Source tables for juvenile-court statistics, similar to those published in earlier reports, have been compiled for 1938 and 1939 and are available for reference at the Children's Bureau. They have been omitted from the published report in order to conserve printing funds for emergency use. These source tables give for individual reporting areas the data on which the summary tables are based.

Children in the Courts, 1938 and 1939¹

INTRODUCTION

The present report is the eleventh in the series of juvenile-court statistics and the sixth in the series on Federal juvenile offenders. The Children's Bureau plan for the collection and analysis of juvenile-court statistics was inaugurated in 1926 and the analysis of data concerning Federal juvenile offenders was initiated by the Children's Bureau in 1932. The publication of statistics on Federal juvenile offenders is a continuation of the cooperation of the Children's Bureau with the Department of Justice in furthering the program for the treatment of Federal juvenile offenders according to juvenile-court principles.

Each part of the report consists of an introductory discussion followed by statistical tables. Interpretative discussions similar to those presented in reports from 1927 to 1937 on juvenile-court statistics have been omitted from the present report.

The material presented in Part 1, Juvenile-Court Statistics for the 2-Year Period Ended December 31, 1939, deals primarily with delinquency cases disposed of by the courts.² Totals of dependency and neglect and special-proceedings cases dealt with by these courts are presented in table 4 (p. 6). The tabulations are based on data received from the courts that cooperate with the Children's Bureau in its plan for uniform reporting of juvenile-court statistics.

Part 2, Federal Juvenile Offenders for the 2-Year Period Ended June 30, 1939, presents information concerning juveniles under 18 years of age who violated Federal laws and came to the attention of Federal authorities during this period. The statistics presented have been collected by the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice. These cases are not included in the statistics obtained from juvenile courts, unless Federal jurisdiction is waived and arrangements are made for these juvenile offenders to be dealt with under State law in their home communities.

The analysis in part 1 of cases dealt with by the juvenile courts is based on reports of cases disposed of, whereas the statistics in part 2 for Federal juvenile offenders are based on reports assembled at different stages in the handling of the cases.

PART 1.—JUVENILE-COURT STATISTICS FOR THE 2-YEAR PERIOD ENDED DECEMBER 31, 1939

CHARACTERISTICS AND LIMITATIONS OF JUVENILE-COURT STATISTICS

The expansion and strengthening of services for socially handicapped children that have occurred in recent years lend particular interest to statistics relating to the extent of juvenile delinquency. There is a growing public understanding of delinquency as a form of social maladjustment requiring specialized treatment in a unified and comprehensive community child-welfare program, of which the juvenile court forms a part. The fact that juvenile-court statistics constitute the most comprehensive data that are collected on a Nation-wide scale concerning juvenile delinquency makes especially important the adequate understanding of the limitations of those statistics.

Statistics relating to the work of the courts in dealing with juvenile-delinquency cases are characterized by a number of limitations. In the first place the number of delinquency cases disposed of by the courts does not constitute a complete measure of the extent of juvenile delinquency. Many children whose conduct is contrary to the law never come into court. They may not be apprehended, or they may be dealt with by the police, social agencies, or school authorities. The extent to which the police deal with children varies greatly from community to community. In some cities practically all children coming to the attention of the police are referred to the juvenile court; in others the police handle many children's cases that involve minor offenses.

The visiting teachers and child-welfare workers who are now at work in many communities as part of the school system and of public child-welfare programs are dealing with numerous problems of behavior and social maladjustment among children. Group-work agencies, private-welfare agencies, and sectarian groups also provide services to problem children and their families.

The number of cases brought before the court is also influenced by factors such as the personnel and facilities of the court and the concept of the community, the social agencies, local officials, and of the court itself with regard to the function of the juvenile court.

Several other limitations characterize juvenile-court statistics. In the first place, the figures refer to the number of cases of children dealt with by the juvenile courts rather than the number of children. Some of the children may have been brought before the courts more than once during the year, and in the tables of this report such children are counted as many times as they were referred to court on new complaints. The figures, therefore, should not be interpreted as representing the number of delinquent children.

In the second place the juvenile-court laws in operation in each State determine the age limits within which children may be referred to the court. The age limit for children coming under juvenile-court jurisdiction is established by State law and in most instances is uniform throughout a State. Of the 473 courts reporting in 1939, 79³ had jurisdiction in delinquency cases over children up to 16 years of age; 244 had jurisdiction up to 17 years of age; 76 had jurisdiction up to 18 years of age, and 4, up to 21 years of age. In addition to these the 67 Indiana courts had jurisdiction over boys up to 16 years of age and over girls up to 18 years of age, and 3 Texas courts had jurisdiction over boys up to 17 years of age and over girls up to 18 years of age. Table 15 (p. 16) shows the effect of the legal age limitations under which the courts had original jurisdiction on the age distribution of the children whose cases were disposed of.

In the third place the number of delinquency cases reported by the court is affected to a considerable extent by variations in the policies of courts in the manner of handling cases. In addition to handling cases officially—that is, by filing legal papers for the initiation of court action—many courts handle certain cases unofficially. Unofficial cases are those in which legal papers are not prepared, but the cases are adjusted by the judge, referee, probation officer, or other officer of the court. Although some of the courts have records of their unofficial cases and report data regarding them, others do not keep comparable records of these cases and, therefore, report only the cases that are handled officially. Thus some of the figures included in this report represent the total delinquency cases handled by the court while others represent only a part of the cases. This variation in the policies of the reporting courts results in a degree of incomparability of data from court to court arising from the fact that the cases handled unofficially usually do not present the same types of problems as those handled officially.

All these factors must be taken into consideration in interpreting reports of the work of juvenile courts.

Data regarding juvenile-delinquency cases are reported to the Children's Bureau under two systems—either directly by individual courts or under a State-wide system sponsored by a State agency. Courts reporting directly send to the Bureau either a card for each delinquency case disposed of during the year or a summary report for all delinquency cases disposed of during the year. Courts reporting under the State-wide plan report directly to the State agency concerned with juvenile-court work or probation service; the State office then forwards to the Children's Bureau an annual report for each court in the State.

THE REPORTING AREA

The area served by the juvenile courts that reported to the Children's Bureau for the calendar year 1939 included 38 percent and for 1938, 39 percent, of the total population of the United States in 1940. The area covered was somewhat larger in these 2 years than in 1937

because of the addition of certain courts located in Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, New York, and Ohio. The reporting area for 1939 included the entire population of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Utah, and the District of Columbia; the greater part of the population of Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, and New York; two-thirds of the population of Ohio; and 35 courts in 20 other States.⁴

The reporting area for 1938 included 476 courts, of which 93 served areas of 100,000 or more population. The reporting area for 1939 included 473 courts, of which 92 served areas of 100,000 or more population. With 3 exceptions the same courts serving areas of 100,000 or more population reported in both years.⁵

The map on the cover shows the areas from which reports were received for the calendar year 1939. The reporting courts were located in each of the geographic divisions of the United States, although the number included in the geographic divisions varied considerably (table 1). These variations may be attributed in part to the degree of development of State facilities for juvenile-court work. Primarily, however, they may be attributed to the fact that the area from which juvenile-court statistics are reported has not been selected for geographical representativeness, nor by the use of any other sampling technique. The individual courts have been included in the reporting area when they expressed a desire to co-operate with the Children's Bureau in its plan to develop a uniform reporting system for juvenile-court statistics. Most of the States reporting under a State-wide system are limited to those that have some provision by statute for reporting collection of statistics by the State agency concerned with juvenile-court or probation work. Not all the States having such statutory powers, however, are included in the reporting area.

⁴ The percentage of the 1940 population included in the 1939 reports from these States was as follows: Indiana, 86 percent; Michigan, 83 percent; Missouri, 97 percent; New York, 98 percent; Ohio, 66 percent.

The reporting area for 1939 as for earlier years was particularly representative of the large urban areas. Data presented for 1939 in table 2 indicate that 77 percent of the population served by the courts in the total area in 1939 was located in areas of 100,000 or more

² In most of the States in which reporting has been made through a State agency the reporting courts have served areas representing more than 80 percent of the population of the States. Within each State, however, slight changes have occurred from year to year in the number of courts reporting and in the percentage of the population included.

³ Population for years 1927-37 are based on the 1930 census and for 1938 and 1939, on the 1940 census.

population. The area included 57 of the 92 cities in the United States that had a population of 100,000 or more in 1940.

Tables 3 and 4 show the changes during the 13-year period, from 1927 through 1939, in the number of courts cooperating and the number of cases disposed of by the courts. Table 3 gives the number of courts reporting under a State-wide system through a State agency and the number reporting directly to the Children's Bureau; it also shows the number of States represented.

Table 4 gives the number of delinquency, dependency and neglect, and special-proceedings cases reported by the courts. The number of cooperating courts has increased from 43 in 1927 to 473 in 1939; the number of delinquency cases reported increased from 30,363 in 1927 to 83,758 in 1939. The extension in the reporting area has resulted primarily from the increase in State-wide reporting of juvenile-court work. During the early years of the project, data were received for the most part through cooperation directly with individual courts.

² Special-proceedings cases were not reported prior to 1930. They include cases of petitions for commitment of feeble-minded children, adoption cases, controversies regarding custody of a child, children held as material witnesses, and certain other types of cases.

As the program developed, however, cooperation with State agencies concerned with juvenile-court work or probation service was emphasized. This emphasis on reporting through a State agency is in accordance with the general policy of the Children's Bureau of working with and through State agencies wherever possible. Through the interest of the Juvenile Court Commission of Utah, that State has been able since 1928 to furnish reports under a State-wide system. The State of Connecticut was added to the reporting area in 1931;³ Massachusetts and New York began reporting under the State-wide type of plan in 1932; Rhode Island, in 1933; Indiana, in 1934; Michigan, in 1935; Missouri, in 1937; and Ohio, in 1938. It is hoped that the gradual extension of State-wide reporting of juvenile-court statistics will afford a foundation for more adequate statistics on juvenile delinquency as dealt with by the courts.

³ Connecticut was unable to report on a State-wide basis in 1938 and 1939. Reporting was resumed in 1940.

TREND IN DELINQUENCY CASES

The trend in delinquency cases disposed of by juvenile courts from 1933 to 1939 may be judged on the basis of reports from 67 courts serving areas of 100,000 or more population that reported comparable statistics throughout that period (table 5). These are the only courts in that population group that reported continuously during those years. The population of the area served by the courts represented 23 percent of the total population of the United States in 1940.

In the areas served by these 67 courts that have reported continuously since 1933 the number of delinquency cases in 1939 was 6 percent greater than in 1938 and approximately equal to the number disposed of in 1937. The 1939 total was somewhat higher than the 1936 figure but lower than that for 1933, 1934, or 1935. The number of cases reported in 1939 was 4 percent less than the number reported in 1933. As stated under Characteristics and Limitations of Juvenile-Court Statistics, trends based upon delinquency cases handled by juvenile courts are not necessarily indicative of trends of delinquency cases generally.

SUMMARY, DELINQUENCY CASES REPORTED IN 1938

During 1938, 77,289 delinquency cases were disposed of by 476 juvenile courts that served areas representing 39 percent of the total population of the United States. Of these, 84 percent were boys' cases and 16 percent were girls' cases. This proportion is practically the same from year to year. White children were involved in 79 percent of the cases, Negro children in 20 percent, and children of other races in 1 percent.

In almost two-thirds of the boys' cases (63 percent) and in almost three-fourths of the girls' cases (72 percent) in which court experience was reported the children had had no previous court experience. Reasons for reference of boys' cases differed considerably from those for which girls were brought into court. Stealing, acts of carelessness or mischief, and traffic violations were much more frequent among boys than among girls, 78 percent of the boys' cases being referred for these reasons, compared with 21 percent of the girls' cases. The proportion of girls' cases that were referred for truancy, running away, being ungovernable, and sex offenses was 74 percent, compared with 18 percent for the boys.

During 1938, 45 percent of the boys' cases and 36 percent of the girls' cases were "dismissed, adjusted, or held open without further action." Approximately one-third of both boys' and girls' cases were turned over to a probation officer for supervision. In 10 percent of the boys' cases and in 16 percent of the girls' cases the children were committed or referred to an institution.

SUMMARY, DELINQUENCY CASES REPORTED IN 1939

During 1939, 83,758 delinquency cases were disposed of by 473 courts that served areas representing 38 percent of the total population of the United States. Of these, 85 percent were boys' cases and 15 percent were girls' cases. White children were involved in 79 percent of the cases, Negro children in almost 21 percent, and children of other races in less than one percent of the cases.

¹ Some courts have jurisdiction under special circumstances beyond the age specified; also courts occasionally deal informally with children who are just beyond the age of juvenile-court jurisdiction.

² In boys' cases 146 courts had jurisdiction up to 16 years, 247 up to 17 years, 76 up to 18 years, and 4 up to 21 years.

³ This is a considerable increase over the number reported during 1937; 1,020 out of the 1,134 cases were from Ohio. The increase may be due to the fact that a law was approved in May 1937 providing that Ohio juvenile courts shall have jurisdiction over persons over 18 years of age who are charged with offenses committed while under 18 years of age.

⁴ Less than 1 percent.

⁵ The number of cases included in "Age not reported" in this table is not the same as in table 14, because the specific age of some children was not reported. Age groups in this table differ from those in table 14.

⁶ In girls' cases 79 courts had jurisdiction up to 16 years, 244 up to 17 years, 146 up to 18 years, and 4 up to 21 years.

⁷ Of these, 266 were Ohio cases. (See footnote 3.)

In 63 percent of the boys' cases and 72 percent of the girls' cases in which court experience was reported the children had had no previous court experience. In 79 percent of the boys' cases the referral was for some type of stealing, acts of carelessness or mischief, or traffic violations. Only 22 percent of the girls' cases were referred for these reasons. On the other hand, 72 percent of the girls' cases were referred for truancy, running away, being ungovernable, or sex offenses whereas only 17 percent of the boys' cases were referred for these reasons.

During 1939, 49 percent of the boys' cases and 38 percent of the girls' cases were "dismissed, adjusted, or held open without further action." In approximately one-third of the cases the boys and girls were turned over to a probation officer for supervision. In 9 percent of the boys' cases and in 16 percent of the girls' cases the children were committed or referred to an institution.

PART 2.—FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS FOR THE 2-YEAR PERIOD ENDED JUNE 30, 1939

INTRODUCTION

The data in this section of the report are based upon reports received in the Bureau of Prisons of the United States Department of Justice from United States probation officers, from United States marshals, and from institutions that received Federal offenders by court commitment. The information is concerned with the juveniles under 18 years of age charged with violating Federal laws and brought to the attention of Federal authorities during the 2-year period ended June 30, 1939.¹

Cases of children charged with violating Federal laws may be handled by Federal authorities or may be dealt with under State juvenile-court laws. The policy has been to divert cases of Federal juvenile offenders to State authorities wherever possible and in some communities serious violations of Federal laws as well as minor violations are handled by juvenile courts. Such cases are reported by the juvenile courts and included in the figures presented in part 1, Juvenile-Court Statistics. The number of cases of children dealt with by Federal courts is influenced by several factors such as the age limits of State juvenile-court jurisdiction and the stage of development of State juvenile-court and probation systems.²

The data presented in part 2, Federal Juvenile Offenders, cannot be compared directly with the data presented in part 1, Juvenile-Court Statistics, because the information for juvenile-court statistics is assembled from one source, namely, cases disposed of by juvenile courts, whereas statistics for Federal juvenile offenders are assembled from three different sources and represent four stages in the handling of the case. It has been necessary, therefore, to present the material according to the source of the reports received as follows:

Federal juvenile offenders brought to the attention of United States probation officers.....	Tables 1, 2.
Federal juvenile offenders received in jails and held pending trial.....	Table 3.
Federal juvenile offenders discharged from detention after being held pending trial.....	Tables 4-7.
Federal juvenile offenders placed on probation and those received under sentence in jails and Federal institutions.....	Tables 8-10.

² In order to provide for improvement in the methods of dealing with the large proportion of the cases of juvenile offenders that cannot be diverted to State authorities, a Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act was passed by Congress and was signed by the President on June 16, 1938. This act applies to persons 17 years of age or under who commit Federal offenses not punishable by death or life imprisonment. The purpose is to do away with long jail detention, to make possible prompt and private hearings, and to broaden the possibilities for disposition and treatment.

Under this act the Attorney General may direct, with the consent of the juvenile, the institution of proceedings on a charge of juvenile delinquency, rather than for a specific offense. Proceedings on a charge of juvenile delinquency may be initiated by the filing of an information instead of by grand-jury indictment. Hearings shall be without a jury and may be held at any time and in chambers. The Attorney General is authorized to provide for the detention of juveniles in a juvenile home or other suitable place. A juvenile "found guilty" of juvenile delinquency may be placed on probation or committed to the custody of the Attorney General, who may designate a public or private agency for custody, care, subsistence, education, and training.

FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS BROUGHT TO THE ATTENTION OF UNITED STATES PROBATION OFFICERS

For the judicial districts having United States probation officers the statistics presented in tables 1 and 2 include all cases of Federal juvenile offenders that are disposed of officially by Federal authorities. There were probation officers in Puerto Rico and in 80 of the 84 Federal districts in continental United States during the period July 1, 1937-June 30, 1939. Statistics for the districts not covered, where no probation officer was on duty, are included with those reported by other districts whenever the offenders were referred to United States probation officers in the adjoining districts. Reports of the District of Columbia are not included, since the administrative relationship of the District of Columbia courts to the Department of Justice differs from that of other Federal courts.

FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS DISCHARGED FROM DETENTION AFTER BEING HELD PENDING TRIAL

The figures covering Federal juvenile offenders discharged from detention after being held pending trial (tables 4 to 7) are also reported by United States marshals and include all cases of juveniles who were discharged during the year—both those received for detention prior to the beginning of the year and those received during the year. The figures do not include cases of offenders received for detention who were not discharged during the year.

FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS PLACED ON PROBATION AND THOSE RECEIVED UNDER SENTENCE IN JAILS AND FEDERAL INSTITUTIONS

The figures concerning Federal juvenile offenders placed on probation and those received under sentence in jails and Federal institutions (tables 8 to 10) include all Federal offenders under 18 years of age received from courts by United States probation officers for supervision during the year and all Federal offenders under 18 years received under sentence in county and city jails, Federal detention headquarters, correctional institutions, penitentiaries, reformatories, and prison camps. These comprise the great majority of juvenile offenders for whom Federal authorities continue responsibility and supervision after disposition of the case.
