GERMANY.

It has been our experience, in the non-English-speaking countries of Europe, that the best results can be obtained by transacting legal business through the United States Consuls, and we recommend this course accordingly.

A Consul can generally give prompt personal attention to business placed in his hands; but when this is impossible, being on the ground and knowing the facts, he can refer it to some lawyer of proved integrity and ability, who, being personally known to him and acting under his direction, will be sure to render more prompt and efficient service than would be possible for one ignorant of our language and laws acting alone. In cases where American citizens are interested in foreign estates, the intervention of the Consul will be found of peculiar value, inasmuch as by treaty he is afforded special privileges in obtaining immediate information from the Courts, at a nominal expense, which a local lawyer could obtain, if at all, only after much delay and at considerable cost. Legal business may be sent to a Consul without interference with his official duties; but, being personal and unofficial, correspondents should be prepared to pay him his disbursements and such sum for his services as may be just and reasonable.

Parties desiring to have depositions and acknowledgments taken abroad, should be careful to furnish the Consul with the exact forms of acknowledgment required in their State. Marking letters "Business" will prevent delay, and insure their being attended to by the officer in charge, should the Consul be absent. Where there is no consular officer, send to the nearest one.

The letters C. G., following a name, stand for Consul-General; C., for Consul; C. A., for Commercial Agent; V. C., for Vice-Consul.

Correspondents should be addressed "Rechtsanwalt," except those marked with a *, whose title is "Justizrath."
