THIS WORK IS DEDICATED, BY PERMISSION, TO

FRANCIS A. WALKER, PH.D., LL.D

PRESIDENT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY. LATE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE UNITED STATES CENSUS

TO WHOM THE COUNTRY IS CHIEFLY INDEBTED FOR A THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE OF ITS PRESENT CONDITION AND RESOURCES

PREFACE.

THE study of statistics, with the means ordinarily at command, is a dry and difficult one. It should not, therefore, be a matter of surprise that comparatively little information regarding the condition and resources of a country, is to be found among its people. Such information is, for the most part, hidden away in long and forbidding columns of figures, and dispersed through many volumes more or less inaccessible. To group the various classes of facts, and to determine their bearings one upon another, is, with raw statistics, a formidable task.

Let these facts be expressed not alone in figures, but graphically, by means of maps and diagrams, appealing to a quick sense of form and color and "clothing the dry bones of statistics in flesh and blood," and their study becomes a delight rather than a task. The density of settlement, the illiteracy of the people, the wealth or poverty of different sections, and many other features of great importance, hitherto but vaguely comprehended, are made to appear at a glance, and are so vividly impressed as not to be easily forgotten. By such aids not only the statistician and political economist, but the masses of the people, who make public sentiment and shape public policy, may acquire that knowledge of the country and its resources which is essential to intelligent and successful government.

It is the aim of this work to bring together and to present by graphic methods, all the leading statistical facts regarding the physical, social, industrial, commercial and political conditions of the United States. It portrays the physical features of the country, which more or less determine its development; the political history of the nation, the succession of parties and the ideas for which they existed; and the progress of settlement, from the eastern seaboard, across the Appalachians, throughout the valley of the Mississippi, and beyond the barriers of the Cordilleras. It treats of the population, its varieties of race and nativity, its educational and religious condition, its occupations, and its mortality. Passing to the industries, it exhibits the great leading branches, agriculture, manufactures, mining, trade and transportation. Under the head of Finance and Commerce, it pictures the wealth of the country, its public debt and taxation, its foreign commerce and carrying trade, its expenditures and its sources of revenue—thus presenting to the comprehension of all, the balance sheet of the General Government. The work closes fittingly with a series of diagrams which summarize and bring together for comparison, the leading facts previously developed.

In the belief that the simpler methods of illustration are, as a rule, the most effective, care has been taken to avoid over-elaboration. By the use of different shades of color, the maps are made to present a bird's-eye view of the various classes of facts, as related either to area or to population. The diagrams are all of the simple linear character, in which comparisons are shown by extent in one dimension only. Of the many kinds of diagrams hitherto used in the illustration of statistical facts, this form is at once the simplest and the most effective.

The maps of the United States employed, are of three sizes: A folio map, in which the county is the unit of comparison; a state map, covering half a page, the data for which were first plotted by counties on the larger map and transferred, with such modifications as the reduction required; and a miniature map, for representing the averages of states only. On the folio maps each county is numbered, and its name may readily be determined by the aid of the Index to Counties. The names of territories are italicized throughout the plates, to distinguish them from the names of states.

While this Atlas is the joint production of Mr. Fletcher W. Hewes and Mr. Henry Gannett, to the former is due the inception of the enterprise, its general plan, the preparation of the material, and the execution of nearly all the plates. To his arduous labors and painstaking accuracy, the Atlas itself bears abundant testimony. Later Mr. Gannett was associated with the work, and to him have fallen the important tasks of writing the text, of revising and editing the plates, and of adding those relating to physical geography—duties for which he was amply qualified, by long experience as a statistician and by close familiarity with the work of the Census Bureau and of the Geological Survey.

The material here presented has been drawn from many sources. First in importance should be mentioned the reports of the Tenth Census and of earlier ones, which have furnished the data for much the greater part of the work. The reports of the Bureau of Statistics and of Education, and the finance reports of the Treasury Department, have been laid under heavy contribution; and much valuable matter has been taken, by permission of the authors, from Spofford's American Almanac, Poor's Manual of Railroads, and Meech's Systems and Tables of Life Insurance. Special acknowledgment is due also to state geologists and mining engineers, for assistance in the preparation of the maps showing the distribution of mineral deposits; to Secretaries of State and other state officials, for data concerning election returns and the population of cities; to W. H. De Puy, D.D., for the compilation of statistics of church membership; and to Alexander Johnston, A.M., Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Economy, College of New Jersey, for a careful revision of the political charts.
