Foresee Dangerous Banking Proposals

"Keep in touch with your Congressmen and pay attention to the major proposals for new banking legislation."

This warning was conveyed to bankers by a variety of speakers at most of the spring conventions and regional meetings in the Northwestern Banker area. Checking some of the current proposals, the advice should be followed by every officer and director of every bank, regardless of size.

Some of the proposals may seem 'innocent' at first glance—but in actual practice they may have broad and dangerous ramifications. For example, the extension of credit by banks for the purchase of unlisted stocks would come under Federal Reserve Board control under legislation approved by the Senate Banking Committee. The Fed has maintained that the additional control of margins is needed as a safeguard against the excessive use of credit in the over-the-counter market. The Fed has indicated that if granted the regulatory authority over unlisted stock purchases on credit, it would use the authority to regulate margins of only certain actively traded issues.

Intentions may be good—but, what would be the situation if the regulatory authority was applied to bank stocks and an 80% margin requirement was established? This would seem to end independent ownership of banks, and it would place severe limitations on the marketability of closely-held bank stocks.

Another example is the so-called Antiterrorism measure, which has passed the House and is now in the Senate Banking Committee. It requires the Federal Reserve Board, the FDIC and the Comptroller of the Currency and the FHLLB to issue regulations spelling out minimum standards for the installation of protection equipment. The regulations issued by the agencies would set time limits within which banks and S&L's would have to meet the standards. Both banks and S&L's would have to file periodic reports with the agencies on the security practices. Any institution violating the regulations would be subject to fines of up to $100 a day! It would seem that the regulations might be prohibitive in cost to many of the smaller banks.

Certainly, the requirements for a $100 million bank should be different from a $8 million bank.

Much has been written and said about the Federal Charter Bill and its inherent dangers. Perhaps lesser known—but still dangerous—are bills like the one introduced by Sen. Philip A. Hart of Michigan, designed to prevent banks and other lenders from making a profit in the writing of credit life insurance.

Congress will no doubt adjourn in early August—but the next six weeks will be important—and the time for bank officers and directors to keep in close touch with their Congressmen.
