Preface

The Bureau of Labor Statistics conducts surveys of wage rates and straight-time hours of work in selected cities of 100,000 inhabitants or more for specified crafts or jobs as provided in labor-management agreements. They are done annually in the construction and local transit industries and biennially for printing trades, local trucking, and grocery stores. Wage rates and hours presented in this report are those in effect the first workday in July, as reported to the Bureau by the appropriate local labor organizations in each city included in the survey.

Preliminary listings of union wage rates and hours for local truckdrivers and helpers in each city were issued earlier. Copies of these are available from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Washington, D.C. 20212, or any of its regional offices listed on the inside back cover of this bulletin.

This study was conducted in the Bureau's Office of Wages and Industrial Relations. Mary Kay Rieg of the Division of Occupational Wage Structures prepared this bulletin, which provides a comprehensive account of the current study. In addition, it includes trend indexes of wage rates and hours for 1936-77. Field work for the survey was directed by the Assistant Regional Commissioners for Operations.

Local Truckdrivers and Helpers, July 1, 1977

Summary

Union wage rates for local truckdrivers and helpers in cities of at least 100,000 inhabitants averaged $8.03 an hour on July 1, 1977—an increase of 8.9 percent from a year earlier.¹ This increase, which was the highest reported for such workers since 1972, raised the Bureau's wage rate index for local truckdrivers and helpers to 223.9 (1967=100). (See table 1.)

Wage rates for truckdrivers averaged $8.09 an hour, compared with $7.28 for helpers. (See table 2.) Among the factors influencing wage rates were city size, regional location, and type of delivery.

Industry characteristics

The 1977 local trucking survey covered about 322,000 drivers and 28,000 helpers who were active union members in the 153 cities with populations of at least 100,000, as recorded in the 1970 Census.² Excluded were drivers and helpers in smaller cities, those paid on a mileage or commission basis, and over-the-road drivers operating either between cities or between various parts of the country.

Slightly over two-fifths of the drivers covered by the survey were under the nationwide general freight agreement with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, and Warehousemen (Ind.).³

¹See appendix A for procedures used to compute national and individual city average wage rates and changes in rates.

²Includes drivers working or available to work at designated contract rates; excludes retirees and members in institutions.

³General freight drivers negotiate on a nationwide basis for increases in wages. However, hourly rates vary because some locals had higher or lower wage rates when national bargaining was initiated for general freight drivers in 1964. Also, differentials are paid for driving certain kinds of trucks.

In early April 1976, a new general freight agreement was reached. Terms of the settlement included an increase of $1.65 an hour over 3 years, unlimited cost-of-living adjustments, and an increase of $17 per week in benefits. For more details, see Current Wage Developments, April 1976, p. 1. Subsequent to the July 1977 survey, these drivers received a 50-cent deferred increase and a 39 cent cost-of-living adjustment per hour, effective Apr. 1, 1978.

⁴For an account of the earlier survey, see Union Wages and Hours, Local Truckdrivers and Helpers, July 1, 1976, Bulletin 1984 (Bureau of Labor Statistics, 1978).

Most bargaining in the trucking industry, however, is conducted at a local or regional level. Individual trucking locals (in most cases affiliated with the Teamsters) usually negotiate with one company or a group of firms for separate wage rates and benefits by type of hauling, such as building and heavy/highway construction, building material and supplies, parcel service, and grocery operations.

Drivers' helpers, who ride on the truck and assist in loading and unloading, were most commonly engaged in moving and storage services and in delivery of beer (or other alcoholic beverages), furniture, general freight, and groceries. In recent years, many local contracts either have eliminated the distinction between drivers and helpers or have set the same rates for the two classifications. (See the section on driver/helper wage comparisons under "Type of delivery".)

Wage trends

Between July 1, 1976, and July 1, 1977, wage rates advanced 8.9 percent for all drivers and helpers combined⁴ (table 2). Drivers' rates advanced 8.9 percent and helpers' rates, 8.7 percent. As text table 1 shows, annual increases, relatively small in the 1967-69 period (5 to 6 percent), accelerated during 1969-72 to between 10 and 12.5 percent, and then receded to around 7.5 to 8 percent between 1972 and 1976. The July 1976-77 increase was the largest reported since 1972. It included the impact of the first "uncapped" cost-of-living adjustment (21 cents an hour) under the nationwide general freight agreement. Under the terms of the previous contract, annual cost-of-living adjustments (COLA) were limited, or capped, at 11 cents. The additional 10 cents an hour of COLA for general freight drivers boosted the national wage average for all drivers covered by the survey by 4 cents, or about 0.5 percentage points.

Wage rates increased for about 96 percent of all drivers and helpers during the July 1, 1976-77 period; increases most commonly fell between 9 and 10 percent (table 5). In cents-per-hour terms, increases generally ranged from 70 to 80 cents (table 4).

Regionally, increases ranged from 10.2 percent in the Southwest to 7.7 percent in the Middle Atlantic States (table 7). With few exceptions, average increases fell between 7 and 10 percent in each of the cities studied (table 11). Cents-per-hour and percent changes by city size are shown in table 9.

Average wage rates

Union wage rates for truckdrivers and helpers combined averaged $8.03 an hour on July 1, 1977. For truckdrivers, the average was $8.09, compared with $7.28 for helpers. Just under one-half of all drivers had hourly rates of between $8.40 and $8.80 an hour—primarily general freight drivers under the master freight agreement (table 3). Helpers' rates were distributed more widely; nearly one-half had rates between $7.60 and $8.60 an hour.

Regionally, wage rates for truckdrivers ranged from $7.71 an hour in the Mountain States to $8.28 in the Pacific—a difference of 7 percent (table 10). The interregional spread for helpers was substantially greater; their rates ranged from $4.80 in the Southeast to $8.03 in New England—a difference of 67 percent.

When cities were grouped by population size, the largest size group was found to have the lowest average, largely due to the influence of wage rates in New York City, which accounted for one-third of the union members in the size group and had the lowest average wage in the group (table 8). Averages of the remaining three size groups were almost identical—only 6 cents separated the highest and the lowest average. However, individual cities within the same size group differed significantly, reflecting regional influences on averages and the relative importance of the various types of delivery within each city.

Type of delivery

Separate data on wage rates and membership distributions were developed by type of delivery for nine major driver classifications common to all parts of the country (text table 2). These classifications accounted for about four-fifths of the drivers covered by the study. General freight, the largest classification, accounted for 43 percent of all drivers; building and heavy/highway construction, and building materials and supplies each made up 10 percent. The relative importance of these three classifications—among the highest paying within a city—varied widely among regions and cities. General freight drivers, for example, made up at least a majority of all drivers in 16 of 18 cities studied in the Southeast, Southwest, and Middle West, while in the Pacific and Mountain States they were a majority in only 2 of the 16 cities studied.

Average wage rates were highest for building and heavy/highway construction drivers ($8.83) and lowest for drivers hauling bakery goods ($6.31). General freight drivers—the largest single classification studied—averaged $8.53 an hour. Regionally, averages for most major classifications were generally highest in the Pacific States and lowest in the South (text table 3). Among individual cities, the highest paid drivers varied by type of hauling (text table 4). General freight drivers, for example, had the highest average in 7 of the 8 cities studied in the Southeast, while in the Pacific States they held a similar position in only 1 of 13 cities.

Despite relatively small differences in their regional wage levels, general freight drivers, because of their large numbers, usually are an important explanatory factor in overall regional and city wage averages. All drivers in the Pacific States, for example, averaged 6 percent more than those in the Southeast, but when general freight drivers' rates were excluded from the overall averages, the differential increased to 29 percent. In this instance, wage rates of general freight drivers were well above the rates for other drivers in the Southeast ($8.52 compared to $6.31) but only slightly above those of other Pacific Coast drivers ($8.61 compared to $8.16). The different proportion of general freight drivers in each region—27 percent in the Pacific States and 68 percent in the Southeast—actually helped to dampen the average wage differential between regions.

Driver-helper pay relationships also were influenced by type of delivery. Although drivers averaged 11 percent more than helpers, much of this wage advantage reflected differences in the distribution of drivers and helpers among cities and trucking operations with disparate pay levels rather than differences in contract rates paid the two classifications within the same city for the same type of delivery (table 12). General freight drivers, for example, had less than a 4 percent wage-rate advantage over their helpers in 23 of the 28 cities permitting comparison (text table 5). This relationship generally held for other types of delivery as well. In only a few instances did the driver/helper differential exceed the nationwide average differential of 11 percent.

Hours of work

About 97 percent of the drivers and helpers were covered by agreements providing for a maximum of 40 hours per week at straight-time rates (table 6). Slightly under 2 percent had maximum workweeks of less than 40 hours.

Employer contributions to funds

Nearly all local truckdrivers and helpers covered by the survey were provided benefits through insurance or pension funds either fully or partially paid for by the employer (table 12). These payments were usually the same for drivers and helpers covered by one agreement.

NOTE: Because of rounding, sums of individual items may not equal totals. Variations in the size of annual increases from survey to survey may reflect, in part, variations in the timing of negotiations. Data do not include increases made later than July 1, 1977, that are retroactive to July 1 or before; such retroactive increases are included in the wage rates reported in the following year's survey. Dash indicates no changes reported for specified interval.

Appendix A. Scope and Method of Survey

Union wage rates and hours reported in this bulletin were agreed on through collective bargaining between trade unions and employers, and are defined as (1) the basic, or minimum, wage rates (excluding holiday, vacation, and other benefit payments made regularly or credited to the worker each pay period); and (2) the maximum schedules of hours at straight-time rates. Wage rates in excess of the negotiated minimum, which may be paid for special qualifications or other reasons, are excluded.

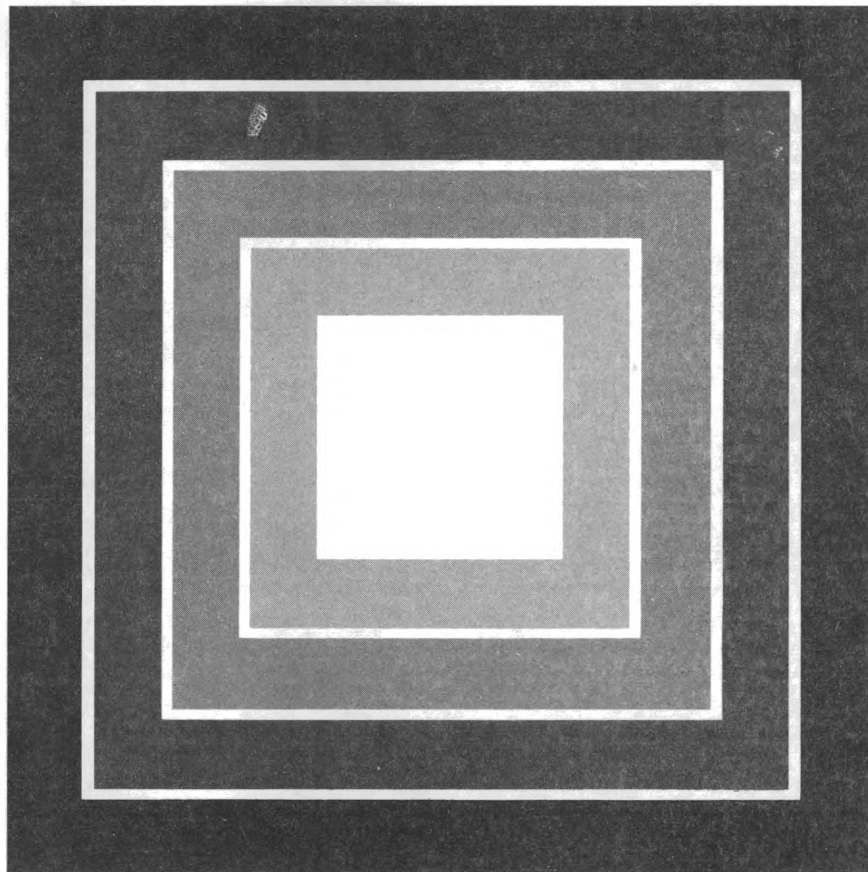

The current survey is designed to reflect the union wage rates of local truckdrivers and helpers in all cities of 100,000 inhabitants or more as recorded in the 1970 Census of Population. Included are all cities of 500,000 inhabitants or more and most cities of 250,000 to 500,000 inhabitants. Data for cities studied are weighted to represent cities not surveyed. In order to provide appropriate regional representation, each region was considered separately when city weights were assigned.

The survey covered about 322,000 drivers and 28,000 helpers who were active union members in all 153 cities of 100,000 inhabitants or more. The information presented is based on data collected for approximately 253,000 local truckdrivers and 24,000 helpers in the 66 cities studied. The study excludes local city drivers paid on a mileage or commission basis as well as over-the-road drivers operating between cities or between various parts of the United States. Data were obtained primarily from local union officials by mail questionnaire. In some instances, however, Bureau field representatives visited local union officials to obtain the desired information.

Average wage rates, designed to show current levels, are based on wage rates in effect in each city on the first workday in July 1977, weighted by the number of union members at each rate in the area. These averages are not designed for precise year-to-year comparisons because of fluctuations in membership in the classifications studied. Average cents-per-hour and percent changes from July 1, 1976, to July 1, 1977, however, are based on comparable quotations for the various job classifications in both periods, weighted by the memberships reported for the current (1977) survey. The index series, designed for trend purposes, is constructed similarly.
