasonable expense, within the limits of this section, incurred by or on behalf of the employee in providing the same. Medical, etc., treatment.

In the event of an emergency, the employee shall have the right to call in any available physician or surgeon to administer such first aid as may be reasonably necessary at the expense of the employer within the limits of this section.

Sec. 4a. In all claims for hernia resulting from injury received in the course of and resulting from the employee's employment, it must be definitely proved to the satisfaction of the board: Hernia.

First. That there was an injury resulting in hernia.

Second. That the hernia appeared suddenly and immediately followed the injury.

Fourth. That the hernia did not exist in any degree prior to the injury for which compensation is claimed.

In all such cases where liability for compensation exists, the employer shall provide competent surgical treatment by radical operation, the limits of benefits payable under section 4 hereof being increased to $200 in such cases, if the operation is performed. In case the injured employee refuses to submit to the operation, the employer shall have the right to a medical examination as provided in section 37 hereof. If it be shown by such examination that the employee has any chronic disease or is otherwise in such physical condition as to render it more than ordinarily unsafe to submit to such operation, he shall, if unwilling to submit to the operation, be entitled to compensation for disability under the general provisions of this act. If the examination does not disclose the existence of disease or other physical condition rendering the operation more than ordinarily unsafe and the employee, with knowledge of the result of such examination, thereafter refuses to submit to such operation, he shall be entitled to compensation for disability under the general provisions of this act for not exceeding one year.

If the employee submits to the operation he shall, in addition to the surgical benefits herein provided for, be entitled to compensation for 26 weeks. If the hernia result in death within one year after it is sustained, or the operation result in death, such death shall be deemed a result of the injury causing such hernia and compensated accordingly under the provisions of this act. This paragraph shall not apply where the employee has refused to submit to an operation which has been found by the examination herein provided for not to be more than ordinarily unsafe.

Sec. 5. If it be shown that the employer is furnishing the requirements provided by section 4 hereof in such manner that there is reasonable ground for believing that the life, health, or recovery of the employee is being endangered or impaired thereby, the board may order a change in the physician or other requirement, and if the employer fail promptly to comply with such order after receiving it, may permit the employee or some one for him to provide the same at the expense of the employer under such reasonable regulations as may be provided by the board. Change of physician.

No action shall be brought against any employer subject to this act by any employee or other person to recover damages for malpractice or improper treatment received by such employee from any physician, hospital, or attendant thereof.

Sec. 6. All fees and charges under sections 4 and 5 shall be fair and reasonable, shall be subject to regulation by the board, and shall be Medical, etc., fees and charges.

limited to such charges as are reasonable for similar treatment of injured persons of a like standard of living in the same community and where such treatment is paid for by the injured person himself. In determining what fees are reasonable, the board may also consider the increased security of payment afforded by this act.

Where such requirements are furnished by a public hospital or other institution, payment thereof shall be made to the proper authorities conducting same. No compensation shall be payable for the death or disability of an employee if his death is caused, or if and in so far as his disability may be aggravated, caused, or continued by an unreasonable refusal, failure, or neglect to submit to or follow any competent surgical treatment or medical aid or advice.

Refusing treatment.

Waiting time.

SEC. 7 (as amended by ch. 176, acts of 1918). Except as provided in sections 4 and 5 hereof, no compensation shall be payable for the first seven days of disability, and all compensation shall be payable on the regular pay day of the employer, commencing with the first regular pay day after seven days after the injury, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on each installment from the time it is due until paid.

Work outside State.

SEC. 8. Employers who hire employees within this State to work in whole or in part without this State may agree in writing with such employees to exempt from the operation of this act injuries received outside of this State: in the absence of such an agreement the remedies provided by this act shall be exclusive as regards injuries received outside this State upon the same terms and conditions as if received within the State.

Waivers.

SEC. 8a. No contract or agreement, written or implied, no rule, regulation, or other device shall in any manner operate to relieve any any employer in whole or in part of any obligation created by this act except as herein provided.

Liability of third parties.

SEC. 9. Whenever an injury for which compensation is payable under this act shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employee may at his option either claim compensation or proceed at law by civil action against such other person to recover damages, or proceed both against the employer for compensation and such other person to recover damages, but he shall not collect from both, and if compensation is awarded under this act the employer having paid the compensation or having become liable therefor shall have the right to recover in his own name or that of the injured employee from the other person in whom legal liability for damages exists not to exceed the indemnity paid and payable to the injured employee.

Employees of contractors.

SEC. 10. A principal contractor, intermediate, or subcontractor shall be liable for compensation to any employee injured while in the employ of any one in [of] his intermediate or subcontractors and engaged upon the subject matter of the contract, to the same extent as as the immediate employer. Any principal, intermediate, or subcontractor who shall pay compensation under the foregoing provision may recover the amount paid from any subordinate contractor through whom he may have been rendered liable under this section.

Every claim to compensation under this section shall in the first instance be presented to and instituted against the immediate employer, but such proceeding shall not constitute a waiver of the employee's rights to recover compensation under this act from the principal or intermediate contractor: Provided, That the collection of full compensation from one employer shall bar recovery by the employee against any others, nor shall he collect from all a total compensation in excess of the amount for which his immediate employer is liable.

This section shall apply only in cases where the injury occurred on, in, or about the premises on which the principal contractor has undertaken to execute work or which are under his control otherwise or management.

Status of minors.

SEC. 11. A minor, except where employed in willful violation of any law of this State regulating the employment of minors, shall be deemed sui juris for the purposes of this act, and no other person shall have cause of action or right to compensation for an injury to or death of such minor employee or loss of service on account thereof, by reason of the minority of such employee. In the event of the award of a lump sum of compensation to such minor employee, payment shall be made to the guardian of such minor.

SEC. 12. If death results within two years from an accident for which compensation is payable under this act, the employer or his insurer shall pay to the persons entitled to compensation, or, if none, then to the personal representative of the deceased employee reasonable burial expenses of a person of the standard of living of the deceased, not to exceed the sum of $75, and shall also pay to or for the following persons compensation as follows, to wit:

Compensation for death.

Funeral expenses.

No dependents.

Persons wholly dependent.

Partial dependents.

(1) If there are no dependents, as herein defined, there shall be paid, in addition to the burial expenses and medical expenses, if any otherwise provided for herein, the further sum of $100, payment to be made to the personal representative of the deceased employee.

(2) If there are one or more wholly dependent persons, 65 per cent of the average weekly earnings of the deceased employee, but not to exceed $12 nor less than $5 per week, shall be payable, all such payments to be made for the period between the date of death and 335 weeks after the date of accident to the employee, or until the intervening termination of dependency, but in no case to exceed the maximum sum of $4,000.

(3) If there are partly dependent persons, the payments shall be such part of what would be payable for total dependency as the partial dependency existing at the time of the accident to the employee may be proportionate to total dependency, all such payments to be made for the period between the date of death and 335 weeks after the date of the accident to the deceased employee or until the intervening termination of dependency, but in no case to exceed in the aggregate of compensation on account of such death the maximum sum of $4,000.

Partial dependency shall be determined by the proportion of the earnings of the employee which have been contributed to such partial dependent during one year next preceding the date of injury; if the relation of partial dependency shall not have existed for one year next preceding the date of injury, the board shall consider all the facts and circumstances and fix such proportion as may be fair and reasonable thereunder.

(4) All relations of dependency herein referred to shall be construed to mean dependency existing at the time of accident to the employee.

Who are dependents.

SEC. 13. The following persons shall be presumed to be wholly dependent upon a deceased employee: (a) A wife upon a husband whom she has not voluntarily abandoned at the time of the accident; (b) a husband incapacitated from wage earning, upon a wife whom he has not voluntarily abandoned at the time of the accident to the wife; (c) a child or children under the age of 16 years or over 16 years if incapacitated from wage earning, upon the parent with whom such child or children are living or by whom actually supported at the time of the accident. In all other cases the relation of dependency in whole or in part shall be determined in accordance with the facts of each case existing at the time of the accident, but no person shall be considered a dependent in any degree unless he be living in the household of the employee at the time of the accident or unless such person bears to the employee the relation of father, mother, husband, or wife, father-in-law or mother-in-law, grandfather or grandmother, child or grandchild, or brother or sister of the whole or half blood.

Cessation of payments.

Compensation to any dependent shall cease at the death or legal or common-law marriage of such dependent and upon the cessation of compensation to or on account of any person, the compensation of the remaining persons entitled to compensation shall, for the unexpired period during which their compensation is payable, be that which such persons would have received during such unexpired period if they had been the only persons entitled to compensation at the time of the accident.

Definitions.

SEC. 14. As used in this act, the term "child" includes stepchildren, legally adopted children, posthumous children, and recognized illegitimate children, but does not include married children unless actually dependent.

The terms "brother" and "sister" include stepbrothers, stepsisters, and brothers and sisters of the half blood or by adoption, but excludes married brothers or sisters unless actually dependent. The term "grandchild" includes children of adopted children and children of stepchildren, but excludes stepchildren of children or of adopted children and married children. The term "parent" includes step-parents and parents by adoption. The words "adopted" and "adoption" as herein used include cases where the persons are legally adopted.

Payments a release.

SEC. 15. Payment of death benefits, in good faith, to a supposed dependent or to a dependent subsequent in right to another or other dependents shall protect and discharge the employer and insurer unless and until the lawful dependent or dependents prior in right shall have given the employer or insurer written notice of his or their claim. In case the employer or insurer is in doubt as to who are dependents or as to their respective rights, the board shall, on application, decide and direct to whom payment shall be made, and payment made under such direction shall release the employer and insurer from all liability: Provided, however, That if an appeal be taken from the order of the board directing payment, persons receiving payment under such order shall be required to furnish bond for the protection of adverse claimants pending the outcome of the proceedings.

In case death occurs as a result of the injury, after a period of total or partial disability, the period of disability shall be deducted from the total period of compensation and the benefits paid thereunder from the maximum allowed for the death respectively stated in section 12 hereof.

Total disability.

SEC. 16 (as amended by ch. 176, acts of 1918). Where the injury causes total disability for work, the employer, during such disability, except the first seven days thereof, shall pay the employee so injured a weekly compensation equal to 65 per cent of his average weekly earnings, not to exceed $12 nor less than $5 per week, such payments to be made during the period of total disability but not longer than eight years after the date of the injury, nor in any case to exceed the maximum sum of $5,000. In case the period of total disability begins after the period of partial disability, the period of partial disability shall be deducted from the total period of eight years during which compensation for total disability may be payable, and the payments made on account of such partial disability shall be deducted from the maximum of $5,000.

In case of the following injuries, the disability shall be deemed total and permanent, to wit:

- (1) The total and permanent loss of sight in both eyes.
- (2) The loss of both feet at or above the ankle.
- (3) The loss of both hands at or above the wrist.
- (4) A similar loss of one hand and one foot.
- (5) An injury to the spine resulting in permanent and complete paralysis of both arms or both legs or of one arm and one leg.
- (6) An injury to the skull resulting in incurable insanity or imbecility.

The above enumeration is not to be taken as exclusive, but in all other cases the burden of proof shall be on the claimant to prove that his injuries have resulted in permanent total disability.

Partial disability.

SEC. 17 (as amended by ch. 176, acts of 1918). In case of an injury resulting in temporary partial disability, the employee shall receive during such disability, except the first seven days thereof, a weekly compensation equal to 65 per cent of the difference between his average weekly earnings before the injury and the average weekly earnings which he earns or is able to earn in some suitable employment after the injury and during such disability, not to exceed 335 weeks from the date of injury nor exceeding the sum of $12 per week nor the maximum sum of $4,000. In case partial disability follows a period of total disability, such period of total disability shall be deducted from the maximum period allowed for partial disability and the benefits paid on account thereof from the maximum allowed for partial disability.

SEC. 18. For injuries enumerated in the following schedule, the employee shall receive in lieu of all other compensation, except such as may be payable under sections 4 and 5 hereof, a weekly compensation equal to 65 per cent of his average weekly earnings, but not less than $5 per week nor exceeding $12 per week, for the respective periods stated thereon, to wit:

Schedule.

For the loss of a thumb, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 60 weeks.

For the loss of a first finger, commonly called the index finger, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 45 weeks.

For the loss of a second finger, 65 per cent of the average wages during 30 weeks.

For the loss of a third finger, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 20 weeks.

For the loss of a fourth finger, commonly known as the little finger, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 15 weeks.

The loss of the second, or distal, phalange of the thumb shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such thumb; the loss of more than one-half of such thumb shall be considered to be equal to the loss of the whole thumb.

The loss of the third, or distal, phalange of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-third of such finger.

The loss of the middle, or second, phalange of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of two-thirds of such finger.

The loss of more than the middle and distal phalanges of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of the whole finger: Provided, however, That in no case will the amount received for more than one finger exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a hand.

For the loss of a metacarpal bone (bone of palm) for the corresponding thumb, finger, or fingers above, add 10 weeks to the number of weeks as above.

For ankylosis (total stiffness of) or contractures (due to sears or injuries) which makes the fingers more than useless, the same number of weeks apply to such finger or fingers (not thumb) as given above.

For the loss of a hand, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 150 weeks.

For the loss of an arm, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 200 weeks.

For the loss of one of the toes, other than the great toe, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 10 weeks.

For the loss of the great toe, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 30 weeks.

The loss of more than two-thirds of any toe shall be considered equal to the loss of the whole toe.

The loss of less than two-thirds of any toe shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half toe. For the loss of a foot, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 125 weeks.

For the loss of a leg, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 200 weeks, or the total and permanent loss of the sight of an eye, 65 per cent of the average weekly wages during 100 weeks.

In all other cases of permanent partial disability, including any disfigurement which will impair the future usefulness or occupational opportunities of the injured employee, compensation shall be determined according to the percentage of disability, taking into account, among other things, any previous disability, the nature of the physical injury or disfigurement, the occupation of the injured employee and age at the time of injury; the compensation paid therefor shall be 65 per cent of the average weekly earnings of the employee, but not less than $5 nor more than $12, multiplied by the percentage of disability caused by the injury, for such period as the board may determine, not exceeding 335 weeks nor a maximum sum of $4,000. Whenever the weekly payments under this paragraph would be less than $3 per week, the period may be shortened and the payments correspondingly increased to that amount. Where compensation, except as provided in sections 4 and 5 of this act, is paid under any other provision of this act the period during which such other compen- sation is paid and the amount thereof shall be deducted respectively from the maximum period and maximum amount which may be paid under this paragraph.

- Refusal to work. Sec. 19. If an injured employee refuses employment reasonably suited to his capacity and physical condition procured for him, he shall not be entitled to compensation during the period of such refusal unless, in the opinion of the board, such refusal was justifiable.
- Second injuries. Sec. 20. If a previously injured employee sustains a subsequent injury which results in a condition to which both injuries, or their effects, contribute, the employer in whose employment the subsequent injury is sustained shall be liable only for the compensation to which such resulting condition entitled the employee, less all compensation which the provisions of this law would have afforded on account of the prior injury or injuries had they been compensated for thereunder.
- Review of awards. Sec. 21. Upon its own motion or upon the application of any party interested and a showing of change of conditions, mistake, or fraud the board may at any time review any award or order, ending, diminishing, or increasing the compensation previously awarded, within the maximum and minimum provided in this act, or change or revoke its previous order, sending immediately to the parties a copy of its subsequent order or award. Review under this section shall be had upon notice to the parties interested and shall not affect the previous order or award as to any sums already paid thereunder.
- Alien dependents. Sec. 22. Compensation under this act to alien dependent widows and children, not residents of the United States, shall be one-half of the amount provided in each case for residents; and the employer may at any time commute all future installments of compensation to alien dependents the then value thereof. Alien widowers, parents, brothers, and sisters, not residents of the United States, shall not be entitled to any compensation.
- Notice. Sec. 23. Any notice required to be given under this act shall be deemed to have been properly given and served when deposited in the mail in a registered letter or package properly stamped and addressed to the person to whom notice is to be given at his last-known address and in time to reach him in due time to act thereon. Notice may also be given and served in like manner as are notices in civil actions.
- Any notice, given and served as provided in this section, to the consular representative of the nation of which any nonresident dependent of a deceased employee is a citizen or subject, or to the authorized agent or representative of any such official residing in this State, shall be deemed to have been properly given and served upon such dependent.
- Computing wages. Sec. 24. Compensation shall be computed at the average weekly wage earned by employee at time of injury, reckoning wages as earned while working at full time.
- (a) If the employee at the time of the injury is regularly employed in a higher grade of work or occupation than formerly during the year and with larger regular wages, only such higher grade of work or occupation, if the same be not seasonal, shall be taken into consideration in computing his average weekly wages.
- Advances. Sec. 25. Any payments made, or the value of supplies furnished by the employer or his insurer during the period of disability, to the employee or his dependents which by the terms of this act were not due or payable when made or furnished may, with the approval of the board, be deducted from the amount payable as compensation.
- The board may, on the application of either party, in its discretion and having regard both to the welfare of the employee and the convenience and financial ability of the employer, authorize compensation to be paid monthly or quarterly.
- Lump sums. Sec. 26. Whenever compensation has been paid for not less than six months, thereafter, on the application of either party and upon notice to the other party, in any case where the board may determine that it will be for the best interests of either party and will not subject the employer or his insurer to an undue risk of overpayment, future payments of compensation or any part thereof may be commuted to a lump sum of an amount which will equal the total sum of the probable future payments so commuted, discounted at 5 per cent per annum on each payment. Upon payment of such lump sum all liability for the payments therein commuted shall cease.

Sec. 27. Whenever for any reason the board may deem it expedient, any lump sum which is paid as provided in section 26 hereof shall be paid to any suitable person or corporation appointed by the judge of the county court of the county of the residence of the injured employee or of his dependents as trustee to administer or apply the same for the benefit of the person or persons entitled thereto. The receipt of such trustee for the amount so paid to him or it shall discharge the employer and his insurer. Except as otherwise herein specifically provided, the manner of qualification and the rights, duties, and liabilities of such trustee shall be determined by the general laws of this State.

Payment to trustees.

Sec. 28. The benefits in case of death shall be paid to such one or more dependents of the deceased employee, for the benefit of all the dependents entitled thereto, as may be determined by the board. The dependents to whom payments are made shall apply the same to the use of the several persons thereto entitled under this act according to their respective claims on the deceased for support. The compensation of an insane person shall be paid to his or her committee.

To whom payments made.

In cases where the dependents are a widow, or other head of a family of minor children, and one or more minor children, it shall be sufficient for the widow or head of such family to make application for compensation on behalf of all, and in cases where the dependents are mentally incapacitated or are minors the head of whose family is not a dependent, the application may be made by the committee, guardian, or next friend of such dependents.

Sec. 29. Where an accident is caused in any degree by the intentional failure of the employer to comply with any specific statute or lawful regulations made thereunder, communicated to such employer, and relative to installation or maintenance of safety appliances or methods, the compensation for which the employer would otherwise have been liable under this act, shall be increased 15 per cent in the amount of each payment; where the accident is caused in any degree by the intentional failure of the employee to use any safety appliance furnished by the employer, or to obey any lawful and reasonable rule, order, or regulation of the board or the employer for the safety of employees or the public, the compensation for which the employer would otherwise have been liable under this act, shall be decreased 15 per cent in the amount of each payment: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed to conflict with or impair any of the provisions of section 5 of this act.

Failure to comply with safety statutes.

Sec. 30. In case any minor employee who is injured or killed is, at the time of such injury, employed in willful and known violation by the employer of any law of this State regulating the employment of minors, his statutory guardian, or personal representative of the minor so killed, may claim compensation under the terms of this act or may sue to recover damages as if this act had not been passed. If a claim to compensation be made under this section, the making of such claim shall be a waiver and bar to all rights of action on account of said injury or death of said minor as to all persons, and the institution of an action to recover damages on account of such injury or death shall be a waiver and bar of all rights to compensation under this act.

Minors unlawfully employed.

Sec. 31. All rights of compensation granted by this act shall have the same preference or priority for the whole thereof against the assets of the employer as is allowed by law for any unpaid wages for labor.

Claims preferred.

Sec. 32. No claim for compensation under this act shall be assignable, and all compensation and claims therefor shall be exempt from all claims of creditors.

Assignments, etc.

Sec. 33. No proceeding under this act for compensation for an injury or death shall be maintained unless a notice of the accident shall have been given to the employer as soon as practicable after the happening thereof, and unless a claim for compensation with respect to such injury shall have been made within one year after the date of the accident, or, in case of death, within one year after such death, whether or not a claim has been made by the employee himself for compensation. Such notice and such claim may be given or made by any person claiming to be entitled to compensation or by some one in his behalf. If payments of compensation, as such, have been made voluntarily, the making of a claim within such period shall not be required, but shall become requisite following the suspension of such voluntary payments.

Form. SEC. 34. Such notice and such claim shall be in writing, and the notice shall contain the name and address of the employee, and shall state in ordinary language the time, place of occurrence, nature and cause of the accident, with names of witnesses, the nature and extent of the injury sustained, and the work or employment in which the employee was at the time engaged, and shall be assigned by him or a person on his behalf, or, in the event of his death, by any one or more of his dependents or a person on their behalf. The notice may include the claim.

To whom given. SEC. 35. Any such notice or claim shall be given to the employer, or, if the employer be a partnership, then to any one of the partners. If the employer be a corporation, then the notice may be given to any agent of the corporation upon whom process may be served or to any officer of the corporation or agent of the corporation in charge of the business at the place where the injury occurred. Such notice or claim may be given by delivery to any of such persons or in the manner provided in section 23 hereof.

Inaccuracy. SEC. 36. Such notice shall not be held invalid or insufficient by reason of any inaccuracy in complying with section 34 hereof, unless it be shown that the employer was in fact misled to his injury thereby. Want of notice or delay in giving notice shall not be a bar to proceedings under this act if it be shown that the employer, his agent, or representative had knowledge of the injury, or that such delay or failure to give notice was occasioned by mistake or other reasonable cause.

Medical examinations. SEC. 37. After an injury and so long as compensation is claimed, the workman, if so requested by his employer or the board, shall submit himself to examination, at reasonable time and places, to a duly qualified physician or surgeon designated and paid by the employer. The employee shall have the right to have a duly qualified physician or surgeon designated and paid by himself present at such examination, which right, however, shall not be construed to deny to the employer's physician or surgeon the right to visit the injured employee at all reasonable times and under all reasonable conditions. If an employee refuses to submit himself to or in any way obstructs such examination, his right to take or prosecute any proceedings under this act shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases, and no compensation shall be payable for the period during which said refusal or obstruction continues.

Incompetents. SEC. 38. No limitation of time provided in this act shall run against any person who is mentally incompetent or who is a minor dependent, so long as he has no committee, guardian, or next friend.

Workmen's compensation board. SEC. 39. A board is hereby created, to be known as the "Workmen's Compensation Board," which shall consist of three members appointed by the governor. Each member of the board shall hold office for four years and until his successor shall have been appointed and qualified, except that when the board is first created one member shall be appointed for two years, one for three years, and one for four years. Thereafter, upon the expiration of the term of any member, his successor shall be appointed for a full term of four years. Of the board as first constituted, the member appointed for two years shall be chairman during his term, the member appointed for three years during the third year, and the member appointed for four years during the fourth year. Thereafter the senior member in length of service on the board in his current term in any given year shall be chairman during that year.

Vacancies on the board shall be filled by appointment for the remainder of the unexpired term, but no vacancy shall impair the rights of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the board nor shall relieve such members from discharging all the duties of the board during such vacancy. In the event of a vacancy, the appointee for the unexpired term shall not succeed his predecessor in the chairmanship of the board; such other member as would, but for the vacancy, have been chairman shall at once succeed to the unexpired chairmanship, when

State treasury. The board shall provide necessary supplies, books, periodicals, and maps, and shall provide itself with a seal for the authentication of its orders, awards, or proceedings on which shall be inserted the words "Workmen's Compensation Board, State of Kentucky. Official seal." The board may hold sessions at any place within the State where necessary and shall have power to sue or institute legal proceedings in any court of the Commonwealth under existing laws as to jurisdiction of actions: unless consented to by the board, all actions or proceedings against it or a member thereof in his official capacity as such shall be brought in the courts of the county of Franklin.

Meetings.

Sec. 44. The board shall fix and adopt at least one day of the week on which regular meetings shall be held biweekly for the transaction of all business, a quorum of the board to be present at its main offices not later than eleven a. m. and remaining at the office, or available thereto, until 5 p. m. of such day. When necessary, the chairman shall call the board together at any time during business hours on any other day to consider and transact any business which may be before it. All proceedings of the board shall be recorded in a book for that purpose by the secretary, which shall constitute a public record and shall contain an entry of each case, claim, or proceeding considered, heard, or passed upon by the board or a member thereof, with the award, finding, or decision made thereon.

Districts.

Sec. 45 (as amended by chapter 176, acts of 1918). The place of residence of each member shall be shown upon the official stationery used by the said board.

Quorum.

Sec. 46. A majority of the board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and vacancies shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the full board, so long as a majority remains. Any investigation, inquiry, or hearing which the board is authorized to hold or undertake may be held or undertaken by or before any one member of the board, or a referee acting for him, under authorization of the board. All investigations, inquiries, hearings, and decisions of the board, and every order made by a member thereof, when approved by a majority of the members, and so shown on a record of its proceedings, shall be deemed to be the order of the board.

Rules.

Procedure.

Sec. 47. The board may make rules not inconsistent with this act for carrying out the provisions of this act. Processes and procedure under this act shall be as summary and simple as reasonably may be. The board or any member thereof shall have the power for the purpose of this act to subpoena witnesses, administer or cause to have administered oaths, and to examine or cause to have examined such parts of the books and records of the parties to a proceeding as relate to question in dispute.

The county sheriff shall serve all subpoenas of the board and shall receive the same fees as now provided by law for like service in civil actions; each witness who appears in obedience to such subpoena of the board shall receive for attendance the fees and mileage for witnesses in civil cases in the courts.

The circuit court shall, on application of the board, or any member thereof, enforce by proper proceedings the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production and examination of books, papers, and records.

Agreements.

Sec. 48. If the employee and employer reach an agreement, conforming to the provisions of this act, in regard to compensation, a memorandum of the agreement shall be filed with the board, and, if approved by it, shall be enforceable in like manner as is herein provided for the enforcement of awards of the board. Nothing herein shall prevent the voluntary payment of compensation in the amounts and for the periods herein prescribed without formal agreement, but nothing shall operate as a final settlement except a memorandum of agreement filed with and approved by the board in accordance with this section, or the expiration of the time limit hereinbefore prescribed in section 33.

Applications for hearings.

Sec. 49. If the parties fail to reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act, or if they have previously filed such an agreement with the board and compensation has been paid or is a vacancy occurs therein, in addition to the year's chairmanship to which he would otherwise have been entitled.

SEC. 40. No person shall be eligible to appointment as a member of the board unless he shall be at least thirty years of age, a resident of Kentucky not less than three years consecutively next preceding his appointment, and of good moral character. Qualifications.

No person accepting appointment as a member of the board and qualifying as such shall be eligible to election or appointment to any public office during any calendar year which shall include any part of the term of membership on the board for which he may have been appointed and qualified and in which such election shall be held or appointment made. Resignation from membership on the board shall not relieve such member from any of the provisions of this section and the acceptance of appointment and qualification as a member of the board shall constitute a valid waiver of any and all statutory or constitutional rights to or eligibility for holding any other public office during such time.

SEC. 41. The governor may, at any time, remove any member of the board for inefficiency, neglect of duty, misconduct in office, or political activity, or if he become ineligible as defined in section 40, giving him in advance a copy of the charges preferred and an opportunity of being publicly heard, in person or by counsel, upon not less than ten days' notice. A representative of the attorney general's office shall attend such proceedings, and, upon the governor's request, shall advise or assist him therein. Either party may procure the attendance of witnesses and their testimony as is now provided by the Civil Code in ordinary actions. Removals.

If such member be removed, the governor shall file in the office of the secretary of state a complete statement of all charges made against such member and his findings thereon, together with a complete record of the proceedings had and transcript of testimony heard, the same to constitute a public record of the Commonwealth. Any member of the board may also be removed by the senate by impeachment under the same procedure as is now provided by law.

SEC. 42. The salary and expenses of the board with their assistants and employees shall be paid out of the maintenance fund provided for in section 85 hereof; the annual salary of each member shall be $3,500. The board may appoint a secretary at a salary of not more than $2,500 a year and a medical director and such other assistants and employees as are necessary to the proper administration of this act at salaries to be fixed by the board and approved by the governor: Provided, however, That such salaries shall in no case exceed $75 per month to any stenographer, $100 per month to any clerical employee, $150 per month to any other employee or assistant, or $3,000 per year to the medical director, who shall be a reputable licensed and practicing physician and surgeon of the professional education, training, or qualification required by law for admission to practice in this State. The board may at any time remove any of its appointees upon filing with the secretary of state a full written statement of its reasons for such removal. Salaries, etc.

SEC. 42a. Members of the "Workmen's compensation board" shall be considered as officers, and shall take the oath prescribed by the constitution and laws of Kentucky, and shall give bond in the sum of $10,000 of a surety company authorized to do business in the State, for the faithful performance of their duties, which bonds shall be approved by the governor and kept on file in the office of the secretary of state, and any action on said bonds for breach thereof shall be instituted by special counsel employed by the governor and shall be in the name of the Commonwealth. The premium upon said bonds shall be paid out of the maintenance fund. Oath.

SEC. 42b. The board and their employees or authorized representatives shall for such traveling as is necessitated by the discharge of their official duties, be allowed transportation actually paid for, not exceeding the regular fare over the most direct route, and meals and lodging actually paid for, not exceeding $3 per day. Bonds.

SEC. 43. The board shall keep and maintain its main offices in Frankfort, Ky., using suitable rooms and offices belonging to the State, and shall be provided necessary office furniture to be paid for out of the Expenses.

Offices.

due in accordance therewith and the parties thereafter disagree, either party may make written application to the board for a hearing in regard to the matter at issue and for a ruling thereon. Such application for a hearing must be filed as soon as is practicable after disagreement, or after the cessation of voluntary payments, if any have been made.

As soon as possible after such application has been received the board shall set the date for a hearing, to be held as soon as is practicable in view of the matter involved, and shall notify the parties at issue of the time and place of such hearing.

Unless otherwise agreed to by the parties and authorized by the board, the hearing shall be held at or convenient to the place where the injury was sustained or the ground for disagreement occurred. In advance of directing a hearing, the board, or a member thereof, or referee authorized by the board, may confer informally with the parties at issue in an attempt to assist in adjusting their differences, but may not delay the granting of a hearing, over the objection of either party, for such purpose.

Sec. 50. The board, or any of its members, shall hear the parties at issue and their representatives and witnesses and shall determine the dispute in a summary manner. The award, together with a statement of the findings of fact, rulings of law, and any other matters pertinent to the question at issue, shall be filed with the record of proceedings, and a copy of the award shall immediately be sent to the parties in dispute.

Hearings.

Sec. 51. If an application for review is made to the board within seven days from the date of the award, the full board, if the first hearing was not held before the full board, shall review the evidence, or if deemed advisable, as soon as practicable hear the parties at issue, their representatives and witnesses, and shall make and award and file the same in like manner as specified in the foregoing section.

Reviews.

If a party introduce at a hearing before the full board a witness whose testimony at the original hearing appears in the transcript of evidence taken thereat, the costs accruing through the attendance of such witness and the transcribing of his testimony at the second hearing shall be borne by the party introducing him, at such hearing, regardless of the outcome of the controversy.

Sec. 52. An award, or order of the board, as provided in section 50, if application for review be not filed as therein provided, or an award or order of the board upon review as provided in section 51, shall be conclusive and binding as to all questions of fact, but either party may, within 20 days after the rendition of such final order or award of the board, by petition appeal to the circuit court that would have jurisdiction to try an action for damages for said injuries if this act had not passed, for the review of such order or award, the board and the adverse party being made respondents. Such petition shall state fully the grounds upon which a review is sought, assign all errors relied on, and shall be verified by the petitioner, who shall furnish copies of the petition to the respondents at the time of filing same.

Awards conclusive.

Appeals to courts.

Summons shall issue upon the petition, directing the adverse party to file answer within 15 days after service thereof and directing the board to certify its complete record of the case to the court, or, in lieu thereof, and if consented to by the petitioner and adverse party, an abstract of the record prepared in the same manner as hereinafter provided for appeals to the court of appeals.

No new or additional evidence may be introduced in the circuit court, except as to the fraud or misconduct of some person engaged in the administration of this act, and affecting the order, ruling, or award, but the court shall otherwise hear the cause upon the record or abstract thereof as certified by the board, and shall dispose of the cause in summary manner, its review being limited to determining whether or not:

- (1) The board acted without or in excess of its powers
- (2) The order, decision, or award was procured by fraud.
- (3) The order, decision, or award is not in conformity to the provisions of this act.
- (4) If findings of fact are in issue, whether such findings of fact support the order, decision, or award.

The board and each party shall have the right to appear in such review proceedings; the court shall enter judgment affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order, decision, or award, or in its discretion remanding the cause to the board for further proceedings in conformity with the direction of the court. The court may, in advance of judgment and upon a sufficient showing of fact, remand the cause to the board.

Court of appeals.

SEC. 53. Where an amount sufficient under existing laws to authorize an appeal to the court of appeals is involved, the judgment of the circuit court shall be subject to appeal to the court of appeals, the scope of whose review shall include all matters herein made the subject of review by the circuit court and also errors of law arising in the circuit court and upon appeal made reviewable by the Civil Code of Procedure where not in conflict with the provisions of this act. The procedure as to appeal to the court of appeals shall be the same as in civil actions, so far as the same may be applicable to and not in conflict with the provisions of this act, except as follows:

(1) Only so much of the evidence shall be embraced in a bill of exceptions as may be necessary to present clearly the questions of law involved in the rulings to which exceptions are reserved, and such evidence as is embraced therein shall be set forth in condensed and narrative form, save as a proper understanding of the questions presented may require that parts of it be set forth otherwise.

(2) In order to carry out the provisions of subsection 1 and further to reduce the size of the record on appeal, it shall be the duty of the appellant to file with the clerk of the circuit court, together with proof or acknowledgment of service of a copy on the appellee or his counsel, a schedule which shall indicate the portions of the record to be incorporated into the transcript of the record on such appeal. Should the appellee or his counsel desire additional portions of the record incorporated into the record to be filed in the court of appeals, he may file with the clerk of the circuit court his schedule also, within ten days thereafter (unless the term be extended by order of the circuit court or of the court of appeals), indicating such additional portions of the record desired by him.

The clerk of the circuit court shall transmit to the court of appeals as the transcript of the record only those portions of the record in the lower court which are designated by the parties as above provided. The parties, or their counsel, may, however, agree by written stipulation to be filed with the clerk of the circuit court, the portions of the record which shall constitute the transcript of record on appeal, and the clerk in such case shall transmit only the papers designated in such stipulation.

Unnecessary transcripts.

SEC. 54. If the court of appeals shall find that portions of the record unnecessary to a proper presentation of the case have been incorporated into the transcript by either party, the court may order that the whole or any part of the clerk's fee for preparing the transcript shall be paid by the offending party.

Safety of papers.

Whenever it shall be necessary or proper, in the opinion of the judge of the circuit court, that original papers of any kind should be inspected by the court of appeals, such judge may make such rule or order for the safe-keeping, transporting, and return of such original papers as to him may seem proper, and the court of appeals will receive and consider such original papers in connection with the transcript of the record.

Award in effect.

SEC. 55. Upon motion of either party and a sufficient showing of reason or necessity therefor, the court to which an appeal is taken may continue in force the award, judgment, or order appealed from, pending its decision of such appeal.

Judgment on agreement.

SEC. 56. Any party in interest may file in the circuit court of the county in which the injury occurred a certified copy of a memorandum of agreement approved by the board or of an order or decision of the board, or of an award of the board unappealed from, or of an award of the board rendered upon an appeal, whereupon said court shall render judgment in accordance therewith and notify the parties. Such judgment shall have the same effect and all proceedings in relation thereto shall thereafter be the same as though said judgment had been rendered in a suit duly heard and determined by said court.

Any such judgment of said circuit court unappealed from or affirmed on appeal or modified in obedience to the mandate of the appellate court, shall be modified to conform to any decision of the board, ending, diminishing, or increasing any weekly payment under the provisions of section 21 of this act, upon a presentation to it of a certified copy of such decision.

Sec. 57. If the board or any court before whom any proceedings are brought under this act shall determine that such proceedings have been brought, prosecuted, or defended without reasonable ground, it may assess the whole cost of the proceedings upon the party who has so brought, prosecuted, or defended them.

Costs.

Sec. 58. The board, or any member thereof, may, upon the application of either party, or upon its own motion, appoint a disinterested and duly qualified physician or surgeon to make any necessary medical examination of the employee and to testify in respect thereto. Said physician or surgeon shall be allowed traveling expenses and a reasonable fee to be fixed by the board, but not exceeding $10 for each examination and report, but the board may allow additional reasonable amounts in extraordinary cases.

Medical examinations.

The fees and expenses of such physician or surgeon shall be paid out of the maintenance fund.

Sec. 59. All fees of attorneys and physicians and charges of hospitals under this act shall be subject to the approval of the board. No attorney's fees shall be allowed or approved against any party or parties not represented by such attorney, nor exceeding an amount equal to 15 per cent of the amount of the first $1,000 or fraction thereof recovered, or 10 per cent of the excess of such recovery, if any, over $1,000. The board may deny or reduce an attorney's fee upon proof of solicitation of employment.

Fees.

Sec. 60. All questions arising under this act, if not settled by agreement of the parties interested therein, with the approval of the board, shall be determined by the board except as otherwise herein provided for.

Disputes.

Sec. 61. Every employer subject to this act shall hereafter keep a record of all injuries, fatal or otherwise, received by his employees in the course of their employment. Within one week after the occurrence and knowledge thereof, as provided in sections 33 to 36, of an injury to an employee, causing his absence from work for more than one day, a report thereof shall be made in writing and mailed to the board on blanks to be procured from the board for the purpose.

Injuries to be reported.

Upon the termination of the disability of the injured employee, or if the disability extends beyond a period of 60 days, then also at the expiration of such period the employer shall make a supplementary report to the board on blanks to be procured from the board for the purpose.

The said report shall contain the name, nature, and location of the business of the employer, and the name, age, sex, wages, and occupation of the injured employee, and shall state the date and hour of the accident causing the injury, the nature and cause of the injury, and such other information as may be required by the board.

Any employer subject to this act who refuses or willfully neglects to make the report required by this section shall be liable for a fine of not more than $25 for each such refusal or neglect.

Sec. 62. Any person who shall knowingly file, cause to be filed, or permit to be filed, any false or fraudulent claim on his behalf to compensation or other benefits under this act, or who shall by fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation procure or cause to be made or shall receive any payments of compensation or other benefits under this act to which the recipient is not lawfully entitled, or shall conspire with, aid, or abet another so to do, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

False claims, etc.

Any person who shall by deceit or misrepresentation and with intent to defraud, cause or procure or conspire with, aid or abet another in so causing or procuring any person entitled to compensation or other benefits under this act to omit to file claim thereto or to accept the payment of a less sum than that to which he may be lawfully entitled to thereunder shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Any person guilty of a misdemeanor as defined in this section shall, upon conviction, be punishable by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or imprisonment of not less than 10 nor more than 90 days, in the discretion of the jury.

Insurance.

SEC. 63. Every employer under this act shall either insure and keep insured his liability for compensation hereunder in some corporation, association, or organization authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this State, or shall furnish to the board satisfactory proof of his financial ability to pay direct the compensation in the amount and manner and when due as provided for in this act. In the latter case the board shall require the deposit of an acceptable security, indemnity, or bond to secure to such an extent as the board may direct the payment of compensation liabilities as they are incurred.

Every employer accepting the provisions of this act shall at the time of such acceptance file with the board in substantially the form prescribed by it, and annually thereafter, or as often as may be necessary, evidence of his compliance with the provisions of this section and all others relating thereto. Until these provisions are complied with the employer shall, from the date of his acceptance of the act, be liable to an employee either for compensation under this act or at law in the same manner as if the employer had refused to accept the provisions of this act. Claim of compensation in such cases shall be deemed a waiver of the right to proceed at law and the institution of an action at law shall be deemed a waiver of all claim to compensation.

Self-insurers.

SEC. 64. Whenever an employer has complied with the provisions of section 63 relating to self-insurance, the board shall issue to such employer a certificate which shall remain in force for a period fixed by the board, but the board may upon at least 60 days' notice and a hearing to the employer, revoke the certificate upon satisfactory evidence for such revocation having been presented. The board may thereafter, upon petition of the employer and a hearing, grant a new certificate, but the employer shall not, as a matter of right, be entitled to a hearing for this purpose sooner than six months after a previous revocation of his certificate.

Authorization to make payments of compensation direct may be granted either as to the employer's entire risk or as to such part or class thereof as the board may direct in its certificate. In the latter case the board shall determine the extent to which and the manner in which the remainder of his said risk shall be insured. Any employer authorized to make payments of compensation direct may, for his own protection, independently insure the whole or any part or character of such payments.

Mutual insurance.

SEC. 65. For the purposes of complying with the provisions of section 63, groups of employers are hereby authorized to form either among themselves or with employers in other States mutual insurance associations or reciprocal or interinsurance exchanges, subject to the general laws of this State relating to such mutual insurance associations or reciprocal or interinsurance exchanges and such reasonable conditions and restrictions, not inconsistent therewith, as may be fixed by the board. Membership in such mutual insurance associations or reciprocal or interinsurance exchanges so approved, together with evidence of the payment of premiums due, shall be evidence of compliance with section 63.

The board shall have power in any case to require any mutual insurance association or reciprocal or interinsurance exchange to purchase an annuity or to effect reinsurance with a company authorized to transact insurance in this State or to make such deposit with a bank or trust company of this State as shall in either case be approved by said board for the purpose of fully securing the payment of all deferred installments upon any claim for compensation.

Any unreasonable failure or delay in securing the payment of any deferred installments of compensation after request has been made by such board as provided in this action [section], shall, when reported to the insurance commissioner, constitute grounds for suspension or revocation of the insurer's license to do business in this State.

B e n e f i t schemes.

SEC. 66. Subject to the approval of the board, any employer may enter into or continue any agreement with his employee to provide a system of compensation, benefit, or insurance in lieu of the compensation and insurance provided by this act. No such substitute system shall be approved unless it confers benefits upon injured employees at least equivalent to the benefits provided by this act, nor if it requires contributions from the employees, unless it confers benefits in addition to those provided under this act at least commensurate with such contributions.

Such substitute system may be terminated by the board on reasonable notice and hearing to the interested parties if it shall appear that the same is not fairly administered, or if its operation shall disclose latent defects threatening its solvency, or if for any substantial reason it fails to accomplish the purpose of this act; and in this case the board shall determine upon the proper distribution of all remaining assets, if any, subject to the right of any party in interest to take an appeal to the courts.

Sec. 67. All policies insuring the payment of compensation under this act must contain a clause to the effect that as between the employer and the insurer the notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the insured shall be deemed notice or knowledge, as the case may be, on the part of the insurer; that jurisdiction of the insured for the purpose of this act shall be jurisdiction of the insurer; and that the insurer shall in all things be bound by and subject to the awards, judgments, or decrees rendered against such insured.

Provisions of policies.

Sec. 68. No policy of insurance against liability for compensation arising under this act shall be issued unless it contains the agreement of the insurer that it will promptly pay to the person entitled to same all benefits conferred by this act, and all installments of the compensation that may be awarded or agreed upon, and that the obligation shall not be affected by any default in the giving of any notice required by such policy, or otherwise. Such agreement shall be construed to be a direct promise by the insurer to person entitled to compensation enforceable in his name.

Same.

Sec. 69. Every policy for the insurance of the compensation herein provided against liability therefor shall be deemed to be made subject to the provisions of this act. No corporation, association, or organization shall enter into any such policy of insurance unless its form shall have been approved by the board.

Act controls.

Sec. 70. Every policy or contract of workmen's compensation insurance under this act issued or delivered in this State shall cover the entire liability of the employer for compensation under this act to each and all of his employees covered by such policy, except as otherwise provided in section 64 hereof, regardless of whatever other contingencies may be insured or provided for by riders attached thereto or endorsements made thereon. On the face of every such policy shall be printed conspicuously the words, "Insurance under this policy is in class (designating the same) of the company's workmen's compensation classification manual," and in the blank thus provided the number or other designation in said manual under which the said policy is written shall be placed before the policy is issued. If more than one class of risk be covered by the same policy, the separate risks and their corresponding manual classifications shall be stated in the same manner.

Entire liability covered.

Sec. 71. No such policy of insurance or rider to be used therewith shall be issued or delivered until a copy of the form thereof has been filed with the commissioner of insurance at least 30 days prior to such issue or delivery, unless before the expiration of 30 days the said commissioner shall have approved the form thereof in writing; nor if the commissioner of insurance notifies the company in writing that in his opinion the form of said policy or rider does not comply with the laws of this commonwealth, specifying fully the reasons for his opinion: Provided, That upon petition of the company the decision of the said commissioner shall be subject to review by the Franklin circuit court and to appeal therefrom to the court of appeals.

Forms to be filed.

Approval.

Sec. 72. The rates charged by all carriers of insurance, including the parties to any mutual, interindemnity, interinsurance, reciprocal, or other plan or scheme, writing insurance against the liability for compensation under this act, for insurance against such liability and against the liability of employers to employees where either or both have not elected to furnish or accept compensation under this act, shall be fair, reasonable, and adequate, with due allowance for merit rating, and all risks of the same kind and degree of hazard shall be written at the same rate by the same carrier. No policy of insurance against liability for compensation under this act shall be valid until the rate thereof has been approved by the board, not shall any such carrier of insurance write any such policy or contract until its basic and merit rating schedule have been filed with, approved, and not subsequently disapproved by the board. Each such insurance carrier shall report to the board [sic] State insurance commissioner in accordance with such reasonable rules as the State insurance commissioner may at any time prescribe, for the purpose of determining the solvency of the carrier, and the adequacy of its rates; for such purposes the board or State insurance commissioner may inspect the books and records of such insurance carrier, and examine its officers, agents, and directors under oath.

Rates.

Election— Sec. 73. Election to operate under the provisions of this act shall be effected by the employer by filing with the board the following notice, to wit:

By employer; “(Name of employer) elects to operate under the provisions of chapter 33, acts of 1916, commonly known as the Workmen’s Compensation Act, this election being effective as of the day of _____ and covering (here insert name of industry, business, or operation on which election is made.)”

In addition to the name of each industry, business, or operation as to which such election is filed, there shall also be stated in the notice with reference thereto (1) its location and address of chief office, (2) average number of employees during preceding 12 months, (3) kind of business being conducted, (4) method of securing payments of compensation to employees which the employer elects to adopt.

Such notice shall be in writing and signed by the employer, if an individual, by any partner if a partnership, or by the chief officer or agent within this State if a corporation.

By employees. Sec. 74. Election to operate under the provisions of this act shall be effected by the employee by signing the following notice, to wit:

“I hereby agree with (name of employer) to accept the provisions of chapter 33, acts of 1916, commonly known as the Kentucky Workmen’s Compensation Act.”

The election shall be effective from and including the date of signing, which shall be inserted opposite the employer’s signature. In case an employee be unable to write, his mark shall be witnessed by a third person, who shall at the time read the notice to the employee. Any number of employees may sign the same notice: Provided, That there be conspicuously written or printed at the top of each page thereof on which signatures appear a copy of the above form of notice. If the employment be intermittent or be temporarily suspended, the original acceptance of the employee shall continue effective in subsequent employment under the same employer.

Identification of such signature or mark of the employee shall constitute conclusive proof of his election to operate under the provisions of this act in any hearing or proceeding in which such election may be material or in issue.

Notices to be kept. Sec. 75. All such notices of election by employees shall, when executed, be preserved by the employer during the continuation of the employment of those employees whose names are subscribed thereto. Any person who shall, with fraudulent intent, willfully destroy, convert, or secrete any such notice, or willfully deprive the owner or his agent thereof, or erase or obliterate any part thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction be punishable by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200, or imprisonment of not less than 10 days nor more than 90 days, in the discretion of the jury.

Withdrawal. Sec. 76. At any time after electing to operate under the provisions of this act either party may withdraw such election, the employer by filing written notice with the board stating the date when such withdrawal is effective and the industry, business, or operation covered thereby, by personal written notice to the employee or posting in conspicuous places about such place of business not less than one week next preceding the date on which the same is to become effective copies of such notice of withdrawal; the employee desiring to withdraw such election shall file with the employer a written notice of withdrawal, stating the date when such withdrawal is to become effective. Following the filing or giving of such notices, the status of the party withdrawing shall become the same as if his former election had not been made: Provided, however, That withdrawal shall not be effective as to an injury sustained less than one week after the filing thereof.

An employer, while operating under the provisions of this act, shall at all times keep posted in conspicuous places about his place of business notices to that effect, in such form as may be prescribed by the board. Acceptance to be posted.

Sec. 76a. Every employer affected by the provisions of this act who does not elect to operate thereunder shall not, in any suit at law by an employee or his representative to recover damages for personal injury or death by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, be permitted to defend any such suit at law upon any or all of the following grounds: Defenses abrogated.

- (1) That the employee was guilty of contributory negligence.
- (2) That the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant of the injured employee.
- (3) That the employee has assumed the risk of injury.

Sec. 76b. Every employee affected by the provisions of this act who does not elect to operate thereunder, and his representative in case of death, shall, in any suit at law to recover damages for personal injury or death by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment against an employer electing to operate under the provisions of this act, proceed at law as if this act had not been enacted, and the employer may avail himself of the defenses of contributory negligence, negligence of a fellow servant, and assumption of risk as such defenses now exist at common law. Suits at law.

Sec. 77. No agreement by any employee to pay any portion of the insurance premium paid by his employer shall be valid, and any employer who deducts any portion of such premium from the wages or salary of any employee entitled to the benefits of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $100 for each offense. Payment of premiums.

Sec. 78. Upon the request of the board, the attorney general, or, under his direction, the Commonwealth's attorney or county attorney of any county, shall institute and prosecute the necessary actions or proceedings for the enforcement of any of the provisions of this act arising within the county or counties of their respective jurisdictions, and shall defend in like manner all suits, actions, or proceedings brought against the board or the members thereof in their official capacity. Prosecutions.

Sec. 79. The board shall prepare and furnish, free of charge, blank forms and provide its rules for their distribution, so that the same may be readily available, of all notices, claims, reports, proofs, and other blank forms and literature which it may deem proper and requisite to the efficient administration of this act. It may authorize the publication and distribution of such blanks by employers and their insurers in manner and form provided by it. Forms.

Sec. 80. Annually on or before the 15th day of December the board shall make a report to the governor for the preceding fiscal year, which shall include a statement of the number of awards made and of claims rejected by it, a general statement of the causes of accident leading to the injuries for which awards were made or rejected claims based, and a detailed statement of the disbursements from, and unpaid expenses chargeable against, the maintenance fund and its condition, together with any other information which the board deems proper to call to the attention of the governor, including any recommendations it may have to make, and it shall be the duty of the board to publish and distribute among employers and employees such general information as to the business transacted by the department as may be useful and necessary: Provided, however, That an abuse of such right to so publish and distribute information shall constitute political activity within the meaning of section 41 hereof. Annual reports.

The annual report shall not exceed 500 copies. All printing of the department shall be done by the contractor or contractors for public printing, subject to such provisions of the general laws governing public printing as may be applicable thereto, and shall be paid for out of any funds in the State treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Act in effect. SEC. 81. This act shall become effective on the 1st day of August, 1916, except as to sections 39 to 47, hereof, both inclusive, relating to the appointment of the board and their rights, powers, and duties, an emergency is declared to exist, and the same shall become effective on the 1st day of April, 1916.

Elections by employers and employees and contracts of insurance entered into in conformity with the provisions of this act, between April 1, 1916, and August 1, 1916, to become effective on or after August 1, 1916, shall be valid and enforceable.

Salaries and expenses. SEC. 82. For the purpose of paying the salaries and expenses of the board and its necessary employees in making preparation and putting this act into operation the sum of $7,500 is hereby appropriated, payable out of any funds in the State treasury not otherwise appropriated. All claims for salaries or expenses, when approved by resolution of the board, and countersigned by the chairman thereof, shall be presented to the auditor of public accounts, who shall issue his warrant in payment thereof. All such claims shall show to whom and for what service, material, or other things or reason such amounts are to be paid and shall be accompanied by voucher checks or receipts covering the same except as to items of less than $1.

Administrative fund. SEC. 83. For the purpose of paying the salaries and necessary expenses of the board and its assistants and employees in administering and carrying out the provisions of this act an administrative fund shall be created and maintained in the following manner:

Tax on premiums. SUBSECTION 1. Every person, partnership, association, corporation, whether organized under the laws of this or any other State or country, company, mutual company, or association, the parties to any interindemnity contract or reciprocal plan or scheme, and every other insurance carrier, insuring employers in the State against liability for personal injuries to their employees, or death caused thereby, under the provisions of this act, shall, as hereinafter provided, pay a tax upon the premiums received, whether in cash or notes, in this State or on account of business done in this State, for such insurance in this State, at the rate of 4 per cent of the amount of such premiums, which tax shall be in lieu of all other taxes on such premiums, which tax shall be assessed and collected as hereinafter provided: Provided, however, That such insurance carriers shall be credited with all canceled or returned premiums actually refunded during the year on such insurance, and with premiums, on reinsurance with companies authorized and licensed to transact business in Kentucky, which reinsurance shall be reported by the reinsurer; but no credit shall be allowed for reinsurance in companies not licensed to transact business in Kentucky.

Returns by insurers. SUBSEC. 2. Every such insurance carrier shall, for the six months ending October 31, 1916, for the eight months ending June 30, 1917, and annually thereafter, make a return verified by the affidavit of its president and secretary, or other chief officers or agents, to the commissioner of insurance, stating the amount of all such premiums and credits during the period covered by such return. Every insurance carrier required to make such return shall file the same with the commissioner of insurance within 30 days after the close of the period covered thereby and shall at the same time pay into the State treasury a tax of $4 on each $100 of such premium ascertained as provided in subsection 1 hereof, less returned premiums on canceled policies and reinsurance with other companies licensed to transact business in this State, and upon payment file a statement with the secretary of state. Upon receiving such payments the State treasurer shall place the whole thereof to the credit of the fund for the administration of this act.

Failure to pay. SUBSEC. 3. If any such insurance carrier shall fail or refuse to make the return required by this act, the said commissioner of insurance shall assess the tax against such insurance carrier at the rate herein provided for, on such amount of premiums as he may deem just, and the proceedings thereon shall be the same as if the return had been made.

SUBSEC. 4. If any such insurance carrier shall withdraw from business in this State before the tax shall fall due, as herein provided, or shall fail or neglect to pay such tax, the commissioner of insurance shall at once proceed to collect the same, and he is hereby empowered and authorized to employ such legal process as may be necessary for that purpose, and when so collected he shall pay the same into the State treasury. The suit may be brought by the commissioner of insurance, in his official capacity, in any court of this State having jurisdiction; reasonable attorney's fees may be taxed as costs therein, and process may issue to any county of the State, and may be served as in civil actions, or in cases of unincorporated associations, partnerships, interindemnity contracts, or other plan or scheme, upon the principal agent of the parties thereto.

Collection.

SUBSEC. 5. Any person or persons who shall in this State act or assume to act as agent for any such insurance carrier whose authority to do business in this State has been suspended, while such suspension remains in force, or shall neglect or refuse to comply with any of the provisions of this section obligatory upon such persons or party, or who shall willfully make a false or fraudulent statement of the business or condition of any such insurance carrier or false or fraudulent return as herein provided, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not less than 10 nor more than 90 days, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the jury.

Violations.

SUBSEC. 6. Whenever by this act any officer is required to give any notice to an insurance carrier, the same may be given by delivery or by mailing by registered letter properly addressed and stamped, to the principal office or chief agent of such insurance carrier within this State, or to its home office, or to the secretary, general agent, or chief officer thereof in the United States.

Notice.

SUBSEC. 7. Any insurance carrier liable to pay a tax upon premiums under this act shall not be liable to pay any other or further tax upon such premiums, or on account thereof, under any other law of this State.

One tax.

SUBSEC. 8. Every employer carrying his own risk under the provisions of section 63 shall, under oath, report to the board his pay roll subject to the provisions of this act. Such report shall be made in form prescribed by the board and at the times herein provided for premium reports by insurer. The board shall assess against such pay roll a maintenance fund tax computed by taking 4 per cent of the basic premiums chargeable against the same or most similar industry or business, taken from the manual insurance rates for compensation then in force in this State.

Self-insurers.

SUBSEC. 9. The board shall not be authorized to incur expenses or indebtedness during any period, chargeable against the maintenance fund, in excess of the premium tax payable to such fund for the same period. If it be ascertained that the tax collected for a given period exceeds the total expense chargeable against the maintenance fund under the provisions of this act, the board may authorize a corresponding credit upon collections for the succeeding period.

Limit on expenses.

SEC. 84. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, and of affording to employers a method of insuring their liability as required thereby, the Kentucky Employees' Insurance Association is hereby created a body corporate with the powers herein and with all the general corporate powers incident thereto.

Employees' insurance association.

SEC. 85. The board of directors of the association shall consist of 15 members thereof, three of whom shall be appointed by the governor, and 12 of whom shall be elected by ballot of the subscribers, in accordance with section 207 of the constitution. Of the original directors appointed by the governor, one shall be appointed for one year, one for two years, and one for three years; annually thereafter one director shall be appointed for a term of three years. Election of directors by the subscribers shall be held at such times and in such manner as the by-laws shall provide.

Directors.

- First meeting. Sec. 86. The appointed directors shall, within 30 days of the subscription of 25 employers, call the first meeting of the subscribers by a notice in writing mailed to each subscriber at his place of business not less than 10 days before the date fixed for the meeting.
- Powers of directors. Sec. 87. At the first meeting of the subscribers the remaining 12 directors shall be elected. The board of directors may thereafter exercise power as such and may adopt by-laws not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.
- Officers. Sec. 88. The board of directors shall annually choose by ballot a president, who shall be a member of the board, a secretary, a treasurer, and such other officers as the by-laws shall provide.
- Quorum. Sec. 89. Seven or more of the directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.
Vacancies in any office may be filled in such manner as the by-laws shall provide.
- Subscribers. Sec. 90. Any employer in the Commonwealth may become a subscriber.
- Votes. Sec. 91. In any meeting of the subscribers each subscriber shall be entitled to one vote, and if a subscriber has 250 employees to whom the association is bound to pay compensation he shall be entitled to two votes, and he shall be entitled to one additional vote for each additional 250 employees to whom the association is bound to pay compensation, but no subscriber shall cast by his own right or by the right of proxy more than 10 votes.
- Issue of policies. Sec. 92. No policy shall be issued by the association until [not] less than 50 employers have subscribed who have not less than 5,000 employees to whom the association may be bound to pay compensation.
- Matter to be filed. Sec. 93. No policy shall be issued until a list of the subscribers, with the number of employees of each, together with such other information as the insurance commissioner may require, shall have been filed at the insurance department, nor until the president and secretary of the association shall have certified under oath that every subscription in the list so filed is genuine and made with an agreement by every subscriber that he will take the policies subscribed for by him within 30 days of the granting of a license to the association by the insurance commissioner to issue policies.
- Classification. Sec. 94. The board of directors shall distribute the subscribers into groups in accordance with the nature of the business and the degree of the risk of injury.
Subscribers within each group shall annually pay in cash, or notes absolutely payable, such premiums as may be required to pay the compensation herein provided for the injuries which may occur in that year.
- Contingent liability. Sec. 95. The association may in its by-laws and policies fix the contingent mutual liability of the subscribers for the payment of losses and expenses not provided for by its cash funds; but such contingent liability of a subscriber shall not be less than an amount equal to and in addition to the cash premium.
- Assessments. Sec. 96. If the association is not possessed of cash funds above its unearned premiums sufficient for the payment of incurred losses and expenses, it shall make an assessment for the amount needed to pay such losses and expenses upon the subscriber liable to assessment therefor in proportion to their several liability.
Every subscriber shall pay his proportional part of any assessments which may be laid by the association, in accordance with law and his contract, on account of injuries sustained and expenses incurred while he is a subscriber.
- Dividends. Sec. 97. The board of directors may, from time to time, by vote, fix and determine the amount to be paid as a dividend upon policies expiring during each year after retaining sufficient sums to pay all the compensation which may be payable on account of injuries sustained and expenses incurred.
All premiums, assessments, and dividends shall be fixed by and for groups as heretofore provided in accordance with the experience of each group, but all the funds of the association and the contingent liability of all the subscribers shall be available for the payment of any claim against the association.

SEC. 98. Any proposed premium, assessment, dividend, or distribution of subscribers shall be filed with the insurance department and shall not take effect until approved by insurance commissioner after such investigation as he may deem necessary. Premiums, etc.;
to be approved.

SEC. 99. The board of directors shall make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations for the prevention of injuries on the premises of subscribers, and for this purpose the inspectors of the association shall have free access to all such premises during regular working hours. Rules.

Any subscriber or employee aggrieved by any such rule or regulation may petition the workmen's compensation board for a review, and it may affirm, amend, or annul the rule or regulation.

SEC. 100. If any officer of the association shall falsely make oath to any certificate required to be filed with the insurance commissioner he shall be guilty of perjury. Perjury.

SEC. 102. The rule of law requiring strict construction of statutes in derogation of the common law shall not be applicable to the provisions of this act. If any section or part thereof shall be held invalid, such partial invalidity shall not affect the act as a whole or any other section or part thereof. Construction.

Approved March 23, 1916.

LOUISIANA.

ACTS OF 1914.

No. 20.—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

SECTION 1. This act shall apply only to the following:

Scope of law.
Public employees.

1. Every person in the service of the State, or of any parish, town-ship, incorporated village or city, or other political subdivision, or incorporated public board or commission in this State authorized by law to hold property and to sue and be sued, under any appointment or contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, except an official of the State, or of any parish, township, incorporated village or city, or other political subdivision, or incorporated public board or commission in this State authorized by law to hold property and to sue and be sued; and for such employee and employer the payment of compensation, according to and under the terms, conditions, and provisions hereinafter set out in this act, shall be exclusive, compulsory, and obligatory: Provided, That one employed by a contractor who has contracted with the State, parish, township, incorporated village or city, or other political subdivision, or incorporated public board or commission in the State, through its proper representative, shall not be considered an employee of the State, parish, township, incorporated village or city, or other political subdivision, or incorporated public board or commission.

2. Every person performing services arising out of and incidental to his employment in the course of his employer's trade, business or occupation in the following hazardous trades, businesses, and occupations:

ployments.

(a) The operation, construction, repair, removal, maintenance and demolition of railways and railroads, vessels, boats, and other water crafts, terminal docks, street railways, factories, mills, including rice mills, cotton oil mills, sawmills, shingle mills, planing mills and syrup mills, power laundries, power bakeries, foundries, forges, smelters, blast furnaces, machine shops, coke-burning plants, lime-burning plants, bleaching works, dyeing works, potteries, phosphate and sulphur works, rendering works, slaughterhouses, meat-packing plants, ice plants, warehouses, marble or stone cutting or polishing plants, ship-building and ship-repairing plants and yards, mines, mining plants, quarries, oil, gas, sulphur, salt or other wells, heating plants, lighting plants, power plants, waterworks, pumping works, coal yards, lumber yards, building material yards, derricks, bridges, junk yards, malt houses, breweries, freight or passenger elevators, stockyards, harvesting machinery, thrashing machine, cotton gins, cotton compresses, sugarhouses, sugar and other refineries, sash and door factories, wood-working establishments, printing and photo-engraving establishments, book binding and general press work, skidders, engineering works; rigging or coaling of vessels, or loading or unloading the cargoes of vessels, logging and lumbering, storing ice, paving with asphalt or other molten material, excavating or grading with power machinery, or with the use of an explosive, working in compressed air, dredging, pile driving, boring, moving safes, chimney sweeping; the construction, installation, operation, alteration, removal or repair of wires, cables, switchboards or apparatus charged with electrical current; work in any of the building or metal trades in the erection, construction, extension, decoration, alteration, repair or demolition of any building or structural appurtenances. Any occupation entailing the manufacture, transportation, care of, use of, or regular proximity to dangerous quantities of gunpowder, dynamite, nitroglycerine and other like dangerous explosives. The installation, repair, erection, removal or operation of boilers, furnaces, engines, and other forms of machinery.

“Factory” means any premises wherein mechanical power is used in manufacturing, making, altering, adapting, ornamenting, finishing, repairing or renovating any article or articles for the purpose of trade or gain, or of the business carried on therein.

Definitions.

“Mine” means any opening into and beneath the surface of the earth for the purpose of extracting any mineral or minerals, and all underground workings, slopes, shafts, galleries, and tunnels, and other ways, cuts and openings connected therewith, including those in the course of being opened, sunk or driven; and includes also the appurtenant structures at or about the openings of a mine and any adjoining work place where the material from a mine is stored or prepared for use or shipment.

“Quarry” means any place, not a mine, including a bank or pit, where shell, stone, slate, clay, sand, gravel, or other material is dug or otherwise extracted from the earth or ground for the purpose of trade or harter or of the employer’s trade or business; and includes also the appurtenant structures at or about the openings of a quarry and any adjoining work-place where the material from a quarry is stored or prepared for use or shipment.

“Railways” and “Railroads” also includes work in or about depots, power houses, roundhouses, cars, locomotives, and all other appurtenances, and in private yards, terminals, switches, etc., and work on railroads for express companies.

3. If there be or arise any hazardous trade, business, or occupation or work other than these hereinabove enumerated, it shall come under the provisions of this act. The question of whether or not a trade, business, or occupation not named herein is hazardous may be determined by agreement between the employer and employee or by submission at the instance of either employer or employee to the judge of the court which shall have jurisdiction over the employer in a civil case. The decision of the court shall not be retroactive in its effect.

Employments not enumerated.

4. An employer and any employee in a trade, business, or occupation not specified in paragraph 2 of this section and any one engaged in a trade, business, or occupation that may not be determined to be hazardous under the operation of paragraph 3 of this section, may, prior to the accident, voluntarily contract in writing to come under the benefit and protection of the provisions of this act with the same force and effect as though they had been specifically included instead of omitted.

Voluntary contracts.

Sec. 2 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). If an employee employed as hereinabove set forth in paragraph 1 of section 1 (except an employee who shall be eliminated from the benefit of this act for the cause and reasons set forth in section 28 of this act) receives personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment his employer shall pay compensation in the amounts and to the person or persons hereinafter specified.

Compensation payable, when.

Sec. 3 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). This act, except sections 4 and 5, relating to defenses, shall not apply to any employer or employee engaged in any trade, business, or occupation specified in paragraph 2 of section 1, or in any that may be determined to be hazardous under the operation of paragraph 3 of section 1, unless prior to the injury they shall have so elected by agreement, either expressed or implied, as hereinafter provided. Such an agreement shall be a surrender by the parties thereto of their rights as against each other to any method, form, or amount of compensation, or damages, or determination thereof other than as provided in this act, and shall bind the employee himself, his widow, and relatives, personal representatives, heirs, and dependents as hereinafter defined, as well as the employer and those conducting his business during bankruptcy and insolvency.

Election.

2. [Obsolete.]

3. Every contract of hiring, verbal, written, or implied between an employer or any employee engaged in any trade, business, or occupation specified in paragraph 2 of section 1, or engaged in any trade, business, or occupation that may be determined to be hazardous under the operation of paragraph 3 of section 1, made subsequent to the time provided for this act to take effect, shall be presumed to have been made subject to the provisions of this act, unless there be as a part of said contract an express statement in writing either in the contract itself or by Presumption as to contracts.

- written notice by either party to the other, that the provisions of this act other than sections 4 and 5 are not intended to apply, and it shall be presumed that the parties have elected to be subject to the provisions of this act and to be bound thereby, unless such election be terminated as hereinafter provided.
- Termination of agreements. 4. Any agreement or election, either express or implied, or presumed under the provisions of paragraph 2 or paragraph 3 of this section, between an employer and any employee engaged in any trade, business, or occupation specified in paragraph 2 of section 1, or engaged in any trade, business, or occupation that may be determined to be hazardous under the operation of paragraph 3 of section 1, for the operation of the provisions of this act may be terminated by either party to the contract of hiring giving written notice not less than thirty days prior to the accident to the other party of such contract that the provisions of this act other than sections 4 and 5 shall no longer apply.
- Waiver of election. 5. Either an employee who has given notice to his employer in writing as aforesaid or an employer who had given notice to his employee in writing as aforesaid that he elects not to be subject to the provisions of this act, may waive such election by a notice in writing which shall take effect immediately.
- Minors above 18. 6. Any employee of the age of eighteen and upwards engaged in any trade, business or occupation specified in paragraph 2 of section 1, or engaged in any trade, business or occupation that may be determined to be hazardous under the operation of paragraph 3 of section 1, shall himself exercise the right of election or termination or waiver authorized by this section. Such right of election or termination or waiver shall be exercised on behalf of any employee under the age of eighteen by either his father, mother, or tutor, or if neither of these can readily be gotten to act, then by the court: Provided, That this act shall not apply to employees of less than the minimum age prescribed by law for the employment of minors in the trades, businesses, or occupations specified in paragraph 2 of section 1, or that may be determined to be hazardous under the operation of paragraph 3 of section 1.
- Notice to parents. 7. Where notice is to be served upon one who is under the age of eighteen years, said notice must be served upon either the father, mother, or tutor of the said individual under the age of eighteen years.
- Abrogation of defenses. SEC. 4 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). If an employee has elected as aforesaid to come under this act and his employer has elected as aforesaid not to come under this act, then if an action is brought by the employee or his dependents to recover for personal injury sustained by the employee and arising out of and in the course of his employment, after such election by the employer, it shall not be a defense:
- (a) That the employee assumed the risks inherent to or incidental to or arising out of his employment, or the risks arising from the failure of the employer to provide and maintain a reasonably safe place to work or arising from the failure of the employer to furnish reasonably safe tools and appliances, or that the employer exercised reasonable care in selecting reasonably competent employees in the trade, business, or occupation.
- (b) That the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee.
- (c) That the employee was negligent.
- And it shall be presumed that the injury to the employee was the direct result and arose out of the negligence of the employer, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury; and in such case the burden of proof shall rest upon the employer to rebut the presumption of negligence, unless before the injury such election shall have been waived as provided in paragraph 5 of section 3.
- Defenses available, when. SEC. 5 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). If an employer has elected as aforesaid to come under this act, and his employee has elected as aforesaid not to come under this act, then if an action is brought by the employee or his dependent to recover damages for personal injury sustained by the employee and arising out of and in the course of his employment, after such election by the employee, the employer shall have all the defenses which he would have had if this act had not been enacted, unless before the injury such election shall have [been] waived as provided in paragraph 5 of section 3.

SEC. 6 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. Where any person (in this section referred to as principal) undertakes to execute any work, which is a part of his trade, business, or occupation or which he had contracted to perform, and contracts with any other person (in this section referred to as contractor) for the execution by or under the contractor of the whole or any part of the work undertaken by the principal, the principal shall be liable to pay to any employee employed in the execution of the work or his dependent any compensation under this act which he would have been liable to pay if that employee had been immediately employed by him; and where compensation is claimed from or proceedings are taken against the principal, then, in the application of this act, reference to the principal shall be substituted for reference to the employer, except that the amount of compensation shall be calculated with reference to the earnings of the employee under the employer by whom he is immediately employed.

Employees of contractors.

2. Where the principal is liable to pay compensation under this section, he shall be entitled to indemnity from any person who would have been liable to pay compensation to the employee or his dependent independently of this section and shall have a cause of action therefor.

3. Nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing an employee or his dependent from recovering compensation under this act from the contractor instead of from the principal.

4. A principal contractor, when sued by an employee of a subcontractor or his dependent, shall have the right to call in that subcontractor or any intermediate contractor or contractors as defendant or codefendant.

SEC. 7 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). When an injury for which compensation is payable under this act shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employee or his dependent may, at his option, either claim compensation under this act or obtain damages from or proceed at law against such other person to recover damages; and if compensation is claimed and awarded under this act an employer having paid the compensation or having become liable therefor shall be subrogated to the rights of the injured employee or his dependent to recover against that person, and may compromise the claim therefor in his discretion: Provided, If the employer shall recover from such other person damages in excess of the compensation already paid or awarded to be paid under this act then any such excess shall be paid to the injured employee or his dependent less the employer's legitimate and reasonable expenses and costs of the action, which payment shall be credited upon the balance of compensation, if any, that may become due thereafter.

Liability of third persons.

SEC. 8 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. For injury producing disability compensation shall be paid under this act to an injured employee in accordance with the following schedule of payments:

Compensation for—

(a) For injury producing temporary total disability to do work of any reasonable character, fifty-five per centum of wages during the period of disability, not, however, beyond three hundred weeks.

Temporary total disability;

(b) For the loss of both hands, or both feet, or both eyes, or one hand and one foot, or any injury producing permanent total disability to do work of any reasonable character, fifty-five per centum of wages during the period of disability, not, however, beyond four hundred weeks.

Permanent total disability;

(c) For injury producing partial disability to do work of any reasonable character, fifty-five per centum of difference between wages at the time of the injury and wages which the injured employee is able to earn thereafter during the period of disability, not, however, beyond three hundred weeks.

Partial disability.

(d) In the following cases the compensation shall be as follows:

For the loss of a thumb, fifty-five per centum of wages during fifty weeks.

Schedule.

For the loss of a first finger, commonly called the index finger, fifty-five per centum of wages during thirty weeks.

For the loss of any other finger, or a great toe, fifty-five per centum of wages during twenty weeks.

For the loss of any toe other than a great toe, fifty-five per centum of wages during ten weeks.

For the loss of a hand, fifty-five per centum of wages during one hundred and fifty weeks.

For the loss of an arm, fifty-five per centum of wages during two hundred weeks.

For the loss of a foot, fifty-five per centum of wages during one hundred and twenty-five weeks.

For the loss of a leg, fifty-five per centum of wages during one hundred and seventy-five weeks.

For the loss of an eye, fifty-five per centum of wages during one hundred weeks.

The loss of the first phalanx of a thumb, or of two phalanges of any finger, or toe, shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such member, and the compensation shall be one-half of the amount above specified.

The loss of more than one phalanx of a thumb or more than two phalanges of any finger or toe shall be considered as the loss of the entire member: Provided, however, That in no case shall the amount received for more than one finger exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a hand, or the amount received for the loss of more than one toe exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a foot.

Amputation between the elbow and the wrist shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a hand, and amputation between the knee and the ankle shall be equivalent to the loss of a foot.

Disfigurement. (e) In cases not falling within any of the provisions already made, where the employee is seriously permanently disfigured about the face or head, or where the usefulness of a member or any physical function is seriously permanently impaired, the court may allow such compensation as is reasonable in proportion to the compensation hereinabove specifically provided in the cases of specific disabilities above named, not to exceed fifty-five per centum of wages during one hundred weeks.

Death. 2. For injury causing death within one year after the accident weekly compensation shall be paid under this act for a period of three hundred weeks to the following persons:

(a) If widow or widower alone, and no children, then to such widow or widower twenty-five per centum of wages.

(b) If widow or widower and one child, then to such widow or widower and child for their joint benefit, forty per centum of wages.

(c) If widow or widower and two or more children, then to such widow or widower and children for their joint benefit, fifty-five per centum of wages.

(d) If one child alone and no widow or widower, then to such child twenty-five per centum of wages.

(e) If two children and no widow or widower, then to such children forty per centum of wages.

(f) If three or more children and no widow or widower, then to such children fifty-five per centum of wages.

(g) If there be neither widow or widower nor child, then to the father or mother of the deceased employee if actually dependent on the deceased employee to any extent for support at the time of the injury and death, twenty-five per centum of wages; if in such event both the father and the mother of the deceased survive and were actually dependent on the deceased employee to any extent for support at the time of the injury and death, fifty-five per centum of wages for their joint benefit.

(h) If there be neither widow or widower nor children nor dependent parent surviving the deceased employee entitled to compensation, then to the brothers and sisters and other members of the family of the deceased employee not hereinabove specifically provided for, if such brother or sister or other member of the family not otherwise specifically provided for was actually dependent on the deceased employee for support to any extent at the time of the injury and death, twenty-five per centum of wages for one brother or sister or other dependent member of the family not otherwise provided for, and ten per centum additional for each additional brother or sister or other dependent member of the family not otherwise provided for, subject to a maximum of fifty-five per centum of wages.

(i) Whenever under this schedule compensation is due to several persons in the same class, it shall be equally divided among them; and where the aggregate of such compensation would exceed fifty-five per centum of wages were the maximum limit not imposed, the compensation due each individual shall be abated proportionately so as to bring the total compensation within the limit.

(j) Where there is a surviving widow or widower and a child or children entitled to compensation, the compensation above described shall be paid entirely to the widow or widower for the common benefit of such widow or widower and the child or children, and the appointment of a tutor shall not be necessary. Where there is no surviving parent, payment shall be made to the duly appointed tutor.

(k) Compensation shall be payable under this schedule to or on account of any child or brother or sister or other dependent member of the family not otherwise specifically provided for, only if and while such child, brother, sister, or other dependent member of the family not otherwise specifically provided for, is under the age of eighteen years, unless such child, brother, sister or other dependent member of the family is mentally or physically incapacitated from earning a living.

(l) No compensation shall be payable under this schedule to a widow unless she be living with her deceased husband at the time of injury and death, or be then actually dependent upon him for support. No compensation shall be payable under this schedule to a widower unless he be living with his deceased wife at the time of injury and death or be at such time incapable of self-support and actually dependent upon her for support.

(m) The terms "child" and "children" shall cover only legitimate children or acknowledged illegitimate children, but shall include step-children, posthumous children and adopted children. The terms "brother" and "sister" shall include stepbrothers and stepsisters, and brothers and sisters by adoption.

(n) In all cases provided for in this schedule the relation of dependency must exist at the time of the injury and at the time of the death.

(o) Should any dependent of a deceased employee die, or should the widow or widower remarry, or should the widower become capable of self-support, or should any dependent not physically or mentally incapacitated from earning a living pass beyond the age of eighteen years, the payments of the portion of the compensation theretofore due such dependent or widow or widower shall cease. If the compensation payable under this schedule to any person shall, for any cause, cease, the compensation to the remaining persons entitled hereunder shall thereafter be the same for the unexpired part of the period during which their compensation is payable as would have been payable to them had they been the only persons entitled to compensation at the time of the death of the deceased employee.

(p) When weekly payments have been made to an employee before his death, the compensation for dependents as provided for in this schedule shall begin on the date of the last of such payments, and shall not continue for more than three hundred weeks from the date of injury.

3. The term "wages" as used in this act is defined to mean the daily rate of pay at which the service rendered by the injured employee is recompensed under the contract of hiring in force at the time of the injury, and anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding, the maximum compensation to be paid under this act shall be sixteen dollars per week and the minimum compensation shall be three dollars per week: Provided, That if at the time of the injury the employee was receiving wages at the rate of three dollars or less per week, then the compensation shall be full wages.

Payments
cease, when.

Wages.

Waiting time. 4. No compensation shall be paid for the first week after the injury is received, nor in any case unless the employer is notified thereof within the period specified in section 11: Provided, however, That in cases where disability from injury continues for six weeks or longer after the injury is received, then after six weeks have elapsed compensation for the first week shall be paid.

Medical, etc., aid. 5. The employer shall in every case furnish the employee reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital service and medicines not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars in value, unless the employee refuses to allow them to be furnished by the employer, and in every case of death, the employer shall pay or cause to be paid the reasonable expenses of the burial of the employee, not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Burial.

Voluntary payments. 6. Any voluntary payments made by the employer or his insurer to the injured employee, during the period of his disability, or to his dependents, which, by the terms of this act, were not due and payable when paid, may, subject to the approval of the court, be deducted from the amount to be paid as compensation: Provided, That in case of disability such deduction shall be made by shortening the period during which compensation shall be paid, and not by reducing the amount of the weekly payments.

Time, etc., of payments. 7. Payments of compensation under this act shall be paid as near as may be at the same times and places as wages were payable to the injured employee before the accident; but a longer interval may be substituted by agreement, with the approval of the court.

Lump sums. 8. The amounts payable as compensation may be commuted to a lump-sum settlement at any time by agreement of the parties if approved by the court as solely and clearly in the interest of the employee or his dependent: Provided, That in making such lump-sum settlement the payments due the employee or his dependent under this act shall not be discounted at a rate greater than six per centum per annum. If such lump-sum settlement be made without the approval of the court, or at a discount greater than six per centum per annum even if approved by the court, the employee or his dependents shall be at all times entitled to demand and receive from the employer such additional payments as may be due under this act, but upon the payment of such lump-sum settlement, discounted at not more than six per centum per annum and with the approval of the court, the liability under this act of the employer making such payment shall be fully satisfied.

Medical examinations. SEC. 9 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. An injured employee shall submit himself to examination by a duly qualified medical practitioner provided and paid for by the employer, as soon after the accident as demanded, and from time to time thereafter, as often as may be reasonably necessary and at reasonable hours and places, during the pendency of his claim for compensation or during the receipt by him of payment under this act.

2. It shall be the duty of the employer to cause such examination, provided for in paragraph 1 of this section, to be made of the injured employee immediately after knowledge or notice of the accident, and to serve a copy of the report by his medical practitioner of such examination upon the employee within six days after such examination. If no such examination be made and report furnished by the employer within that time, the employee shall furnish a report of the examination made by his medical practitioner to the employer, for which the employee shall be entitled to receive from the employer the sum of one dollar. Upon the receipt by either party of such a report from the other party, the party receiving it, if he disputes such report or any statement therein, shall notify the other party of that fact within six days, otherwise such report shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated in subsequent proceedings under this act.

3. If there be any dispute thereafter as to the condition of the employee, the court, upon application of either party, shall order an examination of the employee to be made by a medical practitioner appointed by the court at not to exceed ten dollars, and shall be paid in advance by the applicant. Such medical examiner shall report his conclusions from such examination to the court, and such report shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated in any subsequent proceedings under this act.

Sec. 10 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). If the employee refuses to submit himself to a medical examination as provided in section 9, or in anywise obstructs the same, his right to compensation and to take or prosecute any further proceedings under this act shall be suspended until such examination takes place. And, when a right to compensation is suspended no compensation shall be payable in respect of the period of suspension.

Refusal to submit.

Sec. 11 (as amended by act No. 243, acts of 1916). 1. No proceeding under this act for compensation shall be maintained unless notice of the injury shall be given to the employer within six months after the day of injury or death. Such notice may be given or made by any person claiming to be entitled to compensation, or by some one in his behalf.

Notice.

Sec. 12 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). It shall be the duty of the employer to cause to have printed and to keep posted at some convenient and conspicuous point about the place of business a notice reading substantially as follows: "In case of accidental injury or death the injured employee or some person claiming to be entitled to compensation or some one acting in behalf of the injured employee or person claiming to be entitled to compensation must give notice to (here shall follow the name and address of the party) within six months, and unless notice be given to the above party within six months, no payments will be made under the law for such injury or death." In the event of the failure of the employer to keep posted said notice, the time in which notice of the injury shall be given as provided in section 11 shall be extended to twelve months from the date of injury.

Statement to be posted.

Sec. 13 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). The notice provided for in section 11 shall be made in writing and shall contain the name and address of the employee, and shall state in ordinary language the time, place, nature, and cause of the injury, and shall be signed by the person giving or making same. The notice may include the claim.

Form of notice.

Sec. 14 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). Any notice or claim under this act shall be given to the employer. If the employer be a partnership, then the notice may be given to any one of the partners. If the employer be a corporation, then the notice may be given to any agent of the corporation on whom process may be served, or to any officer of the corporation, or any agent in charge of the business at the place where the injury occurred. If the employer be a body politic then the notice may be given to the individual connected with said body politic upon whom process may be served: Provided, however, That in any case notice of accident may be given to the person designated in the notice posted in accordance with section 12. Any such notice shall be given by delivering it or by sending it by mail by registered letter addressed to the employer or his or its hereinbefore designated officer or agent at his or its last known residence or place of business.

To whom given.

Sec. 15. A notice given under the provisions of section 11 of this act shall not be held invalid or insufficient by reason of any inaccuracy in stating the time, place, nature, or cause of the injury, or otherwise, unless it is shown that the employer was in fact misled to his injury thereby. Want of notice or delay in giving notice shall not be a bar to proceedings under this act if it be shown that the employer, or his agent or representative, had knowledge of the accident, or that the employer has not been prejudiced by such delay or want of notice.

Sufficiency.

Sec. 16 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. In case an injured employee is mentally incompetent or a minor or where death results from the injury, in case any of his dependents as herein defined is mentally incompetent or a minor, at the time when any right, privilege, or election accrues to him under this act, his duly qualified curator or tutor, as the case may be, may, in his behalf, claim and exercise such right, privilege, or election, and no limitation of time, in this act provided for, shall run, so long as such incompetent or minor has no curator or tutor as the case may be.

Payments valid. 2. Payment of compensation under this section by an employer to a dependent subsequent in right to another or other dependents shall protect and discharge the employer unless and until such dependent or dependents prior in right shall have given the employer notice of his or their claim. In case the employer is in doubt as to the respective rights of rival claimants the employer may apply to the court to decide between them.

Agreements. SEC. 17 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). The interested parties shall have the right to settle all matters of compensation between themselves. But all agreements of settlement shall be reduced to writing and shall be substantially in accord with the various provisions of this act, and shall be approved by the court. The agreement between employer and employee or his dependent shall be presented to the court upon joint petition of employer and employee or his dependent, which petition must be verified by both parties. The settlement so approved shall be immediately entered as the judgment of the court, and such judgment shall have the same force and effect and may be satisfied as other judgments of the same court.

Reference to court. SEC. 18. 1. In case of a dispute over, or failure to agree upon a claim for compensation between employer and employee, or the dependents of the employee, either party may present a verified complaint to the judge of the court which would have jurisdiction in a civil case, or, where there is more than one judge of said court, then to either or any of said judges of such court, setting forth the names and residences of the parties and the facts relating to employment at the time of injury, the character and extent of the injury, the amount of wages being received at the time of the injury, the knowledge of the employer or notice of the occurrence of said injury, and such other facts as may be necessary and proper for the information of said judge, and shall state the matter or matters in dispute and the contention of the petitioner with reference thereto.

Hearings. 2. Upon the presentation of such complaint it shall be filed with the clerk of the court and the judge shall fix by order a time and place for the hearing thereof, not less than three (3) weeks after the date of the filing of said complaint. A copy of said complaint and order shall be served as summons in a civil action upon the adverse party within four (4) days after filing the complaint; within seven (7) days after the service of such complaint or petition the adverse party shall file an answer to said petition, which shall admit or deny the substantial averments of the petition, and shall state the contention of the defendant with reference to the matter in dispute as disclosed by the petition. The answer shall be verified in like manner as required for a complaint or petition. The court in its discretion may grant further time for filing the answer or hearing the complaint and allow amendments of said petition and answer at any stage of the proceedings.

Procedure. 3. If the time fixed for filing answer or delay, granted for filing answer by the respondent, has elapsed without an answer having been filed, then upon simple request of petitioner the judge of the court with whom the complaint or petition has been filed shall immediately enter a judgment in favor of petitioner in accord with the facts set forth in the verified petition filed by petitioner and the provisions of this act.

4. If an answer has been filed by the respondent within the delays allowed by law or granted by the court, or if no judgment has been entered as provided in the paragraph immediately above at the time fixed for hearing, or any adjournment thereof, the said judge shall hear such witnesses as may be presented by each party. Either party shall [have] the right to be present at any hearing or to appear through an attorney or any other agent. The judge shall not be bound by the usual common law or statutory rules of evidence or by any technical or formal rules of procedure other than as herein provided. The judge shall decide the merits of the controversy as equitably, summarily and simply as may be. Costs may be awarded by said judge in his discretion, and when so awarded the same costs shall be allowed, taxed, and collected as are allowed, taxed, and collected for like services and proceedings in civil cases. The judgment rendered by the court shall have the same force and effect and may be satisfied as other judgments of the same court.

Sec. 19. 1. Either the employer or employee shall have the right to appeal to the proper appellate court from the judgment rendered as provided in paragraph 3 of section 1, and in section 18. To such an appeal preference in hearing shall be given by the appellate court such as is given in causes in which the State is an interested party. Such appeal may be prosecuted by either employer or employee without the necessity of furnishing an appeal bond and shall suspend the operation of the judgment appealed from.

Sec. 20 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. A judgment of compensation may be modified at any time by subsequent agreement between employer and employee or his dependent, with the approval of the judge of the court that rendered the judgment sought to be modified, or any time after one year after said judgment of compensation shall have become operative, it may be reviewed by the judge of the court that rendered the judgment sought to be modified upon the application of either employer or employee, on the ground that the incapacity of the injured employee has subsequently diminished or increased, such increase growing directly out of the injury for which compensation has been allowed. In such case the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 3 of section 9 with reference to medical examination shall apply.

Sec. 21 (as amended by act No. 243, acts of 1916). 1. All rights of compensation granted by this act shall have the same preference and priority for the whole thereof against the assets of the employer as is allowed by law for any unpaid wages of the laborer. If it should be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court in which a judgment for compensation has been rendered that there is reasonable room for uncertainty as to the financial responsibility of an employer against whom a judgment of compensation has been finally rendered, and that such employer has not taken out insurance against his liability under this act, the court may order such employer to furnish a bond, with good and solvent surety, conditioned for the faithful payment of the compensation decreed to be paid. From an order so rendered the employer may appeal to the proper appellate court as provided in section 19.

Sec. 22. 1. Claims or payments due under this act shall not be assignable and shall be exempt from all claims of creditors and from levy or execution or attachment or garnishment except under a judgment of court for alimony in favor of a wife or ascendant or descendant. Fees of attorneys and physicians for services under this act shall be reasonable and measured according to the workman's station and shall be approved by the court.

Sec. 23. 1. No policy of insurance against liability arising under this act shall be issued unless it contains the agreement of the insurer that it will promptly pay to the person entitled to compensation all installments of the compensation that may be awarded or agreed upon, and that the obligation shall not be affected by any default of the insured after the injury, or by any default in the giving of any notice required by such policy, or otherwise. Such agreement shall be construed to be a direct obligation by the insurer to the person entitled to compensation, enforceable in his name. No policy of insurance against liability under this act shall be made unless such policy shall cover the entire liability of the employer under this act.

Sec. 24. 1. All policies insuring the payment of compensation under this act must contain a clause to the effect that as between the employee and the insurer the notice to the insured or the knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the insured shall be deemed to be notice or knowledge on the part of the insurer, as the case may be, that the jurisdiction of the insured for the purpose of this act shall be the jurisdiction of the insurer; and that the insurer shall in all things be bound by and subject to the awards, judgments, or decrees rendered against such insured.

Sec. 25. 1. If any employer shall carry insurance against liability under this act, and said employer shall be or become insolvent, or any execution upon a judgment for compensation is returned unsatisfied, an employee of such employer, or the dependents of a deceased em- ployee who shall be entitled to payments under this act may enforce their claim to payments against the insurer of such employer to the same extent that the employer could have enforced his claim against such insurer had he made such payments, any provision contained in any policy or agreement of insurance written after the date of the approval of this act to the contrary notwithstanding. And the making of accrued payments to the person entitled thereto, in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall relieve such insurer from liability.

- Policies subject to act. SEC. 26. 1. Every policy for the insurance of the compensation herein provided for, or against liability therefor, shall be deemed to be made subject to the provisions of this act. No company or association shall enter into any such policy of insurance unless its form shall have been approved by secretary of state of Louisiana.
- Additional benefits. SEC. 27 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. An employer and employee who have elected to come under the provisions of this act or who may be under the provision of this act as provided for in paragraph 1, section 1, may by written agreement between themselves provide for compensation, in event of injury to an employee, over and above the compensation to be awarded under the provisions of this act. Such additional compensation may be provided for by the employer insuring his liability therefor in any insurance company or association authorized to do business in the State of Louisiana; and the premium therefor must be paid by the employer.
- Injuries not compensated. SEC. 28. 1. No compensation shall be allowed for an injury caused (1) by the injured employee's willful intention to injure himself or to injure another, or (2) by the injured employee's intoxication at the time of the injury, or (3) by the injured employee's deliberate failure to use an adequate guard or protection against accident provided for him, or (4) by the employee's deliberate breach of statutory regulations affecting safety of life or limb.
2. In determining whether or not an employer shall be exempt from and relieved of paying compensation because of injury sustained by an employee for the causes and reasons set forth in this section, the burden of proofs shall be upon [upon] the employer.
- Bonds of tutors, etc. SEC. 29. 1. Where a judgment has been rendered under the provisions of this act in favor of a minor or interdict, the tutor or curator shall be required by the court to furnish a bond in favor of the court for the faithful performance of his duties, and shall be required by the court to furnish it annually with a report or accounting of the funds the said tutor or curator may be administering for the said minor or interdict. This report or accounting of the tutor or curator is not to be of the nature of the report of the tutor or curator required to be filed under existing laws, but it is to be a simple verified statement of the receipts of the tutor or curator with a detailed accounting of the expenditures.
- Interstate carriers. SEC. 30. 1. This act shall not be construed to apply to any employer acting as a common carrier while engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, which employer, by reason of being engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, is not subject exclusively to the legislative power of the State of Louisiana, or for which employer and the employee thereof a rule of liability or method of compensation has been, or may be, established by the Congress of the United States; nor shall it apply to any employee of such common carrier injured or killed while so employed; and nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to any work done by, nor shall any compensation be payable under this act to, the master, officers, or any member of the crew of any vessel used in interstate or foreign commerce which said vessel is not registered or enrolled in the State of Louisiana.
2. Whenever an employee of a common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad shall sustain a personal injury by accident, arising out of and in the course of his employment, resulting in his disability or death, it shall be presumed prima facie that such employer was, at the time of the accident, engaged in such commerce.
- Limitation of one year. SEC. 31. 1. In case of personal injury (including death resulting therefrom) all claims for payments shall be forever barred unless within one year after the injury or death the parties shall have agreed upon the payments to be made under this act, or unless within one year after injury proceedings have been begun as provided in sections 17 and 18 of this act. Where, however, such payments have been made in any case, said limitations shall not take effect until the expiration of one year from the time making the last payment.

SEC. 32. 1. In case any employee for whose injury or death payments are due under this act shall at the time of the injury be employed and paid jointly by two or more employers subject to the provisions of this act, such employers shall contribute to such payments in proportion to their several wage liabilities to such employee: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall prevent any arrangement between such employers for different distribution as between themselves of the ultimate burden of such payments. If one or more, but not all such employers should be subject to this act, then the liability of such of them as are so subject shall be to pay that proportion of the entire payments which their proportionate wage liability bears to the entire wages of the employee: Provided, however, That such payment by such employer subject to this act shall not bar the right of recovery against any other joint employer.

Two or more employers.

SEC. 33 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. In the event the employer against whom there has been rendered a judgment of court awarding compensation in favor of any employee or his dependent should become insolvent or fail to pay six successive installments as they become due, the installments not yet payable under said judgment shall immediately become due and exigible and the judgment shall become executory for the whole amount: Provided, That if the employee or his dependent is adequately protected by insurance and and receives payments thereunder this right shall not accrue.

Failure to pay installments.

SEC. 34 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. The rights and remedies herein granted to an employee or his dependent on account of a personal injury for which he is entitled to compensation under this act shall be exclusive of all other rights and remedies of such employee, his personal representatives, dependents, relations, or otherwise, on account of such injury.

Remedies exclusive.

SEC. 35. 1. Nothing in this act shall affect the liability of the employer to a fine or penalty under any other statute.

Other statutes.

SEC. 36. 1. No contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever shall operate to relieve the employer, in whole or in part, from any liability created by this act except as herein provided.

Waivers.

SEC. 37. 1. If for the purpose of obtaining or defeating any benefit or payment under the provisions of this act, either for himself or any other person, any person willfully makes a false statement or representation, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars or imprisoned not exceeding twelve months, or both, in the discretion of the court; and an employee from and after such conviction shall cease to receive any compensation under this act.

Deception.

SEC. 38 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). 1. The word "accident" as used in this act shall, unless a different meaning is clearly indicated by the context, be construed to mean an unexpected or unforeseen event happening, suddenly or violently, with or without human fault and producing at the time objective symptoms of an injury. The terms "injury" and "personal injuries" shall include only injuries by violence to the physical structure of the body and such diseases or infections as naturally result therefrom. The said terms shall in no case be construed to include any other form of disease or derangement, howsoever caused or contracted.

Definitions.

SEC. 39 (as amended by act No. 38, acts of 1918). The word "dependent" as used in this act shall, unless a different meaning is clearly indicated by the context, be construed to mean the person or persons, to whom under the provisions of section 8 compensation shall be paid upon the death of the injured employee. The word "court" as used in section 37 of this act means the criminal court having jurisdiction of the person making the false statement or representation, but wherever else used in this act, the word "court" shall be construed to mean the court which shall have jurisdiction over the employer in a civil case involving more than one hundred dollars, unless said court shall not have jurisdiction on account of the amount involved in which event it shall mean the court having jurisdiction, or where there is more than one judge of said court, then either or any of said judges of said court.

Use of words.

SEC. 40. 1. Whenever in this act the singular is used, the plural shall be included; where the masculine gender is used, the feminine shall be included.

Provisions severable.

SEC. 41. 1. If any provision of this act shall be declared unconstitutional or invalid, such unconstitutionality or invalidity shall in no way affect the validity of any other portion thereof which can be given reasonable effect without the provision so declared unconstitutional or invalid.

ACTS OF 1918.

ACT No. 37.—Commission on compensation insurance.

Appointment.

A committee of five, two from the Senate and three from the House of Representatives, shall be appointed by the presiding officer of each house, respectively, for the purpose of investigating and taking into consideration the establishment of an industrial insurance commission or some similar commission for the purpose of providing for the insurance of employees under the workman's compensation act and other insurance of a like character; also to consider the advisability of the State carrying the insurance on all public buildings in the State of Louisiana and report its findings to the next general assembly.

Duties.

Said committee shall investigate the laws of other States and the workings of all such departments, showing a saving, if any, to employers as well as employees and shall have full authority to conduct these investigations in any way that it sees proper and report its findings fully as provided for herein.

Approved June 27, 1918.

Deductions for premiums.

SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful for any employer, either person, firm, association, or corporation, or his or its agent or representative, to collect from any of its employees directly or indirectly either by way of deduction from such employee's wages, salary, or compensation, or otherwise, any amount whatever, or to demand, request, or accept any amount from any employee, either for the purpose of paying the premium in whole or in part on any liability or compensation insurance of any kind whatever on behalf of any employee or to reimburse such employer in whole or in part for any such premium or for the premium on any insurance against any liability whatever to any employee or for the purpose of the employer carrying any such insurance for the employer's own account, or to demand or request of any employee that such employee make any payment or contribution for any such purpose to any other person, firm, association or corporation: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent any employer from carrying his or its own insurance towards his or its own employees: And provided, That nothing herein shall apply to an employer qualified under the laws of this State to engage in the liability insurance business.

Violations.

SEC. 2. Any person, firm, or corporation violating any provision of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding five hundred ($500) dollars, or by imprisonment in the parish prison or jail not exceeding a year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

ACTS OF 1919.

CHAPTER 238.—Compensation of workmen for injuries.

SECTION 1. The first fifty sections of this chapter [ch. 50 of the Revised Statutes of 1916] shall be known, and may be cited, and referred to in proceedings and agreements thereunder, as "The workmen's compensation act"; the phrase "this act," as used in said sections, refers thereto.

Title.

The following words and phrases as used in the first fifty sections of this chapter, shall, unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context, have the following meaning:

Definitions.

I. "Employer" shall include corporations, partnerships, natural persons, the State, counties, water districts and all other quasi-municipal corporations of a similar nature, cities, and also such towns as vote to accept the provisions of this act; and if employer is insured, it includes the insurer unless the contrary intent is apparent from the context or it is inconsistent with the purposes of this act.

Employer.

II. "Employee" shall include every person in the service of another under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, except: (a) farm laborers; (b) domestic servants; (c) masters of and seamen on vessels engaged in interstate or foreign commerce; (d) person whose employment is but casual, or is not in the usual course of the trade, business, profession, or occupation of his employer; (e) officials of the State, counties, cities, towns or water districts and other quasi municipal corporations of a similar character. Policemen and firemen shall be deemed employees within the meaning of this act. If, however, any policeman or fireman claims compensation under this act, there shall be deducted from such compensation any sum which such policeman, fireman, or other person may be entitled to receive from any pension or other benefit fund to which the State or municipal body may contribute; (f) except that any town or city may, in lieu of the compensation and insurance provided by this act, continue any member of the fire department or police force in said town, who may have been injured in the course of his duties, on the pay roll at full pay, if such full pay exceeds the maximum compensation provided for employees under this act. Any reference to an employee who has been injured shall, when the employee is dead, also include his legal representatives, dependents, and other persons to whom compensation may be payable. (g) All persons employed by the State or under the direction and control of any department of the State shall be entitled to the benefits of chapter fifty of the revised statutes. The governor and council shall order such compensation as shall be assessed paid from the State contingent fund.

Employee.
Exceptions.

Policemen and firemen.

Employees of State.

III. "Assenting employer" shall include all employers who have complied with the provisions of section six hereof, and to whom a certificate authorized by said section has been issued, but only so long as such certificate remains in force.

IV. "Commissioner" shall mean the commissioner of labor and industry of the State of Maine. "Commission" shall mean the industrial accident commission created by section twenty-nine hereof.

V. "Industrial accident insurance policy" shall mean a policy in such form as the insurance commissioner of the State of Maine approves, issued by any stock or mutual casualty insurance company that may be now or hereafter authorized to do business in this State, which in substance and effect guarantees the payment of the compensation, medical and hospital services, and expense of sickness and burial herein provided for, in such installments, at such time or times, and to such person or persons and upon such conditions as in this act provided. Whenever a policy or certificate of renewal thereof is filed as herein provided, a copy of such policy, certified by the insurance commissioner of the State of Maine or his deputy, shall be admissible as evidence in any legal proceeding wherein the original would be admissible.

VI. "Insurance company" shall mean any casualty insurance company authorized to do business in the State of Maine, which may issue policies conforming to the provisions of the paragraph next preceding. Whenever in this act relating to procedure the words "insurance company" are used it shall be held to apply only to cases in which the employer has elected to file such policy, instead of furnishing satisfactory proof of his ability to pay compensations and benefits hereinafter provided direct to his employees.

VII. "Representatives" may include executors, administrators, and the dependents of deceased employees. Payments may be made to dependent directly or to executors or administrators. If payments are made to the latter, they shall forthwith pay the same to the dependents as the same are hereinafter defined.

Dependents.

VIII. "Dependents" shall mean members of the employee's family or next of kin, who are wholly or partly dependent upon the earnings of the employee for support at the time of the injury. The following persons shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee:

(a) A wife upon a husband with whom she lives, or from whom she was living apart for a justifiable cause, or because he had deserted her, or upon whom she is dependent at the time of the accident.

(b) A husband upon a wife with whom he lives, or upon whom he is dependent at the time of the accident.

(c) A child or children, including adopted and stepchildren under the age of eighteen years (or over said age, but physically or mentally incapacitated from earning) upon the parent with whom he is or they are living, or upon whom he is or they are dependent at the time of the death of said parent, there being no surviving dependent parent. In case there is more than one child thus dependent, the compensation shall be divided equally among them.

In all cases questions of entire or partial dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact, as the fact may have been at the time of the injury. In such other cases, if there is more than one person wholly dependent, the compensation shall be divided equally among them; and persons partly dependent, if any, shall receive no part thereof during the period in which compensation is paid to persons wholly dependent. If there is anyone wholly dependent and more than one person partly dependent, the compensation shall be divided among them according to the relative extent of their dependency. If a dependent is an alien residing outside of the United States, or of the Dominion of Canada, the compensation paid to any such dependent shall be one-half that hereinafter provided in case of the death of an employee.

Computing wages.

IX. "Average weekly wages, earnings, or salary," of any injured employee shall be computed as follows:

(a) If the injured employee has worked in the same employment in which he was working at the time of the accident, whether for the same employer or not, during substantially the whole of the year immediately preceding his injury, his "average weekly wages" shall be three hundred times the average daily wages, earnings, or salary which he has earned in such employment during the days when so employed and working the number of hours constituting a full working day in such employment, divided by fifty-two. But where the employee is employed regularly during the ordinary working hours concurrently by two or more employers, for one of whom he works at one time and for another he works at another time, his "average weekly wages" shall be computed as if the wages, earnings, or salary received by him from all such employers, were wages, earnings, or salary earned in the employment of the employer for whom he was working at the time of the accident.

(b) If the injured employee has not so worked in such employment during substantially the whole of such immediately preceding year, his "average weekly wages" shall be three hundred times the average daily wages, earnings, or salary which an employee of the same class working substantially the whole of such immediately preceding year in the same or a similar employment in the same or a neighboring place, has earned in such employment during the days when so employed and working the number of hours constituting a full working day in such employment, divided by fifty-two.

(c) In cases where the foregoing methods of arriving at the "average weekly wages, earnings, or salary" of the injured employee can not reasonably and fairly be applied, such "average weekly wages" shall be taken at such sum as, having regard to the previous wages, earnings, or salary of the injured employee and of other employees of the same or most similar class, working in the same or most similar employment in the same or a neighboring locality, shall reasonably represent the weekly earning capacity of the injured employee at the time of the accident in the employment in which he was working at such time.

(d) Where the employer has been accustomed to pay to the employee a sum to cover any special expense incurred by said employee by the nature of his employment, the sum so paid shall not be reckoned as part of the employee's wages, earnings, or salary.

(e) The fact that an employee has suffered a previous injury or received compensation therefor, shall not preclude compensation for a later injury or for death; but in determining the compensation for the later injury or death, his "average weekly wages" shall be such sum as will reasonably represent his weekly earning capacity at the time of the later injury, in the employment in which he was working at such time, and shall be arrived at according to and subject to the limitations of the previous provisions of this section.

In the sections of this act relating to notices and procedure, all powers and rights granted to, or duties and obligations imposed upon, employers or employees, shall inure to the benefit of and may be exercised by guardians of minors or other incapacitated persons and the legal representatives of deceased persons.

(f) The "average weekly wages, earnings, or salary" of employees who work seven days per week shall be computed by increasing the average daily wage the employee was receiving at the time of the accident by one-sixth and then multiplying by three hundred and dividing by fifty-two.

SEC. 2. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by an employee in the course of his employment, or for death, resulting from personal injury so sustained, it shall not be a defense (a) that the employee was negligent; (b) that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee; (c) that the employee had assumed the risk of the injury.

SEC. 3. The provisions of section two shall not apply to employers who employ five or less workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, and in case of the employer being engaged in more than one kind of business, in one of which he employs five or more workmen or operatives regularly, and in another employs five or less workmen or operatives, the fact that he elects to become subject to the provisions of this act shall not bring him within the provisions of it as to any such business in which he employs five or less workmen or operatives, and at the time of electing to become subject to the provisions of this act, if engaged in more than one kind of business, he shall specify the business or businesses in which he is engaged and concerning which he desires to come under the provisions hereof.

SEC. 4. The provisions of section two shall not apply to actions to recover damages for personal injuries or for death resulting from personal injuries sustained by employees engaged in domestic service or agriculture, or in the work of cutting, hauling, rafting, or driving logs.

SEC. 5. The provisions of section two shall not apply to actions to recover damages for personal injuries or for death resulting from personal injuries sustained by employees of an employer who has elected to become subject to this act in the manner provided in section six hereof. - tained, assenting employers shall be exempt from suits either at common law or under section nine of chapter ninety-two, or under sections fifty-one to fifty-eight, both inclusive, of this chapter.
- Election. SEC. 6. I. Any employer desiring to become an assenting employer as herein provided, may file with the commission at its office in Augusta, his written assent in such form as the commission approves, and also file with said commission a copy of an industrial accident insurance policy in any stock or mutual insurance company or association authorized to do business in the State of Maine, said policy being stamped with the approval of the insurance commissioner of said State of Maine.
- Rates. The insurance commissioner may require the filing of specific rates for workmen's compensation insurance including classification of risks, experience, or any other rating information from insurance companies, authorized to transact such insurance in Maine, and may make or cause to be made such investigations as may be deemed necessary to satisfy himself that such rates are correct and proper before giving his approval and permitting such rates to be promulgated for the use of said companies.
- Policies. Any insurance company issuing policies covering the payment of compensation provided for in this act shall file with the insurance commissioner a copy of the form thereof, and no such policy shall be issued until said insurance commissioner has approved the same. Every such insurance company shall file with the insurance department its classification of risks and premiums relating thereto, and any subsequent proposed classification or premiums, none of which shall take effect until the insurance commissioner has approved the same as adequate for the risks to which they respectively apply. The insurance commissioner may withdraw his approval of any classification of risks or premium rates relating thereto, and he may at any time approve a revised classification of risks and premium rates relating thereto. Such written assent when once filed shall continue in force without renewal during the life of said original policy or during the life of any subsequent policy or policies filed in renewal of said original policy previous to the expiration of any immediately preceding policy, so that there shall be no interim between policies. In case there shall be such an interim, then a new acceptance must be filed with the policy terminating the interim.
- Self-insurers. II. Any employer desiring to become an assenting employer as herein provided may file with the commission his written assent in such form as said commission approves after furnishing satisfactory proof to the commission of his solvency and financial ability to pay the compensation and benefits herein provided, and upon the deposit of cash, satisfactory securities or a bond, as the commission may determine, such bond to run to the treasurer of State, and his successor in office, in such sum as said commission may determine and shall be conditional upon the faithful performance of all the provisions of this act relating to the payment of compensations and benefits to any injured employee. In case of cash being deposited it shall be placed at interest by the treasurer of State and the accumulation of interest on said cash or securities so deposited shall be paid to the employer depositing the same: Provided, however, That the commission may at any time in their discretion deny to an assenting employer the right to continue in the exercise of the option granted by this paragraph.
- Certificates. III. Upon the filing of such assent and complying with the provisions of paragraph I or II of this section, the commission shall issue to such employer a certificate stating that such employer has conformed to the provisions of this act, and setting forth the date on which the policy filed under paragraph I expires. The certificate thus issued shall remain in full force until the date of the expiration of such policy or renewal thereof or until withdrawn as provided in paragraph II or until the employer assenting under paragraph II shall notify the commission that he withdraws his assent, or files an industrial accident policy in place of the securities so deposited by him.
- Existing system. IV. Subject to the approval of the commission, any employer may continue with his employees in lieu of the compensation and insurance provided by this act the system of compensation, benefit, or insurance which was used by such employer on the first day of January, nineteen hundred and fifteen. No such substitute system shall be approved unless it confers benefits upon injured employees at least equivalent to the benefits provided by this act, nor if it requires contributions from the employees, unless it confers benefits in addition to those provided under this act at least commensurate with such contributions. Such substitute system may be terminated by the commission on reasonable notice and hearing to the interested parties if it shall appear that the same is not fairly administered, or if its operation shall disclose latent defects threatening its solvency, or if for any substantial reason it fails to accomplish the purposes of this act. An employer who is authorized to substitute a plan under the provisions of this section shall give his employees notice thereof in a form to be prescribed by the commission, and a statement of the plan approved shall be filed with the commission.

V. A notice in such form as the commission approves, stating that the employer has conformed to the provisions of this act, and the date of the expiration of the policy filed, together with such further matters as the commission determines, shall be posted by the employer and kept posted by him at some place in each of his mills, factories, or place of business, conspicuous and accessible to his employees. For willful failure to post such notices, the employer shall be subject to a penalty of ten dollars per day for every day of such willful neglect, to be recovered by complaint or indictment. Such failure to so post notices shall not, however, affect the rights or liabilities of the employer or the employee hereunder.

SEC. 7. An employee of an employer who shall have elected to become subject to the provisions of this act as provided in section six of this act shall be held to have waived his right of action at common law to recover damages for personal injuries; also under section nine of chapter ninety-two or under sections fifty-one to fifty-eight, both inclusive, of this chapter, if he shall not have given his employer at the time of his contract of hire notice in writing that he claimed such right, and within ten days thereafter have filed a copy thereof with the commission, or, if the contract of hire was made before the employer so elected, if the employee shall not have given the said notice and filed the same with said commission within ten days after notice by the employer, as above provided, of such election, and such waiver shall continue in force for the term of one year, and thereafter without further act on his part, for successive terms of one year each, unless such employee shall at least sixty days prior to the expiration of such first or any succeeding year, file with the said commission a notice in writing to the effect that he desires to claim his said right of action at common law and within ten days thereafter shall give notice thereof to his employer. A minor working at an age illegally permitted under the laws of this state shall be deemed sui juris for the purpose of this act and no other person shall have any cause of action or right to compensation for an injury to such minor employee except as expressly provided in this act; but if said minor shall have a parent living or a guardian, such parent or guardian, as the case may be, may give the notice and file a copy of the same as herein provided by this section, and such notice shall bind the minor in the same manner that adult employees are bound under the provisions of this act. In case no such notice is given, such minor shall be held to have waived his right of action at common law, or under the statutes above referred to, to recover damages for personal injuries. Any employee, or the parent or guardian of any minor employee, who has given notice to the employer that he claimed his right of action at common law, or under the statutes above referred to, may waive such claim by a notice in writing which shall take effect five days after the delivery to the employer or his agent.

SEC. 8. No compensation shall be allowed for the injury or death of an employee where it is proved that his injury or death was occasioned by his willful intention to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another, or that the same resulted from his intoxication while on duty. This provision as to intoxication shall not apply, if the employer knew or in the exercise of ordinary care might have known that the employee was intoxicated or that he was in the habit of becoming intoxicated while on duty.

Notice to be posted.

Presumption as to employees.

Willful misconduct, etc.

Waiting time. SEC. 9. No compensation except medical, surgical, and hospital services, nursing, and medicines and mechanical surgical aids as provided in section 10 of this act shall be paid thereunder during the first ten days after the accident. If incapacity exists at the expiration of ten days, compensation shall begin on the eleventh day. If incapacity arises after ten days, compensation shall begin on the date such incapacity begins.

Medical, etc., aid. SEC. 10. During the first thirty days after the accident the employer shall promptly furnish reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital services, nursing and medicines, and mechanical surgical aids when they are needed. The amount of such medical, surgical, and hospital services, nursing, medicines, and mechanical surgical aids shall not exceed one hundred dollars unless a longer period or a greater sum is allowed by the commission which, in their discretion, they may allow when the nature of the injury or the process of recovery requires it. In case the incapacity does not begin at the time of the accident the thirty-day period shall commence at the time such incapacity begins. Whenever the employer and the employee are unable to agree upon the amount to be allowed for such medical, surgical, and hospital services, nursing, medicines, and mechanical surgical aid, the amount shall be fixed by the commission upon petition of either party setting forth the facts. In case of emergency or for other justifiable cause the employee shall have the right to select a physician other than the one provided by the employer, and the reasonable cost of his services shall be paid by the employer subject to the approval of the industrial accident commission. Such approval shall be granted only when the commission finds that there was such emergency or justifiable cause and in all cases, that the services were adequate and necessary and the charges reasonable.

Suits. SEC. 11. If an employee who has not given notice of his claim of common law or statutory rights of action, or who has given such notice and has waived the same, as provided in section seven of this act, receives a personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, he shall be paid compensation as hereinafter provided, by the employer who shall have elected to become subject to the provisions of this act.

Compensation for death. SEC. 12. If death results from the injury, the employer shall pay the dependents of the employee, wholly dependent upon his earnings for support at the time of his injury, a weekly payment equal to three-fifths his average weekly wages, earnings, or salary, but not more than fifteen dollars nor less than six dollars a week, for a period of three hundred weeks from the date of the injury, and in no case to exceed three thousand five hundred dollars: Provided, however, That if the dependent of the employee to whom the compensation shall be payable upon his death is the widow of such employee, upon her death the compensation thereafter payable under this act shall be paid to the child or children of the deceased employee, including adopted and stepchildren, under the age of eighteen years, or over said age but physically or mentally incapacitated from earning, who are dependent upon the widow at the time of her death. In case there is more than one child thus dependent, the compensation shall be divided equally among them. If the employee leaves dependents only partly dependent upon his earnings for support at the time of his injury the employer shall pay such dependents for a period of three hundred weeks from the date of the injury, a weekly compensation equal to the same proportion of the weekly payments herein provided for the benefit of persons wholly dependent as the amount contributed annually by the employee to such partial dependents bears to the annual earnings of the deceased at the time of injury. When weekly payments have been made to an injured employee before his death the compensation to dependents shall begin from the date of the last of such payments, but shall not continue more than three hundred weeks from the date of the injury: Provided, however, That if the deceased leaves no dependents at the time of the injury the employer shall not be liable to pay compensation under this act except as specifically provided in the following section:

No dependents. SEC. 13. If the employee dies as a result of the injury, leaving no dependents at the time of the injury, the employer shall pay, in addition to any compensation provided for in this act, the reasonable expense of his last sickness and burial, which shall not exceed two hundred dollars: Provided, however, If dependents appear before the commission, within one year after the death of the said employee, and prove that they are entitled to compensation as provided for by this act, and such compensation is decreed to be paid to the said dependents, the reasonable expenses of last sickness and burial as aforesaid shall be deducted from the amount allowed to the said dependents.

Sec. 14. While the incapacity for work resulting from the injury is total, the employer shall pay the injured employee a weekly compensation equal to three-fifths his average weekly wages, earnings, or salary, but not more than fifteen dollars nor less than six dollars a week; and in no case shall the period covered by such compensation be greater than five hundred weeks from the date of incapacity, nor the amount more than forty-two hundred dollars; and if the employee shall die before having received compensation to which he is entitled or which he is receiving as provided in this act, the same shall be payable to the dependents of the said employee for the specified period, and the said dependents shall have the same rights and powers under this act as the said employee would have had if he had lived. In the following cases it shall, for the purposes of this act, be conclusively presumed that the injury resulted in permanent total disability, to wit: the total and irrevocable loss of sight in both eyes, the loss of both feet at or above the ankle, the loss of both hands at or above the wrist, the loss of one hand and one foot, an injury to the spine resulting in permanent and complete paralysis of the legs or arms, and an injury to the skull resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity. Total disability.

Sec. 15. While the incapacity for work resulting from the injury is partial, the employer shall pay the injured employee a weekly compensation equal to three-fifths the difference between his weekly wages, earnings, or salary, before the injury and the weekly wages, earnings, or salary which he is able to earn thereafter, but not more than fifteen dollars a week; and in no case shall the period covered by such compensation be greater than three hundred weeks from the date of the injury. The rate of wages before the injury shall be determined by dividing the whole amount of wages or salary earned by the injured employee during the immediately preceding year, whether for the same employer or not, by the full number of days employed during the same period, provided the injured employee has worked substantially the whole of the immediately preceding year at similar work. If the employee has not so worked, the weekly wages, earnings, or salary of an employee working substantially the whole of such immediately preceding year at similar work shall be used in determining the amount of partial compensation due the injured employee. Partial disability.

Sec. 16. In cases included in the following schedule the disability in each such case shall be deemed to be total for the period specified and after such specified period, if there be a partial incapacity for work resulting from the injury specified, the employee shall receive compensation while such partial incapacity continues under the provisions of section fifteen, but in no case shall compensation continue more than three hundred weeks after the injury. The compensation to be paid for the injuries hereinafter specified shall be as follows, to wit: Schedule.

For the loss of a thumb, three-fifths the average weekly wages during fifty weeks.

For the loss of the first finger, commonly called the index finger, three-fifths the average weekly wages during thirty weeks.

For the loss of the second finger, three-fifths the average weekly wages during twenty-five weeks.

For the loss of the third finger, three-fifths the average weekly wages during eighteen weeks.

For the loss of the fourth finger, commonly called the little finger, three-fifths the average weekly wages during fifteen weeks.

The loss of the first phalange of the thumb or of any finger, shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of said thumb or finger and the compensation shall be one-half the amount above specified. The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as a loss of the entire thumb or finger: Provided, however, That in no case shall the amount received for the loss of more than one finger exceed the amount specified in this schedule for the loss of a hand.

For the loss of the great toe, three-fifths the average weekly wages during twenty-five weeks.

For the loss of one of the toes other than the great toe, three-fifths the average weekly wages during ten weeks.

The loss of the first phalange of any toe shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of said toe and the compensation shall be one-half of the amount above specified.

The loss of more than one phalange shall be considered as the loss of an entire toe.

For the loss of a hand, three-fifths the average weekly wages during one hundred twenty-five weeks.

For the loss of an arm, or any part at or above the wrist, three-fifths the average weekly wages during one hundred fifty weeks.

For the loss of a leg, or any part at or above the ankle, three-fifths the average weekly wages during one hundred fifty weeks.

For the loss of a foot, three-fifths the average weekly wages for one hundred twenty-five weeks.

For the loss of an eye or the reduction of the sight of an eye, with glasses, to one-tenth of the normal vision, three-fifths the average weekly wages during one hundred weeks.

The amounts specified in this section are all subject to the same limitations as to maximum and minimum amounts, that is, of not more than fifteen and not less than six dollars a week, as provided for total or partial disability.

Loss of use. In all cases in this class where the usefulness of a member or any physical function thereof is permanently impaired, the compensation shall bear such relation to the amount stated in the above schedule as the incapacity shall bear to the injuries named in this schedule and the commission shall determine the extent of the incapacity.

Notice of accident. Sec. 17. No proceedings for compensation for an injury under this act shall be maintained unless a notice of the accident shall have been given to the employer within thirty days after the happening thereof; and unless the claim for compensation with respect to such injury shall have been made within one year after the occurrence of the same, or, in case of his physical or mental incapacity, within one year after death or the removal of such physical or mental incapacity.

Form. Sec. 18. Such notice shall be in writing and shall state in ordinary language the nature, time, place and cause of the injury, and the name and address of the person injured, and shall be signed by the person injured, or by a person in his behalf, or, in the event of his death, by his legal representatives, or by a dependent, or by a person in behalf of either.

Service. Sec. 19. Such notice shall be served upon the employer, or upon one employer, if there are more employers than one, or, if the employer is a corporation, upon any officer or agent upon whom process may be served or by leaving it at his last known residence or place of business, or by sending it by registered mail addressed to the person to be served, or in the case of a corporation, to the corporation itself, at his or its last known residence or place of business; and such mailing of the notice shall constitute a completed service.

Validity. Sec. 20. A notice given under the provisions of this act shall not be held invalid or insufficient by reason of any inaccuracy in stating the nature, time, place, or cause of the injury, or the name and address of the person injured, unless it is shown that it was the intention to mislead

Want of notice. and the employer was in fact misled thereby. Want of notice shall not be a bar to proceedings under this act, if it be shown that the employer or his agent had knowledge of the injury, or that failure to give such notice was due to accident, mistake, or unforeseen cause.

Medical examinations. Sec. 21. The employee shall, after the injury, at all reasonable times during the continuance of his disability, if so requested by his employer, submit himself to an examination by a physician or surgeon authorized to practice medicine under the laws of this State, to be selected and paid by the employer. The employee shall have the right to have a physician or surgeon, selected and paid by himself, present at such examination of which right the employer shall give him notice when requesting such examination.

The chairman or associate legal member may at any time after the injury appoint a competent and impartial physician or surgeon to act as a medical examiner, and the reasonable fees of such medical examiner shall be fixed and paid by the commission.

Such medical examiner being first duly sworn to the faithful performance of his duties before any justice of the peace, or any clerk of the supreme judicial court, shall thereupon, and as often as the chairman of the commission may direct, examine such injured employee in order to determine the nature, extent, and probable duration of the injury. Such medical examiner shall file a report of every examination made of such employee in the office of the commission, and a copy thereof certified by the clerk of said commission may be produced in evidence in any hearing or proceedings to determine the amount of compensation due said employee under the provisions of this act. If such employee refuses to submit himself to examination provided for in this act, or in any way obstructs any such examination, his rights to compensation shall be suspended and his compensation during such period of suspension may be forfeited.

SEC. 22. No savings or insurance of the injured employee independent of this act, shall be taken into consideration in determining the compensation to be paid hereunto, nor shall benefits derived from any other source than the employer be considered in fixing the compensation under this act.

Savings or insurance.

SEC. 23. In case an injured employee is mentally incompetent, or, where death results from the injury, in case any of his dependents entitled to compensation hereunder are mentally incompetent or minors at the time when any rights, privilege, or election accrues to him or them under this act, his guardian, or next friend, or some disinterested person designated by the commission may, in his behalf, claim and exercise such right, privilege or election, and no limitation of time in this act provided shall run so long as such incompetent or minor has no guardian. In case the commission shall have reasonable grounds for believing that compensation paid under this act, either in weekly installments or in a lump sum, will be squandered or wasted by the injured employee or his dependents, the commission may designate in writing some disinterested person to act as trustee for the said injured employee or said dependents, and the said trusts shall file an account at least once a year with the said commission showing the amounts of receipts and expenditures in behalf of said injured employee or said dependents.

Incompetents.

SEC. 24. No agreement by an employee, except as provided in section thirty, to waive his rights to compensation under this act shall be valid. No claims for compensation under this act shall be assignable or subject to attachment, or liable in any way for debt.

Waivers.

SEC. 25. Employers who hire workmen within this State to work outside of the State, may agree with such workmen that the remedies under this act shall be exclusive as regards injuries received outside this State by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment; and all contracts of hiring in this State shall be presumed to include such an agreement.

Assignments, etc.

Injuries outside State.

SEC. 26. When any injury for which compensation is payable under this act shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employee may, at his option, either claim compensation under this act or obtain damages from or proceed at law against such other person to recover damages; and if compensation is claimed and awarded under this act, any employer having paid the compensation or having become liable therefor shall be subrogated to the rights of the injured employee to recover against that person: Provided, If the employer shall recover from such other person damages in excess of the compensation already paid or awarded to be paid under this act, then any such excess shall be paid to the injured employee less the employer's expenses and costs of action.

Liability of third persons.

SEC. 27. The claim for compensation under this act, and any decree on any such claim, shall be entitled to a preference over the unsecured debts of the employer hereafter contracted to the same amount as the wages of labor are now preferred by the laws of this State, but nothing herein shall be construed as impairing any lien which the employee may have acquired.

Lump sums.

SEC. 28. In case payments have continued for not less than six months either party may, upon due notice to the other party petition the commission for an order commuting the future payments to a lump sum. Such petition shall be considered by the commission and may be summarily granted where it is shown to the satisfaction of the commission that the payment of a lump-sum in lieu of future weekly payments will be for the best interest of the person or persons receiving or dependent upon such compensation, or that the continuance of weekly payments will, as compared with lump-sum payments, entail undue expense or undue hardship upon the employer liable therefor, or that the person entitled to compensation has removed or is about to remove from the United States. Where the commutation is ordered, the commission shall fix the lump sum to be paid at an amount which will equal the total sum of the probable future payments capitalized at their present value upon the basis of interest calculated at five per centum per annum with annual rests. Upon payment of such amount the employer shall be discharged from all further liability on account of the injury or death, and be entitled to a duly executed release, upon filing which, or other due proof of payment the liability of such employer under any agreement, award, findings, or decree shall be discharged of record, and the employee accepting the lump-sum settlement as aforesaid shall receive no future compensation under the provisions of this act.

Industrial accident commission.

SEC. 29. The industrial accident commission of the State of Maine shall consist of four members, two of whom, to be designated as the chairman and associate legal member, respectively, shall be men learned in the law and members in good standing of the bar of this State; the third, the commissioner of labor and industry, and the fourth, the commissioner of insurance. The chairman and associate legal member shall be appointed by the governor, the former for the term of four years and the latter for the term of two years upon the first appointment under this act, all successive appointments to be for the term of three years. The chairman and associate legal member shall hold office for the terms aforesaid, unless removed as herein provided, and until their successors are appointed and qualified. They shall be sworn and for inefficiency, willful neglect of duty or for malfeasance in office may after notice and hearing be removed by the governor and council. In case of a vacancy occurring through the death, resignation, or removal, the governor shall appoint a successor for the whole term of three years, subject to removal as aforesaid.

The chairman shall receive a salary of three thousand five hundred dollars per annum, beginning January first, nineteen hundred and nineteen, and the associate legal member shall receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum. The commissioner of labor and industry shall receive the sum of one thousand dollars, in addition to his salary as commissioner of labor and industry. The commissioner of insurance shall receive the sum of five hundred dollars, in addition to his salary as commissioner of insurance. The members of the commission shall also receive their actual, necessary, cash expenses while away from their office on official business of the commission.

The commission shall have a clerk appointed and removable by it. The salary of the clerk of the commission shall be fixed by the governor and council upon recommendation of the commission.

The associate legal member shall have the same authority, powers, and duties as the chairman, but shall only exercise said authority, powers, and duties when requested in writing to do so by the chairman.

The sum of twenty-eight thousand two hundred dollars shall be annually appropriated for the payment of salaries, clerical and other assistance, physicians, witness fees, traveling and other expenses.

The commission shall have a seal bearing the words "Industrial Accident Commission of Maine." It shall have its office and keep its records in the statehouse in Augusta, but may hold sessions at any place within the State. The commission shall have general supervision over the administration of this act, and shall have powers:

Powers.

I. To make rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act or other laws of the State for the purpose of carrying out the provisions hereof.

II. To issue subpoenas for witnesses and subpoenas duces tecum to compel the production of books and papers and photographs relating to any questions in dispute before it.

III. The chairman or the associate legal member at any hearing under the provisions of this act may issue subpoenas for witnesses and subpoenas duces tecum to compel the production of books and papers relating to any matters involved in the hearing. Witness fees in all proceedings under this act shall be the same as for witnesses before the supreme judicial court.

IV. The commission may, when the interests of any of the parties or when the administration of the provisions of this act demand, appoint a person in that part of the State where an accident has happened, to make a full investigation of the circumstances surrounding said accident, and report the same without delay to the office of the said commission.

V. Depositions taken for the causes and in the manner hereinafter mentioned may be used in all hearings before the industrial accident commission.

Depositions

The chairman of the industrial accident commission or the associate legal member may issue commissions to take depositions to any United States consul, United States vice consul, any judge of any court of record in the United States or any foreign country, or to any notary public or justice of the peace in the State of Maine, for either of the following causes:

1. When the deponent resides out of or is absent from the State.
2. When the deponent is bound to sea or is about to go out of the State.
3. When the deponent is so aged, infirm, or sick as to be unable to attend the place of hearing.

Such deposition shall be taken by written interrogatories to be filed with the chairman, and the adverse party shall have ten days after written notice of such filing to him or his attorney, in which to file cross-interrogatories thereto, and if cross-interrogatories are not so filed within ten days after such notice, the right of cross-examination shall be considered waived.

The deponent shall be duly sworn and after his answers have been written out, the deposition shall be signed and sworn to by the deponent before the commissioner authorized to take it, and shall by him be sealed up and sent to the chairman of the industrial accident commission at Augusta.

SEC. 30. If the employer and the employee reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act a memorandum of such agreement signed by the parties shall be filed in the office of the commission. If the commissioner finds that such agreement is in conformity with the provisions of this act, he shall approve the same and the clerk of the commission shall record it in a book kept for that purpose. In case the commissioner shall find that any such agreement is not in conformity with the provisions of this act and shall refuse to approve the same, or if the employer and employee fail to reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act, either employer or employee, and when death has resulted from the injury and the dependents of the deceased employee entitled to compensation are, or the apportionment thereof among them is, in dispute, any person in interest, may file in the office of the commission a petition setting forth the names and residences of the parties, the facts relating to the employment at the time of the injury, the cause, extent, and character of the injury and the knowledge of the employer or notice of the occurrence of the injury; and, if an agreement had been reached between the parties which had not been approved by the commissioner, the form of such agreement and such other facts as may be necessary and proper for the determination of the matter in dispute, and shall state the matter in dispute and the claims of the petitioner with reference thereto.

Memoranda of agreement.

Failure to agree.

- Notice of peti- Sec. 31. Within four days after the filing of the petition, a copy tion. thereof attested by the clerk of the commission shall be mailed, postage prepaid, to the other parties named in the petition, or notice be given in such other manner as the commission may determine.
- Answers. Sec. 32. Within ten days after the filing of such petition, all the other parties interested in opposition to the petition shall file an answer to said petition and furnish a copy thereof to the petitioner, which answer shall state the claims of the opponents with reference to the matter in dispute as disclosed by the petition. The chairman or associate legal member may grant further time for filing answer and allow amendments to said petition and answer at any stage of the proceedings. If any party opposing such petition does not file an answer within the time limited, the hearing shall proceed upon the petition.
If any party be an infant or person under disability, either parent or a guardian or a guardian ad litem for such infant or person under disability may file the petition or answer required by this section.
- Hearings. Sec. 33. The whole matter shall then be referred to the chairman or associate legal member of said commission, who shall fix a time for hearing upon the request of either party, upon three days' notice given to the other party. All hearings shall be held in the town where the accident occurred, unless the claimant shall in writing request that it be held in some other place.
- Procedure. Sec. 34. If from the petition and answer there appear to be facts in dispute, the chairman or associate legal member of the commission shall then hear such witnesses as may be presented, or by agreement the claims of both parties as to the facts in dispute may be presented by affidavits. From the evidence thus furnished the chairman or associate legal member shall, in a summary manner, decide the merits of the controversy. His decision, findings of fact, and rulings of law, and any other matters pertinent to the questions raised at the hearing, shall be filed in the office of the commission, and a copy thereof certified by the clerk of the commission mailed forthwith to all parties interested. His decision, in the absence of fraud, upon all questions of fact shall be final.
- Decision. Any party in interest may present copies, certified by the clerk of the commission, of any order or decision of the commission, or of its chairman or associate legal member, or of any memorandum of agreements approved by the commissioner, together with all papers in connection therewith, to the clerk of courts for the county in which the injury occurred; whereupon any justice of the supreme judicial court shall render a decree in accordance therewith and notify all parties. Such decree shall have the same effect and all proceedings in relation thereto shall thereafter be the same as though rendered in a suit in equity duly heard and determined by said court, except there shall be no appeal therefrom upon questions of fact found by said commission, or its chairman or associate legal member, or where the decree is based upon a memorandum of agreement approved by the commissioner. Upon any appeal therefrom the proceedings shall be the same as in appeals in equity procedure, and the law court may, after consideration, reverse or modify any decree made by a justice based upon an erroneous ruling of finding of law. There shall be no appeal from a decree based upon any order or decision of the commission or of its chairman or associate legal member, or upon any memorandum of agreement approved by the commissioner which has not been certified and presented to the court within twenty days after the notice of the filing thereof by the commission or its chairman or associate legal member. Upon the presentation to it of a certified copy of any decision of the chairman or associate legal member terminating, diminishing, increasing, or modifying any payments under the provisions of section thirty-six, or under any decision of said chairman or associate legal member, or any agreement approved by the commissioner, the court shall revoke or modify its decree, if any has been based thereon, to conform to such decision.
- Enforcement. Sec. 35. Any agreement between employer and employee filed with the commission and approved by the commissioner or any decision of the chairman or associate legal member of said commission under the provisions of section thirty-four, shall have the same effect
- Status of agree- Sec. 36. Any agreement between employer and employee filed ments, etc. with the commission and approved by the commissioner or any decision of the chairman or associate legal member of said commission
under the provisions of section thirty-four, shall have the same effect as the judgment of a court, and a copy thereof certified to by the clerk of said commission and filed with the clerk of the court of the county in which either the employer or employee resides, or where the business of the employer is located, shall be enforceable by the supreme judicial court by any suitable process, including execution against the goods, chattels, and real estate, and including proceedings for contempt for willful failure or neglect to obey the orders or decrees of the court, or in any other manner that decrees in equity may be enforced.

Sec. 36. At any time before the expiration of two years from the date of the approval of an agreement by the commissioner, or the entry of a decree fixing compensation, but not afterwards, and before the expiration of the period for which compensation has been fixed by such agreement or decree, but not afterwards, any agreement, award, findings, or decree may be from time to time reviewed by the chairman or associate legal member upon the application of either party, after due notice to the other party, upon the grounds that the incapacity of the injured employee has subsequently ended, increased, or diminished. Upon such review the said chairman or associate legal member may increase, diminish, or discontinue the compensation from the date of the application for review, in accordance with the facts, or make such other order as the justice of the case may require, but shall order no change of the status existing prior to the application for review. The finding of the said chairman or associate legal member upon such review shall be served on the parties and filed with the clerk of the commission and may be certified to the court in like time and manner and subject to like disposition as in the case of original decrees: Provided. That an agreement for compensation may be modified at any time by a subsequent agreement between the parties approved by the commissioner in the same manner as original agreements in regard to compensation are required to be approved by the provisions of section thirty of this act.

Review.

Sec. 37. The commission may prescribe forms and make suitable orders as to procedure adapted to secure a speedy, efficient, and inexpensive disposition of all proceedings under this act; and interpreting this act it shall construe it liberally and with a view to carrying out its general purpose. The rule that statutes in derogation of the common law are to be strictly construed shall have no application to this act. It may provide blank forms of notice, agreements, and other forms required under this act.

Forms, orders, etc.

Sec. 38. No proceedings under this act shall abate because of the death of the petitioner, but may be prosecuted by his legal representative or by any person entitled to compensation by reason of said death, under the provisions of this act.

Death.

Sec. 39. An employee's claim for compensation under this act shall be barred unless an agreement or a petition as provided in section thirty shall be filed within two years after the occurrence of the injury, or, in case of the death of the employee, or in the event of his physical or mental incapacity, within two years after the death of the employee or the removal of such physical or mental incapacity.

Limitation.

Sec. 40. This act shall be compulsory as to the State, counties, cities, water districts, and other quasi municipal corporations of a similar nature. The provisions of section six of this act shall not apply to the State, counties, cities, water districts, and other quasi-municipal corporations of a similar nature or to any towns voting to accept the provisions of this act.

Public employments.

Sec. 41. All assenting employers shall make prompt report to the commission of all accidents to their employees in the course of employment, with the average weekly wages or earnings of such employee, together with such other particulars as the commission may require, and shall also report whenever the injured employee shall resume his employment and the amount of his wages or earnings.

Reports of accidents.

Whenever any final settlement is made with an injured employee, either by the employer or insurance company, a copy of the receipt or final agreement showing the total amount of money paid to such injured employee, shall be filed with the commission, but shall not be binding without the approval of the commission, or of its chairman or associate legal member. Any employer or insurance company that shall will-

Agreements to be filed.

- fully neglect or refuse to make such reports or file any receipts or agreements required to be filed under this act shall be liable to a forfeiture of ten dollars for each day of such willful neglect or refusal, to be enforced by the commission in an action of debt in the name of the State. All sums so recovered shall be paid into the State treasury and credited to the appropriation made for the administration of this act.
- Insurance companies to report. Sec. 42. Any insurance company insuring employers under this act shall fill out any blanks and answer all questions submitted to them that may relate to policies, premiums, amount of compensation paid, and such other information as the commission or the insurance commissioner may deem important, either for the proper administration of this act or for statistical purposes. Any insurance company which shall refuse to fill out such blanks or answer such questions shall be liable to a forfeiture of ten dollars for each day of such refusal, to be enforced by the commission in an action of debt in the name of the State. In case the employer or insurance company liable for any payment under this act shall fail to make the same within ten days after notification by the commission that said failure to make such payment is deemed by said commission to be unreasonable, then for each day after the said ten days, the said employer or the said insurance company, shall be liable to a forfeiture of ten dollars each day for such failure or refusal, to be enforced by the commission in an action of debt in the name of the State. All moneys so recovered shall be paid into the State treasury and credited to the appropriation for the administration of this act.
- Biennial reports. Sec. 43. The commission shall make a report for the biennial period ending June thirtieth of an even year giving such full statistical information as may be contained in its department in relation to the administration of this act, particularly with reference to the number of employees affected, the number injured, the amount of compensations received, and the cost of the same to the employers.
- Interstate commerce. Sec. 44. This act shall affect the liability of employers to employees engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or otherwise only so far as the same is permissible under the laws of the United States.
- Payments to nonresidents. Sec. 45. If an employee receiving a weekly payment under this act shall cease to reside in the State, or, if his residence at the time of the accident is in an adjoining State, the commission upon application of either party may, in its discretion, having regard to the welfare of the employee and the convenience of the employer, order such payments to be made monthly or quarterly instead of weekly.
- Provisions severable. Sec. 46. If any part or section of this act be decided by the courts to be unconstitutional or invalid, the same shall not affect the validity of the act as a whole, or any part thereof, which can be given effect without the part so decided to be unconstitutional or invalid.
- False statements. Sec. 47. If for the purpose of obtaining any benefit or payment under the provisions of this act, either for himself or for any other person, any one willfully makes a false statement or representation he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a fine of not exceeding fifty dollars, and shall forfeit all right to compensation under this act after conviction for such offense.
- Impersonating officials. Sec. 48. No person other than a member of the commission or its duly authorized subordinates and employees shall in any manner directly or indirectly represent the commission and procure settlement of any claim arising under this act, or in any manner directly or indirectly hold himself out to any employee, dependent, or other person interested in his claim to have any authority to act for said commission for any purpose under this act. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not to exceed sixty days, or by both.
- Prior injuries. Sec. 49. The provisions of this act shall not apply to injuries sustained or accidents which occur prior to the first day of January, A. D. nineteen hundred sixteen.
- Sec. 50. [Repealer of act of 1915 and amendments.]

MARYLAND.

PUBLIC GENERAL LAWS.

ARTICLE 101.—Workmen's compensation.

SECTION 1. A commission is hereby created which shall be known as the State Industrial Accident Commission, to be composed of three commissioners. Immediately upon the taking effect of this act the governor shall appoint such commissioners (not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party). One of them shall hold office for the first two years, another for the first four years, and another for the first six years following the passage and approval of this article. Thereafter the terms shall be six years. Each commissioner shall devote his entire time to the duties of the office, and shall not hold any position of trust or engage in any occupation or business interfering or inconsistent with his duties as such commissioner, or serve on or under any committee of a political party. Each commissioner shall hold office until his successor shall be appointed and shall have qualified. Vacancies shall be filled by the governor for the unexpired term. A decision on any question arising under this article concurred in by two of the commissioners shall be the decision of the commission. The governor may at any time remove any commissioner from office for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Before such removal he shall give such commissioner a copy of the charges against him and shall fix a time when he can be heard in his own defense, either in person or by counsel, which shall not be less than ten days thereafter, and such hearing shall be open to the public. The governor shall designate a member of said commission as chairman thereof. The principal office of the commission shall be in the city of Baltimore, but branch offices may be established at other places in the State for the purpose of administering this article.

Industrial accident commission.

Offices.

SEC. 2. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and a vacancy shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the full commission, so long as a majority remains. Any investigation, inquiry, or hearing which the commission is authorized to hold or undertake may be held or undertaken by or before any one member of the commission, and every order made by a member thereof, when approved and confirmed by a majority of the members and so shown on its record of proceedings, shall be deemed to be the order of the commission.

Quorum.

SEC. 3. The salary of each of the commissioners shall be three thousand dollars ($3,000) per annum, and shall be paid out of the State treasury, and in addition to the said sum of three thousand dollars per annum each of said commissioners shall also receive the sum of two thousand dollars per annum which shall be paid out of its funds by the mayor and city council of Baltimore to each of said commissioners as employees of said municipal corporation.³ In addition to the salary provided in this section each commissioner shall be allowed his actual and necessary traveling and incidental expenses.

Salaries.

SEC. 4. The commission shall be in continuous session and open for the transaction of business during all business hours of each and every day, except Sundays and legal holidays. All sessions shall be open to the public, and shall stand and be adjourned without further notice thereof on its record. All proceedings of the commission shall be shown on its record of proceedings, which shall be a public record, and shall contain a record of each case considered and the award paid or allowed to any employee of the commission, or to any other person for service: Provided, however, That any person in the employ of the commission who shall divulge any information secured by him in respect to the transactions, property, or business of any person, firm, company, or corporation, association or joint partnership to any person other than the members of the commission shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not less than $100 or more than $500, or imprisonment, not exceeding 18 months, in the discretion of the court, and shall thereafter be disqualified from holding any appointment or employment with the commission.

Sessions.

Employees.

SEC. 5. The commission may employ a secretary, actuaries, accountants, inspectors, examiners, experts, clerks, stenographers, and other assistants, and fix their compensation subject to the written approval of the governor; such compensation shall be paid out of the appropriation in the State treasury provided for in this act. The secretary, actuaries, accountants, inspectors, examiners, experts, clerks, stenographers, and other assistants that may be employed shall be entitled to receive their actual necessary expenses while traveling on the business of the commission. Such expenses shall be itemized and sworn to by the person who incurred the expense, and allowed by the commission. The commission shall keep and maintain its main office and such branch offices as it shall deem proper and necessary for the administration of the act, and shall provide suitable rooms, necessary office furniture, supplies, books, periodicals, and maps for the same. All necessary expenses shall be audited and paid out of the appropriation in the State treasury provided for in this article. It shall provide itself with a seal for the authentication of its orders, awards, and proceedings, upon which shall be inscribed the words "State Industrial Accident Commission, State of Maryland—Official Seal."

Each member of the commission and each person appointed to office or employment by the commission shall before entering upon the duties of his office or employment take and subscribe the constitutional oath of office.

Secretary.

SEC. 6. The secretary of the commission shall keep and maintain a full and true record of all proceedings of the commission, of all documents or papers ordered filed by the commission or by its rules, of all decisions or orders made by any member of the commission, and of all decisions or orders made by the commission or approved and confirmed by it and ordered filed, and he shall be responsible to the commission for the safe custody and preservation of all such documents at its office. He shall have the power to administer oaths in all parts of the State, so far as the exercise of such power is properly incident to the performance of his duty or that of the commission. He may designate, from time to time with the approval of the commission, one of the clerks of the office appointed by the commission to exercise the powers and duties of the secretary during his absence. Under the direction of the commission, the secretary shall have general charge of its office, superintend its clerical business, and perform such other duties as the commission may prescribe.

Powers of commissioners, etc.

SEC. 7. Each member of the commission, the secretary thereof, and any special examiner or inspector shall, for the purpose contemplated by this act, have power to issue subpoenas, compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, certify to official acts, take depositions within or without the State of Maryland as now provided by law, compel the production of pertinent books, pay rolls, accounts, papers, records, documents, and testimony.

If a person in attendance before the commission or a commissioner refuse, without reasonable cause, to be examined or to answer a legal and pertinent question, or to produce a book or paper when ordered to do so by the commission, the commission may apply to any judge of the supreme bench of Baltimore City, or of the circuit court of any county, upon proof by affidavit of the fact, for a rule or order returnable in not less than two or more than five days, directing such person to show cause before the judge who made the order, or any other judge aforesaid, why he should not be committed to jail. Upon the return of such order, the judge before whom the matter and such person shall come on for a hearing shall examine under oath such person and such person shall be given an opportunity to be heard; and if the judge shall determine that such person has refused, without reasonable cause or legal excuse, to be examined or to answer a legal or pertinent question, or to produce a book or paper which he has ordered to bring or produce, he may forthwith commit the offender to jail, there to remain until he submits to do the act which he was so required to do, or is discharged according to law.

No person shall be excused from testifying or from producing any books or papers or documents in any investigation or inquiry by or upon any hearing before the commission or any commissioner, when ordered to do so by the commission or its secretary, upon the ground that the testimony or evidence, books, papers, or documents required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no person shall be prosecuted, punished, or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any act, transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he shall, under oath, have, by order of the commission or a commissioner or its inspector or examiner, testified to or produced documentary evidence of: Provided, however, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for any perjury committed by him in his testimony.

SEC. 8. Each officer who serves such subpoena shall receive the same fee as the sheriff would receive in the county or city where said witness is subpoenaed, and each witness who appears in obedience to a subpoena before the commission or an inspector or an examiner shall receive for his attendance the fees and mileage provided for witnesses in civil cases in the circuit courts of the counties or the common-law courts of Baltimore City, as of the place where he gives his testimony, which shall be audited and paid from the State treasury in the same manner as other vouchers approved by any member of the commission and the secretary. No witness subpoenaed at the instance of a party other than the commission, or an inspector or examiner, shall be entitled to compensation from the State treasury unless the commission shall certify that his testimony was material to the matter investigated. In an investigation, the commission may cause depositions of witnesses residing within or without the State to be taken in the manner prescribed by law for like depositions taken in cases pending before the circuit courts of the counties or the common-law courts of Baltimore City, as is now or hereafter may be provided by law.

Fees.

SEC. 9. Subject to the provisions of this article, the State Industrial Accident Commission shall adopt reasonable and proper rules to govern its procedure, which procedure shall be as summary and simple as reasonably may be. It shall regulate and provide for the kind and character of notices, and the services thereof, and in cases of injury by accident to employees the nature and extent of the proofs and evidence and the method of taking and furnishing the same for the establishment of the right to compensation. It shall determine the nature and forms of application of those claiming to be entitled to benefits or compensation, and shall regulate the method of making investigations, physical examinations, and inspection and prescribe the time within which adjudications and awards shall be made: Provided always, That all such rules and regulations shall conform to the provisions of this article.

Procedure.

SEC. 10. The commission shall not be bound by the usual common-law or statutory rules of evidence or by any technical or formal rules of procedure other than as herein provided, but may make the investigation in such manner as in its judgment is best calculated to ascertain the substantial rights of the parties and to carry out justly the spirit of this act.

Proceedings not formal.

SEC. 11. A transcribed copy of the evidence and proceedings or any specific part thereof, of any investigation taken by a stenographer appointed by the commission being certified and sworn to by such stenographer, to be a true and correct transcript of the testimony, or of a particular witness, or any specific part thereof, or to be a correct transcript of the proceedings had on such investigation so purporting to be taken and subscribed, may be received in evidence by the commission with the same effect as if such stenographer were present and testified to the facts certified. A copy of such transcript shall be furnished on demand to any party in interest upon payment of the fee therefor, as provided for transcripts in the circuit courts of the counties or the common-law courts of Baltimore City.

Evidence.

Blanks.

Sec. 12. The commission shall prepare and furnish free of cost blank forms and provide in its rules for their distribution so that the same may be readily available, of applications for benefits or compensation notices, to employers, proof of injury or death, of medical attendance, of employment, and wage earnings and such other blanks as may be deemed proper and advisable, and it shall be the duty of employers to constantly keep on hand a sufficient supply of such blanks.

Reports.

Sec. 13. Annually on or before the first day of January the State Industrial Accident Commission shall make a report to the governor, which shall include a statement of the number of awards made by it, the causes of the accidents leading to the injuries for which the awards were made, and a detailed statement of the expenses of the commission and the condition of the State accident fund, together with any other matters which the commission deems proper to report to the governor, including any recommendations as it may desire to make.

Compensation to be paid.

Sec. 14 (as amended by chapter 597, acts of 1916). Every employer subject to the provisions of this article, shall pay or provide as required herein compensation according to the schedules of this article for the disability or death of his employee resulting from an accidental personal injury sustained by the employee arising out of and in the course of his employment without regard to fault as a cause of such injury, except where the injury is occasioned by the willful intention of the injured employee to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another, or where the injury results solely from the intoxication of the injured employee while on duty. Where the injury is occasioned by the willful intention of the injured employee to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another, or where the injury results solely from the intoxication of the injured employee while on duty, neither the injured employee nor any dependent of such employee shall receive compensation under this article.

Suits allowed, when.

The liability prescribed by the last preceding paragraph shall be exclusive, except that if an employer fail to secure the payment of compensation for his injured employees and their dependents as provided in this article, an injured employee or his legal representative in case death results from the injury, may, at his option, elect to claim compensation under this article, or to maintain an action in the courts for damages on account of such injury; and in such an action the defendant may not plead as a defense that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant or that the employee assumed the risk of his employment, or that the injury was due to the contributory negligence of the employee. If an employer, besides employing workmen in extra-hazardous employment within the meaning of this article, shall also employ workmen in employments not extrahazardous, the provisions of this article shall apply only to the extrahazardous employments within the meaning of this article and the workmen employed therein, except as provided in section 33 of this article.

Security of compensation payments.

Sec. 15 (as amended by chapter 597, acts of 1916). The employer shall secure compensation to his employees in one of the following ways:

- (1) By insuring and keeping insured the payments of such compensation in the State accident fund, or
- (2) By insuring and keeping insured the payments of such compensation with any stock corporation or mutual association authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this State.

(3) Any such employer who does not with the approval of said commission voluntarily insure the payment of the compensation by one of the methods designated in the preceding paragraphs of this section, must furnish satisfactory proof to the commission of his financial ability to pay such compensation himself, in which case the commission may, at any time and from time to time in its discretion, require the deposit with the commission of securities, such as are accepted by the equity courts of Baltimore City for the investment of trust funds and in an amount or amounts to be determined by the commission, to secure the liability of the employer to pay the compensation specified in this act; and in order to be informed as to the continued financial responsibility of any such employer the commission may require reports from him annually or at such other times as the commission may deem necessary or advisable and may examine such employer under oath or make such other examination of his business as the commission may determine. If he should fail to furnish such satisfactory proof, or give bond, or deposit such securities as required by the commission, or if he should at any time fail to render satisfactory reports to the commission or otherwise satisfy the commission of his continued financial ability to pay the compensation himself, he shall be subject to the provisions of the first paragraph of this section of this act and shall be required by the commission to insure as provided in the first paragraph of said this section, unless he, at once, insure voluntarily as provided in the second paragraph of this section.
