The fund provides for the acquisition, operation, and maintenance of floating and land-based plant and equipment used in civil works functions, for temporary financing of services finally chargeable to civil works appropriations, and for the furnishing of facilities and services for the military functions of the Department of the Army and other governmental agencies and private persons (67 Stat. 199).

Budget program.—Operating costs.—Operating costs are expected to remain at about the same level in 1972 and 1973.

Capital outlay.—Land and structures includes replacement costs of buildings, facilities, and related land. Dredges and other floating plant includes replacement and improvement costs for dredges and dredging equipment and other vessels such as tugs, tenders, and towboats. Land-based equipment includes replacement and improvement costs of transportation equipment, construction equipment, and fixed-land equipment such as shop tools and fixed power-driven equipment. Major items for replacement and plant expansion are noted in the following narrative.

Lands and structures.—The 1973 program includes: $4.1 million for design and construction of facilities for the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Coastal Engineer Research Center; $0.2 million for completion of construction of Corpus Christi shop; $0.4 million for design and initiation of construction of facilities for Waterways Experiment Station at Vicksburg, Miss.; $0.05 million for design and initiation of construction for the Cleveland warehouse, Cleveland, Ohio; $0.3 million for the design and initiation of construction of New Orleans District Building No. 24; $0.17 million for the completion of design and construction of the Savannah shop; and $0.25 million for completion of design and construction of the revetment material warehouse for Vicksburg district.

Dredges.—The 1973 program includes: $2.1 million for modification of hopper dredges Harding, Biddle, Gerig, and Hyde; $0.1 million for initiation of construction of 10-inch portable hydraulic cutterhead pipeline dredge for Omaha district; $0.2 million for initiation of construction of 10-inch portable hydraulic cutterhead pipeline dredge for Huntington district; and $0.2 million for completion of construction of 8-inch portable hydraulic cutterhead pipeline dredge for the St. Louis district.

Other.—Other floating plant includes: $0.8 million for continuation of construction of the drift collector Gorham, for use in New York Harbor; $0.6 million for continuation of construction of mat sinking barge for the Vicksburg district; $0.9 million for the initiation of construction of bank grader for Memphis district; $0.1 million for completion of construction of mooring barge for dredge Hains direct pumpout operations; $0.8 million for initiation of construction of replacement mooring barges for Lower Mississippi River mat revetment operations; $0.3 million for initiation of construction of replacement quarterboat for use by the Memphis district with mat revetment operations in Vicksburg and Memphis districts; $0.3 million for design and initiation of construction for a floating lock caisson for the Nashville district; $0.05 million for design and initiation of construction of a rotary crane for the Vicksburg district derrick boat.

Land-based equipment includes: $0.7 million for the purchase of replacement aircraft for the Lower Mississippi Valley Division; $2.4 million for procurement of automatic data processing equipment. Remaining outlays relate to a variety of relatively small items of floating plant, land-based equipment, and tools, office furniture, and equipment.

Operating results and financial condition.—Unreserved earnings in 1971 amount to $2.8 million and are expected to remain at about the same level in 1972 and 1973. Initial capital of the fund was provided by assumption of the assets, liabilities, and obligations of the plant accounts as carried on the records of the Corps of Engineers—Civil at June 30, 1953, and by an appropriation from general fund of $100. Capital (Government equity) of the fund amounted to $175.8 million at June 30, 1971, and is limited to $181 million by the Public Works for Water, Pollution Control and Power Development and Atomic Energy Commission Appropriation Act, 1971 (Public Law 91-439). In 1971 capital was increased by net earnings of $8.2 million. Increases in 1972 and 1973 are principally due to earnings reserved for plant replacement which are wholly invested in assets. Capital of the fund is expected to reach $180.7 million at the end of 1972 and $196.9 million at the end of 1973. To permit operation at program levels for those years and into 1974, an increase in authorized capital to $197 million is required.

Consolidated summary of personnel.—The Revolving Fund is used to initially finance all payrolls of the Corps of Engineers—Civil.

The table which follows shows the distribution of personnel and salary costs to appropriations of the Corps of Engineers and to other accounts.

This appropriation has financed the administration of the Ryukyu Islands by the United States.

No appropriation is requested for 1973 for Administration Ryukyu Islands, Army, on the assumption that reversion of the Ryukyu Islands to Japan will have been accomplished by May 15, 1972. The terminal program for aid to the Ryukyuan economy was as follows (in thousands of dollars):

	1971 actual	1972 estimate	1973 estimate
Reimbursement to the Government of the Ryukyu Islands for the cost of public safety and public health operations required because of the presence of U.S. forces	1,650	1,250	-----

The General Fund of the civil administration has also been available to assist in the economic and social development of the islands. Income was received from three wholly-owned corporations, from the purchase and resale of petroleum products, and from investment in the Bank of the Ryukyus. Upon return of the Ryukyu Islands to Japanese administration, operations of the General Fund will cease. The following statements reflect the terminal phase of the program:

Under the Okinawa Reversion Treaty, approved by the U.S. Senate on November 10, 1971, the corporation assets listed above will be transferred to the Government of Japan. The stock of the BOR will be sold by the U.S. Civil Administration of the Ryukyu Islands and the proceeds of sale remitted to the U.S. Treasury. The POL assets have been transferred to the U.S. Army, Ryukyu Islands, for continued use in the postreversion period. Ongoing construction projects, funded out of the General Fund in 1972 and prior years, will be completed in the postreversion period under the auspices of the Government of Japan. These projects include principally the Fukuji Dam in northern Okinawa, sewer lines in central and southern Okinawa, construction of an 85 mw (megawatt) generating unit at Machinato and design of a 100 mw generating unit to be sited at Nishihara. The Ryukyuan scholarship program was funded in 1972 to complete the academic programs of those students enrolled in the program in 1971.

The Government of the Ryukyu Islands was created by the U.S. Civil Administration on April 1, 1952. In addition to local revenues derived primarily from income and excise taxes, this government has received grants from the U.S. Government and the Government of Japan. In view of the imminent reversion of the Ryukyus and the transfer of the islands to Japanese administration, there will be no contribution of U.S. funds in 1973. The terminal budget programs for the GRI are as follows:

Commitments under uncompleted construction contracts and unfilled purchase orders amounted to $9.8 million at June 30, 1971. Effective May 9, 1969, the Company entered into a 25-year contract with Instituto de Recursos Hidraulicos y Electricacion, an autonomous agency of the Republic of Panama, for the purchase of electric power to be produced by the agency. As of June 30, 1971, the Company's total minimum liability over the remaining period of the contract amounted to about $35.4 million.

The Food and Drug Administration enforces laws which are designed to protect the public from dangerous, misbranded, and adulterated foods, drugs, and cosmetics, and from unnecessary exposure to man-made sources of radiation. Other products regulated by FDA include medical devices, toys, and hazardous substances.

1. Foods.—FDA is responsible for insuring the safety, quality, and nutritional adequacy of the country's food supply. The agency conducts intramural and extramural studies to evaluate health and nutrition factors, sets standards for classes of foods, and reviews industry petitions for the use of additives and establishes tolerances to these substances. FDA defines good manufacturing practices and works to receive voluntary compliance with these guidelines. In addition, FDA inspects food establishments to insure that products are manufactured and distributed properly, collects and analyzes samples of food products to verify that the items are safe, wholesome and properly labeled, and takes regulatory actions when necessary to obtain compliance with the law. Research and training grants are awarded to universities, qualified nonprofit organizations, and State agencies to identify and evaluate harmful properties in food, and to develop and improve methods to detect and prevent food contamination.

The 1973 request will fund expanded domestic and imported food inspection programs, complete teratogenic and mutagenic tests for numerous additional substances currently identified as generally recognized as safe, initiate major comparative pharmacology studies, and develop new methods and techniques to detect and evaluate problems associated with substances such as mycotoxins, heavy metals, and industrial chemicals.

2. Drugs and devices.—FDA's responsibilities are to insure that drugs and therapeutic devices are safe and effective for their intended uses. The agency evaluates all new human and veterinary drugs prior to marketing, reviews reports from industry and the medical profession to learn about adverse reactions or other problems associated with marketed drugs and devices, and conducts intramural and extramural research to identify new problems. FDA inspects manufacturers, analyzes samples, and takes necessary regulatory action to insure compliance with legal requirements.

The 1973 request will enable FDA to develop criteria for measuring the safety and efficacy of a number of classes of nonprescription drugs, continue the classification of medical devices, and implement a national drug monitoring system. The agency will conduct research on the effects of several new drug classes in producing residues in meat.

3. Product safety.—FDA utilizes research, surveillance, regulatory actions, and cooperative efforts with industry to minimize hazards associated with toys, household chemicals, cosmetics and other consumer products, and to eliminate unnecessary exposure to man-made sources of radiation. Surveillance of firms and products and mandatory and voluntary standards are directed toward achieving an adequate national product safety control program. Also, research and training grants are awarded to universities and other eligible institutions to detect harmful ingredients in consumer products, identify products most often associated with accidents, identify radiation problems, and evaluate exposure to radiation.

The 1973 request will enable FDA to establish product standards and to conduct an increased number of inspections and sample examinations. The agency will be able to review and investigate more injury and poisoning reports, and will expand its capability to collect, process and analyze product safety data. FDA will enforce radiation emission performance standards for several products, expand efforts to improve X-ray equipment and use procedures, and conduct research to determine the effects of RF-microwave radiation exposure.

4. Program direction and management services.—This activity includes FDA's executive and administrative functions: the establishment of policy, the formulation and promulgation of agencywide plans and directives, the allocation and control of resources, the evaluation of program performance, the maintenance of liaison with other Government agencies, the coordination of FDA's international activities, and the support of FDA's operating units in the areas of financial management, mail and records, printing and distribution, facilities management, supply management, management services, personnel, and training.

1. Research.—(a) Grants.—There are two major grant programs included in this subactivity. First, the regular research grants program provides support on a project basis for behavioral, clinical, psychopharmacology, and applied research. The 1973 increase will support grants in areas of special interest such as drug abuse, alcoholism, child mental health, minority mental health, crime and delinquency, and services development research. Approximately 1,485 grants will be supported in 1973, including 455 grants for the special interest areas. Second, the hospital improvement program supports project grants to State mental hospitals for improvement in the care, treatment, and rehabilitation of patients. This program will support 71 projects in 1973. $6 million formerly included in this category for drug abuse research grants are now included in (b) for drug abuse research contracts.

(b) Direct operations.—The funds in this subactivity will support laboratory and clinical research in the behavioral and biological sciences; e.g., psychiatry, socioeconomic studies, health problems of narcotic addiction, alcoholism, neuropharmacology, and clinical psychopharmacology. This subactivity also supports Institute staff who are responsible for the planning, development, and administration of the grant programs identified in activity (a) above. A portion of the funds is used to support research on a contract basis. One such activity is the marihuana contract program designed to determine the behavioral and biological effects of marihuana. Payments to the NIH management fund are also supported in this subactivity. For 1972 and 1973, funds to operate the Clinical Research Center at Lexington, Ky., formerly presented in "Rehabilitation of drug abusers" will be included here.

2. Manpower development.—(a) Training grants and fellowships.—Training grants are made in the key mental health disciplines such as psychiatry, behavioral sciences, psychiatric nursing, and social work, as well as in auxiliary and related areas. In 1973, the Institute will support a total of 1,700 awards with priority consideration to training programs which stress child mental health, crime and delinquency, alcoholism, and drug abuse, and training of mental health paraprofessionals. Fellowships are awarded to individuals who are committed to research careers relative to mental health and who propose to undertake full-time research training. A total of 657 fellowships will be supported in 1973.

(b) Direct operations.—The funds in this subactivity support Institute staff who are responsible for planning and administration of the national mental health manpower program, including mental health manpower studies and the development of training programs for paraprofessionals. Contracts to train individuals to work with drug abusers will be supported. A portion of the funds also supports a program for training psychiatrists for careers in the Federal Government.

3. State and community programs.—(a) Community mental health centers.—(1) Construction.—Grants provide matching support to local, State, and private agencies for the construction and renovation of public and nonprofit community mental health centers. Funds are allocated to the States on a formula basis. Funds appropriated in 1972 will be obligated in 1972 and 1973. (2) Staffing.—Grants are awarded to community mental health centers for partial support of the salary costs of professional and technical personnel. In 1973, 22 new projects will be funded bringing to 562 the total number of centers funded of which 422 will be operational.

(b) Narcotic addiction and (c) alcoholism.—The funds in these activities support a variety of programs to assist communities to prevent and control narcotic addiction and alcoholism. They are as follows: (1) Staffing grants.—These awards provide support for a portion of the salary costs of professional and technical personnel to staff comprehensive community centers for the treatment of alcoholism, narcotic addiction, and drug abuse. (2) Special projects.—These support the development of training programs or materials relating to the provisions of public health services for the prevention and treatment of alcoholism and narcotic addiction; training personnel to administer such services; conducting surveys and field trials to evaluate the adequacy of alcohol and narcotic addiction programs; and programs for treatment and rehabilitation of narcotic addicts and drug abusers which the Secretary determines are of special significance. (3) Service projects for narcotic addicts.—These grants provide support on a matching basis to public and nonprofit agencies to meet the costs of detoxification services, institutional services, or community based aftercare services. (4) Drug abuse education.—Funds in this subactivity are used to provide grants and contracts for the development of educational programs, materials, and manpower in the area of drug abuse and its prevention, and to coordinate program activities among participating agencies, departments, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government with respect to the health education aspects of drug abuse. (5) Planning and initiation grants.—These support projects are awarded to plan or develop narcotic addiction, drug abuse, and alcohol treatment services in a particular area. (6) Consultation services.—These grants support the salaries of professional and technical personnel who will be providing consultation services in narcotic addiction and alcohol treatment centers. (7) Alcohol formula grants.—These grants are given to States to enable them to plan, establish, and maintain more effective prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs to deal with alcohol abuse and alcoholism.

(d) Mental health of children.—This activity supports grants which will improve the quantity and quality of services to children through staffing and training grants. Funds will provide staffing support to existing community mental health centers for establishment or expansion of children's services. Prevention activities are also emphasized.

(e) Direct operations.—This subactivity supports Institute staff who administer the community mental health centers program, and the mental health study center. This subactivity also supports the staff costs of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

4. Rehabilitation of drug abusers.—The funds in this activity support NIMH staff who administer the Institute's narcotic addiction and drug abuse program. Included are activities authorized by the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966, which provides treatment and rehabilitation to narcotic addicts through contract arrangements with community agencies. Beginning in 1972, funds are included in "Research—Direct operations" to operate the Clinical Research Center at Lexington, Ky.

5. Program support activities.—(a) Field activities.—The funds in this subactivity support the NIMH staff located in the HEW regional offices and the headquarters staff responsible for coordination of regional programs and the Institute's relationships with other Federal agencies, professional societies, and State and community organizations.

(b) Scientific communication and public education.—Included in this activity is the National Clearinghouse for Mental Health Information which collects and disseminates scientific and technical information in the mental health field, and the National Clearinghouse for Drug Abuse Information which gives the public a central office within the Federal Government to contact for information and assistance concerning this social problem. Other public information and education activities are also supported, including a program directed toward increasing public knowledge about alcohol and alcoholism.

(c) Executive direction and management services.—The funds in this subactivity support salaries and related costs of staff responsible for the program planning and evalua-

NOTES

Includes $1,600 thousand in 1973 for activities transferred from Mental Health; 1971, $1,600 thousand; 1972, $1,600 thousand.
Excludes $13 thousand in 1973 for activities transferred to Departmental management, Office of the Secretary; 1972, $13 thousand.

Saint Elizabeths Hospital provides treatment and care for the mentally ill who are either beneficiaries of the Federal Government or residents of the District of Columbia. Programs of the hospital are financed by Federal appropriations covering treatment and care of Federal beneficiaries and by reimbursements made to the hospital for services rendered other patient groups, principally residents of the District of Columbia. Federal appropriations to the hospital are of the indefinite type, under which the hospital receives, in appropriated funds, the difference between the amount of reimbursements actually received during the year, for patient care provided by the hospital, and total program costs approved by the Congress for the year.

Treatment programs of the hospital operate on both an inpatient and outpatient basis. Saint Elizabeths operates a security treatment facility and a community mental center, which services approximately 175,000 persons representing the population of that portion of the southeast quadrant of the District of Columbia which is located south of the Anacostia River.

The hospital conducts a clinical research program for the purpose of obtaining a better understanding of the causes of mental disorders, and of the factors bearing upon their development, treatment and possible prevention. Saint Elizabeths also provides multidisciplinary clinical training for professional and ancillary personnel engaged in or interested in mental health activities.

Inpatients at Saint Elizabeths Hospital have decreased from 3,547 in 1971 to an estimated 3,150 in 1973 and outpatients have increased during the same period from 2,523 to an estimated 2,750. Also, the community mental health center has had an increase of about 20% in its patient load over the last 2 years. The center will serve 2,773 patients in 1973.

In view of the community services provided by Saint Elizabeths Hospital, the Department and the District of Columbia are working toward transfer of the Hospital to the local government.

This appropriation includes activities which focus on planning and demonstrations aimed at improving the Nation's health care delivery system. The major areas of emphasis are utilization, distribution, quality, and cost of care. These are accomplished through the following programs:

1. Health services research and development.—The National Center for Health Services Research and Development has been established as the principal organization within the Health Services and Mental Health Administration to improve the organization, delivery, and financing of health services by stimulating and supporting research, development, demonstrations, and related training. The major problems in the health care delivery system that are given priority in the National Center's research and development program are: (1) Rising costs of medical care, (2) unequal distribution and utilization of health services, (3) inadequate data for health services planning and decisionmaking at local and national levels, and (4) relative shortages or maldistribution of professional health personnel.

(a) Grants and contracts.—Research and development.—Grants and contracts are awarded to public or private agencies, academic, and other research organizations to conduct analyses of economic, social, and technological factors which affect the organization, financing, and utilization of health services. Large-scale research and development projects are directed primarily at containing the rate of increase of medical care costs, developing community-based systems for delivering health services, improving the availability, utilization, and quality of care, and developing a cooperative Federal-State-local health statistics system.

Research and development training.—Grants and contracts are awarded to institutions and to qualified scholars for supporting research and managerial training in the health services field. A major emphasis in 1973 will be the development of training programs and opportunities in health services planning, implementation, and operation.

(b) Direct operations.—This activity provides the staff required to design and direct the National Center's strategic program of research and development. The staff obtains high-level evaluation of all proposals, closely monitors contracts, reviews results, informs the professional community of significant progress, and identifies the next steps in research and development.

2. Comprehensive health planning.—(a) Planning grants.—State formula grants.—Grants are awarded to States according to a formula based on population and per capita income with no State receiving less than 1% of the total. The purpose is to provide a framework in which health needs and resources can be analyzed and alternative courses of action recommended. Federal financial participation cannot exceed 75% of the costs. Agencies have been established in each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and five territories.

State planning agencies have been involved in promoting the development of areawide health planning agencies within their jurisdictions and will continue to work with them toward cooperative accomplishment of mutual objectives. The strengthening and coordination of the work of existing areawide agencies becomes increasingly important as the number of areawide agencies involved in operational planning increases.

The continuing close ties of the State comprehensive health planning programs to the State political, economic, and social systems will facilitate the adoption by the States of recommended planning priorities and recommended alternatives for solution of their problems.

In 1973, the increase of $2,325 thousand will allow State agencies to increase professional staffs by approximately 25%. Primary emphasis will be for State agencies to become substantially more involved in assisting the development of new areawide planning agencies and to provide for the establishment of State agency assisted planning councils in rural areas. In addition, continuing emphasis will be placed upon working with areawide agencies toward a joint accomplishment of mutual objectives.

Areawide project grants.—Through project grants to public or private nonprofit groups, areawide health planning agencies are established. A community thus has the opportunity to work toward a more coherent and efficient areawide health system aimed at meeting the needs of all segments of the population. Such groups as private health practitioners, hospitals, medical schools, voluntary health agencies, health departments, local governments, consumers, and specialized planning groups, as well as urban or regional general planning agencies, now work through an institutionalized forum to reach agreement on local priorities for facility, service, and manpower development. Federal support cannot exceed 75% of the costs.

The 1973 increase would provide $6,800 thousand for the 172 agencies expected to be in operation at that time and $5,100 thousand for the support of approximately 100 new agencies and about 30 State assisted comprehensive health planning councils in rural areas. Agencies will be located in areas in which 80% of the Nation's population reside. The increase for the 172 agencies would enable the hiring of over 180 new professional employees, an increase of some 25% over the then expected 700 professionals on agency staffs, and a more than comparable increase in planning operations.

Training project grants.—These grants provide support for both long- and short-term training of health planners and consumers.

The increase of $575 thousand would enable the graduate programs to increase the level of technical assistance to be provided to the State and areawide agencies and would be directed in part to further emphasis on development of planning for innovative systems for the delivery of health care. In addition, the increase would enable the continuation of demonstration graduate projects and 35 continuing education projects (including consumer projects). About 1,750 health professionals and consumers would receive short-term training and over 400 graduate students would receive long-term training, with approximately 240 expected to graduate with advanced degrees in the spring of 1973.

(b) Direct operations.—This activity provides the staff required to direct and administer: (1) Formula grants for State comprehensive health planning; (2) project grants for areawide comprehensive health planning; and (3) project grants for training, studies, and demonstrations for comprehensive health training. The number of areawide planning agencies has increased very rapidly. This increase has been coupled with an escalation in the responsibilities of these agencies. The requested personnel increase would enable the staff to be more responsive to both the State and areawide agencies in providing technical assistance and consultation.

3. Regional medical programs.—(a) Grants and contracts.—Through grant awards and direct staff activities, the 56 regional medical programs promote and sustain the development of regional cooperative arrangements among the Nation's health professions and institutions for: (1) Improvement of regionalization of health resources and services, and (2) enhancement of the capabilities of providers of care at the community level. These activities are aimed at improving the quality of health care and strengthening the health care system generally throughout the Nation and specifically to improve personal health care for persons threatened by heart disease, cancer, stroke, kidney disease, and related diseases.

In 1973, emphasis will be placed on: (1) Manpower development and utilization programs.—Training aimed at enabling existing health manpower to provide more and better care and training of new kinds of health manpower. A significant portion of the 1973 request would be used for these activities including a major new initiative in support of area health education centers.

(2) New techniques and innovative delivery patterns.—Activities aimed at improving the accessibility, efficiency, and quality of health care. Through their provider linkages, the RMP's will act as catalytic agents for the planning and development of health maintenance organizations, ambulatory and emergency medical care services, particularly for rural areas, and for the application of new technologies, including automated systems and centralization of laboratory facilities.

(3) Regionalization activities.—Provider initiated activities leading to greater sharing of health facilities, manpower, and other resources. These activities will include support for comprehensive interregional kidney disease projects.

(4) Development and implementation of quality of care guidelines and performance review mechanisms.—Such guidelines and mechanisms are necessary to the development of the new and more effective comprehensive systems of health services such as health maintenance organizations, rural health delivery systems, and emergency health care systems.

(5) Development, demonstration and application of biomedical and management techniques.—Activities aimed at increasing productivity of providers and extending specialized services to areas not currently covered.

(b) Direct operations.—This activity provides the staff required to review, process, and award grants and contracts; provides leadership to the regional medical programs to insure that their activities are consistent with national goals; and provides technical and professional assistance for the 56 regional medical programs.

4. Medical facilities construction.—Federal funds are provided by grants or guaranteed loans with interest subsidies to assist States, other public agencies and non-profit organizations in the construction and modernization of hospitals and other health facilities.

(a) Construction grants.—Funds appropriated for construction grants would be used to construct ambulatory care facilities including outpatient facilities, rehabilitation facilities, community mental health centers, facilities to house health maintenance organizations and for comprehensive health care centers which include programs in maternal and child health, family planning, drug abuse prevention and care, and alcoholic rehabilitation. The ambulatory care facilities are needed to reduce the use of expensive hospitalization (and thereby the need for the more costly inpatient facilities) and achieve a better balance of community health care facilities. The $85,000 thousand requested for 1973 would generate approximately $340,000 thousand worth of health facility construction in more than 240 ambulatory care facility projects. The primary thrust of the program would be to relate service delivery and funding support from other HSMHA programs to community health care facilities supported by Hill-Burton wherever possible. Correlation of multiprogram project support involving staffing and service funds with capital funding for facilities would be of the highest priority.

(b) Interest subsidies.—Federal support for construction of inpatient health facilities, such as hospitals and long term care centers, would be available through guaranteed loans with interest subsidies for private nonprofit hospitals, and direct Federal loans for facilities owned by public agencies. The $2,500 thousand requested for 1973 would, when added to carryover from previous appropriations, permit $605,000 thousand worth of loans being guaranteed resulting in 83 projects adding or modernizing over 12,000 acute care or long-term care beds. The amount requested would also permit continued subsidy payment on loans guaranteed in prior years. Funds appropriated for interest subsidies are transferred to the loan guarantee and loan fund from which interest subsidies, direct loans, discharge of guarantee obligations, and other authorized expenses would be paid.

(c) District of Columbia medical facilities.—Authorization for this program expires at the end of 1972.

(d) Direct operations.—This activity provides the staff required to direct and administer the medical facilities construction program. State agencies are provided technical assistance in determining additional facilities required and developing programs to meet the indicated needs. State plans are reviewed for conformance with planning criteria and guidelines. Assistance is provided to States and communities in the planning, designing, and functioning of hospital and other health facilities, and proposed projects are reviewed to determine eligibility and compliance with the law and regulations. Project application procedures and policy determinations are coordinated with other HSMHA programs which provide planning, health care delivery, and staffing grants to health care facilities. In addition, the program provides program management assistance and consultation to health facility construction projects assisted under the FHA loan guarantee program and under sections 202 and 214 of the Appalachian Redevelopment Administration and to rehabilitation facilities assisted under section 12 of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

5. Program direction and management services.—This activity provides for overall executive direction, planning, evaluation, and administrative management of the health planning and development programs.

Includes $136 thousand in 1973 for activities previously financed from: Office of the Administrator, 1971, $136 thousand; 1972, $136 thousand. Excludes $96,078 thousand in 1973 for activities transferred to (in thousands of dollars):

This appropriation includes activities which support the provision of personal health care services directly to Federal beneficiaries or indirectly through grants to medically underserved areas. This is accomplished through the following programs:

1. Comprehensive health services.—(a) Grants to States.—These bloc grants to State health and mental health authorities assist the States in attacking those health problems they consider of most immediate importance. The State plan for carrying out these programs must be in accord with the overall plans developed by the State comprehensive health planning agency. By statute, at least 15% of these funds must support mental health activities. Additionally, 70% of all funds are to go toward the provision of health services at the local level.

State health and mental health agencies have utilized their funds to assist in the support of a broad range of basic health programs provided at the State and local level. Among these ongoing activities that provide health services to both the general population of the States and to high risk groups within the States are communicable disease control, environmental health programs (including food and drugs, radiological health, sanitary engineering, and vector control), laboratory services, vital statistics, nursing services, and a variety of community mental health services. Some States have used the flexibility of these funds to support new approaches to the delivery of these health programs, others have expanded into new areas of services for their State health agencies, such as family planning, dental, and medical care clinics.

(b) Health services grants.—These project grants, awarded to public and nonprofit agencies, provide an effective means for upgrading and expanding the capacity of the ambulatory health services delivery system. This activity permits the Federal Government to be more responsive to health needs of limited geographic scope or of special regional or national significance, and to initiate new health service programs and related training. The programs are directed at two prime underserved areas:

(1) Urban poverty neighborhoods, and (2) remote rural areas.

Emphasis in 1973 will be placed on improving the management of existing comprehensive health centers and improving the quality of health care. These centers and component projects provide primary ambulatory care services to an estimated 850,000 persons covering an eligible population of approximately 2,700,000.

The 1973 increase provides $20 million for neighborhood health centers formerly funded by OEO.

(c) Migrant health grants.—Grants supported under this activity provide primary health care services to migrant agricultural laborers and seasonal farmworkers and their families. The objective of the program is to raise the health level of migrants to that of the general population, and to assure that migrants have access to quality health care services.

In 1973, the program will focus on upgrading at least 50 existing projects strategically located along the migrant streams to maximize their quality and utilization. In areas where provider organizations exist, the program will provide funds which can be used in a third party arrangement to assure that the migrants would receive care. In addition, the program will initiate a reporting system to collect information on the extent of health services obtained by migrants and seasonal farmworkers and their families.

(d) Direct operations.—This activity provides professional and technical assistance to States, communities, providers of health services, and medical and health organizations in the administration and operation of the grants to States; health services project grants which include comprehensive health centers and family health centers; migrant health projects; and health facility survey improvement programs. This activity participates in the development, strengthening, and revision of Medicare standards.

In 1972, a major effort will be initiated to improve the Nation's nursing homes. Major activities will include an accelerated program of university-based training courses for State health facility surveyors and a program of short-term training courses for approximately 21,000 professional and ancillary health personnel providing services for nursing home patients.

In 1973, the emphasis of this activity will be directed toward aiding the comprehensive health centers in achieving a significant degree of financial independence through the garnering of additional third party reimbursements.

2. Maternal and child health services.—This program has as its major goal the provision of health services to mothers and children especially in rural areas or areas suffering from severe economic distress. Through assistance to States, localities, and nonprofit groups it directs primary attention to: (1) Reducing infant mortality and otherwise promoting the health of mothers and children; and (2) locating, diagnosing, and treating children who are suffering from crippling or handicapping illnesses.

Significant contributions to recent reductions in the Nation's infant mortality rate have been made through the maternal and child health program and the comprehensive maternity and infant care projects. For the Nation as a whole, infant mortality decreased almost 24% during the period 1960-70. Almost three-fourths of that decrease occurred during the 4-year period 1966-70. Especially significant reductions are occurring in large

(a) Grants to States.—Formula grants are made to States for health as noted below. One-half of the amount appropriated must be matched by the States and the remainder is distributed in proportion to the financial need of the States, except that not more than 12.5% of the appropriation may be used for special project grants.

Maternal and child health services.—Funds are used by States for the extension and improvement of health services for mothers and children. In 1973, approximately 400,000 women will receive prenatal and postpartum care in maternity clinics, and 1,500,000 children will attend well-baby clinics.

Crippled children's services.—States utilize funds for casefinding, diagnosis, and treatment of children who are crippled or who are suffering from conditions leading to crippling. It is estimated that 500,000 children will receive physicians' services under this program in 1973 and 78,000 children will receive hospitalization services.

(b) Project grants.—Grants are made to specified agencies to meet up to 75% of the costs of comprehensive health care in three major areas as follows:

Maternity and infant care.—State and local health agencies or other public or nonprofit private organizations operate projects to help reduce infant and maternal mortality and the incidence of mental retardation and other handicapping conditions associated with child-bearing. The 56 existing projects are also serving a demonstrated need to improve the quality and quantity of maternity services to women in low-income areas. In 1973, 152,000 mothers and 53,000 infants will be admitted to maternity and infant care projects, compared with the 144,000 mothers and 49,000 infants admitted in 1972.

Children and youth.—State or local agencies, medical schools, and teaching hospitals conduct comprehensive health care projects for children and youth, particularly in areas where low-income families are concentrated. The number of children served is expected to increase from 504,000 in 1972 to 547,000 in 1973.

Dental health of children.—State and local agencies and other public or nonprofit groups are eligible to conduct comprehensive dental care projects for children. Approximately 10,000 children are expected to benefit from the funds made available in the program's first year of operation, 1971. In 1972 and 1973 it is expected that 21,000 and 22,000 children, respectively, will receive comprehensive dental care.

(c) Research and training.—Training.—Grants are made to public or nonprofit institutions of higher learning including university-affiliated mental retardation centers for training personnel for health care and related services for mothers and children.

Research.—The focus of this program is to support research which shows promise of substantial contribution to the advancement of maternal and child health or crippled children's services and to study the effectiveness of such programs through research grants, contracts, or jointly financed cooperative arrangements.

(d) Direct operations.—This activity provides for the administration of medical care service, research and training grants, and for provision of technical assistance and consultation to States, localities, and organizations for the conduct of maternal and child health programs.

3. Family planning activities.—One of the most effective measures for reducing infant and maternal mortality and for improving the physical and mental health of families is through the provision of family planning services which enable families to decide the number and spacing of their children. Thus, the Child Health Act of 1967 specified that not less than 6% of the amounts appropriated for maternal and child health should be available for family planning.

In July 1969, the President set a goal of providing adequate family planning services within 5 years to all those who want them, but cannot afford them. The passage of the Family Planning Services and Population Research Act of 1970, Public Law 91-572, gave specific congressional support to the President's mandate. The following programs administered by the National Center for Family Planning Services are designed to accomplish this goal.

(a) Project grants and contracts.—Services delivery.—Project grants for the provision of family planning services are made to State and local health agencies or other public or nonprofit organizations under title V of the Social Security Act and under title X of the Public Health Service Act. Approximately 2,200,000 women will receive family planning services from funds awarded in 1973 as compared to 1,500,000 in 1972 and 700,000 in 1971.

Training and education.—Project grants and contracts are awarded for the short-term training of health personnel for service in family planning clinics, to educate and inform families of the benefits of voluntary family planning, to develop improved training programs for family planning workers, and to develop improved family planning education and information materials. Approximately 2,200 family planning personnel will be trained with project grant and contract funds awarded in 1973 for work in family planning clinics.

Services delivery improvement.—Project contracts are awarded for studies designed to improve the delivery of family planning services, for technical assistance to encourage the utilization of improved family planning services delivery methods, and for program planning and evaluation.

(b) Direct operations.—This activity supports the decentralized services delivery project grant program in 10 regions and the development and operation of training, education, and services delivery improvement programs of the National Center for Family Planning Services.

4. National health service corps.—The program provides for the assignment of commissioned officers and civil service personnel of the U.S. Public Health Service to communities where health services are inadequate due to a critical shortage of health personnel. It is anticipated that in 1973, about 50% of the program costs will be financed by reimbursements from the communities and from patients being served. The request would continue to support the 100-150 communities to which health personnel were assigned in 1972 and would also provide for assignment of personnel to an additional 75 communities, thus providing support for a total of 175-225 communities with a total population of approximately 700,000-900,000 people.

5. Patient care and special health services.—In 1973 this program will provide direct and contract medical care to the legal beneficiaries of the Public Health Service. Major beneficiary groups are American seamen, Coast Guardsmen and their dependents, Bureau of Employees' Compensation cases, and persons afflicted with leprosy. The largest single category of beneficiaries is American seamen. In 1972, American seamen will comprise about 50% of the inpatient workload in PHS general hospitals. On a reimbursable basis, medical care is also provided to foreign seamen and beneficiaries of other Federal agencies in PHS hospitals, and to Federal employees in PHS health units. In addition, Coast Guard personnel are provided medical and dental services at various Coast Guard locations.

(a) Inpatient and outpatient care.—Eight general hospitals and the National Leprosarium at Carville, La., operate under this activity. When PHS facilities are not accessible, beneficiaries receive care in other Federal and non-Federal facilities.

In addition to providing direct health care services, the hospitals are actively participating in the improvement of health services in the local community. Over 600 professional and subprofessional employees and 2,400 individuals from the community receive clinical training both in these facilities and through affiliations and auxiliary training programs. Emphasis is given to training of disadvantaged groups. Community involvement has increased through sharing available medical capabilities and health care resources where reimbursements or reciprocal services are received from the communities.

The system has been experiencing a continuing decline in inpatient workloads and is now operating at less than maximum capacity. The facilities have, however, become important community health resources. Recognizing the potential of further increasing the value of these facilities to the communities and to assure maximum utilization, the administration is conducting studies to determine the feasibility of converting them from Federal to local control. This will permit communities more latitude in utilizing the excess capacity to meet local needs. During 1973 efforts will be made to begin converting some of these facilities to community control in line with local health care needs and resources.

A supplemental estimate will be submitted for the current year requesting budget authority to finance the continued operation of PHS hospitals and clinics through 1972.

(b) Coast Guard medical services.—This activity provides PHS personnel to staff infirmaries, dispensaries, and sick bays at shore stations, air stations, and on board vessels. Contract care is also provided in civilian or other Federal facilities, when PHS hospitals are inaccessible. Programs are being established to provide both detection and rehabilitation of personnel with problems related to drug abuse. Facilities to deal with the rehabilitation of personnel with minor psychological disorders are being established at the two major recruit training centers located at Cape May, N.J., and Alameda, Calif. As an adjunct service related to the continuing goal of providing the best possible health care to Coast Guard personnel, this activity is also initiating programs in industrial, underwater and aviation medicine, and in environmental sanitation.

(c) Federal employees.—This activity provides, upon request, surveys of and consultation to Federal agencies, Federal executive boards and associations, and Federal employee organizations on the establishment and evaluation of Federal employee health activities. Occupational health programs are provided, on request, to Federal agencies on a reimbursable basis. In 1973, an estimated 160,000 Federal employees will be able to avail themselves of health services in 95 health units operating under this activity.

(d) Payment to Hawaii.—Grants are made to Hawaii to defray the cost of care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy. The average daily patient load is expected to be 158 in 1973, as compared with 164 in 1972, and 166 in 1971.

6. Regional office central staff.—This activity supports the regional health directors and their central staffs which are concerned with the coordination and interrelation of the various program activities of HSMHA and the implementation of those programs in the regional offices. The major components of the staff are: (1) A comprehensive health planning unit that provides leadership in the development and operation of programs for the conduct and improvement of comprehensive State and areawide health planning; (2) a grants management unit which provides centralized support activities for all HSMHA project and formula grants that have been decentralized to the regions; and (3) a special projects unit which manages an information system which provides data on areas of special interest to each particular region.

7. Program direction and management services.—This activity provides for overall executive direction, planning, evaluation, and administrative management of the health services delivery programs.

This program provides facilities and services for the investigation, prevention, and suppression of diseases and occupational injuries by direct development, advancement, and demonstration of knowledge and techniques, through research grants, and through prevention of the introduction of communicable diseases from foreign countries.

1. Disease control.—(a) Infectious diseases.—(1) Research grants.—Research grants are awarded to organizations, institutions, and individuals for research concerned with epidemiology, prevention, laboratory diagnosis, and treatment of infectious diseases at the community level. Approximately 52 research projects would be supported in 1973 as compared to 50 in 1972 and 48 in 1971.

(2) Project grants.—Project grants are awarded to States which meet established eligibility criteria. Grants are made in five areas: Venereal diseases, tuberculosis, RH factor, rubella, and immunization other than rubella. The national effort to control the spread of venereal diseases consists of both project grants and direct operations. The project grant program places primary emphasis on the interruption of the transmission of venereal diseases through case finding, tracing of contacts of infectious cases, and venereal diseases education. At the request of States, personnel and vaccines are furnished in lieu of cash.

(3) Direct operations.—Activities are focused directly on the national goal of improvement of the health care system through emphasis on prevention rather than treatment. Efforts toward this goal are channeled through three areas of operations: Investigations, surveillance, and control.

In the area of investigations, professional competence is afforded to the States through the staff of the Epidemic Intelligence Service which is constantly alert to epidemic situations in the country. These EIS officers provide a wide range of service, including epidemic aid, epidemiological field investigations, consultations in infectious disease control, surveillance of infectious diseases, and collaborative field and laboratory research.

Surveillance activities directed at national disease problems are supported on a continuing basis. The concept of surveillance has contributed to the decrease in incidence of diseases such as diphtheria, encephalitis, measles, poliomyelitis, and tetanus. Certain visa applicants are examined in order to determine those who are excludable for physical or mental reasons. Inspections (persons and importations) are made to prevent the introduction into the United States of quarantinable and other infectious diseases.

Note.—Each arriving passenger receives a health alert notice.

As basic knowledge is acquired, diagnostic techniques developed, and preventive methods developed for a disease, control efforts are initiated and maintained. Ongoing control programs are supported for tuberculosis and venereal diseases.

Tuberculosis.—Studies are conducted in epidemiology, prevention, detection, diagnosis, and therapy of tuberculosis. This research is conducted in cooperation with State and local health departments, tuberculosis hospitals, private investigators, and others. The results of the applied research are made available to the States and integrated into tuberculosis control programs by means of demonstrations, consultative services, operational studies, and training activities.

Venereal diseases.—Direct operations in venereal diseases provide for research and evaluation activities directed toward maintenance of uniformly satisfactory nationwide serologic services; development and introduction of new syphilis diagnostic tests; development of immunizing agent for syphilis; improvement of diagnostic techniques for gonorrhea; evaluation of more effective methods of therapy; and the improvement of control procedures. Scientific and general information about venereal disease for both professional and lay groups is disseminated through State agencies.

One facet of all control programs is training of State and local health workers in specific control techniques or methodologies. An estimated 11,000 trainees will participate in 486 courses conducted by the Center for Disease Control in both 1972 and 1973.

(b) Nutritional and chronic diseases.—Research and evaluation activities are directed to the identification of specific factors which cause nutritional diseases, the relationship of nutrition to other health problems, and to the determination of the extent of nutritional problems. Corrective action and prevention of nutritional diseases is sought through the conduct of demonstrations, and provision of technical assistance to State and local health departments and other public and private organizations. These funds also support the smoking and health activity aimed at preventing health problems resulting from cigarette smoking by stimulating and supporting National, State, and local activities to help those who wish to stop or curtail their smoking and by encouraging youth not to begin smoking.

(c) Laboratory improvements.—A comprehensive national laboratory improvement program is administered through research for improving and standardizing laboratory methodology and through evaluation of techniques, materials, and reagents used in public health laboratories. Individuals are provided experimental vaccines and special immune globulin is distributed to control laboratory infections. States are also provided consultation, training, and informational services in laboratory techniques. The program provides for upgrading the performance of the Nation's clinical laboratories and for the licensure and evaluation of clinical laboratories engaged in interstate commerce.

2. Community environmental management.—(a) Grants.—Grants are made to communities to provide support for a comprehensive approach to rat control and the control of lead-based paint poisoning in children.

Lead-based paint poisoning in children.—Grants and technical assistance in the amount of $9,500 thousand will be awarded in 1973 to initiate programs in several hundred communities to screen approximately 1.5 million children currently at risk of having or acquiring lead poisoning and to support the development of community organization and public education to reduce the extent of the problem in the future. Screening and deleading of hazardous dwelling units are emphasized through voluntary community action and local management of the housing stock.

Rat control.—Under the Federal rat control program, project grants in the amount of $15,000 thousand will be continued in 28 cities and initiated in six new project cities for a total of 34 cities in 1973. In 1973, it is anticipated that the premise prevalence for external rat signs will be further reduced to 7% from the 9% in 1972. Since the inception of the program in 1971, five project cities have been completely phased out having reached an acceptable maintenance level of rat infestation and causitive conditions.

(b) Direct operations.—States and communities are assisted in applying a systematic management approach for identifying environmental health hazards, setting priorities, developing and implementing plans for the solution of health problems, motivating and securing the support of community residents, and coordinating community services and programs of other Federal agencies for effective local action. Program field activities called human health ecology centers concentrate on understanding and controlling the special health problems and priorities of the specific geographic area in which they are located.

3. Occupational health.—(a) Grants.—Grants are made to public agencies and institutions to conduct research for developing criteria for standards to protect the safety and health of the Nation's work force and to provide research training programs for future scientific investigators in the field of occupational safety and health.

(b) Direct operations.—Program activities are designed to provide technical service and assistance to other agencies and to industry to reduce the direct and indirect cost of occupational hazards and diseases and to raise the health status of workers. Emphasis is focused on the preventive aspects of occupational safety and health and the improvement of the productivity and employability of workers. This is accomplished through the development of criteria for standards necessary for the successful implementation of a safe and healthy workplace.

4. Program direction and management services.—This activity provides for overall program management of preventive health service programs.

1. Management and central services.—This activity provides a central staff needed in planning, directing, and administering the broad scope of program activities in the Health Services and Mental Health Administration (HSMHA). Staff assistance is provided the Administrator in formulating policy in the areas of grant-in-aid, contract administration, financial management, personnel, and general services.

In 1973, the Office of the Administrator will continue to give strong guidance and leadership to the HSMHA programs with special emphasis on the development of local government and nongovernmental organizations in the conduct of federally sponsored health programs. The operational planning activity as set forth in the 1972 objectives will continue in 1973. Staffing studies of the major HSMHA headquarters components will be conducted. These studies will determine the impact that decentralization to the regions has had on workload both at headquarters and in the field.

An operations analysis function will be implemented which will organize and analyze data concerning the operations and accomplishments of HSMHA programs. The results of this analysis will be used for decisionmaking by the Administrator. This function will become operational during 1973, building on the initial phase implemented in 1972.

During 1973, further steps will be taken to systematize the HSMHA planning process. The capacity of the Office to perform special studies and analyses relating to HSMHA programs will be strengthened. These analyses will include systems analyses of the health care system which will form an analytical base for improving the planning of HSMHA programs.

1. Patient care.—This activity consists of the operation of 49 general hospitals and their outpatient clinics and two tuberculosis sanatoria and medical care under contract with non-Federal hospitals, clinics, private physicians, and dentists, as well as contractual arrangements with State and local health organizations.

The 12-percent reduction in the inpatient load in hospitals of the Indian Health Services from 1971 to 1973 will result in an improved ratio of staff to patient and higher quality of care.

Workloads for the total program are expected to be as follows:

2. Field health services.—These include programs in sanitation, health education, nutrition, maternal and child health, school health, tuberculosis and other communicable disease control, medical social services, public health nursing, oral health, family planning, and mental health. The services are provided through health centers, clinics, and other field health units operated directly by the Indian Health Service, as well as through contractual arrangement with State and local health organizations. It is estimated that outpatient clinics at Juneau, Alaska, and Fairbanks, Alaska, will be in operation in 1973.

1. Medical stockpile.—The goal of this activity is to provide essential medical material for civilian needs in time of disaster. tioned throughout the Nation. Selective medical supplies have been placed in community hospitals to meet heavy disaster medical care workloads. The estimate for 1973 supports a program to maintain the medical stockpile inventories and to excess certain materials that are no longer required.

2. Community preparedness.—Programs are inaugurated and maintained to support the preparation of national emergency health and medical plans, and the development of preparedness action projects to achieve a continuity of health services necessary to meet all conditions of a national emergency. The estimate for 1973 provides for a moderate program to assist States and communities during disaster situations; continue the development of plans and operational capability for civilian health manpower as well as utilization and distribution of health resources; develop and initiate emergency medical care services; and continue the operation of training programs at the State and local level.

3. Program direction and management services.—Total program control is provided for the organization and planning of programs that will afford adequate medical care for individuals in medical emergencies. The estimate for 1973 provides for a continuing activity that furnishes program direction, coordination and management services to carry out the total emergency health preparedness program. Working relationships are to be maintained with professional organizations and other Government agencies for the development of an effective disaster readiness program for the civilian population.

A Loan guarantee and loan fund for medical facilities is established in the Treasury, without fiscal year limitation, to discharge responsibilities under guarantees; for payment of interest subsidies on the loans to nonprofit sponsors which are guaranteed; for direct loans to public agencies which are sold and guaranteed; for payment of interest subsidies on direct loans which are sold and guaranteed; and for repurchase of direct loans which have been sold and guaranteed.

In 1973, the Medical facilities guarantee and loan fund would be capitalized at $52,800 thousand of which $30 million would serve as a revolving fund from which direct loans to public agencies are made and $22,800 thousand would provide interest subsidies on direct and guaranteed loans.

The Medical facilities guarantee and loan fund is capitalized with transfers from activities under the "Medical facilities construction" appropriation, and no request is made for direct appropriation to the fund.

Of major importance among these services are printing and reproduction, telecommunications, procurement, mail and messenger, building and space management, shipping and receiving, surplus property utilization, and building safety and security. This fund is reimbursed from applicable appropriations or funds available when services are performed or stock furnished on the basis of rates which shall include estimated or actual charges for personal services, materials, equipment (including maintenance, repairs, and depreciation), and other expenses.

Operating results.—Retained earnings amounted to $353 thousand as of June 30, 1971, and are being retained in the fund against the possibility of future losses.

NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) is the primary arm of the U.S. Government in the support of biomedical research, education, and communications. The mission of the NIH is investigating basic life process, advancing the capability for the diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of disease and providing support to strengthen health research, educational, and communications resources. NIH consists of 10 national research institutes, three program divisions, the Bureau of Health Manpower, the National Library of Medicine, and the Office of the Director.

In 1973, the NIH research institutes will initiate or expand activities in several high-priority programs. The National Cancer Institute will expand its efforts in all areas of cancer research, to continue the administration's accelerated cancer research program. The National Cancer Act of 1971 authorizes a national cancer program which will be initiated during 1972 and further developed in 1973 by the National Cancer Institute. A description of the specific activities of the National Cancer Institute can be found in the detailed presentation that follows. The National Heart and Lung Institute will increase research in sickle cell anemia, arteriosclerosis, hypertension, thrombosis, and pulmonary diseases.

The National Institute of Dental Research will enhance the goals of the national caries program through increased research grant funding. The National Institute of Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases will give special emphasis to research in the area of digestive diseases—peptic ulcer, ileitis, and diseases of the liver, gallbladder and pancreas. The National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Stroke will provide increased support for research in the fields of stroke, acute spinal cord injury, Parkinsonism, and communicative disorders. The National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases will give increased attention to research concerning cellular and clinical immunology, hepatitis, the biology of the gonococcus, and to allergic diseases. The National Institute of Child Health and Human Development will strengthen its research programs in the areas of family planning, child health, and aging. The National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences will increase research efforts in areas such as chemical mutagenesis, teratology, pesticides, food toxicants, air pollutants, and physical factors such as noise. The National Institute of General Medical Sciences will support research in the basic medical sciences. The National Eye Institute will continue its research efforts in the diseases and disorders of the eye.

The activities of the research institutes and divisions are carried out through extramural grant programs and through operations conducted directly by NIH and through contracts. Extramural grant programs are of three types:

Research grants—the principal activity of the institutes—are awarded to individuals for health-related research projects which are chosen on the basis of their scientific merit.

Fellowships are awarded to promising individuals preparing for research careers in the biomedical sciences.

Training grants are awarded to academic or research institutions which have demonstrated the ability to design and conduct successful training programs in the biological sciences.

In addition to grants, the NIH research institutes and divisions support biomedical research through direct operations which include the following components:

Laboratory and clinical research is conducted in the institutes' laboratory facilities and in the commonly shared clinical center facility.

Research and development contracts are conducted by NIH researchers in collaboration with other Federal and non-Federal institutions and are strongly oriented toward the solution of specific health problems where the state of knowledge is sufficiently advanced to permit a more directed approach.

Research management and program services provides such operational requirements as program direction, review, and approval of grants, intramural training programs.

Other activities under direct operations include biometry, epidemiology and field studies, biologics standards and international research.

The Bureau of Health Manpower Education provides a national focus for health manpower activities and supports programs designed to increase the number of qualified health personnel. A description of the Bureau's activities can be found in the detailed presentation of health manpower programs that follows. The National Library of Medicine serves as a national resource for biomedical information and as a focus for national planning to improve communications in the health sciences. Appropriations for Buildings and facilities support construction, renovation, and maintenance of NIH laboratory, clinical and administrative facilities while those for Office of the Director support salaries and expenses for the staff of the Director's office, NIH.

The National Cancer Institute conducts, fosters, and assists research and training directed toward preventing, diagnosing, treating, and controlling cancer in man. The National Cancer Institute will strengthen the cancer research center program. Expanded research of viruses and chemicals will be effected for the ultimate prevention of cancers in man. Cancer therapy methods will be expanded to utilize to a greater extent those drugs and combinations thereof that have proved effective in the treatment of cancer; and application of knowledge gained in treatment of fast growing tumors to the slow growing ones such as breast, lung, colon, bladder, prostate, and pancreas. Task forces will be emphasized in order to concentrate on the causes and prevention of cancers.

1. Grants.—(a) Research.—Approximately 1,574 regular research grants will be supported in 1973 as compared to 1,268 in 1972 and 979 in 1971. In addition, funds are provided for cancer research centers (clinical centers and program centers), leukemia research support centers, large bowel and bladder task forces, general research support grants, and cancer control competitive demonstration projects.

(b) Fellowships.—Approximately 224 postdoctoral and special fellowships will be supported in 1973 as compared to 151 in 1972 and 191 in 1971. Also, some 100 career award and career development fellowships will be supported in 1973 as compared to 78 in 1972 and 82 in 1971.

(c) Training.—Grants are awarded to accredited schools for the improvement of instruction in the curriculum; clinical training grants are awarded for training in such fields as surgery, pathology, radiobiology, radiotherapy, and internal medicine; and grants are awarded to research training centers for individual traineeships. The following table summarizes those grants:

Graduate training.....	86	90	102
Cancer clinical training.....	85	102	113

2. Direct operations.—(a) Laboratory and clinical research.—Research includes laboratory research in the fields of biology, biochemistry, and physiology; and clinical research in the fields of surgery, immunology, radiation, dermatology, pathology, and metabolism.

(b) Research and development contracts.—This activity includes the funds for that portion of the research programs described under "Laboratory and Clinical Research" and "Collaborative Research and Support," utilizing the contract mechanism.

(c) Collaborative research and support.—Research is conducted in the areas of etiology and chemotherapy. Several task forces, for example, breast cancer and lung cancer, are also included within this activity. This activity contains the research effort carried on directly in Government laboratories and clinical facilities for these integrated programs. The programs are focused on the causes of cancers and their occurrence patterns and prevention, as well as funding the best methods of treating cancer through the screening, testing, and clinical evaluation of drugs. That portion of the effort of these targeted programs conducted through the contract mechanism is included in the above activity "Research and Development Contracts."

3. Construction.—Cancer research centers will be constructed which are a critical component of the expanded cancer research program. Etiology research facilities will be constructed for the expansion of carcinogenesis and viral oncology research. Plans are being developed for the addition of outpatient and laboratory facilities.

Includes $401 thousand in 1972 and 1973 for activities previously financed from Bureau of Health Manpower, 1971, $401 thousand.

1. Grants.—(a) Research.—Research grants support fundamental clinical, and applied research studies in such areas as dental caries, periodontal disease, oral-facial growth and development and dental restorative materials. Support is furnished for studies designed to advance scientific frontiers and exploit emerging research opportunities including: (1) Investigation of the interplay of host, dietary, and microbiotic factors in dental caries; (2) development of more effective therapeutic and preventive measures in periodontal disease; (3) development of treatment procedures and determination of preventive measures for oral-facial anomalies; and (4) work on the immediate problems of dental treatment through development of new and improved restorative materials and clinical methods.

The activity in support of dental research institutes (centers) in university settings, now entering its fifth year and requiring support at the current level of $6.2 million, continues to close the gap between dental and other biomedical research, and is significantly influencing the progress of dental education.

The recently initiated Special Dental Research Award program is designed to help newly trained investigators remain active in research during the formative stages of their careers, and thereby assure a vital input to the dental investigator pool. Emphasis will continue to be in the basic and clinical problem areas of dental caries, periodontal and mucosal diseases of the mouth, oral-facial defects of development and dental pain.

Approximately 248 project grants will be supported in 1973, compared with 249 in 1972 and 217 in 1971.

(b) Fellowships.—Funds for fellowships are used for support of clinical and basic research training. Applications under this program are for special fellowships, postdoctoral fellowships, and career development and career awards. In 1973, 91 fellowships will be supported compared with 96 in 1972 and 95 in 1971.

(c) Training.—Training funds are the principal means of meeting the need for dental research and academic personnel in the dental schools to teach clinical and basic sciences, and to conduct research. Increased costs per grant will make it necessary to support only 81 grants in 1973, compared with 85 in 1972 and 93 in 1971.

2. Direct operations.—(a) Laboratory and clinical research.—Laboratory and clinical research studies conducted in Institute facilities are concerned with the causes, treatment, control, and prevention of such dental diseases and disorders as caries, periodontal disease, oral-facial anomalies, and oral cancer. Three primary approaches are used: (1) Basic research directed at the acquisition of new knowledge as a means of solving dental health problems; (2) field studies and clinical trials of new therapeutic and prevention concepts coming out of basic research; and (3) further studies on the definition and distribution of oral-facial diseases and disorders on an epidemiologic or geographic basis. Much of this research will make direct contributions to the recently initiated National caries program.

(b) Research and development contracts.—The programs in this activity involve contracts with public and private research and development organizations. Primary objectives include support of the National caries program and the development of new and improved dental restorative materials.

(c) Collaborative research and support.—This activity provides administrative, contract, and clerical personnel necessary to administer the research and development contracts supported by this Institute.

(d) Biometry, epidemiology, and field studies.—This activity is concerned with the planning, conduct and analysis of epidemiological and field investigations concerning such matters as prevalence of oral disease, and effectiveness of new or improved methods of diagnosis, control, and prevention. A number of the studies conducted will be integral parts of the National caries program.

Grants.—(a) Research.—Grants are awarded to universities and to other institutions on a project basis to conduct research needs which have been identified as national importance. Funds available for 1973 will support approximately 1,271 awards compared to 1,185 awards in 1972 and 1,154 awards in 1971. In addition, funds are provided for general research support grants, clinical research centers, and international centers for medical research and training.

(b) Fellowships.—Funds for fellowships are used to train professional researchers in research areas within the categorical interests of the Institute. The program supports postdoctoral, special, career development fellowships, and career awards. An estimated 206 awards will be made in 1973 and 1972, compared to 205 actual awards in 1971.

(c) Training.—Funds in 1973 will provide approximately 153 grants to train 918 individuals in allergy and immunology and infectious diseases in 1973 and 1972, compared to 151 grants and 906 individuals in 1971.

Direct operations.—(a) Laboratory and clinical research.—Laboratory and clinical research in microbiology and immunology, in its broadest sense, nourishes the entire field of biomedicine and affects the programs of all the other Institutes. The Institute research effort embraces both basic and applied research. Laboratory scientists and clinical investigators at NIH and field installations are directing their efforts to the discovery and exploitation of new knowledge leading to the eventual prevention and treatment of diseases caused by infection with microorganisms or abnormal immunological mechanisms. The diseases under intensive study are those caused by viruses, bacteria, mycoplasma, fungi, protozoa, and helminths.

(b) Research and development contracts.—The activities carried out under this program are through research contracts with industry and other Federal and non-Federal institutions. Primary objectives include translation of significant basic research data into practical achievements of clinical applicability in immunologic and infectious diseases. The program also conducts and supports developmental research in the prevention, control, and treatment of diseases caused by infectious agents including bacteria, viruses, and parasites and abnormalities in the body's immune mechanisms.

1. Grants.—(a) Research.—Approximately 965 regular research grants will be supported in 1973. This compares with an anticipated 811 in 1972 and 748 in 1971. Additionally this activity provides funds for general research support grants, and mental retardation research centers.

(b) Fellowships.—In 1973 the fellowship program will be supported at the same dollar level as in 1972. Approximately 210 awards will be supported as contrasted to 214 in 1972 and 220 in 1971.

(c) Training.—In 1973 the Institute will support approximately 98 training grants. This compares with 99 anticipated for 1972, and 112 supported in 1971.

2. Direct operations.—(a) Laboratory and clinical research: The laboratories of this activity conduct research in five major program areas of child health and human development. Reproduction and population research including research in reproductive biology, endocrinology, and ecology. Perinatal biology and infant mortality includes research relating to maternal-child interactions, maturation of motor and behavioral systems, nutrition and development. Growth and development includes research in the areas of neurophysiology, neurochemistry, and nutrition. Adult development and aging includes research in cellular biology, biochemistry, physiology, and psychological development. Mental retardation includes biochemical, neurophysiological, and behavioral research.

(b) Research and development contracts.—This activity, primarily through the contract mechanism, supplements the Institute's five research programs. The research conducted is usually Institute initiated and is directed toward gaps in existing research or to expand on current studies of either the intramural program or the research grant program. This activity provides one of the most effective ways for coordinating program development in the Institute's five program areas. The main thrust of the Institute's population research program is accomplished through contract efforts within this activity.

(c) Collaborative research and support.—This activity supports the Center for Population Research which was established in 1968 to administer the Institute's population research program. Research and training is conducted in the biomedical and behavioral sciences of population. The goals of such research are to develop and evaluate methods of contraception and fertility regulation and, to support acquisition of knowledge on determinants and consequences of population growth.

(d) Biometry, epidemiology, and field studies.—This activity supports the Institute's scientific staff in planning and in conducting studies dealing with the incidence, distribution, and control of health problems in certain populations. It supports development of more effective and reliable means for measuring health problems, collects and analyzes health data and makes statistical studies for use in initiating and evaluating scientific programs.

Grants.—(a) Research.—The research grants program of the National Eye Institute supports the acquisition of new knowledge to combat the widespread incidence of visual disability. Projects range from basic investigations of the visual process to the clinical application of knowledge acquired in the laboratory. Glaucoma, retinal disease, disorders of the cornea and lens, cataract, and infectious eye diseases are among the specific conditions undergoing intensive investigation. In addition, funds are provided for vision clinical research centers and general research support grants. During 1973 the Institute plans to award approximately 418 research grants as compared to 423 awards in 1972 and 411 in 1971.

(b) Fellowships.—The fellowship program supports the national vision research effort through the provision of postdoctoral research training to individual investigators working on problems of visual health. Awardees receive training in the wide variety of scientific disciplines associated with vision research. Approximately 101 fellowships will be awarded in 1973 as compared to 101 in 1972 and 88 in 1971.

(c) Training.—Training grants are awarded to academic institutions for the establishment, improvement, or expansion of vision research training programs. The grants provide sophisticated training environments for more advanced investigators who wish to pursue academic careers in vision research. Approximately 42 training grants will be awarded in 1973 as compared to 45 in 1972 and 48 in 1971.

Direct operations.—(a) Laboratory and clinical research.—This activity supports laboratory and clinical investigations conducted by staff of the National Eye Institute. Talented investigators representing a broad spectrum of scientific disciplines strive to increase our knowledge and understanding of glaucoma, retinal disorders, inflammatory diseases of the eye, embryology of the retina and cornea, and the coding of visual information from the eye to the brain. A close association between the laboratory and clinic facilitates the rapid translation of research findings to the care of eye patients.

(b) Research and development contracts.—This program supports research contracts with universities, other Federal agencies, and industrial research organizations for projects that require close direction and surveillance by Institute staff and offer high probability of rapid payoff. Projects have been initiated to improve the diagnosis and treatment of glaucoma, retinal disease, and developmental abnormalities of the visual system.

(c) Biometry, epidemiology, and field studies.—This activity constitutes a program for the collection and analysis of data on the incidence and prevalence of vision disorders in selected population groups, and for the study of environmental and hereditary factors in the etiology of eye disease. The program also provides biometric and epidemiologic support to intramural and collaborative programs, including clinical trials to evaluate the efficacy of various regimens in the prevention of blindness.

The programs administered by the Division of Research Resources provide for the creation of specialized research settings for use by grantees and contractors of the NIH categorical programs and for the generation of new knowledge to aid the general progress of biomedical science in the treatment of human disease and disability.

The discrete research resources include: (a) general clinical research centers which are prominent features in many of the Nation's leading medical schools and which make extensive, controlled studies of human patients possible; (b) biotechnology resources which bring powerful instrumentation and physical sciences expertise within reach of the biomedical scientist; and (c) animal resources, which not only give investigators access to expertly maintained colonies of rare animals for those studies which cannot realistically be undertaken in humans, but also represent standards for the most advanced facilities and procedures for high quality animal care. The Division also administers the general research support program.

1. Grants.—(a) Research.—Funds in 1973 will provide the following special research resources: General clinical research centers—approximately 82 centers will be supported in 1973 including three new high priority centers, with some diversification for further expansion of research on ambulatory subjects, as compared to 82 in 1972 and 81 in 1971; biotechnology resources—approximately 48 resources will be supported in 1973 as compared to 48 in 1972 and 47 in 1971; animal resources—approximately 75 animal resources including seven primate centers will receive support in 1973 the same as 1972, as compared to 71 in 1971.

(b) Fellowships.—Approximately 14 fellowships will be supported in 1973 the same as 1972 and 1971.

(c) Training.—Grants are awarded to institutions to support training in the field of laboratory animal medicine. Approximately eight training grants will be supported in 1973 as compared to nine in 1972 and 1971.

2. Direct operations.—Research and development contracts.—This activity is carried out primarily through research contracts with industry, universities, and other Federal and non-Federal institutions. Included are contracts in the areas of chemical/biological information handling, biotechnology, and laboratory animal care.

1. Health professions support.—The objective of alleviating the shortages of professional health manpower is pursued by providing financial assistance to health professions institutions and their students. This assistance is provided through four mechanisms:

Institutional support.—Institutional assistance is provided through several programs. Capitation grants are awarded on a formula basis to health professions schools in order to strengthen their base of financial support thereby encouraging increases in enrollments and graduates, and improving the quality of their educational programs. Startup grants to new medical, osteopathic, and dental schools are intended to accelerate the date instruction begins or increase the number of students in the entering class. Conversion grants will be awarded to 2-year schools that desire to become degree-granting institutions. Special project grants supply broad-range assistance to schools with potential to increase enrollments as well as to enable schools to experiment with programs designed to increase the quality of trained personnel. Financial distress grants help alleviate the difficulties of schools in serious financial straits. The numbers of schools receiving support are:

	1971 actual	1972 estimate	1973 estimate	1971 actual	1972 estimate	1973 estimate
Medical and osteopathic	115	115	121	62	75	75
Dental	52	52	56	6	21	20
Other health professions	101	108	109	--	10	10

Included in this category are health manpower education initiative awards which are intended to help achieve special national health manpower goals.

Student assistance.—Health professions scholarships and loans enable deserving but financially needy students to pursue their education. Scholarships and loans are awarded to students who, in the judgment of the schools have exceptional financial need. The numbers of recipients are:

	Scholarships			Loans
	1971 actual	1972 estimate	1973 estimate	1971 actual	1972 estimate	1973 estimate
Medical and osteopathic	8, 430	8, 400	8, 040	10, 859	13, 100	14, 040
Dental	3, 500	3, 300	3, 015	4, 077	4, 800	5, 265
Other health professions	6, 325	6, 300	5, 695	7, 506	9, 100	9, 945

Construction.—Grants are made to public and other nonprofit schools, agencies, and organizations for the construction of health professions and nursing teaching facilities and of multipurpose and graduate facilities. From the beginning of the program in 1964 to July 1, 1971, awards with Federal obligations of approximately $800 million, providing for the construction of an estimated 6,130 first-year places have been made. In 1972 and 1973, construction assistance will be in the form of both matching grants and interest subsidy payments on guaranteed loans.

Educational grants and contracts and direct operations.—Support is focused on innovation and experimentation in medical education as well as scientific evaluation proposals.

2. Dental health.—Programs administered by the Division of Dental Health are oriented to a full-range of dental health efforts, including activities directed toward increasing and improving the dental manpower supply, support for projects concerned with the control of dental diseases, and provision of high-quality dental services through the improvement of delivery systems.

Dental fellowship grants are awarded to candidates pursuing advanced degrees in public health administration, computer technology, bioengineering, dental health delivery systems, dental economics, and education research. In 1973, 11 fellows will be supported, the same number as supported in 1972. Dental research training grants support students working in the areas of oral epidemiology, dental education, and sociology in dental public health. Five grants will be supported in 1973 for continuing education systems which deliver new knowledge to the practicing dentist and dental assistant. The current Dental Auxiliary Utilization program, designed to teach students the effective utilization of a chairside assistant has produced a more productive practitioner; financial support for this current program continues to undergo gradual withdrawal and be redirected to a program which will provide dental students with training in expanded functions and expanded auxiliary management—the team concept of clinical dentistry. This new approach should expand productivity considerably.

3. Nursing support.—Nurses are an essential element in providing the manpower necessary for the delivery of adequate health care. At present, registered nurses are in short supply. Financial assistance is provided to nursing institutions and students through the following programs:

Institutional support.—Funds are included for capita-tion grants which will provide assistance to approxi-mately 1,100 schools of nursing in 1973. Special projects for the improvement of nurse training provide the impetus for schools to initiate new methods in nursing education designed to improve the quality and increase the number of nurses available in the nation. Funds requested for 1973 will support approximately 250 projects in such areas as utilization of faculty, methods of instruction, curriculum revision, and enrollment increases. Major emphasis will be placed on projects for the development of programs to prepare nurses to assume expanded func-tions and responsibilities in the provision of health care. Financial distress grants assist schools in meeting opera-tional costs required to maintain quality educational programs and accreditation requirements. Funds requested in 1973 will support approximately 20 schools in serious financial straits. Startup grants provide train-ing programs where they are most needed and utilize existing resources wherever possible to increase the num-bers trained. Funds requested in 1973 will provide for the establishment of an estimated 20 new nurse training programs.

Student assistance.—Nurse scholarships and loans encourage and assist qualified young people with serious financial need to undertake education for nursing. Num-bers of recipients are:

	Scholarships			Loans
Nursing students.....	17,000	19,500	19,500	24,000	30,000	26,000

Traineeships support the graduate and specialized pre-paration of professional nurses as teachers, administrators, and supervisors. Funds requested in 1973 will provide approximately 2,000 long-term traineeships. In addition, 750 nurses will receive short-term intensive training.

Construction.—Grants are made to public and other nonprofit schools, agencies, and organizations for the construction or renovation of teaching facilities for nurses. From the beginning of the program in 1965 to June 30, 1971, awards with Federal obligations of approximately $88 million have been made, providing for the construction of an estimated 6,240 first-year places and the mainte-nance of 19,700 student places. The 1973 request includes an increase of $800 thousand for interest subsidy payments.

Educational grants and contracts and direct operations.—Educational research projects in such areas as nursing practice are supported and result in modifications to and development of nurse educational and training programs. Funds requested in 1973 will support 40 nurse research projects. A nurse-scientist graduate training grant pro-gram advances nursing and other health-related research by increasing the number of research scientists with a nursing background. Funds requested in 1973 will support science departments in nine universities. Nursing fellow-ship grants are awarded to prepare professional nurses for independent research, to collaborate in interdisciplinary research, and to direct community health research. In 1973, 120 fellows will be supported. Recruitment grant and contract funds broaden the recruitment base of nursing students by identifying potential nursing candidates and encouraging them to undertake nurse training. The $2 million for this program will support approximately 20 recruitment projects.

4. Public health support.—Changes in the concepts of health services have created needs for new types of public health personnel when existing types are already in short supply. The following mechanisms are currently being used in an attempt to alleviate the shortages:

Institutional support.—Formula grants are awarded to accredited schools of public health for the purpose of assisting them in providing comprehensive professional training, specialized consultative services, and technical assistance in public health fields and in public health administration at the state and local levels. Project grants for graduate training in public health are awarded to schools of public health and to other public or nonprofit private institutions to strengthen or expand the graduate or specialized training in public health which they provide. In 1973, the number of grants awarded will increase by over one-third, reaching a total of 120 and including an estimated 40 first-year projects.

Student assistance.—Traineeships support the graduate and specialized preparation of students in public health, most of whom are employed by state and local health agencies representing such health disciplines as medicine, dentistry, nursing, and engineering. Types of training included are postprofessional, long-term academic training; short-term training to update the skills of current public health professionals; residency training in preventive medicine and dental public health; and apprenticeships for medical and dental students in public health training. An estimated 450 additional trainees will be supported in 1973.

Direct operations.—Grants programing will emphasize consultation with schools and professional organizations which can most readily utilize resources affecting priority areas of nutrition, maternal and child health, and pre-ventive services to people in disadvantaged situations.

5. Allied health support.—More general use of allied health workers in this country requires more efficient utilization of our present training capacities and experi-mentation with, and development of, new and improved ways of training and using these personnel. The following mechanisms are directed to these ends:

Institutional support.—Special improvement grants will be made to allied health training centers offering the greatest comparative potential for expansion of allied health manpower output through enrollment increases in established curriculums, planning and establishing new programs, shortening curriculums, and developing co-ordinated programs to conserve faculty and facilities. Some 40 more allied health training centers will be brought into participation in this program through new awards.

Student assistance.—Traineeships support students pre-paring to teach or to serve in an administrative, super-visory, or specialist capacity in the allied health disciplines. Funds requested in 1973 will continue long-term and train-ing institute assistance to approximately 3,000 students.

Educational grants and contracts and direct operations.—Funds are requested for special project grants in 1973. Ef-forts will continue to provide awards for developing, dem-onstrating, or evaluating interdisciplinary training pro-grams; new teaching methods; new types of health man-power; equivalency and proficiency testing mechanisms; and special programs to reach special groups such as returning veterans with experience in a health field.

6. Program direction and manpower analysis.—The Bu-reau of Health Manpower Education guides, supports, plans, and evaluates health manpower programs; designs proposals for new or revised programs; coordinates improved manpower data gathering, statistical and reporting activities; and maintains an inventory of all health manpower educational programs in the Nation.

The National Library of Medicine (NLM), the world's largest resource for biomedical documents, facilitates the application of biomedical information to the treatment and prevention of diseases by acquiring, organizing, and disseminating informational materials to health professionals. The NLM explores ways in which technological advances in the communications field, which have helped scientists generate vast quantities of new knowledge in recent years, can be applied to organizing that knowledge and making it available where and when it is needed.

The individual programs of the library are described below.

Medical library assistance.—NLM provides six categories of grant and contract support as outlined below.

(a) Training grants.—The objective is to train creative leadership for the Nation's medical libraries. In addition to training in conventional library sciences, special emphasis will be placed on training medical librarians in the new communications fields to handle more complex information systems utilizing the computer sciences.

(b) Special scientific project grants.—This program will support projects by eminent scientists scholars to analyze and evaluate the literature in their specialty fields and make it more readily accessible to users in the health sciences.

(c) Research grants.—The grants will support investigations that are designed to produce more effective means of storage, retrieval, and transmission of the constantly growing mass of biomedical information and data.

(d) Library resources grants.—The NLM will provide grants to improve the resources and services in local medical libraries, both small and large. The emphasis is on upgrading the medical libraries in hospitals, educational institutions, and medical societies by supplementing rather than replacing local resources.

(e) Regional medical library grants and contracts.—In 1973 the NLM will continue to provide assistance to 10 major medical libraries which serve as the intermediate links, for their respective regions of the Nation, between the NLM and the small hospital or other local medical library. Services provided through the regional medical libraries will include MEDLARS searches, which enable a health professional to identify the current journal articles relevant to his particular information needs; and inter-library loans, which provide him with that portion of the literature which he needs, but which is not available locally.

(f) Publications support grants.—NLM will continue the support of projects directed at developing selected publications designed to help health professionals be aware of and digest the world's tremendous output of biomedical information.

Direct operations.—This activity includes the following programs:

(a) Lister Hill National Center for Biomedical Communications.—This effort involves: (1) Identifying existing innovative communications technology available to the network; (2) demonstrating their feasibility and cost-effectiveness in a biomedical context; and (3) applying computer technology to improve medical education, research, and health care. It also includes managing and coordinating the technical communications aspects of the nationwide network.

(b) National medical audiovisual center (NMAC).—NMAC acquires, organizes, and distributes audiovisual materials; evaluates and provides educational research and consultation on audiovisual systems and materials; and provides audiovisual reference services.

(c) Library operations.—The library acquires and maintains the foremost archival and reference collection of the world's biomedical literature. It provides bibliographic, reference, and loan services from this data base through a network of regional and local medical libraries.

(d) Toxicology information.—This program is responsible for developing and operating a computer-based information storage and retrieval system concerning the health effects of chemical compounds on man and his environment.

(e) Review and approval and program direction.—These activities provide the overall scientific and administrative management of the NLM programs.

The scientific activities overseas/special foreign currency program is supported by foreign currencies owned by the United States which have been determined by the Treasury to be in excess of normal U.S. needs. Authorization for these activities is given by the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 and the International Health Research Act of 1960.

The general objective of this program is to support health research and research related activities overseas that are within the program interests of the Department's health agencies and of mutual interest to the host country, its institutions, and its scientists. The Department anticipates that the support of health research potential overseas will ultimately enhance the status of the health sciences in the United States. To meet these general objectives, approximately 350 projects are currently active in eight excess currency countries: Ceylon, Egypt, India, Israel, Pakistan, Poland, Tunisia, and Yugoslavia. Areas of research include: The improvement of the organization and delivery of health services; environmental health; nutrition; manpower development; population and family planning; disease prevention and control; food and drug consumer protection; biomedical research and health science communications.

Increased involvement in the worldwide problems of environmental health, population and family planning, and disease prevention and control is planned for 1973. Emphasis will be placed on matching high priority U.S. health needs with salient areas of concern in the host countries in order to achieve domestic goals and also promote U.S. foreign policy.

It is planned to support an estimated 170 new projects in 1973. Specific objectives are: $2,250 thousand for environmental health; $4,860 thousand for studies to improve the organization and delivery of health services; $1,015 thousand for population and family planning research; $1,900 thousand for nutrition studies; $580 thousand for manpower development; $1,930 thousand for disease prevention and control; $5,526 thousand for studies in food and drug consumer protection; and $7,550 thousand for biomedical research and scientific health communications.

Title VII, part C, of the Public Health Service Act established a revolving fund from which health professions schools could borrow in order to provide loans to their students. Public Law 89-751, the Allied Health Professions Personnel Training Act of 1966, amended the Public Health Service Act to authorize the Federal Government to pay the difference between the interest paid by students to the schools and the interest payable by the schools to the Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA) and the Treasury.

In 1973, provision is made for the following Federal payments:

- $130 thousand to GNMA, which represents the difference between the 5.25% interest rate earned by the student loan paper and the 6.38% rate paid by GNMA on the $11,500 thousand worth of paper held by the public.

- $604 thousand to GNMA which represents the 5.25% interest due on $11,500 thousand worth of paper held by the public.

- $1,170 thousand to the U.S. Treasury on the difference between U.S. Treasury interest rate and that paid by the schools on $18,718 thousand loaned to the schools.

In addition, $223 thousand will be paid to health professions schools for loan cancellations under the Public Health Service Act. These loans are canceled by either the death or permanent and total disability of the borrower or the borrower's willingness to serve in an area designated by the Secretary. Title VIII, part B, of the Public Health Service Act established a revolving fund from which schools of nursing could borrow in order to provide loans to their students. Public Law 89-751, the Allied Health Professions Personnel Training Act of 1966, amended the Public Health Service Act to authorize the Federal Government to pay the difference between the interest paid by students to the schools and the interest payable by the schools to the Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA) and the Treasury.

In 1973, provision is made for the following Federal payments:

$40 thousand to GNMA, which represents the difference between the 5.25% interest rate earned by the student loan paper and the 6.38% rate paid by GNMA on the $3,500 thousand worth of paper held by the public.

$184 thousand to GNMA which represents the 5.25% interest due on $3,500 worth of paper held by the public.

$755 thousand to the U.S. Treasury on the difference between U.S. Treasury interest rate and that paid by the schools on $12,081 thousand loaned to the schools.

In addition, $894 thousand will be paid to schools of nursing for loan cancellations under the Public Health Service Act. These loans are canceled by either the death or permanent and total disability of the borrower or the borrower's willingness to serve in an area designated by the Secretary. In 1973 funds are provided for the following general research support programs. General research support grants enable institutions heavily engaged in health-related research greater control over the quality, content, emphasis, and direction of their research activities than is possible exclusively under the categorical research project system. Approximately 346 grants will be supported in 1973 as compared to 338 in 1972 and 326 in 1971. The biomedical sciences support program provides funds to academic institutions other than health professional schools for support of their health-related research and research training activities. Approximately 117 grants will be supported in 1973 as compared to 115 in 1972 and 112 in 1971. Health sciences advancement awards program—in 1973 continuation awards will be made to two institutions compared to four in 1972 and nine in 1971. The minority schools biomedical support program is designed to strengthen institutional biomedical research and research training capability at institutions where the student enrollment is drawn mainly from minority ethnic groups. Approximately 49 institutions will receive support in 1973 as compared to 26 in 1972 when this program was initiated.

The National Institutes of Health Management Fund was established to facilitate the conduct of operations of the NIH, which are financed by two or more appropriations. The activities of the fund are financed primarily from advances and reimbursements from the individual institutes. Formulas for determining the contribution from each institute are designed to reflect utilization of services performed by the management fund. The formula takes into consideration such factors as the number of activated beds in the clinical center, the number of laboratory workers, total personnel, and the dollar level of grants and direct research funds obligated by the individual institutes. A small portion of the funds comes from reimbursements from outside sources, and from other Government agencies.

The centralized organizations of the NIH provide supporting services as follows:

Computer services provide a central scientific research and computational resource in support of the NIH programs. The Division plans and conducts an extensive interdisciplinary research and development program in which the concepts and methods of computer science, engineering, and mathematics are applied to biomedical problems.

Research supporting services provide the central administration and operation of services for the conduct of research activities such as providing laboratory animals, culture media, and glassware; design and fabrication of laboratory instrumentation; operating the NIH medical reference library including the translation of medical literature; scientific photography and medical arts; and environmental engineering services.

Engineering services provide engineering, architectural, craft, and labor services required for the (1) operation and maintenance of the NIH facilities, (2) planning of facilities and improvements, (3) administration and inspection of construction performed under direct contract, and (4) liaison and inspection of direct construction projects.

Clinical services provide facilities and services, other than physician care, for (1) an integrated operation of the clinical center's 516-bed facility servicing nine Institutes conducting clinical investigations, (2) developing and recommending policies and rules for the protection and welfare of patients, (3) conducting research in methods and techniques of hospital administration in a medical research environment, (4) professional staff conducting independent research, and (5) numerous other medical care services.

Grant review and approval provide staff support services in formulating NIH grant and award policies and procedures relating to research, training, and fellowship programs.

Administrative services include plant and office services, including cleaning of space; mail, messenger, telephone, and other communication services; operation and maintenance of motor vehicles; guards, fire fighting, and other plant protection and safety services; and procurement and supply management.

The NIH Service and Supply Fund provides a single means for consolidated financing and accounting of business-type operations involving the sale of services and commodities to customers.

The activities of the fund are grouped into four categories; administrative services, data processing services, instrumentation, and research animals. These activities rendered services or sold commodities to the institutes/divisions of NIH at a $20,171 thousand level in 1971. It is expected that the level will be $20,500 thousand in 1972 and increase to $22.0 million in 1973. Two activities, the scientific equipment rental pool and still photography, were added to the fund during 1971; adding approximately $345 thousand in services.

A general description of these activities follows:

Administrative services.—These services include the sale of commodities from inventory printing and reproduction services and other miscellaneous services. The NIH maintains a supply of scientific and general-use materials and supplies, alteration and construction material, linens and special equipment. The Printing and Reproduction Branch provides printing, distribution, and related services. Its printing plant is equipped to produce brochures and well as ordinary administrative materials.

Data processing services.—This central facility provides data systems design and consultation, key punching, EAM processing, computer programming and computer processing services.

Instrumentation.—The Biomedical Instrumentation and Engineering Branch maintains, repairs, and fabricates scientific laboratory apparatus and equipment for use in the research laboratories at NIH.

Research animals.—The NIH animal facilities provide small and large research animals to the research laboratories. The facilities include breeding, holding and conditioning facilities for mice, rats, guinea pigs, rabbits, hamsters, dogs, cats, primates, and ungulate animals. Bleeding services are also provided.

1. Aid to school districts.—(a) Educationally deprived children.—Grants are made to local educational agencies to provide supplemental services for children from low-income families. In addition grants are made to State education agencies for handicapped children, dependent and neglected children, and orphans and juvenile delinquents in State institutions and for children of migratory workers. In 1971, two new areas of this program were initiated, incentive grants to 30 States putting forth a greater effort than the Nation as a whole in public support for elementary and secondary education and special grants for urban and rural schools serving areas with the highest concentrations of children from low-income families. In 1973, comparable State and local expenditures will be required within school districts as a criteria for eligibility for receipt of these funds. It is estimated that 7.9 million children will receive benefits in 1973 with greatest emphasis being placed on preschool and elementary school children from attendance areas with high concentrations of children from low-income families. Priority for the disadvantaged will be continued under education revenue sharing.

(b) Supplementary services.—The Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1969 consolidated the separate authorities for all supplementary services grants under title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. Under this consolidated authority grants are made to States for developing programs which serve as models for improving and supplementing the regular school curriculum and programs designed to improve testing and guidance and counseling services in public and private elementary and secondary schools. In 1971, over 1,000 projects aided some 14 million students. This program will be included in education revenue sharing to give States and local school systems greater flexibility in the use of education funds.

(c) Library resources.—Funds for this program have been transferred to the library resources account.

(d) Equipment and minor remodeling.—Grants were made to States on a matching basis for equipment and minor remodeling of laboratory or other space suitable for use in providing education in public elementary or secondary schools while loans were made to private nonprofit schools for similar uses.

It is proposed that these grants be terminated in 1973. Schools and States will have greater flexibility to determine the appropriate mix of equipment and other school resources under Federal grants for educationally deprived children, grants for vocational education, grants for education of the handicapped, and other Federal programs focusing on broad problem areas.

2. Dropout prevention.—Funds for this program have been transferred to Educational renewal.

3. Bilingual education.—Funds for this program have been transferred to Educational renewal.

4. Follow Through.—Funds for this program have been transferred to Educational renewal and Salaries and expenses.

5. Strengthening State departments of education.—Grants are made to stimulate and assist States in strengthening the leadership resources of their education agencies by assisting them in the establishment and improvement of programs to identify and meet their educational needs. A new program is being initiated in 1973 to provide financial assistance to State and local educational agencies for the purpose of planning in preparation for education revenue sharing. This program will be included in education revenue sharing to give States greater flexibility in the use of Federal education funds.

6. Planning and evaluation.—Funds for this program have been transferred to Educational renewal.

1. Maintenance and operations.—Payments are made to assist in the operation of schools in areas where enrollments are affected by Federal activities. In 1972 payments were based on almost 2½ million federally connected children and made to local school districts educating over half of the Nation's public elementary and secondary school children. In addition, the full cost of education is provided for children residing on Federal property where no State or local educational agency is able, because of State law or for other reasons, to provide suitable free public education to such children. For 1973, appropriation language is proposed to concentrate payments on those children whose parents both live and work on Federal property and on the children of military personnel and Indians who either live or work on Federal property. A provision is also added so that more heavily impacted districts will not be adversely affected. The major portion of this program will be included in the education revenue sharing program.

2. Construction.—Payments are made to assist in the construction of schools in areas where enrollments are affected by Federal activities. From 1951 through 1972, $1,420 million has been appropriated for this program aiding in the construction of 69,000 classrooms to house about 2 million pupils in the 50 States, Puerto Rico, Guam, and Wake Island. For 1973, appropriation language is proposed to fund local agencies that have been unfunded in recent years, that have the most pressing construction needs as a result of increased military activity and housing, and that provide assistance for children residing on Indian lands. A major portion of this program will be included in the education revenue sharing program.

The Office of Education provides emergency financial assistance to elementary and secondary schools and non-profit organizations to aid in solving the problems associated with desegregation. The assistance is provided on a project grant basis for local education agencies implementing desegregation plans under Federal court order, or plans approved under title VI of the Civil Rights Act. A program to provide similar assistance is proposed for later transmittal, pending enactment of the emergency school assistance legislation which would authorize grants to support the establishment and maintenance of stable, quality integrated schools and elimination or prevention of minority group isolation in schools throughout the Nation.

The 1973 estimate provides resources for implementing higher education legislation now pending before the Congress. The following narrative describes the operation of existing programs as well as new legislative initiatives reflected in the 1973 budget. In most cases, 1973 funds are spent in academic year 1973-74.

1. Student assistance.—Funds are allotted to colleges and universities to provide: (1) Educational opportunity grants for financially needy undergraduate students; (2) work-study grants for part-time jobs during the school year and full-time summer jobs for students in need of financial assistance to continue their education; and (3) capital contributions to National Defense Education Act student loan funds. Advances are made on a matching basis to State and nonprofit private loan insurance funds to guarantee loans to college and vocational students, and payments are made to reduce interest costs for students in college whose adjusted family incomes fall below $15 thousand. A special allowance is provided to lenders when money market conditions make payments essential to the purposes of the program.

Beginning with academic year 1972-73, support would be provided for a student aid program which targets assistance on the disadvantaged and carries out the objectives of the President's 1970 message on higher education reform. A 1972 supplemental of $259 million would increase the number of grant and work study recipients in academic year 1972-73 from 803,300 to 1,280,000. The 1973 estimate would support approximately 1,300,000 students in academic year 1973-74.

2. Special programs for disadvantaged students.—For disadvantaged students, grants and contracts are supported for (1) the upward bound program to motivate high school students to attend college and improve their academic preparation; (2) the talent search program to identify youths with exceptional potential for a college education and publicize available sources of financial aid; and (3) special remedial and other services for enrolled college students to encourage and assist them in continuing their higher education.

In academic year 1973-74, special programs for disadvantaged students will be consolidated and expanded to increase services for all eligible postsecondary students. Career education and assistance for veterans will receive special emphasis.

Special services projects.....	30,000	40,000	40,000	65,000

3. Categorical institutional assistance.—Grants are made to raise the academic quality of developing colleges, to facilitate construction of academic facilities, to encourage study of modern language and world affairs, to assist universities in meeting community needs, and to aid land-grant colleges.

Additional funds have been proposed in the 1973 budget for a new initiative to improve minority education. Support will be concentrated on a number of selected developing institutions serving large numbers of minority students.

Beginning with academic year 1972-73, Federal interest subsidies on higher education facility loans will be targeted on colleges serving large numbers of disadvantaged students and on urban and other community colleges which increase career education opportunities.

Foreign language and area studies will be maintained at the current level, but Federal support will shift from existing centers to new undergraduate and graduate programs. University community service programs will be reduced to eliminate new starts.

4. College personnel development.—Grants are awarded to universities for fellowships leading to a doctorate for prospective college teachers.

Grants and contracts are also provided for the full costs of institutes and other training programs to train college teachers, administrators, and educational specialists, especially at 2- and 4-year colleges.

Overall support for college personnel development will be reduced in the 1973 budget to reflect the current surplus of Ph. D.'s. Less-than-Ph. D. training will be expanded to meet the needs of growing numbers of community colleges.

Excludes $958 thousand in 1973 for activities transferred to Salaries and Expenses. Comparable amounts for 1971 ($503 thousand) and for 1972 ($958 thousand) are included above. In 1973, funds are excluded for activities transferred to the National Institute of Education.

1. Educational systems improvement.—Beginning in 1973 several existing Office of Education elementary and secondary project grant programs will be administratively consolidated. Funds from all of these programs will continue to be made available to local school districts to foster educational change. Federal funds will enable qualifying schools to develop an overall strategy, obtain necessary materials, and prepare teachers to carry out a comprehensive program designed to improve the educational achievement of students. All funds appropriated for the existing special purpose programs will continue to serve the purposes for which they were authorized, but local school districts will be able to submit a single application for a comprehensive grant.

(a) Site personnel development.—Grants are made under part D of the Education Professions Development Act. The primary emphasis will be retraining staff to use improved educational products and practices. In 1973, these funds will provide pilot support and planning for a limited number of local and State renewal sites.

(b) Bilingual education.—Grants are made under title VII, ESEA to achieve comprehensive bilingual-bicultural curriculum reform in areas of high concentrations of non-English speaking children. In 1973 the program will continue 203 projects and support several new efforts.

(c) Dropout prevention.—Grants are made under title VIII, ESEA to support secondary school reform in order to attack the basic causes of dropouts. Funds will continue 26 existing projects and allow for limited expansion.

(d) Personnel development.—(1) Teacher Corps.—Grants are made to colleges, universities, and local school districts to support projects which provide teams of experienced teachers and teaching interns to serve in schools located in neighborhoods with concentrations of low-income families. Legislation has been proposed to transfer this program to the new Action agency.

(2) Career education personnel.—Grants are made to States, institutions of higher education, and local education agencies to train educational personnel to merge the best parts of academic curriculums, vocational training, and work-experience programs.

(3) Other personnel development.—Grants are made to institutions of higher education and local school districts to support improved undergraduate teacher education, and training for teachers of adults. Programs previously supported under this appropriation for displaced teachers will be supported under the new emergency school assistance program and higher education programs.

(e) National priority programs.—(1) Follow Through.—This is an experimental compensatory education program designed to develop and test new ways to educate disadvantaged children in the early primary grades. The parents, the community, and the resources at the school are brought together in programs to meet the child's instructional, physical, and psychosocial needs.

(2) Educational technology demonstrations.—Matching grants are made for the establishment, expansion, and improvement of broadcasting facilities for educational television and radio stations. Grants are made to support demonstrations of the use of technology as a means of delivering educational services to schools, universities, and homes. Sesame Street, the award winning television program, will continue to develop and expand along with the new Electric Company televised reading program.

(3) Drug abuse education.—Grants are made to State and local agencies to support demonstration, dissemination, and training projects to improve drug abuse education.

(4) Right to read.—Support is provided to schools, States, and other agencies to improve reading programs and end illiteracy by 1980. The 1973 program will concentrate on identifying exemplary reading programs and supporting school districts that wish to adopt these model programs.

(5) Career education model installation.—Grants are made to local school districts to support the installation of the career education models being developed by the Office of Education. These grants will be used for large scale demonstrations at renewal sites and for broad dissemination of the models.

(6) Environmental education.—Support is provided to a variety of State, local, and community agencies for demonstration and dissemination of exemplary environmental education projects. This program provides support for projects which cannot be funded from any other source.

(7) Library demonstrations.—Support is provided for community learning center demonstrations serving low-income children and adults and special target populations, such as Mexican Americans and American Indians.

(8) Other priority programs.—Grants and contracts are made to support exemplary projects in adult education, nutrition and health education, and the District of Columbia schools.

2. Data systems improvement.—(a) Educational statistics.—Support is provided to measure the progress and status of education in the Nation. The work includes the collection, compilation, analysis, and dissemination of statistics; work on standard educational terminology; and continued research in statistical survey methods and sampling techniques. In 1973, a feasibility study will be undertaken on an integrated Federal-State-local educational information system.

(b) National achievement study.—This national assessment provides information on the educational attainment of the population. Tests have been administered in the first seven subject areas; science, citizenship, writing, reading, literature, music, and social studies. Results were published in 1972 in the first three subject fields. In 1973, two additional fields will be tested including the second cycle for science, which will allow the first measurement of change in achievement; and results for two additional fields will be published.

3. Product identification and dissemination.—This program provides State and local educators information needed to consider alternatives to their current practices. It supports a national system for collection and dissemination of technical literature; identifies and validates promising programs and practices, including the products of educational research and development; and communicates in print, audiovisual, person-to-person, and demonstration forms so that more rational decisions for educational change may be made.

4. Planning and evaluation.—These items are being consolidated in 1973 under educational renewal. Funds are available for grants, contracts, or other payments for planning succeeding year activities and for conducting evaluation of ongoing programs. In addition, the Educational Policy Research Centers will be supported.

5. Research and development.—In 1973, the existing research and demonstration programs discussed below are to be transferred to the proposed National Institute of Education. (a) Experimental schools.—This program tests, develops, and demonstrates ways to improve the learning of children in actual school situations. Support will be provided to schools which will implement, in a comprehensive manner, ideas already verified as feasible by prior research as well as ideas yet to be evaluated. Over the next several years the program will generate a series of experimental school sites that will represent a full range of alternatives to current educational practice. Three schools were chosen in 1972 and four more will be added in 1973.

(b) Institutional support.—This program is building a network of educational research and development institutions capable of solving pressing educational problems by supporting specific research and development efforts. In 1973, 11 educational laboratories and nine research and development centers will be supported.

(c) Career education.—Grants and contracts are made to support the research and development for four model career education programs. Career education seeks to reunite the best aspects of academic education, vocational education, and work experience so that all students will understand their potential career choices, have saleable skills, and understand the world of work. The four models are for school, industry, home, and residential vocational programs.

(d) General research and development.—These funds support a variety of multidisciplinary research and development activities and also grants for training manpower to carry out educational research, development, dissemination, and evaluation activities.

Under the Higher Education Act of 1965 and the National Vocational Student Loan Insurance Act of 1965, the Office of Education received authority to insure loans to students in eligible institutions who do not have reasonable access to State or private nonprofit programs of student loan insurance.

The Higher Education Amendments of 1968 merged the National Vocational Student Loan Insurance Act into the Higher Education Act insured loan program, and in addition to extending the Federal insurance program, authorizes the Office of Education to reinsure loans guaranteed by State and nonprofit private agencies at 80% of default by student borrowers.

Upon default by the student borrowers, the Office of Education will pay to the beneficiary the amount of the loss sustained by the insured upon Federally insured loans and 80% of the loss sustained on reinsured loans guaranteed by State and nonprofit private agencies. The fund takes over loans on which it pays insurance claims and seeks to collect on them. Claims which are deemed uncollectable are written off as "loss on insured loans." Loans deemed collectable, after allowing for loss, are as follows: 1971, $7,449 thousand; 1972, $18,871 thousand; and 1973, $32,833 thousand.

Deposits to the fund are derived from insurance premiums earned from direct Federal insurance, which is not to exceed one fourth of 1% per annum of the unpaid principal amount (excluding interest added to principal), repayment of collectable loans, and interest payments on collectable loans. Deposits are estimated as follows: 1971, $1,761 thousand; 1972, $6,861 thousand; and 1973, $14,155 thousand.

In 1971, $15,958 thousand was paid out for defaults. It is anticipated that default payments will amount to $33,802 thousand in 1972 and $43,202 thousand in 1973. These amounts will be funded as follows: Unobligated balance of $14,177 thousand in 1972; deposits into the fund of $6,860 thousand in 1972 and $14,155 thousand in 1973; supplemental appropriation request of $12,765 thousand in 1972; and requested appropriation of $29,047 thousand in 1973.

The Higher Education Facilities Act authorizes loans for construction of academic facilities in higher education institutions. Such loans may be made for up to 75% of a project's total development cost and must be repaid within 50 years.

The Participation Sales Act of 1966 established a revolving fund for these loans and authorizes the sales of such loans to the private credit market, the proceeds of which are deposited into the fund to be used for new loans to colleges and universities. The Government National Mortgage Association is authorized to serve as trustee for these sales.

Loans under this program have been displaced by the new annual interest grant program under the higher education appropriation. However, new loans may be made from the fund to the extent that such amounts are made available from withdrawals of earlier commitments. These amounts will be used to fund those small institutions of higher education which are unable to obtain private loans necessary to participate in the annual interest grant program.

In 1971, 21 new projects totaling $13,728 thousand were supported by commitments withdrawn prior to June 30, 1971. Additional funds, available from commitments withdrawn prior to June 30, 1971, totaling $21,645 thousand, will support approximately 32 new projects in 1972. No new loans are anticipated for 1973.

The 1973 estimate for academic facilities loan insurance is based on pending legislation which would authorize the Commissioner to insure the payment of interest and principal on non-Federal construction loans to private higher education institutions. The United States shall be entitled to recover, from any institution or agency to which insurance has been issued, the amount of any payment made pursuant to that insurance.

Interest is payable to the Treasury on the cumulative amount of appropriations paid out for loans under this title or available as capital to the fund less the average undisbursed cash balance in the fund during the year. The rate certified by the Secretary of the Treasury as of June 30, 1971, is 7½%.

Appropriations for insufficiencies are used to fund the deficit resulting from the interest rate required to sell the participation and the interest rate paid by higher education institutions on facilities loans. The budget authority required for insufficiencies is computed as follows (in thousands of dollars):

Grants to States for public assistance are made for the Federal share of State expenditures for maintenance assistance, medical assistance, social services, State and local training, and child welfare services. In addition, assistance is provided in this appropriation for repatriated U.S. nationals. Estimates of requirements for this appropriation are based primarily on estimates received from the States in November 1971, adjusted to take into consideration Federal management initiatives to improve the effectiveness of the management of the public assistance programs.

The Federal management initiatives are expected to result in savings of $400,300,000 in 1973 and are dependent on the availability of resources to be requested in a 1972 supplemental request. These resources include 427 additional positions and associated contractual support necessary to create a field force for financial management control and technical assistance.

The Federal initiatives are:

(1) Intensified efforts to rehabilitate disabled public assistance recipients through the vocational rehabilitation program.

(2) A vigorous followup of quality control over eligibility determination—requiring the States to use earnings records in eligibility review; improving the Federal quality control system for validating the States' systems and disallowing Federal financial participation in excessive overpayments and payments to ineligible on the basis of quality control findings.

(3) Program and financial review of maintenance assistance not covered by the quality control system to identify and eliminate excessive or inappropriate expenditures.

(4) Program and financial review of the medical assistance program in such areas as fiscal agent contracts; utilization review; cost allocation; and payment, fee, and price controls to eliminate inappropriate expenditures and recommend management improvements.

(5) Active management controls over the social services program by establishing precise definitions of services and recipient populations for which Federal financial participation will be available, requiring maintenance of effort by the States in their support of programs not previously covered under this program, and requiring a program budget backed by an accounting system that will support program and financial audits as a basis for Federal financial participation. These actions will also enable the States to be accountable for the quality and effectiveness of their social services.

(6) Intensive review of State claims for Federal financial participation in social services and maintenance assistance administration to insure that State expenditures matched at the 75% rate meet the requirements of the law and regulations.

(7) Review of prior year expenditures to recover amounts inappropriately claimed.

Recognizing the fiscal pressures already being borne by the States for public assistance costs, an advance payment of $1 billion will be made in 1972 to help ease the fiscal pressure of 1972. Since required management improvements will increase States' cash needs, this advance may also facilitate rapid implementation of efforts to improve the quality control of eligibility determinations, intensify the program and financial review of the medical assistance program, and develop a program budget and accounting capability for the social services program. The advance will be repaid during the course of 1973 from the extra State revenues generated by more rapid economic growth and proposed congressional action for permanent fiscal relief—such as enactment of welfare reform and general revenue sharing. Without the advance payment in 1972, public assistance outlays would rise from $12.1 billion in 1972 (including a proposed supplemental) to an estimated $13.4 billion in 1973.

1. Maintenance assistance.—Maintenance payments to recipients are to provide needy persons (dependent children deprived of parental support or care, the aged, blind, and the disabled) with income to supplement their own resources for the costs of food, shelter, clothing, and other necessary items of daily living, including limited amounts for home repairs and emergency assistance for families with children. In certain cases, payments may be made on his behalf to another person: for example, protective payments on behalf of aged recipients unable, because of mental conditions, to manage funds; payments for foster care provided certain children under the AFDC program; and vendor payments for institutional services in intermediate care facilities provided to persons in need of personal care short of skilled nursing home care.

¹ For recipients of intermediate care, approximately the following percentages will not also receive a money payment: OAA 75%, AB 57%, APTD 45%. About 45% of EA recipients will not also receive AFDC.

Assistance to repatriated U.S. nationals.—Public Law 86-571, provides for hospitalization and services to repatriated mentally ill U.S. nationals until arrangements can be made for assumption of responsibility by States of residence or the repatriate's family. The budget estimate assumes that a total of 100 mentally ill repatriates will require hospitalization and/or other financial assistance in 1973; this compares with 82 who required such care in 1971 and 100 estimated for 1972.

Section 1113 of the Social Security Act authorizes temporary assistance to U.S. citizens and their dependents who return to this country because of destitution, illness, or international crises, and who are without available resources. It is estimated that temporary assistance will be provided a total of about 450 persons in 1972 and 325 in 1973.

2. Medical assistance.—Federal grants for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act (Medicaid) are made to States with plans approved by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. States must provide medical assistance to all persons receiving or eligible to receive assistance payments for their basic needs under the Social Security Act. States may elect to provide medical assistance to certain medically needy persons who need help with their medical bills. Medicaid complements the Federal Medicare program by paying the deductible and coinsurance for the needy aged, paying their premiums for Medicare's supplementary medical insurance program, and by paying for services not covered by Medicare, e.g., long-term nursing home care.

The Federal share of total expenditures for 1973 is estimated to be $4,503 million, an increase of $484 million from the amount for 1972. The Federal share is expected to amount to about 55% of the total Federal, State, and local expenditures in 1973 and is the same as 1972.

The major factors accounting for the increase from 1972 to 1973 are the continued rise in medical prices, increase in the number of eligible recipients, and continued increase in utilization under State programs.

The following is the estimated number of different persons receiving Federal medical assistance under this program for 1971, 1972, and 1973:

	1971 actual	1972 estimate	1973 estimate
All recipients.....	18,223,000	20,632,000	23,537,000
Aged 65 or over.....	3,600,000	3,800,000	4,000,000

Adults in AFDC-type families.....	4,700,000	5,600,000	6,600,000

The increase in the number of persons receiving medical assistance during 1973 results largely from the anticipated increase in the number of recipients of maintenance payments.

3. Social services.—Grants are made to States operating public assistance programs approved by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare under titles I, IV, X, XIV, and XVI of the Social Security Act. They provide services prescribed or specified by the Secretary. The purpose of these grants is to enable each State, as far as practicable under existing conditions in the State, to provide a full range of social services to public assistance recipients and former or potential recipients, including: (1) Aid to families with dependent children, and (2) the adult categories of recipients under old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled.

During 1971, one or more services were provided to more than 519,000 aged or disabled adults and 3,676,000 families, including over 9 million children. Forty-three States adopted new Federal adult service regulations which require States to provide the following mandatory services in order to qualify for 75% Federal financial participation: (1) Information and referral, (2) protective services, (3) in-home services, (4) health support services, and (5) self-support services for the blind and disabled.

During 1972, the number of adults and families provided with needed social services will increase. It is expected that approximately 644,000 adults and 4,151,000 families, including about 12 million children, will be provided services. Studies will be completed during the year on identifying costs of specific social services and developing measurements of effectiveness. A regulation mandating separation of services from payments will be issued, supported by guidelines, training sessions, and technical assistance in structuring the emerging separated service system to provide methods and controls that will insure a more efficient and effective program.

The Federal share of total expenditures for 1973 is estimated to be $1,266 million, a decrease of $30 million from the amount for 1972. This decrease is expected to result from the Federal management initiatives offset in part by the expansion of services. Approximately 1,050,000 adults and 6,670,000 families, including 16,200,000 children are expected to benefit from services provided.

4. State and local training.—Under the 1962 amendments to the Social Security Act, Federal financial participation at the 75% rate is available to States for costs of training public assistance staff or persons preparing for employment in public assistance agencies. The 1967 amendments require States to provide for the training and effective use of subprofessionals as community service aides and of volunteers.

In 1972 approximately 190,000 employees were engaged in determination of eligibility for income maintenance and for delivery of services. About 14,000 new subprofessional personnel, primarily from low income groups, required extensive inservice training. Special emphasis was placed on training for new service delivery systems. State and local agencies made use of a range of personnel such as neighborhood worker, friendly visitor for the aging, homemaker for the handicapped or disabled people, employment counselors to help people return to work and technical and professional personnel. Special training of nursing home administrators was continued.

For 1973, the appropriation requirement is $51 million.

States will have separated the financial assistance and service functions which will necessitate the retraining of more personnel as well as training new employees for these functions. This will mean extensive retraining of all employees for an entirely new program responsibility and series of agency relationships as different parts of government assume responsibilities which the public welfare system has formerly performed.

5. Child welfare services.—Grants are made to States to help in establishing, extending, and strengthening services for the protection and care of homeless, dependent, and neglected children. Child welfare services are not limited to the poor but are available to all children who need them. The basic statute establishes a formula which prescribes between 33½ to 66¾% Federal participation. States are encouraged to coordinate child welfare services with the social services program of AFDC and to use child welfare services to fill the gaps that cannot be reached through the AFDC social services program.

The work incentive (WIN) program is designed to encourage and assist individuals receiving support from the aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) program to achieve self-support through a program of employment, work experience, and training. Training and incentives are administered by the Department of Labor, child care by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

1. Training and incentives.—Under this activity, individuals are prepared for self-supporting employment through on-the-job training, institutional training, work experience and orientation, and transitional public jobs. The program includes employability planning, counseling, job development, and followup of employed enrollees. Program development, evaluation, and administration of the WIN program are included under this activity.

The table below shows workload data for WIN training and incentives:

Training enrollment end of year.....	115,900	135,000	160,000

2. Child care.—This activity provides for child care for children of WIN enrollees. An estimated 55% of the average enrollees in 1973 are mothers who are unable to provide child care for their children while they are undergoing training. Therefore, unless child care is provided, approximately one-half of the enrollees would be unable to accept the training necessary to prepare them for permanent employment.

In addition, child care is provided for the children of employed former WIN enrollees until such time as other satisfactory child care arrangements can be made or the mothers can pay for the care from their earnings.

The rehabilitation program provides services to the mentally and physically handicapped people so they may prepare for and engage in remunerative employment or employment in the home to the extent of their potential. Emphasis is placed on reducing clients' dependency to the greatest degree possible to enable them to live in dignity and self-sufficiency. Services may be extended to the families of clients, where this will contribute to the clients' rehabilitation. Services include medical and physical restoration, vocational training, counseling, and job placement.

The major portion of the vocational rehabilitation program is carried out under section 2 of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act wherein grants with an 80% Federal matching rate are made to States to rehabilitate handicapped individuals and place them in productive gainful employment. The funding level for 1973 is $610,000 thousand within an allotment base of $645,000 thousand. The 1973 level represents an increase of $50,000 thousand over 1972 and $107,000 thousand over the 1971 level.

Grants for rehabilitation service projects are made to State agencies, local governments, and to private non-profit organizations to supplement the basic support program. These projects are designed to substantially increase the number of rehabilitations through improvement of facilities and expansion of services to the disabled including priority target groups of the disabled. The 1973 funding level for these projects is $65,785 thousand to support approximately 487 projects.

The 1973 project level represents an increase of $11,075 thousand over 1972 to support the continuation of a major effort in conjunction with the basic support program to rehabilitate an increased number of handicapped people who are receiving public assistance payments. A total of $37,435 thousand will be used to serve approximately 59,000 and rehabilitate an estimated 16,320 public assistance recipients, on a full-year basis, in addition to the 194,000 served and 49,680 expected to be rehabilitated under the basic support program. The total of 253,000 is estimated to be nearly 85% of public assistance recipients who could benefit from rehabilitation services in 1973.

Project grants are also supported to assist in meeting the cost of construction of public or other nonprofit rehabilitation facilities. In 1971 and 1972, $1,750 thousand and $3,051 thousand, respectively, were made available primarily to complete construction of the Chicago Rehabilitation Institute. No new funds are requested in 1973.

2. Grants for developmental disabilities.—Federal grants are made to States to assist in developing and administering a plan for services and construction of facilities for persons with mental retardation, epilepsy, cerebral palsy, and other neurologically disabling conditions. Also supported are project grants made to States and public and other nonprofit agencies to improve care in mental retardation institutions and to initiate and expand community programs.

The 1973 program includes $21,715 thousand to be made available to designated State agencies in accordance with a statutory formula and $18,500 thousand in project funds. The total grants for 1973 will provide services for over 170,000 persons. The 1973 program also includes $4,250 thousand for university-affiliated facilities projects, the same level as 1972. These projects support the costs of operating demonstration facilities rendering specialized services to persons with developmental disabilities.

In 1971, $13,460 thousand, available from prior years, supported 70 projects for facilities for the mentally retarded. The legislation for this program expired at the end of 1970 with the enactment of the new developmental disability legislation which would include construction as part of the formula grants.

3. Special programs for the aging.—In conjunction with the recommendations of the White House Conference on Aging, held in the fall of 1971, funds will be increased to $100 million in 1973. A greatly broadened effort is being undertaken to enable the elderly to live with dignity in their own homes, to continue to contribute productively in society, and to enjoy the benefits presented by lengthening life-spans relieved of infirmity and dependency to the greatest possible extent. Much of this new money will be used to help marshal existing and expanded resources more effectively at the local level. Special emphasis will be placed on services which enhance the lives of older Americans such as home-health aides, homemaker and nutrition services, home delivered meals and transportation assistance. The basic authority for these aging programs expires at the end of 1972 and legislation authorizing the extension of existing programs and expanding programs for older Americans will be proposed. Included in the estimates are 90 positions in 1972, and an additional 90 positions in 1973 to provide staff for administering these expanded programs.

Activity during 1971 included support of the retired senior volunteer program and the foster grandparents program in the amount of $11,000 thousand. In 1972, these programs have been transferred to the new ACTION agency and are discussed in that section of the budget.

4. Youth development and delinquency prevention.—In 1973, demonstration projects will be supported to focus on diverting youth from the juvenile justice system. The basic authority for this program expires at the end of 1972 and legislation fundamentally recasting this program will be proposed.

5. Research.—Projects are supported to develop and improve the administration and services of the Social and Rehabilitation Service programs. Research and demonstrations are conducted in the areas of rehabilitation and employability service, community services, medical assistance, child welfare, and services for the aged. Income maintenance experiments are supported to assess the alternative methods of income supplementation. Research and training centers are supported to provide for testing of methods of rehabilitation in critical areas such as stroke, paraplegia, and circulatory problems. Regional research centers provide for analysis of such areas as the factors relating to client dependency, problems of the rural poor, and health delivery systems for the poor. The 1973 program will emphasize methods to provide coordinated services at the local level, testing of methods of rehabilitation of the disabled receiving assistance payments, and improving the health care delivery system under the Medicaid program.

6. Training.—Projects are supported to provide trained personnel for social and rehabilitative services. Projects include support of teaching grants, traineeships, and research fellowships. The 1973 level of funding will continue the support of training in the rehabilitation, community services, and aging areas. Increased emphasis will be placed on development of agency-related curriculum at the baccalaureate level, education for minority groups, and innovative curriculum to meet new service requirements.

The Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, and the International Health Research Act of 1960 authorize the conduct of research and related activities abroad. Research, demonstrations, and research training programs are supported with foreign currencies accruing to the United States through the sale of surplus agricultural commodities and through other sources. The estimate for 1973 proposes an appropriation of $10,000 thousand for the purchase of foreign currencies in excess currency countries to support research activities which complement, supplement, and strengthen domestic research and service programs. This program enables the United States to benefit from progress that other countries are making in dealing with social and rehabilitation and social security problems, and to utilize the talents of foreign scientists working in these fields.

The request in 1973 will be used to support integrated service delivery systems, testing various combinations of health, welfare, rehabilitation, and other community services and new methods in manpower training and development. Priorities will be continued in fields of rehabilitation medicine, rehabilitation engineering, sensory disorders, mental disabilities, and rehabilitation services for alcoholics and drug addicts. The interchange of U.S. experts and their counterparts in the cooperating countries will also be stressed as an indispensable adjunct to the SRS international research program. Comparative studies abroad will supplement the domestic research efforts in the evaluation of the old-age, survivors, disability, and Medicare provisions of the Social Security Act.

In 1961 the President established a program to assist Cuban refugees in the United States. On June 28, 1962, the Migration and Refugee Assistance Act of 1962 was enacted which now provides the legislative basis for assistance to Cuban refugees in the United States.

Refugees from Cuba were arriving in Miami at the rate of about 1,700 a week when the missile crisis occurred in October 1962 after which this number of arrivals decreased by about 90%. On October 3, 1965, the President of the United States announced that the United States would permit the orderly influx of refugees allowed to leave Cuba under a more liberal refugee policy adopted by the Cuban Government. In December 1965, a new influx of refugees started with the inauguration of freedom flights—the airlift operated by the United States as provided for in a United States-Cuban memorandum of understanding negotiated by the Swiss Government. Until recently refugees have been arriving in Miami at the rate of about 3,500 a month on the airlift. Between 1961 and the end of June 1971, 426,167 refugees had registered at the Cuban Refugee Center in Miami of which 283,303 had been resettled to other locations in the United States. Based on several statements by the Cuban Government in the first quarter of 1972, its continuation in the future appears very doubtful. The budget is based on the assumption that the airlifts, which were interrupted by the Cuban government in August 1971, and have been continued on a sporadic and much reduced basis since then, will be almost completely terminated by the end of June 1972. It is assumed, however, that after the airlift terminates, up to 10,000 Cuban refugees may enter the United States annually through other means and that the program will provide assistance as needed to the additional persons finding asylum in this country as well as to those refugees already, here to whom the program has a responsibility. The following services are provided by the Cuban refugee program:

1. Welfare assistance and services.—State and local welfare agencies are reimbursed by the Federal Government for providing financial assistance, essential medical care, and other related welfare services to needy refugees. By the end of 1971, about 32,400 persons were receiving financial assistance in Florida, and about 45,300 persons in other States were receiving financial and/or medical assistance. Comparable estimates for June 30, 1972, of persons requiring assistance are 35,200 in Florida and 53,700 in other States; the estimates for June 30, 1973, are 37,500 in Florida and 58,900 for all other States combined.

2. Resettlement.—Through contracts with several voluntary nonprofit agencies, refugees are provided a variety of services to assist them to assimilate into the mainstream of U.S. living, including relocation to homes and jobs in areas other than Miami and postresettlement services relating to emergencies, job placements, etc.

3. Education.—Selected training is provided to equip the refugees for employment through English and vocational training. Also, provision is made for Federal payments to help meet part of the added cost related to refugee children in the Dade County, Fla., public school system because of the sizable impact these children have on that school system. In addition, loans are made to needy college students: about 4,200 in 1971; for 1972 the estimate is 4,000 students and for 1973, 3,800 students.

4. Health services.—These services are provided to new arrivals and to needy refugees in Miami and include medical screening, examinations, treatment, and provision of prescribed drugs by the clinic operated for the program by the Dade County public health service; arrangements are made for outpatient clinic services when necessary at local hospitals and for care of patients with tuberculosis and mental illness.

5. Transportation of refugees from Cuba.—This activity has provided for the cost of airlifting the refugees from Cuba. No funds are requested for this purpose in 1973, on the assumption that the airlift will end early in calendar year 1972 based on public statements by the Government of Cuba.

6. Program administration.—Provides Federal direction and day-to-day operation of the program, including a variety of services for incoming refugees such as reception, feeding, lodging, etc.; helping other Cuban refugees in the Miami area as necessary; and continuing work on training and employment and on resettlement opportunities out of Miami for the refugees.

This appropriation provides for payments from Federal funds to the social security trust funds for certain types of benefits and related administrative costs not financed by contributions from workers and employers. Adjustments for differences between costs of prior years and the amounts appropriated in prior years for this appropriation are included in the budget year request. The 1973 appropriation request of $2,475,485 thousand covers the following types of payments:

1. Matching payments for supplementary medical insurance.—An estimated $1,434,015 thousand will be required in 1973 to finance the Government's contribution to the Federal supplementary medical insurance trust fund and to cover the deficiencies in financing the Government's contribution for 1971 and 1972. For each monthly premium paid by enrollees in the voluntary medical insurance program, which primarily covers doctor bills, the Federal Government matches a like amount. The standard premium rate scheduled for 1973 is $5.80 per month. The estimate for 1973 assumes that an average of about 20.5 million persons will be enrolled in the program during 1973 as compared with an average of about 20.1 million in 1972.

2. Hospital insurance for the uninsured.—A payment of $467,825 thousand to the Federal hospital insurance trust fund is budgeted for 1973 to cover the costs of hospital and related care for individuals age 65 and over who are not insured under the social security or railroad retirement systems. (Costs for the aged who are insured are financed by contributions on earnings by workers and by employers.) The estimate assumes that there will be an average of 1.4 million uninsured persons covered for hospital benefits during 1973, and is net of adjustments for prior years for which the amounts appropriated were higher than presently estimated costs. The uninsured group covered by this provision includes persons who retired before their occupations were covered by social security (such as teachers and State and local employees), and widows whose husbands died prior to earning coverage under social security.

3. Military service credits.—The appropriation includes reimbursement of $237 million to the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund, the Federal disability insurance trust fund and the Federal hospital insurance trust fund for benefits paid on the basis of noncontributory military service credits of veterans of World War II and certain veterans of the post-World War II period. The basis for the computation of these payments is prescribed in sections 217(g) and 229(b) of the Social Security Act and includes reimbursements for administrative expenses and interest lost to the trust funds.

The payment to each trust fund is (in millions of dollars):

Old-age and survivors insurance.....	138
Disability insurance.....	51
Hospital insurance.....	48
Total.....	237

4. Retirement benefits for certain uninsured persons.—This appropriation provides for a payment of $336,645 thousand to the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund as reimbursement for actual benefit payments made in 1971 to certain uninsured individuals aged 72 and over, related administrative expenses, and interest lost to the trust fund. These benefits were established to afford some protection for certain persons, or their surviving dependents, who retired before the enactment of social security legislation or before their occupations were covered by social security.

To be eligible an individual must have less than three quarters of coverage and have attained age 72 before 1968. These benefits must be reduced if an individual is also receiving another governmental pension. The amount of the reduction depends upon the amount of the other governmental pension. In addition, these benefits must be withheld if an individual is receiving payments under a federally aided public assistance program.

² Amount obligated in 1970 and funded in 1972.

The Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act (Public Law 91-173, enacted December 30, 1969), provides for the protection of the health and safety of persons working in the coal mining industry. Title IV of the act provides monthly benefits to living coal miners who are totally disabled due to pneumoconiosis arising out of employment in underground coal mines and to the surviving widows of coal miners whose deaths resulted from pneumoconiosis or whose deaths occurred while they were receiving disability benefits because of pneumoconiosis. The requirements for entitlement and the amounts of the benefits are stated in the law and all claims for these benefits filed on or before December 31, 1972, will be handled by the Social Security Administration.

Authority to obligate and expend funds for title IV purposes to be charged to subsequent appropriations was contained in the language for this appropriation included in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare appropriation acts of 1970 and 1971. Therefore, the 1972 appropriation included the unfunded balance for 1970, plus estimated obligations for 1971 and 1972. The 1973 appropriation estimate includes 1973 obligations only.

The number of miners and widows eligible for benefits under the program is much larger than indicated by earlier estimates. The number of miners and widows receiving benefits at the end of each fiscal year and the number of dependents represented in the benefit payments are as follows:

² 1972 includes $1,700 thousand transfer from Nursing Home Improvement Supplemental Appropriations Act.

The Social Security Administration is responsible for administering national programs of old-age, survivors, disability, and health insurance. The principal costs for administration of these programs are financed by this appropriation. In addition, certain costs of other components of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and certain costs to the Treasury Department for the collection of social security taxes and for the issuance of benefit checks are paid by the trust funds. These are shown elsewhere in the budget.

Administrative costs are related to workloads which emanate from the statutory provisions of social security programs. The size of these loads depends upon objective factors such as population growth, the level of employment, economic conditions, incidence of illness among the aged, and mortality rates.

The 1973 appropriation request for salaries and expenses includes $25 million as a contingency reserve to be used with the approval of the Office of Management and Budget in the event that workloads and/or mandatory costs of agencies with which agreements have been made to participate in the program exceed the budget estimates. The fund is to be used only after maximum absorption of such costs within the existing limitation has been achieved. In 1972, it is anticipated that the full amount of the contingency reserve will be required primarily for higher than budgeted costs of State agencies and fiscal intermediaries who assist in the administration of the programs.

1. Old-age and survivors insurance.—This program provides monthly benefits for retired workers and their dependents, survivors of deceased workers including disabled widows and widowers age 50 and over, and certain uninsured persons age 72 or over.

The number of persons receiving monthly benefits and the amount of benefits to be paid increase in both 1972 and 1973 because of the growth in number of aged persons in the population and in the proportion of these who are insured for retirement benefits, as well as the growth in the population insured for survivors benefits.

The administrative costs budgeted for this program provide for: Making the initial determination of eligibility for old-age and survivors benefits; reevaluating the initial determination when requested by the claimant; making changes in the beneficiary rolls to assure proper and correct payment of benefits; and investigating the beneficiary's continuing entitlement to benefits, including the evaluation of performance of representative payees.

2. Disability insurance.—This program provides monthly disability benefits for disabled workers and their dependents. As the size of the population insured for disability benefits increases, new claims will increase in both 1972 and 1973, as well as the number of beneficiaries in pay status and the amount of benefits paid.

Disability claims applications received...	1,384,444	1,435,000	1,467,000
Disability beneficiaries in current pay status (average for year).....	2,666,000	2,922,000	3,118,000
Disability benefit payments (in millions).....	$3,381	$3,961	$4,236

The administrative costs budgeted for this program cover the costs of processing initial disability determinations and reconsiderations and appeals of denied claims; making investigations and determinations of continuing disability of beneficiaries and servicing the beneficiary rolls; and making all changes due to deaths, changes of address, attainment of age 65, returns to employment and recoveries from disability. Determinations regarding the existence or continuation of a disability are made by State agencies and these costs are included in the budget estimates.

3. Health insurance.—This program includes the hospital insurance and the voluntary supplementary medical insurance programs which were established by the 1965 amendments to the Social Security Act and commonly referred to as Medicare.

(a) Hospital insurance.—The hospital insurance program affords protection to persons age 65 and over against the cost of inpatient hospital services, posthospital home health services and posthospital extended care services. Bills for services rendered under the hospital insurance program are generally submitted by hospitals, extended care facilities, home health agencies, and in some instances by individuals who have received emergency care in nonparticipating hospitals. In most instances, these bills are processed by the Blue Cross associations and private insurance companies acting as intermediaries for the Social Security Administration. The individual beneficiary records of utilization of hospital services are maintained in the central office of the Social Security Administration. The growth in beneficiaries who will be covered by the program as the population of age 65 and over increases and the rise in the utilization of available services cause an increase in the number of claims in both 1972 and 1973.

(b) Supplementary medical insurance.—Almost all persons age 65 and over are eligible to enroll in the supplementary medical insurance program which covers the cost of physician services and other medical costs within certain deductible and coinsurance requirements. Enrollees in the program pay a monthly premium and the aggregate of these premiums is matched by the Federal Government by appropriations from Federal funds. Claims for services under the medical insurance program may be submitted by the physician or other suppliers of service or by the beneficiary to Blue Shield associations and private insurance companies who have been designated to act as carriers for the Social Security Administration in specific geographical areas.

The volume of claims will rise in 1972 and 1973 as a result of the growth in the age 65 and over population, and the projected increase in utilization of medical services.

The health insurance program data is reflected in the following chart:

¹ Includes $533 million in 1971, $539 million in 1972, and $548 million in 1973 chargeable to Federal funds.

The administrative costs budgeted for this program cover the claim payment functions performed by the intermediaries and carriers; services performed by State agencies in certifying and consulting with providers of services; all work performed by the Social Security Administration in directing the program, providing services to beneficiaries, maintaining records by individual beneficiary of utilization of hospital and medical services and processing claims to establish entitlement to hospital insurance for persons not insured for cash benefits under either the social security or railroad retirement program.

Funds requested for expenditure from trust funds will provide for the purchase of remaining available parcels of land adjacent to the headquarters site.

1. Headquarters.—Funds were appropriated in 1966 and 1967 for the acquisition of as much of the available land as possible adjacent to and to the east of the headquarters site. To date, over 90 acres of available properties have been purchased. Budget authority of $1 million is requested for 1973 to complete the planned acquisition of the remaining 45 parcels, totaling more than 32 acres, and to pay the relocation costs (under title II, of Public Law 91-646—Uniform Relocation Assistance) associated with improved properties acquired since January 2, 1971.

2. District offices.—Funds were provided in the 1965, 1966, and 1967 appropriations for the acquisition of sites, the design and construction of district offices in 107 selected cities throughout the country. Funds were appropriated in 1971 for the acquisition of sites and the design of district office buildings in 30 more selected locations. The purpose of these appropriations was to provide more appropriate and adequate space for Social Security Administration district offices in selected locations where construction is determined to be more feasible than rental or occupancy of existing Federal structures.

No new budget authority is requested for this activity in 1973. Obligations scheduled represent progress on projects for which funds were appropriated in prior years.

3. Payment centers.—The 1972 appropriation included $18,194 thousand to acquire sites and to design buildings to house four of the Social Security Administration's six payment centers: Birmingham, Ala.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Chicago, Ill.; and San Francisco, Calif. Since the appropriation was enacted, the space needs of the Birmingham, Ala., payment center have been met through lease-construction. It is now planned to meet the space needs of the remaining three payment centers through lease-construction arrangements. The estimates reflect the use of funds appropriated in 1972 to finance design of the centers.

The old-age and survivors insurance program protects individuals and families from the risk of economic loss resulting from old age and death by providing income to retired workers and their dependents and to dependent survivors of deceased workers. The program is financed by contributions to the trust fund which are made by workers, employers, and self-employed individuals based on earnings.

CONTRIBUTION RATE—USED TO FINANCE OASI PROGRAM
(In percent)

	Calendar year
	1970	1971	1972	1973
Employees.....	3.650	4.050	4.050	4.450
Employers.....	3.650	4.050	4.050	4.450
Self-employed.....	5.475	6.075	6.075	6.175

The above contribution rates are applied to taxable earnings up to a maximum of $7,800 in 1971. The maximum was to increase to $9 thousand on January 1, 1972.

1. Benefit payments.—The Social Security Act provides for payment of monthly benefits to retired workers and their dependents and to survivors of deceased workers. The average numbers of persons receiving payments and the payment amounts classified by major types of beneficiaries for 1971–73 follow (in millions):

	1971 actual	1972 estimate	1973 estimate
Retired workers.....	13.9	14.4	14.9
Dependents of retired workers.....	3.2	3.3	3.3
Survivors of deceased workers.....	6.5	6.7	7.0
Total beneficiaries.....	23.6	24.4	25.1
Payments to retired workers.....	$20,305	$22,780	$23,927
Payments to dependents of retired workers.....	2,501	2,700	2,797
Payments to survivors of deceased workers.....	8,295	9,061	9,447
Total benefit payments.....	31,101	34,541	36,171

Normal growth in benefit payments can be expected essentially because of: (1) Increases in the numbers of beneficiaries as the number of aged persons in the population and the proportion of the aged who are insured rise, and (2) increases in average monthly benefits as general earnings levels continue to rise. The increase in benefit outlays in 1972 exceeds normal growth because it also includes the added cost of carrying on an annual basis the 10% increase in cash benefit amounts which was enacted by the Congress in Public Law 92–5. This increase was effective January 1971 and reflected in only 5 months of payments during 1971.

2. Construction.—The costs of site acquisition, design, and construction of office facilities for the Social Security Administration are financed by this and the other trust funds.

3. Administration: Authorized program.—The administrative expenses of the Social Security Administration as reflected in its Salaries and expenses appropriation, and those incurred for social security programs by the Treasury Department and other Department of Health, Education, and Welfare components are financed in part by each trust fund.

4. Payment to railroad retirement account.—Annual payments are made from the old-age and survivors insurance trust fund to the railroad retirement fund so as to place the old-age and survivors insurance trust fund in the same position in which it would have been if railroad employment after 1936 had been included in social security coverage (45 U.S.C. 228E). Estimates are made of the yearly amounts of additional contributions the Social Security Administration would have collected, the additional benefits it would have paid and the additional administrative costs it would have incurred if railroad employees had been covered under social security. The payment made to the railroad retirement account represents the amount by which the estimated benefit payments and administrative costs exceed the estimated contributions, and includes interest through the date of the transfer. The components of the net transfers for 1971–73 follow (in thousands of dollars):

Benefit payments.....	943,000	1,070,000	1,111,000
Administrative costs.....	10,400	12,000	12,000
Interest.....	43,026	47,000	50,000
Less contributions.....	-383,400	-420,000	-427,000
Net transfer.....	613,026	709,000	746,000

5. Vocational rehabilitation services.—The Social Security Act provides that payments may be made from the old-age and survivors insurance and the disability insurance trust funds for the purpose of making rehabilitation services available to individuals who are entitled to social security cash benefits because of a disability. Such payments are made in expectation that savings will accrue to the trust funds as a result of rehabilitating disabled beneficiaries into productive activity. The total amount to be used for rehabilitation services may not exceed 1% of the total benefits certified for payment to disabled workers and to disabled dependents of disabled, retired, or deceased workers in the preceding year. The old-age and survivors insurance trust fund bears the cost of rehabilitation services provided to disabled old-age and survivors insurance beneficiaries (dependents of retired or deceased workers) while the disability insurance trust fund bears the cost of such services provided to disability insurance beneficiaries (disabled workers and their disabled dependents).

The disability insurance program protects individuals and families against the risk of economic loss resulting from disability by providing income to severely disabled workers and their dependents. The program is financed by contributions to the trust fund which are made by workers, employers, and self-employed individuals based on earnings. The contribution rate on which financing of the disability insurance program is based is 0.55% each for employers and employees and 0.825% for self-employed persons in calendar years 1971-73.

1. Benefit payments.—The Social Security Act provides for payment of disability insurance benefits to certain disabled individuals and their dependents. Normal growth in benefit payments can be expected essentially because of (1) increases in the number of beneficiaries as the population insured for disability benefits rises, especially at ages 50 to 64 where disability incidence rates are highest, and (2) increases in average monthly benefit amounts as general earnings levels continue to rise. The increase in benefit outlays in 1972 exceeds normal growth because it also includes the added cost of carrying on an annual basis the 10% increase in cash benefit amounts which was enacted by the Congress in Public Law 92-5. This increase was effective January 1971 and reflected in only 5 months of payments during 1971.

2. Construction.—The costs of site acquisition, design, and construction of office facilities for the Social Security Administration are financed by this and the other trust funds.

3. Administration.—The administrative expenses of the Social Security Administration as reflected in its Salaries and Expenses appropriation, and those incurred for social security programs by the Treasury Department and other Department of Health, Education, and Welfare components are financed in part by each trust fund.

4. Payment to railroad retirement account.—Annual payments are made from the disability insurance trust fund to the railroad retirement fund so as to place the disability insurance trust fund in the same position in which it would have been if railroad employment after 1936 had been included under social security coverage (45 U.S.C. 228E). This payment is computed on the same basis as the payment from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund. The components of the net transfers for 1971–73 follow (in thousands of dollars):

Benefit payments.....	63,300	67,000	72,000
Administrative costs.....	1,700	3,000	3,000
Interest.....	1,540	1,000	1,000
Less contributions.....	-53,300	-60,000	-58,000
Net transfer.....	13,240	11,000	18,000

5. Vocational rehabilitation services.—The Social Security Act provides that payments may be made from the old-age and survivors insurance and the disability insurance trust funds for the purpose of making rehabilitation services available to individuals who are entitled to social security cash benefits because of a disability. Such payments are made in expectation that savings will accrue to the trust funds as a result of rehabilitating disabled beneficiaries into productive activity. The total amount to be used for rehabilitation services may not exceed 1 percent of the total benefits certified for payment to disabled workers and to disabled dependents of disabled, retired or deceased workers in the preceding year. The old-age and survivors insurance trust fund bears the cost of rehabilitation services provided to disabled old-age and survivors insurance beneficiaries (dependents of retired or deceased workers) while the disability insurance trust fund bears the cost of such services provided to disability insurance beneficiaries (disabled workers and their disabled dependents).

The hospital insurance program protects individuals and families against the costs of health care by helping eligible people age 65 and over finance the cost of hospital and related care. For persons on the social security and railroad retirement rolls, the cost of services covered by the hospital insurance program and administrative costs are financed by contributions from workers, employers, and self-employed individuals based on earnings. Through calendar year 1972, the contribution rate on which financing of this trust fund is based is 0.6% each of covered wages for employers and employees. Effective January 1, 1973, the contribution rate is scheduled to increase to 0.65% each for employers and employees. The contribution rates were applied to covered earnings up to a maximum of $7,800 in 1971 and $9 thousand as of January 1, 1972. Self-employed persons are scheduled to pay one-half of the combined worker-employer contribution rate. Costs for those not insured under the social security or railroad retirement program are met from general revenues of the Treasury.

1. Benefit payments.—The hospital insurance program provides protection to over 20 million persons age 65 and over against the costs of inpatient hospital services, post-hospital home health services, and posthospital extended care services. The following table shows comparative data on hospital insurance beneficiaries and on benefit payments classified by type of coverage for 1971 through 1973 (in millions):

Persons with hospital insurance protection (average).....	20.3	20.6	20.9
Beneficiaries receiving reimbursed services.....	4.5	4.6	4.7
Payments for inpatient hospital services.....	$5,119	$5,903	$6,513
Payments for extended care services.....	247	268	323
Payments for home health services.....	77	94	114
Total benefit payments.....	5,443	6,265	6,950

The growth in benefit payments in 1972 and 1973 results primarily from increases in the size of the covered population and in the cost of covered services. The estimates are in keeping with the wage and price guidelines. Without these guidelines, estimated benefit outlays would be $135 million higher in 1972 and $290 million higher in 1973.

2. Construction.—The costs of site acquisition, design, and construction of office facilities for the Social Security Administration are financed by this and the other trust funds.

3. Administration.—The administrative expenses of the Social Security Administration as reflected in its salaries and expenses appropriation and those incurred for social security programs by the Treasury Department and other Department of Health, Education, and Welfare components are financed in part by each trust fund.

4. Incentive reimbursement experimentation.—The 1967 Social Security Amendments provide authorization to conduct experiments for reimbursement of providers of services on a basis other than the "reasonable cost" or "reasonable charges" provisions generally applicable under the Medicare program, in order to achieve incentives for economy while maintaining or improving quality in the provision of health services. The cost of administering and evaluating the experiments is financed by the hospital insurance and supplementary medical insurance trust funds. Hospital insurance benefit payments made to providers of health services who are participating in these experiments are included in the benefit payments shown above.

The supplementary medical insurance program protects individuals and families against the costs of health care by helping individuals age 65 and over who elect this coverage to finance the cost of physicians' services and certain other medical and health services. Almost all persons aged 65 and over are eligible to enroll in the voluntary supplementary medical insurance program provided by the Social Security Act, and about 96% of those eligible have chosen to do so. The costs of services covered by the program and administrative expenses are financed by premium payments from enrollees together with matching contributions from the general revenues of the Treasury.

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is required by law to promulgate by December 31 of each year the standard monthly premium rate necessary to finance the SMI program during the fiscal year beginning the following July 1. The premium rate is scheduled to increase from $5.60 to $5.80 on July 1, 1972.

1. Benefit payments.—Participants in the program are covered for the cost of physician's services, home health services not covered under the hospital insurance program, outpatient services, and certain other medical costs, with specified deductible and coinsurance amounts. The following table shows comparative data on supplementary medical insurance beneficiaries and benefit payments, classified by type of coverage, for 1971 through 1973 (in millions):

FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTARY MEDICAL INSURANCE TRUST

Payments for outpatient services.....	106	119	136
Payments for other medical and health services.....	33	42	47
Total benefit payments.....	2,035	2,240	2,455

The growth in benefit payments in 1972 and 1973 results from increases in the covered population, and projected increases in the utilization and cost of medical care services. For 1973 it is assumed that the controls will limit recognized fee increases to approximately 2½%. Without these assumptions the 1972 benefit estimate would be $5 million higher and the 1973 benefit estimate would be $65 million higher.

2. Construction.—The costs of site acquisition, design, and construction of the office facilities for the Social Security Administration are financed by this and the other trust funds.

3. Administration.—The administrative expenses of the Social Security Administration as reflected in its Salaries and Expenses appropriation, and those incurred for social security programs by the Treasury Department and other Department of Health, Education, and Welfare components are financed in part by each trust fund.

The cost of administering and evaluating the experiments is financed by the hospital insurance and supplementary medical insurance trust funds. The Office of Child Development was established at the direction of the President in July 1969 (34 F.R. 12190). Its purpose is to coordinate, plan, and evaluate Federal activities affecting development of young children, including those in health, social welfare, environment, and education. The Office also administers the Head Start program.

1. Research and development.—Support is provided for research projects and grants designed to increase our knowledge of effective early childhood programs; to develop evaluative instruments and norms for young children; to improve foster care and adoption systems; and to develop better statistical reporting on current services provided to young children. Under this same activity, projects will be designed to carry out the child research and reporting mandates of the Children's Bureau Organization Act of 1912 and to follow up on the recommendations of the White House Conference on Children and Youth. In 1973, research will be expanded in the areas of the family and youth.

2. White House Conference on Children and Youth.—Followup activities have been folded into regular Office of Child Development functions.

3. Head Start.—This program is a major demonstration effort focused on a variety of child development services during the first 5 years of life. In 1973 services will be provided to 300 thousand children in full year programs and 78 thousand children in summer programs. Major demonstrations will be carried on for children in their homes, Home Start; in health care of children, Health Start; and for children who are handicapped. Demonstration parent and child centers will provide services to infants and their families.

4. Salaries and expenses.—Includes monitoring and review of Federal early childhood programs; development of policies, program standards, and regulations; dissemination of research findings; and technical assistance and consultative services to State and local governments and voluntary agencies.

Legislation has been proposed that will require intensive screening of fish and fishery products by the Food and Drug Administration. Frequency and intensity of current fish establishment inspections will be increased to provide comprehensive coverage. Grants will be provided to States to assist in their development of inspection programs for the intrastate fish industry.

This estimate also provides resources for implementation of consumer product safety legislation and proposed amendments to the Hazardous Substances Act. The new legislation will provide authority to establish standards for consumer products not subject to existing legislation, to remove hazardous products from the market, and to inspect manufacturers' and distributors' records.

Legislation also has been proposed to authorize the Food and Drug Administration to establish standards relating to the safety of medical devices.

Pending legislation increasing social security benefits will decrease maintenance assistance requirements by providing sufficient income to some persons who otherwise would require such assistance.

Pending legislation would provide Medicare coverage to some disabled persons currently relying on Medicaid and would thus cause a reduction in Medicaid costs.

This legislation would also modify the Medicaid program, including provisions that would permit States more flexibility in scope of program, discourage over utilization of services, place increased emphasis on preventive and ambulatory medical care, and restrain cost increases for institutional services. These changes are consistent with the proposed family health insurance plan, one objective of which is to promote cost sharing according to the beneficiary's ability to pay.

A wide variety of improvements in the cash benefits program are proposed to become effective in June 1972. These include an across-the-board 5% benefit increase coupled with future automatic cost-of-living increases, increased benefits for widows and widowers, and reduction of the waiting period for receiving disability benefits to 5 months. A change in the retirement test, increasing the amount of exempt earnings to $2 thousand and reducing benefits by $1 for every $2 of earnings above that amount, is proposed to take effect on January 1, 1973.

In the Medicare program, the major improvement proposed is the extension of health insurance coverage to disabled persons who have been entitled to social security or railroad retirement disability benefits for at least 2 years. This will make some 1.4 million disabled persons eligible for Medicare benefits beginning January 1, 1973. In addition, a number of provisions for improving the operating effectiveness of the Medicare program are proposed.

Financing of this overall program is to be accomplished by increasing the maximum taxable earnings base to $10,200, effective January 1, 1972. This would be coupled with a change in the 1973 contribution rate applicable to each the employer and the employee, revising it downward from the level of 5.65% contained in present law to a proposed rate of 5.4%. The distribution of the contribution rate among the trust funds would also be revised in order to insure that all funds are in proper actuarial balance.

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

This chapter contains the budget and program estimates for the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The functional departmental organization (the basis for the major divisions of this chapter) is accompanied by a streamlined regional and field structure to facilitate the packaging of programs at the State and local level. This involves 10 regional offices with boundaries conforming to a governmental-wide pattern, 39 area offices responsible for the day-to-day administration, processing, and funding decisions for programs in a specific area within the regional boundaries, and 38 insuring offices responsible for all insured housing activities and most subsidized housing programs in areas in which these activities and programs are not handled by an area office.

Building on this structure, legislation has also been proposed to establish an urban community development revenue sharing program, replacing many diverse categorical programs with a unified assistance program. This is being accompanied by a proposal for a community planning and management program to enable States and localities to wisely plan the use of their own funds as well as shared revenues. Legislation has also been proposed to establish a Department of Community Development, which would include most of the functions of the present Department of Housing and Urban Development, and which would bring together in one unified delivery system the community development activities now scattered throughout the executive branch.

The following describes the major divisions now in effect under the Department's functional organization:

1. Housing production and mortgage credit covers programs such as Homeownership assistance, Rental housing assistance, Rent supplements, Low-rent public housing, College housing, the Federal Housing Administration, and the Government National Mortgage Association.

2. Housing management includes, under a single appropriation, all subsidy payments for Homeownership assistance, Rent supplements, Low-rent public housing, Rental housing assistance, and College housing. Other management functions, such as community disposal operations and liquidating programs are also under this head.

The housing management function in the Department also includes the management and disposition of acquired properties, and loan and mortgage servicing for insured multifamily programs. These functions are not directly reflected under the "Housing Management" head in this chapter since they involve activities which relate to both housing production and management. They are included in the appropriate schedules under the heading "Housing Production and Mortgage Credit."

3. Community planning and management programs include Comprehensive planning grants, Community development training and fellowships, and the new communities program. The Comprehensive planning grant program will be used as a broader and more flexible instrument of planning and management complementing the various revenue sharing programs. Activities of the New Communities Development Corporation are included under this head.

4. Community development programs bring under one head all the facilities and other assistance programs of the Department other than housing production. This includes such programs as Urban renewal, Model cities, Water and sewer grants, and rehabilitation loans. This category will also include Urban community development revenue sharing, which is expected to be enacted and funded by July 1, 1972.

5. Major divisions, also reflecting the Department's organization, are included for the Federal Insurance Administration, Research and technology, Fair housing and equal opportunity, and Departmental management. Descriptions of these activities are found in the narratives for each division.

RENT SUPPLEMENT PROGRAM

The limitation otherwise applicable to the maximum payments that may be required in any fiscal year by all contracts entered into under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (12 U.S.C. 1701s) is increased by ~~[$55,000,000]~~ $48,000,000: Provided, That no part of the foregoing contract authority shall be used for incurring any obligation in connection with any dwelling unit or project which is not either part of a workable program for community improvement meeting the requirements of section 101(c) of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1451(c)), or which is without local official approval for participation in this program. (Department of Housing and Urban Development; Space, Science, Veterans, and Certain Other Independent Agencies Appropriation Act, 1972.)

The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (12 U.S.C. 1701s) authorized rent supplement payments to owners of certain private housing on behalf of qualified low-income tenants. Housing owners eligible for contracts with a maximum term of 40 years are private nonprofit cooperative, or limited dividend owners who provide housing financed with mortgages insured by FHA under the market interest rate mortgage insurance program for low- or moderate-income families, except for a limited experimental program under section 101(j) of the act. Public or private agencies may be authorized under contract agreement to provide services required in connection with the admission of tenants.

To be eligible for rent supplements, a tenant cannot have an income higher than the maximum limits that can be established for occupancy of federally aided low-rent public housing in the same area. The housing legislation of 1968 revised procedures for determining monthly supplements, as well as eligibility for admission, by allowing a $300 deduction per minor child and by excluding the earnings of such minors in calculating family income. The tenant must be elderly, physically handicapped, displaced from his home by governmental action, living in substandard housing, an occupant or former occupant of a dwelling damaged or destroyed by a natural disaster, or member of the armed services serving on active duty.

These tenants are required to pay 25% of their income for rent. Rent supplements making up the difference between this amount and full economic rent will be paid to the project owner on behalf of the tenant. As the tenant's income rises, the supplement payments will be reduced.

The HUD Act of 1968 made it possible for the Rent supplement program to be used in conjunction with State and locally assisted subsidized housing programs, and the HUD Act of 1969 allows housing under the Rental housing assistance program (section 236) to be occupied by families receiving rent supplement assistance. For purposes of this budget about 10% of such units are planned for supplementation. As a result, lower income families will be able to afford modern housing in these section 236 projects that would not otherwise be available to them.

Budget program.—The maximum annual rent supplement payments may not exceed the cumulative authority to enter long-term subsidy contracts. This appropriation language increases these limits. Appropriations for payments resulting from subsidy contracts are provided separately under the heading "Housing Payments" in the Housing Management section of this chapter. Fifty-five million dollars in contract authority has been released by appropriation action for this program during the current fiscal year and $48 million is being requested for use during 1973. These amounts will support reservations on 60,200 units in 1972 and 38,000 in 1973 under all sections of the program. The following table summarizes significant program data:

¹ In this category, rent supplement payments are made on units initiated under other federally assisted and State or local subsidy programs.

The Assistant Secretary for Housing Production and Mortgage Credit is responsible for processing applications, allocating contract authority and monitoring construction. The Assistant Secretary for Housing Management administers the making of payments which are limited to amounts approved in appropriation acts.

HOMEOWNERSHIP AND RENTAL HOUSING ASSISTANCE

The limitation on total payments that may be required in any fiscal year by all contracts entered into under section 235 of the National Housing Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1715z), is increased by $170,000,000, and the limitation on total payments under those entered into under section 236 of such Act (12 U.S.C. 1715z-1) is increased by ~~[$200,000,000]~~ $150,000,000. (Department of Housing and Urban Development; Space, Science, Veterans, and Certain Other Independent Agencies Appropriation Act, 1972; additional authorizing legislation to be proposed.)

The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 authorized two subsidy programs to reduce mortgage interest rates on behalf of lower income families to as low as 1% in order to assist them in purchasing or renting new or existing housing which they could not otherwise afford. Under the Homeownership assistance program (section 235), periodic payments are made to mortgagees on behalf of families purchasing their own homes. The homeowner is required to make monthly payments totaling 20% of family income toward mortgage principal, interest, taxes, insurance, and mortgage insurance premium. Eligibility to participate in the program is limited to families whose incomes do not exceed 135% of incomes set for admission to low-rent public housing in the area, except that 20% of the funds for these programs may be used for families with higher incomes which do not exceed 90% of the limits for section 221(d)(3) below market interest rate housing. A deduction of $300 per minor child is permitted in determining family income without regard to any income of such child. Family incomes are to be recertified every year.

For those families not desiring or prepared for homeownership, the Rental housing assistance program (section 236) for lower income families provides an opportunity to rent suitable apartments at an amount they can afford. Under this program, assistance payments to the mortgagee reduce the monthly payment which the owner of a rental or cooperative project is required to pay for principal, interest, and mortgage insurance premium under the mortgage covering the project. These savings will be passed on to the tenant in the form of reduced rentals. Rental charges collected by the project owner in excess of the basic charges are to be returned to the Secretary for deposit in a revolving fund to offset payments made to the mortgagee. While income eligibility requirements are the same as for the homeownership program, the family is required to make rental payments amounting to 25% of income.

Budget program.—The maximum annual payments which may be provided under homeownership assistance and rental housing assistance contracts are limited to the cumulative authority to enter into subsidy contracts approved in appropriation acts. This appropriation language increases the limits. Appropriations for payments are provided separately under the heading "Housing Payments" in the Housing Management section of this chapter. Contract authority for assistance payments is requested for 1973 in the amount of $170 million for the Homeownership assistance program, $55 million of which will come from prior years' statutory authorization. An additional statutory authorization of $115 million will be needed in 1973 to provide the balance of the $170 million request. The 1973 request for the Rental housing assistance program is $150 million, $25 million of which will come from prior years' statutory authorization. An additional $125 million of statutory authorization will be needed in 1973 to provide the balance of the $150 million request.

The Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act (15 U.S.C. 1701) provides greater protection to the public in connection with the purchase or lease of subdivision lots. Statements of record of subdivisions containing 50 or more lots must be filed with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development before initiation of sales programs in interstate commerce can commence.

The Secretary is authorized to charge a fee, not exceeding $1 thousand, to be paid by a developer when filing a statement of record as required by the act. These fees may be used by the Secretary to pay costs of rendering services under the act. During the past year, 1,324 filings of registration statements, exemption advisory opinions, and claims of exemption affirmations were processed. Fees totaling $555,333 were received for these filings. Filings are estimated at 3,993 and 6,143 in 1972 and 1973, producing about $830 thousand and $1,230 thousand in fees during each of these years.

In 1973, $500 thousand of the fees collected are estimated to be used for costs of administering the program.

Assistance to nonprofit sponsors of low- and moderate-income housing is authorized by section 106 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended.

Technical Assistance.—Under this program, authorized by section 106(a) the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, information, advice, and technical assistance may be provided with respect to the construction, rehabilitation, and operation of low- and moderate-income housing by nonprofit organizations.

Rehabilitation or construction loans.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development is authorized under section 106(b) to make interest-free loans to nonprofit organizations to cover 80% of preconstruction costs in connection with low- and moderate-income housing undertakings under federally assisted programs. Preconstruction costs include reasonable expenses incurred in planning the project such as preliminary surveys, market analyses, preliminary site engineering and architectural fees, site acquisition, application and mortgage commitment fees, and construction loan fees and discounts. The loan is usually approved shortly after the preapplication conference and repaid out of the first funds drawn upon insurance of the mortgage.

Budget program.—The $1 million appropriated under section 106(a) in 1972 and requested in 1973 will be used to expand the capabilities of organizations to assist nonprofit sponsors of low- and moderate-income housing, including self-help organizations and sponsors of elderly housing throughout the country. Under the section 106(b) program in 1973, loans totaling $7.7 million will be made available to assist an estimated 192 sponsors in the development of 22,100 units. This compares with $5.3 million in new loans in 1972 to aid an estimated 134 projects containing 15,400 units. No appropriations are requested for loans in 1973, since the fund balances plus the estimated repayment of loans will be sufficient to carry out the expanded program. It is estimated that loans will average $40,000 for an average project containing 115 units.

This section describes the production program for the low-rent public housing program including the allocation of authority to enter into annual contribution contracts and the status of the low-rent public housing loan fund. Appropriations for payments of annual contribution contracts are provided under the heading "Housing Payments" in the Housing management section of this chapter.

The United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.), authorizes a low-rent public housing program to help provide safe and sanitary dwellings within the financial reach of low-income families. Such housing is owned and operated by local housing authorities created under State law. Federal loans and annual contributions assist local housing authorities (LHA's) in financing the construction of low-rent housing and in maintaining the low-rent character of such housing after completion.

The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1970 increased the cumulative contract authorization by $225 million in 1972 to a total of $1,424.2 million. Additional authority of $150 million has been proposed for 1973. This authority, under the legislation, is available for use without specific appropriation action although the budget program is subject to congressional review. The management aspects of the program, including modernization and payment of operating subsidies, are administered by the Assistant Secretary for Housing Management. The production phase of the program is administered by the Assistant Secretary for Housing Production and Mortgage Credit.

The following table shows the use of annual contribution contract authority compared with available authority:

Annual contribution requirements based on contract authority utilized are estimated at $886 million in 1972 and $1,105 million in 1973 and are included in the "Housing Payments" estimates in the Housing Management section of this chapter.

Budget program.—Production.—During 1973, a total of 110,000 units will be placed under annual contributions contracts, and construction of 90,000 units will begin. Of those dwellings scheduled for construction, 35,000 will be built under the "turnkey" method which was initiated in 1965 to stimulate increased participation by builders and developers in the housing program. It is anticipated that 135,000 additional units will be made available for occupancy in 1973.

The projected workload accomplishments and the status of the production program is presented in the following tabulations:

Loans to local housing authorities, operation of one federally owned and directly operated housing project, and interest on Treasury borrowings are authorized to carry out both the production and management aspects of the program.

Loans.—Loans are made to local housing authorities to finance the early costs of project development, modernization of existing projects and certain administrative requirements. These loans are made with available working funds and, when necessary, with funds borrowed from the Treasury for this purpose. Under the Housing Act of 1949, borrowings outstanding at any one time from the Treasury may not exceed $1.5 billion. Outstanding borrowings are estimated at $11 million on June 30, 1972, and $19 million on June 30, 1973.

Technical services.—Technical services are provided on a fee basis to housing authorities during project development by Department construction representatives who assure compliance with specified and acceptable standards. In 1972 funding for this service was consolidated in the Administrative operations funds.

Operation of federally owned and operated project.—As of June 30, 1971, one federally owned, directly operated housing project remained in the program. This project, located at Enid, Okla., contains a total of 80 dwellings. Estimated program receipts and expenses for 1972 and 1973 are based upon the continued Federal operation of this project throughout both years.

Financing.—Loan commitments cover the maximum amount of funds the Department may loan under contract to local housing authorities in developing or modernizing projects. The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1969 authorizes these loans up to 100% of the total project costs. Experience indicates, however, that only a minor portion of the Federal loan commitment will be outstanding at any one time in the form of direct Federal loans because private financing is relied upon as the major source of funds for temporary loans. Accordingly, section 203(b) of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 amended section 20 of the Housing Act of 1937 so that the ceiling on borrowing authority of $1.5 billion applies only to Federal loans which the Secretary estimates will actually be disbursed and not to Federal commitments which are not expected to result in actual outlays. The Secretary has set the maximum Federal loan exposure factor (i.e., the maximum demand for Federal

When the Federal direct loans to a local housing authority accumulate to an amount which is attractive to private investors, the authority sells short-term temporary notes to the public and utilizes the proceeds to repay the Federal loans and to meet current needs for additional working capital. These notes are secured by the Federal Government's pledge to make Federal loans, if necessary, covering up to 100% of the development cost of the project. The notes sold at an average interest rate of 3.2% in 1971.

In 1971, direct Federal loans were refunded through secured loans by private investors in the amount of $692 million. Refunding is estimated at $795 million in 1972 and $870 million in 1973. The temporary notes sold to private investors are issued for short periods averaging 7 months, and may be reissued several times and in increasing amounts before the project or modernization is permanently financed. As a result, a considerable turnover of short-term notes takes place and the volume of loan activity conducted under the program during any fiscal year greatly exceeds the amount of loans outstanding at the end of that fiscal year.

The following table shows the actual financing and re-financing of production and management loans during 1971 and estimated transactions during 1972 and 1973:

Normally, locally owned dwellings are permanently financed at or near completion through the sale of long-term bonds to the public. These are usually 40-year serial bonds and are secured by the Federal Government's pledge to pay annual contributions in sufficient amount to meet principal and interest payments. In 1971 these bonds sold at an average interest rate of 5.6%. As of June 30, 1971, there were 880,000 dwellings potentially eligible for bonding. Of these, 777,700 dwellings had been bonded, leaving approximately 102,300 dwellings to be bonded.

The utilization of funds obtained from bond sales for 1971, 1972, and 1973 follows:

Title IV of the Housing Act of 1950 (12 U.S.C. 1749), as amended, authorizes financial assistance to colleges and eligible hospitals for the construction or acquisition of housing and related facilities such as student centers, dining halls, and infirmaries. This assistance is usually provided through debt service grants which reduce the cost of borrowing on the private market. Grants may be made for a period not to exceed 40 years in amounts equal to the difference between the average annual debt service on loans obtained in the private market, and the average annual debt service which would have been required if the loan had been made at a 3% interest rate.

A limited number of direct Federal loans may be made in cases where eligible applicants are not able to borrow on the private market except at exorbitant interest rates. These loans ordinarily are made for a period of 40 years at an interest rate set by statute at either 3% or 0.25% above the average rate on all interest-bearing obligations comprising the Federal debt, whichever is lower. The 1972 rate is 3%.

Budget program.—The 1973 budget proposes support for $300 million of facility construction to be financed, insofar as possible, by private loans. This requires an increase of $7.0 million in annual debt service contract authority. The $7.0 million request, together with a $2.3 million uncommitted contract authority available from prior years, makes available $9.3 million to support the $300 million level. Direct loans totaling not more than $100 million will be available within the $300 million level for those institutions that are unable to finance construction in the private market at reasonable interest rates and terms. Living quarters for approximately 45,000 students, student families, and faculty members will be made available during 1973. Appropriations for payments resulting from subsidy contracts are provided separately under the heading "Housing Payments" in the Housing Management section of this chapter.

The use of funds available for Federal loan reservations under the direct loan program is as follows:

Financing.—Funds for the direct loan program have come primarily through the use of Treasury borrowing authority and from the sale of participation certificates backed by pools of college housing loans held by the Federal Government, as authorized by appropriation acts. The Treasury borrowing authority now totals $3,775 million. Direct Federal loans made in 1972 and 1973 will be funded out of unreserved balances which are expected to total over $700 million at the end of 1972.

Sales of participation certificates, as provided in Public Law 89-429, Participation Sales Act of 1966 (80 Stat. 164), amounted to $2.2 billion through 1969. In order to pay the interest on the participation certificates, funds are appropriated to match the difference between the interest due on the participation certificates and the interest collections on the college housing bonds underlying the certificates.

The budget authority required for insufficiencies is computed as follows:

INSUFFICIENCIES APPROPRIATIONS

Normally a private security supported by a debt service grant is sold by the educational institution at the time the construction contract is awarded. In those cases where an institution is unable to obtain funds in the private market, the Department of Housing and Urban Development will ordinarily purchase its bond when construction is well advanced. Direct Federal loan disbursements are estimated at $85 million in 1972 and $75 million in 1973.

¹Balances of selected resources are identified on the statement of financial condition.

The direct loan program was established by section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 to provide financial assistance for housing for lower middle-income persons who are elderly or handicapped. This program is now being phased out and the rental housing assistance program (sec. 236) is absorbing the task of providing such housing.

Budget program.—There will be no new reservations made for section 202 units although funds recaptured from projects converting to the section 236 program or from reductions or cancellations of section 202 reservations may be used to adjust prior contracts. In 1972, obligations from prior year contracts total $8.8 million.

Financing.—Funds for direct Federal loans have been provided by appropriations which constitute a revolving fund. Additional financing has been obtained through issuance of certificates of participation in pools of mortgages from this program as provided by the Participation Sales Act of 1966 (80 Stat. 164). In order to pay the interest on participation certificates, appropriations are required for the difference between the interest rates on the participation certificates and that on the mortgages underlying the certificates. The appropriations required for insufficiencies are computed as presented in the following table.

Operating results.—Estimated retained earnings at the close of 1973 are $59.9 million, in addition to a cumulative allowance for losses of $5.5 million. This position reflects the fact that interest is collected on loans outstanding while no interest is paid on appropriations, the primary source of financing for the program.

The Federal Housing Administration, created by the National Housing Act of 1934, is a noncorporate business-type agency, which was brought under the Government Corporation Control Act by the Housing Act of 1948. The principal purposes of FHA are to improve home financing practices, to encourage improved housing standards and conditions, to further homeownership, and to stabilize the mortgage market. These objectives are achieved through the insurance of loans for financing the production, purchase, repair, and improvement of residential properties.

FHA loan insurance was administered through about 40 active programs during 1971. In addition, maintenance and settlement work continues under nine programs for which the authority to insure additional loans has expired. The accompanying table identifies the various programs and shows the amount of insurance written and the amount in force as of June 30, 1971, under the individual programs.

For financial purposes, FHA programs are grouped under four separate insurance funds established by statute. The largest insurance fund is the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund for the insurance of mortgage loans on homes under section 203. Under this fund, mortgagors are allowed, at termination of their mortgages, to share in the rebate of premiums paid into the fund which are not required for expenses or losses. Through June 30, 1971, such participation payments to homeowners had amounted to $208.7 million with $135.2 million reserved for future payments or losses. The Cooperative Management Housing Insurance Fund covers the insurance of mortgages on management-type cooperatives and supplementary loans under section 213. This fund is mutual also, and participation payments made through 1971 totaled $5.6 million.

The General Insurance Fund covers the insurance of loans on property repairs and improvements; on basic and special-purpose multifamily housing, including cooperatives (except management-type cooperatives), condominiums and housing for the elderly; on urban renewal, middle-income, armed forces housing, and on war and defense housing. Insurance of loans for land development, group practice medical facilities, and nonprofit hospitals are also covered by this fund. In addition, the insurance of supplemental loans for the financing of improvements and additions to multifamily projects, nursing homes and group practice medical facilities is included in the General Insurance Fund.

The Special Risk Insurance Fund was created by the Housing Act of 1968 to carry out mortgage insurance obligations in cases where insurance was written on a mortgage covering property in older, declining urban areas which would not otherwise be eligible for mortgage insurance; on behalf of a high-risk mortgagor who would not be eligible for FHA mortgage insurance but who, with counseling, can become an acceptable credit risk; on behalf of a mortgagor receiving interest reduction payments; and on a mortgage covering experimental housing where strict adherence to State or local building regulations is not observed.

Income from fees, premiums, and investments are credited to the funds; operating expenses and other expenses and losses connected with foreclosed property and defaulted notes and mortgages are charged to the funds. Through June 30, 1971, income had amounted to $5,760.8 million, and expenses, losses, and distributive share payments to $4,061.9 million, leaving a reserve of $1,698.9 million for the payment of future expenses and losses.

Budget program.—Budget requirements for mortgage and loan insurance operations are embodied in (1) an administrative expense limitation covering those expenses of the central office related to the general direction of operations, the establishment of policies and procedures, and the provision of administrative management and services for the agency, and (2) a nonadministrative expense limitation covering the operating expenses of both the central office and the field related to the initiation of insurance, the maintenance of insurance on the books, and the settlement activities associated with the payment of claims; the acquisition, management, and disposition of mortgages and properties acquired under mortgage insurance contracts; and the liquidation of notes acquired in connection with claims under property improvement loan insurance contracts. The Assistant Secretary for Housing Production and Mortgage Credit is responsible for housing production activities under the mortgage insurance and housing subsidy programs, for the servicing of insured home mortgages, and for direction of the property improvement program. The Assistant Secretary for Housing Management is responsible for the servicing of insured multifamily housing mortgages, for the management and disposition of mortgages and properties acquired under mortgage insurance contracts, and for the administration of contracts for housing subsidy payments. Anticipated program developments for 1973 are summarized in the accompanying table, Program Highlights, along with estimates for 1972 and actual data for 1971.

Summary of operating expense estimates.—Operating expenses are paid out of operating income, subject to congressional limitation. Expenses for 1972 are estimated at $15.9 million for administrative operations and $148.4 million for nonadministrative operations. The 1973 estimate is $15.9 million for administrative expenses and $156.1 million for nonadministrative expenses.

Financing.—Through 1965, insurance claims were met largely by the issuance of debentures, which are subsequently redeemed out of income and proceeds from the sale of acquired properties and mortgages. In 1971, $35.2 million of debentures were issued, and $65.6 million were redeemed. In 1972, $98.0 million of debentures will be issued and $47.8 million redeemed. Debenture issuances will total $107.2 million in 1973, and debenture redemptions will total $47.3 million. The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 authorized FHA to pay claims in cash and to borrow from the Treasury as necessary to do so. Home mortgage claims and multifamily housing claims under sections 220, 221, 233, and 235(j) are now being paid in cash. Insurance claims payable in cash will amount to $678.9 million in 1972 and $745.4 million in 1973. Borrowings from the Treasury are expected to total $99.1 million in 1972 and $35.0 million in 1973.

The Special Risk Insurance Fund, initiated by the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, was capitalized with $5 million advanced from the General Insurance Fund in 1969. During the first few years of operation of a new insurance fund, operating costs generally exceed income from fees and premiums. An additional $10 million was transferred from the General Insurance Fund in 1970 and $5 million in 1971, bringing the total amount transferred to $20 million, the maximum amount allowable by law. Borrowing from the Treasury to pay insurance claims under the Special Risk Insurance Fund will aggregate $146 million by the end of 1973. An appropriation of $195 million is requested in 1973 to cover the estimated losses through that year.

Retained earnings.—Insurance reserves, available for the payment of future expenses and losses, amounted to $1,698.9 million at the end of 1971, and are expected to be $1,796.4 million by the end of 1972, and $1,936.8 million by the end of 1973.

Insurance authority.—The authority given to the FHA for its insurance operations was extended by the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1970 to October 1, 1972. In general, these authorizations are without dollar limitation, except for the credit assistance homeownership program.

The Housing Act of 1964, as amended by the Participation Sales Act of 1966, authorizes the pooling of mortgages or other types of obligations of certain Government departments or agencies and the sale by the Government National Mortgage Association, as trustee, of beneficial interests, or participations, in such pools. The Participation Sales Act of 1966 also authorized the establishment of appropriations to cover payments for insufficiencies in the amounts required to be paid by the trustors on account of outstanding participations. These insufficiencies are comprised primarily of the excess of interest payments to holders of participation certificates over the interest payments received from the pooled mortgages or other obligations. A permanent, indefinite appropriation is available to cover insufficiencies for sales authorized in 1967, while those authorized in 1968 require annual appropriations. Use of the indefinite and definite insufficiency appropriations are reflected in the following trustor accounts: Housing for the elderly or handicapped fund; college housing fund; public facility loans; and Government National Mortgage Association, special assistance functions and management and liquidating functions funds.

The 1973 budget reflects a substantial decrease from 1971 in the appropriation requirement for participation sales insufficiencies. This is the result of a program, beginning in 1971, of redeeming certificates as they mature in lieu of reselling them in the private market. Certificates will be redeemed in 1972 and 1973 by using the unobligated balances in certain trustee accounts (primarily the college housing fund and the Veterans Administration loan guarantee and direct loan funds) to redeem those held in trust. This will reduce the volume of outstanding certificates as well as the interest insufficiencies required.

Public enterprise funds:

Note.—Schedules for the following funds are presented in accordance with the Government Corporation Control Act. The first paragraph of title III of the Department of Housing and Urban Development; Space, Science, Veterans, and Certain Other Independent Agencies Appropriation Act, 1972, relating to corporations, is shown on p. 488 of this chapter.

Through September 30, 1968, this fund purchased and sold preferred stock in the secondary market operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association and made loans to it as needed to support its operations involving the purchase of federally insured or guaranteed mortgages. On that date, the Association redeemed all preferred stock and became a private corporation owned by its common stockholders. All authority for investment in preferred stock of the corporation lapsed.

The fund is still authorized to make loans to the Association. Such loans were made in the first few months of the Association's existence as a private corporation while it arranged lines of credit with commercial banks. No loans have been made since that time and the loan authority will be used only in emergency situations.

For payment as authorized by law to the Special Assistance Functions Fund to restore capital impairment resulting from operations authorized by section 305 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1720), $119,369,000.

The Association is authorized to make commitments to purchase and to purchase FHA-insured and VA-guaranteed mortgages totaling $7,750.2 million at any one time. Of this, $5,516.9 million is available to the President to provide special assistance, as may be in the public interest, for financing of (1) selected types of home mortgages pending establishment of their marketability, and (2) home mortgages generally as a means of stabilizing homebuilding activities and of contributing to overall economic stability. In addition, specific assistance programs have been authorized by the Congress in the amount of $2,233.3 million for cooperative housing mortgages, low and moderate income housing mortgages, and a phased-out program for military housing mortgages.

Under presidential authorization, current activity is related to direct purchase programs for disaster housing mortgages, Guam, urban renewal, housing for the elderly, and below-market interest rate mortgages. Also, provision has been made for various so-called tandem plan arrangements under which GNMA issues its commitment to purchase at a firm price as close as possible to par, and under which the actual purchases of the mortgages are consummated by FNMA (and possibly by other mortgage investors). Thus far, these tandem plans include programs supporting mortgages insured under sections 235(i), 235(j), 236, and section 221(d)(3) rent supplement. Also, there are programs for mortgage financing prototype housing (Operation Breakthrough), property located in Guam and, lastly, for mortgage financing the basic government programs such as those insured under sections 203 and 207 or guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

In general, tandem plans operate on a basis that provides for GNMA to absorb differences between firm contract prices and market prices at which mortgages are sold to permanent investors. The thrust of the tandem plan arrangement is to support the fixed government mortgage interest rate without the need for the extensive outlays of cash that would be involved in a direct purchase program.

Budget program.—Special assistance activity is of two principal types: (1) commitments which are expected to mature into purchase of mortgages which will be held in GNMA portfolio; and (2) commitments which will be sold to a private investor before purchase of the mortgage or which, if a purchase by GNMA results, will be followed by a sale of the mortgage to private investors.

New commitments of the first type are estimated at $15.1 million in 1972, primarily for the financing of mortgages on single-family residences in disaster areas or located on restricted Indian lands. About $5 million of the total relates to increases of existing commitments or to special cases in urban renewal areas. No new commitments are planned for 1973.

Commitments of the second type are estimated at $13 billion in 1972 and $13 billion in 1973. Such commitments primarily will provide financing for (1) multifamily market interest rate mortgages insured by FHA under section 221(d)(3) rent supplement or section 236; (2) homes for lower income families; (3) unsubsidized FHA and VA mortgages on single-family housing; and (4) unsubsidized FHA multifamily housing mortgages. It is anticipated that the bulk of these commitments will be disposed of without the delivery of the mortgages to GNMA for purchase. Actual purchases by GNMA are estimated at $100 million in 1972, and $125 million in 1973. All of these mortgages will be disposed of by prompt sales to private investors.

Purchase of below-market interest rate mortgages during 1972 and 1973 are estimated at $250 million and $179 million, respectively. Since other means of financing are now available through section 236 for the housing that was covered by the BMIR mortgages, no further commitments are contemplated.

Participations.—Under the program of liquidating the mortgage portfolio through the sale of beneficial interest or participations in mortgages, the Association sold $200 million in 1965, $475 million in 1966, $300 million in 1967, and $250 million in 1968 of participations involving the portfolio of its special assistance functions. No such sales have been made since 1968. This program is more fully explained under the participation sales fund.

Financing.—These functions are financed principally by Treasury borrowings, portfolio liquidations, and previous years' sales of participation in mortgage pools. Net borrowings from the Treasury were $471.7 million in 1971, and are estimated at $370.5 million in 1972, and $163.8 million in 1973.

Operating results.—Net income is derived principally from interest earned on mortgages in the portfolio, less interest on Treasury borrowings and other expenses. A payment to the Treasury of $188.8 thousand was made in 1957, and another payment of $2,444.7 thousand was made in 1958. Subsequent net income has been retained and reserved for losses and contingencies, including insufficiencies under the participation sale program.

Net losses are estimated to be $150.2 million in 1972 and $248.6 million in 1973. These losses, which will deplete the remaining retained earnings, will result primarily from the growing portfolio of mortgages with below-market interest rates which do not generate sufficient revenue to pay interest on Treasury borrowings and on outstanding certificates of participations and payment of tandem points on unsubsidized mortgages.

An appropriation of $119.4 million is therefore being requested in 1973 for restoration of capital resulting from 1972 operations (not including participation certificate insufficiencies). Appropriations for insufficiencies under Participation sales fund will restore $10.8 million of the 1972 losses and $10.2 million of the 1973 losses. The following table shows the derivation and financing of the interest insufficiencies on outstanding participation certificates:

The Association, under its management and liquidating functions, is required by law to manage and liquidate its initial mortgage portfolio and those other mortgages, loans, or obligations that have been or that may be acquired from authorized sources (Public Law 89-117, approved Aug. 10, 1965). Such liquidation is to be conducted in an orderly manner, with a minimum of adverse effect upon the home mortgage market and minimum loss to the Federal Government. Liquidation of the portfolio is accomplished through regular principal repayments according to their amortization schedules, by sales of mortgages as rapidly as they can be absorbed by private investors without serious disruption of normal market conditions, and as the result of other principal credits arising from prepayments and foreclosures.

The initial mortgage portfolio in this activity consisted of mortgages on hand at, or purchased under contracts made before, November 1, 1954. Certain additional mortgages, loans, and other obligations may be acquired for this portfolio from the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and residential housing mortgages may also be acquired from any Federal instrumentality from time to time pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 89-117.

Budget program.—Purchases of mortgages under contracts made prior to November 1, 1954, for this portfolio were completed during 1958.

In 1971, GNMA purchased $19.0 million of mortgages from the Federal Housing Administration under these functions. During 1972, purchases of these mortgages are estimated at $1.0 million, and none are contemplated for 1973.

No direct sales of mortgages were made during 1971. Sales of $184.5 million are estimated for 1972, and sales of $543.1 million are estimated for 1973.

Financing.—These functions are financed principally by Treasury borrowings, portfolio liquidations, and sales of participations in mortgage pools. Net repayments to the Treasury were $52.7 million in 1971, and are estimated at $239.8 million in 1972 and $547.9 million in 1973.

Principal repayments on pooled mortgages were transferred to the Participation sales fund for repayment of certificates of participation in the amount of $71.9 million in 1971, and transfers of $72.9 and $74.3 million are expected in 1972 and 1973, respectively. This program is more fully explained under the Participation sales fund.

Operating results.—Net income amounted to $3.8 million in 1971. A loss of $1.9 million is estimated for 1972, and a loss of $42.8 million is estimated for 1973. The following table shows the financing of participation insufficiencies.

million, respectively, for 1972 and 1973. Reductions in the amount of retained earnings at the end of 1962, 1963, 1964, and 1965 resulted from payments from earnings of $40, $25, $15, and $15 million, respectively, to the U.S. Treasury, amounts which were considered to be in excess of the Association's needs for losses and contingencies. No payment to the Treasury out of earnings is projected for 1972 and 1973.

The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 authorizes the Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA) to guarantee the timely payment of principal and interest on trust certificates or other securities issued by any financial institution approved for this purpose, and based on and backed by a trust or pool composed of FHA-insured or VA-guaranteed mortgages.

Budget program.—During 1971, GNMA issued guarantees on securities totaling $3.2 billion. Guarantees of mortgage-backed securities are estimated at $2.9 billion for 1972 and $3.1 billion in 1973.

Financing.—In addition to an application fee, guarantee fees and other charges will be assessed issuers of guaranteed securities to cover costs incurred by GNMA in connection with the guarantees and to establish a reserve against possible future payments of claims under the guarantee.

Operating results.—No claims are anticipated. Fees collected exceeded expenses by $786 thousand at the end of 1971. Fee collections are expected to exceed expenses by $2.9 million at the end of 1972 and $6.0 million by 1973. These amounts will be retained to cover future year expenses and as a reserve against losses.

Title III of the National Housing Act, as amended, authorized the Association to create trusts to facilitate the financing of mortgages and other loan obligations owned by Government agencies. Under this authority, the Association sold to private investors participations in the interest and principal collections on pooled loan obligations pledged by various trustor agencies.

Sales of certificates of participation in those pools were shown as borrowings from the public in the budget schedules of the trustor agencies originally owning the loan obligations. Collections on the pooled obligations are transferred to the Association as trustee and invested by the Participation sales fund until distributed to the holders of participation certificates in accordance with the terms of the trust agreement. At this time, they are redistributed to trustor agencies for payment of interest and retirement of certificates.

A total of four separate trusts have been created. The amount of participation certificates originally issued under each is as follows (in millions of dollars):

Trust	Certificates issued
Government Mortgage Liquidation trust.....	1,790
Small Business obligations trust.....	350
Federal assets liquidation trust.....	3,230
Federal assets financing trust.....	4,250

For purposes of budget presentation the operations of these four trusts are combined into a single set of schedules.

The assets pooled in these trusts were pledged by the Veterans Administration, the Small Business Administration, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare as well as the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The Small Business Obligations Trust was liquidated in 1971.

Whenever interest collections on pooled obligations together with investment income are insufficient to cover required interest payments and a share of administrative and other costs, the trustor agencies pay to the Association, as trustee, amounts equal to the insufficiencies. The costs of any such insufficiencies are covered by appropriations which appear in the accounts of the trustor agencies.

In the event the principal collections on pooled loans are not sufficient to meet scheduled retirements of participation certificates, the Association, as trustee, may either borrow from the Treasury or sell additional certificates to redeem those coming due. Alternatively, those trustor accounts with unobligated balances available may repurchase pooled loans to provide the cash required for scheduled redemptions. This latter course will be used in 1972 and 1973. In 1972, the College housing fund will repurchase about $338 million of pooled loans. In 1973, the Veterans' Administration loan guaranty and Direct loan funds will repurchase about $187 million of pooled loans and the College housing fund about $10 million. The retirement of outstanding participation certificates and amounts outstanding are summarized in the following table (in millions of dollars):

This consolidated appropriation provides for housing subsidy payments for the following programs:

- Rent supplement
- Homeownership assistance (section 235)
- Rental housing assistance (section 236)
- Low-rent public housing
- College housing

With the exception of low-rent public housing, authority to enter into the underlying contracts is approved in appropriation acts. The request for such approval for 1973 appears earlier in this chapter. Authority to enter into contracts under the low-rent public housing program is available without appropriation action.

Contracts for units of production are approved by the Assistant Secretary for Housing Production and Mortgage Credit. The Assistant Secretary for Housing Management is responsible for making required subsidy payments resulting from the contractual commitments entered into during the production phase of the five programs and for the management of all assisted housing when completed except for servicing of the section 235 homeownership assistance program. In addition, he is responsible for providing low-rent public housing operating subsidies to local housing authorities (LHA's) and for administering and funding the low-rent public housing modernization program.

1. Rent supplement.—Payments are made pursuant to contracts under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (12 U.S.C. 1701s) which authorizes the Secretary of HUD to pay rent supplements to owners of certain private housing rented to low-income tenants. Eligible tenants are required to pay 25% of their income for rent. The difference between this amount and full economic rent is made up by rent supplement payments paid to the project owner.

The following table presents the units under payment and the amounts needed to make those payments. The increase in payments reflects a substantial rise in the number of units under management.

2. Homeownership assistance.—Payments are made pursuant to contracts under section 235 of the National Housing Act, as amended. Under this program, the Federal Government makes periodic payments on behalf of lower income families purchasing their own homes thereby reducing the homeowner's monthly payment. The following table sets forth the units under payment and the amounts needed to make those payments. The increase in required payments reflects the rapid growth in the number of units under payment.

These periodic payments on behalf of the owner of the project are passed on to lower income families occupying the units in the form of reduced rent. The following table sets forth the units under payment and the amounts needed to make those payments. The increase in required payments reflects the rapid rise in the number of units under payment.

4. Low-rent public housing.—Annual contribution contracts are entered into pursuant to the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.). The housing is owned and operated by local housing authorities (LHA's) created under State law. Contractual payments are made by the Federal Government based upon contracts executed with the LHA's. Operating subsidies are provided based on the ability of local housing authorities to operate and maintain their projects.

The following table summarizes the annual contribution payments required in 1973 as compared with 1971 and 1972.

The increase in annual contributions requirements from $886 million in 1972 to $1,105 million in 1973 is attributable largely to: (1) an increased number of dwellings eligible for annual contributions resulting from the completion or permanent financing of projects approved in prior years; and (2) the increased requirements resulting from financing the cost of modernization of existing structures and dwellings.

5. College housing grants.—Payments under this program result from contracts entered into pursuant to title IV of the Housing Act of 1950 (12 U.S.C. 1749), as amended, which authorizes payment of debt service grants to colleges and eligible hospitals. Grant payments are made directly to a bank, and are paid semiannually starting with the first interest payment date on the outstanding private loan following the date of initial occupancy of the project.

The following table summarizes the debt service grants required in 1973 as compared with 1971 and 1972. The increase in requirements reflects the rise in the number of facilities eligible for grants during this period.

Homeownership counseling to assist low- and moderate-income families to become and remain homeowners is authorized by sections 235 and 237 of the National Housing Act, as amended. The present counseling program administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development will continue in 1972 and 1973. Under this program, the Department encourages qualified State and local agencies to provide counseling and consumer education services to potential purchasers of housing insured under the Department's homeownership programs.

Appropriated funds will be used in 1972 for demonstrating and evaluating improved counseling services provided by participating State and local agencies. No appropriation is required in 1973 since additional funding required to continue the demonstration and evaluation of counseling services will be provided through the HUD Research and technology program.

Budget program.—All sales under the program have been completed; however, mortgage servicing on an inventory of mortgages will continue.

Operating results.—The deficit in the fund is expected to decrease from $16.1 million at the end of 1972 to $15.7 million at the end of 1973. Funds recovered and transferred to the Treasury are estimated to aggregate $77.4 million by the end of 1973.

The Revolving fund (liquidating programs) was established by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1955 for the more efficient liquidation of assets acquired under a number of housing and urban development programs. In 1971, the Public works planning advances, Grants to aid advance acquisition of land, and Alaska housing programs were transferred to the fund for liquidation.

As of June 30, 1971, the combined program assets amounted to approximately $111.8 million with a net book value of $65.1 million after allowance for losses. By the close of 1973, $916.5 million will have been recovered and returned to the Treasury.

The substantial increase in estimated returns to the Treasury for 1972 reflects a return of unobligated balances from two of the three programs transferred to the fund in 1971. The actual transfer may vary from the estimated $12.2 million depending on developments during the course of the year.

Section 701 of the Housing Act of 1954, as amended (40 U.S.C. 461), authorizes grants to supplement State and local funds for the purpose of financing comprehensive planning programs concerned with urban and rural development. The process supported by these grants embraces all the basic factors essential to balanced growth and development, and includes: (1) Preparation of comprehensive plans, (2) programing of capital improvements and other expenditures, (3) coordination of related plans adopted at various levels of government, and (4) preparation of regulatory and administrative measures in support of the foregoing. In making grants, primary emphasis is given to those agencies which are in a position to coordinate and implement public policy.

Planning and management assistance is provided under this program to cities, counties, multijurisdictional areas, States, multistate regional commissions, Indian reservations, and organizations of public officials. Generally, grants to communities, counties, and nonmetropolitan districts are made through the individual States which apply for funds annually to assist these bodies. States also receive financial support for programs providing advisory services and technical assistance to local governments, as well as for their own statewide planning and management programs. Other eligible recipients receive grants directly. In addition, up to $10 million, plus 5% of the funds appropriated, may be used for studies, research and demonstration projects aimed at the development and improvement of techniques and methods used in comprehensive planning, and for advancing the purposes of the Comprehensive Planning Grants program.

Grants usually cover two-thirds of project costs, but may cover up to three-fourths of project costs for planning and management programs in certain designated areas.

The following table shows the relationship of net grant approvals to available funds including a proposed 1972 supplemental appropriation (in thousands of dollars):

Community development training grants are made to States for training subprofessional and professional personnel employed, or soon to be employed, by public or private nonprofit organizations in the fields of housing or community development. Training of low-income persons in the management of housing for low- and moderate-income persons may be included. Training programs are designed by States to meet their needs, and are conducted in cooperation with Federal agencies, local governments, universities, nonprofit organizations, and urban studies centers. The Secretary is authorized to render technical assistance to States in the development of these programs and to compile and distribute training packages which States find useful in administering their programs. Approximately 50 States and territories will be assisted.

Urban fellowships are intended to attract new students at the graduate level into urban studies fields, in order to increase the supply of trained personnel working with State and local agencies. Some 100 fellowships will be awarded for the academic year beginning in 1973.

New Community Assistance Grants were authorized by title IV of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3911), as amended, and title VII of the HUD Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 4519). The New Communities Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3901), as amended, and the HUD Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 4501) authorized several programs offering assistance to private and public new community developers. Among the programs offering assistance are: (1) a program of Federal guarantees under which the Secretary is authorized to guarantee the bonds, debentures, notes, and other obligations issued by or on behalf of private and public new community developers to finance land assembly and development costs; (2) a program of interest differential grants to compensate for increased interest rates on the obligations of public bodies guaranteed under the act resulting from the loss of the exemption of interest from Federal income taxes; and (3) a program of interest loans to assist both public and private developers in meeting interest payments on indebtedness incurred by them to finance new community development during the initial development period. Additional support for new communities is described elsewhere in this section under New community assistance grants.

Under title VII, a new community development project is eligible if it: (1) will provide an alternative to disorderly urban growth, (2) will be economically feasible, (3) will contribute to the welfare of the entire area, (4) is consistent with comprehensive planning for the area, (5) has received all governmental reviews and approvals required, (6) will contribute to good living conditions in the community, (7) makes substantial provision for housing within the means of persons of low and moderate income, and (8) will make significant use of advances in design and technology. Federal guarantees of obligations issued by developers may not exceed $50 million for each new community project. Guarantee commitments are expected to be made for eight new communities in 1972 and 15 new communities in 1973. The following table shows the use of available guarantee authority (in thousands of dollars):

Financing.—Developers receiving guarantees are charged fees, and it is estimated that over time these will be adequate to provide sufficient funds for a self-supporting program. Treasury borrowings and appropriations for guarantee payments are authorized, if required.

Operating results.—Net operating income is estimated at $3,466 thousand in 1972 and $6,275 thousand in 1973.

The Model Cities program will be carried out during 1972 in a manner providing for a smooth transition into Urban community development revenue sharing. The new program, effective July 1, 1972, will replace and broaden assistance currently being offered under the Model Cities program, as well as the Urban renewal, Rehabilitation loans, Neighborhood facilities, and Open space programs. During 1972 grants will continue to be made to participating cities at their prior levels. So as not to delay congressional action on the appropriation bill, the budget includes a 1973 appropriation request of $515 million for Model Cities. This request will be withdrawn and an appropriation request for urban revenue sharing will be submitted upon enactment of authorizing legislation. In addition, the 1972 program is undertaking a series of experiments which will include departures from current approaches in the administration of Federal grants. These "planned variations" are being carried out in a limited number of participating Model Cities to test means of improving Federal and local capacity to respond to urban problems.

To monitor and evaluate the results of these experiments and to further assist cities in the transition to the new grant program, contracts for technical assistance and evaluation are being entered into with selected institutions and agencies.

In 1971 the appropriation funded the cost of administration of the Model Cities program by the Department. This cost is being financed in 1972 and 1973 within the appropriation Salaries and expenses, Community development programs.

Under the Neighborhood facilities program, the Secretary is able to help finance the construction of multi-purpose neighborhood centers by making grants to local public bodies and agencies for part of the project development costs. The program is authorized by section 703 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 3103).

To be eligible for a Neighborhood facilities grant, a project must be (1) designed to provide a wide range of services and activities in the neighborhood, (2) consistent with the planned development of the community, and (3) conveniently located for use by a significant portion of the low- and moderate-income residents of the area. The grant does not provide funding for services offered through the center; this is the responsibility of the local community.

The following table shows the number of centers expected to be in operation in each of the years covered by this budget:

Start of year.....	146	236	351
Begin operation during year.....	90	115	125
End of year.....	236	351	476

This budget provides for the replacement of the Neighborhood facilities program, as well as the Model Cities, Urban renewal, Rehabilitation loans, and Open space land programs, by Urban community development revenue sharing, effective July 1, 1972. Projects currently eligible for support under the Neighborhood facilities program will continue to be eligible for assistance at the discretion of revenue-sharing recipients. However, so as not to delay congressional action on the appropriation bill, the budget includes a 1973 appropriation request of $40 million for the Neighborhood facilities program. This request will be withdrawn and an appropriation request for urban revenue sharing will be submitted upon enactment of the authorizing legislation.

OPEN SPACE LAND PROGRAMS

For grants as authorized by title VII of the Housing Act of 1961, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1500-1500e), and the provision of technical assistance to State and local public bodies, $100,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of this appropriation may be used for financing a grant in excess of 50 per centum of the cost of any activity or project, except that grants made pursuant to section 706 of the Housing Act of 1961, as amended [(84 Stat. 1783)] (42 U.S.C. 1500c), may be made in an amount not to exceed 75 per centum. General and special funds—Continued

Title VII of the Housing Act of 1961 (42 U.S.C. 1500), as amended, authorizes grants to assist public bodies in preserving and creating open space lands which will enhance the urban environment. The program encourages the protection of lands having scenic, recreation, conservation, or historic value, and which at the same time promotes orderly patterns of urban growth. Open space projects assisted by this program must be consistent with comprehensive areawide planning, and all applications for grants must be submitted to the appropriate regional planning organization for review and comment. In addition, each project submitted for funding must be part of an areawide long-range acquisition and development program for open space preservation. Grants normally cover up to 50% of total project costs. In all cases, subsequent development of the land must be compatible with approved open space uses.

This budget assumes that the Open space land program, as well as the Urban renewal, Rehabilitation loans, Neighborhood facilities, and Model Cities programs, will be replaced on July 1, 1972, by the Urban community development revenue sharing program, discussed elsewhere in this chapter, which will broaden the assistance currently being offered by those programs, and which will allow these activities to be funded at the discretion of revenue sharing recipients. However, so as not to delay congressional action on the appropriation bill, the budget includes a 1973 appropriation request at the same level as 1972. This request will be withdrawn and an appropriation request for urban revenue sharing will be submitted upon enactment of the authorizing legislation.

The Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, as amended (42 U.S.C. 3102), authorizes the Secretary to make grants to local public bodies and agencies for basic water and sewer facilities construction. Eligible projects include those providing for the storage, treatment, purification, and distribution of water, as well as those for the collection and transmission of sewage. Waste treatment facilities are not eligible for support under this program. In most circumstances, grants may not exceed 50% of project development costs.

In order to receive Federal assistance, a project must improve health or living standards in the community, and must be so designed that sufficient capacity will be available to serve the reasonably foreseeable growth needs of the area. In addition, the project must be consistent with an officially coordinated or unified program for an areawide water or sewer facilities system as part of the planned development of the area.

Grant commitments for approximately 400 projects will be made in the budget year—34 more than in 1971.

Carryover of prior years unobligated balances will be sufficient to fund the 1973 program without additional appropriations.

URBAN RENEWAL

Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1450 et seq.), authorizes Federal assistance to local public agencies for rehabilitation or redevelopment of slums and blighted areas. This assistance includes both Federal and federally guaranteed loans, as well as grants to cover two-thirds (in some cases, three-fourths) of net project costs.

Several approaches have been used to treat slum, blighted, and deteriorating areas. These include conventional urban renewal projects, code enforcement, demolition activities, interim assistance for blighted areas, rehabilitation grants in areas certified for later renewal, and the newer approach involving annually funded neighborhood development programs (NDP's). Taken together, the various urban renewal activities provide for clearance and redevelopment, rehabilitation, code enforcement, preservation of historic structures, and installation or replacement of community facilities such as schools, fire stations, libraries, and parks.

The urban renewal program also provides financial assistance and counseling to homeowners and businessmen in renewal areas so that they may rehabilitate their properties, or, if necessary, find suitable properties elsewhere. Grants up to $3.5 thousand may be made to low-income owner-occupants in urban renewal areas for residential rehabilitation. In addition, displacees may be reimbursed for actual reasonable moving expenses, actual direct losses of tangible personal property as a result of moving or discontinuing a business, and actual reasonable expenses incurred in searching for a replacement business. In lieu of the above, a displacee may receive a moving expense allowance not to exceed $300, and a dislocation allowance of $200. Eligible families, elderly people, and small businesses may receive relocation adjustment payments to ease the financial burden accompanying relocation in new accommodations. Maximum relocation adjustment payments are $10 thousand for eligible businesses and $4 thousand for eligible families and individuals. Also, relocation payments up to $15 thousand are available to owner-occupants to assist them in acquiring safe, decent, and sanitary dwelling units. Currently up to $25 thousand of the costs incurred by communities in relocating families, individuals, and businesses displaced from urban renewal areas, are covered by Federal payments. Beginning on July 1, 1972, relocation costs will be shared between the Federal and local government on the same basis as other project costs.

Planning advances, temporary project financing, and long-term financing of land disposed under lease agreements are provided to local renewal agencies through direct or guaranteed loans under a Treasury borrowing authorization of $1 billion.

About 1,125 localities were participating in urban renewal programs on June 30, 1971.

URBAN RENEWAL PROGRAMS

For grants for urban renewal, fiscal year [1972] 1973, as an additional amount for urban renewal programs, as authorized by title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1450 et seq.), and section 314 of the Housing Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1452a), [$1,250,000,000] $1,000,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That no part of any appropriation in this Act shall be used for administrative expenses in connection with commitments for grants aggregating more than the total of amounts available in the current year from the amounts authorized for making such commitments through June 30, 1967, plus the additional amounts appropriated therefor. (Department of Housing and Urban Development; Space, Science, Veterans, and Certain Other Independent Agencies Appropriation Act, 1972.)

Budget program.—This budget provides for the replacement of the Urban renewal program, as well as the Model Cities, Neighborhood facilities, Rehabilitation loans, and Open space land programs, by Urban community development revenue sharing, effective July 1, 1972. Activities currently eligible for support under Urban renewal will continue to be eligible for assistance at the discretion of revenue sharing recipients. However, so as not to delay congressional action on the appropriation bill, the budget includes a 1973 appropriation request for Urban renewal.

The $1 billion requested for 1973 represents an increase above the 1972 level after deducting $500 million for certain nonrecurring costs in connection with the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970. This request will be withdrawn and an appropriation request for urban revenue sharing will be submitted upon enactment of the authorizing legislation.

Gross new approvals for the various urban renewal programs in each of the years 1970 through 1972 are given in the following table:

Budget program.—Treasury borrowing authority of $1 billion is available to assist in financing the planning and execution of urban renewal programs with the following types of commitments:

1. Planning advances.—Advances provide for costs directly associated with planning conventional urban renewal projects. They are repayable with interest from funds made available to the project during the execution stage.

2. Temporary loans.—Short-term direct Federal loans provide initial financing for urban renewal projects and NDP's under contract. Thereafter, working capital is generally provided by borrowings from the private market secured by pledge of the Federal loan commitment.

3. Definitive loans.—Definitive loans permit the disposition of project land through long-term leases, in lieu of sale, at the option of the community. In such cases, commitments are issued to secure private financing for the net value of redeveloped land.

Loan commitments cover total expenditures by the local public agency in carrying out a project. Both the statute and experience recognize that only a small fraction of the Federal loan commitment will be outstanding at any one time in the form of direct Federal loans because: (1) project expenditures take place over several years; (2) early borrowings are progressively repaid with funds provided from local and Federal grants and the sale of land; (3) private financing (guaranteed with a pledge of the Federal loan commitment) is relied upon as the major source of funds for temporary and definitive loans.

Cumulative loan commitments will be $15,759 million by the end of 1973, but this amount will have been reduced by $7,613 million in repayments and commitment waivers, leaving a net outstanding commitment of $8,146 million on June 30, 1973. The maximum Federal exposure (that is, the estimated maximum demand on Federal loans at any one time) is estimated at $981 million on June 30, 1973. This exposure is estimated at 12% of temporary loans, 18% of definitive loans, and 75% of planning advance commitments.

The status of loan commitments outstanding at the end of the past, current, and budget years is given below (in thousands of dollars):

Total outstanding Federal loans and commitments, end of year.....	5,922,591	8,058,682	8,146,162

Unutilized commitments.....	2,634,923	4,426,555	4,396,645

Financing.—Borrowing authority previously committed is replenished through (1) repayment of planning advances; (2) cancellation of temporary loan commitments; and (3) the repayment of direct Federal and federally guaranteed private loans from project settlement funds, including land disposition proceeds and Federal and local cash grants. Temporary Federal loan repayments from the proceeds of non-Federal guaranteed loans are estimated at $346 million in 1973.

Operating results.—Grant appropriations may be used to repay borrowing from the Treasury which is otherwise unrecoverable due to losses in connection with terminated projects.

The annual net income represents only the difference between interest income and interest expense. The original deficit of $29,140 thousand, which resulted from the use of appropriated funds for administrative expenses, will be reduced to $22,361 thousand by June 30, 1973. Because the use of grant funds to cover losses is permitted, no appropriation for the restoration of capital impairment will be necessary.

Section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, as amended, authorizes the Secretary to assist owners or tenants in financing the rehabilitation of properties located in: urban renewal, neighborhood development, and code enforcement project areas; certified areas; and areas covered by Fair Access to Insurance Requirements plans. The program finances the rehabilitation required to make a property conform to applicable public standards (or reasonable underwriting standards), in situations where repairs might not be undertaken due to the economic circumstances of the property owners or their inability to obtain financing from other sources.

Assistance is provided in the form of Federal loans carrying an annual interest rate not exceeding 3%, and a maturity not exceeding 20 years. Maximum loan amounts generally are $12 thousand for each residential unit and $50 thousand for business properties. Rehabilitation loans made to date have averaged about $4 thousand per residential unit and about $28 thousand each for nonresidential properties.

Local public agencies engaged in a rehabilitation program handle the initial contacts with potential loan applicants. Program administration and final loan approval authority generally are vested in HUD field offices, but qualified local agencies have been authorized to approve rehabilitation loans in some areas.

Budget program.—This budget provides for the replacement of the Rehabilitation loan program, as well as the Model Cities, Urban renewal, Neighborhood facilities, and Open space land programs, by Urban community development revenue sharing, effective July 1, 1972. The kinds of rehabilitation currently eligible for support under the Rehabilitation loan program will continue to be eligible for assistance at the discretion of revenue-sharing recipients. However, so as not to delay congressional action on the appropriation bill, the budget provides for loan reservations totaling $50 million in 1973, to be funded with unobligated balances remaining from the 1972 appropriation. These balances will be transferred to the new revenue-sharing program upon enactment of the authorizing legislation.

The volume of loan activity for 1971-72 is as follows:

APPROVALS—NET
Loans approved:	1971 actual	1972 estimate
In year.....	7,060	6,425
Residential.....	7,008	6,250
Nonresidential.....	52	175
Cumulative.....	21,351	27,776
Residential.....	21,200	27,450
Nonresidential.....	151	326

Costs for acquired security and collateral are incurred when defaulted loans are returned to the Department by private banking institutions servicing the loans because normal servicing and collection procedures show no reasonable prospect for repayment. Such costs are estimated at $285 thousand and $200 thousand in 1972 and 1973, respectively.

Operating results.—Operating losses are estimated to be $1,883 thousand in 1972 and $1,559 thousand in 1973, resulting from increases in the reserve for losses proportional to the increases in outstanding loans. On June 30, 1971, the cumulative deficit in retained earnings stood at $11,393 thousand. It is not anticipated that a restoration of capital impairment will be necessary during the period covered by this budget.

The Housing Amendments of 1955, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1491), authorizes the Secretary to help finance public facilities construction with Federal long-term loans, when credit to support such projects is not otherwise available on reasonable terms. Loans may be made to municipalities and other political subdivisions having populations under 50,000, but priority is given to communities with less than 10,000 inhabitants needing funds to construct water, sewer, and gas distribution systems. Other eligible recipients include: (1) Indian tribes, (2) communities in redevelopment areas (as designated by the Secretary of Commerce) with populations up to 150,000, (3) new communities approved under section 1004 of the National Housing Act or under part B of the Urban Growth and New Community Development Act of 1970, (4) communities in which a National Aeronautics and Space Administration research or development installation is located, and (5) private nonprofit corporations seeking to provide water or sewer facilities in a community with less than 10,000 inhabitants and lacking a public body capable of operating such facilities.

Public facility loans must be of sound value or adequately secured so as to provide reasonable assurance of repayment. Interest rates are set by statute at either 0.5% above the rate on all interest-bearing obligations comprising the Federal debt, or 3%, whichever is higher. The current interest rate is 5 3/8%. Maturities on these loans are limited to 40 years.

Budget program.—Net loan approvals are estimated at $40 million in 1973. These loans will finance an estimated 90 projects.

Financing.—The Public facility loan program is funded by a Treasury borrowing authorization totaling $600 million. This authorization is adequate to finance the program through the period covered by this budget. In the past, the Secretary has sold certificates of participation in pools of public facility loans, as authorized by Public Law 89-429. Funds are appropriated annually to cover the difference between interest due on the participation certificates and interest collections on the public facility loans underlying the certificates. The budget authority required for insufficiencies is computed as follows (in thousands of dollars):

Sales authorized in the 1968 appropriation act (definite appropriation).....	1,813	1,466	1,221

Budget outlays are estimated at $36.4 million in 1972 and $36.0 million in 1973.

Operating results and financial condition.—The estimated net operating loss of $3.6 million in the budget year is largely attributable to the $2.5 million loss on participation certificates (offset by a $2.5 million appropriation). That portion of the loss which is not offset by appropriation will bring the cumulative deficit at the end of 1973 to $21.7 million of which $15.2 million represents the allowance for losses. No restoration of capital impairment will be necessary during the period covered by this budget.

Two Government programs designed to meet market availability problems of property insurance are carried out through the National Insurance Development Fund: (1) The FAIR Plan/riot reinsurance program, designed to afford reasonable access to essential property insurance in urban areas and to provide a degree of protection to primary insurers against excess losses from riots or civil disorders; and, (2) the Federal crime insurance program, which makes insurance against burglary and robbery available in States in which such coverage is not available in the normal market at affordable rates. The programs are authorized by the Urban Property Protection and Reinsurance Act of 1968, as amended (title XI of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968), which added title XII to the National Housing Act.

The FAIR Plan/riot reinsurance program encompasses cooperative action by insurance companies, State governments, and the Federal Government. First, private insurers, working together and with the State insurance authority, establish a plan to provide property owners in urban areas with access to fire, extended coverage, and vandalism and malicious mischief insurance. The plan is usually referred to as the State FAIR (fair access to insurance requirements) Plan. Second, each State, if the benefits of Federal assistance are to be made available, must enact legislation providing for a sharing of the insured losses resulting from riots and civil disorders. Third, the Federal Government provides an opportunity to spread the risk of riot and civil disorder loss on a Nation-wide basis through reinsurance to private carriers at premium charges deemed adequate to meet expected losses. An Office of Review and Compliance conducts periodic examinations of FAIR Plans to assure that the benefits of Federal riot reinsurance are available only to participants in FAIR Plans which meet statutory and regulatory criteria.

The Federal crime insurance program provides for issuance of direct policies of insurance covering burglary, robbery, and theft. Policies are issued through the facilities of private insurance companies upon application submitted on behalf of a property owner by any licensed insurance agent or broker. Insurance is written at premium rates determined to be affordable (a rate which would permit the purchase of a specific type of insurance by a reasonably prudent person in similar circumstances with due regard to the costs and benefits involved). Policies include appropriate deductible provisions and are available only on properties that meet underwriting requirements, particularly with respect to reasonable protective measures and devices to prevent or reduce loss.

Budget program.—1. Riot reinsurance claims.—This represents the amount which the Federal Government pays under its riot and civil disorder reinsurance. The estimates assume a continued low level of riot and civil disorder occurrences.

2. Crime insurance.—(a) Insurance claims.—These are estimated at approximately 60% of direct earned insurance premiums, a higher ratio than that obtaining in the voluntary private crime insurance market, but at the same time reflecting loss-preventive measures and policy terms and conditions.

(b) Operating expenses.—Operating expenses include the costs of selling, servicing, and settling policies by private insurance companies acting as fiscal agents for the Government under competitively-awarded contracts. Costs include an estimated 15% for commissions to agents and brokers, and an estimated 6¼% for policywriting and servicing by fiscal agents. These estimates derive from the estimated $4 million and $10 million of premiums to be written during 1972 and 1973. In addition, costs of loss adjustment are estimated at $83.33 per incurred loss for 6,000 and 15,000 estimated losses in 1972 and 1973.

3. Studies and surveys.—This item includes expenses of continuing reviews of market availability of basic property insurance and of crime insurance, as required by law.

4. Administrative expenses.—This represents the administrative costs to the Government of operating the programs.

Financing.—The Secretary is authorized to borrow up to $250 million from the Treasury to carry out the reinsurance and direct insurance programs. It is estimated that claims and administrative expenses can continue to be paid from premium income and income from holdings of Government securities. Thus, although appropriations are authorized if needed to maintain the fund in an operative condition adequate to meet its liabilities, no appropriations are recommended.

Operating results.—It is expected that in 1972 and 1973, as in prior years, premium and investment income of the riot reinsurance program will exceed claims and expenses, permitting continued growth in reserves of the fund.

While operating expenses of the crime insurance program will be funded on an interim basis by the reserves of the riot reinsurance program, separate accounting will be maintained. In the future, through either reserves accumulated from program operations or appropriations, the crime insurance program will reimburse the riot reinsurance program for that interim funding.

Although the possible exposure under the reinsurance program is extensive, the occurrence of multiple catastrophic civil disorders resulting in large claims is extremely unlikely.

The National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 authorizes a cooperative program by the Federal Government and the private insurance industry to provide flood insurance on a national basis. Coverage was initially made available for one- to four-family residential property and small businesses, and will be extended to other types of property during 1972. The face amount of flood insurance outstanding at any given time has been limited to $2.5 billion; legislation will be proposed to increase this limitation for 1973.

Private insurance companies sell and service the flood insurance policies written under this program, pursuant to a contractual agreement between the Federal Government and the National Flood Insurers Association. Companies wishing to participate in the Association as riskbearers commit risk capital and share in the operating expenses and profits or losses of the program. Other companies participate in a non-risk-bearing capacity, acting as fiscal agents for the pool.

As part of the flood insurance program the Government also provides reinsurance coverage to the industry pool.

Flood insurance may be sold or continued in force only in communities which enact and enforce appropriate land-use and land-management measures designed to reduce future flood losses.

Under the permanent flood insurance program, studies must be made of differential flood risks in flood-prone areas to establish appropriate premium rates on a sound actuarial basis, although limited amounts of coverage may be made available to existing properties for a reduced premium; the difference between the actuarial and chargeable rates is a measure of the Federal Government subsidy provided by the program. An emergency program, first authorized by the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1969, permits insurance up to these limited amounts of coverage at the subsidized chargeable premium rate without prior studies to determine actuarial rates.

Budget program.—1. Insurance underwriting expense.—This is the Government's share of the allowable costs to the flood insurance pool of initiating and maintaining 140,000 and 225,000 insurance policies in force at June 30, 1972, and 1973, respectively. The Federal Government's share is estimated at 90%, based upon the relationship between the actuarial and chargeable premium rates under the permanent program and upon an agreed formula under the emergency program.

2. Loss and adjustment expense.—This is the Federal Government's share, 90%, of insured flood losses and associated loss adjustment expenses.

3. Interest expense.—Funds to defray Federal underwriting and loss expense payments are derived, in the first instance, from borrowings from the Treasury. It is these borrowings against which interest is being accrued.

4. Studies and surveys.—At this juncture, the major aspect of the program is the studies to determine areas having special flood hazard and to determine appropriate actuarial premium rates which are conducted by other Federal agencies and, in some instances, by private contractors.

Financing.—The Secretary is authorized to borrow up to $250 million from the Treasury to carry out the program. Borrowings are estimated to total $2,828 thousand by the end of 1973; it is anticipated that an appropriation to restore the borrowing authority may be sought for 1974. The program is also financed through reinsurance premiums charged to the pool and from excess operating receipts of the pool during favorable years. Administrative expenses and costs of studies and surveys are paid from appropriated funds.

Operating results.—Cumulative expenses are expected to exceed revenue and receipts from non-Federal sources by approximately $27 million by the end of 1973. The cumulative deficit will have been financed by cumulative appropriations of $24 million and charges against borrowing authorization of approximately $3 million.

1. Operation Breakthrough.—Operation Breakthrough is a program designed to develop and test innovations in housing design, construction, land use, financing, management, and marketing. The objective of the program is to improve this Nation's housing process in order to develop a self-sustained mechanism for providing volume production of marketable housing at stable or reduced costs for all income groups. In 1972 the construction and testing of Operation Breakthrough prototype projects will be virtually complete. Marketing of the prototype sites should be essentially completed in 1973. During this period, increasing emphasis will be given to encouraging large volume production of industrialized housing including the systems and methods developed under Operation Breakthrough.

2. Other contracts, studies, and performance of research.—The activities in this category are carried out primarily through contracts with industry, nonprofit research organizations, educational institutions, and agreements with other Federal agencies. In 1973, experimental programs in the areas of housing allowance, abandoned housing, and housing management, all developed in 1972 will be continued consistent with the results of prior research activity. Other program areas receiving continued emphasis include: Developing municipal and regional information systems, gathering and evaluating data on housing and mortgage markets, applying university resources to urban problems, improving the environment of communities, and strengthening State and local government capabilities to deal with urban problems. The 1973 program also provides for continuation of a demonstration of homeownership counseling for low- and moderate-income families, funded under Housing management in 1972.

3. Administrative expenses.—This activity covers the cost of general planning, supervision, and direction of the research program in the central office and field.

Subsequent to this, both agencies agreed that DOT shall have responsibility for administering sections 6, 9, and 11 as well. HUD will continue to review applications and may propose projects to DOT. Pursuant to this agreement, the unobligated balance of the 1969 appropriation was allocated to DOT, and recoveries of additional amounts were transferred as of June 30, 1971.

After completion of this review, budget amendments will be submitted to reduce 1973 obligations in the Administrative operations fund and the individual source fund accounts by about $5 million from the level shown in this budget.

The Working capital fund finances, on a reimbursable basis, administrative services which can be performed more advantageously on a centralized basis. It was authorized by section 7(f) of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (79 Stat. 670) and was established in June 1968.

Budget program.—The main activities are printing and reproduction, central supply, communication services, data processing, and graphic services. The printing and reproduction activity handles all printing including in-plant, GPO, and private contract work. Central supply handles all procurement for the Department, develops programs for storage of supplies and equipment, and manages personal property. Communications includes telecommunications and the correspondence and mail function. Data processing provides complete ADP services for program operations and for such administrative functions as departmental payroll, personnel, finance and accounting, budgeting, nonexpendable property inventories, and related common services. Graphic services provides photographic and design services along with preparation of visual presentations, displays, exhibits, illustrated visual aids, and administrative management graphics (charts, maps, diagrams, etc.).

Financing.—As authorized in the Independent Offices and Department of Housing and Urban Development Appropriation Act, 1968 (Public Law 90-121), $1,500 thousand was transferred in 1968 from the unobligated balance of the Revolving fund for liquidating programs to provide capital for the Working capital fund. An appropriation of $4,338 thousand was received in 1970 for replacement of the main large-scale computer then in use and for related data processing equipment. No appropriations were requested for 1971 and 1972, and none is requested for 1973.

Legislation has been proposed, and is currently pending before the Congress, to initiate a program of special revenue sharing for urban community development. This program, which will replace the urban renewal, Model Cities, rehabilitation loans, neighborhood facilities, and open space programs, will begin operation on July 1, 1972.

The budget provides $2.3 billion for urban revenue sharing in 1973. The primary source of funds for the program will be the $1,810 million included in this budget for the antecedent programs. The balance will be provided by a direct appropriation of $490 million. The following table shows the source of funds for revenue sharing in 1973 (in millions of dollars):

³ Includes unobligated firefighting and Alaska pipeline inspection funds.

1. Resource management, conservation, and protection.—Includes such programs as land and mineral management, range management, forestry, soil and watershed conservation, protection, and recreation and wildlife. These activities provide realty, leasing, and records services as well as related land classification and mineral examination work; management of rangelands for livestock forage; a sustained yield of timber to help meet demands for wood products; management and treatment practices needed to maintain and improve water quality, reduce flood damage, and prevent and control erosion from BLM lands; contract and force account wildlife protection for public land resources; fish and wildlife habitat management and improvement; and recreation management, planning, and site investigation on Bureau administered lands.

This activity also provides for Alaska Pipeline inspection and surveillance, and other work necessitated by a possible trans-Alaska oil pipeline. All such costs connected with this work shall be reimbursed by the pipeline right-of-way applicants, if a construction permit is issued.

The proposed increased funding is required to implement an accelerated OCS leasing schedule and protect the environment of the Outer Continental Shelf; to microfilm existing Eastern States Land Office records; to safeguard surface resources subject to damage because of mineral leasing and exploration; to accelerate inventory and planning and insure that advanced consideration for the environment is given to all BLM actions; to meet increased employee compensation payments; to upgrade the initial attack and support capability of the Bureau's fire protection program; and to implement Alaska Native claims legislation.

2. Cadastral survey.—In Alaska, surveys are performed on lands selected by the State for transfer under the Alaska Statehood Act, for native townsites and allotments, and for special purposes.

The proposed increase is to implement Alaska Native Claims Legislation.

In other States surveys and resurveys are performed to obtain positive land identification as a prerequisite to resource management and improvement.

3. Firefighting and rehabilitation.—Provides for the suppression of fires burning on or near the public lands under Bureau jurisdiction. Rehabilitation of burned-over areas is accomplished to restore land productivity and preserve watersheds. An increase will reduce the amount of supplemental firefighting funds required based on recent fire experience. A supplemental appropriation for 1972 is anticipated for separate transmittal.

4. General administration.—Provides executive direction and general administrative services, such as financial management, personnel management, management analysis, procurement, and property management to support Bureau activities. The increase will provide for the additional services required as a result of an expansion in the Bureau's total management responsibilities.

CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE

For acquisition, construction and maintenance of buildings, appurtenant facilities, and other improvements, and maintenance of access roads, [$4,627,000] $7,900,000, to remain available until expended. (16 U.S.C. 594; 43 U.S.C. 2; 1181a; 69 Stat. 374; 70 Stat. 130; Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1972.)

1. Construction.—(a) Buildings.—The necessary buildings and appurtenant facilities, such as office buildings, warehouses, equipment storage buildings, fire stations and lookouts, district yards, parking areas, and housing in isolated areas, are constructed to carry out Bureau programs. The 1973 program provides for construction of a district office at Shoshone, Idaho; an office and warehouse at Roseburg, Oreg., and Las Vegas, Nev.; landscaping and aircraft parking and taxi ramps at the Boise Interagency Fire Center; adequate sewage facilities at bureau sites in Alaska; and miscellaneous fire control structures in Idaho, Nevada, and Oregon.

(b) Recreation facilities.—Recreation facilities for family camping, picnicking and other outdoor recreational activities are constructed on public land sites receiving heavy public recreational use, such as campsites, picnic areas, hunter camps, fishing spots, etc. These facilities provide safe and attractive camping and picnicking units, potable water, and sanitary facilities to protect public health and safety as well as to prevent stream pollution and fire damage to resources. The 1973 program provides for an additional 573 family units and two group facilities in high recreation demand areas.

2. Maintenance.—(a) Buildings.—Provides for maintenance of physical facilities such as buildings, warehouses, equipment shelters, fire stations, and lookouts. BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

tunities for Indians to develop and utilize their complete potentials and capabilities. The primary emphasis of Federal Indian programs is self-determination, assisting Indians to assume greater responsibility in planning and managing programs for the educational, economic, and social development of their reservations. To this end the established objectives are to:

- Achieve a higher level of living and education.
- Encourage and assist Indian tribes to plan, design, administer, and supervise programs affecting their destinies.
- Offer Indians a choice of remaining at home or migrating to urban areas equipped, in either case, with the skills to live in dignity and equality.

It is the mission of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to provide the guidance and leadership in obtaining these objectives and the much-desired goal of equality for the entire Indian citizenry.

1. Educational assistance, facilities, and services.—The Bureau operates Federal school facilities where public schools are not available or cannot meet the special needs of Indian children. Financial assistance is extended to public schools enrolling Indian children where tax-free Indian lands result in financial problems for the local districts and where other special problems exist that are not covered by Federal impact legislation, administered by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The level of this assistance will be increased to meet the needs of the public schools for increased costs and increased enrollments. Grants are made to Indian students attending college. These grants will be increased to meet the needs of additional students and to offer student aid at a more adequate level. Federal school plans include increased enrollment in boarding and day schools and in dormitories housing public school students; adequate base funding of the Indian education program; and for training of Indian paraprofessional staff in Federal schools. The education program plans also provide for the employment of Indian education coordinators and for the operation of schools by Indian school boards. 5. Soil and moisture conservation.—Land-use practices based on land inventories and soil conservation plans are introduced to control erosion and promote more effective utilization of soil and water resources.

6. Maintenance of roads.—The Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains a system of roads totaling 21,664 miles on 177 reservations in 23 States.

8. Management of Indian trust property.—Banking services are provided for Indians; land is purchased, sold, exchanged, and leased; and Indian property and money rights are safeguarded. Consolidation or disposal of fractionated land holdings, especially in those areas affected by readjustment legislation, is accomplished.

10. Operation, repair, and maintenance of Indian irrigation systems.—Approximately 300 irrigation systems serving about 833,000 acres of Indian and mixed-ownership lands are operated and maintained. About 73% of the cost is financed from collections from water users, leaving approximately 27% to be met from funds appropriated under this activity.

12. Environmental quality services.—Under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, the Bureau is requesting funds to form an organizational unit to provide direction in: Identification of major actions affecting quality of environment; preparation of environmental impact statements; standardization of processing of such statements; development of programs and measures to protect and increase the environmental quality of Indian lands; assessment of progress of program objectives; and consultation with Federal, State, local authorities and Indian agencies in carrying out their activities affecting quality of environment on Indian lands.

BUREAU OF OUTDOOR RECREATION

The Bureau of Outdoor Recreation serves as the focal point in the Federal Government for the many activities related to outdoor recreation. In addition, liaison is maintained with the State and the local governments and the private sector with a view to developing and executing a nationwide coordinated effort in the provision of outdoor recreation opportunities.

The Bureau also administers a program of matching grants to States for recreation planning, for acquisition of land and water areas, and for the development of such areas. This program and land purchases in nationally important areas by certain Federal agencies are financed from the land and water conservation fund.

The Bureau is responsible for two major facets of the President's "Legacy of Parks" program. These are the expanded grant-in-aid program and the conveyance of surplus Federal real property for park and recreation purposes to State and local governments.

The 1973 program provides for the costs of operating the Office of the Governor and the judiciary of American Samoa. Also included are grant funds in the amount of $14.5 million for the operations and capital improvements for the Government of American Samoa. The most significant programs in 1973 are those for education, medical services, and public works.

In addition, the program includes $6.3 million to continue the Guam rehabilitation program, authorized by Public Law 90-511, approved September 24, 1968. The sum of $1.0 million is requested for economic development as authorized in the Guam Economic Development Act of 1968.

Public Law 90-497, which pertains to the Office of Comptroller for Guam, and Public Law 90-496, which pertains to the Comptroller for the Virgin Islands, provide that salaries and expenses are to be paid, respectively, from funds which would otherwise be covered into the Treasury of Guam and grants which would otherwise be paid to the Virgin Islands.

A portion of program costs are funded by balances of revenue collections transferred to this appropriation from other accounts.

Under the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement between the United States and the Security Council of the United Nations, the United States exercises full jurisdiction over the territory and is obligated to promote the political, economic, and educational advancement of the inhabitants. These responsibilities are carried out through the Department of the Interior.

The Trust Territory, with a population of about 102,000 persons, comprises 2,141 islands scattered over 3 million square miles of ocean in three major archipelagos: The Mariana, Caroline, and Marshall Islands. The land area totals 700 square miles.

1. High Commissioner's office.—This office provides executive direction for the development programs and the administration of the territory.

2. Judiciary.—Provision is made for the high court of the Trust Territory, the court of appeals, and the lesser courts of the territory.

3. Grants.—The cost of operating the government of the territory is provided by Federal grant appropriations and local revenue. The main activities funded under the Trust Territory Government are operations and capital improvements.

Geological Survey provides basic scientific data concerning water, land, and mineral resources, and supervises the prospecting, development, and production of minerals and mineral fuels on leased Federal, Indian, and Outer Continental Shelf lands.

1. Special resource and environmental projects.—Multi-disciplinary projects drawing on a broad array of Survey's competence are developed to address a particular resource or environmental problem at a specific point in time. The projects proposed for 1973 include: (a) Urban pilot area studies to provide land and water resource and hazard data to improve the basis for urban and regional planning for wise, safe, and efficient land use; (b) studies in response to the Mining and Minerals Policy and Resources Recovery Acts; and (c) investigation and evaluation of geothermal resources and supervision of operations of geothermal leases on Federal lands.

2. Alaska pipeline related investigations.—Funds for this activity will provide the topographic, geologic, and hydrologic data needed by the Department to fulfill its environmental protection and land management responsibilities related to the proposed transportation system for oil and gas associated with the development of the Prudhoe Bay oil fields. All costs, concerning possible right-of-way permits and construction (route, design characteristics, and construction practices) of a trans-Alaska oil pipeline, will be reimbursed by the pipeline right-of-way applicants if the permit is issued.

3. Topographic surveys and mapping.—Topographic maps, at various scales, furnish the fundamental information required to inventory, develop, and manage the natural resources of the country and to provide a visual accurate display of its physical environment. They also have numerous other uses such as the location and development of highways and lines of communications, urban planning, and military and civil defense. It is estimated that topographic surveys and mapping completed during 1972, added to that already available, will result in a total of about 3,160,000 square miles of coverage (about 87% of the United States) in either the 7½-or 15-minute standard map series. It is expected that about 18,000 square miles of existing coverage in the 15-minute series will be resurveyed in 1972 for the 7½-minute series. During 1973, mapping of about 100,000 square miles of previously unsurveyed or inadequately surveyed areas in the United States will be started. About 50,000 square miles of 7½-minute series revision and about 100 small scale and special maps will be added by the 1973 program.

4. Geologic and mineral resource surveys and mapping.—The continuing national program of geologic research and investigations produces: (a) New or improved methods, techniques, and instruments for mineral exploration on land and on the submerged continental margins; (b) geologic, geophysical, and geochemical maps that show the distribution, age, composition, structure, and physical properties of the rocks and mineral deposits at and beneath the surface of the earth including the Nation's Continental Shelves and slopes; (c) information on the chemistry and physics of the earth and the geologic processes by which it was formed and is being modified; and (d) geologic data that are directly applicable to urban development, land utilization, and the solution of land construction problems. The 1973 program provides increases for new methods of acquiring and presenting land resource data in forms suitable for land-use planning and decisionmaking; for mapping of earthquake geologic hazards and for earthquake prediction and control; for enlarging the supply base of mineral fuels; and for systematic geological mapping of the Outer Continental Shelves.

5. Minerals discovery loan program.—In order to help find new sources of many of our essential minerals that are in short supply, the Federal Government is continuing to provide financial assistance to private industry for promising exploration projects.

6. Water resources investigations.—The continuing national program of water resources investigations has the objective of seeing that the Nation's water resources are appraised and that the necessary water data to develop and manage them efficiently are available when needed. The program produces data and information relevant to the flow and sediment discharge of rivers, location and quantity of underground waters, chemical quality and temperatures of waters, changes caused by nature and by man, availability and suitability of water supplies for present and future demands. Included in the program is research needed to increase our understanding of fundamental principles of water occurrence, movement, and interaction with its environment, and also to increase the accuracy and usefulness of water data through improvements in technology. Increased funds in 1973 are requested to expand activities in water quality and other data-deficient segments of the national water data system—the Federal program in those areas of primarily Federal interest and the Federal-State cooperative program in those areas of mutual interest to Federal and State governments—and to intensify hydrologic investigations of subsurface waste storage problems.

7. Conservation of lands and minerals.—This program provides for: (a) Classification of federally owned lands specifying the existence and workability of leasable minerals and sites for development of water resources; (b) evaluation to determine fair market value of all resources offered for lease by competitive bidding; and (c) regulation and supervision of prospecting for, and development and production of, minerals and fuels from leased Federal, Indian, and Outer Continental Shelf

(OCS) lands. Increased funds for 1973 will be used to: Increase inspections and other work required by accelerated oil and gas development and production on OCS leases; provide capability for environmental impact analyses of actions related to mineral leasing; and provide for a modestly increased effort in the evaluation and classification of Federal coal lands, and the regulation, supervision, and inspection of coal mining operations on Federal leases with primary emphasis on environmental protection. Royalties from leased Federal OCS and Indian lands are expected to be about $535 million in 1973.

10. Earth resources observation systems.—The 1973 program will directly support: The ERTS-A satellite experiment and operation of the EROS Data Center at Sioux Falls, South Dakota; the conduct of experiments on applications of ERTS-A data and evaluation of their economic and social benefits; and definition of the characteristics of an operational space-based resource data system to permit projections of costs and applications benefits. Operational use of high-altitude aircraft photography and airborne geophysical surveys will continue as part of a program to provide systematic orthophoto mapping and aeromagnetic surveys of the Nation and its resources. A limited program of research on remote-sensing techniques and data applications will continue at the same level as last year.

Reimbursable obligations.—An unobligated balance of $400 thousand is carried forward each year to pay the expenses of reimbursable work pending collection from cooperating agencies. This advance is not available for obligations.

Provision is made for conserving, evaluating, and developing mineral resources.

1. Research:

(a) Coal.—Coal research is carried out to maintain the technological competence necessary to achieve maximum utility from this vast resource and help satisfy increasing national energy requirements. To this end, the research effort is directed toward advancing coal utilization technology, developing economic and more efficient methods of converting coal to cleaner energy forms, and improving methods to manage coal wastes and reduce coal-related pollutants. The 1973 program provides funds to design and begin construction of a demonstration plant to prove the technology and economics of the Bureau's "synthane" process for coal gasification.

(b) Petroleum.—Research is devoted to providing more petroleum and natural gas and greater efficiency in the extraction and utilization of these energy resources in the interest of the national welfare. Attention is directed to increasing the resource base through improved technology, developing new uses and products from oil and gas of higher quality and lower cost, and improving the environment by identifying and combating the causes of pollution. A research program will be continued to evaluate the problems and potentials of disposing of industrial wastes by injection underground. Such research is based on knowledge gained in research on recovery of petroleum by fluid injection and investigations of oil and gas reservoir properties.

(c) Oil shale.—Oil shale research is conducted to provide the scientific and engineering competence needed to establish and administer a national oil shale policy to insure its efficient development. Additionally, the program will help stimulate industry to initiate the commercial production of shale oil and associated oil shale minerals. Of particular interest are in situ techniques for retorting ungraded shale, problems dealing with the disposal of resultant wastes; and the chemical and physical properties of kerogen and shale oil.

(d) Metallurgy.—Research is carried out seeking new and improved processes to extract, recover, purify, fabricate, and recycle metallic and nonmetallic minerals for the most efficient utilization of the Nation's resources attainable through increased production, reduced costs, and a minimum of waste. Of particular interest are research leading to advanced metallurgical technology, abatement of pollution from metallurgical process effluents and gases, management of mineral wastes, improvement of mineral materials, and research on effective recovery and reuse of mineral materials from urban wastes. The 1973 program provides for demonstrating technology and economics for the abatement of SO₂ from smelter operations.

(e) Mining.—Mining research is conducted to develop improved extractive systems through technological advancement of fundamental subsystems elements to increase significantly total mining output at less cost. An integral part of this objective is provision for the maintenance of health and safety and preservation of the environment.

(g) Explosives.—Explosives and explosions research is conducted to provide technologic information and guidance to Federal, State, and local government agencies, and industry on: Safe handling and use of commercial explosives and blasting agents; safety characteristics of explosives certified for use in underground mines where gas/dust explosions might occur; hazards associated with flammable liquids and gases and potentially explosive chemicals of commerce; and the means of combating and controlling fires and explosions occurring in minerals and mineral fuels.

2. Resource development.—(a) Statistics.—Mineral statistical programs and systems are carried out. Reports on mineral production and consumption are issued for use of Federal, State, and local government agencies, the press, professional and technical publications, and industry. Modernization of data collection and processing will be continued by automation of selected statistical surveys.

(b) Economic analysis.—Economic analysis is conducted to furnish the Government with reliable information regarding the economic situation of the mineral industry and its relationship to the national economy. Of particular interest are the current situation, future trends, and alternative courses of action and their respective impact.

(c) Bituminous coal.—Comprehensive technical and economic information is provided for guidance in the optimum recovery, processing, and utilization of coal reserves; and for maximizing efficiencies in the production, transportation, and utilization of coal and related products. Guidance is provided for technological and economic research as related to methods of extraction and preparation, to methods and problems of marketing, and to techniques of combustion and utilization.

(d) Anthracite.—Investigations are directed toward developing the engineering and economic data for anthracite required by Government, industry, and the general public necessary to minimize adverse effects of past mining practices, to create an environment conducive to economic growth, and to preserve a substantial energy resource. Research is conducted on techniques for surface mine reclamation, abatement of acid mine drainage problems, and using mine waste bank materials for abating mine subsidence hazards.

(e) Petroleum.—Technical and economic studies are designed to provide an accurate and complete picture of the location, extent, and utilization of energy resources contained in petroleum, natural gas, and marginal bituminous substances. Present and possible future trends in production, technology, and practices and their effects on various sectors of the petroleum and natural gas industries will be considered and evaluated on a continuing basis.

(f) Minerals.—Resource investigations are made of mineral deposits to gain better knowledge of the location, quantity, quality, and recoverability of specific mineral resources. Investigations of marginal or submarginal mineral deposits are aimed at determining possible future utilization. Economic forecasting is undertaken, with special attention to the generally growing but shifting demand for mineral commodities, to help guide industrial, business, and Government planning and assistance in the direction of mineral research.

(g) International activities.—Technical and economic data on foreign mineral resources, production and consumption, and international trade are compiled and analyzed for Government use in coping with problems of mineral supply and to assist industry in planning domestic and foreign minerals ventures.

3. Health and safety research.—Fundamental and applied research will be conducted to overcome current health and safety problems and future problems that will accompany deeper mining, increased mechanization, and other technological changes in mining methods to meet increasing mineral demands. Research is directed toward mining procedures and devices to avoid, detect, or control those aspects of mining and the working environment which involve potential personal hazards to mine workmen. The continuing effort to assure a much safer environment and working conditions for miners involves research to develop new and improved technology for inherently safer mining methods, equipment, techniques, and systems to cope adequately with mining conditions. Research is conducted in the areas of: Support of mine roof and control of overburden; ventilation of mines; methods of allaying harmful and combustible dusts and methane and of coping with other mine air contaminants; prevention of underground fires and explosions; provisions of safe electrical equipment and installations; improvements in mining machine design to reduce noise and optimize other man/machine interrelationships to enhance health and safety; and development of improved post-disaster survival and rescue technology for coal mining.

The Government's helium program is conducted under authority of the Helium Act Amendments of 1960 (Public Law 86-777). The principal program elements are: (1) Production and sale of helium for use mainly by Federal agencies and their contractors, and by other interested parties; and (2) conservation of helium extracted from natural gas marketed as fuel, and underground storage of the helium for future use. Engineering development, technical and laboratory services required in connection with production and sales and conservation are maintained.

Federal agencies will consume about 98% of the volume sold by the Bureau, and commercial consumers will account for the other 2%. The Federal agencies will purchase about 180 MMC.f. directly from the Bureau and an additional 32 MMC.f. will be handled through commercial distributors under Federal supply schedule contracts. NASA will continue to be the largest single customer and will consume about 70% of the helium sold by the Bureau.

Helium produced by the Bureau will supply about one-third of the total U.S. helium market and the other two-thirds will be supplied by private helium producers.

The following items are significant features of the budget:

(a) The funded operating costs, exclusive of contract helium purchases and capital expenditures for operations, are reduced from 1971 by 7% by improvement and consolidation of operations, discontinuance of research, and other changes.

(b) The estimated administrative expenses have been reduced 49% from 1971 by the aforementioned changes and by more appropriate charges to functions and elements of the program to which they relate.

Budget program.—Extraction of helium for production and sales will be conducted only at the Exell (Tex.) and Keyes (Okla.) helium plants, which are owned and operated by the Bureau of Mines. The Amarillo loading terminal will continue to make shipments in small cylinders and automotive semitrailers, using helium transported to it from Keyes or Exell. Helium extracted from available gas supplies at the Exell and Keyes plants that is not needed to meet the demands for Federal agencies will be placed in underground storage for conservation. No expenses for contract purchases of helium for storage and conservation have been included because of uncertainty as to the status in 1973 of three of the helium conservation contracts and litigation in the Court of Claims pertaining to the fourth contract.

Financing the budget program.—The helium program of production and sales and conservation is financed from the helium fund. Income from helium sales and services, credited to the helium fund, are estimated to provide 100% of the needed funding.

Operating results and financial conditions.—As of June 30, 1971, the Government had $405.4 million invested in the helium program as provided for under sections 6 (c) and (d) of the Helium Act Amendments of 1960. Of this amount, $289.3 million is owed to the U.S. Treasury, leaving a net investment of $116.1 million. The investment at June 30, 1971, was about 15% in helium plants and facilities and about 85% in helium stored underground.

On June 30, 1973, the Government's investment is estimated to be $439.0 million, of which $321.4 million will be owed to the U.S. Treasury, leaving a net investment balance of $117.6 million. The estimated increase from June 30, 1971, of $1.6 million in net Government investment (equity) results from an increase in retained earnings accrued during 1972 and 1973.

The Office of Coal Research, as required by the Coal Research Act, contracts for research and development of new and more efficient methods of mining, preparing, and utilizing coal. It contracts for, sponsors, cosponsors, and promotes the coordination of, research with recognized interested groups (including, but not limited to, coal trade associations, educational institutions and agencies of States and political subdivisions).

The Office of Coal Research is responsible for developing the full potentiality and versatility of coal as the Nation's largest energy resource to the maximum benefit of the United States. Insuring a clean environment while minimizing or eliminating pollution—causing energy products is an important consideration in all of the research projects. The Office is devoting efforts to expand the existing use of coal through development of new uses. The scientific and technical aspects of the program are performed through a program of contract research.

1. Administration and contract supervision.—This portion of the program performs all necessary functions relating to contracts. This includes drafting, negotiation, and execution of the contracts, together with review and monitoring of technical and administrative phases of the contract work. Proposals are evaluated to ascertain technical and economic feasibility and eliminate possible duplication with other work.

2. Contract research.—The entire research activity cited above as the responsibility of OCR is represented in the contract aspect of the OCR operation. Proposals received from, or discussions with, potential contractors relate to a prospective area of activity in which the proposer has expressed interest, and for which the organization is qualified. Careful review and controls preclude duplicative research efforts. Contract research activities are conducted with profit and nonprofit research organizations and vary from complete Government funding to joint funding. No grant research projects are carried on, and basic research is extremely limited only to projects that support other ongoing research. Only applied research and development projects are undertaken. Several have now reached the pilot plant phase of their development, such as the coal gasification program. In accordance with the President's energy message of June 4, 1971, the administration has initiated a cooperative program with industry to continue funding OCR's three existing pilot plants and to provide additional funding of several new OCR projects for developing more efficient methods of coal gasification in preparation for construction of a large-scale demonstration plant beginning in 1975.

Studies, domestic and worldwide, are made to maintain data on adequacy of petroleum and gas, to define deficient areas or elements, and to develop ways to alleviate actual or potential deficiencies. This Office administers the Department's oil import program, pursuant to Presidential Proclamation No. 3279, as amended, establishing quotas for importers of crude oil and oil products under the mandatory quota system. The Department's program for emergency planning and readiness for the oil and gas industries and the recruitment, training, and assignment of 660 executive reservists for the Emergency Petroleum and Gas Administration are assigned responsibilities of this Office.

3. Oil Import Appeals Board.—The Oil Import Appeals Board has been established to conduct hearings on appeals from importers who request a change in their quota or who do not qualify for a quota.

1. Fish hatcheries.—Fish from 97 hatcheries help support inland fishery resources, principally on Federal lands and on Federal water development projects. Five development centers and three training schools improve fish-cultural practice and technology. Public visitor facilities and onsite recreation programs to accommodate 2.3 million visitors in 1973 are provided on hatchery areas. An additional amount of $1.0 million is provided for this activity from the Corps of Engineers and $0.7 million from the National Marine Fisheries Service.

2. Wildlife refuges.—The Bureau manages 256 refuges with 3.9 million acres for migratory birds (waterfowl) and an additional 51 areas with over 4 million acres for other migratory birds. There are 14 areas for big game animals containing almost 5.2 million acres, four national game ranges with 2.4 million acres, and four national wildlife ranges (three in Alaska) having nearly 13.7 million acres. Of the 329 units in the National Wildlife Refuge System, 18 with 19.8 million acres are in Alaska, while four with 2,910 acres are in Hawaii and U.S. territories. An additional 1 million acres of wetlands are managed. Endangered species, including nine mammals, 15 birds and the alligator, are protected on 82 of the national wildlife refuges.

3. Soil and moisture conservation.—The program consists of the planning, application, and maintenance of conservation measures for the protection, stabilization, rehabilitation, control, and use of the soil, water, and vegetative resources on 150 national wildlife refuges comprising over 10 million acres.

4. Management and enforcement.—The program includes the administration and enforcement of Federal wildlife conservation laws and regulations; regulation of importation and interstate transportation of fish and wildlife; collection and analysis of data necessary for management of migratory game birds; investigation of cases of environmental degradation, such as water pollution and control of migratory bird depredations.

5. Fishery research.—Research is conducted to provide information needed for improved methods of sport fishery management. The program includes the following studies: factors governing sport fish productivity in the natural environment; how hatchery fish can be produced more efficiently and used more effectively to augment natural production; the effects of environmental contaminants and modifications on fishery resources; and methods of controlling fish that are pests. Results are used by Federal, State, and private fishery managers.

6. Wildlife research.—Research is conducted on game and nongame resident and migratory forms of wildlife. Results are used by the Bureau as well as cooperating Federal, State, and private agencies to improve wildlife management and conservation practices and to determine the effects of pesticides and pollutants on the environment. Wildlife units are also maintained at 20 locations to give technical training in wildlife management, conduct research, and demonstrate improved management practices.

7. Fishery services.—This program provides technical assistance to Federal, State, Indian, and other public or private entities in management of sport fishing and safeguarding and restoring resources and their habitats; assists metropolitan areas in an urban sport fishing opportunity program; operates 25 cooperative fishery units at universities; conducts appraisals of the effects on fish of pesticide control operations on public lands; monitors environmental well-being of fish resources and their habitats in large rivers; and carries out a national fish pesticide monitoring program at 100 sampling stations.

8. Wildlife services.—Operational and supervisory control programs are conducted where needed to alleviate damage caused by wildlife. Technical assistance and extension services are provided to Federal, State, Indian, and other public or private entities for management of wildlife resources. Wildlife are monitored nationwide for chemical pollutants and residues on a continuing basis. State and local cooperator funds are expected to total $4.7 million in 1973.

9. River basin studies.—This activity covers studies of the effects on fish and wildlife resources of proposed oil and gas transmission pipelines and of water-use projects of Federal agencies and licensees. Recommendations are made for measures to protect and improve these resources. Emphasis is given to impacts of channelization, dredge, and fillwork performed under Corps of Engineers permits, and nuclear power projects. Additional funds, totaling $2.8 million in 1973, are provided for this activity from the Bureau of Reclamation, Alaska Power Administration, and the Corps of Engineers for water-use studies.

10. Endangered species.—Efforts to save endangered species are planned and all Federal, State, and private group management measures are coordinated for domestic as well as foreign species. Inventories are made of numbers, range, occupied habitat, and potential habitat of native endangered species. Management and research activities are performed to provide an ecologically balanced environment for endangered species and those species just short of being endangered.

Funds for four of the above activities are supplemented by moneys appropriated under the permanent accounts—Federal aid in fish restoration and management, Federal aid in wildlife restoration, and National wildlife refuge fund—as follows:

1. Management of park and other areas.—The Service administers 284 park areas comprising about 29.1 million acres of federally owned land located in 47 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. The increase proposed is for (a) management, interpretation, and protection of new and recently authorized areas, (b) operation of new facilities, (c) providing for operations at acceptable standards in park areas, including additional law enforcement capability.

The following tabulation shows the actual and estimated visits, and general and special fund revenues collected and to be collected by the National Park Service, including recreation fee revenues deposited in the Land and water conservation fund:

Actual:	Fiscal year

1969.....	157,300,000	$9,183,478
1970.....	166,900,000	8,912,110
1971.....	186,188,000	14,432,483

1972.....	209,500,000	15,288,000
1973.....	219,600,000	15,846,000

2. Forestry and fire control.—This activity provides protection for more than 13.8 million acres of forest, grasslands, tundra, and desert shrub from fire, destructive insects, diseases, and other preventable damage; and for fire prevention and protection of park buildings and structures, many of which are historical and irreplaceable.

3. Park and recreation programs.—Studies are conducted to determine the significance and suitability of natural, historical, and recreational areas proposed for inclusion in the National Park System; to determine the boundaries of proposed areas; to recommend changes in existing park area boundaries as needed; and to make recommendations concerning the designation of wilderness areas within the parks. Assistance is provided other Federal agencies, the States, and their political subdivisions upon request, in general development planning, site planning, consultation on design, construction, operational matters, and interpretive planning, and guidance in protection and preservation of historical values on lands involved. Studies and investigations are carried out leading to establishment of rights to sources of water supply and technical assistance is provided in acquiring lands. The Service administers a program which gives formal recognition to natural landmarks of national significance.

An increase is proposed for the preparation of environmental statements by the Service and for the review of statements issued by other agencies in compliance with the Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

1. Buildings, utilities, and other facilities.—The 1973 program is designed to permit the National Park Service to pursue the following objectives in carrying out its mandate to preserve the parks and to provide for their continued use and enjoyment: (a) To meet the requirements of Executive Order 11507 pertaining to air and water pollution at Government facilities, through the construction and reconstruction of sewerage systems, treatment plants, incinerators, sanitary land fills, and other utilities; (b) to plan and construct projects associated with the American Revolution Bicentennial celebration activities scheduled for 1976; (c) to maintain capacity of existing park use facilities through programs of rehabilitation, replacement, and reconstruction, including the correction of unsafe conditions, correction of functional deficiencies, and the modernization of existing facilities; and (d) to provide necessary funds for advance planning to permit systematic development of those parks where need for additional capacity or redevelopment of existing capacity is indicated.

2. Acquisition of lands and water rights.—The current land acquisition program is included in the budget of the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation under authority of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965. Rights to water must be obtained, test well sites selected, and production wells drilled, for use of visitors and employees, and for fire protection.

3. Parkways.—4. Roads and trails.—The parkways and roads and trails construction programs authorized by title 23, United States Code, are provided for under the contract authorization contained in that title and are budgeted under the Parkway and Road Construction (Liquidation of Contract Authority) appropriation.

5. Undistributed costs.—These costs represent end-of-year variations in clearing accounts involving operations such as automotive repair shops, corrals, utility systems and storehouses. The costs are ultimately distributed to the various activities served based on predetermined rates and cost of storehouse items issued.

1. Parkways.—The 1973 program proposes work on authorized parkways. Major projects are accomplished for the Service through the facilities of the Federal Highway Administration.

2. Roads and trails.—Major projects such as principal park entrance roads or major park roads having high traffic density are accomplished for the Service by the Federal Highway Administration. Minor park roads and trails projects, including parking areas, overlooks, campground roads, and drainage structures are carried out through Service facilities. The program provides mainly for the maintenance of existing capacity through such measures as resurfacing and reconstruction and for the development of some new capacity. Program objectives are to prevent a loss of investment in existing road systems, elimination of unsafe sections, and the provision of new capacity to meet traffic demand.

WATER AND POWER RESOURCES

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

The Bureau plans, constructs, and operates facilities to irrigate lands, furnish municipal and industrial or other water supplies, and develop related hydroelectric power and flood control in the 17 Western States and Hawaii.

Appropriations to the Bureau are made from the general fund and special funds. The special funds are (a) the Reclamation fund, largely derived from certain irrigation and power revenue; receipts from the sale, lease, and rental of public lands; and certain oil and mineral revenue; and (b) the Colorado River Dam fund, derived from the revenue of the Boulder Canyon project. The 1973 estimates are summarized by source, as follows (in thousands of dollars):

This appropriation provides for the planning of potential developments for the conservation and utilization of water and related land resources and includes plan formulation investigations and general engineering and research studies.

Investigations and surveys are made to determine the feasibility of potential reclamation projects and the need for rehabilitation of existing Federal reclamation projects. Studies scheduled from this appropriation, excluding those investigations involving only stream gaging or studies by the Fish and Wildlife Service, are as follows:

1. Plan formulation investigations.—These include reconnaissance, basin surveys, feasibility investigations, and special investigations throughout the 17 Western States to formulate resource development plans for basins and specific projects leading to authorization, including studies relating to the rehabilitation, financial adjustment, or water conservation on existing Federal reclamation projects.

2. Geothermal investigation.—The studies are directed toward determination of the feasibility of developing geothermal well fields for the purpose of supplying a usable water source. Initial efforts have been centered in the Imperial Valley of California. Studies to identify other geothermal resource areas that have potential for water development are also underway.

3. General engineering and research.—Studies are directed toward improvements in planning procedures and in engineering methods and materials. Included are studies of atmospheric water resources, of alternative uses and re-use of water, of rapid tunneling techniques, and continuing activities in waste water reclamation opportunities in the Western States.

4. Fish and wildlife studies.—These funds are transferred to the Fish and Wildlife Service for studies of the fish and wildlife aspects of reclamation projects in the planning stage, authorized for construction, or under construction.

Construction will be underway in 1973 on 27 projects and 14 units and divisions of the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin program. Construction will be initiated on the Oahe and Riverton extension units of the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin program. The program also includes continuation of rehabilitation and betterment work on 14 projects. The construction completed through 1972 will provide full irrigation service to 4,822,200 acres, a supplemental water supply to 4,630,100 acres, annually provide 3,051,500 acre-feet of municipal and industrial water, and 6,491,800 kilowatts of hydroelectric power. During 1973, facilities will be completed to furnish a supplemental water supply to 37,700 acres of land and to provide 75,000 acre-feet of water annually for municipal and industrial use and 100,000 kilowatts of hydroelectric power.

Advance planning work will be underway on three projects.

Project costs to this appropriation are presented in the following table (in thousands of dollars):

² Reimbursements from non-Federal sources result from sale of power and are applied against charge for purchase of power and wheeling.

The Bureau operates and maintains the power generation and transmission facilities, and generally the storage dams and reservoirs, of completed projects. Where necessary, irrigation works are operated and maintained until the water users are able to undertake the responsibilities. In 1973, a total of 35 projects, project areas, or divisions of projects will be operated and maintained for irrigation, power, municipal and industrial water supplies, and other benefits with funds made available under this appropriation. The Fort Peck project revolving fund finances the operation and maintenance of project power facilities physically integrated with the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin program.

Provision is also made for flood control operations on certain projects, soil and moisture conservation operations on public lands under jurisdiction of the Bureau, the Colorado River front work and levee system program, negotiation and administration of water marketing contracts on Corps of Engineers projects in California, marketing of power from the Corps of Engineers powerplants on the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin program and from the International Boundary and Water Commission powerplant in Texas, examination of existing structures, and for purchase power and wheeling.

Energy sales resulting from Bureau power operations excluding the Colorado River storage project are financed from above sources as follows (dollars in thousands):

Fiscal year:	Energy sales (millions of kw.-hrs.)	Income from energy sales
1971 (actual).....	43,833	$124,407
1973 (estimate).....	42,229	113,340

The above sales data for 1971 includes $7.0 million in revenues associated with 15.3 billion kilowatt-hours of energy from reclamation powerplants for which Bonneville Power Administration was the marketing agent. Sales data for the Upper Colorado River storage project are not included in this statement.

Commercial power is sold to wholesale customers such as Indian tribes, municipalities, Rural Electrification Administration cooperatives, private utilities, irrigation districts, public utility districts, and State and Federal Government agencies. These revenues are deposited in the reclamation fund, the Colorado River Dam fund, the general fund, and the Fort Peck revolving fund.

The programs include $25,845 thousand in 1973 for the purchase of power and wheeling. The establishment in 1961 of a net billing procedure for certain of these power transactions between the Federal Government and non-Federal utilities precludes the need for $6,083 thousand of this amount in 1973.

The fund defrays the cost of advance planning, construction, operation, and maintenance of the Central Arizona and Dixie projects for the purposes of furnishing irrigation, municipal, and industrial water supplies; for conservation and development of fish and wildlife resources; for enhancement of recreation opportunities; and for the other purposes as set forth in the Colorado River Basin Project Act.

Advance planning and construction costs are financed through appropriations to the fund. Project revenue and certain other revenues as provided by the act will be credited to the fund and be available without further appropriation for defraying the costs of operation, maintenance, replacements, and emergency expenditures for all facilities of the projects, within such separate limitations as may be included in annual appropriation acts. Revenue in excess of these costs will be utilized to make annual payments to the general fund to return project costs allocated to irrigation, power, and municipal and industrial water.

1. Construction.—The 1973 program provides for continuing construction on the Central Arizona project.

2. Navajo project participation agreement.—The 1973 program provides for the requirements to liquidate contract authority for the prepayment of power generation and power facilities (82 Stat. 890).

Upper Colorado River Basin fund.—Construction will be underway on three units of the Colorado River storage project and on 11 participating projects. Advance planning work will be underway on four participating projects. The construction completed through 1972 will provide full irrigation service to 46,200 acres, a supplemental water supply to 180,200 acres, annually provide 351,800 acre-feet of municipal and industrial water and 1,248,000 kilowatts of hydroelectric power. The impact of the 1973 construction upon reclamation goals will be felt in subsequent years as facilities are completed and irrigation service provided, municipal and industrial water furnished, and hydroelectric power generated.

Operation and maintenance program.—In 1973, the Bureau of Reclamation will operate and maintain four units of the Colorado River storage project with 33,901,000 acre-feet of storage space, 1,248,000 kilowatts of power generation capacity, and 1,869 circuit miles of transmission facilities, including the Seedskaadee participating project power operations. Financing will be from project revenue. Quality of water and consumptive use studies and flood control studies of the Florida and Paonia participating projects will be financed from operating revenues and the repayable debt of the storage project and participating projects will be reduced by this amount.

This fund defrays the expense of operating the power generation and transmission facilities of the Fort Peck project, Corps of Engineers—Civil, and emergency expenses to insure continuous operation (16 U.S.C. 833).

Budget program.—Funded program costs in 1973 are practically level with 1972 because of a leveling in costs related to generation and transmission of power.

Operating results.—Net income is estimated at $461 thousand for 1973, a decrease of $1,614 thousand over the current year anticipating a return to normal operations of sale of electric energy. Earnings in excess of current operating needs are retained so as to maintain a continuing emergency fund of $500 thousand. The balance is paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts toward amortizing with interest that part of the Government investment allocated to power generation and transmission. Such payments totaled $4.1 million in 1971 and are estimated at $2.4 million in 1972 and $1 million in 1973.

The Alaska Power Administration operates and maintains the Eklutna project which supplies 30,000 kilowatts and 164,000,000 kilowatt-hours to the greater Anchorage, Alaska, area. In December 1972, APA will put the first phase of the 70,000-kilowatt Snettisham project into commercial operation supplying wholesale power to utilities in the greater Juneau area.

Energy sales resulting from power operations, including the first half year of Snettisham operation, are as follows:

BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION

The Bonneville Power Administration constructs, operates, and maintains facilities to market electric power produced at Federal hydroelectric generating plants over its high-voltage transmission grid system to public and private utilities and industrial customers in the Pacific Northwest. It also wheels and exchanges power from non-Federal hydroelectric and thermal generating plants.

The estimated amounts of peak generating capacity on the Federal transmission system are as follows (in thousands of kilowatts):

	July 1, 1972	July 1, 1982
Federal projects	11,355	19,839
Power wheeled and exchanged for non-Federal utilities	7,321	15,021
Total	18,676	34,860

The transmission facilities will integrate new generating facilities into the system. Twenty-six Federal hydroelectric generating plants are currently in operation on the system and five Federal generating plants are under construction. These new plants, along with additional generating units being installed at six existing Federal projects, will increase the total Federal installed capacity from 11.0 million kilowatts to 19.8 million kilowatts.

1. System operation and maintenance.—This activity consists of the scheduling and dispatching of power; the operation of substations; the maintenance of transmission lines, substations, and other facilities; power requirements and marketing studies; planning and integration of power resources; and system engineering.

Transmission facilities of BPA are expanded as increased generating capacity becomes available. The system will be operated and maintained at a level which will insure safe operation and provide a reliable grade of service to customers.

The following table shows the rising trend of several of the more important indices of the operation and maintenance activity:

2. Purchase power and wheeling.—This activity includes the acquisition of power from other entities by purchase and exchange, and the use of transmission facilities. Exchange arrangements and net billing procedures between BPA and other entities preclude the need for an additional appropriation of $66.5 million in 1973.

3. Power contracts and rates.—This activity provides for the negotiation of power sales and wheeling contracts, the billing and servicing of these contracts, the review of resale rates, the development of service plans, and the establishment of wholesale rate schedules. Receipts, which are deposited in the Treasury, amounted to $131 million in 1971, and are estimated at $124.6 and $114.1 million for 1972 and 1973, respectively.

The Bonneville Power Administration constructs, operates, and maintains transmission facilities which are not provided by the Administration under its customer service policy when requested and financed by non-Federal entities. These facilities increase efficiency on the system, reduce loads on existing facilities, and improve service to customers. Also, facilities of the Administration are re-located as required for highway construction and other purposes under similar arrangements. In addition, trust agreements are developed for the purchase of interruptible replacement energy to meet requirements of industrial customers during periods when operating conditions on the Federal system require the Administration to curtail its delivery of interruptible power (16 U.S.C. 832a(f)) (31 U.S.C. 725s).

1. System operation and maintenance.—Provision is made for investigation and planning of proposed water resources projects, scheduling and dispatching power generation, scheduling storage and release of water, administering contractual operation requirements, and determining methods of operating generating plants individually and in coordination with others to obtain maximum utilization of resources.

2. Purchase power and wheeling.—Provision is made for the payment of wheeling fees and for the purchase of firming energy in connection with disposal of power under contracts with utility companies.

3. Power contracts and rates.—Provision is made for negotiation and administration of power contracts, collection of revenue, development of wholesale power rates, and determination of adequate provisions for the amortization of the power investment. Receipts, which were deposited in the Treasury, amounted to $29,456,287 in 1971 and are estimated at $28,857,258 for 1972 and $29,751,000 for 1973.

4. General administration.—Provision is made for the bureau's executive direction and administrative services.

The objective of this program is to stimulate, sponsor, provide for, and supplement present programs for the conduct of research, investigations, experiments, and the training of scientists in the fields of water and of resources which affect water, in order to assist in assuring the Nation at all times of a supply of water sufficient in quantity and quality to meet the requirements of its expanding population.

1. Assistance to States for institutes.—This activity provides for specific grants to all 50 States and Puerto Rico for assistance in carrying on the work of a competent and qualified water resources research institute at one college or university in each State. The function of such institute is to conduct research, investigations, and experiments of either a basic or practical nature, or both, in relation to water resources and to provide for the training of scientists through such research, investigations, and experiments. States may elect to use their grants in support of regional institutes in which several States participate.

2. Matching grants to institutes.—This activity provides for grants to match, on a dollar-for-dollar basis, funds made available to institutes by States or other non-Federal sources to meet the necessary expenses of specific water resources research projects which could not otherwise be undertaken.

3. Additional water research.—This activity provides for grants to, and contracts and matching or other arrangements with, educational institutions, private foundations or other institutions, with private firms and individuals whose training, experience, and qualifications are adequate for the conduct of water research projects, and with local, State, and Federal Government agencies, to undertake research into any aspects of water problems related to the mission of the Department of the Interior which are deemed desirable and which are not otherwise being studied.

4. Scientific information center.—This activity provides for the operation of a water resources scientific information center. The objectives of center operations are to be responsive to the needs of water resources officials and organizations by making information available concerning water resources research results and developments, to avoid replication of research, and to improve communications and coordination of efforts among all those engaged in federally sponsored water-related research.

5. Administration.—This activity provides for the administration of the Water Resources Research Act including the prescribing of rules and regulations, review and appraisal of institute programs and research proposals, making and monitoring of allotments, contracts, and grants; establishment and maintenance of cooperation and coordination among the centers and between the centers and Federal and other organizations concerned with water resources.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, COMMUNITY RELATIONS
SERVICE—Continued

The Service was established by title X of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, to provide assistance to communities in resolving disputes, disagreements, and difficulties arising from discriminatory practices which disrupt or threaten to disrupt peaceful relations among citizens, and also where efforts are being made to eliminate disparities between groups, to achieve compliance with the act and to reduce and prevent racial disorders.

By law, the Service may assist communities upon request of local citizens or officials, or upon its own motion; Federal courts may also refer public accommodations cases arising under title II of the act to the Service.

In endeavoring to create a climate of compliance and orderly progress, the Service seeks, encourages, and utilizes the cooperation of appropriate Federal, State, and local agencies, private and public groups or institutions, and individuals working to develop methods and programs for the peaceful resolution of racial disputes.

In carrying out the mandate of Congress, the Service must conduct its activities in confidence and without publicity, and the staff must hold confidential any information so acquired.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is the investigative branch of the Department of Justice and obtains evidence for use in civil litigation and prosecution of criminal violations of Federal law. It has primary responsibility for the internal security of the Nation. It assists law enforcement agencies in training, identification, and technical matters.

The appropriation of $336,300,000 requested for 1973 will provide for a staff of 19,857 full-year employees (8,631 agents and 11,226 clerks). This is the same staff as is provided for in 1972.

1. Security and criminal investigations.—This activity includes the Bureau's investigative responsibilities, the coordination and maintenance of the data gathered, and the maintenance of the Bureau's communications system. Data are disseminated to other Government agencies having an official interest. During 1971, the Bureau received 2,361,372 names for search through its files. Name check work, most of which is performed for other Government agencies, is expected to remain at a heavy level.

This is a wholly owned Government corporation. A board of six directors appointed by the President controls its policies. Supervision is by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons who has jurisdiction over all industrial enterprises and vocational training programs in all Federal penal and correctional institutions. Products manufactured by inmates are sold only to institutions in the Federal Prison System and to other Government agencies. Earnings, in excess of operating requirements, are paid as dividends into the U.S. Treasury.

The corporation is authorized, under the Attorney General, to establish and operate industries in Federal penal and correctional institutions and disciplinary barracks (18 U.S.C. 4121-4128). Its purposes are to provide employment for inmates, provide maximum vocational training for qualified inmates in connection with regular institutional and industrial activities; and to operate a placement service to assist released inmates to secure jobs. Earnings from the sale of the products pay expenses of the corporation and have permitted payment of $82 million in dividends into the Treasury since January 1, 1935. During the past 31 years a total of $29.9 million has been expended to support the vocational training program. In addition, during the past 23 years $7 million has been spent in support of the inmate meritorious pay program; this program provides cash incentives for inmates on regular institutional job assignments.

Operations.—Sales of products and services to other Government agencies during 1971 were approximately $44.7 million and are estimated at $46 million for the year 1972 and $48 million for 1973. Net earnings after paying all expenses, including vocational training and administrative limitation expenses, were $0.1 million for 1971; forecasts for 1972 and 1973 indicate that expenses will exceed sales income by $0.9 and $1.8 million, respectively.

In 1971 a Cot Repair Shop at Safford, Ariz., was started and the Roadwheel Shop at Texarkana, Tex., was closed. A decision was made during 1971 that the small-engine repair shop scheduled for Ashland, Ky., would be operated as a vocational training program rather than as a production and sales factory. During 1972 a furniture factory will be started at Lompoc, Calif.; the clothing factory at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., will be transferred from Leavenworth, Kans., to Atlanta, Ga., and a glove factory will be established at Safford, Ariz. Also, during 1972 the brush factory at Atlanta, Ga., and the instructional systems unit at Lompoc, Calif., will be closed. This will bring total shops to 48 at 20 locations.

Financing.—Accumulated earnings as of June 30, 1971, were $132 million, of which $82 million had been paid as dividends into the U.S. Treasury. The remaining $50 million has been invested in the assets of the corporation.

By June 1973, accumulated earnings are estimated at $129 million. Retained capital is estimated to be $47 million. Limitations are placed on the amounts that may be expended for general administration and vocational training.

The administrative expense limitation covers the cost of staffing and operating the Washington central office. This office is responsible for the administration of all industrial activities, for research work in industrial lines and product design in connection with the installation of new industries, and the operation and conversion of existing industries. The central office also issues the schedule of products manufactured and determines selling prices. An increase of $338 thousand is requested to meet the demands on this fund in 1973.

The vocational training expense limitation finances the vocational training program within the Federal Prison System. Advances in vocational education that have proven successful outside the prison system, have been adapted to function within an institutional setting. These advances include the use of integrated curriculum combining practical academic and vocational education and training in a number of closely related skills having special relevance to emerging job opportunities. Shifts are continually being made in industrial and vocational training programs to reflect changing demands in the labor market, thus providing inmates with the best chance to secure postrelease employment. Releasees are aided in finding employment by an employment placement service which functions as an integral part of the vocational training activity. Due to the forecast of reductions in profits and available cash, the Board of Directors of Federal Prison Industries, Inc., has placed a limitation of $4.7 million on vocational training expenditures for 1973. As a result, a decrease of $900 thousand from the congressional authorization of $5.6 million for 1972 is being shown for the vocational training budget for 1973.

1. Private sector on-the-job training.—Covers the program costs of providing employment and training in the private sector to unemployed and disadvantaged persons, and upgrading persons in low-skill occupations. The key feature is the concept of “hire first and then train.” The Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program is operated in conjunction with the National Alliance of Businessmen.

2. Public sector on-the-job training.—Secures, within merit staffing principles, permanent employment for the disadvantaged and stimulates upgrading of employed persons in the public sector.

3. Institutional training.—Increases the employability of the unemployed and underemployed through classroom occupational training and remedial education supplemented by supportive services. The regular institutional program places emphasis on aiding veterans, criminal offenders, Spanish-speaking persons, Indians, and disadvantaged individuals who do not require special intensive assistance. The Job Corps assists disadvantaged youth to become productive workers by providing a full-service training and development program in rural conservation and residential urban centers, and in non-residential centers which permit the youths to remain in or near their home community.

4. In-school work support.—Assists disadvantaged students of high school age to remain in school by providing part-time and summer work experience. Funds are requested to maintain, in 1972, the same number of summer work opportunities as in 1971.

5. Postschool work support.—Provides work experience and training to the disadvantaged unemployed. Operation Mainstream focuses on poor adults in rural areas who have little opportunity for full-time employment. The out-of-school program provides high school dropouts with skill training opportunities, work experience, income, and other supportive services to enable them to return to school or to find regular employment.

6. Special targeting.—Comprises the concentrated employment program (CEP) designed to provide unified delivery of a wide range of manpower services to selected urban and rural areas of high unemployment.

7. Computerized job placement.—Lists and updates job orders on a daily basis and, using modern ADP and telecommunications, matches the qualifications of jobseekers to jobs. The 1973 goals involve the development of a national job bank linking established statewide systems, and implementation nationally of the job opportunity bank.

In addition, this activity provides for technical assistance and training for personnel involved in the administration and direction of manpower programs. It provides for a comprehensive system to develop labor market information; contractual funds for research and demonstration projects; and for evaluation of manpower programs. In 1973 responsibility for administration of District of Columbia manpower programs will be transferred to the District government.

Extended unemployment compensation benefits.—This program pays benefits to workers who exhaust their basic benefits during periods of high unemployment under the Employment Security Amendments of 1970, Public Law 91-373, and the amendments to the Social Security Act, Public Law 92-224. The Employment Security Amendments of 1970 become operative on a national basis whenever the insured unemployment rate for the Nation is 4.5%, seasonally adjusted, for 3 consecutive months. The program becomes operative in an individual State (whenever it is not operating nationwide) when the insured unemployment rate for that State averages 4% for any 13 consecutive week period and equals 120% of the average rate for the same 13-week period in each of the 2 preceding years. Public Law 92-224, which is a temporary program, becomes operative whenever the rate of unemployment for a State equals or exceeds 6.5% for a 13-week period. It provides an individual 50% of his State regular compensation or 13 times his average weekly benefit amounts for his benefit year, whichever is lesser. No compensation is payable after October 1, 1972.

Language in 1972 supplemental provides for permanent, indefinite appropriation.

The financial transactions of the Federal-State and railroad unemployment insurance systems are made through the Unemployment Trust Fund. In the Federal State system, benefit payments are made by each State, financed by State payroll taxes. These tax receipts are deposited in the Unemployment Trust Fund and are invested in Government securities until needed for benefit payments. The expenses of State and Federal administration (including those of the Federal-State employment service), are paid from the fund out of revenue from the Federal unemployment tax, assessed on employers, of 0.5% of the first $4,200 of wages.

Both the benefit payments and administrative expenses of the separate unemployment insurance program for railroad employees are paid from the Unemployment Trust Fund and receipts from the tax on wages of railroad employees are deposited in the fund to meet expenses.

2. Employment services.—A nationwide network of more than 2,300 local employment offices financed by Federal grants provide a full range of manpower services to assist workers in obtaining suitable employment and to assist employers in resolving their manpower problems. Special emphasis is placed on providing services to disadvantaged applicants who may require extensive assistance to become competitive in the job market. Assistance to employers includes analyzing their manpower requirements, solving problems of recruitment and turnover, and developing labor market information. Communities are aided in developing employment opportunities, and employment services are provided to workers and employers in areas where the establishment of full-time offices is not feasible. Intensified efforts to place veterans in jobs will be continued in 1973.

1. Improving and protecting wages.—Seeks to obtain compliance with the minimum wage, overtime, child labor, wage garnishment, and other employment standards under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the various Federal procurement acts, and title III of the Consumer Credit Protection Act. As a complement to the compliance program, regulations and interpretative materials are developed and special minimum wage standards are set. About half a million workers are directly aided each year by these efforts. This program also includes the making of predeterminations of prevailing wage rates and fringe benefits for all Federal and federally-assisted contracts for construction subject to the Davis-Bacon Act and related acts. Prevailing wage rate and fringe benefit determinations are also made to protect service workers under the Service Contracts Act.

2. Elimination of discrimination in employment.—The major effort is to make equal opportunity an employment standard. Includes enforcement of the equal pay provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. Under Executive Order 11246, as amended to include sex discrimination, the Employment Standards Administration, through the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, works to insure nondiscrimination in employment under Federal contracts. This includes the coordination and evaluation of the activities of Government contracting agencies to assure fair and uniform treatment of contractors and all their employees; cooperation with agencies in mediations and negotiations; and the provision of guidance and training to agencies on procedures and methods to gain compliance. Through its Women's Bureau, the Employment Standards Administration seeks to enlarge the economic, civil, and political rights and opportunities of women by the provision of educational activities, special committees, and services to other Government agencies, and to National, State, and local groups.

3. Workmen's compensation.—Administers the Federal Employees' Compensation Act and the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers Act and their various extensions. Insures that injured workers covered under these acts and their dependents receive the benefits to which they are entitled and are referred for rehabilitation. Some 600,000 benefit payments are made each year.

4. Program development and administration.—Provides for the direction and coordination of all of the department's comprehensive employment standards programs. Program planning, research, evaluation, budget, and other administrative activities are carried out to insure effective and efficient program management and execution.

5. Occupational safety and health.—This program will be supported in 1973 by a separate appropriation.

Note.—1973 estimate is for activities previously financed from Employment Standards Administration: 1971, $15,189 thousand; 1972, $36,457 thousand.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration is responsible for performing the functions assigned to the Secretary of Labor by the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970. The act, which incorporates the Department's former occupational safety and health responsibilities under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, the Service Contract Act, the Maritime Safety Act, the Construction Safety Act of 1969, and certain other statutes pertaining to federally financed or assisted projects, extends Federal safety and health protection to nearly 60 million workers in more than 4 million places of employment. During 1971 and 1972, occupational safety and health activities were financed from the Employment Standards Administration (formerly Workplace Standards Administration).

OBLIGATIONS BY PROGRAM

Program by activities	1971 actual	1972 estimate
1. Safety and health standards	1,062	2,220
2. Enforcement	6,068	14,848
3. Training, education, and information	455	2,294
4. State programs	5,764	7,781
5. Safety and health statistics	758	3,345
6. Executive direction and administration	1,082	5,969
Total obligations	15,189	36,457

1. Safety and health standards.—An initial package of standards, providing generally accepted safety criteria, was published in the Federal Register in May 1971. Existing national consensus standards will be evaluated and promulgated as Federal standards, and additional standards will be developed through public hearings procedures.

2. Enforcement.—Enforcement is achieved through inspection of plants and facilities. Where substandard working conditions are found, citations specifying corrective action or penalties are issued. During 1972 the Federal compliance staff will investigate an estimated 10,000 reports of fatal injuries or major accidents, and approximately 20,000 complaints of hazardous conditions. Approximately 25,000 inspections will be made in selected hazardous industries which together employ over 5 million persons. An additional 15,000 inspections will be scheduled in a cross-section of covered establishments. A total of 110,000 inspections is projected for 1973.

3. Training, education, and information.—Training, education, and information relating to the prevention of occupational injuries and illness are provided to plant managers, employee representatives, State and local safety and health officials, and others with safety responsibilities. Regional training facilities will provide short-term technical and professional training in occupational safety and health. During 1972, training averaging 2½ days will be provided for approximately 27,000 persons. In 1973 training opportunities averaging 4 days will be provided to about 31,000 persons.

4. State programs.—Federal grants are provided to the States to encourage participation in occupational safety and health programs, and to assist them in developing programs which will be at least as effective as the Federal compliance program. An estimated 10 States will have approved State plans by the end of 1972 and will be prepared to assume responsibility for operational compliance programs at the start of 1973. It is projected that an additional 10 to 15 States will submit plans during 1973 and will be prepared to commence operations for a portion of the year.

5. Safety and health statistics.—Data on occupational fatalities, injuries, and illnesses are collected and disseminated to identify occupational safety and health problems. Regulations mailed to covered employers in July 1971 require all employers to maintain records of work-related deaths, injuries, and illnesses. These records must be available for examination, and will provide the source of data for annual nationwide statistical surveys of a selected sample of establishments. In 1972, surveys will be conducted of 50,000 establishments in nonagricultural industries except mining and Government. This survey will be expanded to 200,000 establishments in 1973.

6. Executive direction and administration.—Executive direction, planning, and management support activities are structured to assure the effective implementation of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, and to decentralize as rapidly as possible the administration of the act to those levels of Government closest to the people. This activity includes the National Commission on State Workmen's Compensation Laws, which was established by the act to study and evaluate State workmen's compensation laws and to determine if such laws provide an adequate, prompt, and equitable system of compensation.

It contributes to U.S. labor and manpower policy objectives overseas without additional dollar costs to the United States.

Overseas labor officer conferences provide State and Labor Department guidance for both U.S. labor officers and their foreign national assistants. Support is provided for conferences, seminars, and exhibitions dealing with domestic manpower and overseas labor ministry programs.

Technical cooperation overseas provides for trade union interchange, ministry-to-ministry cooperation, assistance in labor-management relations of U.S. firms overseas, and evaluation of multilateral assistance programs in the labor and manpower areas.

The United States contributes its assessed share of the expenses of the above-listed international organizations.

The major increases are for the United States' contribution to the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the Organization of American States, the International Atomic Energy Agency, and the Pan American Health Organization.

More than half of the increases are attributable to the costs of maintaining the prior year level of operations, including U.N. salary increases for professional personnel and revaluation of currencies. Other principal reasons include: (1) The United Nations is increasing its activities in the economic and social field, including refugee assistance and trade promotion programs, incurring additional construction costs in Santiago, Addis Ababa, and Geneva, and expanding the Office of Public Information; (2) the World Health Organization is increasing its activities in the areas of drug monitoring, drug efficacy, environmental services and water supply, and small pox eradication; (3) the Food and Agriculture Organization is expanding the staffs of its regional offices, participating in an investment center with the IBRD and regional banks, and increasing its locust control, environmental studies, pest control, fisheries, and forestry programs; (4) the International Atomic Energy Agency is taking on additional responsibilities for developing the safeguards program under the nonproliferation treaty; and (5) the Pan American Health Organization is increasing its activities with respect to malaria eradication and its support of the Pan American Zoonosis Center which was involved in the recent outbreak of Venezuelan equine encephalitis.

The 1968 appropriation completed the financing, as authorized by the American-Mexican Chamizal Convention Act of 1964, for compliance with the Chamizal Convention between the United States and Mexico. The transfer of the lands between Mexico and the United States has been accomplished. The relocation of the Rio Grande channel was completed in December 1968.

With remaining available funds, the acquisition of lands, channel strengthening and levee improvements will be completed in 1972 to extend the rectification project 3.4 miles to the land boundary, as authorized by the Chamizal Convention. These 3.4 miles of unregulated and unimproved river require improvement to complete the stabilization of the boundary river and control floods between the cities of Juarez and El Paso. This work was undertaken jointly with Mexico. With completion of this work, all of the requirements of the Chamizal Convention will have been fulfilled.

The Department of Transportation Act of 1966 assigns to the Secretary broad responsibilities for the development and coordination of national transportation policies and programs. This appropriation finances those research activities and studies which directly support the Secretary's responsibilities and which can more effectively or appropriately be conducted in the Office of the Secretary than by the operating administrations within the Department. The program is carried out primarily through contracts with other Federal agencies, educational institutions, nonprofit research organizations, and private firms.

1. Transportation policy and planning.—Studies and analyses are conducted on a broad range of transportation policy, economic, and environmental problems to determine national transportation requirements and to provide the Secretary with the information and analyses needed for effective decisionmaking on national transportation policies, plans, and programs. Included are programs to forecast transportation demand, to develop models and other analytical devices that will help assess alternative courses of action, to conduct economic and statistical studies designed to assess the effects of economic regulation, and to examine the interrelationship of transportation with changing economic, social, and environmental programs.

2. University research.—Scientific and technological research and interdisciplinary studies conducted under this activity are designed to assure that resources of the higher education community are effectively brought to bear on transportation problems and to encourage greater involvement of universities and colleges with the Department, State, and local governments, and the transportation industry. In addition to mission-oriented research, university based seminars and conferences will bring university, industry, and government representatives together for joint study of transportation needs.

3. Transportation systems development and technology.—Projects are carried out to advance transportation technology generally; to seek solutions to transportation problems which are intermodal in nature; to provide information and forecasts on new technology required as a basis for planning and development of transportation systems, policies, and programs; to conduct research on longer range technical problems in transportation; and to manage research programs of such priority that they demand secretarial emphasis. The funds requested in this activity will continue and expand advanced research and development efforts to improve air transportation (to be financed from the Airport and Airway Trust Fund); to develop multimodal and intermodal systems and technology, and to promote environmental and ecological improvements. In general, projects are designed to complement research and development programs of the operating administrations and to stimulate industry efforts to advance transportation technology.

4. Transportation facilitation.—Research and studies in this area are aimed at removing the impediments to the rapid and efficient flow of passengers and cargo by modernizing our systems of transportation documentation and procedures.

5. Special programs.—Projects in this activity are chiefly to provide technical studies and other data in support of the Department's programs in the areas of consumer affairs, hazardous materials, pipeline safety, and transportation security.

The working capital fund was authorized by the Department of Transportation Act (sec. 9, Public Law 89-670) to finance common administrative services centrally performed in the interest of economy and efficiency in the Department. Established on July 2, 1967, the fund initially provided for publishing and graphic services, which included costs to operate the departmental printing plant, authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing, U.S. Congress. Subsequent to that date and including programs proposed for 1972, the fund has been expanded to include Washington headquarter services of still photographic services, computer time sharing, consolidated library operations, consolidated travel and imprest fund operations, central employment information, warehouse management, parking management, chauffeur services, mail and messenger services, computer programing and analysis services, and visuals service.

Operating results and financial condition.—Services rendered are charged for at rates which return in full all operating expenses, including a normal reserve for accrued annual leave and depreciation of equipment. The fund is reimbursed in advance by the operating administrations and offices being served. No action is required with regard to the deficit in retained earnings for 1971. The deficit is very slight in relation to the annual revenue of the fund and will be recovered as part of revenue during future years.

The Consolidated working fund was established to facilitate the conduct of operations of the Transportation Systems Center. The programs of the Center are funded from advances received from the Office of the Secretary and the operating administrations in the Department of Transportation in accordance with general working agreements and specific project plan agreements.

The Transportation Systems Center serves as a technical resource for the Office of the Secretary and the operating administrations. Its specific projects planned for 1973 are grouped generally along the following lines:

Transportation safety.—The chief effort under this heading is in the highway safety field with additional efforts in aviation, marine, and railway safety.

Pollution reduction.—This grouping includes both aircraft and automotive pollution, with a smaller effort in marine sources.

Noise abatement.—Special problems of noise propagation related to transportation systems are covered in this area, with emphasis on development of right-of-way noise barriers.

Air transportation.—This grouping of the Center's projects is primarily directed to air traffic control. The balance of the effort is split between navigation and systems development.

Ground transportation.—Highway utilization and traffic control, new urban transportation systems, advanced high-speed systems, and conventional rail systems are the main project areas under this category.

Marine transportation.—This grouping supports the Coast Guard mainly in marine navigation aids.

Multimodal systems.—Projects which are not directed towards a single mode of transportation are included here, with the primary effort in modeling, analysis, and inter-modal systems technology.

² Reimbursements from non-Federal sources are derived from the sale of personal property (40 U.S.C. 481(c)) and repair or replacement of damaged Coast Guard property (14 U.S.C. 642).

The Coast Guard employs multipurpose vessels, aircraft, and shore units, strategically located along the coasts and inland waterways of the United States and in selected areas overseas to carry out the duties specified in title 14, United States Code.

Direct program.—1. Search and rescue.—Most Coast Guard operating facilities have the capacity for promoting safety on or over the high seas and on waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. The Coast Guard performs any and all acts necessary to rescue and aid persons and save property placed in jeopardy due to marine and aircraft disaster or due to floods and ice conditions (14 U.S.C. 88). Coast Guard activities in the area of search and rescue fall within the National SAR Plan and other agreements.

2. Aids to navigation.—A network of manned and unmanned aids to navigation is maintained along our coasts and on our inland waterways through the use of tenders and shore facilities to insure the safe passage of the mariner. Loran stations are operated in the United States and abroad to serve the needs of the armed services and marine and air commerce (14 U.S.C. 81).

3. Marine safety.—The Coast Guard insures compliance with Federal statutes and regulations pertaining to the merchant marine industry by reviewing plans and specifications for the construction or alteration of merchant vessels; by periodic inspections; by conducting marine casualty investigations; and by setting standards, procedures, and practices under which merchant marine personnel are regulated (14 U.S.C. 2). Coast Guard vessels and personnel assisted by the Coast Guard Auxiliary and State and local personnel provide a balanced boating program.

4. Marine environmental protection.—Under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended, the National Environmental Policy Act, and other laws, international agreements, and conventions, the Coast Guard is charged with the prevention of damage to the marine environment from intentional and unintentional acts and the enhancement of environmental quality. Also, under title 14 of the United States Code, the Dangerous Cargo Act, the Tank Vessel Act, Executive Order 10173, as amended, and various statutes, the Coast Guard must maintain an acceptable level of safety and security in U.S. ports to insure their availability for maximum economic utilization, their availability in time of national emergency, and their environmental quality.

5. Ocean operations.—The Coast Guard participates in the National Marine Sciences program (14 U.S.C. 94), which is coordinated by the Interagency Committee on Marine Science and Engineering. Its facilities cooperate with the National Weather Service in taking weather observations from vessels manning seven ocean stations (14 U.S.C. 90). Icebreaking is performed by specially constructed icebreakers engaged in polar operations with other agencies (14 U.S.C. 2). Also included in this program is conduct of the International Ice Patrol (46 U.S.C. 738).

During peacetime, an effective state of military preparedness is maintained through unit, multiship and joint naval training exercises and through other Coast Guard operations (14 U.S.C. 3). Included in this category are Coast Guard military operations in Vietnam.

7. General support.—Certain facilities of the Coast Guard provide overall direction and support of all Coast Guard programs. Included are training stations, supply facilities, and nonoperational services at headquarters and district offices.

Reimbursable program.—8. Miscellaneous services for other accounts.—The Coast Guard performs various functions for other agencies and accounts for which reimbursement is received.

This appropriation provides for the acquisition, construction, and improvement of vessels, aircraft, shore facilities, and aids to navigation.

Direct program.—1. Vessels.—The program under this activity includes the replacement of one Wind class icebreaker. Improvement of already existing facilities includes renovation and improvement of several buoy tenders and two Wind class polar icebreakers; and major repairs to the CGC Glacier.

2. Aircraft.—This activity provides for the procurement of two C-130 long-range aircraft for search and rescue, law enforcement and surveillance and outer wing rework for nine C-130 B's.

3. Shore units and navigational aids.—This activity will include programs to: (a) replace or renovate facilities in 15 various locations, (b) provide housing and barracks facilities for Coast Guard personnel and their dependents where living accommodations are inadequate; and (c) to facilitate the survey and design of future construction projects. The program for lighthouse automation and modernization (LAMP) will be continued in 1973. This activity provides for the establishment of and changes to aids to navigation projects marking river and harbor improvements effected by the U.S. Corps of Engineers and other urgent needs. Other programs under the aids to navigation activity provide for the upgrading and modernization of loran-C stations, including the construction of station at Presque Isle, Maine. The establishment of the Marine Traffic Control System for the Houston ship channel will represent a significant step toward better maritime traffic management, vessel collision avoidance, and more effective communications. In the area of pollution abatement, there are projects for procurement of hardware for the National Pollution Response Center Information System, and the construction of sewage treatment and disposal systems on board several Coast Guard vessels and shore stations.

5. Training and recruiting facilities.—Included in 1973 are the construction of a barracks at Yorktown, Va., and expansion of the electrical capacity at Cape May, N.J.

The Coast Guard Reserve training program's objective is to provide qualified individuals and trained units to be available for active duty in time of war or national emergency. The Reserve program consists of four activities which are coordinated to meet its objectives. Costs are distributed to these activities as follows:

1. Initial training.—Direct costs associated with officer trainees performing 1 year's initial training duty and enlisted trainees performing 5 months' or 5 to 11 months' initial training duty are programed under this activity. The officer trainees receive 4 months of officer candidate school and 8 months' duty in an operating unit. The 5-month element includes enlisted trainees who do not attend class A school but receive 3 months' postrecruit training at various operating units. The 5-to-11-month element includes trainees who will attend class A school and whose period of initial training duty is governed by the length of the class A school plus recruit training.

2. Continuing training.—Direct costs of officer and enlisted trainees for drill and annual active duty for training are programed under this activity.

3. Operation and maintenance of training facilities.—All costs for the operation and maintenance of Reserve training facilities are programed under this activity.

Included are the costs of two training vessels, the prorated share of the cost of joint usage of Coast Guard and other Armed Forces facilities, the cost of providing station-keeper support to the organized Reserve training units, and the procurement of training aids and facilities (under $50 thousand).

4. Administration.—This activity encompasses all administrative costs of the Reserve training program.

Note.—Excludes $13,000 thousand in 1971 for activities transferred to Research, Development and Facilities, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

This appropriation provides for the management and conduct of research, development, test, and evaluation, including the necessary support requirements, facilities, services, and personnel.

1. Search and rescue.—The 1973 program continues efforts designed to increase effectiveness of methods to detect, locate, and rescue persons in distress. Major projects include continued development and testing of a protototype distress alerting and location system, final flight testing of a prototype improved search radar, preliminary design and model testing of a high performance surface craft and initiation of the development of a prototype SAR helicopter sensor system.

The SAR program area also covers activities which support the Coast Guard's responsibility for maritime commerce in ice-covered waters including those directed toward extending the winter shipping season on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway. The 1973 efforts follow prior years' work for tests and evaluation of alternative ice-cutting and ice-handling techniques. This 1973 work will also include ice research to identify ice effects on ship design and transit, and continued work to develop navigation aids for ice-covered waters.

2. Aids to navigation.—The 1973 activities are a continuation of a multiyear program designed to reduce the operation and maintenance costs and to increase the effectiveness of our buoyage system; and to provide a precision navigation system for use in harbors and confined waterways.

Development of a lightweight buoyage system will continue in 1973. Emphasis will be on instrumented tests of a number of exposed water buoys of various shapes and materials, tests of various buoy mooring concepts, and development of a fast water buoy for use in the rivers. Work will be continued and expanded to develop new pollution free power supplies and improved lighting components for the total aids to navigation system.

3. Marine safety.—Activities in this program area support both recreational and commercial vessels.

The 1973 R. & D. efforts in support of recreational boating will concentrate in the following areas: Development of design guidelines and test procedures to support the safety standards such as those relating to powering, fuel systems, and electrical and ventilation systems; testing of selected recreational boats and equipment.

The major work in support of commercial vessel safety during 1973 will include fire safety tests of cargo and pump room extinguishment systems, hazardous materials research on shipboard ventilation systems, chlorine vapor dispersion models, and research and development efforts aimed at providing knowledge in support of regulation and standards affecting ship design and operations.

4. Maritime environmental protection.—A major endeavor in 1973 will be aimed at the elimination of pollution casual incidents. This R. & D. effort will provide the basic knowledge and prototype components for marine traffic systems for congested ports and waterways.

In 1973 improvements in the performance of the lightweight oil containment system will be carried out as well as initiation of the design and development of a heavy duty containment system. Two prototype high seas oil recovery systems will be completed in 1973, and a prototype oil-water separator system will be designed, constructed, and tested. Development, modification, and testing of a prototype airborne oil surveillance and detection system will continue. Work will also continue on development and testing of alternative chemical and biological techniques for oil spill cleanup and amelioration.

Installation of a prototype marine traffic system will be completed in mid-1973 with the balance of the year devoted to initial test and evaluation. Work will also be started on large screen displays, improved vessel detection identification techniques, and the use of shore to vessel data links.

The second phase of the development of a precision navigation system will be initiated in 1973. This includes tests of subsystem components to resolve technical uncertainties, such as propagation vagaries, special antenna tests, and system control. Environmental pollution research will include continued work to develop a better understanding of the fate, behavior, and dispersion of pollutants (particularly oil) in the marine environment. These efforts will include trends of oil pollution on selected beaches and in major ports, ocean sampling for oil pollution levels and trends, and identifying parameters which may be measured as a part of a monitoring system.

Sewage and air pollution abatement efforts in 1973 will include at sea testing of newly developed 50-man and 10- to 20-man sewage treatment plants, further research and development of a 1- to 10-man sewage device, and development of shipboard air pollution and monitoring devices. Hazardous materials research and development in support of our port security functions will continue at an accelerated rate.

5. Ocean operations.—This program includes ongoing research in support of International Ice Patrol, as well as efforts to develop improved techniques and equipment for determining ice conditions and efforts as they relate to ship design and transit of ice-covered waters.

6. Program support.—Program support includes administrative and general support personnel at headquarters and all personnel at laboratory facilities.

This appropriation provides financial assistance for State boating safety programs as authorized by the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971 (Public Law 92-75).

The act provides for a coordinated national boating safety program to improve boating safety and to foster greater development, use, and enjoyment of all the waters of the United States by encouraging and assisting participation by the several States, the boating industry, and the boating public in development of more comprehensive boating safety programs; by authorizing the establishment of national construction and performance standards for boats and associated equipment; and by creating more flexible regulatory authority concerning the use of boats and equipment.

The act authorizes appropriations through 1976, to remain available until expended. Further the act prescribes the manner in which funds are to be allocated among the eligible States and also permits allocation of not more than 5 per centum of funds appropriated in any fiscal year for national boating safety activities of one or more national nonprofit public service organizations.

This fund was established under section 11(k) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended by Public Law 91-224, to insure immediate cleanup of oil or other hazardous polluting substances spilled into the navigable waters of the United States, adjoining shorelines, or waters of the contiguous zone. The fund will be used when a spill occurs and the responsible vessel owner or facility operator (whether in the public or private sector) is not in a position to accomplish immediate cleanup with his own resources. Expenditures from the fund will later be reimbursed by the responsible owner or operator (whether in the public or private sector). In addition, all fines and civil penalties assessed under sections 11 and 12 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended, will be deposited into the fund.

The Coast Guard Supply Fund, in accordance with 14 U.S.C. 650, finances the procurement of uniform clothing; commissary provisions; general stores and technical material; and fuel for vessels over 200 feet in length. The fund is financed by reimbursements from sale of goods.

Activity of approximately $34 million in this fund in 1973 is divided 7% for uniform clothing, 52% for commissary provisions, 28% for general stores and technical materials, and 13% for fuel.

Higher sales in 1972 and 1973 are expected as the result of increases in the number of recruits, establishment of the commissary at Training Center, Petaluma, Calif., and greater use of the supply fund to procure long leadtime and expensive items for "Acquisition, construction, and improvements" and special projects.

The Coast Guard Cadet Fund is utilized by the Superintendent of the Coast Guard Academy to receive, plan, control, and expend personal funds of Coast Guard cadets. By use of the fund each cadet is assured funds to meet personal expenses while at the Academy and an adequate balance in his account at graduation for officer outfits, civilian clothing, and graduation leave expenses. The fund also receives and expends funds of the Coast Guard Academy Athletic Association.

FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION

Public Law 92-174 amended the Airport and Airway Development Act of 1970 to delete authority contained in the act to finance operations and maintenance expenses for the airways system from the Airport and airway trust fund. The 1973 appropriation request provides for funding these expenses, as well as expenses funded in 1972 from the Safety regulation appropriation under the new account "Operations."

The following table briefly depicts the source of funding for all Federal Aviation Administration programs for which more detail is furnished in the ensuing budget schedules.

1. Operations.—(a) Operation of traffic control system.— This activity covers the operation on a 24-hour basis of a national system of air traffic management in the United States and its possessions. With the aid of radar, communications, and other facilities, traffic management personnel at 27 centers monitor and control en route flights of all aircraft conducted under instrument conditions to assure safety and to expedite the flow of traffic. Control towers are operated at 346 major civil airports to guide traffic movements on and in the vicinity of the airports. Some 342 domestic and international flight service stations transmit weather and other information to pilots and relay traffic control data between ground controllers and pilots. Major increases in 1973 will provide for increased employment in the controller work force to handle workload growth and to operate newly commissioned air traffic control facilities.

OPERATIONS—Continued

(b) Installation and materiel services.—This activity covers the direction and engineering services related to the establishment and improvement of facilities and equipment in the traffic control system; procurement, contracting and materiel management programs; supply support and leased communications services for the traffic control system; and supply support for agency aircraft except for aircraft related to research and development programs. Major increases in 1973 are to provide supply support and leased communications services for air traffic control and air navigation facilities.

(c) Maintenance of traffic control system.—This activity covers the maintenance of a national network of air navigation and traffic control aids in the United States and its possessions. Major increases in 1973 are for the maintenance of new air traffic control and navigation aids planned for commissioning.

(d) Administration of flight standards program.—This activity provides for: (a) monitoring the accuracy of signals emitted from the air navigation aids; and (b) the establishment and enforcement of the civil air regulations which are designed to assure the high standards of safety in aviation. Inspections are made and certificates issued for aircraft, airmen, aircraft operators, and air agencies which meet safety or competency requirements. This program also provides for the management, operation and maintenance of agency aircraft used in facility flight inspection, development of flight procedures, and inspector flight training.

(e) Administration of medical programs.—This activity covers the development of regulations governing the physical and mental fitness of airmen and other persons whose health affects safety in flight; the development and supervision of a health and medical program for agency personnel; the administration of an aviation medical research program, the project costs of which are financed under Engineering and development; and the operation of the Civil Aeromedical Institute building.

(f) Development direction.—This activity covers the planning, direction, and evaluation of the engineering and development program, the direct project costs of which are financed under the Engineering and development appropriation; and the related administrative support for the operation of the National Aviation Facilities Experimental Center at Atlantic City, N.J.

(g) Administration of airports program.—This activity provides for the administration of an airport planning grant program and a development assistance program for the improvement of public airports authorized by the Airport and Airway Development Act of 1970.

2. Facilities and equipment.—This activity provides for training simulators to provide flight training to agency personnel and to maintain the proficiency of operations inspectors.

3. Engineering and development.—Under this activity there are the following subactivities:

(a) Aircraft safety.—This activity covers the development of standards, rules, regulations, and certification for an accident prevention program designed to promote flight safety of civil aircraft by assuring the design, flight performance characteristics, and airworthiness of aircraft.

Development of such antihijacking devices as weapon and explosive detection systems and methods of reducing risk to life resulting from hijackings are contained in this activity.

Environmental programs are also included in this category. Principal efforts are the development of data to support rulemaking decisions, and development of certification standards and criteria to economically minimize the undesired environmental effects on the public. This effort includes a program to investigate the feasibility of achieving significant engine noise reduction through improved design features.

(b) Aviation medicine.—This activity provides for conducting an aeromedical engineering and development program to identify and eliminate those physical, physiological, and psychological factors which may jeopardize flight safety.

All of the effort involves testing, analyses, test results, and documentation. More specifically, activities include titanium metallurgy, flutter phenomena studies, improved instrumentation and control development, new concepts of generating electrical power, and various noise reduction techniques studies.

All funds are planned as a 1972 effort and no personnel costs are involved.

This appropriation finances management, operations, maintenance, and capital outlay costs for equipment and facility projects at the federally owned Washington National and Dulles International Airports which serve the National Capital Area.

The operation of the airports is conducted on a business basis with revenues derived from landing fees, concession activity, and lease arrangements deposited as receipts in the general fund of the Treasury. The direct operating costs and capital outlay are financed by direct appropriation.

The administration is submitting a proposal for the sale of the National Capital airports. One of the primary goals of the sale is the encouragement of more efficient utilization of the airports within the National Capital area.

Section 709 of the Military Construction Authorization Act, 1970, Public Law 91-142, as amended, authorized the President to establish and conduct an international aeronautical exposition. The President, by Executive Order 11538, dated June 29, 1970, assigned responsibility for the development and operation of the exposition to the Secretary of Transportation.

The enabling legislation provides that revenues from the exposition may be used to pay the expenses of the exposition, with any net revenues after payment of such expenses to be deposited in the U.S. Treasury. The exposition is planned to be located at Dulles International Airport and to be run for a period of 9 days, beginning May 27 and closing June 4, 1972.

Two million dollars of the 1972 appropriation shall be available only upon the enactment into law of authorizing legislation by the Congress.

The fund currently provides premium aviation war risk hull insurance, effective immediately, to U.S. international air carriers. Premium binders are also issued to cover aircraft, persons, and property and will become war risk insurance in wartime and in situations short of war; policies covering aircraft, persons, and property which become active insurance upon issuance are available to certain civil air carriers in connection with Government contract operations. Administrative costs are out of fee receipts (49 U.S.C. 1531, as amended; 75 Stat. 210).

Unfunded contingent liability as of October 31, 1971, is estimated at $60.5 billion. This amount includes hull insurance and personal and property liability on approximately 685 aircraft insured under this program.

The Airport and Airway Development Act of 1970 (Public Law 91-258, 84 Stat. 219), provides for the transfer of revenue from the general fund to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund. This revenue is derived from the aviation fuel tax and certain other taxes paid by airport and airway users. The Secretary of the Treasury estimates the amounts to be so transferred. In turn, annual appropriations are authorized from this fund to meet expenditures for Federal-aid airports and airways.

Under the Airport and Airway Development Act of 1970 (Public Law 91-258; 84 Stat. 219), grants are made to public agencies for the development and improvement, as well as planning, of public airports. The act provides funds for airport grants in the total amount of $295 million annually. Of this amount, not to exceed $15 million is available for planning grants and $280 million in outlays for airport development and improvements. Projects supported by airport development and improvement grants include construction of runways and taxiways, purchase of land, provision of runway and taxiway light-systems, and construction of buildings to house safety equipment. Projects to be supported by airport planning grants include the development of construction plans for regional systems of airports and plans for individual airports.

The 1973 program provides $15 million in obligating authority for new planning grants, $280 million for airport development grants, and liquidating cash totaling $100 million to pay for airport development and improvement projects including land acquisition.

Under this appropriation, the Federal airway system is improved by the installation of new equipment and the construction and modernization of facilities to keep pace with aeronautical activity. The appropriation also finances major capital investments required by other agency programs such as aircraft for facility flight inspection and training, and experimental facilities for the engineering and development program. The 1973 appropriation will carry forward the program to increase the capacity of the airway system and make its operations more efficient and safer. It provides for continuation of major efforts already underway to provide an automation capability in the air traffic control system. Operating costs of facilities procured under this appropriation are financed under the Operations appropriation.

1. Air route traffic control centers.—(a) Long-range radar provides FAA air traffic controllers with information on aircraft positions at distances up to 185 miles. (b) Computers and other automated devices aid controllers in handling en route air traffic. (c) Other center facilities provide communications and related services.

2. Airport traffic control towers.—(a) Terminal area radar aids traffic control in the vicinity of airports by displaying aircraft positions at distances up to 60 miles. (b) Computers and other automated devices aid controllers in handling terminal air traffic. (c) Other tower facilities cover the establishment, improvement, and relocation of airport traffic control tower facilities.

3. Flight service stations.—(a) Domestic flight service stations and associated facilities provide flight assistance service to pilots. (b) International flight service stations provide long-distance communications for transoceanic flights.

4. Air navigation facilities.—(a) Very high frequency omnidirectional radio ranges equipped with tactical air navigation capabilities (VORTAC) are standard short-range navigation aids used to define airways and air routes and to provide distance and direction information to pilots. (b) Low- and medium-frequency facilities include radio beacons and ranges which provide pilots with direction and weather information. (c) Instrument landing systems provide pilots with direction, distance, and glide slope information necessary for making safe approaches to runways under poor visibility conditions. (d) Visual aids consist primarily of lighting aids which also assist the pilot in making final approaches to airport runways, particularly in areas where terrain or other environmental factors cause potential hazards to safe landings.

5. Housing, utilities, and miscellaneous facilities.—This section includes general support facilities and items not covered elsewhere.

6. Aircraft and related equipment.—(a) Facility flight inspection aircraft and avionics equipment to inspect the accuracy and other characteristics of navigation and traffic control aids from the air; (b) aircraft and equipment used to provide logistics support for remote facilities, for use by agency officials.

7. Development, test, and evaluation facilities.—This activity provides for the construction and improvement of plant and facilities primarily at the National Aviation Facilities Experimental Center in Atlantic City, N.J. It also covers the procurement of capital items of equipment for use in the engineering and development program.

The FAA conducts engineering and development programs to improve the national air traffic control system and to increase its capacity to meet air traffic demands of the 1975-85 time period. The effort to increase capacity is based on exploiting current technology and applying system engineering techniques to the development and integration of new equipment into the total system. The agency also administers aviation medical research aimed at increasing the personal effectiveness of traffic controllers.

These programs are conducted, under the direction of the agency's technical personnel, through contracts with private firms, universities, individuals, and other Government agencies.

1. Air traffic control.—This provides for system improvements and the major upgrading of those systems required to perform modern traffic control functions. This traffic control program also provides for increasing the capacity of major airports to safely and efficiently handle larger, faster aircraft through the development of new computerized airport traffic control systems which will enable more efficient metering and spacing of terminal traffic under all weather conditions. The objective of these development programs is to double airport/airway capacity by 1980.

2. Navigation.—This provides for the development of ground-based systems which insure the precision navigation of aircraft, including new navigation equipment and sophisticated landing systems capable of handling increased air traffic. These activities are an integral part of the effort to double system capacity by 1980.

3. Aviation weather.—This provides for a program, coordinated with the Departments of Defense and Commerce, to modernize the acquisition, processing, dissemination, and display of weather information tailored to the needs of aviation users.

4. Aviation medicine.—This provides for conducting aeromedical research directed toward identifying and eliminating those physiological and psychological factors inimical to personnel engaged in operating the traffic control system.

This account provides for the salaries and expenses of the Federal Highway Administration required to conduct and administer Federal-aid and several direct highway programs.

Expenses for planning, operation, and administration of the Federal-aid highway programs and highway research are financed by reimbursements from Federal-aid highway (trust fund) authorizations. Motor carrier safety programs and one-third of the amount for highway-related safety research and development programs are financed by this Federal fund appropriation. Beginning in 1972, the functions formerly financed by the appropriation for Motor carrier safety and by the Limitation on general expenses of the Federal-aid highway (trust fund) account are now carried out under this account.

Administrative services for other programs of the Federal Highway Administration, including highway safety, and for road construction programs of other Federal agencies are initially financed from this activity and reimbursements are collected from those programs. This account does not cover administrative expenses of Highway beautification, Darien Gap highway, and Territorial highways, which are provided by separate appropriations.

1. Program direction and coordination.—(a) Provides overall direction and coordination of the highway transportation mission; (b) provides legal services for all programs; (c) develops and administers programs for a continuing audit of claims against Federal funds and a thorough investigation of alleged irregularities; (d) plans and directs public affairs programs; and (e) develops, recommends policies and standards, and assures compliance with the civil rights and equal opportunity procedures within the Federal Highway Administration and by recipients of grants-in-aid administered by the Federal Highway Administration. Increases are requested to provide additional personnel to meet the expanding workload in legal services, civil rights, program review, and to establish liaison offices in the four cities designated as standard regions where the Administration does not have a regional office.

2. General program support.—(a) Formulates policy, multiyear and long-range plans and goals for highway programs and develops data and analyses for current and long-range programming; (b) conducts direct and contract research and development relating to traffic operations, new construction techniques, highway safety, and the social and environmental aspects of highways; and (c) provides the full range of necessary administrative support services for all elements of the Federal Highway Administration. Increases are requested to meet an expanding administrative support workload, to cover the increased cost of common office services provided for all units, to strengthen highway planning capability in the regional offices and to intensify the research and development efforts.

3. Highway programs.—(a) Provides engineering guidance to Federal and State agencies and to certain foreign governments, and conducts a program to encourage use of modern traffic engineering procedures to increase the traffic-carrying capacity of existing highways and urban streets; (b) assists States, other Federal agencies, and certain foreign countries in right-of-way acquisition and develops procedures for highway location selection and consideration of environmental impacts; and (c) provides program and engineering supervision of the interstate, primary, secondary, and urban highway programs through nine regional and 52 division offices. Increases are requested to establish the bridge replacement program, to direct more attention to the environmental impacts of highway construction, and to fill isolated gaps in field staffing.

4. Motor carrier and highway safety.—(a) Develops and executes policy and programs for accomplishment of the motor carrier safety mission; and (b) administers a program of assistance to States and communities in the establishment of safety programs based on the highway-oriented safety standards. Increases are requested to provide additional personnel for motor carrier safety field investigation and supervision, to meet expanded workload in hazardous materials activities, and to conduct research and other functions necessary to support highway-oriented safety standards.

5. Training programs.—Provides on-the-job training for highway engineers and program managers, and finances construction skill training programs for disadvantaged workers hired by contractors on federally aided highway projects.

This appropriation provides funds for projects initiated pursuant to the provisions of the Highway Beautification Act of 1965, together with the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1968 and 1970.

The Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1970 provides for completely revised program emphasis to concentrate on the outdoor advertising portion of the program. The primary objective of the new program is to remove all non-conforming outdoor signs along the Nation's interstate and Federal-aid primary highways by 1976. It is anticipated that the total Federal cost of this effort will aggregate approximately $300 million.

In its initial stages, about the first 2 years, feasibility projects will be undertaken with particular focus on sign removal in terms of an entire company rather than on the basis of sign-by-sign location as in the past. Preliminary evaluation indicates that such an approach offers the greatest potential for total program success at the least cost.

The $61.3 million program planned for 1973 will permit the maintenance of the 6-year program schedule for the removal of roadside billboards which do not conform with the law. All of the $23.3 million increase in 1973 will be used for billboard removal, while the junkyard control and landscaping programs will be reduced from the 1972 level.

Additional contract authority of $60 million for 1974 will be requested in the proposed Federal-aid Highway Act of 1972. This authority will be available 1 year in advance.

The planned distribution of new program obligations in 1973 as compared to 1972 is as follows (in thousands of dollars):

1. Landscaping and Scenic enhancement	13,500	3,000

¹ Selected resources as of June 30 are as follows: Unpaid undelivered orders, 1971, $0; 1972, $7,881 thousand; 1973, $9,181 thousand.

The Highway Safety Act of 1970 provided contract authority of $30 million for each of the years 1972 and 1973 for grants to States and communities for implementing certain highway-related safety standards. The contract authority is available 1 year in advance of the year for which authorized. Two-thirds of the funds are provided from the Highway trust fund and one-third is provided from the general fund of the Treasury. The budget authorities and outlays shown in this schedule are only the General fund financed portions.

The combination of general and trust funds will provide a total program of $13.3 million in 1973 for grants to assist States and localities in implementing these highway safety standards, which deal with traffic control devices, highway construction and maintenance, accident location surveillance, and highway-related aspects of pedestrian safety. Since related highway safety standards are also administered by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, this amount is a tentative distribution. The final distribution will be determined after the annual program plans of the States for 1973 are submitted and approved by the two agencies.

Additional contract authority of $30 million for 1974 will be requested in the proposed Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1972 for use in future years.

¹ Selected resources as of June 30 are as follows: Unpaid undelivered orders, 1971, $0; 1972, $5,000 thousand; 1973, $8,000 thousand.

Section 322 of title 23, United States Code, as added by the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1970, authorizes the Secretary to carry out a demonstration project for the elimination of all public ground-level rail-highway crossings along the route of highspeed ground transportation demonstration projects between Washington, D.C., and Boston, Mass., and in the vicinity of Greenwood, S.C. The authorization provides for the appropriation of not to exceed $22 million from general funds and $9 million from the Highway trust fund.

The program is financed jointly by the Highway trust fund and the general fund of the Treasury. If the grade crossing involved is located on any Federal-aid highway system, the Federal share of the project cost is 90%, financed from the Highway trust fund, and the railroad's share is 10%. If the grade crossing involved is located on a highway not part of any Federal-aid system, then the Federal share of the project cost is 80%, financed from general fund of the Treasury, the railroad's share is 10%, and the State in which the highway is located pays the remaining 10% share.

The budget authorities and outlays shown in these schedules are the general fund-financed portions only. The combination of general and trust funds will provide for a 1973 program of $10 million, the same amount as provided in 1972.

Grants are authorized by 23 U.S.C. 215(a) to assist the territorial governments of the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa in the improvement of their highway systems. Assistance is provided for an arterial highway system, and necessary interisland connectors, as designated by each territorial Governor and approved by the Secretary of Transportation.

The Secretary is also authorized to provide technical assistance to each territorial government to establish an effective, long-range highway development program and to organize an appropriate agency to administer the highway programs, including planning, design, construction, maintenance, right-of-way acquisition, and relocation assistance.

Contract authority for the years 1971, 1972, and 1973, in amounts of $2 million per year for the Virgin Islands, $2 million per year for Guam, and $500 thousand per year for American Samoa was provided by the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1970. Contract authority is available for use in the same year for which authorized.

A total 1973 program of $4 million is planned for technical assistance and highway improvements.

The United States, in cooperation with the Republic of Panama and the Government of Colombia, will participate in the construction of approximately 250 miles of highway through the Darien Gap.

It is estimated that the total cost of the highway will be $150 million, with the United States participating up to $100 million and the remaining $50 million being supplied by Colombia and Panama. Completion of the highway will take 8 years; however, it is contemplated that a passable all-weather gravel surface will be in use by 1977.

This highway will connect the Inter-American Highway of Central America with the Pan-American Highway System of South America, creating a single, cohesive network stretching from Alaska to every South American country.

Highways are constructed and improved with these funds through public lands in those States having large areas of such lands. The Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1970 provided that contract authority for future use be financed from the Highway trust fund.

A total of $16 million of general fund authorizations from 1971 remain available for use in 1973. A $12 million program is planned for 1973, providing a $2 million increase over 1972. The $4 million unobligated balance of the 1971 authorization will lapse at the end of 1973. Beginning in 1974, this program will operate entirely with trust fund authority.

Grants are made to States for construction and improvements of Federal-aid highways. Contract authorizations are provided in the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 and subsequent highway legislation to cover 90% of the costs of completing the 42,500-mile National System of Interstate and Defense Highways, and to provide Federal matching funds for the primary, secondary, and urban programs under the statutory formulas. The Federal share of project costs is increased in those States with large areas of public domain. Payments to the States for work done are made out of the Highway trust fund, into which are deposited certain percentages of tax receipts on motor fuel, tires and tubes, tread rubber, trucks, buses, trailers, truck use, truck parts and accessories, and on lubricating oil used in highway vehicles.

The Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1970 provided contract authorizations of $4 billion for each of the years 1974, 1975, and 1976 for the continued construction of the Interstate Highway System. The act provided for each of the years 1972 and 1973, $1.1 billion to continue the Federal-aid primary, secondary, and urban programs; $100 million for the new Federal-aid urban system; $100 million to continue traffic operations projects in urban areas (TOPICS); $125 million for the Federal-aid primary and secondary systems in rural areas; and $50 million for a new program of economic growth center development highways. Additional interstate contract authorizations of $55 million in each of the years 1972 and 1973 were provided to insure that each State receives at least one-half of 1% of apportioned interstate funds. These contract authorizations are available for obligation in the fiscal year preceding the year for which authorized.

The act further provided contract authorizations of $100 million in 1972 and $150 million in 1973 to initiate a special bridge replacement program. These contract authorizations are available in the year authorized.

A Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1972 will be proposed to provide contract authorities for 1974 (some of which are available 1 year in advance) for carrying on programs other than the Interstate System which already has 1974 authority.

The 1972 cost estimate to complete the Interstate System is $68.3 billion, which is $5.8 billion more than previously estimated. Congress approved contract authorizations through 1976 providing an additional $9.775 billion of the previous increase in the 1970 act. Congress also provided an extension of the termination date of the Highway trust fund and revenues to September 30, 1977.

As of October 1, 1971, 32,392 miles of the 42,500-mile Interstate System were open to traffic. Most of the mileage, exclusive of toll roads, was built or improved under the Federal-aid interstate program, under the 90% Federal, 10% State matching program launched in 1956. Toll roads, bridges, and tunnels incorporated in the system totaled 2,305 miles. In addition to the sections open to traffic, 4,115 miles were under construction with interstate funds, and engineering or right-of-way acquisition was in progress on another 4,386 miles. Thus, some form of work was underway or completed on 40,893 miles of the 42,500-mile system—about 96% of the total system mileage.

Construction projects involving 250,471 miles in the regular Federal-aid program (primary, secondary, and urban) have been completed since July 1, 1956, at a total cost of $23.74 billion, and contracts involving an additional 14,326 miles at a cost of $4.58 billion were authorized or underway on July 1, 1971. In addition, $1.88 billion of engineering and right-of-way acquisition work had been completed, and $952 million was underway.

Actual and estimated progress of Federal-aid programs is summarized in the following table:

Upon construction of the highway project, the advance for right-of-way acquisition and relocation expenses is repaid to the revolving fund.

Contract authority totaling $300 million was authorized from the Highway trust fund. In 1973, additional obligations of $50 million will be made to the States from unused contract authority balances.

NATIONAL HIGHWAY TRAFFIC SAFETY ADMINISTRATION

The Highway Safety Act of 1970 established the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) within the Department of Transportation. The act also contained funding authorizations for carrying out highway safety programs on a matching basis with the States and for conducting an associated highway research and development program. Two-thirds of the authorizations contained in the act are financed from the Highway trust fund, with the remainder to be financed from Federal funds. Other agency programs authorized under the Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966, as amended, continue to be financed entirely from Federal funds.
