UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1953.

The SECRETARY OF LABOR :

I have the honor to transmit herewith the Bureau's 1953 Directory of Labor Unions in the United States, which was prepared in response to the many requests for up-to-date information about labor organizations in this country. This Directory is a revision and expansion of Bulletin No. 980, issued June 1950. It gives general information about the structure and activities of the American labor movement and lists and gives details about all known national and international unions and State labor bodies.

The Directory was prepared in the Bureau's Division of Wages and Industrial Relations by William Paschell under the supervision of Kirk R. Petshek.

EWAN CLAGUE, Commissioner.

Hon. MARTIN P. DURKIN,
Secretary of Labor.

Directory of Labor Unions in the United States

The 1953 Directory

This Directory presents some basic information about trade-union organizations in the United States, obtained primarily from questionnaires¹ sent to national and international unions in the spring of 1952. Information assembled from the responses by unions and included in the Directory relates to the number of members and local union affiliates of the organizations listed; the number of women who are union members; and information on union conventions and publications. The headquarters addresses and principal officers of national and international unions are also listed. Wherever possible, changes, other than membership and number of locals, which occurred early in 1953 are reflected in the Directory.

Of the 215 unions listed, 109 are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, 33 with the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and 73 are unaffiliated with either of the 2 major federations.²

About seven out of every eight union members are members of unions affiliated with either the AFL or the CIO. Founded in 1881, the AFL is the oldest and largest federation. The Committee for Industrial Organization (CIO) was formed by a group of AFL unions in 1935 and held its first convention as the Congress of Industrial Organizations in 1938, when it adopted its present name and constitution.³ At least two general federations of independent unions, the Confederated Unions of America and the National Independent Union Council, are known to exist. The Alliance (of) Independent Telephone Unions apparently functions as a federation in a single industry.

² Independent or unaffiliated unions were included where information existed that the union had at least two locals and was a party to collective-bargaining agreements with more than one employer. In the absence of local branches, exceptions were made if the union had negotiated at least 10 collective-bargaining agreements with different employers. The inclusion of all such independent unions in this Directory was not possible because names and locations of unions were not always available, and some unions did not reply to the questionnaire or provided insufficient information to establish whether or not they fall within the above definition.

³ See Brief History of the American Labor Movement, Bulletin No. 1000, U. S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, 1950.

Independent unions appearing in the Directory are estimated to have between 2 and 2½ million members. Some of these unions such as the four "operating" railroad brotherhoods, all organized before 1900, have never been affiliated with either of the major federations. Other unaffiliated unions (more than one of every four listed) have at some time been identified with either the AFL or CIO. A notable example is the United Mine Workers of America. The expulsion of 11 unions from the CIO during 1949-50 augmented the number of unaffiliated unions.⁴

The Railway Labor Executives' Association, formed in 1926, is a voluntary association of the chief executive officers of labor organizations having all or part of their membership in the railroad industry. Although not a federation of unions similar to the groups already mentioned, RLEA functions to coordinate and direct policy in legislative and other fields of mutual interest to organized railroad workers. Late in 1952, 19 labor organizations, including 17 AFL, 1 CIO, and 1 independent, were represented in RLEA. With the exception of a few unions representing a relatively small number of operating employees, these unions represent the bulk of union members engaged in nonoperating railroad employment.

At State and city levels, the AFL and CIO each maintain organizations in which participation by the locals of their affiliated unions is encouraged. In 1952, the AFL had 50 State federations of labor, including Alaska and Puerto Rico, and 821 city central bodies. The CIO reported 40 State industrial union councils, including the District of Columbia, and 247 city and county councils. A listing of the AFL and CIO State organizations, together with their officers, begins on page 32.

Interrelationship of Union Levels

There are essentially three levels of trade-union structure, in part autonomous and yet partially very dependent upon each other: the local, the international, and the federation. At the base of this trade-union structure are the individual union members who receive various services from their local, international, and federation organizations. These services include organizing, collective bargaining, administration of contracts, research and education, publishing union journals, deciding jurisdictional problems, legislative efforts, and community activity.

It is only possible to indicate in a general way some of the activities undertaken at each of the three levels (see chart).

Size and Composition of Membership

The special questionnaire addressed to unions by the Bureau of Labor Statistics included a request for information on total membership for each union, similar to that used in preparing two previous Directories.⁵ Additional information on the number of women members and on groups of workers who were included or excluded from membership figures was requested for the first time. Many unions supplied this information which provided a basis for a more comprehensive appraisal of union membership. In no case, however, are any of the membership data to be construed as verified Government statistics.

Total Membership

An estimate of total membership at the beginning of 1952 for unions with headquarters in the United States would be between 16½ and 17 million. This estimate is based on membership information supplied to the Bureau of Labor Statistics by 170 unions as well as other available sources.

Many unions whose headquarters are in the United States have members in locals outside the United States, primarily in Canada. The data cited throughout the Directory include total union membership irrespective of location. The Forty-first Annual Report on Labour Organization in Canada, published by the Canadian Department of Labour, reported that at the beginning of 1952, 796,000 Canadian workers were members of international unions whose principal offices are in the United States.

Any comparisons between the membership data of the individual unions, and that of the major federations, must take into account the varied definitions used by unions in reporting membership. The lack of comparability is evidenced by examining the information on membership provided by many of the unions. The Bureau's questionnaire called for the average annual dues-paying membership for 1951 (see copy of questionnaire, page 42). This information was furnished by 170 unions. A lesser number of unions (150) provided either complete or partial information on whether they included or excluded five specified categories from their membership data,⁶ namely: (1) unemployed; (2) involved in work stoppages; (3) in the Armed Forces; (4) apprentices; and (5) retired and inactive workers. The membership figure shown for each union in the Directory is that reported directly by the union to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Therefore, these membership figures reflect the particular method of computing membership used by each union.

The responses of these unions, summarized in table 1, underscore the differences that may exist in the composite membership figures assembled in the Directory. They also indicate how union membership reports may be affected to some degree by factors such as periods of high or low employment; the number of members involved in work stoppages; and the age composition of the working force.

Special attention was given wherever possible to the elimination from membership reports of workers who were covered by collective bargaining agreements but who were not union members.⁷ In each case where information indicated that these workers were included, special follow-up letters were sent by the Bureau to secure a revised membership report.

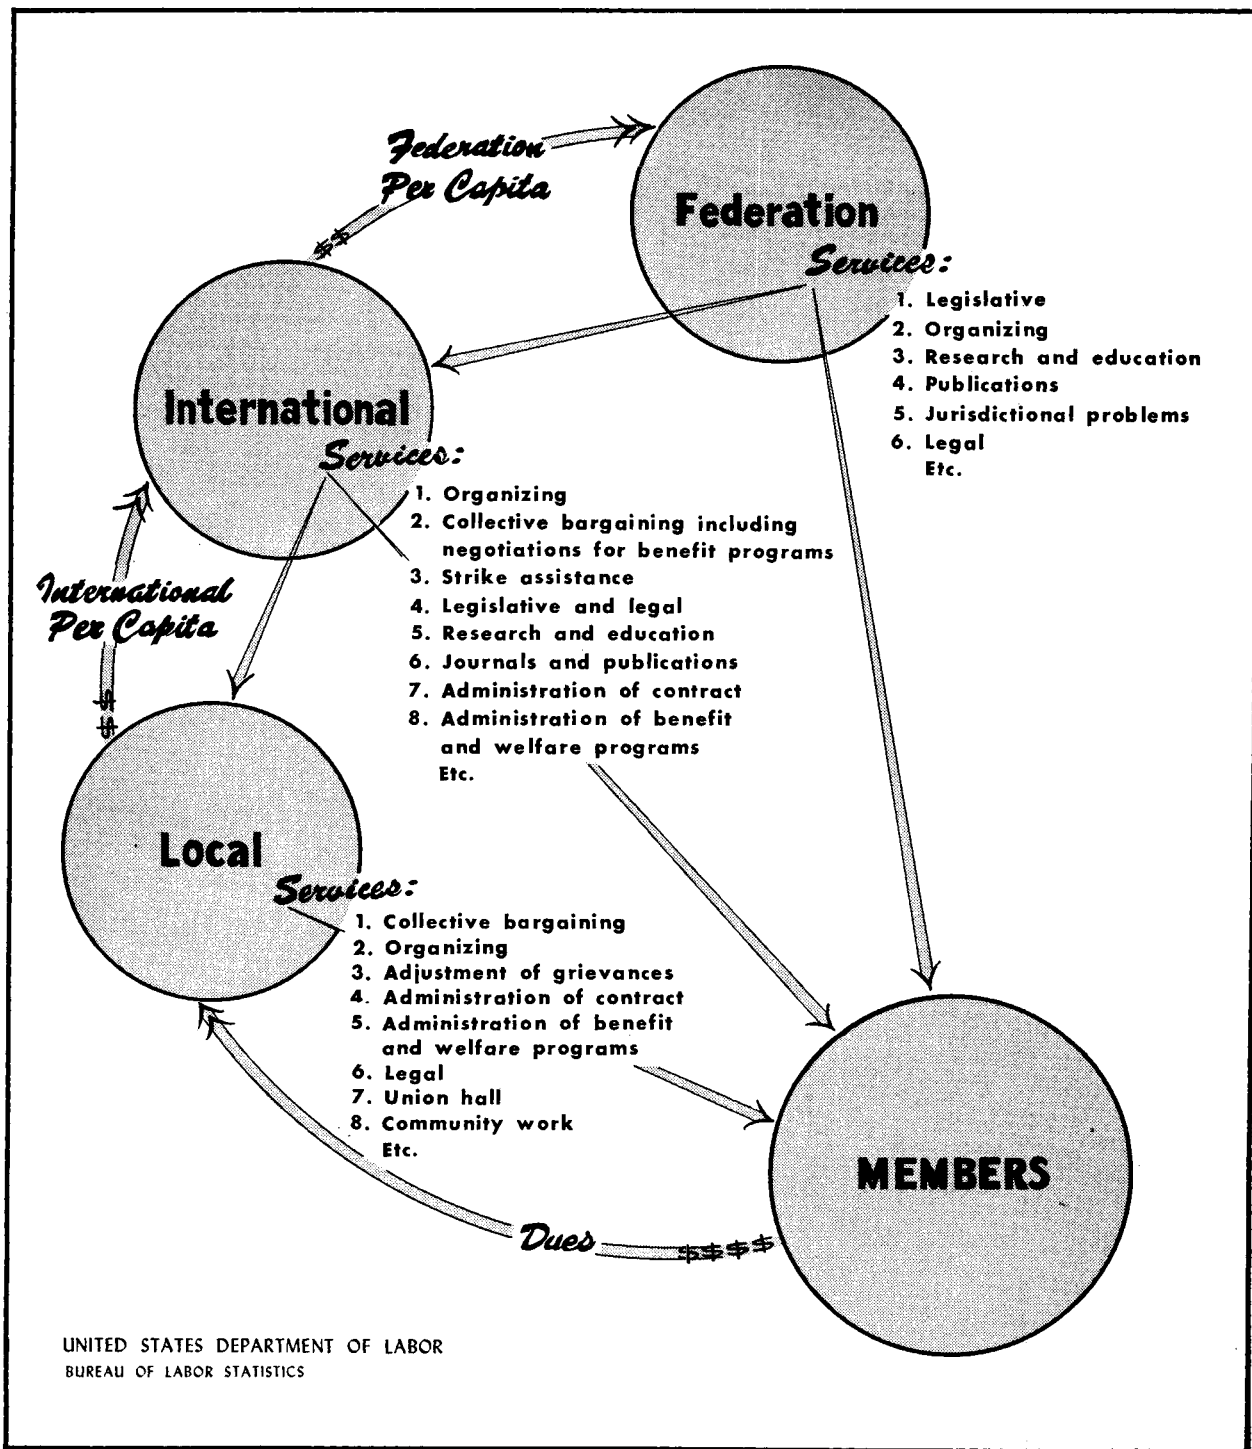

In view of all the above factors, a total obtained by adding the data for the separate unions could not be used to measure accurately total union membership in the United States.

⁶ See table in appendix for responses by individual unions.

⁷ Such a situation can occur when a union has the right to bargain for all employees in a plant but the collective agreement does not require all employees to belong to the union.

⁵ See Directory of Labor Unions in the United States, Bulletin No. 937, June 1948, and Directory of Labor Unions in the United States, 1950, Bulletin No. 980.

Flow of Union Revenues and Services*

*The listings of services are by no means exhaustive nor necessarily confined to the levels shown. Many of the individual items could be expanded, e. g., research and education could include compilation of economic data; preparation of manuals containing contract data; preparation for presentation of union views to governmental bodies; etc. An example of services that may overlap is in collective bargaining where negotiations on an industry- or company-wide basis may be led largely by international union negotiators with certain issues left for local bargaining.

Factors such as degree of union centralization, size, revenues, and industry problems affect the stress which unions place on various services.

² The data refer to total membership of unions reporting, not the number of members actually included or excluded in the specified categories. Percentages are based on 16.75 million members, the mid-point of the range of 16½ to 17 million estimated to be union members.

³ Includes some unions prohibited by law from striking, e. g., unions which organize Federal employees.

⁴ Includes some unions which do not have jurisdiction over any apprenticeable trades.

¹ Includes at least 2 unions known by the Bureau to have been organized late in 1952. Although exact membership data are not available for all unions listed in this Directory, sufficient information is available to place all the unions within the groups in this table.

Size of Unions

Approximately half (108) of the unions listed had under 25,000 members (table 2). An additional 68 unions had 25,000 but less than 100,000 members; together, these groups account for nearly 82 percent of all the unions. Of the remaining 39 unions, 32 were within a range of from 100,000 members to under a half million and 7 exceeded this upper limit. Whereas the 1950 Directory (p. 48) had only one union with 1 million or more members, this Directory lists three such unions. The distribution for all unions follows closely that shown in the previous Directory; most of the frequency classes show movement up or down of less than 1 percent compared with 1950.

It is estimated that upwards of 75,000 locals are affiliated with national or international unions listed in the Directory. Seventy unions, or about one-third of the total, had fewer than 50 locals each (table 3). An additional 99 unions had more than 50 but fewer than 500 locals. Forty-three unions had 500 or more locals each. (Information on the number of locals in the remaining three unions is insufficient for grouping within a specified range.)

Women

One hundred forty-six unions reported on the "approximate percentage of membership who are women."⁸ Using these reports and other available information, it is estimated that close to 3 million women are members of labor unions. On the basis of union reports and estimates made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, most unions (125) had either no women members or less than 10 percent of their total membership were women (table 4). Twenty-eight unions, each of which reported or is estimated to have 50 percent or more women members, account for slightly less than a combined total of 1.3 million. A number of large unions (17), where the percentages were less than 50 percent of total membership, had 25,000 or more women members each for a combined total of more than 1.2 million. Accordingly, 45 unions together accounted for nearly 2.5 million women members. Among unions having large numbers of women workers are those having their principal jurisdiction in the apparel trades, service trades, communications work, textile mills, and electrical goods manufacturing.

Major Affiliation Changes Since 1950

The AFL added five national or international unions to its roster after publication of the last Directory of Labor Unions in 1950. Two AFL unions listed in that Directory amalgamated with other unions; one was suspended. Early in 1951, the International Association of Machinists re-affiliated with the AFL after a 5-year absence; the American Federation of Hosiery Workers and the International Metal Engravers and Marking Device Workers Union, also formerly unaffiliated unions, received AFL charters. Two newly organized AFL unions are the Insurance Agents International Union, formerly an AFL organizing council, and the International Union of Doll and Toy Workers of the United States and Canada. The AFL International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers and Helpers amalgamated with the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers of America, and the AFL United Leather Workers International Union merged with the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America; the International Spinners Union was suspended by the AFL.

In the CIO, the federation expelled three additional unions in 1950 on charges that they were Communist-dominated, thereby completing action begun late in 1949.⁹ The three unions were the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, the International Fishermen and Allied Workers of America, and the National Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards. Charters were granted by the CIO to the formerly independent National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians, and to two newly organized unions—the United Department Store Workers of America and the United Railroad Workers of America.

Nine unions are listed in this Directory under official titles which differ from those shown in the last Directory. These changes are:

⁹ All 11 unions expelled and the dates of their expulsion were: United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America, November 2, 1949; United Farm Equipment & Metal Workers of America, November 2, 1949 (now part of the United Electrical Workers, IND); International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, February 15, 1950; United Office & Professional Workers of America, February 15, 1950, effective March 1, 1950 (now part of the Distributive, Processing & Office Workers of America, IND); United Public Workers of America, February 15, 1950, effective March 1, 1950; Food, Tobacco, Agricultural & Allied Workers Union of America, February 15, 1950, effective March 1, 1950 (now part of the Distributive, Processing & Office Workers of America, IND); American Communications Association, June 15, 1950; International Fur & Leather Workers' Union of U. Union Conventions and Publications

Union conventions are generally held at specified intervals (table 5) primarily to hear reports of stewardship from officers, to determine policy, and to elect officers. One hundred thirty-two unions hold conventions at intervals of 2 years or less. Fifty-nine unions meet at 3-year or longer intervals. Seven unions hold membership referendum votes to determine whether conventions are to be held. No provision for holding conventions applies to 11 unions, most of them with 10,000 or fewer members.

Official publications are issued by 174 of the 215 unions listed. Of these unions, 7 reported 2 publications. These national or international union journals are primarily designed to keep the membership informed of developments affecting their own union, as well as of the labor movement as a whole. One hundred twenty-six union journals are published monthly; 15 on a biweekly or semi-monthly basis; and another 15 bimonthly. Eight publications appear weekly and 11 quarterly; 1 appears semiannually; and 5 are published irregularly. Of the 41 unions with no publication, only 6 have more than 25,000 members; the remainder are primarily unions with fewer than 5,000 members.

Research and Education Directors

The compilation and interpretation of various data is a function frequently assigned to union research personnel. These staff members often draw up special reports and manuals for use in collective bargaining or in hearings before Government agencies. Union educational activity is maintained either as a separate program or is merged with the research function. Union reports and other available sources were used to obtain information on research and education directors listed in the Directory.

A total of 89 unions listed employees specifically engaged as research directors and 54 had education directors. In 50 of these unions both research and education directors were listed, but in 26 instances the same individual was director of both activities. Some unions also name the president or secretary-treasurer as research or education director, but for purposes of this Directory they were not listed as such.

Currently the AFL has 109 national or international unions and 5 major departments. For the year ending August 31, 1951, the average membership of the AFL based on per capita payments received from affiliated unions was 7,846,245.¹⁴ The use of per capita payments apparently understates AFL membership. Ninety-three AFL unions reported their average dues-paying membership for 1951 on the Bureau of Labor Statistics questionnaire used in the preparation of this Directory. By combining these reports with the 1951 AFL per capita data for the remaining 16 unions and the AFL's directly affiliated federal labor unions, it would appear that total AFL membership is approximately 9½ million.

CONVENTIONS:

Held annually on the third Monday in September. The 1953 convention is scheduled for September 21 in St. Louis, Mo.

¹² Elected secretary-treasurer by the executive council to replace George Meany, who had held this office since 1939.

¹³ Appointed by the executive council to replace the late Joseph N. Weber, honorary president, American Federation of Musicians, who died December 12, 1950.

¹⁴ This AFL per capita figure was 8,098,302 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1952. The late William Green, AFL president, reported at the 1952 AFL convention that "if we include those other members whose per capita tax payments have not yet been received the figure will be close to 8,500,000 American Federation of Labor members."

Founded as an independent educational agency in 1921, the Workers Education Bureau performed services for the AFL and its affiliated unions for many years. By convention vote in 1949, the AFL approved action to integrate the WEB into the Federation's structure as its department of education. This was formally completed late in 1950.

President
MATTHEW WOLL

Secretary-Treasurer
RAYMOND F. LEHENY

The function of the Union Label and Service Trades Department is primarily to publicize the official emblems—union labels, shop cards, and service buttons—of 57 affiliated national and international unions. Formerly known as the Union Label Trades Department, the name was changed at the Department's 1952 convention to give recognition to the expanded activities of AFL affiliates in the service trades. As part of its campaign to promote the sale of union label goods and the patronage of union services, the department has sponsored for the past several years an annual Union Industries Show featuring exhibitions of products and services of AFL members. The Eighth Union Industries Show is scheduled for April 18-25, 1953, in Minneapolis, Minn.

CONVENTIONS:

Held on the Friday before the AFL convention. The 1953 convention is scheduled for September 18, in St. Louis, Mo.

LEO E. GEORGE

Secretary-Treasurer
ORRIN A. BURROWS

This council was formed in 1945 as a planning organization through which leaders of AFL unions having members in Government service could prepare programs for legislation and administrative adjustments. The Government Employees Council is composed of 24 unions.

AFL COUNCILS

These councils are formed at a stage prior to the attainment of full-fledged status as affiliated national unions. In 1951 the AFL granted a charter to the Insurance Agents International Union formerly organized as the National Federation of Insurance Agents' Council. As of late 1952, the AFL had four councils:

Aluminum Workers Council:
804 Washington Bldg., Louisville 2, Ky.
President: E. R. Stahl.

Match Workers Council:
230 West Center St., Akron 3, Ohio.
President: Thos. Dethloff.

Metal and Enamelware Workers Council, Fabricated:
732-733 Central National Bank Bldg., Richmond 19, Va.
President: Paul J. Smith.

Sugar Workers Council:
459 New Brotherhood Bldg., Kansas City, Kans.
President: R. E. James.

*On March 2, 1953, this Council was granted an international union charter as the Aluminum Workers International Union (AFL). This action raised the number of AFL national or international union affiliates to 110.

Established by a resolution of the 1947 convention of the AFL, to meet the "need for sound political education and effective political action by organized labor." Those activities of the League which are strictly political in nature are financed by voluntary contributions from AFL members and their friends. Publication of the former official newspaper of LLPE, the League Reporter, was discontinued in December 1951 and political education material now appears in the AFL News-Reporter. Activities of LLPE include the provision of speakers for meetings, organization of local LLPE units, research services, and the sponsorship of a Radio Department.

Late in 1952 the CIO had 33 national or international unions. Twenty-seven CIO unions reported their average dues-paying membership for 1951 to the Bureau of Labor Statistics in answer to its questionnaire. The combined total membership as reported for these 27 unions is over 4.6 million. Based upon information from other available sources, it is estimated that an additional nearly one-half million are members of the remaining six CIO unions, two CIO organizing committees and directly affiliated local industrial unions. Accordingly, total CIO membership appears to be approximately 5 million.¹⁶

¹⁵ Elected president at the CIO convention in Atlantic City, N. J., on December 4, 1952, following the death of Philip Murray in San Francisco, Calif., on November 9, 1952.

¹⁶ The CIO does not publish per capita payments made by individual affiliated unions to the federation. However, it does publish total per capita receipts. Such an aggregate figure for the year ending September 30, 1951, was published in the CIO News for December 24, 1951. If this figure is divided by $1.20 (the

National and International Unions

A total of 215 unions are included in this section of the Directory. All of the 109 national or international unions affiliated with the AFL, and the 33 affiliated with the CIO are listed. Seventy-three "independent" or unaffiliated unions also are listed, although in some instances these unions are not strictly "national" in scope. Unions in the latter category were listed if information indicated that they had at least 2 local branches and agreements with more than 1 employer or if they had negotiated 10 or more agreements with different employers.

Each union is listed alphabetically by the key word or words relating to the craft or industry within which the organization primarily operates. Union affiliation is indicated: AFL (American Federation of Labor); CIO (Congress of Industrial Organizations); or Ind ("independent", or unaffiliated union). For the convenience of those who are accustomed to identifying a union by its full official title (e. g., International Union, United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America), a "finding list" appears in the back of the Directory.

Most of the unions provided the information necessary for an adequate listing in the Directory. This information was supplemented in some instances by reference to official union sources such as convention proceedings, officers' reports, or journals. As regards membership data, each union was requested to indicate its average annual dues-paying membership for the year 1951. The membership figure for each union is, therefore, that submitted directly to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, except when noted by an asterisk indicating paid per capita membership as published in AFL 1951 convention proceedings.

¹ Based on 146 union replies to the Bureau of Labor Statistics questionnaire item requesting information on "approximate percentage of membership who are women." 81 unions are recorded in the table, since only unions having approximately 100 or more women members are listed. Of the 65 unions which replied and are not listed, about 2/3 reported that they had no women members and the remainder either had fewer than 100 members or reported on the percentage of women members but did not furnish total membership against which the percentage could be applied.
