REVIEW OF JULY.

The developments during July were on the whole quite favorable, and on the Stock Exchange considerable buoyancy was manifested. The strike at the anthracite mines continued throughout the month, but the effort to get the bituminous miners to join in the movement failed. This was one of the factors that caused the improved feeling, inasmuch as it removed a threatening feature in the situation. The general convention of the United Mine Workers took place on the date fixed, namely the 17th, but instead of the bituminous miners joining the ranks of the idlers, as had been feared might be the case, the gathering decided merely to extend pecuniary aid to the strikers in the anthracite fields. Very little work of any kind was attempted at the anthracite mines, and this little the strikers opposed. At Shenendoah, Pa., riots and bloodshed ensued, and on the 30th Governor Stone of Pennsylvania was obliged to send State troops to the scene.

There was also at one time the prospect of serious labor troubles at Chicago, the freight handlers employed by the twenty-four railroads entering that city having gone on strike and the teamsters also going out in sympathy. For several days, as a result, the freight movement in and out of Chicago was almost completely tied up. But this particular trouble was on the 16th brought to a close, when the strikers voted almost unanimously to return to work, leaving the wage scale and other questions in dispute to be settled between the men and their respective roads, which in effect meant that the strikers made an unqualified surrender. In the strike in the soft-coal regions in Virginia and West Virginia the men at the mines along the Chesapeake & Ohio continued out, but those at the mines along the Norfolk & Western gradually returned to work.

These rains involved the possibility of detriment only in the case of the low lands, which means that there was a likelihood of damage over a very limited territory.

The report of the Agricultural Bureau at Washington, issued the 10th of the month, on the crop situation the first of July, reflected the favorable promise
