LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
CHILDREN'S BUREAU,
Washington, May 1, 1924.

SIR: There is transmitted herewith a report entitled "Laws Relating to Interstate Placement of Dependent Children," which was prepared at the request of a conference of State officials of Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, West Virginia, and Delaware who are responsible for the care of dependent children in their respective States.

The texts of these laws and the chart were compiled by Lulu L. Eckman, of the bureau staff, and the analysis of legislation was made by Emelyn Foster Peck. Legislation of 1924 is included so far as it was available at the time of going to press.

Realization of the need of legislation on this subject is of recent development and not yet general. The first law regulating the "importation" of dependent children was enacted in Michigan in 1887, and in 1899 Indiana, Illinois, and Minnesota passed laws that were for many years regarded as models for legislation on this subject.

Although 20 of the 48 States still provide no legal regulation with reference to the placement of dependent children from other States, interest in the subject has greatly increased during the last decade. It is believed, therefore, that this analysis of existing laws is timely. Respectfully submitted.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Secretary of Labor.

LAWS RELATING TO INTERSTATE PLACEMENT OF DEPENDENT CHILDREN.

SUMMARY OF STATE "IMPORTATION AND EXPORTATION LAWS."

By EMELYN FOSTER PECK.

RECOGNITION OF THE PROBLEM.

Throughout the United States a large body of State laws has developed in regulation of the placing of homeless children in family homes. Most of these laws apply only to children placed within the bounds of their own States. Laws restricting and regulating the passage of children for this purpose from one State to another have been of slower growth.

Early State conditions, especially in the West, were not such as to make the "importation" and "exportation" of dependent children seem a pressing problem. Later, as conditions have changed and cities with the aim of salvage have sent what threatened to be the social waste of their congestion into rural communities of neighboring or distant States, public consciousness has become more alert to the financial and social risks involved. Moreover, as public feeling of responsibility for the protection of childhood has developed, recognition is growing of the helpless situation of dependent children who are sent from one State to another.

The statutes of 28 States now¹ include measures regulating the importation of children for placing in family homes, and 4 States have legal provision regulating the sending of children out of the State for this purpose.

In 1887 Michigan included these children in a law regulating the apprenticing, binding, or other disposition of children and in 1895 required that any person, society, or asylum placing children from another State file a bond with the probate judge of the county for each child so brought.² In 1899 Indiana, Illinois, and Minnesota enacted measures that appear to have been models for much of the later legislation on the subject.³ The Minnesota law was later repealed.

Within the period 1901-1904 Kansas, Missouri, Kentucky, Iowa, North and South Dakota, and Ohio passed similar legislation. New Jersey followed in 1907, Maryland in 1908, Nevada in 1909, and

Nebraska and Michigan—the latter adding more extended provisions to the earlier one for bonding—in 1913.⁴

From 1915 through 1923—a period of great activity in child-welfare legislation—13 States enacted laws on this subject. These were Wyoming, West Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Minnesota, Oregon, Vermont, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, New York, and Utah.⁵ South Carolina passed a law on this subject in 1924.⁶ The Minnesota and Virginia acts are notable for constructive development, and the Georgia and Alabama acts follow those of Minnesota and Virginia, respectively.

MAIN FEATURES OF THE IMPORTATION LAWS.

The principal points covered in the laws now in force with regard to the importation of dependent children from other States are the following: (1) Agency responsible for enforcement; (2) application of the law to organizations or individuals sending the children or to individuals receiving them, with exceptions noted; (3) requirement of enforcing agency's consent to the bringing in of any dependent child from another State or approval of the home in which he is to be placed; (4) bond or other guaranty required of the organization or individual sending or bringing the child, or of both; (5) conditions of the bond, with respect to (a) the exclusion of certain types of children, (b) the notification of the State enforcing agency when a child from another State has been or is to be placed, (c) the assurance of proper home conditions, (d) the requirement of supervision and reports after children are placed, (e) the observance of rules and regulations of the enforcing agency, and (f) the removal of the child if he becomes a public charge or a social menace; (6) penalties for disregarding the provisions of the acts. These features of the State laws will be considered in the following sections.

Enforcing agency.

Among the 28 States having laws regulating the importation of dependent children the authority charged with enforcement is usually the board or department which stands at the head of the State system of public relief—the State board of charities, department of public welfare, or similar body. The exceptions are Oregon, West Virginia, Nevada, Kentucky, South Dakota, Alabama, and Utah.

In Oregon the State child-welfare commission, in West Virginia the State board of children's guardians, and in Alabama the State child-welfare department⁷ are the responsible public agencies. Nevada and Utah, which have no State board of charities or similar body, place responsibility for enforcing the law upon the attorney general of the State and the State board of health, respectively.⁸ In Kentucky responsibility is divided between the Kentucky Children's Home Society (a private organization) and the county judge of the county where the child is placed. The person or organization sending the child into the State must notify the children's home society and thereafter report to that society; and the society is to notify such person or organization if the child becomes a public charge. The bond must be furnished to the county judge and must be acceptable to him.⁹

The South Dakota law provides for the filing of a bond with the treasurer of the county into which the child comes, approval of one freeholder and of the board of county commissioners being required before the bond is valid. It is added that, in case any person has in his care a child brought into the State for whom no bond has been filed, that person is required by the law to notify the State board of charities and corrections. The State board is to notify the county court of the county where the child is living, which court thereafter is to be responsible "for the protection and benefit of such child and the people of the State."¹⁰

Generally speaking, the enforcing agency most fitting and most promising for effective action is the State board or department, wherever a strong central board or department has been established.

Application of the law.

In 15 of the 28 State laws it is specified that the provisions are to apply to organizations sending children into the State,¹¹ in 13 that they are to apply to persons, or to organizations or persons, so doing.¹² In one case, Vermont, the approach is from a different angle: The home into which the child goes must obtain permission from the enforcing authority to receive the child and must furnish bond or other guaranty to that body.¹³

¹² Laws of Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Utah.

¹³ Vermont: 1919, No. 208, sec. 1.

Certain of the enactments allow exception in their application. The Indiana act exempts from regulation a relative bringing in a child for the purpose of giving him a home in his own or any other family.¹⁴ Maryland allows a like exemption.¹⁵ New Jersey exempts a relative bringing in a child for placing in his own or another home only if the State enforcing agency has given its consent.¹⁶ Kentucky and South Dakota provide that a resident may bring into the State, for care in his own home, a child who is a relative.¹⁷ The Pennsylvania law¹⁸ exempts a relative bringing a child into the State to give him a home in his own family and further exempts the placing of a child in any institution in the State, providing that the child is not removed therefrom and placed out except in accordance with the provisions of the act. The Maryland law also does not apply to the placing of children in institutions. The Iowa act is not to be construed as prohibiting an Iowa resident from receiving and adopting into his family any child from another State.¹⁹ The Minnesota and Utah laws contain provisos to the effect that nothing therein shall be deemed to prohibit a resident from bringing a child into the State for adoption into his own family. In North Dakota the law does not apply to a resident of the State who personally brings a child into the State for permanent care or adoption into his own family, except that he must report to the board of administration his name and address, the name of the child, and the name and address of the person or agency from which the child was received. The South Carolina law does not apply to persons related to such children by blood or marriage within the sixth degree. By an amendment passed in 1924 New York exempts "an authorized agency" from the application of the act.

However, in 17 of the 28 acts no exceptions as to application are noted; and in 4, exception is made only in the case of a relative bringing a child into the State for the purpose of giving him a home. A large majority, therefore, recognize that for all children brought from outside to live among strangers the State should assume a certain measure of responsibility.

Consent or license required.

Ten²⁰ of the 28 States require the written consent or formal license of the enforcing agency, along with the bond or guaranty, before a person or organization from another State may bring any child in for placing—a requirement which implies power to deny right of entry. Virginia, Alabama, and Utah require consent but no bond. The laws of other States omit the requirement of consent, simply requiring that no child shall be brought in unless bond or guaranty shall have been furnished.

A significant clause in the New Jersey law specifies that the request for license must be accompanied by a certificate or other evidence showing that the applicant is approved by the State board or similar body of the State from which the child is brought, and the New York law requires evidence that the applicant holds a license or is approved by the State board of charities or similar body in the State in which he resides or has his principal place of business.²¹

Minnesota in 1919, Virginia and Georgia in 1922, Alabama in 1923, and South Carolina in 1924, took a notable step in the matter of consent on the part of the enforcing agency. Before any child is brought into the State for placing, the enforcing agency must be notified of the name and address of the person with whom he is to be placed and must give approval of the home as a suitable one for the child.²²

Bond or other guaranty.

Thirteen States require bonds of specified amounts ranging from $10,000 in Indiana, Kentucky, and Maryland to $500 in South Dakota. In Indiana, Maryland, and New York, these must be approved by the State enforcing agency—the State board—and are blanket bonds covering children placed throughout the State.²³ The bond required in Kentucky covers only the children placed in a given county and must be acceptable to the judge of the county court.²⁴ Delaware requires a blanket bond of $3,000, approved by the State authority and covering the State, to be furnished by the person or agency placing the child or by the individual with whom the child is placed, or both, as the State authority may require.²⁵ Minnesota, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania²⁶ require bonds of $1,000, acceptable to the State enforcing agency and covering the State. Iowa requires the $1,000 bond and such other guaranty as the State board of control may require.²⁷ The Michigan bond of $1,000 is filed with the county judge and covers children placed within the given county only.²⁸ Georgia requires a $1,000 bond for each child brought into the State.²⁹ In North Dakota the bond of $1,000 must be approved by the attorney general of the State and filed with the State board of administration.³⁰ The $500 bond of South Dakota is made out to the county treasurer after approval by the board of county commissioners and signature by at least one freeholder of the State, and covers children placed within the one county only.³⁰ In Virginia and Alabama no bond is required, but the agency bringing or sending the child into the State must enter into a written agreement with the State enforcing agency to conform to the provisions of the act.

In all the other States except Utah and South Carolina, where no bond or guaranty is required, the enforcing agency is to be furnished with such guaranty as it may require.³¹

It should be noted that under the recent Minnesota, Virginia, and Alabama legislation,³² while Virginia and Alabama require no bond and Minnesota provides for a moderate one only—$1,000 covering the State—the State nevertheless keeps a close grip on the situation. The enforcing agency may at any time cut short the activities of any person or agency disregarding provisions of the law, since no child can be admitted without the consent of that authority.

Conditions of the bond.

Certain children to be excluded.—The first condition of the bond usually is that certain types of children shall not be brought into the State. Most of the enactments on this subject exclude children who are mentally unsound or dangerously subnormal, or so imperfect physically as to be a social menace or unable to achieve self-support. Georgia, Indiana, Minnesota, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina debar any child who is incorrigible or of unsound mind or body.³³ In Delaware, Kentucky, and North Dakota, these classes are excluded and also, in Delaware those who are mentally subnormal; in Kentucky, those who have contagious or incurable diseases; and in North Dakota, those who are likely to become public charges.^{33a} Laws of other States³⁴ forbid the entrance of children who have contagious or incurable disease, or who are deformed, feeble-minded, or of vicious character.

The Virginia and Alabama laws, which though requiring no bond protect the State against undesirable importation by requiring consent from the State board for each child admitted, also require that the importing agency shall enter into a written agreement with the board to remove any such child from the State whenever the board requests the removal.³⁵ The Maryland law on this point is curiously worded. No "actual pauper, vagrant, criminal, incorrigible, insane, or helplessly crippled or diseased child" is to be brought in without the written consent of the Maryland Board of State Aid and Charities, and a $10,000 blanket bond is required against public dependency.³⁶

Notification.—Certain State laws provide that the person or agency placing children from outside the State must notify the State enforcing agency, either before or at the time of sending. Indiana provides that the enforcing agency—the State board—is to be notified immediately upon the placing and given the name and age of the child and the address of the person with whom he is placed.³⁷ Maryland, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania have the same provision.³⁸ In New York^{38a} the initial report to the board must include, in addition, the name of the State, and the city, town, borough, or village or the name of the country from which the child came, the religious faith of the parents and of the child, the full name and last residence of the parent or parents, and the name of the custodian from whom the child was taken. The agency must also report the death of the child or any reboarding, replacement, or other disposition. In North Dakota,^{38b} on the other hand, the law requires simply a report to the board of administration without specifying what the report shall contain. In Michigan the county agent must be notified;³⁹ in Kentucky, the State superintendent of the Kentucky Children's Home Society.⁴⁰

Minnesota, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, and South Carolina⁴¹ provide that the State board shall be notified before the child is placed. If it decides that the child is to be admitted, it shall grant a certificate stating that in its opinion the proposed home is a suitable one for the child. Minnesota, Georgia, and South Carolina, going into more detail and one step further in their provision for safeguard, require that the notification or the certificate shall give the name and age and a personal description of the child, the name and address of the person with whom the child is to be placed, and such other information as may be required by the State board.

Proper home conditions to be assured.—The Indiana law requires in each case a written contract guaranteeing a proper home for the child and making the person who receives him responsible for proper care, education, and training.⁴² Kentucky, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Minnesota, and Alabama have like provisions.⁴³ The Minnesota, Virginia, and Alabama laws add that the contract must be approved by the State enforcing agency. Georgia makes it one of the conditions of the bond that the person with whom the child is placed shall be responsible for his proper care and training.⁴⁴ In New York the provision of a suitable home and the responsibility of the person receiving the child for his proper care, education, and training are both provisions of the bond.⁴⁵

The text of the Michigan law shows great solicitude for the protection of the child. Before a child is placed in a Michigan home the home must be investigated by the county agent of the State welfare commission and the agent's statement of approval must be filed with the probate judge to whom the bond is furnished.⁴⁶

By the Delaware law⁴⁷ the person or agency responsible for the placing must abide by the rules and regulations of the State board as to health, education, and general welfare of the child. Delaware also provides that the State board may order the removal of a child whom it considers improperly placed, and if the order is not obeyed within 30 days may itself take charge of the child, collecting on the bond the amount of whatever expenses are incurred.

Supervision and reports.—Indiana requires that the responsible person or agency supervise care and training, sending an agent to visit the child at least once a year,⁴⁸ and that reports as to the condition of the child be made to the State board as that board may require. Kentucky, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland have similar provisions, Pennsylvania and Maryland requiring two visits a year.⁴⁹ New York also requires the placing agency to guarantee the care and training of the children it places.

The Michigan law places the duty of visiting once a year upon the county agent of the Michigan State Welfare Commission. As in his first investigation before the judge approved the bond, the agent is to send copies of his report to the probate judge, the State commission, and the licensee. Though the licensee is not specifically required by law to visit the child, he must keep records of the child, of his parents, of the person with whom he is placed, and of any change in residence or custody of the child, and must make annual reports thereon to the Michigan State Welfare Commission. Moreover, the State commission may visit and investigate at any time, quite as in the case of a resident child placed by a Michigan agency.⁵⁰

Minnesota, Georgia, and South Carolina make no specific requirements as to visits; but they require the responsible placing agency to report as to the location and well-being of the child, annually and at such other times as the State board of control may direct, so long as the child remains within the State and until he reaches the age of 18 or is legally adopted.⁵¹

Virginia and Alabama lay down a thoroughgoing principle as to supervision—a principle that had already been laid down in Michigan. The State board of public welfare in Virginia and the State child-welfare department in Alabama have the same right of supervision over children placed from outside the State as over resident children placed by the placing agency itself. The placing agency is by no means relieved of its responsibility, however. It must report once a year, or when the child is transferred to another home, or at any other times that the board may direct.⁵²

Utah stipulates that the placing agency keep a record of each child until he becomes 18 years of age or is legally adopted or discharged. The agency must also report annually to the State board of health as to its management, system of visitation, etc., the report determining whether or not a license shall be issued.^{52a}

Observance of rules and regulations of enforcing agency.—The laws of Alabama, Delaware, Indiana, Minnesota, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia specifically state that any rules made by the State enforcing agency on the subject of the placing of children from outside the State must be observed.⁵³ In Kentucky, Michigan, and Vermont specific provision is made that the necessary regulation (in Vermont, for issuing certificates) shall be made by the State enforcing agency.

Removal of child if he becomes a public charge.—Under the Illinois law, if the child becomes a public dependent within five years after being brought into the State the placing agency must remove him.⁵⁴

Like provision is found in the laws of Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, Ohio, South Dakota, and West Virginia.⁵⁵ Maryland requires the child's removal by the placing agency within 30 days after the receipt of written notice if he becomes a public charge before reaching the age of 21 years.⁵⁶

Vermont and Wyoming merely provide for "guaranty against the child becoming a public charge;"⁵⁷ and Oregon and Tennessee, against his becoming a public charge within five years from the time of his entrance into the State.⁵⁸ Michigan requires as a condition of the bond that the child shall not become a public charge before reaching the age of 21 years. In case of dependency, support is to be collected on the bond.⁵⁹ Nothing is said in these five laws as to returning the child to the State from which he came.

Certain States have additional provisions in regard to removal. In Indiana the child must be removed if he becomes a public charge before reaching the age of 21 years; and if within three years from his coming he is convicted of crime or misdemeanor and imprisoned, he is to be removed immediately upon his release. Failure to remove entails forfeit of $1,000, recoverable on the bond.⁶⁰ The Pennsylvania law on this point is the same.⁶¹ The New Jersey provision is similar except that the amount of the forfeit⁶² shall be determined on the basis of costs for care and prosecution. In New York the placing agency must remove within 30 days after receiving written notice a child who becomes a public charge during his minority and must guarantee the removal immediately upon release of any child who within three years from time of arrival is convicted of juvenile delinquency or crime and committed to an institution or prison. Upon failure of the licensee to remove the child the amount expended in the maintenance or prosecution of the child or for his return to the licensee is to be a charge upon the bond.^{62a}

In Delaware the child must be removed if he becomes a public charge, or is convicted of crime or misdemeanor, before reaching the age of 21 years.⁶³ Delaware and New Jersey stipulate that the placing agency shall repay any sums expended in care or prosecution. Kentucky makes the child removable if he becomes a public charge before reaching the age of 21 or if he is imprisoned within five years of the time of his coming into the State, failure to remove in either case entailing the forfeiture of $1,000 on the bond.⁶⁴

Minnesota, followed by Georgia and South Carolina, departs from the three-to-five year limit as to delinquency and provides that if the child becomes a public charge or, in the opinion of the board, a menace to the community before he reaches his twenty-first year or is adopted, the placing agency must remove him from the State.⁶⁵ In Virginia and Alabama, where there is no arrangement for bonds, the placing agency is under written agreement with the State board to remove the child at any time previous to adoption or coming of age, on the request of that board.⁶⁶ It is a notable point that Alabama, Georgia, Minnesota, North Dakota, and Virginia provide for removal on request of the enforcing agency and go into little detail as to what conditions would make the child a social menace and necessitate his removal. This is an interesting example of government by executive board rather than by strictly detailed legislative enactment—a marked feature of present-day development in the handling of social problems.

Penalties.

Besides the forfeits noted above in case of failure to remove a child who has become a public dependent, various penalties are laid down for disregarding the provisions of the act. Where a fine is the only penalty specified in the law, the amount is $100 in Delaware (for first offense), Indiana, and New Jersey; not more than $100 in Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and Wyoming; not more than $500 in Vermont; and not more than $1,000 in Maryland. Penalties of imprisonment varying from 10 days to one year, or fines of $5 to $200, or in some States both such fine and imprisonment are provided for in the laws of Alabama, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, Ohio, South Dakota, Virginia, and West Virginia. Minnesota, Virginia, Georgia, and South Carolina make violation of the law simply a misdemeanor. In Michigan a society's license may be revoked for violation of the law, and an agency operating without license not only is liable to fine or imprisonment, or both, but may be debarred from placing work for 10 years.⁶⁷

LEGAL PROVISIONS AS TO TAKING DEPENDENT CHILDREN OUT OF THE STATE.

To regulate the "exportation" of homeless children, and thus to limit the carrying of such social problems over the borders into other States calls for a broader spirit than that which simply makes for local self-protection. Though such a measure is not so immediately and demonstrably one of local self-interest, Alabama, Minnesota, North Dakota, and Virginia have risen to legislative action on this subject.

A section of the Minnesota law⁶⁸ gives the protection of State oversight to children taken out of the State for placing elsewhere in foster homes. Unless the person responsible for such placing is the child's parent or guardian he must notify the State board of control, giving the name and age and a personal description of the child, the name and address of the person with whom the child is to be placed, and any other information that the board may require. Thereafter he must report to the board annually, or more frequently if it so directs, until the child reaches the age of 18 or is legally adopted. The North Dakota law⁶⁹ is similar in respect to procedure at the time of placement, but it does not require the subsequent reports called for by the Minnesota law.

A similar section in the Alabama and Virginia laws⁶⁹ provides that in such cases the child must be placed under a written contract, approved by the State enforcing agency, to the effect that the person with whom the child is placed shall be responsible for his proper care and training. These States have the same requirement as Minnesota with regard to reports.

OUTSTANDING FEATURES OF THE LAWS.

Since the early laws of Indiana and Illinois the most notable development in legal regulation of importation and exportation of dependent children has appeared in the measures enacted by Minnesota and Virginia. The original points here are: The requirement in each case of the State board's consent to admittance to the State and of its approval of the home before the child is placed; supervision by the State board, as in the case of any child placed by that board and under its immediate care; removal of the child from the State on the request of the State board, which in this matter is given large discretionary power; careful safeguarding of children removed from the State for placing. Especially important, also, is the thorough-going plan of organization for public supervision revealed by the Michigan law.

[Section 7231 of the Compiled Laws requires that a bond of $1,000 be filed with the probate judge of the county for each child placed therein, such bond to have two sureties, one a resident of county. This section comes from an old law which the State enforcing agency considers to have been superseded to a certain extent by the later enactments (secs. 2001-2008) requiring agencies outside the State to be licensed by the State enforcing agency before they may place children within the State. Under this interpretation it appears that the bond is required only of persons and agencies that are not so licensed.]		County agent of State commission shall be notified when child is placed; also to be notified in case of adoption or subsequent removal of child. [No provision for removal but the bonding provision as found in section 7231 contains a guaranty against the child's becoming a public charge before reaching the age of 21. For interpretation of this section see col. 6.]	For violation of any of these provisions license of society may be revoked. Unless person acting, or organization which he represents, is licensed, such person is guilty of misdemeanor and liable to a fine of $25 to $100, or imprisonment for 30 to 90 days, or both, and may be debarred from such work for 10 years.
