PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The seven research institutes of the National Institutes of Health are the National Cancer Institute, the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Heart Institute, the National Institute of Dental Research, the National Institute of Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases, the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, and the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness.

Funds for the total National Institutes of Health are provided by this appropriation and by separate appropriations for each of the above-named institutes. Funds from the seven institute appropriations are pooled to finance all research services provided centrally, including the clinical center. It is estimated that all 516 research beds will be activated by June 30, 1957. This appropriation, through the division of research grants, finances research and training activities relating to basic problems in public health, medical, biological, and chemical fields not related to a particular institute. It also finances the division of biologics standards which is responsible for the regulation of biologic products and the conduct of related research.

1. Grants—(a) Grants for research projects.—Funds for 1957 will support approximately 615 grants to medical and other institutions for research projects of which approximately 30 grants will be in the field of nursing. The 1958 increase will support 63 additional grants, in addition the increase in this and the other appropriations for research grants will allow an increase in the indirect cost from 15 percent to 25 percent.

(b) Research fellowships.—Fellowships are awarded to individuals to increase the number of scientists qualified to carry on independent research. Approximately 586 fellowships will be supported in 1957, and 636 in 1958.

(c) Training grants.—Funds for 1957 will support grants to from 3 to 5 medical schools for the improvement of instruction in the curriculum in critical gap areas not otherwise provided for. Grants to three additional medical schools will be made in 1958.

2. Direct operations—(a) Research.—The research services provided centrally for all institutes' research programs are financed through this account by reimbursements from each individual institute's appropriation. The additional costs shown for 1958 over 1957 are financed by the institutes' expanding research programs.

(b) Biologics standards.—This includes administration of the Biologics Control Act, establishment of standards for preparation of biologics, testing of vaccines and their preparation, and research related to development, manufacture, testing and use of vaccines and analogous products.

(c) Review and approval of grants.—This subactivity covers complete administration of grants under this appropriation and those similar functions for the institutes which are performed best on a centralized basis.

The hospital provides care and treatment for the mentally ill who are either beneficiaries of the Federal Government or residents of the District of Columbia which reimburses the hospital for its residents.

1. Operation and maintenance of hospital.—This activity covers the care and treatment of the mentally ill, maintenance of hospital buildings, procurement of supplies and materials, and administrative services. A supplemental will be proposed for later transmission and appears at the end of this chapter.

3. Operation of cafeteria.—Meals are sold to employees and others at not less than cost, the proceeds being deposited to the credit of the appropriation.

4. Training program.—The training program provides a source for medical and nursing staff recruitment by training interns, residents in psychiatry, student nurses, and other groups concerned with care and treatment of psychiatric patients. The number of trainees are as follows:

	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Interns and other postgraduates	50	50	50

5. Research program.—The hospital in past years has conducted some research. It proposes in 1958, however, to establish a separate research activity to supplant the relatively uncoordinated research work of the past and to broaden the program to take advantage of the many advances in psychiatric and scientific knowledge.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

It is proposed to construct a 250-bed treatment and cafeteria building to replace an antiquated treatment building constructed in 1871 and now structurally and physically inadequate to present-day requirements. The proposed building will also provide food service facilities for 2 adjacent treatment buildings now lacking adequate facilities for the 500 patients housed therein. This appropriation is for the preparation of plans and specifications.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This building, housing 375 patients, will be used in lieu of the existing facility which houses prisoners and other patients requiring maximum security care. The present structure (Howard Hall) was erected in 1887 and in addition to being overcrowded is no longer suitable for the purpose. The contract for this new facility has been let, the construction being supervised by General Services Administration with funds (1) appropriated for the purpose in 1957, and (2) provided in a proposed supplemental for the same year, which appears at the end of this chapter.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The old-age and survivors insurance program provides protection to over 90 percent of the total labor force (including the self-employed and members of the Armed Forces) and their families against the loss of earnings because of old age and death. In addition, the program preserves the benefit rights of workers suffering from disabilities of a long continued, indefinite duration prior to age 50, and provides disability insurance benefits to qualified disabled workers on attaining age 50. Tax contributions from employers, employees, the self-employed, and members of the Armed Forces are deposited in the Federal old-age and survivors insurance and Federal disability insurance trust funds, out of which benefit payments and administrative costs are paid.

The 1956 amendments of the Social Security Act and the Servicemen's and Veterans' Survivor Benefits Act added disability insurance benefits, reduced the retirement age for women, and extended coverage to the Armed Forces.

These program changes will require a supplemental limitation in 1957, which appears at the end of this chapter. This amount will be the subject of a separate request. The volume of work appearing under the activities below includes this additional work; however, the figures shown for 1957 in the program and financing schedule do not provide for financing this additional work.

1. Maintenance of accounts of earnings.—Eligibility for insurance benefits and the amount of benefit payments are based on earnings of employed and self-employed individuals and members of the Armed Forces which are recorded by the Bureau in individual accounts. The estimated volume of work for 1957 and 1958 reflects a continued increase in the level of employment and the initial and subsequent reporting of members of the Armed Forces and other groups, such as self-employed professional persons and additional farmers, which were extended coverage by the 1956 legislation.

Earnings items received	230,368,278	244,338,400	265,101,200

2. Development, determination, and certification for payment of claims for retirement and survivors insurance benefits.—Prospective beneficiaries file claims in district offices located in more than 500 cities throughout the country. The volume of claims work will rise 37.2 percent in 1957 as a result of reduction in the retirement age for women, which will be largely nonrecurring, coupled with the long-term upward trend in the number of insured persons reaching entitlement age.

New claims received	2,043,070	2,802,100	2,302,200

3. Recertification monthly of awarded claims for retirement and survivors insurance benefits.—The beneficiary rolls require constant revision so that benefit checks may be mailed promptly each month to beneficiaries whose entitlement continues, and so that checks may be discontinued when entitlement ceases. The number of beneficiaries added to the rolls in 1957 will double the accretions in 1956. The 1958 estimate reflects the continued long-term growth in the program.

Beneficiaries on roll at end of year	8,673,545	10,270,000	11,193,000
Benefit payments (millions)	$5,361	$6,290	$7,175

4. Preservation of insurance rights of disabled persons and disability insurance benefits.—Earnings records of individuals under 50 years of age who have a long-continued indefinite disability are frozen for the period of disability. This period is disregarded in determining an insured status and in computing benefit payments. The 1956 amendments provide for payment of monthly insurance benefits to qualified disabled workers between the ages of 50 and 64. The determination of disability is made in the majority of cases by State agencies subject to review by the Bureau in order to assure uniform administration under separate contractual agreements. The first month for which disability insurance benefits are payable is July 1957. Hence, beginning with 1958, the Bureau will have the additional function of recertifying monthly entitlement to disability insurance benefits.

Disability determinations processed	219,424	334,111	486,614
Disability beneficiaries on rolls at end of year	-------	-------	380,000
Disability benefit payments (in millions)	-------	-------	$290

5. Hearings and appeals.—Individuals whose claims are disallowed have the right to appeal. Appeals on disallowances of claims for disability insurance benefits will be processed for the first time in 1957, which will increase the volume, as well as the complexity of the hearings and appeals activity.

Appeals cases processed	4,275	8,182	11,530

6. Actuarial services.—Actuarial studies and estimates are prepared for long-range program planning.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Grants for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled are made to States that have plans for these programs approved by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Fifty-three jurisdictions including all the States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, have approved plans for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children and aid to the blind; and 46 jurisdictions have approved plans for aid to the permanently and totally disabled.

The Social Security Act amendments of 1956 raised the amount of the Federal contribution to assistance payments in all jurisdictions. For Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, the annual amount of Federal funds that can be made available was increased by a fourth. For the remaining 51 jurisdictions, the maximums on individual payments for the needy, aged, blind, and disabled were raised from $55 to $60, and the Federal share of assistance payments was increased from four-fifths of the first $25 per recipient to four-fifths of the first $30 per recipient plus half the balance within the maximum. In aid to dependent children, the maximums were raised from $30 to $32 for the first child and the needy relative and from $21 to $23 for each additional child in the same family; the Federal share was increased from four-fifths of the first $15 per recipient to fourteen-seventeenths of the first $17 plus half the balance within the maximums. This revised formula will be used to compute the Federal share of assistance payments, including both money payments to recipients and payments to vendors for medical and remedial care, for the 9-month period ending June 30, 1957. Thereafter, the revised formula will be used to compute the Federal share of money payments, and the Federal share of payments to vendors for medical and remedial care will be separately computed. Effective July 1, 1957, the maximum Federal share of payments to vendors for medical and remedial care will be half the total amounts expended up to an average of $6 per adult and $3 per child.

Federal funds for 1958 for State expenditures for payments to recipients and State and local administration are estimated at $1,695,900,000 compared to total Federal, State, and local expenditures of $2,946,900,000. The $102,400,000 increase over 1957 is due to a rise of approximately $72 million because of the 1956 amendments to the public assistance titles of the Social Security Act and an additional $30,400,000 resulting from increases in average payments for all programs and in the number of recipients for aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled, offset in part by a decrease in the number of recipients of old-age assistance.

The additional cost of the amendments in 1958 is distributed as follows among the separate provisions of the amendments:

1. Additional cost in 1958 due to increase in Federal share of assistance payments, effective Oct. 1, 1956 (for 4 quarters in 1958 compared with 3 quarters in 1957; cost for additional quarter is offset in part by the fact that the change in the formula applies to both money payments to recipients and vendor payments for medical care in 1957 and to only money payments in 1958, when the separate provision for medical care will be effective)	$11, 800, 000
2. Separate matching for vendor payments for medical and remedial care, effective July 1, 1957	58, 000, 000
3. Aid to dependent children: Extension of list of relatives with whom needy children may live and deletion of requirement for school attendance of children aged 16–18 years, effective July 1, 1957	2, 200, 000
Total	72, 000, 000

The appropriation request of $1,679,400,000 is $16,500,000 less than the estimated Federal share, because the States will have available for expenditures $16,500,000 representing the Federal share of collections and adjustments for prior years.

Based on the most recent program trends and the effect of the 1956 amendments to the public assistance titles, it is estimated that a supplemental appropriation of $277 million will be required for 1957. The figures used in the tables appearing under the activities below, include the supplemental of $277 million needed for 1957 requirements; however, the figures shown in the program and financing schedule do not include this amount.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

An amount of $2,500,000 is requested for grants to States in 1958 for a program of training and instruction in professional and technical fields relating to public assistance. The shortage of trained social workers is very serious in the public assistance programs and the request will permit increasing the number of adequately trained personnel by approximately 900 persons in 1958 and financing of approximately 25 teaching grants. Short seminars will provide study opportunities to many persons in social work positions and others employed in administering the public assistance programs.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Bureau administers Federal grants to States for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind and aid to the permanently and totally disabled. Effective July 1, 1957, the Bureau will also administer a program of grants to States for training of public welfare personnel for these programs. A basic objective is the development, maintenance, and improvement of sound public welfare programs and the achievement of self-care and self-support for needy recipients, whenever possible. During 1958 particular emphasis will be given to strengthening family life, providing effective and efficient medical care programs for public assistance recipients, and planning for the most effective use of funds under the newly authorized training program.

1. Program policies and standards.—Interpretive statements, other written materials and specialized technical assistance are provided to assist State agencies.

2. Review State plans and grants, evaluate State operations.—Each of the 205 State public assistance programs and the training grant programs provided under the 1956 amendments involves: analyzing and approving State plans and amendments thereto; making grants; reviewing State and local operations to insure proper expenditure of Federal funds and conformity with Federal requirements; and providing general consultative services to State agencies to improve administration and quality of service.

3. Collect and interpret statistics.—Information developed cooperatively with State agencies is used by the Bureau and the States in formulating policies, planning program content, setting standards, justifying appropriation requests, making legislative recommendations, and guiding administrative action.

A proposed supplemental of $35,000 in 1957 will be requested in connection with work needed to implement the Social Security Act amendments of 1956.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Bureau investigates and reports on the health and welfare of children and administers grants to the States for extending and improving maternal and child health services, crippled children's services, and child welfare services.

1. State and local health services for children.—Policies and requirements for State maternal and child health and crippled children's programs are developed; State plans are reviewed and approved; consultative services are given to State agencies, other public and voluntary agencies and organizations, and educational institutions engaged in training professional personnel; and guides and recommendations are prepared on the provision of child health services.

2. State and local social services for children.—The same approach is used for the child welfare services as for the child health services.

3. Technical assistance to States and communities for juvenile delinquency programs.—Consultation is given to States, communities and organizations, both public and voluntary, on standards and methods for care and treatment of juvenile delinquents, on content of State or local programs, and on problems of organization and coordination on a statewide or local basis; assistance is given to State agencies and educational institutions in planning for training of professional and nonprofessional personnel in the field of juvenile delinquency.

4. Research in child life and services for children.—Studies on child health and welfare, particularly social and economic problems are conducted, and the programs and services for children are evaluated. The results are interpreted to the lay and professional public through pamphlets and bulletins.

5. Information for parents and others working with children.—Publications are prepared and distributed on child health and welfare services. Upon request, assistance is given to States in interpreting their child health and welfare programs.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Field administration.—This includes review and evaluation of Department field activities; planning for the field organization; and coordination of program operations through nine regional offices, which provide administrative services for 12,000 employees located in field offices. New old-age and survivors insurance legislation approved August 1, 1956, will add substantially to the workload in 1957 and 1958.

2. Grant-in-aid audits.—This Division audits 33 grant-in-aid programs to determine whether these grants were expended by the States and local subdivisions for the purposes for which they were appropriated. There will be an incoming current workload of approximately 2,400 audits in 1958. During 1958, initial audits will be made of State surplus property agencies, and grants for rural library services, for State committees on education beyond the high school and for construction of waste treatment and research facilities.

3. State merit systems.—State merit systems are reviewed for compliance with the requirements of Federal law in the various programs. State programs involve 17 types of grants-in-aid, and the review applies to 70 State merit systems, and 270 agencies administering grant programs.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Operating Fund, Bureau of Federal Credit Unions, Social Security Administration

Budget program.—Federal credit unions are privately owned, cooperative associations organized for the purpose of promoting thrift among their members and creating a source of credit for provident or productive purposes.

The Bureau finances its activities out of fees charged for services performed. Additional working capital was provided in 1954 by the appropriation of an interest-bearing loan of $250,000 to be repaid to the Treasury in 10 annual installments beginning with 1956.

The Bureau's activities consist of: (1) Chartering new Federal credit unions; (2) supervising established Federal credit unions, including making periodic examinations of their financial condition and operating practices; and (3) administrative services. Data relating to activities are shown below.

Number Federal credit unions chartered	747	750	750
Number regular examinations	7,120	8,565	9,093

Operating results and financial conditions.—Retained earnings are expected to show an increase to $696,819 through June 30, 1958. Net investment of U. S. Government is estimated to be $846,819 on June 30, 1958.

Budget program.—The fund provides reproduction, tabulating, and supply services on a central basis for Department headquarters. A payment of $20,000 was made to Treasury in 1957 as final repayment of the $50,000 appropriation which was authorized for the establishment of the fund.

Operating results and financial conditions.—Retained earnings, reserved to meet possible future losses, show a slight increase through 1958. The total investment of the U. S. Government at the end of 1958 is expected to be $303,470, consisting of donated assets of $214,000, and retained earnings of $89,470.

Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship is derived by year-end balances of selected resources as reflected in the following table:

BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION

The Administration markets electric power produced by 16 Federal generating plants in service or under construction in the Pacific Northwest. These plants are constructed by the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation. Generating capacity will be added in 1958, 1959, 1960, and 1961 to complete the installations at the Chief Joseph and The Dalles Dams. New generation is scheduled to be installed at the Roza, Cougar, Ice Harbor, and Hills Creek Dams during the period from 1958 through 1962. To carry out its responsibility the Administration constructs and operates high-voltage transmission facilities which integrate the Federal power projects, transmit the output of Federal powerplants to load centers, and interconnect the Federal system with non-Federal utility systems throughout the region. The Federal transmission system is also utilized, under appropriate contractual arrangements, for the wheeling of power from non-Federal generating plants.

Good streamflow during 1956 plus 11 additional generating units which were placed in service at the various projects under construction provided gross receipts of $59,274,075 which were deposited in the Treasury. Receipts for 1957 and 1958 are estimated at $66,250,000 and $73,050,000. These estimates assume median water conditions and, if poorer water conditions should prevail, receipts would be somewhat less.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This program provides for the operation and maintenance of the Administration's regional high voltage electric grid system, and for commercial and administrative expenses in connection with the marketing of electric power at wholesale from Federal dams in the Pacific Northwest.

1. System operation and maintenance.—This activity includes the scheduling and dispatching of power, the operation of substations, the maintenance of transmission lines, substations and other electrical facilities, load estimating, the integration of resources, and system engineering.

Transmission facilities of the Administration are being expanded as increased generating capacity becomes available. It will be necessary to man newly energized substations, schedule and dispatch the increased power supply, and provide service through additional points of delivery and interconnection. Additional maintenance personnel will be required throughout the transmission area to maintain the expanded system at levels adequate to insure safe and continuous operation. Power resources and requirements work will be continued to obtain the fullest utilization of generating capacity, streamflows, and stored water. The following table shows the rising trend in several of the more important indexes of the operation and maintenance activity.

Sales of energy (millions of kilowatt-hours)	26,700	29,900	32,550
Points of delivery	330	327	342

2. Power contracts and rates.—This activity includes the negotiation of power sales contracts, billing and servicing contracts, including the development of service plans, and establishment of wholesale rate schedules.

4. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship is derived from year-end balances of selected resources and applicable adjustments as reflected in the following table:

Kerr, and Clark Hill projects is being sold under long-term agreements with public bodies, cooperatives, the Tennessee Valley Authority and private utility companies. Pending negotiations involve long-term agreements for the output of the Philpott, Jim Woodruff, Buford, Old Hickory, and Cheatham projects. Provision is made for the administration of at least 205 contracts expected to be in effect at the beginning of the budget year. In addition the activity includes: (a) engineering and economic appraisal of proposed hydroelectric developments; (b) participation in the determination of cost allocations; (c) development of wholesale power rates; (d) continuing determination that revenue is adequate to repay power investment; (e) determination of alternative transmission costs; and (f) collection of power revenues. Gross receipts, which are deposited in the Treasury, amounted to $12,928,962 in 1956. During 1957 and 1958 receipts are estimated at $15,842,050 and $18,526,000, respectively.

This fund, accumulated from power receipts, is available permanently in an amount of $300,000 for emergency expenses necessary to insure continuity of service. It is also available in such amounts as may be approved annually in appropriation acts to cover costs in connection with purchase of electric power and rentals for use of facilities for transmission and distribution of power. Electric power is purchased from private utilities and generation and transmission cooperatives. Power is transmitted to customers through wheeling arrangements with private utilities, and through lease of transmission capacity in facilities owned by generation and transmission cooperatives (16 U. S. C. 825s–1).

The Bureau administers 468 million acres of public lands in the United States and Alaska in the interest of conserving forest, range, mineral, and water resources. In addition, the Bureau has responsibility for mineral resources on 358 million acres of land under the jurisdiction of other Federal agencies and private land with mineral rights reserved to the United States.

The work of the Bureau produces revenues from various sources which are distributed as follows:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Lease and disposal of lands and mineral resources.—Applications for all types of land use and for lease of mineral resources, principally oil and gas, are acted upon. Field investigations are made to determine the best use of resources. An increase for 1958 is provided to accomplish more field investigations and to expand the modernization of land office records in the field.

Cases pending, end of year	85,302	78,094	70,000	70,000

2. Management of grazing lands.—The 180 million acres of Federal range used by 30,000 livestock growers are supervised. Proper management of these lands perpetuates forage resources by reducing overuse, unseasonal use and trespass and provides protection from fire and erosion. The increase in 1958 is to provide for range and dependent property surveys to determine proper range use.

3. Forestry.—Six million acres of commercial forest lands in the United States and 40 million acres in Alaska plus 110 million acres of woodlands are managed. The 1958 program will permit selling 920 million board-feet of timber having a stumpage value of $29.3 million, compared to 820 million board-feet in 1956 having a value of nearly $27 million. An expanded program of reforestation will be undertaken.

4. Cadastral surveys.—These surveys are required to locate and identify legal boundaries of lands under application for lease or disposal including submerged lands on the outer Continental Shelf; for administration of timber sales; management of forest and range lands; to provide legal descriptions to other Federal agencies and to permit States to obtain title to lands granted them by law. The increase for 1958 will permit acceleration of surveys for land management purposes including the rapid development in Alaska.

5. Soil and moisture conservation.—The 1958 program plans rehabilitation treatment of 1,500,000 acres of public lands in critical condition from erosion. Cooperative programs with other agencies in river basin areas will be continued. The increase requested for 1958 is the third step of a 20-year program.

6. Squaw Butte Experiment Station.—This has been transferred to the Department of Agriculture.

7. Fire suppression.—Provision is made for fighting fires on or threatening lands under the Bureau's jurisdiction. In calendar year 1955, 570 fires burned 98,800 acres of range and forest lands destroying 7,600,000 board-feet of timber. A supplemental appropriation for 1957 is proposed for later transmission and appears at the end of this chapter.

9. Maintenance of access roads.—Provision is made for maintenance of timber access roads in the revested Oregon & California Railroad grant lands. These funds are reimbursed to the Treasury from the Oregon and California land grant fund.

10. Weed control.—This activity continues treatment of areas infested by halogeton and other poisonous and

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

The responsibility of the United States toward the Indian people and the natives of Alaska includes protection and development of trust property and the furnishing of services not otherwise available to Indians and which are normally provided other citizens through Government and private agencies. Active programs are being aimed toward the integration of like services to Indians and non-Indians through the same sources and toward increased Indian participation in the management of Indian-owned resources. States and counties are participating at an increasing rate in the service programs, usually with financing by the United States demanded because of the tax-exempt status of Indian lands. The ultimate goal of the entire program is to have the Indian people and the natives of Alaska take their proper place in the social and economic life of the Nation on the same basis as other citizens.

2. Fire suppression.—Funds under this item provide for the payment of the cost of suppression and prevention of fires on or threatening Indian reservations. Approximately 57,752,523 acres require protection.

3. Agricultural and industrial assistance.—Funds under this activity provide for improved methods in farming; homemaking; the management of a revolving loan credit program for small business enterprises; and formulation of plans for readjustment legislation pertaining to special trust relationships between Indian tribes and the Federal Government.

4. Soil and moisture conservation.—Land-use practices based on land inventories and soil-conservation plans are introduced to control erosion and promote more effective utilization of soil and water resources. Approximately 24.1 million acres, or 42.5 percent of Indian-owned lands, are severely or critically eroded. The job of soil and moisture conservation is approximately 20 percent completed, an increase of 3 percent over 1955.

5. Operation, repair, and maintenance of Indian irrigation systems.—Approximately 300 irrigation systems serving about 864,000 acres of Indian and mixed-ownership lands are operated and maintained. About 82 percent of the cost is financed from collections from water users, an increase of 2 percent over 1955.

6. Development of Indian arts and crafts.—Production and marketing of the products of Indian crafts are fostered through formation of production groups; establishing of standards; and improving of markets, design, and production methods.

7. Management of Indian trust property.—Banking services are provided for Indians; land is purchased, sold, exchanged, and leased; and Indian property and money rights are safeguarded. Consolidation and/or disposal of fractionated land holdings, especially in those areas affected by readjustment legislation is to be accomplished.

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

The Bureau plans, constructs, and operates facilities to irrigate lands, furnish domestic water supplies, and develop related hydroelectric power and flood control in the 17 Western States and Alaska.

Appropriations to the Bureau are made from the general fund and from three special funds. The special funds are (a) the reclamation fund, largely derived from certain irrigation and power revenues; receipts from the sale, lease, and rental of public lands; and certain oil and mineral revenues; (b) the Colorado River dam fund, derived from the revenues of the Boulder Canyon project; and (c) the Colorado River development fund, derived from transfers of money from the Colorado River dam fund. The estimates of appropriation for the budget year are summarized by source, as follows:

Annual appropriation title	Estimate of appropriation	General fund	Reclamation fund	Colorado River dam fund	Colorado River development fund

The total appropriation request amounts to $199,312,000. This represents an increase of $5,447,500 compared with the appropriations of the current fiscal year and an increase of $19,157,000 compared with the preceding fiscal year.

For carrying out the functions of the Bureau of Reclamation as provided in the Federal reclamation laws (Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and Acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto) and other Acts applicable to that Bureau, as follows:

GENERAL INVESTIGATIONS

General Investigations, Bureau of Reclamation

For engineering and economic investigations of proposed Federal reclamation projects and studies of water conservation and development plans; formulating plans and preparing designs and specifications for authorized Federal reclamation projects or parts thereof prior to initial allocation of appropriations for construction of such projects or parts; and activities preliminary to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and betterment, financial adjustment, or extension of existing projects; to remain available until expended, [$5,680,000] $5,932,000 of which [$4,970,000] $5,182,000 shall be derived from the reclamation fund and $500,000 shall be derived from the Colorado River development fund: Provided, That none of this appropriation shall be used for more than one-half of the cost of an investigation requested by a State, municipality, or other interest. PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Surveys and investigations are made to determine the feasibility of potential reclamation projects; detailed plans are developed for authorized projects prior to appropriation of construction funds; and investigations are made for rehabilitation of existing Federal reclamation projects. Total investigations scheduled, excluding a number of investigations for which stream gaging only is in progress, are as follows:

The appropriation request for this activity is $5,932,000, an increase of $252,000 over the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

1. Engineering and economic investigations.—These are made to plan the development of river basins; to make feasibility investigations of potential projects, prior to authorization; and to make general engineering and research studies of reclamation problems either independently or in cooperation with local, State, or other Federal agencies.

2. Advance planning.—Detailed field data are collected, definite plans are prepared, and repayment plans completed for authorized projects, prior to obtaining appropriations for construction.

3. Investigations of existing projects.—These are made to determine the need and make plans for rehabilitation, financial adjustments, or water conservation on existing Federal reclamation projects.

4. Alaskan investigations.—These engineering and economic investigations relate to projects for the development and utilization of the water resources of Alaska (69 Stat. 618).

6. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship is derived from year-end balances of selected resources and applicable adjustments as reflected in the following table:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The program consists of preparation of designs and specifications for all projects subsequent to initial allocation for construction, award and servicing of construction contracts, construction of authorized projects, operation and maintenance during construction of completed features of projects, and rehabilitation of existing facilities. Investigations and advance planning for units of the Missouri River Basin project are also included. In addition, provision is made for loans to irrigation districts for construction of distribution systems.

The appropriation request of $135.7 million represents a decrease of $8.3 million from 1957. This decrease is due principally to making provision for delays and savings which experience indicates will develop in the current year, but which cannot be attributed to specific projects at this time. The estimated reduction of costs in 1957 will reduce appropriations required to finance the program in 1958.

The table "Construction and rehabilitation program" shows that work will be continued on 67 projects or units with 8 of these scheduled for completion during the year. Construction of 6 projects or units will be initiated in 1958. Bureau operations during the year will provide facilities for 256,000 new and supplemental acres of irrigated land and 74,100 kilowatts of new power-generating capacity.

An amount of $7 million is being proposed for later transmission and appears at the end of this chapter.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Provision is made for operation and maintenance of (a) the power-generating and transmission facilities of completed projects (except the Fort Peck transmission system financed under a revolving fund), and the irrigation and water-supply facilities on certain projects; (b) the Colorado River front work and levee system; and (c) Boulder City, Nev. Provision is also made for soil and moisture conservation operations and halogeton control on public lands under jurisdiction of the Bureau.

The Bureau operates and maintains the power-generation and transmission facilities, and generally the storage dams and reservoirs, of completed projects. Where necessary, the irrigation works are also operated and maintained until the water users are able to undertake the responsibilities. In 1958 a total of 39 projects and 21 Missouri River Basin units and divisions will be operated and maintained for irrigation, power, municipal, and industrial water supplies. Of these, 19 have power facilities. Energy sales and revenues from power operations are as follows:

1956	24,730	$53,459,483
1957	26,944	64,552,882
1958	29,368	70,178,639

Commercial power is sold to wholesale customers such as municipalities, Rural Electrification Administration-financed cooperatives, private utilities, and other Government agencies.

Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship is derived from year-end balances of selected resources, and applicable adjustments as reflected in the following table:

S. C. 461–467): Provided, That no part of any appropriation made herein shall be available pursuant to the Act of April 19, 1945 (43 U. S. C. 377), for expenses other than those incurred on behalf of specific reclamation projects except "General Administrative Expenses" and amounts provided for reconnaissance, basin surveys, and general engineering and research under the head "General Investigations".

Allotments to the Missouri River Basin project from the appropriation under the head "Construction and Rehabilitation" shall be available additionally for said project for those functions of the Bureau of Reclamation provided for under the head "General Investigations" (but this authorization shall not preclude use of the appropriation under said head within that area), and for the continuation of investigations by agencies of the Department on a general plan for the development of the Missouri River Basin. Such allotments may be expended through or in cooperation with State and other Federal agencies, and advances to such agencies are hereby authorized.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Geological Survey provides basic and scientific data concerning the water, land, and mineral resources of the Nation, and supervises the development of minerals on leased Federal and Indian lands.

1. Topographic surveys and mapping.—Topographic maps portray the elevation, shape, and position of the natural and manmade features of the earth's surface; they provide the engineering information essential to (a) mineral, water, and other natural resource investigations, (b) engineering and industrial development, and (c) military and civil defense. The immediate program will provide maps for those areas where investigation, development, and construction are most imminent, and those areas to which the Department of Defense has assigned a high priority. The requested increase in this activity will be used to expedite mapping required to implement the national minerals policy and the recommendations of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Water Resources Policy. In 1958 standard maps for an estimated 155,000 square miles of the United States and its Territories will be compiled, compared with 131,000 in 1957 and 121,000 in 1956.

2. Geologic and mineral resource surveys and mapping.—These investigations are directed toward (a) providing an accurate appraisal of the Nation's mineral resources, (b) providing background data needed in classifying the public lands and in exploring for mineral raw materials, and (c) the development of new concepts and techniques needed in the search for hidden deposits of useful minerals, with special emphasis on implementing the national minerals policy. The work also includes the development of basic data on surface and subsurface geologic conditions for use in planning and executing engineering construction and water development projects; and the preparation of a large-scale geologic map of the United States, its Territories, and possessions which is 14 percent complete. Geologic mapping is now progressing at the rate of approximately 40,000 square miles annually.

3. Water resources investigations.—This program includes determinations of the flow, stage, and sediment discharge of rivers; reservoir contents; locations and safe yields of underground waters; the chemical quality and temperature of waters; and the availability of water supplies as related to present and future demands. These data are essential in planning water-supply projects for military, industrial, and domestic purposes, as well as irrigation, hydroelectric power, navigation, flood control, highway and bridge design, and land-use projects. In 1958 added emphasis will be directed to special studies to develop a more thorough understanding of the basic principles and physical processes of water's occurrence and movement as recommended by the President's Advisory Committee on Water Resources Policy. There will be some expansion of the work in cooperation with State agencies.

4. Soil and moisture conservation.—Basic data and advice concerning hydrologic and geologic problems are provided to other bureaus. The program includes surveys of rates of erosion, effects of soil and moisture treatment measures, and studies for improving the design of remedial measures.

5. Conservation of lands and minerals.—Prospecting, development, and production of minerals on leased Federal, Indian, and outer Continental Shelf lands are regulated and supervised. Federally owned and controlled lands are classified as to their mineral and water power values. In the current year approximately 150,000 leased properties, oil wells, and mines in 40 States and Alaska are supervised. These leases are expected to produce oil, gas, and other minerals, valued at $625 million, and render royalty returns of about $66 million. The States which produce the minerals receive 37½ percent of the royalties; the Reclamation fund, 52½ percent; and 10 percent is retained in the United States Treasury. In 1958, it is anticipated that there will be approximately 160,000 leased properties and that the production and royalty values will reach $665 million and $72 million, respectively. The classification functions provide the basic foundation for the system of public-land administration prescribed by mineral leasing and land disposal laws. Owing to the unprecedented rate of development of the Nation's oil and gas resources, increased demands are being made upon the Survey for mineral classification services.

6. General administration—special purpose buildings.—The 1958 program contemplates construction of unit 3 of the Geological Survey's Pacific coast center.

Reimbursements from non-Federal sources are from States and municipalities for making cooperative topographic and geologic surveys and water resources investigations (43 U. S. C. 48), proceeds from sale to the public of copies of photographs and records (43 U. S. C. 45), proceeds from sale of personal property (40 U. S. C. 481 (c)), and reimbursements from permittees and licensees of the Federal Power Commission (16 U. S. C. 797). Reimbursements from other Federal agencies (31 U. S. C. 686) are for special purpose mapping and investigations performed at the request of the financing agency, much of which contributes to the basic objectives of the Geological Survey.

properties of coal and its mining, preparation, combustion, carbonization, and gasification. Laboratory research is conducted to find technically and economically feasible methods for converting coal to fluid fuels for better utilization in the Nation's machines. Coal samples are analyzed; efficiency of coal-mining methods is evaluated; and economic statistical studies are performed. Research is conducted to discover causes of explosions in coal mines and to improve methods of preventing explosions. Tests are conducted on explosives and blasting devices to determine their permissibility for use in mining operations.

2. Anthracite coal.—Research is conducted to develop new and improve present uses for anthracite; improved mining and preparation methods are developed; and basic economic data are prepared on the suitability of anthracite for metallurgical application, on the performance of crushers, and on the operation of a coal planer. Inspection is conducted under the Mine Drainage Act (Public Law 162, approved July 15, 1955).

3. Petroleum, natural gas, and oil shale.—Basic and applied research is conducted in laboratories and in oil and gas fields to conserve these resources by improving the processes of recovery and utilization. Research is coordinated with work done by other Government agencies, educational institutions, and industry. Research projects provide basic information about oil fields, crude oil and its products to promote more efficient production and utilization of petroleum and natural gas. Economic and statistical information is analyzed to provide a factual basis for industry operations and governmental policy. Technologic research is carried on in resources, production, storage, and utilization of helium. Research is conducted on oil shale and shale oil to determine the composition of the various products, to test the applicability of those products to different uses, and to determine the basic chemistry and physics of the refining processes.

4. Ferrous metals.—This includes: (a) research on use of low-grade ores, conservation of raw materials and improved methods for steelmaking; (b) investigation of manganese occurrences and use of low-grade manganiferous materials; (c) investigation of domestic chromite deposits; (d) studies to lower production costs of off-grade ores; (e) research on use of alloying metals to produce iron and steel products and high-temperature alloys; and (f) the collection and dissemination of data on the production and distribution of these metals.

5. Nonferrous metals.—This includes: (a) investigations and development of new sources of copper, lead and zinc, recovery of tin and mercury from low-grade ore, and new uses for arsenic; (b) research in metallurgy to develop economic and efficient methods for processing complex low-grade and currently submarginal materials; (c) research on resources and utilization of light metals—titanium, alumina, and magnesium; (d) development of basic information on properties and uses of ores and metals for realization of the numerous potential military and civilian uses and to increase recovery and utilization of scrap; (e) development of information on domestic reserves of rare and precious metals and materials; (f) research to improve the quality and uniformity of rare metals and related products; (g) research to develop economic processes for the recovery of various rare and precious metals, including rare-earth metals, thorium, selenium, zirconium, hafnium, beryllium, and columbium from ores, and (h) economic and statistical studies on nonferrous metals.

6. Nonmetallic minerals.—The Bureau's program on nonmetallic minerals includes a wide variety of projects, the majority of which are designed to develop adequate supplies of various minerals that are in short supply, or of minerals, supplies of which must be imported and are therefore vulnerable in emergencies. These problems of nonmetallic mineral supply are attacked by: (a) field investigations of mineral deposits; (b) laboratory research on the beneficiation of nonmetallic minerals; (c) research on the development of synthetic minerals as substitutes; and (d) research to develop more effective and efficient methods of using our available nonmetallic minerals.

7. Foreign mineral activities.—The Bureau collects, analyzes, and interprets technical and economic data on foreign mineral resources, production, consumption, and international trade. These data are required by the Bureau and other Government agencies in coping with problems of mineral supply and by industry to assist in planning foreign minerals ventures.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Inspections, investigations, and rescue work.—The objectives for 1958 are (a) to inspect, at least once annually, every active coal mine regularly employing more than 14 men underground, to take action to require compliance with mandatory provisions and make recommendations to gain compliance with the voluntary provisions of law; (b) to inspect annually, or as necessary, underground coal mines regularly employing less than 15 men, and all strip mines, and to report on hazards observed with appropriate recommendations to correct the hazards; and (c) to conduct investigations of accidents and rescue work to reduce working hazards, safeguard the health of workers, and promote efficiency in the mineral industries. The Bureau encourages accident prevention through education and safety organizations, exhibits, demonstrations, instruction in accident prevention, and first-aid and mine-rescue methods. Research is conducted on the support of mine roof and equipment is tested for use in mines and plants where explosive atmospheres may be encountered. The Bureau also conducts field and laboratory studies of ventilation of mines, methods of allaying mineral dusts, prevention of dust accumulations, effective use of rock dust to prevent widespread coal-dust explosions, and blasting practices.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

The Service administers national parks and other areas of unusual historic, scenic, scientific, or recreational character in the interest of their preservation as well as their public use and makes studies of the recreation resources of the United States in cooperation with Federal, State and local agencies.

1958 will be the second year of the 10-year program, Mission 66, to provide personnel and facilities needed to serve the ever-increasing number of visitors to park areas, and at the same time, preserve park values. Visitation to park areas is expected to increase from 54 million in 1956 to 80 million in 1966.

The 1958 budget includes an increase of $4.7 million for operating expenses, $4.8 million for construction of buildings and utilities and restoration of facilities damaged by floods and fire, and $1.2 million in cash to liquidate obligations incurred for parkways, roads, and trails under authority of the Federal-Aid Highway Acts of 1954 and 1956.

MANAGEMENT AND PROTECTION

Management and Protection, National Park Service

Management and Protection, National Park Service—Continued

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Management of park and other areas.—The 180 park and other areas comprise about 24 million acres located in 38 States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Virgin Islands. The increase proposed is to provide (a) added visitor services and protection in the areas as a result of the continued increase in visitation; (b) for four new areas; (c) leasing of commercial communication facilities; and (d) for additional and improved informational publications. Actual and estimated visitors and revenue receipts are as follows:

	Calendar year visitors	Fiscal year receipts
1955 actual	50,007,838	$4,914,239
1956 actual		5,065,784
1956 estimate	54,000,000
1957 estimate	57,000,000	5,340,000
1958 estimate	60,000,000	5,590,000

2. Forestry and fire control.—Forests, brushland, or grassland on over 11 million acres are protected from fire, destructive insects, diseases, and other preventable damage. The increase proposed is to provide for (a) leasing of commercial communication facilities; (b) additional temporary fire control aids; (c) a tree crew for assignment to western park areas; and (d) augmenting technical services in two of the regional offices.

3. Soil and moisture conservation.—The 1958 program will permit more intensive corrective measures on 40 of the most critical problem areas.

4. Park and recreation programs.—Studies are made of the park, parkway, and recreational potentialities of the United States and its Territories, frequently in cooperation with Federal, State, and local agencies. Technical services and guidance essential to management, protection, and public use are provided in the fields of biology, geology, history, and archeology. Surveys are made of historic American buildings and sites to acquire and preserve data relative thereto. Investigations are made to determine whether agencies receiving surplus Federal real property with a recreational potential are utilizing those properties in conformity with terms of the transfer agreements. The increase is to provide (a) for further studies in connection with proposed or existing areas; (b) acceleration of studies of recreational facilities; (c) better interpretive services; (d) more adequate control of land use and water resources; (e) archeological investigations and salvage on Federal water control projects; and (f) surveys of historic American buildings and sites.

5. Concessions management.—There are 170 major concessionaires operating in parks and other areas. Contracts are negotiated, or permits issued; rates are established; services to be rendered are determined; and records are audited. The increase will permit more frequent audits of concessionaires' operations.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Management of fishery resources.—Eighty-five fish-cultural stations are currently operated for the propagation of food and game fishes. This activity also covers administration of the Black Bass Act encompassing shipments of all fishes across State boundaries.

2. Extension and training.—This activity covers (a) technical advice and assistance to States and other public or private entities in the management of sport fishing and fish propagation; and (b) cooperative development, with the States, of fish-stocking programs for major public streams and lakes.

3. Fishery research.—Research is conducted to improve fish-cultural methods, and the management and utilization of fishery resources. The proposed increase will provide more nutritional research and diagnostic service for protection of hatchery production and for fish on Federal lands. Funds for this activity are supplemented by moneys reverted from the permanent account "Federal aid in fish restoration and management." In 1956, these supplementary funds totaled $19,233. It is estimated they will amount to $25,100 in 1957 and 1958.

4. Administration of wildlife resources.—This activity covers (a) 264 refuges, consisting of approximately 18 million acres, operated for the conservation of migratory waterfowl and the preservation and propagation of rare birds and mammals. Of these refuges, 3,500,000 acres are primarily for waterfowl. Funds for administration of the wildlife refuge program are supplemented by moneys appropriated under the permanent accounts entitled "Management of national wildlife refuges," and "Migratory bird conservation account." In 1956, these supplementary funds totaled $2,801,170. It is estimated they will amount to $1,750,000 in 1957, and $2,703,350 in 1958. (b) Enforcement of the Migratory Bird Treaty and Lacey Acts for protection of migratory birds and regulation of interstate and foreign shipments of game. Funds for enforcement of the Migratory Bird Treaty and Lacey Acts are supplemented by moneys appropriated under the permanent accounts entitled "Management of national wildlife refuges," and "Migratory bird conservation account." In 1956, these supplementary funds totaled $850,051. It is estimated they will amount to $847,000 in 1957, and $885,000 in 1958. (c) Administration of the Alaska game law directed toward protection and rehabilitation of Alaskan sport fish and wildlife resources. Waterfowl management investigations are financed under the permanent accounts entitled "Migratory bird conservation account" and "Federal aid in wildlife restoration" (reverted funds only). In 1956 these funds totaled $372,658. It is estimated they will amount to $375,000 in 1957, and $462,000 in 1958.

5. Control of predatory animals and injurious rodents.—Predatory animals and injurious rodents are controlled on public lands. Technical information and correlation and supervision of cooperative programs are provided to protect livestock, game, poultry, forage, crops, forests, structures, foods, and feeds from destruction by harmful animals.

6. Wildlife research.—Research is carried on in migratory wildlife and in wildlife management and conservation practices. Wildlife research units are also maintained in cooperation with the Wildlife Management Institute and land-grant colleges in 15 States and Alaska to give technical training in wildlife management, carry on research, and demonstrate improved management practices. The proposed increase in this activity will provide for further study of breeding requirements of whooping crane, blackbird control, participation in studies of uses of pesticides and testing of new methods and toxicants. Funds for this activity are supplemented by moneys appropriated under the permanent accounts entitled "Federal aid in wildlife restoration" (reverted funds only) and "Migratory bird conservation account." In 1956, these supplementary funds totaled $450,278. It is estimated they will amount to $250,000 in 1957 and $390,000 in 1958.

7. Soil and moisture conservation.—Nearly 5.5 million acres in 63 refuges within the continental United States are critically eroded or severely depleted. A long-range program for developing a conservation plan for a majority of these refuges has been completed. Work is now being performed on 46 refuges and will be extended to 12 additional refuges with the increase requested.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Provision is made for the expenses of the headquarters of the Office of Territories, and for support of the governments of Alaska, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa, as set forth above.

The net decrease of $863,000 is due primarily to (1) transfer of responsibility for the care of the mentally ill of Alaska to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (Alaska Mental Health Act (70 Stat. 712)), and (2) the fact that no funds are required for the expenses of the biennial legislatures of Alaska and Hawaii.

The grant to Samoa is to supplement local revenues for operation of the government. The costs of government are distributed as follows:

This fund is used to assist Indians in acquiring livestock, farm, and other equipment and in establishing tribal enterprises (25 U. S. C. 470, 471, 631). This fund and miscellaneous tribal funds provide the only source of loans for the great majority of Indians who cannot borrow from ordinary commercial credit sources because of their low economic status and lack of bankable security.

In 1958, loans are estimated at $2 million, and repayments at $1.5 million, the same as for 1957; compared with $1.8 million made and $2.4 million repaid in 1956. As of June 30, 1956, the principal of the fund amounted to $15.8 million, consisting of $13.8 million appropriated, and $2 million cattle settlements. Cattle settlements are payments made by the Indians for breeding stock furnished by the Government generally prior to establishment of this fund.

This fund defrays the operating expenses of the generation and transmission of power from Fort Peck project, Corps of Engineers, and emergency expenses to insure continuous operation (16 U. S. C. 833). Net income is estimated at $1.1 million for 1958, an increase over prior years, resulting from increased power revenues, and decreased operating expenses. Receipts in excess of current operating needs are retained so as to maintain a continuing emergency fund of $500,000. The balance is paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts toward amortizing, with interest, the costs of the dam, reservoir, and powerplant allocated to power and of transmission. Such payments totaled $900,000 in 1956 and are estimated at $1.1 million in 1957 and $1.4 million in 1958.

The operation of the Fort Peck project power and transmission facilities are financed by this fund and capital outlays for transmission by the appropriation "Construction and rehabilitation, Bureau of Reclamation." Capital outlays for the dam, reservoir, and powerplant are financed by Corps of Engineers appropriations. The accompanying statements consolidate the financing from the "Continuing fund for emergency expenses, Fort Peck project, Montana" and "Construction and rehabilitation, Bureau of Reclamation."

The fund defrays the cost of construction, operation, and maintenance of the Colorado River storage project and participating projects, a comprehensive basinwide development which will make possible the control and utilization of the water resources of the Upper Colorado River Basin. The storage project will regulate and conserve the flows of the Colorado River and its major tributaries through holdover storage in large reservoirs, thus making possible increased consumptive use in the upper basin, and will also produce hydroelectric power. Excess revenues from the sale of power will be applied to repayment of costs allocated to irrigation which are beyond the ability of the water users to repay. The participating projects consist of irrigation and municipal and industrial water supply developments.

Construction costs of the storage project and participating projects are, by law, financed through appropriations advanced to the fund. Project revenues will be credited to the fund and will cover costs of operation and maintenance. Revenues in excess of these costs will be utilized to repay to the United States project costs allocated to power, municipal and industrial water supply, and irrigation.

Budget program.—The 1958 program provides for continuation of construction on 3 of the storage units and advance planning on 1 storage unit and 11 participating projects with costs expected to reach $21.6 million, as contrasted to 1957 costs of $11.4 million.

	1955 actual	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Selected resources at end of year (inventories and items on order):
Service facilities			$1,456,176	$5,027,193
Supplies			62,000	142,000
Unfilled purchase orders			110,000	10,000
Total selected resources at end of year			1,628,176	5,179,193
Selected resources at start of year (−)				−1,628,176
Obligations incurred for costs of other years, net			1,628,176	3,551,017

Financing the budget program.—The cost of the authorized storage units and participating projects is estimated to be $990 million of which $13 million has been appropriated. The 1958 request of $25.1 million will leave a balance to complete the authorized work of $951.9 million.

Operating results.—During the construction period, no income is realized and expenses are capitalized, so the fund will show neither income nor expense for 1958.

Net effect of budget expenditures will rise to $21 million in 1958 from $10 million in 1957.

The total investment of the Government in the fund is expected to reach $39.8 million by the end of 1958.

This fund provides for the conservation, development, production, and sale of helium. Production is primarily for the Army, Navy, Air Force, and the Atomic Energy Commission, who reimburse the fund for products received. Sales are also made to non-Federal consumers for medical, scientific, and commercial use (50 U. S. C. 164).

In the 1956 fiscal year 78 helium tank cars, formerly under Navy ownership, were transferred without charge to this account. The transfer was effected to establish centralized control in the Bureau of Mines of most of the Government-owned fleet of helium tank cars. In 1957 the new Exell, Tex., plant being constructed with funds appropriated under "Construction, Bureau of Mines," will be transferred to this account without charge at a value of $6 million.

As of June 30, 1956, the net appropriated capital consisted of appropriations of $17,971,969, less $5,585,839 in writeoffs and disposals.

Income derived from operations is being used to develop new sources of helium, to effect improvements in produc-

This fund is used for making loans to segments of the fishing industry unable to obtain commercial loans on reasonable terms for financing and refinancing operations, maintenance, replacement, repair, and equipment of fishing gear and vessels, and for research into basic problems of fisheries (Public Law 1024, approved August 8, 1956). Loans will bear interest of not less than 3 percent annually and will mature in not more than 10 years. Loan commitments against the fund are made upon approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and referred to the Small Business Administration for closing in the field and rendering loan servicing functions required. Any payment of principal or interest received up to June 30, 1965 (loan fund termination date) shall be available for making additional loans.

Budget program.—The estimated volume for 1957, which represents the initial loan activity of the revolving fund, will completely utilize the authorized appropriation of $9,750,000 for the granting of loans. It is expected that the loan volume for 1958 will taper off to $1,907,000 in that far fewer loan applications are expected to be filed annually after 1957 and that smaller amounts of money will be requested per application. The initial loan activity in 1957 shall have met the most immediate and largest needs, eliminating the backlog of loan applicants.

An appropriation of $10 million was received in 1957 to provide initial capital for this fund. No additional appropriation is requested for 1958, and loan and interest collections are estimated at $130,000 for 1957 and $2,177,000 in 1958.

A $313,000 limitation for administrative expenses is requested for 1958, an increase over 1957 of $63,000 principally to cover costs of additional supervisory services required to insure proper application and repayment of loans. A net loss of $26,000 is expected for 1958 as compared with an estimated net loss of $220,000 for 1957. Deficits will occur until such time as income from interest offsets administrative expenses.

The Government's investment in this fund at June 30, 1958, is estimated at $9,754,000, consisting of $10 million appropriated less a deficit of $246,000.

ALASKA RAILROAD REVOLVING FUND

Alaska Railroad Revolving Fund, Office of Territories

The Alaska Railroad Revolving Fund shall continue available until expended for the work authorized by law, including operation and maintenance of oceangoing or coastwise vessels by ownership, charter, or arrangement with other branches of the Government service, for the purpose of providing additional facilities for transportation of freight, passengers, or mail, when deemed necessary for the benefit and development of industries or travel in the area served; and payment of compensation and expenses as authorized by section 42 of the Act of September 7, 1916 (5 U. S. C. 793), to be reimbursed as therein provided: Provided, That no employee shall be paid an annual salary out of said fund of more than $11,000 except the general manager of said railroad, one assistant general manager at not to exceed $14,000 per annum, two officers at not to exceed $12,500 per annum each, and three officers at not to exceed $12,000 per annum each. (48 U. S. C. 301–308; Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1957.)

This fund is derived from the earnings of the Railroad, and used for operating and maintenance expenses as well as improvements and additions (48 U. S. C. 301–308). The Government's investment as of July 1, 1956, was $131.7 million, consisting of $127.1 million in investments and donations and $4.6 million in retained earnings. Fixed assets represent $110 million and working capital $21.7 million.

Budget program—1. Rail line operation.—The railroad mainline extends 470 miles from Seward to Fairbanks. Branch lines, passing trackage, spurs and yards total 195 miles. Expenses are estimated to decrease from $13.7 million in 1956 to $13.3 million in 1957, and to increase to $13.8 million in 1958. The increase in 1958 represents contributions to the civil service retirement fund. Income is expected to decrease from $17.9 million in 1956 to $16.5 million in 1957 and 1958, respectively. Loss of traffic to the military petroleum pipeline completed in 1956 is the primary cause for the decrease in revenue.

Asset acquisitions totaled $5 million in 1956 and are estimated at $9.7 million in 1957 and $5.3 million in 1958, mainly for construction of the Seward dock and reconstruction of the Seward-Portage line.

2. Other operations.—These consist of costs of sales of power, steam, excess property, and rental properties.

Operating results and financial condition.—Sale of excess property increased net earnings substantially in 1956. However, loss of petroleum shipments mentioned above will cause a decline in net earnings. Expenses cannot be reduced in direct proportion to the loss in revenues, and will be increased in 1958 by the contribution to the retirement fund. Net income will increase retained earnings to $6,731,621 at the end of 1958.

The investment accounts of the Alaska Railroad have been restated to segregate the results of operations after June 30, 1954, from those attributable to earlier operations, as recommended by the Comptroller General of the United States in his audit report to the Congress for 1954. The account "Deficit from operations and capital losses to June 30, 1954," consists of (a) $30,514,849 of noncapital rehabilitation costs previously reported in the budget; (b) $4,024,038 resulting from a reappraisal of donated assets; (c) $13,373,386 representing the recorded deficit as of June 30, 1954; and (d) the following further adjustments attributable to earlier operations:

Loans are made to local trading companies for purchase of Micronesian products for resale in the world market, purchase of trade goods for resale in Micronesia, and purchase of vessels.

The 1956 appropriation language for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands made available for 1 year $500,000 of the proceeds from liquidation of the Island Trading Company of Micronesia for establishment of this fund. The availability was continued for 1957, and it is proposed to extend it again for 1958.

Loans totaled $393,740 in 1956, and are estimated at $130,000 and $100,000 for 1957 and 1958, respectively. Interest charged is 4 percent per annum on the unpaid balance.

Operating Fund, Virgin Islands Corporation

The Virgin Islands Corporation promotes the economic development of the United States Virgin Islands. Appropriations not to exceed $9 million are authorized to be made to a revolving fund in the Treasury, based on annual budgets submitted by the Corporation. The appropriation of additional funds as grants to finance specific programs not primarily of revenue-producing character and to reimburse the Corporation for operating losses is also authorized (48 U. S. C. 1407).

Budget program—1. Loan program.—Loans are made (a) to aid farmers in agricultural diversification and to improve livestock production; (b) to aid business enterprises with any commercial or industrial undertaking or activity in the Virgin Islands when such loans are not available from other Federal or private sources.

2. Sugar program.—The principal business of the Corporation is the growing of sugarcane and the production and sale of sugar. Statistics and costs are as follows (costs include depreciation and interest):

4. Miscellaneous revenue producing activities.—These consist of (a) certain Navy properties transferred to the Department of the Interior under a revocable permit and assigned to the Corporation for management; (b) leases and rentals of property; and (c) miscellaneous sales of supplies and materials.

5. Nonrevenue producing activities.—These include water and soil conservation programs, particularly the construction of dams, land clearance, and forest development.

6. Administrative expenses.—Administrative expenses for 1958 will be held within a limitation of $160,000.

Financing the budget program.—An appropriation of $692,000 is requested for 1958, of which $562,000 will be used to offset deficits, and $130,000 to support nonrevenue producing activities.

Revenue producing activities are financed from the revolving fund authorized in an amount not to exceed $9 million. Through 1957 there has been appropriated, $6,513,000 of which $5,050,000 was withdrawn through 1956, leaving a balance on deposit of $1,463,000.

Operating results.—The Corporation operated at a net loss of $231,944 in 1956. Losses for 1957 and 1958 have been estimated at $277,100 and $282,000 respectively. Acquisition of a more qualified supervisory staff and extensive repairs have diminished losses in recent years ($567,780 in 1954; $341,539 in 1955; and $231,944 in 1956). It is hoped that with favorable weather conditions further improvements can be accomplished over the next 2 years in reducing the loss experience; however, the estimates must be based on average rather than optimum growing conditions.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is the investigative branch of the Department of Justice and obtains evidence for use in civil litigation and prosecution of violations of Federal law. It has primary responsibility for the internal security of the Nation. In addition, as a service agency it assists all law-enforcement agencies in identification and technical matters.

The appropriation request for 1958 totals $101,450,000 and will enable the Bureau to increase its field staff by 63 full-year employees (42 special agents and 21 clerks). The various security programs will demand assignment of additional investigative personnel to meet increased responsibilities in the internal security, subversive, and counterintelligence operations. There has been a substantial upward surge in nearly all classifications of general criminal violations under this Bureau's jurisdiction. In addition, new legislation has increased the investigative work of this Bureau.

1. Security and criminal investigations.—This activity includes the Bureau's investigative responsibilities, the coordination and maintenance of the data gathered, and the maintenance of the Bureau's communications system. Data is disseminated to other Government agencies having an official interest in it. During 1956 the Bureau received 1,629,764 names for search through its files.

2. Identification by fingerprints.—The Identification Division is the national repository of identification data based on fingerprint records. Fingerprints are acquired, classified, preserved, and exchanged with other duly authorized law-enforcement agencies. During 1956 5,284,357 sets of fingerprints were received for handling, a 2.1-percent increase over the prior year and an 8-percent increase over 1954 volume. Increasing workloads are expected to continue throughout 1958. Sets of fingerprints on file on July 1, 1956, totaled 140,776,083.

3. Operation of criminal and scientific laboratory.—The laboratory provides technical and scientific assistance for the Federal Bureau of Investigation and all duly constituted law-enforcement agencies and other Federal agencies which desire to avail themselves of the service. During 1956 scientific examinations totaled 142,627, up 6.7 percent from the prior year. Workloads have increased 41.9 percent since 1950. The upward trend is expected to continue throughout 1958.

4. Training schools and inspectional services.—A bureau-wide inspectional service and a personnel training program are provided. The Bureau assists upon request in providing various types of training to local law-enforcement agencies.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Service administers and enforces the laws relating to immigration and naturalization.

The increase is to improve border inspection facilities and security standards, and contribute to the retirement fund under Public Law 854, approved July 31, 1956.

1. Inspection for admission into the United States.—Control is maintained at border points, seaports, and airports over the entry of persons into the United States.

2. Detention and deportation.—Aliens alleged to be in the United States unlawfully are served with orders to show cause and accorded hearings. Warrants of deportation are issued, served, and executed. Detention facilities are operated and maintained. Initiation of deportation proceeding through order to show cause instead of warrant of arrest started in February 1956. Continued border control reflects in fewer hearings and aliens deported.

Average number of aliens held in detention	1,387	1,300	1,300

3. Naturalization.—Examinations are conducted to determine the qualifications of aliens for naturalization, including applicants for derivative citizenship. Facts and recommendations are presented to naturalization courts, and derivative citizenship is adjudicated by the Service.

Recommendations to courts	150,687	185,000	120,000

4. Patrol for prevention and detection of illegal entry.—This activity also combats smuggling, apprehends aliens illegally in the United States, and guards the international boundaries. Retention of close control requires greater emphasis on examination of conveyances and questioning persons in traffic checks. Decline in apprehensions based on continued tight control and lessened activity near border.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Custody, care and treatment of prisoners in Federal institutions.—This covers the direct care of the prisoners in the 27 institutions in the United States and the 6 small institutions in Alaska. It includes the furnishing of custody, food, clothing, education, welfare services, and transportation expenses upon release. The funds required, exclusive of salaries, are in direct relation to the estimated average number of prisoners expected to be maintained in 1958, which is 20,800 at an estimated cost per man per day of 76 cents compared with 73.5 cents in 1956. The daily per capita cost is expected to increase because of the higher trend in the cost of all commodities. The prison population as of July 26, 1956, was 20,531. The average daily population for 1956 was 20,209 as compared to 20,039 for 1955. The prison population continues to rise.

2. Maintenance and operation of institutions.—This activity reflects the administrative expenses, the cost of providing all utility services, the operation of motor vehicles, the repair and maintenance of all buildings, grounds, and other facilities, and the equipment replacements needed for the institutions. The higher cost of utilities and maintenance and repair supplies, together with the increasing age of the institutions, make necessary the provision of additional funds for 1958.

3. Medical services.—The furnishing of medical, psychiatric, and technical services is accomplished by the assignment of Public Health Service personnel whose salaries and travel expenses are covered here.

PURPOSE AND ORGANIZATION

The Corporation is authorized to establish and operate industries in Federal penal and correctional institutions and two disciplinary barracks under jurisdiction of the Department of Defense (18 U. S. C. 4121–4128). Its purposes are to provide employment for physically fit inmates; provide maximum vocational training for qualified inmates in connection with regular institutional and industrial activities and it operates a placement service to assist released inmates to secure jobs. Products manufactured by the inmates are sold only to other Government agencies and the penal institutions. Earnings from sale of these products pay expenses of the Corporation and have permitted payment of $32.5 million in dividends into the Treasury since January 1, 1935.

BUDGET PROGRAM

During 1958, the industrial program contemplates operation of 53 shops in 24 institutions and is expected to employ 3,918 inmates on a 40-hour-week basis. This includes a new furniture refinishing shop at La Tuna, Tex. During the past year industrial activities were diversified among 32 different lines of industry in 50 shops at 22 locations which include a new tire reconditioning plant at Petersburg, Va. In 1957 a new clothing factory will start operations at the United States Disciplinary Barracks, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and the new furniture refinishing shop at Terminal Island, Calif. It is expected employment will be provided this year for 3,813 inmates in 52 shops in 24 institutions.

In 1958 the vocational training program will continue to operate on the same basic pattern and will provide trade and occupational training for approximately 10,350 enrolled inmates. It is expected the placement service will place 1,900 released inmates in private industry as compared to 1,750 expected to be placed during the present year, and 1,466 placed in 1956.

The following table indicates the breadth and scope of the vocational training program for 1955 and 1956.

In 15 institutions the vocational training programs, in whole or in part, meet the standard for accreditation established by the various State boards of vocational education, apprenticeship councils, and other licensing agencies. In 1956 approximately 1,600 such certificates were issued to inmates enrolled in the various training courses.

Inmates completing these courses may be licensed as barbers, hospital attendants, and airplane engine mechanics. Others received apprenticeship credit in a variety of trades and those who complete accredited vocational training courses are eligible to receive certificates issued by State boards of vocational education.

The meritorious monetary award program provided awards to 5,110 inmates during 1956. The board of directors has increased the amount available for such awards from $220,000 to $240,000 annually.

The 1958 budget includes an administrative expense limitation of $443,000 (an increase of $21,000 over 1957), which is 2 percent of estimated sales.

The 1958 limitation request for vocational expense (exclusive of depreciation and after taking account of related revenues) is $557,000.

FINANCING THE BUDGET PROGRAM

Profit from 1958 operations is expected to result in a minus budgetary expenditure of $2.4 million, a slight increase over the 2 preceding years. Dividends of $4 million were paid into the Treasury during 1956 and it is anticipated that $2.25 million will be paid in 1957 and $2.4 million in 1958.

OPERATING RESULTS

Income.—1958 sales are estimated at $22 million with a resulting net income of $3 million, an improvement over 1957 due to decreased operating expenses. Income of $2.9 million was realized in 1956 from sales of $20.8 million.

Expenses.—Cost of sales, excluding depreciation for 1958 is estimated at $17.1 million, which is $0.8 million up from 1956 reflecting a percentage of cost of sales to sales of about 78 percent.

Retained earnings.—As of June 30, 1956, the Corporation's cumulative earnings amounted to $45.7 million of which $13.2 million has been reinvested in the business in the form of working capital, plant, and equipment. It is expected that retained earnings will increase to $14.5 million by June 30, 1958.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Litigation.—This includes direction and supervision of enforcement of Federal labor standards statutes through court actions and administrative proceedings. During 1956 approval was given to the regional offices for the filing of 690 actions in the district courts of the United States. A further increase in court litigation is expected in 1957 and 1958 primarily because of the increase in the minimum wage.

2. Interpretations and legal advisory services.—The Office provides legal services and advice to departmental officials. During 1956, 9,033 interpretations were rendered on Federal wage, hour, and child labor laws and legal advice was given in connection with 7,053 investigations made under the Mexican farm labor program.

3. Wage determinations.—Predetermination is made of prevailing wages to be paid to laborers and mechanics on public construction contracts. The Office coordinates the administration and enforcement by the Federal contracting agencies of labor-standards provisions in statutes relating to public construction.

In 1956 there were 22,133 wage determinations made on request for contracting agencies. The workload volume in 1957 and 1958 will be higher primarily because of the new Federal-aid highway program.

4. Legislative advisory services.—Provides analyses and interpretations of existing legislation and prepares drafts of proposed legislation for the Department. During 1956 there was an increase of 53 or 15 percent in legislative reports prepared over 1955. Indications are that there will be no reduction in the volume of work during 1957 and 1958.

5. Enforcement of regulatory labor laws (regional offices).—Services rendered at the regional level include interpretations and legal advice to regional office officials and to the public on specific request; and enforcement through court and administrative proceedings of Federal labor standards statutes.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Improving State labor legislation.—This is accomplished by assisting and advising States in labor law administration and the enactment of appropriate labor legislation and by negotiating Federal-State agreements to eliminate duplication in inspection. Assistance was provided to 43 States in 1956 in response to 2,053 requests.

2. Improving conditions of migratory workers.—Involves cooperation with Federal and State agencies and voluntary organizations to improve the working and living conditions of migratory workers; provides secretariat for the President's Committee on Migratory Labor. An increase is requested for 1958 to expand services to the 12 State migratory labor committees and to give assistance to State agencies and citizens' groups working in this field.

3. Reducing industrial accidents.—Involves assistance to State and Federal agencies by advising on inspection techniques and in planning training courses. During 1956, 85 training courses were conducted for 2,234 trainees. Request for 1958 includes funds for expanding activities to the atomic energy industry and conducting the President's Conference on Occupational Safety.

4. Protecting young workers and advancing their employment opportunities.—Includes research activities, serving as a center of information and advisory service in this field; promotes annual back-to-school campaign. In October 1955, 500,000 16- and 17-year-old out-of-school youths were unemployed. Funds are requested to begin a program to encourage local action to help such youths improve their employability.

5. Promoting employment of physically handicapped.—Involves a continuing program of public information and education through the President's Committee to advance the employment of handicapped citizens and cooperates with all groups interested in the employment of the handicapped. During the last year, placement of the physically handicapped increased about 35 percent, from 214,000 to 290,000. An additional $37,000 is requested to increase the overall effectiveness of the program.

6. Registration of labor union data.—Financial and organizational data are required to be filed as a condition of union use of National Labor Relations Board facilities. About 23,400 unions register annually.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Assistance is provided veterans and reservists on training duty to get reinstated with their preservice employers and other employment advantages to which they may be entitled, based on seniority accrued while in military service. Compliance is advanced by informing employers and labor organizations of their reemployment responsibilities. The increase in 1958 is for reducing the backlog of cases to a 1-month workload.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Bureau conducts a program for the maintenance of a high level of skills in the work force through training and apprentice services.

The increase for 1958 will provide a nationwide campaign to stimulate more and better training by industry, undertaken in cooperation with other bureaus of the Department, using manpower and occupational outlook information developed under the skills of the work force program. Communities, industries, and individual plants will be encouraged to take appropriate steps toward skill improvement based on analyses of their training needs. Attention will be drawn to the need for improving the level of skill of the Nation's labor force to meet the needs of economic expansion and technological developments in a national emergency.

1. Training promotion and service to industry.—Management and labor are encouraged and assisted by the Federal and State Governments in organizing and conducting apprentice and other training programs for workers. In 1957 approximately 140,000 establishments, 10,000 union locals, and 2,300 employer associations will participate in the training of more than 230,000 apprentices. This activity is conducted largely by the field staff.

2. Training research and technical services.—Information on skill requirements, technology and appropriate labor standards for on-the-job training programs is developed and disseminated. Training aids and other techniques to increase the effectiveness of industrial training are made available. This activity includes the new training service which will assemble and evaluate training materials for a wide range of occupations, from semiskilled to technical, and establish training materials centers in leading cities. These materials will be assembled from the Department of Defense and other Government agencies, and from private business firms and labor unions. In 1957 this activity has been confined principally to apprenticeable occupations. In 1958, it will cover a wider range of occupations.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Grants are made to the States for administration of the unemployment compensation and employment service programs.

The increase of $20 million is due primarily to increased tax and auditing workloads; increased placement and counseling services to older workers and the handicapped; increased efforts to get better management of the State agencies and to develop more facts on employment and unemployment; and increases in the average annual salary. The average annual salary was $3,913 in 1956 and is expected to rise to $4,150 by the beginning of 1958.

1. Unemployment compensation.—This consists of determining the tax liability of each employer; collecting the taxes and auditing employer's records; maintaining a record of each employee's wages; accepting and processing claims to determine eligibility and the amount and duration of benefits; verifying claimant's continuing eligibility; making benefit payments; and conducting hearings and making decisions on appeals.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Funds are allocated to States for payment of unemployment compensation to eligible veterans who entered the Armed Forces between June 27, 1950, and January 31, 1955. Obligations are estimated to decrease $18 million in 1958. This is due primarily to the President's proclamation of January 1, 1955, which restricts benefits to veterans who served in the Armed Forces before February 1, 1955. In addition, separations from the Armed Forces affecting 1958 payments are expected to be lower. The estimate also includes an amount for unforeseen increases in benefit costs.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Mexican agricultural labor is imported for use in areas having a shortage of domestic agricultural workers. Authorization for this program was extended to June 30, 1959, by the act of August 9, 1955 (69 Stat. 615).

1. Determining Mexican labor requirements.—The agricultural areas needing Mexican workers and the number of workers required are determined. Requests for Mexican workers for 350 areas will be considered for approval in 1958.

2. Supplying Mexican labor requirements.—Workers are recruited in Mexico and transported to centers in the United States where employers contract for their use. In 1956, 428,416 workers were contracted, and an estimated 480,000 will be contracted in 1957 and 490,000 in 1958. To increase the number of workers in 1957, a supplemental appropriation will be proposed. Direct costs such as transportation, subsistence, medical examinations, etc., are charged to the revolving fund. The overall cost, including revolving fund expenses, for supplying a Mexican agricultural worker averaged $11.16 in 1956 and is estimated to be $11.73 in 1957 due to a general increase in costs of transportation, subsistence, and rents.

3. Determining compliance with contract provisions.—Complaints of contract violations are investigated, and housing and other facilities required by the contract are inspected. Inspections will be increased and enforcement strengthened in 1958.

Complaints	4,540	6,000	6,000

For fiscal years 1956 and 1957 the appropriation was supplemented by reimbursements from the War Claims Fund established under the War Claims Act of 1948 for payment of certain claims covering employees of Government contractors and American civilians who were captured by the Japanese. For fiscal year 1958, funds for these costs are incorporated in the annual appropriation. (68 Stat. 1036.)

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Development of programs and materials to improve women's employment opportunities and economic status.—In July 1956 there were 22.3 million women in the labor force comprising 32.1 percent of the total. In 1958, the Bureau will emphasize analyses and distribution of facts on the opportunities for women in new and expanding and certain shortage occupations; a study of training programs; guidance services for young women; and programs to increase the employment opportunities of older women. The 1958 Handbook on Women Workers and bulletins and pamphlets on selected occupations are planned.

2. Advisory services on legislation affecting women workers.—State minimum-wage laws and orders, equal pay for comparable work, standards for hours of work and working conditions, and laws affecting women's civil and political status comprise the subject areas in which the Bureau regularly supplies technical advice and information. The 1958 program emphasizes a study of procedures used by States to implement the wage board provisions in State minimum-wage laws, a study of implementation of the equal pay principle at both the Federal and State levels, and educational activities to promote the principle of equal pay for equal work.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Division obtains compliance with minimum standards respecting wages, hours, and other employment conditions in industries engaged in interstate commerce or the production of goods for commerce and in establishments furnishing goods to the Government.

1. Promotion of compliance and enforcement.—Information media are used to inform employers and employees of their rights and responsibilities under the law. Investigations are made on a selected basis to correct violations and to assist employers in meeting legal requirements and workers in recovering wages due. During 1956, 33,148 establishments representing 4 percent of the total estimated covered establishments were investigated and 56 percent of those investigated were in violation. A total of 112,710 employees were found to be due wages in the amount of $11,085,952, of which employers have agreed to pay $6,051,909. The information and education program was intensified as a result of the amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act in August 1955, and will be continued at an expanded level through 1957 and 1958. Organization and staff changes were made to increase the investigation program level to 67,500 per annum, with primary emphasis directed to those industry areas most directly affected by the amendments, and to conduct special studies designed to establish improved bases for operation and budget planning.

2. Wage standards and determinations.—Staffing and program activities, which serviced 6 industry committees in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands in 1956, were expanded to 13 including 1 in American Samoa, to conform with the recent legislation requiring annual review of all minimum wage rates on these islands. Regulations governing subminimum wages for learners, apprentices, messengers, and handicapped workers have been revised. During 1956, 3,985 applications for subminimum wage certificates were received, and it is estimated that 3,400 will be received during 1957, and 2,800 during 1958. Prevailing wage determinations under the Walsh-Healey Act will be expanded from 5 per year to 7 wage determinations during 1957 and 1958.

3. Regulations and interpretations.—Regulations and interpretations are prepared to give effect to the Fair Labor Standards Act. Future emphasis will continue to be directed to review and revision of regulations and interpretations affected by the 1955 amendments.

4. Economic analysis and statistics.—Economic research and analysis and development of statistical data, necessary in the consideration of administrative problems and legislative proposals, is provided. A minimum wage effects study, as directed by the 1955 amendments has been started to evaluate and appraise the new minimum wage and to determine the ability of employers to absorb wage increases. This study will be completed in 1958. Reports are to be made annually to the Congress.

Fees for each worker contracted are paid by agricultural employers into this fund These fees are used to meet transportation and subsistence costs and other expenses directly involved in importing Mexican farmworkers (7 U S. C. 1461–1468). When the program was established the fee for initially contracting a worker was $15 and the fee for recontracting a worker with another employer was $7.50. These fees which had been successively reduced to $3 and $1, respectively, to return the accumulated surplus to agricultural employers, were increased to $7 and $4 on September 1, 1956. Current fees are expected to cover the cost of importing workers and keep the fund balance adequate for operations.

The Act of August 9, 1955 (69 Stat. 615), extended authority for importing Mexican agricultural workers to June 30, 1959.

Budget program.—In 1957 it is estimated 480,000 Mexican farmworkers will be imported and 490,000 in 1958 at an average cost to the revolving fund of $7.06 in 1957 and $7.10 in 1958 for each worker.

Operating results and financial condition.—Receipts from operations are expected to exceed expenditures by $153,000 in 1958. Retained earnings as of June 30, 1958, are estimated to be $672,892.

INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT

The postal service is financed primarily from postal revenue and that part of expenditures in excess of revenue is financed by appropriation from the general fund of the Treasury. The President's program includes legislative proposals to substantially increase postal revenues and thereby permit the postal service to operate more nearly on a self-sustaining basis and contingent upon this is a further investment for the modernization of facilities and equipment. None of the tables that follow reflects any increases in revenue that may be derived from future legislation to increase postal rates.

The deficit for 1956 was $464 million and deficiencies of $483 million and $651 million are estimated for 1957 and 1958, respectively. After adjustments are made for changes in financing, the average cost for handling a million pieces of mail has been reduced by approximately $1,363 during the past 4 years despite increases in salaries, transportation costs, and mail volume. The estimated increase of $168 million in the deficit for 1958 is due primarily to (1) new legislation which includes the retirement fund contribution of $131 million, and (2) an increase in capital expenditures of $26 million.

Five annual limitations are established on the use of the postal fund: (1) Administration and research, (2) Operations, (3) Transportation, (4) Finance, and (5) Facilities. The money order funds and postal savings funds are accounted for separately as deposit funds and are excluded from the budget tables.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The amount requested under this head for 1958 is $2,326,637,000, an increase of $199,907,000 over 1957, including the expansion of the service to keep pace with the growth of urban and suburban areas and for increased mail volume.

1. Administration of post office operations.—This provides for personnel in the Bureau of Post Office Operations in Washington, the 15 regional offices, the district offices, postmasters, and post office supervisors.

POST OFFICES BY CLASSES—AS OF JUNE 30

Total post offices	39,405	38,316	37,515	37,156	36,806

Additional assistant postmasters are needed to fill positions where these duties are now performed by clerks and additional supervisors are needed because of the general expansion of the service.

2. Mail handling and window service.—This activity includes clerical employees in post offices for the handling of incoming and outgoing mail and window service to the public, including that required in contract stations.

COMPARISON OF AVERAGE EMPLOYMENT OF CLERKS AND MAIL HANDLERS AND WORKLOAD

	Average paid employment	Mail volume (thousands)	Average units per man-year
1954	205,072	52,213,170	254,609
1955	205,153	55,233,564	269,231
1956	204,547	56,441,216	275,933
1957 estimate	205,964	58,024,000	281,719
1958 estimate	207,583	59,662,276	287,414

3. Collection and delivery.—The growth in population and in the number of family units, while reflected in the postal service workload as a whole, has directly affected the carrier service due to the extensions of service required by the dispersion of families to outlying sections. For example, the rate of growth in the outlying parts in metropolitan areas between 1950 and 1955 was seven times as rapid as in the central city areas and this trend continues. Much of this formerly rural territory now qualifies for city delivery. Funds requested in 1958 will provide for extensions in service to these new developments and inauguration of service at new city delivery offices.

NOTE.—1957 does not include employment covered by supplemental proposed for later transmission.

4. Custodial service.—This activity covers the cleaning of Federal and leased quarters used principally by the postal service.

1. Administration of postal finance.—The Bureau of Finance supervises the financial transactions of the postal service including audit and control functions, the money order center at Kansas City, Mo., the procurement, sale, and distribution of stamps and other accountable paper, postal savings, and sale of money orders. The postal service handles approximately $20 billion in transactions annually.

The major task of installing a modern industrial type controllership program has been substantially completed. Punched cards and electronic data processing methods are employed in furnishing management with effective tools for controlling, planning, and measuring operations more effectively.

2. Stamps and accountable paper.—This covers the cost of stamps, postal cards, money-order forms, and postal savings certificates.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This limitation includes purchase, rental, and maintenance of vehicles for local transportation; the leasing and maintenance of buildings; the procurement of supplies and equipment. The requested increase of $37,559,000 will provide for anticipated increase in mail volume, improvement in working conditions, and acquisition of labor-saving devices and equipment.

1. Administration of postal facilities.—This activity covers the general program direction and construction engineering work in Washington headquarters. The increased requirements are due to the full year costs of construction engineers to be hired during 1957.

2. Vehicle service.—This program provides for the maintenance, operation, and procurement of vehicles for use in the collection and delivery of mail. The estimate provides for an increase in hours of use of vehicles because of growth of postal service. It provides for increase in the cost of operation and maintenance of Government-owned vehicles offset by a decrease in cost of operation of contract vehicles. The estimate provides for procurement of 2,800 ¾-ton trucks for replacement and to meet expanding service requirements, 909 bicycles, and 2,390 three-wheel lightweight vehicles to be used to increase the efficiency of carriers in suburban areas.

3. Real property management.—This program covers rents, fuel, utility service, and maintenance, exclusive of custodial salaries, for leased space and for the 3,175 Government-owned buildings having 59,738,000 square feet of space used by the Post Office. It provides $14,911,000 for light, color, and ventilation improvements in federally owned buildings to increase mail handling efficiency. The estimate also includes $4,800,000 for alterations to buildings.

June 30, 1958, estimated	24,100	38,839,000	46,729,000

4. Supply service.—This program covers (a) procurement, maintenance, warehousing, and distribution of supplies and equipment used by the Department, and (b) cost of procurement, manufacture, storage and repair of mail bags; and manufacture and repair of such specialized items as are not readily available from other sources of supply at reasonable costs. Included is an increase in capital equipment of $15,116,000 for equipping new postal facilities and for mechanized equipment such as conveyors and letter-sorting machines, and other modern equipment.

PROPOSED FOR LATER TRANSMISSION

Postal rate increase.—Legislation will be proposed by the President to increase postal rates which will yield approximately $654 million in 1958. A $70 million capital outlay supplemental contingent upon the passage of the rate legislation is also proposed.

Payment for special services.—Legislation has been introduced which will require the Postmaster General to estimate for each fiscal year expenses incurred by the Post Office Department for certain types of mail being carried either without compensation or at reduced rates. The measure would authorize the appropriation of such amounts from the general funds of the Treasury, thereby increasing postal revenues by approximately $28 million.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The object of the foreign buildings program is to provide consolidated office space to house the Foreign Service and other agencies of the United States Government abroad, and living quarters for American employees in localities where suitable facilities are not available. Through this program the Department has acquired real property valued in excess of $150 million, consisting of some 201 office buildings, 128 principal officer residences, 162 residences for senior officers and attachés, and 1,999 staff living units. Since 1946 the program has been financed primarily through the acquisition of foreign currency credits held by the Treasury Department resulting from lend-lease settlements, sale of surplus war property, and other sources. This program also finances property leases of 10 years or more, procurement of initial furniture and furnishings, and repair, maintenance, and operating costs of these facilities.

The purpose of the program for acquisition and construction is generally to replace outmoded or otherwise unsatisfactory Government-owned or leased office space. Such space is replaced with structures that are designed specifically to meet the particular needs of the Foreign Service and other overseas Government operations both from the standpoint of conducting efficient operations and of providing adequate security protection. In addition, housing is provided American employees in localities where housing either is not available or is substandard in relation to American living standards.

Along with the 1957 budget the Department presented to the Congress a 10-year buildings program estimated to require approximately $200 million, principally foreign currency holdings of the Treasury. Of this amount about $100 million is for acquiring office and housing facilities and about $100 million is for operation, maintenance, repair and servicing costs during the same period both for present property holdings and for those being acquired. The status of the program of acquisition and construction is as follows:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This appropriation finances the construction activities of the United States section of the Commission.

1. Rio Grande dams.—Construction of Falcon Dam is functionally complete; only minor miscellaneous cleanup work remaining. Completion of land-acquisition program under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice was not accomplished in 1956 and is to be continued in 1957. The remaining features will be financed with unobligated balance of prior year funds. Prior year funds will finance completion during 1957 of preliminary investigations for determination of the site, capacity, and general plans of the Diablo Dam and Reservoir, the second major international storage structure contemplated by the 1944 water treaty.

2. Lower Rio Grande flood control.—The necessary rights-of-way in the United States for construction of Anzalduas Dam having been acquired by local interests and donated to the Federal Government, construction began in March 1956. The purpose of the dam is to effect equitable diversion into the interior floodways in the two countries of floodwaters in the lower Rio Grande, in excess of the capacity of the channel in the Brownsville-Matamoros area. Acquisition and donation of the rights-of-way necessary for related levee and floodway improvement works necessary to complete the lower Rio Grande flood-control project is expected in 1957.

4. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship is derived from year-end balances of selected resources as reflected in the following table:

	1955 actual	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Selected resources at end of year:
Inventories and items on order:

Decrease in estimated balance of selected resources in 1958 is related to completing Anzalduas Dam. Equipment will be fully depreciated into costs and all contractor's services, materials, and supplies are estimated to be delivered and consumed in construction of the dam.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The primary objective of the international educational exchange program is the promotion of the foreign policy of the United States through the exchange of key persons, selected for their capacity to build up a receptive climate of opinion overseas in which our action and policies can be more accurately interpreted. To realize this objective, exchanges are made between the United States and over 80 foreign countries. Such exchanges include teaching, study, research, professional and governmental observation, lecturing, or the acquiring of specialized practical experience.

In addition to the dollars appropriated for this program, a portion of the foreign currencies generated from sales abroad of United States surplus agricultural commodities are available to finance exchanges of persons. Total resources thus available for such exchanges are shown in the following table:

Appropriated funds	$18,156,076	$20,000,000	$30,000,000

[1] These foreign currencies are set forth in detail in special schedules below.

In addition to providing assistance to American-sponsored schools abroad and promoting exchange projects under non-Government auspices, these funds provide grants for United States and foreign participants, as follows:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Bretton Woods Agreements Act of July 31, 1945, authorized the acceptance of membership in the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the subscription of $3,175 million toward its total capital of $9,100 million.

The United States paid the first 20 percent of its subscription in cash and non-interest-bearing, nonnegotiable notes, amounting to $635 million. The remaining 80 percent amounting to $2,540 million will not be called unless required to meet the Bank's obligations. Calls on unpaid subscriptions must be a uniform percentage by member countries of the amounts subscribed.

The appropriation estimate for the fiscal year 1958 as compared with the 1957 appropriation reflects an increase of $148,000.

1. Processing deposits of withheld tax payments.—Employers and certain business enterprises deposit monthly, with designated banks, excise, withheld income, and withheld social security taxes to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States. The Federal Reserve banks, acting as fiscal agents of the Treasury, issue depositary receipts which the employers attach to their returns as evidence of payment of taxes. The proportionate share of the expense relating to the issuance and verification of these receipts is charged against the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund. The work volume is estimated at 8,500,000 depositary receipts in 1957 and 8,600,000 in 1958, compared to 8,338,512 in 1956.

2. Financial reporting and maintenance of the Government's central accounts.—Central accounts include control accounts on appropriations, receipts, and expenditures and provide data for financial statements. This activity also includes the preparation and publication of financial reports on the Government's fiscal operations, such as the annual Combined Statement of Receipts, Expenditures, and Balances; the Monthly Treasury Statement; the Secretary's Annual Report, and the Treasury Bulletin. The volume of accounting items is estimated at 5,335,600 for the fiscal years 1957 and 1958 as compared with 5,388,612 in 1956.

3. Accounting and reporting development and internal audit.—Technical accounting advice and assistance are furnished all bureaus and offices of the Treasury. In addition, staff participates in the governmentwide accounting improvement program. This activity also includes internal audit in the Bureau and coordination of Treasury fiscal internal audit.

4. Processing investments, loans, claims, collections, and surety bonds.—Investments in interest-bearing securities are processed for certain funds, such as the Federal old-age and survivors trust fund, the unemployment trust fund, the veterans insurance trust fund, and various Government retirement funds. The work includes purchase and disposal of securities, processing capital stock subscriptions of Government corporations, payment of international and other claims, and examination of the financial condition of companies issuing surety bonds in favor of the United States. The number of transactions is estimated at 206,900 for 1957 and 209,900 for 1958 as compared with 203,258 for 1956.

5. Supervision of the Federal depositary system.—Banking facilities are provided for all agencies of the Government through the designation of selected institutions to act as official depositaries of the Government's funds. Workload is expected to increase in 1958 as follows:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Division of Disbursement, through its Washington and regional offices, makes payments for civilian Federal agencies, except the Post Office Department and certain Government corporations, and issues savings bonds for Federal employees under the payroll savings plan.

The additional cost in 1958 is due to an increase of 18.1 million payments over the number to be processed in 1957. More than one-half of the increase in work volume, 9.4 million, is the direct result of the social security amendments of 1956, Public Law 880, approved August 1, 1956. The Division also makes payments for certain agencies and corporations on a reimbursable basis.

The funds required are determined by multiplying the volume of work or the number of units to be processed by the unit cost per item as shown in the following tables:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This Office (a) receives, keeps, and disburses the moneys of the United States; (b) receives, stores, issues, transfers, and retires currency; (c) issues and redeems Government securities; (d) maintains fiscal accounts; and (e) prepares financial statements and reports.

1. Check payment and reconciliation.—This consists of maintaining checking accounts of Government disbursing officers and Government-owned corporations; processing documents crediting Government disbursing accounts; performing centralized payment function of all checks drawn on the Treasurer of the United States; reconciling deposits claimed and checks issued as reported by disbursing officers with deposits credited and checks paid by the Treasurer; and determining the outstanding checks in each disbursing account.

The continuing volume of Federal military expenditures and the increasing checkload for social security and tax refund payments have resulted in a constant increase in workload. Beginning August 1, 1956, an integrated electronic system was installed in the Office of the Treasurer to accomplish both payment and reconciliation of all checks drawn on the Treasurer. The changeover is taking place in progressive stages during 1957 and will be in full operation in 1958.

In addition to determining, assessing, and collecting all internal revenue taxes the Service interprets and enforces the internal revenue laws; refunds any overpayment of tax or erroneous collections; prepares and distributes tax instructions, regulations, forms, and stamps; and performs other duties under statutes related to internal revenue.

1. Rulings, technical planning, and special technical services.—The Service interprets statutory provisions, issues rulings, and prepares regulations and Treasury decisions. It conducts continuing research on tax loopholes, inequities, and related problems and provides special technical services and negotiates tax treaties with foreign governments. The increases in 1957 workload are due to the demands created by the 1954 Internal Revenue Code.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Activities include manufacture of coins, receipt of deposits of gold and silver bullion, safeguarding of the Government's holdings of monetary metals, and refining of gold and silver bullion (see silver profit and minor coinage profit funds).

The amount requested for 1958 is $4,450,000, an increase of $796,500 over 1957, due chiefly to increased coinage and return of lend-lease silver.

1. Manufacture of coins (domestic).—Production of coins is the major mint activity. Funds requested will permit production of approximately 1,800 million coins. The increased coinage program for 1958 reflects the high demand for coin. Mint inventories of coin have been low for several months and the Federal Reserve banks have been requisitioning coins from mints as quickly as produced. The 1958 coinage program is based on expanded operations at Philadelphia, which it is estimated will produce 40 percent of the total production, as compared with 24 percent estimated for 1957. Consideration has been given to the reduction in cost at Philadelphia which will be achieved from use of modernized melting, rolling, and blanking equipment, and to lower overhead cost per unit made possible by the larger production program.

Uncurrent coins received (pieces)	31,353,520	31,000,000	31,000,000

3. Protection of monetary metals and coins.—Protection of the Government's holdings of gold and silver bullion and coin is maintained by armed guards and modern protective devices.

4. Refining gold and silver bullion.—Gold and silver bullion are refined in order to facilitate accountability, protection, and storage; and to bring the bullion up to a degree of purity suitable for use in the world markets. Charges are made against depositors of gold and silver for refinery services, but receipts are not available for payment of refining costs. During fiscal year 1956, $170,008 were deposited to miscellaneous receipts.

6. Equipment acquisitions.—These acquisitions are ordinarily for normal replacement. However, the 1957 acquisitions are primarily equipment, ordered in prior years, necessary to modernize coinage operations at the Philadelphia Mint.

7. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship is derived from year-end balances of selected resources and from applicable adjustments, as reflected in the following table:

	1955 actual	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate

Costs financed from obligations of other years, net (−)			−490,000

During 1957 it is anticipated that $490,000 of costs will be financed from obligations of other years due to delivery of equipment ordered in 1955 and 1956. The decrease in stores inventory of $140,134 is due to transfer of this amount to the silver profit fund. No increase or decrease is anticipated in 1958.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Coast Guard enforces maritime law, provides limited security of ports and waterfront facilities, saves life and property, provides navigational aids to maritime commerce in navigable waters, promotes the safety of the American Merchant Marine and maintains its military readiness to serve as a part of the Navy in time of war or national emergency.

DIRECT PROGRAM BY ACTIVITIES

1. Vessel operations.—Multifunctional vessels are strategically stationed along the coasts and inland waterways for search and rescue; tending aids to navigation; operating an international ice observation and patrol service in the North Atlantic Ocean; performing limited icebreaking in navigable lakes, rivers, canals and in harbors; and for law enforcement.

2. Aviation operations.—Aircraft are maintained at air stations and detachments for search and rescue; logistic support in isolated areas; Federal law enforcement; and aerial reconnaissance for the international ice patrol.

Cargo (ton-miles)	869,033	896,000	912,500

3. Shore stations and aids operations.—Bases and lifeboat stations are strategically situated for search, rescue, and law enforcement and for maintaining aids to navigation. The heavy increase in small boat traffic requires that enforcement of motorboat regulations and other safety laws be strengthened in 1958. Port security units patrol major harbor entrances; control anchorage areas; supervise the loading and unloading of dangerous cargoes; and screen merchant seamen and longshoremen to keep subversive elements from merchant vessels and critical waterfront areas. Critical waterfront areas have been patrolled since inauguration of the port security program in 1951. The number of vessels to be screened is increasing steadily.

Buoys, lighthouses, lightships, fog signal stations, light attendant stations, radiobeacons, and loran stations are maintained as navigational aids in the waters of the United States, its Territories and military bases overseas. Two additional light attendant stations and 311 additional unmanned aids will be operated in 1958. Radio stations provide rapid communication incident to Coast Guard operations. Marine inspection offices and detachments administer laws and issue regulations on safety equipment and inspection of merchant vessels and on licensing and certification of Merchant Marine officers and crews. They review plans for construction or alteration of merchant vessels, investigate marine accidents, and hear disciplinary cases. Additional passenger vessels are placed under Coast Guard inspection in 1958 by Public Law 519, approved May 10, 1956.

5. Training and recruiting facilities.—This activity includes the Coast Guard Academy for the training of cadets and officer candidates, recruiting stations, training units for recruits and prospective petty officers and outside training programs.

6. Administration and operational control.—In addition to executive direction, this activity provides for internal auditing and inspection; and for administrative services to operating units.

7. Other military personnel expense.—This activity provides for certain military personnel expenses such as social security, the pay of personnel in hospitals and in transit; expense of permanent changes of stations, including travel of dependents and transportation of household effects; and expense of military separation cost, recreation, death gratuities, and burial.

8. Supporting programs.—This activity consists of programs for procurement of ammunition and maintenance of ordnance; vehicle, boat, and electronic equipment replacement; transportation of materials; and printing. These programs have such general applicability that they cannot properly be charged directly to units.

9. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship between direct costs and direct obligations is derived from year-end balances of selected resources and applicable adjustments as reflected in the following table:

	1955 actual	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Direct program:

As of July 1, 1956, inventory valued at $1,503,052 was awaiting disposal. During 1958 it is estimated inventories will be reduced $997,530 through improved inventory control.

Undelivered orders are estimated to increase appreciably between 1956 and 1957 due to reestablishment of obligations payable from lapsed appropriations. Advances are estimated to decrease between 1956 and 1957 as a result of requiring work formerly financed by advances to be handled as reimbursements.

Property and service transferred in (−) without charge, net, represents aircraft equipment and parts received from the acquisition, construction, and improvement appropriation, and long lead time procurement items paid from lapsed appropriations.

REIMBURSABLE PROGRAM BY ACTIVITIES

10. Operation of ocean stations.—The operation of 6 ocean stations (4 in the Atlantic and 2 in the Pacific) on the basis of 3 cutters per station, is financed by the Department of Defense as a defense requirement. The vessels perform the dual function of ocean station duty and search and rescue.

11. Miscellaneous services to other accounts.—Various activities are financed by other agencies. They include, in part, operation of 1 vessel for United States Information Agency; operation of 2 ocean-going tugs for the Department of the Navy; and operation of 3 temporary loran stations in 1956 and 1957 for the Department of the Navy.

12. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship between reimbursable costs and reimbursable obligations is derived from year-end balances of selected resources and applicable adjustments as reflected in the following table:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This appropriation provides for acquisition, construction or improvement of vessels, aircraft, shore stations and aids to navigation.

DIRECT PROGRAM BY ACTIVITIES

1. Vessels.—Construction of ten 95-foot boats is provided to replace 10 of the 61 overage 83-foot patrol boats in use for search and rescue, law enforcement and harbor entrance patrol duties.

2. Aviation facilities.—Procurement of 4 long-range land planes and 2 helicopters is required to replace 4 PB1G's which are overage and 2 helicopters which were lost in 1956 crashes.

3. Shore stations and navigational aids.—Replacement family quarters will be constructed at one isolated light station, and one radio station will be relocated. Provision is made for establishing aids to navigation to mark Army engineers' improvements to channels and harbors, and for aids required by natural altering of channels and changing needs of commerce.

4. Repair and supply facilities.—At the Coast Guard Yard, inadequate steam boilers will be replaced and the powerhouse enlarged. Also included are repairs to 4 depots consisting of rebuilding 2 deteriorated bulkheads, 1 buoy dock, and replacement of a worn-out fender system. Provisions are made to build a Coast Guard facility on lower Manhattan Island, N. Y., since New York City is taking back the space at pier 9, East River, now utilized as a mooring.

6. Loran to meet Department of Defense requirements.—Loran construction since 1956 has been financed by the Department of Defense as a reimbursable program. Direct costs incurred are on projects authorized in prior years when this was budgeted under Coast Guard.

7. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship between direct costs and direct obligations is derived from year-end balances of selected resources as reflected in the following table:

The principal cause of variations between fiscal years has been the placement of orders for aircraft with the Navy with subsequent delivery in later years.

REIMBURSABLE PROGRAM BY ACTIVITIES

8. Loran to meet Department of Defense requirements.—Funds are being provided by the Department of Defense for the expansion of the loran chain as follows: In 1956, 7 stations; in 1957, 6 stations; in 1958, 10 stations with support facilities.

9. Aviation facilities.—Overage and obsolete aircraft were sold in 1957.

10. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship between reimbursable costs and reimbursable obligations is derived from year-end balances of selected resources and applicable adjustments as reflected in the following table:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Reserve training program is designed to build up a trained Reserve component to the mobilization manpower requirement of 40,000 trained officers and men.

1. Trainee expense.—The program for fiscal 1958 provides for an increase from 8,525 to 12,540 in the number of reservists to receive training of the type established by the Reserve Forces Act of 1955. This is the second phase in a planned buildup to provide 25,200 officers and men in training by July 1, 1960.

2. Operation of training facilities.—Training stations, vessels and Organized Reserve training units are utilized to provide drill and active-duty training to reservists. During 1958, 2 training stations are to be utilized for the first time as Reserve training facilities, while the level of training at a third station will be increased. Also, 1 additional vessel and 26 additional organized training units will be operated in 1958.

3. Construction of training facilities.—Expansion of training facilities in 1958 will consist of outfitting of 26 new Organized Reserve training units, and activation of a second training vessel and expansion and renovation of 2 training stations. In addition, numerous minor service facilities must be equipped to provide active-duty training. Expansion of training facilities at Cape May receiving center and the activation of the first training vessel will be completed and costed in 1957. Six Organized Reserve training units, scheduled for establishment in 1957, have been deferred until 1958 in order to pay the increase in the base pay of trainees authorized by Public Law 490, approved April 23, 1956.

4. Administration.—The augmented training program requires additional administrative personnel, a further intensified recruiting effort and pipeline personnel in 1958.

5. Relation of costs to obligations.—The relationship is derived from year-end balances of selected resources and applicable adjustments as reflected in the following table:

	1955 actual	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Selected resources at end of year (inventories and items on order):
Undelivered orders (appropriation balances obligated for goods and services on order not yet received)	$35, 224	$255, 684	$200, 000	$200, 000
Advances (payments for goods and services on order not yet received)	175	607, 261	----------	----------
Total selected resources at end of year	35, 399	862, 945	200, 000	200, 000
Selected resources at start of year (−)		−35, 399	−862, 945	−200, 000
Adjustments of selected resources reported at start of year		9, 868	----------	----------
Increase or decrease (−) in selected resources		837, 414	−662, 945	----------
Property or service transferred in (−) without charge, net		−57, 261	----------	----------
Costs financed from obligations of other years, net (−)		----------	−662, 945	----------
Obligations incurred for costs of other years, net		780, 153	----------	----------

No change is anticipated in the balances of undelivered orders and advances at the end of 1957 and 1958. The increases between 1955 and 1956 result from expansion of training facilities and reactivating a training vessel late in 1956 which will not be completed until 1957.

Inventory in 1956 valued at $57,261 was donated from operating expenses for use in reactivating a Reserve training vessel authorized in 1956.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The balances of lapsed general fund appropriations were consolidated in this account and used for payment of claims which would have been charged to the respective appropriations if they were still open (31 U. S. C. 712 a and b). Beginning in 1957, claims against lapsed accounts are being charged to accounts established for that purpose by the agencies administering the various appropriations (70 Stat. 647).

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

At the end of each year, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates the excess of Federal unemployment tax receipts, during the year, over administrative expenditures for unemployment compensation and employment service administration. This appropriation transfers the estimated excess into the Unemployment Trust Fund, where it is allocated to the Federal unemployment account to build up a loan account and is thereafter allocated to the trust accounts of the various States. Payments covering 2 years were made during 1956 to place the accounts on a current basis (68 Stat. 668).

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

The following corporations and agencies, respectively, are hereby authorized to make such expenditures, within the limits of funds and borrowing authority available to each such corporation or agency and in accord with law, and to make such contracts and commitments without regard to fiscal year limitations as provided by section 104 of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, as may be necessary in carrying out the programs set forth in the Budget for the fiscal year [1957] 1958 for each such corporation or agency, except as hereinafter provided: (Treasury-Post Office Appropriation Act, 1957.)

Federal Facilities Corporation

Federal Facilities Corporation Fund

Federal Facilities Corporation was created on June 30, 1954, under the provisions of the Rubber Act of 1948 and Executive Order 10539, primarily to administer the operations of the Government-owned synthetic rubber facilities until disposal of the properties to private interests was completed. In addition, the Corporation was designated to conduct the operation of the Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex.

Synthetic rubber program.—Except for one alcohol butadiene plant at Louisville, Ky., which is under lease to a private operator, and a small catalyst manufacturing facility in Baltimore, Md., the program to transfer the synthetic rubber-producing facilities to private ownership has been completed. In Executive Order 10678, dated September 20, 1956, the President named the Corporation as successor to the Rubber Producing Facilities Disposal Commission for the purpose of administering the contracts entered into in disposing of the synthetic rubber plants.

Tin program.—Public Law 608, approved June 22, 1956, provides for operation of the tin smelter until January 31, 1957. It also authorizes and directs the Corporation to take steps immediately to sell or lease the tin-producing facilities. Should no contract of sale or lease be effected by January 31, 1957, the tin smelter will be reported as excess property for transfer and disposal in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949.

Administrative expenses.—Administrative expenses consist of salaries and related costs of personnel engaged in the supervision and control of the Corporation's functions, together with rental costs of office space. A limitation of $425,000 for administrative expenses has been authorized for 1957. For 1958, a limitation of $50,000 is requested.

Operating results and financial condition.—During 1956, the Corporation paid into the Treasury $45 million from liquidation proceeds. In addition, the equity of Treasury was reduced $2.8 million by transfer to the National Science Foundation consisting of $2.2 million in cash and $0.6 million in other assets. Payments to Treasury of $38.7 million and $0.7 million are anticipated during 1957 and 1958, respectively, thereby reducing the investment of the United States Government to $17.2 million at the end of 1957 and $16 million at the end of 1958.

The Secretary of the Treasury is responsible for completing the liquidation of Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended. The programs being liquidated include the following: (a) The assets acquired under Reconstruction Finance Corporation's former lending programs, exclusive of assets transferred to other agencies in accordance with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Liquidation Act and Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1954; (b) certain assets acquired by Reconstruction Finance Corporation in its World War II activities; and (c) the assets of the Smaller War Plants Corporation.

Budget expenditures.—The net budget expenditures anticipated from liquidation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation programs in 1957 and 1958 are as follows:

Excluded from the table are loans and commitments transferred to other agencies in accordance with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Liquidation Act and Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1954, and commitments to participate in bank loans on a deferred basis.

Administrative expenses.—A limitation of $1,060,000 was placed on administrative expenses for 1957. The reduction to $915,000 in the 1958 request is due to the smaller workload anticipated as further progress is made in liquidating the Corporation's assets.

Operating results and financial condition.—The former lending activities of Reconstruction Finance Corporation were financed from (a) $100 million of capital stock issued to and held by the Secretary of the Treasury, (b) retained earnings to the extent of $250 million (after reasonable reserves for losses), and (c) borrowings from the Treasury as needed.

On June 30, 1956, the investment of the United States Government included the $100 million of capital stock and retained earnings of $26,193,788. All borrowings from Treasury were repaid in 1955. It is anticipated that payment of liquidation proceeds to the Treasury will amount to $82,881,257 in 1957 and $14,614,000 in 1958. LIQUIDATION OF WORLD WAR II ASSETS

Reconstruction Finance Corporation Liquidation Fund, Treasury—World War II Assets

The liquidation of the assets acquired by Reconstruction Finance Corporation in its World War II activities is being carried out under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Budget program.—On June 30, 1956, the total assets to be liquidated amounted to $7.2 million, and it estimated that the value of the unliquidated assets will have been reduced to $6.5 million by June 30, 1957, and to $6 million by June 30, 1958.

The administrative expenses of liquidating the remaining World War II assets are estimated to be $60,000 in 1957 and $50,000 in 1958.

Operating results and financial condition.—The receivables of $8.2 million to be written off in 1957 include $7.7 million in a conditional obligation of the Department of the Navy which was canceled by Public Law 978, approved August 3, 1956.

Assets totaling $4.3 million were transferred in 1956 without reimbursement to the Department of the Air Force in accordance with Public Law 388, approved August 12, 1955.

To the extent that funds realized from the liquidation of World War II assets exceed requirements of the program, they are paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. It is estimated that payments of $2 million will be made in both 1957 and 1958, thereby reducing the equity of the Treasury to $10.9 million.

Civil Defense Program Fund, Treasury

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase securities or make loans (including participations therein and guaranties thereof) to aid in financing projects for civil defense purposes upon certification by the Federal Civil Defense Administrator (sec. 409, Federal Civil Defense Act, and sec. 104, Reconstruction Finance Corporation Liquidation Act). Investments under the program are limited to a total of $250 million outstanding at any one time. The operations authorized are financed by borrowings from the Treasury.

Budget program.—Loans outstanding on June 30, 1956, amounted to $1,962,566, and undisbursed loan commitments totaled $2,820,000. All undisbursed loan commitments represent agreements to participate on a deferred basis in loans made by banks. All commitments made have been to assist in financing construction of hospitals.

It is anticipated that there will be no additional loans authorized during 1957 and 1958. To the extent possible, outstanding loans and commitments will be placed with private financial institutions. There are no loan disbursements anticipated for 1957 and 1958. Repayments are estimated at $176,566 and $177,000 for 1957 and 1958, respectively.

Financing the budget program.—Borrowings from the Treasury amounted to $1.9 million at the end of 1956. Repayments are expected to reduce outstanding borrowings to $1.6 million and $1.4 million at the end of 1957 and 1958, respectively.

Operating results.—Income from interest and fees exceeded expenses by $74,274 in 1956. Net income for 1957 and 1958 is estimated at $60,000 and $55,000, respectively. Accumulated net earnings are expected to reach $253,411 on June 30, 1958.

Fund for Payment of Government Losses in Shipment

This revolving fund was created as self-insurance to cover claims resulting from losses in shipment of Government property such as coin, currency, and securities. Since these claims are only partially offset by recoveries, the resulting deficit has gradually increased, and it is expected to be $853,908 at the end of 1958 (5 U. S. C. 134).

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing designs, manufactures and supplies all major evidences of a financial character issued by the United States. It is the sole source of United States currency and Federal Reserve notes, certificates of indebtedness, and United States bonds, as well as most of the minor evidences of a financial character issued by the United States, such as postage, internal revenue, customs and savings stamps. In addition the Bureau prints checks, commissions, certificates, permits, warrants, etc. The Bureau also prints bonds, postage and internal revenue stamps for the governments of insular possessions.

The Bureau finances its operations out of reimbursements received from other agencies for all direct and indirect costs, including administrative expenses (31 U. S. C. 181–181e).

Budget program.—The anticipated work volume is based on estimates of requirements submitted by the agencies served. The program comprises the following activities:

1. Engraving and printing—(a) Currency.—The anticipated deliveries in 1957 and 1958 reflect increases of 6 percent and 20 percent, respectively, over deliveries made in 1956.

(b) Stamps.—The estimated production requirements have increased approximately 3 percent in 1957 and 5 percent in 1958.

(c) Paper checks, commissions, certificates, etc.—The production of paper checks will be practically discontinued in the fiscal years 1957 and 1958 due to general Government use of checks in punchcard form in accordance with Treasury Department Circular No. 973, dated December 30, 1955. The production of commissions, certificates, etc., is estimated to decrease 21 percent in 1957 and increase 11 percent in 1958, as compared with 1956.

(d) Securities.—The anticipated production reflects an approximate increase of 7 percent in 1957 and 10 percent in 1958 over the 1956 requirements.

2. Operation and maintenance of the incinerator and space utilized by other agencies.—Charges are made to other agencies, on an actual cost basis, for use of the incinerator and for the cost of maintenance services provided for the space they occupy in the Bureau's buildings.

3. Card checks.—Based on estimated requirements of the agencies served, the Bureau negotiates a single contract with a commercial firm for the purchase of all Government checks in punchcard form.

Operating results and financial condition.—Bureau operations during fiscal year 1956 resulted in net income of $24,721. This amount will be retained to partially offset the loss of $35,164 incurred in the fiscal year 1955. The remaining deficit of $10,443 will be recovered from any net income accruing in subsequent years, in accordance with provisions of 31 U. S. C. 181–181e. Budget expenditures are expected to exceed budget receipts in the amount of $1,342,210 in 1958.

The capital of the fund is expected to remain at $25.3 million represented by an appropriation of $3.3 million and donated assets of $22 million.

COAST GUARD

Coast Guard Supply Fund

This fund finances the procurement of commissary supplies, uniform clothing and other staple items (14 U. S. C. 650). It is reimbursed as issues are made.

Budget program.—Sales of materials are as follows:

Commissary supplies	$6,318,509	$9,650,000	$10,300,000
Uniform clothing	1,112,182	2,000,000	2,200,000
Other stores	2,300,024	2,500,000	2,800,000
Total	9,730,715	14,150,000	15,300,000

On July 1, 1956, the supply fund bought the inventories and other assets of the commuted ration messes for $131,703. As a result, the sales of commissary supplies will increase from the 1956 level of $6.3 million to $10.3 million in 1958. The increase in clothing sales results from issues to increasing numbers of recruits under the expanding reserve training program. The increase in other stores issues results from Public Law 1014, approved August 7, 1956, which authorizes transfer to the supply fund of stocks of staple items for which there is a repetitive demand.

Operating results and financial condition.—During 1957 and 1958, it is estimated that sales will be entirely offset by cost of goods sold. The investment of the United States Government is estimated at $6,456,802 at the end of 1958 composed of paid-in capital of $6,388,402, and retained earnings of $68,400.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

The District of Columbia constitutes a political entity in which are exercised not only municipal but also county and State functions, such as public education, administration of justice, promotion of family welfare, care of the indigent, custody of mental defectives and delinquents, protection of the interests of labor, metropolitan area planning, etc.

Congress is empowered "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" on behalf of the District of Columbia as the seat of government of the United States. Congress acts in municipal matters as a city council, and in dealing with the broader aspects of the local government, as a county board and a State legislature. In this connection, Congress enacts measures to provide revenues from residents of the District and appropriates the money thus raised to carry on the government of the District of Columbia. District revenues from all sources are covered into the United States Treasury and credited either to the general fund, the highway fund, the water fund, the sanitary sewage works fund, the motor vehicle parking fund, or a trust fund, and no expenditure can be made from any of these funds, other than trust funds, without specific appropriation by Congress.

Under the law, the District estimates of appropriation are submitted to the Bureau of the Budget for incorporation in the Budget of the United States. The Bureau, however, does not examine the estimates of the District in minute detail, but confines its attention more to matters of policy which concern the Federal Government and present and proposed local revenue measures required to balance the District budget.

The detailed estimates for 1958 include requests for the fourth year of the public works program. This construction will extend over a 10-year period and will provide increased water supply, sewers, highways and bridges, schools, hospitals, and other buildings.

The estimates of revenues for the general, highway, water, sanitary sewage works, motor vehicle parking, and trust funds are found in supporting statement No. 1. Estimates of obligations for the same funds are shown in supporting statement No. 2. Attention is also directed to the summary of operations table at the beginning of this chapter.

GENERAL FUND

Revenues accruing to the general fund of the District of Columbia are used to finance the administrative offices, retirement funds, schools, libraries, police, fire, health, recreation, welfare, corrections, sanitation, public building construction, and other activities. These revenues are realized from real, personal, and other property taxes; sales and gross receipts taxes on alcoholic beverages, cigarettes, insurance, motor vehicles, public utilities, gross sales, and other sources; licenses and permits; individual, unincorporated business, and corporation income taxes; inheritance and estate taxes; certain earnings and miscellaneous revenues; and the Federal payment. The largest item of revenue in the general fund comes from realty and personal property taxes, and amounts to approximately 39 percent of the total estimated revenues. The levy is based on an estimated assessed valuation of $2,368 million taxed at the rate of $2.30 per $100 for realty and $2 per $100 for personal property. The estimated valuation is $54 million higher in 1958 than for the current fiscal year.

The estimate of general fund revenue available for 1958, including the presently authorized Federal payment of $23 million and a surplus of $2,565,495 from 1957, totals $160,305,495, which amount is $25,563 greater than the estimated funds required for 1958.

In 1956 and 1957 the appropriated Federal payments were $5 million less than the authorized amount. In accordance with the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954, this amount can be requested in subsequent years.

General fund estimates of appropriation for 1958 are $161,623,732 and show an overall increase of $7,942,172 or approximately 5.2 percent. This increase results from an increase in operating expenses of $8,026,701 and a decrease in capital outlay of $84,529. The increase in operating expenses results largely from increased costs at institutions, staffing of new buildings, increased workload, and improvement of service.

Although capital outlay in the general fund shows a decrease of $84,529, after adjustments are made for deferred appropriations, the amount available for expenditure in 1958 is $16,875,200 against $16,549,229 for 1957 or an increase of $325,971. The largest items in capital outlay provide for new schools, warehouses, stormwater sewers, a branch library in Washington Highlands, a new repair shop and engine house for the Fire Department, a chapel at the Reformatory, and the preparation of plans for the new West Administration Building.

HIGHWAY FUND

Highway fund revenues are realized from a gasoline tax, part of the motor vehicle registration tax, motor vehicle fees of various types, and paving assessments. The estimated revenues from these sources for 1958, including available surplus and a Federal loan of $13,661,000, total $30,355,599 which is $65,599 in excess of the amount of the estimated obligations.

Estimates of appropriation chargeable to the highway fund for 1958 show an overall increase of $7,696,074 or 34 percent over the 1957 estimates. The increase is largely reflected in capital outlay in the Department of Highways and represents accelerated programs to conform with the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956.

WATER FUND

Water fund revenues are derived from the sale of water to residents of the District of Columbia, to Arlington County, Va., and to the Federal Government, and from miscellaneous receipts. The total revenue availability in the water fund, including Federal loans of $1.6 million, amounts to $10,229,189, which will be $114,388 in excess of the estimated obligations for 1958.

The estimates of appropriation for the water fund for 1958 amount to $10,114,801 which is a decrease of $3,270,069 under the 1957 estimates (approximately 32 percent). This is in accordance with the 10-year public works program which scheduled a decrease in water fund expenditures for the fourth year of operation.

SANITARY SEWAGE WORKS FUND

Revenues accrue to this fund from a charge based on the amount of water used by both private consumers and the Federal Government. There will also be an assessment for installation of sanitary sewers and payments from the State of Maryland. This total revenue availability will amount to $6,332,231, which leaves a surplus of $75,443. This will be a decrease of $4,108,678 under 1957, and reflects the completion of the major portion of the sewage treatment plant.

MOTOR VEHICLE PARKING FUND

This fund is derived from parking meter receipts and rents from parking areas and is used to pay the administrative expenses of that agency and is available for the acquisition, creation, and operation of public off-street parking facilities as a necessary incident to insuring in the public interest the free circulation of traffic in and through the District. An increase of $284,500 is requested for 1958, which will be used to expand the fringe parking program. It is estimated that the surplus at the end of 1958 will amount to $1,377,489.

2. Firefighting.—The present firefighting force of 31 engine companies, 17 truck companies, 2 rescue squads, and 1 fireboat is rated class 1 by the National Board of Fire Underwriters. This highest rating is shared only by three other cities in the Nation.

It evaluates new firefighting appliances and techniques and makes appropriate recommendations for their consideration and adoption. It also conducts inservice training at company quarters of personnel assigned thereto.

6. Medical services.—Medical treatment is provided for personnel of the Metropolitan Police Department, White House and Park Police, and Fire Department at the clinic, patients' homes, hospitals, and scenes of emergency. Physical examinations are made of civilian eligibles being considered for appointment to the District government service.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Assistance to veterans and their dependents in establishing eligibility for their rights, benefits, and opportunities afforded them by veterans legislation that has been approved and passed by Congress is given. It is estimated that laws extending benefits to all eligible veterans and their dependents as well as an increase in legislation now pending in several States for Korean bonuses, will increase the workload in 1958. In 1956, 98,219 visits were made.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Juvenile court.—The court has exclusive jurisdiction in matters involving dependent and delinquent children, and has concurrent jurisdiction with the United States district court in matters of support of legitimate family members in destitute circumstances. The court secures for each child under its jurisdiction such care and guidance, preferably in his own home, as will serve the child's welfare and the best interests of the community. In addition, it has jurisdiction in matters involving children born out of wedlock, violations of child-labor laws, compulsory-education laws, and jurisdiction over adults charged with contributing to the delinquency of minors. The 1958 budget provides for an estimated 25-percent increase in workload.

2. Municipal court.—The court has original jurisdiction concurrently with the United States district court with respect to violations of municipal ordinances, and crimes and offenses not punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, except libel, conspiracy, and violations of the post-office and pension laws of the United States. It has exclusive jurisdiction of civil action, including counterclaims and cross-claims, in which the claimed value of personal property or the debt or damages claimed does not exceed $3,000. Divorce, annulment, maintenance, adoption, custody, and contempt proceedings are handled by the domestic-relations branch established in 1956. The operation of the central violations bureau is provided.

3. Municipal court of appeals.—Appeals from the municipal and juvenile courts are reviewed and decided. Miscellaneous orders and decisions of various District of Columbia administrative agencies are also considered. Appeals under the Motor Vehicle Safety Responsibility Act are also heard. During 1956, 190 appeals were considered and terminated, and approximately 500 motions were disposed of. The 1958 budget provides for an anticipated increase in the number of appeals of right resulting from domestic-relations cases (Public Law 486).

4. District of Columbia tax court.—Appeals from assessments made by the taxing authority of the District of Columbia are heard and decided. During 1956 the court disposed of 51 appeals, of which 16 involved inheritance taxes, 19 real-estate taxes, 5 personal-property taxes, 11 franchise and income taxes, 6 excise taxes, and 15 sales and use taxes.

5. United States courts.—Provision is made for payment of services rendered the District by the United States courts (United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and the United States District Court for the District of Columbia) and for services rendered by the Department of Justice (offices of the United States attorney and the United States marshal for the District of Columbia). The General Services Administration is also reimbursed for one-half the cost of operating, maintaining, and repairing the Federal Courts Building.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. Executive direction.—This covers planning and broad control of institutions and services of the department.

2. Custody and care of prisoners.—It is estimated an average of 4,650 prisoners will be confined during 1958. Of the total prisoners confined it is estimated that approximately 4,150 will be District prisoners and that 500 will be Federal prisoners. These estimates provide an allowance of $2.86 per day per prisoner for the estimated population. Reimbursement is received for Federal prisoners maintained in institutions of the department.

3. Maintenance and operation of institutions.—Operation of four institutions, the jail division in Washington, the reformatory division for men, the reformatory division for women, and the workhouse division for men is provided. The present normal capacity of the institutions is 3,550. Plans to meet the additional needs of the increasing population through the expansion of the institutions and to commence erection of an additional institution are contained in the 1957 and 1958 capital outlay estimates. Funds to operate a new structure are also included in the 1958 estimates.

4. Support of District prisoners in Federal institutions.—This covers the cost of maintaining adult District prisoners in Federal correctional institutions. During 1956 a daily average of 485 District prisoners were maintained at an average daily cost of $4.21. For 1958, it is estimated that the number will level off at slightly less than the 1956 average number.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Facilitation of motor vehicle parking.—Reports and recommendations are made relating to offstreet parking facilities. In the 1958 fiscal year the program of the agency is to provide 4,050 additional offstreet parking spaces. It is also the responsibility of this agency to conduct continuing surveys and analyses of the program's operations and results for use in determining needs for future facilities in the Washington metropolitan area. During 1957, 3,000 spaces will be added by private enterprise in the central business district. The agency in 1957 will add 250 offstreet parking spaces in the fringe area. The two activities provided a total increase for 1957 of 3,250 spaces.

In 1958, private enterprises will provide 3,000 additional parking spaces in the central business district, with the agency adding 550 in the fringe areas and 500 under the Southwest Freeway between South Capitol Street and Second Street, SW., for a total of 4,050 spaces.

Motorists parking in the fringe areas would board express buses to the downtown area.

The program objective and accomplishment implement the Motor Vehicle Parking Act of 1942, and serve to reduce congestion on streets, expedite the movement of people, including transit vehicles, strengthen economic stability of the community, and delay blight and decentralization.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Washington Aqueduct, under the control of the Chief of Engineers, Department of the Army, provides an adequate supply of purified water to the District of Columbia, Arlington County and Falls Church, Va., and for certain Federal establishments in the adjacent environs.

1. Administration.—This activity covers executive direction and administrative and management services, including warehousing and issuance of supplies, civil defense, custodial services, legal and personnel services, protective security, policymaking, and preparation and justification of budgetary estimates.

2. Purification.—During 1956, there were processed, purified, and fluoridated 57.51 billion gallons of water through 2 filtration plants and 5,368 tons of alum sirup were manufactured. A total of 8,768 tons of chemicals were applied, including 465 tons of sodium silicofluoride. Quality control was maintained, including 105,948 laboratory examinations for chemical, bacteriological and fluorine content of approximately 13,300 water samples collected from 129 sampling points.

3. Pumping.—Water is pumped from the Potomac River for processing through the Dalecarlia and McMillan filter plants, and to the distribution system. Total energy consumed in 1956 was 35,178,400 kilowatt-hours, of which 4,814,400 kilowatt-hours were generated by the hydro station and 30,364,000 kilowatt-hours were purchased. Demand requirements were 60,925 kilowatts.

4. Transmission.—Approximately 12 miles of force mains transmit water to 3 underground water-service reservoirs for storage and subsequent distribution to the District of Columbia, Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission in Maryland, Falls Church, and Arlington County, Va., systems.

5. Maintenance.—In 1956, 107,080 man-hours were performed for normal operating repairs to plant and 25,388 man-hours for normal plant betterments. Twenty-three plant pumping units and 116 pieces of mobile equipment and 98 pieces of portable equipment of various types were maintained.

6. Collection.—Water collection is accomplished by the operation of intake works on the Potomac River at Great Falls, 14 miles from the city, for the removal of ice and debris and transmission of the raw water through conduits and receiving reservoir to the purification system.

7. Construction.—The water supply system plant expansion program, period (1950–70), includes force account and contract construction of capital outlay and miscellaneous betterment projects. 1956 capital outlay expenditures were $5,814,807. During 1957 and 1958, active construction work will be in progress on the Dalecarlia pumping station, Little Falls raw water pumping station, dam, fishways, and tunnel, McMillan chemical building, flocculation-sedimentation basin at Dalecarlia, the Third High Service reservoir at Reno (1st half), and new filter and chemical buildings at Dalecarlia.

8. Engineering.—This activity covers the preparation of reports, designs, specifications, and project cost estimates and supervises architect-engineer services, in conformance with increased water supply system expansion program contained in House Document 480, and furnishes like services as required for operating the existing plant.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

All capital outlay construction is in accord with the public works program with the exception of construction of seawall at sewer yard.

1. Water distribution.—In addition to the necessary extensions of the water distribution system for new building and in advance of paving, major trunk water main construction for major reinforcement of service to the central city and to Anacostia will be continued. Also other major trunk mains will be installed to coordinate with freeway, bridge, and redevelopment projects which will be under construction.

2. Sewage disposal—(a) Sewers.—Sanitary sewer extensions are planned as required by new developments and in advance of paving to convey all sewage to a point of safe discharge. The relief of trunk and intercepting sewers which have become inadequate is part of the sanitary sewer program.

(b) Sewage treatment plant.—Additions are programed to complete construction of secondary treatment, sludge handling, screening, grit removal, and related facilities needed to reduce the pollution of the Potomac in the metropolitan area. The funds requested will complete the plant facilities believed to be necessary for the years immediately ahead.

3. Storm drainage.—The stormwater sewer system in the District is severely overtaxed and entirely lacking in some areas. This program attacks the weakest points each year to bring the eventual solution somewhat closer. Ultimate relief will be reached only after many years of continuous effort and expenditure.

4. Incinerator No. 4.—The estimates for 1958 provide for the acquisition of a site for a proposed incinerator to be constructed at a later date.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Current funds and present estimates are in accord with the furtherance of Washington Aqueduct future water supply construction program as set forth in House Document 480, 79th Congress, 2d session.

1. Water collection.—The average daily discharge of the Potomac River at the water supply intakes is 7,500 million gallons. Present raw-water intake sustained capacity approximates 216 million gallons daily. Initially, the Little Falls pumping station, dam, and tunnel will increase plant raw-water intake sustained capacity by 350 million gallons daily and ultimately by 500 million gallons daily.

2. Water purification.—The filtration plant sustained capacities at present are as follows: McMillan, 125 million gallons daily, and Dalecarlia, 109 million gallons daily. The new Dalecarlia filter and chemical buildings will increase the filtering capacity of Dalecarlia by 56 million gallons daily, thereby increasing total plant water production capacity from 234 million gallons daily to 290 million gallons daily.

3. Water storage.—Existing filtered water storage capacity is 80 million gallons which results in a 48 million gallons daily working capacity. Completion of the third high reservoir at Reno (1st half) and placing in service the 30 million gallon reservoir at Dalecarlia will increase the filtered water storage capacity to 130 million gallons and the working capacity to 70 million gallons daily.

Also included is the transmission of potable water in force mains to various service reservoirs in the District of Columbia and to Arlington County, Va., and the installation of meters to gage water consumption by the Federal Government.

5. Acquisition of lands.—The safeguarding of Washington Aqueduct facilities requires the acquisition of essential land parcels.

INTRODUCTION TO PART III

Part III of the budget contains summary tables on trust and deposit funds, and detailed schedules and explanatory statements on the various trust funds.

TRUST AND DEPOSIT FUNDS DISTINGUISHED

The funds which are covered in the summary tables in this part of the budget are of two types, as follows:

Trust funds are those funds which are established to account for receipts which are held in trust by the Government for use in carrying out specific purposes and programs in accordance with a trust agreement or a statute. Within the category of trust funds, there is a small subcategory of trust revolving funds, which are trust funds used to carry on a cycle of business-type operations, including certain corporations which are partly owned by the Government and partly by private interests.

Deposit funds are those funds which are established to account for collections that are either (a) held in suspense temporarily and later refunded or paid into some other fund of the Government, or (b) held by the Government as banker or agent for others, being paid out in lump sums at the direction of the owner. Such funds are not available for paying salaries, expenses, grants, or other expenditures of the Government.

While the transactions in these groups of funds are a part of the financial program of the Government, the trust and deposit funds are not fully owned by the Government; hence these transactions are excluded from the budget totals.

TRUST FUND RECEIPTS, AUTHORIZATIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Basis of stating trust receipts.—Table 8 summarizes trust fund receipts, and table 9 gives figures by agency and account. Such receipts include cash (and U. S. securities received in lieu of cash) for the trust funds, including contributions to the trust funds from the general fund. The conversion of U. S. Government securities on hand into cash is excluded from receipts, but such sales and redemptions are listed in special analysis K of part IV on a net basis.

Trust authorizations.—Trust fund receipts must be appropriated before they can be spent. These appropriations are summarized in table 8 and listed in table 10.

Most trust funds are appropriated by permanent law, not requiring further action by Congress. Usually the appropriations equal the receipts of the year. In a few cases receipts of trust funds can be spent only in accordance with appropriations enacted by Congress from year to year. Examples are the highway trust fund, funds of the Soldiers' Home, and the municipal revenues of the District of Columbia (which are accounted for as trust funds by the Federal Government). In a few other cases trust fund receipts are permanently appropriated for benefit payments, but limitations on administrative expenses payable out of the trust funds are imposed by annual action of the Congress.

Basis of stating trust expenditures.—Table 8 summarizes the trust fund expenditures, and table 10 gives figures by agency and account. These expenditures are stated on a checks-issued basis, less refunds collected. Net investments in United States Government securities are excluded from the figures, and are listed in special analysis K of part IV.

Trust revolving funds.—The small group of funds which constitute trust revolving funds represent an exception to the basis stated immediately above. The collections of trust revolving funds, instead of being taken into the tables as receipts and authorizations, are deducted from expenditures; thus the expenditures of such funds are stated on a net basis.

DEPOSIT FUND EXPENDITURES

Tables 8 and 10 include total figures on deposit fund expenditures, and table 11 gives a breakdown of such figures and of balances by department or agency. These expenditures are on a net basis; that is, the collections are deducted from checks issued, and the resulting figure is shown as an expenditure. Checks issued include those written to move money into other funds, as well as those written for refunds and the return of money to depositors. When the collections are larger than the checks issued, the amount shown as an expenditure is a negative item.

NET ACCUMULATION IN TRUST AND DEPOSIT FUNDS

Table 8 shows the net accumulation in all the trust and deposit funds. This represents the result obtained when the trust and deposit fund expenditures are subtracted from the trust receipts of the year. Since trust and deposit funds, as well as Federal funds, affect the total cash balance of the Treasury and the total public debt, the final figures on table 8 are carried forward into table 4 of part I.

DETAIL OF TRUST FUND ESTIMATES

The detailed material following table 10 covers the trust funds which do not require annual action by Congress (those requiring annual authorizations or limitations are in part II). Consolidated schedules are used for the smaller trust funds of each bureau or independent agency. The material here follows the general format of the similar material in part II. However, no appropriation language appears here, and the narrative statement of "Program and performance" usually consists only of an explanation of the sources of money for the fund, the purposes for which it is authorized to be spent, and the legal citations.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This fund is used to pay annuities to retired employees or their survivors, to make refunds to former employees who have left the service, and to pay claims for employees who have died before their annuities are paid in full (5 U. S. C., chap. 14, 66 Stat. 622). It is estimated that as of June 30, 1958, there will be 402,109 persons on the annuity roll, compared with 329,989 as of June 30, 1956, and 364,471 as of June 30, 1957. The act of July 31, 1956, requires Government agencies to begin in 1958 to contribute to this fund amounts equal to deductions from employees salaries. Contributions from both these sources will total $1,150,968,000 in 1958.

Employees' Life Insurance Fund, Civil Service Commission

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This fund finances the payment of group life insurance premiums to private insurance companies under the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 (5 U. S. C. 2091–2103) and any expenses incurred by the Civil Service Commission in administration of this act as annually authorized by Congress.

Premium costs are met by withholding from the salary of an employee under age 65, as his share of his group life and accidental death and dismemberment insurance, an amount not to exceed 25 cents biweekly for each $1,000 of his group life insurance, and contribution by the Government from appropriations or funds used for the payment of his salary, wage, or other compensation of an amount not to exceed one-half the amount withheld from the employee.

Through June 30, 1956, $117,100,000 was withheld from the salaries of covered employees and $58,550,000 was contributed by the Government to the fund. It is estimated that in fiscal year 1958, $66,700,000 will be paid into the fund by employees and $33,350,000 by the Government. As of June 30, 1956, $83,200,000 had been paid in benefits and approximately $12 million in accrued benefits awaited filing of claims. An estimated $60 million in benefits will be paid in 1958. Most of the difference between receipts and benefit payments is placed by the insuror in a contingency fund. As of November 19, 1955, there was $47,633,600 in this fund and an additional $3,145,400 remaining on deposit in the Treasury.

The Civil Service Commission is authorized to arrange with any nonprofit association of Federal employees for the assumption by the fund of any existing life insurance agreements with its members and to insure the obligations assumed with any insurance company or companies qualifying under the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1956, 16 of these associations with an approximate membership of 54,000, assets of approximately $5 million, and coverage of approximately $82 million, were taken over by the life insurance fund.

Language and schedules for the limitation for administrative expenses are included in part II of the budget document.

Net trust investment, representing retained earnings, is expected to be $18,448,489 on June 30, 1958.

The war claims fund consists of funds transferred by the Office of Alien Property, Department of Justice, from the net proceeds derived from the liquidation of former German and Japanese assets vested pursuant to the Trading With the Enemy Act. This fund is for payment of the claims and administrative expenses of both the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission and the Bureau of Employees' Compensation, Department of Labor. This is the master trust account from which transfers are made to other accounts, and it includes all unobligated balances from these accounts.

The program by activities includes for 1957 a transfer to Treasury of $17.5 million to cover future appropriations to the Bureau of Employees' Compensation, Department of Labor, for the payment of claims.

Pursuant to section 13 (a) of the War Claims Act of 1948, as amended, the sum of $5 million is to be transferred from the Office of Alien Property to cover the remaining cost of payments under Public Law 997, approved August 6, 1956.

NATIONAL CAPITAL HOUSING AUTHORITY

Operation and Maintenance, Properties Aided by Public Housing Administration, National Capital Housing Authority

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Under title II of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act (48 Stat. 930), the Authority operates 5,181 dwelling units and is engaged in developing 4,139 additional units of low-rent housing. Title II activities are supervised by the Public Housing Administration and are included in the consolidated estimates of that agency.

Budget program.—Operation and development activities are financed by rental income or by temporary loans and the sale of notes and bonds to private investors which are serviced from rental income and Federal contributions received from the Public Housing Administration. Net income from properties transferred from Federal to local ownership for low-rent use is paid to the Public Housing Administration. Low-rent properties developed by the Authority will operate at a deficit with the difference between income and expense being met by Federal contribution. The Federal contribution permits the Authority to reduce rents for low-income families below cost levels. The cumulative deficit is expected to be $5.8 million in 1957 and $7.5 million in 1958, and represents Federal contributions receivable to date and depreciation charged.

These contributions are appropriated to this trust fund and invested in Government securities bearing interest of at least 3 percent.

1. Retirement and survivor benefit payments.—Payments will increase, both because the fund is maturing, and because Public Law 880, approved August 1, 1956, and Public Law 1013, approved August 7, 1956, increased benefits for approximately 432,000 beneficiaries.

2. Interest payments under Public Law 234.—Interest is paid to the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund to place the trust fund in the same position in which it would have been if railroad employment after 1936 had been under social security coverage (45 U. S. C. 228).

3. Administrative expenses.—Such expenses are subject to annual limitations in appropriations acts (see "Salaries and expenses, Railroad Retirement Board," in part II of the budget).

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The Railroad Retirement Board administers an unemployment and sickness insurance system and an employment service to find jobs for unemployed railroad workers. The administrative costs of this system are provided through a permanent appropriation of 0.2 percent of taxable payroll to this fund. As of each June 30, the unobligated balance in this fund in excess of $6 million is transferred by receipt adjustment as shown in the following table to the railroad unemployment insurance account in the unemployment trust fund (45 U. S. C. 361).

Permanent appropriation, 0.2 percent of taxable payroll	$10,022,499	$10,720,000	$10,768,000
Excess in fund over $6,000,000 at end of year (−)	−3,400,000	−3,478,457	−2,894,138
Appropriation, net	6,622,499	7,241,543	7,873,862

1. Maintenance of accounts of employee earnings.—The amounts of insurance payments for unemployment, sickness, and maternity benefits are based upon individual records of earnings and daily wage rates. This workload fluctuates with the level of employment in the railroad industry, rates of turnover, and similar factors. The costs are shared on a measured basis with the retirement program. Compensation items were 3,635,990 in 1956 and are estimated to be 3,170,700 and 3,535,100 in 1957 and 1958.

2. Processing and certification for payment of unemployment insurance claims.—This embraces the work of paying benefits to unemployed railroad workers and conducting an employment service to find jobs for them. Individual claims for unemployment compensation are filed locally and certified for payment through regional offices. The number of claims for unemployment compensation fluctuates widely due to economic changes affecting the railroad industry. Unemployment claims were 1,122,973 in 1956 and are estimated at 1.5 million in 1957 and 1958.

3. Processing and certification for payment of sickness and maternity claims.—Unlike unemployment claims these claims are filed by mail and certified for payment through the regional offices of the Board. The volume of claims for sickness is relatively stable. Sickness claims were 930,374 in 1956 and are estimated at 957,000 in 1957 and 1958.

4. General administration.—Except for certain basic activities the costs of general administration are shared between this and the retirement program on a measured basis.

The principal of the fund has been invested in United States securities, and interest income therefrom was also available to make payments. As of December 31, 1956, all United States securities held in the fund were paid off in full along with accrued interest. On and after January 1, 1957, none of the fund will be reinvested. All payments thereafter will be made from the principal of the fund. Only a small portion of the certificates remain unpaid (38 U. S. C. 646–657).

Such funds are used to promote the comfort and welfare of veterans at hospitals and homes where no general appropriation is available (24 U. S. C. 111, 136, 139; 38 U. S. C. 14–14e, 17–17j).

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This fund was established in 1940 as the financing mechanism for the World War II servicemen's and veterans' insurance program authorized by the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940. Over 22 million policies were issued under this program of which about 5.4 million, totaling approximately $35 billion, remain in force. Because issuance of new policies was ended in 1951 the insurance in force will continue to decline.

The assets of the fund, which are invested in special Treasury interest-bearing securities and in policy loans, are expected to increase from $5,651 million as of June 30, 1956, to $5,860 million on June 30, 1958. The current actuarial evaluation of policy obligations totals $5,037 million leaving a balance of $614 million for contingency reserves.

The income of the fund derives from premium receipts, investments, and payments which are made to the fund from the appropriation "National service life insurance, Veterans Administration," for claims (1) resulting from extra hazards of the veterans' service, and (2) arising on certain policies held by personnel on active duty. In addition to the amounts included in the budget statements, the fund received $6.3 million which was refunded to the policyholders during 1956.

The largest expenditures of the fund are for payments on death claims, the majority of which arose during World War II. Effective January 1, 1957, dividend rates were increased 13.5 percent and approximately half of premium receipts will be returned to policyholders as dividends. Administrative expenses are charged to the appropriation "General operating expenses, Veterans Administration."

This fund is operated on a commercial basis to the greatest possible extent consistent with law. The following business-type statements of income and expense and financial condition include noncash transactions relating to the status of insurance policy accounts. In the budget schedules these noncash transactions, which are offset by other claims of the fund, are subtracted from the program obligations in order to show the cash position of the fund.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This fund was established in 1919 to receive premiums and pay claims on insurance issued under the provisions of the War Risk Insurance Act. Approximately 375,000 policies of United States Government life insurance, providing coverage of over $1.6 billion, remain in force.

The assets of the fund, which are invested in interest-bearing securities and policy loans, are estimated to decline from $1,344 million as of June 30, 1956, to $1,305 million on June 30, 1958, as an increasing number of policies mature through death or disability. The current actuarial evaluation of policy obligations totals $1,214 million, leaving a balance of $130 million for contingency reserves.

The income of the fund derives from premium receipts, investments, and payments which are made to the fund from the appropriation "Military and naval insurance, Veterans Administration," for claims (a) resulting from the extra hazards of the veteran's service, and (b) arising on certain policies held by personnel on active military duty. In addition to the amounts included in the budget statements, the fund received $532,071 which was refunded to policyholders during 1956.

Commencing January 1, 1957, dividends will be paid for the first time since 1932 on 20,000 term-insurance policies. The annual cost of these dividends, approximating $1 million, will be offset by an otherwise declining trend of dividend payments. Administrative expenses are charged to the appropriation "General operating expenses, Veterans Administration."

The fund is operated on a commercial basis to the greatest possible extent consistent with law. The following business-type statements of income and expense and financial condition include noncash transactions relating to the status of insurance policy accounts. In the budget schedules these noncash transactions, which are offset by other claims of the fund, are subtracted from the program obligations in order to show the cash position of the fund.

HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY

FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Secondary Market Operations, Federal National Mortgage Association (Trust Revolving Fund)

These operations were authorized by the Housing Act of 1954 in order to provide limited liquidity for Government insured and guaranteed mortgages and to improve the distribution of investment capital available for home financing. Mortgage purchases, under these operations, are financed by proceeds from (1) subscription by the Treasury in 1955 of $92.8 million in preferred stock (proposed to be increased in 1957 to $192.8 million), (2) sale of debentures to the public, or to the Secretary of the Treasury (the Secretary of the Treasury may hold not more than $1 billion of such debentures, but this amount is proposed to be increased by $350 million in 1957 and by an additional $350 million in 1958), and (3) mandatory subscription by mortgage sellers to the Association's common stock. Government management is intended to be transitional to be succeeded by wholly private operation when the Government investment can be retired. The present interim program, financed by private as well as Government investment, is treated as a trust fund. Operations are discussed in part II of the budget in connection with the program's general fund financing and effect on budget expenditures.

FARMERS' HOME ADMINISTRATION

State Rural Rehabilitation Funds, Farmers' Home Administration, Department of Agriculture

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

The funds are being administered through the Farmers' Home Administration, under agreements with 39 individual States for use in carrying out the purposes of titles I and II of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended. In these States, operating-type loans are made at 5 percent interest. Also, in some States, farm-ownership-type loans are made from these funds and insured under the regular Farmers' Home Administration insured loan program at 3½ percent plus a 1 percent insurance charge. The entire assets of the 39 State corporations are being administered by the Farmers' Home Administration, with exception of $3,547,849 in cash and other assets which by June 30, 1956, had been returned to and held by several States for use in rural rehabilitation.

Actual and estimated loan volume for fiscal years 1956, 1957, and 1958 is as follows:

	Loan operations
	Operating		Farm ownership [1]
	Number	Amount	Number	Amount
1956	5,881	$9,607,131	145	$1,598,741
1957	3,535	5,900,000	340	4,103,396

[1] Insured by Farmers' Home Administration.

The stepped-up volume of farm ownership loans results from a shortage of funds from private lenders for insured farm ownership loans. The reduction in the volume of operating loans for 1957 and 1958 results from utilizing a larger portion of the limited funds which are available for insured farm ownership loans.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

1. National Park Service, donations.—The Secretary of the Interior accepts and uses donated moneys for purposes of the National Park and Monument system (16 U. S. C. 6). Donations amounting to $617,174 were received from 32 contributors during fiscal year 1956. Of that amount, $500,000 was received from a private foundation which was matched by Federal funds for the purpose of acquiring private in-holdings within Grand Teton National Park. It is estimated that $550,000 will be received during the 1957 fiscal year of which $450,000 will be matched by Federal funds for acquiring lands in the National Park system. The amount of $450,000 has been appropriated to match the anticipated donation. It is expected that donations will be received during the 1958 fiscal year for acquiring in-holdings within the National Parks system, and will be matched by Federal funds whenever possible.

2. National Park trust fund.—The National Park trust fund board holds and administers gifts of personal property for the benefit of, or in connection with, the National Park Service. Interest accruals or donations to the fund are used for current needs, or invested in United States Treasury bonds (16 U. S. C. 6a, 19). The amount of $4,000 was appropriated in 1956.

3. Preservation, birthplace of Abraham Lincoln.—This fund consists of an endowment given by the Lincoln Farm Association, and the interest thereon is available for preservation of the Abraham Lincoln National Historical Park, Ky. (16 U. S. C. 211, 212).

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Property seized by the Government from German nationals was held pending final settlement of claims. Interest in vested property as of June 30, 1956, is $58.2 million; however, $57.4 million of this amount consists of Treasury participation certificates whose value is contingent upon fulfillment of certain obligations of the German Government which have been in default since 1931. These certificates were transferred to the Treasury Department in fiscal year 1957 and the account will be closed with the transfer of funds to other Treasury accounts.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Seized property in the United States, of the governments or nationals of Germany and Japan, vested in the name of the Attorney General, is prepared for liquidation as soon as practicable. During fiscal year 1956 no transfers were made to the war claims fund. The total transferred to date remains at $225 million. In 1956 $9.3 million in claims and settlements was paid from such property operations and it is anticipated that $30.6 million will be paid in 1957 and $17.5 million in 1958. Interest in vested property is estimated to be $236.4 million at June 30, 1958, increasing $9.5 million from 1957 and $42.5 million from 1956.

Alien Property Fund, Philippines, World War II

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Enemy-owned property in the Philippines is administered for the Philippine Government by the Office of Alien Property in the same manner as funds for World War I and World War II properties (Executive Order 10254). During the 1956 fiscal year $75,000 was transferred to the Republic of the Philippines. It is anticipated that $7.4 million will be transferred in 1957, which, together with payment of claims and expenses, will close the account in 1957. The following statements include the United States dollar equivalent of currencies of the Philippines which become available without dollar purchase.

International Claims Settlement Act, Title II Fund

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Property in the United States of the governments or nationals of Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania, seized pursuant to title II of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949 (22 U. S. C. 1621), is being vested in the name of the Attorney General like property seized from the governments and nationals of Germany and Japan. As of June 30, 1956, $14.7 million has been vested and liquidated. It is estimated that during 1957 an additional $11 million will be acquired. Funds thus realized are earmarked for payment of war damages and nationalization claims assertable by United States nationals against Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania.

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

This fund is used primarily for the payment of annuities to retired Foreign Service officers. It is also used for the refund of contributions made by those who leave the Foreign Service before retirement. The fund is maintained through (1) contribution of 5 percent of the basic annual salaries of all Foreign Service officers; (2) interest on investments; and (3) appropriated funds. It is estimated that approximately 550 annuitants will be paid retirement benefits from this fund during 1958. Gratuities represent payments made to class 4 and 5 officers who are selected out of the Service.

The following table reflects the status of the fund:

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Under the provisions of the act, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will determine at the end of each year, that portion of the administrative expenses of the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance which is a proper charge to this fund. The amount shown herein for the administrative expenses is subject to further refinement of the processes for allocating costs between the Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund and the Federal disability insurance trust fund (70 Stat. 821).

PROGRAM AND PERFORMANCE

Under the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, workers and their employers make annual contributions in the form of taxes on wages toward the benefits which will be payable when the worker reaches 65 or when he dies. The excess of income over outgo and annual interest are invested in Government securities (42 U. S. C. 401).

United States and the volume of such gold after melting and refining (48 Stat. 1061).

8. Mexican claims.—The American Mexican Claims Commission adjudicates and certifies to the Treasury Department claims of American nationals against the Government of Mexico. The Mexican claims fund includes deposits totaling $40,533,659, consisting of $40 million from the Government of Mexico payable in 16 annual installments—the final payment being made by Mexico in fiscal year 1956 and $533,659 appropriated by the Congress of the United States. Currently there are approximately 400 accounts maintained pursuant to awards of the Commission (22 U. S. C. 661).

9. National defense conditional gifts.—The Secretary of the Treasury accepts on behalf of the United States any conditional gifts of money or other tangible property to be used for a particular defense purpose. Such intangibles other than money are converted at the best terms available. The moneys held in trust are paid to such of the various appropriation accounts as will best effectuate the intent of the donors (68 Stat. 566).

10. Payment of pre-1934 bonds of the Government of the Philippines.—This trust account provides for payment of principal and interest on outstanding bonds of the Philippines, its provinces, cities, and municipalities issued prior to May 1, 1934, under authority of acts of Congress. The value of the unmatured outstanding bonds is $4,928,850 (22 U. S. C. 1393 (g) (5)).

11. Payment of unclaimed moneys.—Payments are made to individuals who establish their right to moneys held in trust pending claims of owners (31 U. S. C. 725p).

12. Unclaimed moneys of individuals whose whereabouts are known.—Amounts are held in trust awaiting settlement and allowance of claims (31 U. S. C. 725).

Matured obligations of the District of Columbia.—Funds from inactive accounts are transferred to this account to meet matured obligations of the District of Columbia when and if presented (31 U. S. C. 725s). As of June 30, 1956, there was a balance of $8,176 in the fund.

To promote the education of the blind.—The uninvested sum of $250,000 is credited on the books of the Treasury Department as an unexpendable endowment fund for the purpose of aiding the education of the blind in the United States. A permanent annual appropriation of $10,000 being equivalent to 4 percent on the principal, is paid to the American Printing House for the Blind (20 U. S. C. 101).

INTRODUCTION TO PART IV

Part IV of the budget contains special analyses of budget data and Federal programs. These analyses supplement material appearing in other parts of the budget. Most of the analyses include explanatory material which expands and elaborates these introductory notes.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RECEIPTS FROM AND PAYMENTS TO THE PUBLIC

Special analysis A presents information on the flow of money between the public and the Federal Government as a whole, including both Federal funds and trust (and deposit) funds. Major intragovernmental and noncash transactions are excluded. This analysis also presents a reconciliation with Treasury cash deposits and withdrawals as reported in the Daily Statement of the United States Treasury.

ANALYSIS OF BUDGET RECEIPTS

Special analysis B presents details on the budget receipts summarized in table 1. It includes a statement explaining the receipt estimates, together with a table giving a classification of receipts by source. The figures include receipts of both the general fund and the special funds. The text pertaining to taxes, customs, and refunds is prepared by the Treasury Department.

ANALYSIS OF THE BUDGET BY FUNCTION AND AGENCY

Special analysis C gives the details for the functional breakdown of new obligational authority and expenditures used in the budget message and in certain tables of part I. It is compiled by regrouping the figures found in the chapter summaries of part II. The code numbers used in the chapter summaries are the key to the grouping found in this analysis.

SPECIAL ANALYSES OF BUDGET EXPENDITURES

Special analysis D analyzes budget expenditures (gross and net) in terms of the duration and nature of the benefits derived. Expenditures of an investment type are shown in two major categories—one for acquisition and improvement of Federal assets, and the other for developmental purposes such as additions to State, local, and private assets, and expenditures for research, education, and health. Expenditures yielding current benefits are also grouped in two major categories—one for aids and special services to various groups and the other for the remaining current operating expenses. No adjustments are made for depreciation, obsolescence, allowances for potential losses on loans, and other items not reflected in current expenditure data.

Special analysis E divides budget expenditures into four major groupings in order to show the purposes or ultimate ends involved. These categories are: The cost of protection including collective security, civil benefits to various parts of society, interest payments, and civil operations and administration. The discussion of budget expenditures which appears on pages M4 to M71 of the budget message is based on this classification.

ANALYSES OF CERTAIN PROGRAM EXPENDITURES

Special analysis F gives detailed information on the major Federal programs involving direct loans, loan insurance, and loan guaranties. It provides data on commitment authority, commitments, expenditures, repayments, and outstanding loans, guaranties, and insurance.

Special analysis G provides an analysis of the construction activities of the Federal Government. It presents detailed information on direct Federal public works and Federal grants and loans for public works. It gives summary information on Federal financial assistance for certain international public works, semipublic works, and construction by private business and individuals.

Special analysis H brings together information on those items in the budget which are for Federal aid to State and local governments. It includes grants-in-aid, shared revenues, and loans (including repayable advances).

Special analysis I shows the amounts devoted to research and development purposes. It includes both basic and applied research, and the construction of research facilities.

Special analysis J presents the current and recommended budget levels of the principal statistical programs of the Federal Government.

SELECTED INVESTMENTS AND INTERFUND TRANSACTIONS

Special analysis K sets forth certain investments and interfund transactions which are not reflected in the expenditures or receipts shown elsewhere in the budget. The first two groups of these are the investments by revolving and trust funds in United States Government securities (both Treasury issues and the securities of wholly owned Government enterprises), and the net borrowing or repayment of debt by wholly owned enterprises (other than their debt to the Treasury). The totals of these transactions, while not a part of budget expenditures or receipts, affect the financing requirements of the Government as a whole, and therefore are included in computations shown in table 4 of part I. The other group of transactions included in this table constitutes the payments by the revolving funds to the general fund, representing the return of capital or the distribution of earnings; such payments are excluded from budget expenditures and budget receipts in parts I and II of the budget in order to avoid inflating both sides of the budget.

HISTORICAL COMPARISON OF BUDGET RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES

Special analysis L presents a 10-year comparison of budget receipts and expenditures. The receipts are classified by source and the expenditures by function. A technical note sets forth the changes in classifications since the 1957 budget. As in special analysis C, the code numbers appearing in the chapter summaries of part II are the key to the grouping of items in the expenditures section of this analysis.

Special Analysis A

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RECEIPTS FROM AND PAYMENTS TO THE PUBLIC

This analysis presents information on the flow of money between the public and the Federal Government as a whole.

By definition, the public includes individuals, banks, other private corporations and associations, and unincorporated businesses. The Federal Reserve System, the United States Postal Savings System, State and local governments, foreign governments, and international organizations are also defined as part of the public.

In the derivation of Federal Government receipts from and payments to the public, the transactions of Federal funds (which are reported as budget receipts and expenditures) are consolidated with those of trust and deposit funds which are not owned by the Federal Government. In addition, certain transactions of enterprises which are sponsored by the Government are included. (For a detailed description of the various types of funds see page A2 of part I and page 992 of part III.) Major intragovernmental transactions, which are payments between the various funds, and noncash transactions, which do not entail immediate cash receipts or payments, are excluded in this consolidation.

Use and limitations.—This analysis is particularly helpful in evaluating the impact of Federal transactions on the economy. For example, Federal receipts from the public classified by source indicate the relative size and various types of cash receipts, and Federal payments to the public by function indicate the importance in terms of cash payments of the various Government activities. The excess of receipts from the public or payments to the public tends to reflect the net impact of Federal financial transactions.

However, the scope and impact of Federal transactions are understated, because the total of Federal payments to the public includes only the net spending of both wholly owned and Government-sponsored enterprises. These enterprises receive interest payments, repayments of loans, and other income from the public which are deducted from new loans and other disbursements. The difference is reported as the net expenditures of the enterprises. Since the totals of receipts and payments are reduced by equal amounts, the excess of Federal receipts from or payments to the public is not affected.

It should also be recognized that receipts and payments are only one measure of the many Federal financial activities with important economic effects. For example, a rapid expansion in new appropriations and in Government orders could stimulate a rise in business activity long before the authorized funds were paid to the public. Likewise, the enactment of a tax measure or even the expectation of a change in tax rates may affect business activity long before the cash flows involved take place between the Federal Government and the public. Federal guaranties and insurance of private loans (summarized in special analysis F) also influence the economy, even though they normally have little or no immediate impact on Federal receipts from and payments to the public. Certain other Government contractual arrangements, such as the lease-purchase of Government buildings, have economic effects which cannot be measured by the Government payments made in any one year. Aside from the significance of interest payments to the public, the management of the public debt is a further important factor which has particular impact in the money and credit markets of the economy.

Consolidated cash statement.—The derivation of Federal receipts from and payments to the public represents, in effect, a consolidated cash statement of Federal transactions—other than borrowing—with the public. Major intragovernmental transactions which are reported as both expenditures and receipts of the funds being consolidated are eliminated. These major intragovernmental transactions are (1) payments between Federal funds, such as interest paid to the general fund by the Commodity Credit Corporation on its borrowing from the Treasury; (2) payments between Federal funds and trust funds, such as interest paid to the old-age and survivors insurance trust fund by the general fund on securities held by the trust fund; and (3) payments between trust funds, such as the District of Columbia payments to the civil service retirement and disability fund.

Receipts of the Government from the exercise of monetary authority (mostly seigniorage on silver) do not represent cash received from the public and are also excluded in this consolidation.

In this analysis the expenditures of four Government-sponsored enterprises—the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal home loan banks, the Federal land banks and the banks for cooperatives—are measured by the sales and redemptions of their own obligations and of the United States securities held by them. The net receipts obtained from these transactions are used mainly for the financing of operating expenditures. The transactions of two other Government-sponsored enterprises—the Federal National Mortgage Association secondary market operations and the Federal intermediate credit banks (beginning January 1, 1957)—are also included on a net basis in this analysis, but as part of trust fund expenditures.

Certain noncash transactions, such as accrued interest on savings bonds, are included in budget expenditures. In deriving Federal payments to the public, these noncash items are deducted from budget expenditures in the year of accrual. They are included as payments at a later time, in the year when the payment is made in cash.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RECEIPTS FROM AND PAYMENTS TO THE PUBLIC—Continued

The major items of this type are (1) interest currently accruing on savings bonds and the interest which is paid in cash as the bonds are redeemed; (2) United States securities sometimes issued in payment of obligations and their redemption for cash at a later date; and (3) net changes in the clearing accounts for checks, public-debt interest, and related items outstanding.

In any given year the aggregate of the accruals may be larger or smaller than total disbursements for previously accrued items. In 1956 the amount of new accruals is greater than the payments made for items previously accrued. In 1957 and 1958, however, the reverse is the case, largely because substantial cash payments are estimated to be made to redeem the non-interest-bearing notes issued in 1947 to the International Monetary Fund as part of the United States subscription.

Reconciliation with Treasury cash deposits and withdrawals.—The daily statement of the United States Treasury presents a consolidated cash statement of Treasury operating transactions similar in general concept to Federal receipts from and payments to the public. However, it is limited in coverage to those transactions affecting the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States.

RECONCILIATION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RECEIPTS FROM THE PUBLIC WITH TREASURY CASH DEPOSITS

Description	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Federal receipts from the public	$77,084	$81,720	$85,923
Receipts from exercise of monetary authority	23	30	41
Net difference in actual year due to reporting method	−28
Equals: Treasury cash deposits	77,079	81,750	85,964

As shown above, Treasury cash deposits include the receipts from exercise of the monetary authority which are omitted from Federal receipts from the public. Except for this small conceptual difference, the two consolidated statements are very closely related on the receipts side.

The net difference due to reporting method applies equally in the reconciliation of receipts with deposits and in the reconciliation of payments with withdrawals. This arises principally from the fact that changes in the clearing accounts are reported on a net basis with increases in deposits in transit deducted from increases in checks outstanding. While this reporting procedure yields an accurate measure of the excess of receipts or payments, it does not provide the data for adjusting separately the receipts and the payments of the Federal Government to the basis used in obtaining cash deposits to and withdrawals from the Treasurer's account.

Federal payments to the public are more inclusive than cash withdrawals from Treasury since they include the transactions from accounts of Government agencies in commercial banks and from cash balances held by agency disbursing officers. For example, if Federal cash balances outside the Treasury decrease, Federal payments to the public will be greater than cash withdrawals from Treasury; if these outside balances increase, Federal payments to the public will be smaller than cash withdrawals from Treasury.

Federal repayment of cash borrowing from the public.—In the long run, the amount of Federal repayment of cash borrowing from the public is affected primarily by the excess of receipts from the public over payments. Funds obtained late in one fiscal year, however, are sometimes not utilized until early in the following year. Thus, they affect the annual changes in the Government's cash balances. Receipts from the exercise of the monetary authority (mostly seigniorage on silver) provide a relatively small additional amount that is available for payment to the public or repayment of cash borrowing.

Government securities held by the public. They also include the net borrowing or repayment of borrowing of Government agencies and Government-sponsored enterprises through sales and redemptions of their own securities to the public. Excluded are changes in the public debt which do not represent direct cash borrowing or repayment of borrowing from the public. The major exclusions are the changes in public debt resulting from certain noncash transactions such as the issuance of United States Government notes and securities to the International Monetary Fund and to the trust funds.

Federal receipts from the public by major source and payments to the public by major program.—A line has been added this year to the following table to show separately the Government's payment to the Federal employees' retirement trust funds. This added line reflects the fact that beginning in 1958 the Government's payment will be made by the individual agencies. As a result, the amounts shown as payments to the public for each functional category include the amounts transferred to the retirement trust funds. In 1957 and prior years the Government's payment was made in a lump sum to the Civil Service Commission and was not included in any functional category as a payment to the public.

The decline in the excess of receipts from the public between 1956 and 1957 is due primarily to the estimated increase in cash withdrawals from the Treasury in 1957 through the redemption of notes issued to the International Monetary Fund.

The excess of receipts from the public is estimated to be still lower in 1958, primarily as a result of higher net payments from trust funds for (1) the liberalization of old-age and survivors insurance in recent years and (2) the secondary mortgage market operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association.

Supporting schedules showing the detailed derivation of the figures in this analysis can be obtained upon request from the Bureau of the Budget.

Special Analysis B

ANALYSIS OF BUDGET RECEIPTS

Estimates based on existing and proposed legislation

This special analysis provides supporting detail for the figures on budget receipts by source which are included in the tables of the budget message and in table 1 of part I.

The estimates of receipts from taxes and customs for the current and ensuing fiscal years are prepared in December of each year by the Treasury Department. In general, the estimates of miscellaneous receipts are prepared by the agencies depositing the receipts in the Treasury.

The receipts estimates reflect the high levels of business activity, personal income, and corporate profits attained in the calendar year 1956. They assume continued gains in the level of personal income and a moderate increase in corporate profits. The estimates for the fiscal years 1957 and 1958 are also based on the assumption that legislation will be enacted extending tax rates at their current levels for another year beyond April 1, 1957, as recommended by the President.

Detailed estimates of budget receipts under both existing and proposed legislation are contained on pages 1071 to 1074.

BUDGET RECEIPTS

Budget receipts in the fiscal year 1957 are estimated to amount to $70,628 million, an increase of $2,463 million over actual receipts in 1956. A further rise of $2,992 million to $73,620 million is estimated for 1958. The amounts to be reported as budget receipts in 1957 and 1958 are reduced by the Highway Revenue Act of 1956. Receipts from certain previously existing excise taxes which were included as budget receipts in 1956 and previous years are, in 1957 and 1958, treated as trust fund receipts.

FISCAL YEAR 1957

Actual receipts in 1956 and estimated receipts in 1957 are compared by major sources in the following table:

Budget receipts (by source)

[In millions]

Source	1956 actual	1957 estimate	Increase (+) or decrease (−), 1957 over 1956
Individual income taxes	$35,334.1	$38,500.0	+$3,165.9

Taxes not otherwise classified	5.3	5.0	−.3
Customs	704.9	775.0	+70.1

Transfer to highway trust fund		1,539.0	+1,539.0
Refunds of receipts	3,684.0	3,880.0	+196.0
Net budget receipts	68,165.3	70,628.0	+2,462.7

Greater receipts from the individual income tax are primarily responsible for the estimated increase of $2,463 million in net budget receipts in 1957. Other receipt categories also increase, in some cases significantly in relative terms but not in absolute amounts. Only about one-half of the increase in gross receipts is carried through to net budget receipts. The deduction for the transfer of certain excise tax receipts to the highway trust fund is much larger than the increase in gross excise tax receipts and the increase in employment taxes is eliminated by the deduction for transfers to trust accounts.

Individual income tax.—Receipts from the individual income tax are estimated to be $38,500 million in 1957, an increase of $3,166 million over actual receipts of $35,334 million in 1956. The increase results from the rise in incomes which has taken place in the calendar year 1956 and the expected continuation of rising personal incomes in the first half of the calendar year 1957.

Corporation income tax.—Corporation income tax receipts in 1957 are estimated to amount to $21,400 million, as compared with receipts of $21,299 million in 1956. The rise of $101 million reflects a modest increase in corporate profits as estimated for the calendar year 1956, the profit level which primarily determines receipts in 1957. Other factors of a technical nature which affect the 1956–57 comparison of receipts are largely offsetting.

Excise taxes.—Receipts from this source are listed in the table below:

Excise tax receipts

Source	1956 actual	1957 estimate	Increase (+) or decrease (−), 1957 over 1956
Alcohol taxes	$2,920.6	$3,003.0	+$82.4
Tobacco taxes	1,613.5	1,643.0	+29.5
Taxes on documents, other instruments, and playing cards	114.9	110.0	−4.9
Manufacturers' excise taxes	3,456.0	3,882.0	+426.0
Retailers' excise taxes	321.9	341.0	+19.1
Miscellaneous excise taxes	1,608.5	1,712.0	+103.5
Undistributed depositary receipts and unclassified advance payments of excise taxes	−31.2		+31.2
Total excise taxes	10,004.2	10,691.0	+686.8
Deduct transfer to highway trust fund		1,539.0	+1,539.0
Net excise taxes	10,004.2	9,152.0	−852.2

The receipts from practically all excise taxes are expected to increase in 1957, the total reaching $10,691 million. Important exceptions are the tax on passenger automobiles, the admissions tax, and the tax on transportation of persons. A decrease is anticipated in the tax on passenger automobiles because of the decline of automobile production which occurred in the calendar year 1956. It is expected that automobile production will increase in 1957 but will not achieve the very high levels of the calendar year 1955. The relatively large decline in receipts estimated for the admissions tax is attributable to the increase in the admissions exemption from 50 cents to 90 cents. The yield of the tax on transportation of persons is adversely affected by the exemption of certain travel.

Large relative increases in receipts are estimated only for those taxes affected by the Highway Revenue Act. This act increased the tax on gasoline used for highway purposes from 2 cents to 3 cents a gallon; increased the tax on diesel fuel from 2 cents to 3 cents a gallon; increased the tax on tires for highway-type vehicles from 5 cents a pound to 8 cents; increased the tax on trucks and buses from 8 percent to 10 percent of manufacturers' price; imposed a new tax on rubber for retreading tires for highway-type vehicles of 3 cents a pound, and imposed a new tax of $1.50 a thousand pounds on the total weight of highway vehicles over 26,000 pounds of gross vehicle weight. These taxes were effective July 1, 1956, but, because of the lag in collections, a full 12 months of receipts will not be collected in 1957.

The increased revenue from these higher tax rates and new taxes is responsibile for most of the increase in gross excise tax receipts in 1957. However, the revenues from all of the taxes affected by the Highway Revenue Act are transferred to the highway trust fund. The net effect of the act is to reduce excise tax receipts remaining in budget receipts so that net excise taxes in 1957 are estimated to be $852 million less than in 1956.

Employment taxes.—The yield of the employment taxes is shown in the following table:

Employment tax receipts

Source	1956 actual	1957 estimate	Increase (+) or decrease (−), 1957 over 1956
Federal Insurance Contributions Act and Self-Employment Contributions Act	$6,336.8	$6,780.0	+$443.2

Net employment taxes	324.7	310.0	−14.7

The estimated increase in receipts under the Federal Insurance Contributions Act and the Self-Employment Contributions Act results from increased levels of salaries and wages subject to tax and increased tax rates. The increase in receipts resulting from the higher rates are to be transferred to the Federal disability insurance trust fund. Receipts from the Federal Unemployment Tax Act are estimated to be lower in 1957 than in 1956 because of the bunching of receipts in 1956 as a result of the elimination of installment payments.

Estate and gift taxes.—Receipts from estate and gift taxes are estimated to be $1,380 million in 1957, a rise of $209 million reflecting recent increases in estate values.

Customs.—Customs receipts are estimated to amount to $775 million in 1957. This 10 percent increase of $70 million reflects a higher level of business activity.

Miscellaneous receipts.—Receipts from miscellaneous sources are estimated to be $2,986 million in 1957 as compared with $3,006 million in 1956.

Refunds of receipts.—Refunds of receipts are estimated to be $3,880 million in 1957 as compared to actual refunds of $3,684 million in 1956.

FISCAL YEAR 1958

Estimated receipts in 1957 and 1958 are compared by major sources in the following table:

Budget receipts (by source)

Source	1957 estimate	1958 estimate	Increase (+) or decrease (−), 1958 over 1957

Refunds of receipts	3,880.0	4,156.0	+276.0
Net budget receipts	70,628.0	73,620.0	+2,992.0

Budget receipts in 1958 are estimated to amount to $73,620 million. This is an increase of $2,992 million over estimated receipts in 1957.

All sources of receipts are expected to increase in 1958, with the largest absolute rises affecting net budget receipts occurring in individual and corporation income tax collections. The gain in individual income tax receipts is smaller than in 1957 but is augmented by a rise of $600 million in corporation income tax receipts in 1958. Miscellaneous receipts are also expected to rise in 1958.

Individual income tax.—Reflecting continuing gains in personal incomes, receipts from the individual income tax are expected to increase from $38,500 million in 1957 to $41,000 million in 1958.

Corporation income tax.—Receipts from the corporation income tax are estimated to amount to $22,000 million in 1958. This is $600 million above estimated receipts in 1957, reflecting a small estimated rise in profits from calendar year 1956 to calendar year 1957.

Excise taxes.—Receipts from this source, by major groups, are listed in the table below:

Excise tax receipts

Source	1957 estimate	1958 estimate	Increase (+) or decrease (−), 1958 over 1957

Total excise taxes are estimated to increase $380 million to $11,071 million in 1958. This gain reflects a higher level of taxable goods and services and the full year effect of increased rates and new taxes under the Highway Revenue Act.

Employment taxes.—The yield of the employment taxes is shown in the following table:

Source	1957 estimate	1958 estimate	Increase (+) or decrease (−), 1958 over 1957
Federal Insurance Contributions Act and Self-Employment Contributions Act	$6,780.0	$7,435.0	+$655.0

Net employment taxes	310.0	320.0	+10.0

Receipts from the Federal Insurance Contributions Act and the Self-Employment Contributions Act are estimated to increase as a result of higher levels of salaries and wages and the full year effect of the higher tax rates. The increased receipts resulting from the higher tax rates are to be transferred to the Federal disability insurance trust fund.

Estate and gift taxes.—Receipts from estate and gift taxes are estimated to increase to $1,475 million in 1958, a rise of $95 million.

Customs.—A continued high level of business activity is expected to increase customs receipts in 1958.

Miscellaneous receipts.—Most sources of miscellaneous receipts are estimated to show some increase in 1958. The total is estimated at $3,278 million, up $292 million from the 1957 estimate.

Refunds of receipts.—Refunds of receipts are estimated to be $4,156 million in 1958, an increase of $276 million over the estimated refunds of $3,880 million in 1957.

Special Analysis C

ANALYSIS OF BUDGET BY FUNCTION AND AGENCY

This special analysis provides supporting detail for the data on new obligational authority and expenditures by function included in the budget message and the President's analysis of the budget, and tables 1 and 2 of part I.

For each function and subfunction, data are listed by agencies. In order to find the appropriation items which make up the amounts shown for the agency, it is necessary to look in the chapter summary for that agency. Each entry in the chapter summary is coded to indicate the subfunction in which it is classified.

The functional classification used in this budget summarizes authorizations and expenditures according to the major purposes of the Government. Each function brings together programs which are related to a broad purpose, regardless of the agency responsible. Each major function is divided into several subfunctions which are groups of programs directed to a selected field within the broader category. Changes made in the classification this year are specified in a note in special analysis L.

For purposes of this classification each appropriation account and each revolving and management fund is treated as a unit. Exceptions are made, and accounts are split into two or more categories, in only selected cases. This necessarily involves some close decisions in borderline cases, and it means that programs with secondary significance for some major functions will be included in another category because another purpose predominates in the particular appropriation. Thus, to secure a comprehensive total of all Government programs related to education, for example, it would be necessary to provide a special tabulation, counting in this category some appropriations which might also be relevant to other categories.

For each major function and subfunction, expenditures are shown on a gross basis, with a deduction for receipts of public enterprise funds to arrive at net budget expenditures for the function or subfunction.

Whereas this special analysis presents both authorizations and expenditures for major functions, subfunctions, and agencies over a 3-year period, special analysis L shows expenditures for the major functions and subfunctions over a 10-year period. Special analysis A shows Federal Government payments to the public, classified by major function. The functional categories are also used in the analyses summarizing Federal activities in public works and other construction, Federal aid to State and local governments, and Federal research and development programs.

Special Analysis D

INVESTMENT, OPERATING, AND OTHER BUDGET EXPENDITURES

INTRODUCTION

This special analysis classifies Government expenditures according to those which yield benefits beyond the current fiscal year and those which in the main yield benefits within the year the expenditure is made. It is designed to contribute to a general understanding of total budget expenditures and of budgetary problems.

Expenditures of an investment type, that is, those yielding benefits over a period of years, are shown in two major categories—the first for the acquisition of assets by the Federal Government and the second for other broad developmental purposes. Examples of the latter are additions to State, local, and private assets and expenditures for research, education, and health, which contribute to the physical productivity of the economy or help increase the technical skills and knowledge of individuals.

Expenditures which yield benefits currently are also grouped in two major categories—the first for aids and services to special groups and the second for current operating expenses.

Comparison with a capital budget.—This analysis is not intended to be a capital budget. A capital budget as prepared by some foreign governments and some State and local governments usually provides separate financing for major capital outlays. The capital outlays may be entirely excluded from the current budgets of these governments or they may be amortized over a period of years by annual charges to the budget. In the Federal budget, however, investment items are shown in the same way as expenditures for other purposes and hence are included in arriving at the budget surplus or deficit.

A capital budget would also require computing and recording annually an allowance for depreciation and obsolescence on existing physical assets, an allowance for anticipated losses on loan programs, a recognition of assets received as gifts or donated to others, and the profits or losses on sales of assets at a figure different from their book value. This analysis makes no provision for depreciation or other changes in assets. Hence, it does not indicate the extent to which annual new investment in a given year is offset by changes in existing assets.

On the basis of usual private accounting practices, investment expenditures would consist of the increases in claims or assets owned by the Federal Government. In this analysis, the category identified as additions to Federal assets is narrower—being limited to major outlays, such as public works construction and military aircraft and ships. This analysis adopts a broader concept of developmental outlays than is generally employed in private accounting practice for capital items, since Federal expenditures are viewed here in terms of their effect on the economy as a whole.

Recoverability of certain types of expenditures.—A part of Federal expenditures for loans, for investment in commodity inventories, and for construction of powerplants is ultimately returned to the Treasury. However, Federal expenditures for most other investment-type programs are not generally expected to be recovered by specific revenues. Developmental expenditures usually increase the wealth and income of the Nation and often indirectly expand Federal tax revenues over a long period of years. Expenditures for some of these Government programs are also financed by the appropriation of part or all of the receipts which are collected from fees and charges imposed for services, products, and the use of property related to the programs.

This analysis presents expenditures of public enterprise funds on a gross as well as a net basis in order to indicate the full scope of their operations. The receipt totals indicated in the tables are limited to those which are deposited in the revolving funds of such enterprises. Receipts paid directly to the Treasury are excluded from this analysis.

Significant subcategories.—This analysis shows separately the expenditures for major national security (as defined in special analysis C) and civil programs (all other functions). Since major national security expenditures represent a large proportion of total budget outlays, such a distinction helps in appraising the significance of outlays within each of the major categories of this analysis. For example, military expenditures for fixed assets and other developmental purposes are not usually intended to achieve the same objectives as civil outlays for assets.

Separate subcategories are also shown for expenditures for direct Federal programs and for grants-in-aid or loans to State and local governments. Special analysis H gives details on Federal aid to State and local governments and contains a table summarizing these aids according to the major categories of this analysis.

SUMMARY

Table 1 summarizes expenditures according to the major categories of special analysis D, showing gross and net expenditures, and applicable receipts, for both the major national security and the civil programs. About $25 billion of estimated net budget expenditures for 1958 represent outlays for the acquisition and improvement of assets and for other development purposes, compared to $22.8 billion for 1957. Current expenses for aids, services, and operations are estimated at $46.4 billion, net, for 1958, compared to $45.9 billion for 1957.

ADDITIONS TO FEDERAL ASSETS

Expenditures in this category represent direct investment by the Federal Government in loans and federally owned physical assets. Net expenditures for such additions to assets are estimated to total $20.3 billion in 1958 compared to $18.7 billion in 1957. Over four-fifths of total net expenditures in this category are for major national security programs, mostly for military equipment.

Loans.—Direct loans by Federal agencies consist primarily of loans to farmers and homeowners, to public and private agencies serving these two groups, and to private businesses and foreign governments. Most loan programs operate on a revolving basis. However, the Rural Electrification Administration and the Farmers' Home Administration and a few other loan programs are by law on a nonrevolving basis, with collections on outstanding loans going directly to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury. In this analysis, loans made through revolving funds are shown on both a gross and a net basis, since net expenditures for loans reflect only a fraction of total Government lending activity.

In 1958, gross disbursements for loans are estimated to decrease by $1.5 billion from 1957. Collections, acquisition of collateral, and other receipts from loans are estimated to decrease by $1.6 billion. These decreases are caused primarily by the fact that, beginning January 1, 1957, the operations of the Federal intermediate credit banks in the Farm Credit Administration are being carried as trust fund transactions and, hence, excluded from the budget totals. Net budget expenditures for loans in 1958 are estimated to be $1,444 million compared to $1,356 million in 1957.

[1] Less than one-half million.

[2] Noncash transactions, included above in gross expenditures for commodity inventories, and in the applicable receipts which are applied to loans.

Net expenditures for loans to domestic private borrowers in 1958 are estimated to be $690 million greater than in 1957 resulting in part from an anticipated decrease in repayments to the Commodity Credit Corporation as a result of lower price support operations. An analysis of major credit programs of the Federal Government is contained in special analysis F.

Public works—sites and direct construction.—This category includes all Federal expenditures for sites and for civil public works projects, military installations, and other national security facilities which are owned by the Federal Government, including those outside the continental United States. A summary of these and related programs is given in special analysis G.

Total estimated expenditures for direct Federal public works of $4 billion in 1958 are $512 million above the amount estimated for 1957. About three-fifths of these expenditures for 1958 will be direct public works for major national security programs. Expenditures for construction of military and atomic energy facilities are estimated to rise by $274 million from 1957 to 1958. Civil public works expenditures, mainly for water resources and related developments, are estimated at $1.4 billion in 1958 compared to $1.2 billion in 1957.

Major commodity inventories.—Gross purchases of commodities held for resale or in stockpiles are expected to total $3.1 billion in 1958, exceeding sales by $844 million. The figure for total purchases includes transportation costs, administrative expenses, and storage costs where these are normally included in costs of goods sold.

Net expenditures for stockpiling strategic and critical materials (other than fissionable materials) are estimated at $308 million in 1958. Net additions to the inventory of farm commodities held by the Commodity Credit Corporation under its farm price-support program are expected to entail expenditures of $396 million in 1958.

Major equipment.—Expenditures for major equipment are estimated at $12.5 billion in 1958, compared to $11.8 billion in 1957. These expenditures represent, predominantly, purchases of aircraft, guided missiles, ships, tanks, and other major national security equipment. Purchases of office equipment, furniture and fixtures, automobiles, and similar items are not classified in this subcategory but are treated as current operating expenses.

Other physical assets—acquisition and improvement.—Expenditures for other physical assets consist mainly of procurement of source materials and production of special nuclear materials and weapons by the Atomic Energy Commission. This subcategory includes reforestation and range improvements and real property purchased or acquired as collateral on defaulted loans.

Payments of principal under lease-purchase agreements to acquire public buildings are also included in this grouping. Interest payments under these agreements, however, are shown under operation and administration of other civil activities.

EXPENDITURES FOR OTHER DEVELOPMENTAL PURPOSES

The category of other developmental purposes includes Federal expenditures which add to the productivity of the economy over a period of years but which do not directly add to Federal physical and financial assets. Programs which yield the bulk of their benefits immediately are excluded, even though they may also contribute to the longer run economic development of the Nation.

Expenditures for military research and development account for about one-half of the total expenditures in this category in 1958. Higher grants to the States for construction of schools, mainly under proposed legislation, are responsible for most of the increase over 1957.

State and local physical assets.—In 1958 the Federal Government will spend an estimated $511 million for additions to physical assets of State and local governments, mainly through grants-in-aid. These outlays are estimated to be $311 million higher than in the preceding year, primarily as a result of the proposed program of general school-construction assistance. Beginning in 1957, expenditures under the Federal-aid highway program are no longer included in budget expenditures but are made from a separately financed trust fund.

Private physical assets.—Federal expenditures which directly add to privately owned physical assets consist predominantly of (1) payments and technical assistance for conservation and improvement of private farms, including payments under the soil bank to share the cost of conservation practices, (2) grants to States for the building of private hospitals and other health facilities, and (3) construction subsidies for merchant ships. Expenditures in this category are estimated at $630 million in 1957 and $716 million in 1958.

Education, training, and health.—An estimated $568 million of net budget expenditures in 1958 will be for education, training, and health. These programs are developmental in that they are intended to foster the knowledge, skills, longevity, and physical vigor of the population. Most of these programs are conducted through grants to State and local governments. Included here are school-operating aid to school districts especially affected by activities of the Federal Government, and grants to States for programs of vocational education, vocational rehabilitation, maternal and child welfare, public health, and agricultural extension work. Closely related are several major items classified in other categories—principally the veterans' education program, which is classified as aids and special services for veterans; the operating expenses of hospital services and medical care programs; and the training of military and civilian personnel in Government service.

Research and development.—The Federal Government also contributes to technological and economic progress through the conduct of varied programs of research and development. Net expenditures for programs classified under this heading in 1958 are estimated at $2.9 billion, $246 million above 1957. Over four-fifths of this total for 1958 is part of the major national security program, including the work of the Department of Defense and the Atomic Energy Commission.

Larger amounts from appropriations for military procurement and public works also contribute to research and development, testing, and evaluation. However, such expenditures are classified under additions to Federal assets. The definition of research and development, in this analysis, is that used in special analysis I. Expenditures for routine testing, mapping, and surveys, experimental production, information activities and training programs are generally excluded.

Engineering and natural resource surveys.—An estimated $74 million of net budget expenditures in 1958 will be for investigations and surveys for public works programs, topographic mapping, land classification, forest investigations, and other basic surveys. The largest programs of this type are administered by the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Reclamation, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Corps of Engineers.

CURRENT EXPENSES FOR AIDS AND SPECIAL SERVICES

The preceding categories include investment-type expenditures which provide substantial benefits to various economic groups, such as loans, public works, and research programs. This category contains the administrative and other operating expenses (and operating receipts) for such investment-type programs, as well as the maintenance costs of any physical assets and the other current expenditures which primarily provide aids or special services to one or more specific economic groups.

Several of these groups also receive benefits from special Federal tax provisions and other nonexpenditure aids, which are not included in this analysis. Approximately 83 percent of expenditures for aids and special services are for civil programs, which are estimated at $12.6 billion, net, for 1958, compared to $12.9 billion in 1957.

Agriculture.—Current expenses predominantly for the benefit of farmers consist chiefly of losses realized on the price-support program, the soil bank program except for conservation practice payments, expenses of the International Wheat Agreement, Sugar Act payments, expenditures for removal of surplus commodities, and administrative expenses of loan programs and other aids to farmers. Current expenses for programs in this category are estimated at $3.6 billion, net, in 1957 and $3.2 billion in 1958, reflecting in part the shift on January 1, 1957, of the transactions of the Federal intermediate credit banks from budget expenditures to trust fund expenditures.

Other major expenditures benefiting farmers which are classified elsewhere in this analysis are provided through loans, conservation payments, and construction of reclamation and other water development projects. Farmers also benefit indirectly from the school lunch, international, and other programs which are designed primarily for other purposes.

Business.—The major types of current Federal expenditures primarily benefiting private business are the Government payment to the Post Office to cover the losses arising from the operation of the postal service; maritime operating subsidies and navigation aids to the shipping industry; and various aids to air navigation. Largely as a result of the proposed adjustment in postal rates, net expenditures for these purposes in 1958 are expected to decline to $647 million, $371 million below 1957.

Labor.—The largest current Federal expenditure benefiting labor is for the Federal-State program of unemployment insurance and public employment offices, in which the United States Department of Labor makes grants to the States to cover the full cost of administering these services. This program also benefits employers by recruiting workers to fill job vacancies. Also in this category are the mine safety work of the Bureau of Mines and some administrative expenses of the Department of Labor. These expenditures for 1958 total $327 million, compared to $313 million in 1957.

Homeowners and tenants.—Since loans and mortgage purchases for the benefit of homeowners and tenants are classified in this analysis as investment-type expenditures, current expenditures consist chiefly of (1) grants to local authorities to cover deficits from low-rent public housing projects and the capital losses of slum clearance and urban renewal projects and (2) the operating expense of the management and liquidation functions of the Federal National Mortgage Association. Receipts from the insurance of mortgages and saving and loan share accounts and the earnings from holdings of mortgages and other housing loans exceed current gross expenditures for housing in all 3 years shown in this budget.

Veterans.—Current expenditures for aids to veterans in 1958 are estimated at $4.9 billion, $176 million above 1957. Compensation and pension benefits account for more than half of the estimated 1958 total in this subcategory. Compensation payments are made for disabilities or deaths resulting from service. Pensions are paid in nonservice-connected cases.

Other important current aids to veterans are hospital and medical care for veterans of all wars, and readjustment benefits for those who served in World War II or the Korean conflict. Included are outlays for education and training of veterans who enroll in schools and colleges, or vocational training on the job or farm; losses and administration under the loan-guaranty programs; and veterans' unemployment allowances.

International.—In 1958, $2.6 billion or more than three-fifths of total expenditures in this subcategory are for the military part of the mutual security program. These expenditures will furnish military equipment and training to friendly nations. Nonmilitary parts of the mutual security expenditures are primarily to help cooperating countries to develop their economies and to meet the burdens of maintaining military strength.

Other aids and special services.—Many other Federal programs involve current expenditures for aids and special services for more than one of the above groups or for other groups. The bulk of the expenditures consists of grants to help provide public assistance to those in need, including the aged, the blind, the permanently and totally disabled, and dependent children. Other major programs include grants to States to help finance low-priced school lunches, hospital operation and medical care by the Public Health Service, and various aids to Indians. These expenditures are expected to total $1.8 billion in 1957 and $2 billion in 1958.

OTHER SERVICES AND CURRENT OPERATING EXPENSES

All other Government expenditures are included in this major category. In the main, the activities are the basic Government operations of maintaining a military establishment, conducting foreign affairs, making and enforcing laws, collecting taxes, managing and paying interest on the public debt, and operating the postal service.

Current expenditures for major national security, mostly for operation and maintenance of military facilities and for pay and subsistence of military personnel, dominate this category. The largest component of civil expenditures is for interest.

Repair, maintenance, and operation of physical assets.—Expenditures to repair, maintain, and operate physical assets are chiefly for atomic energy facilities; military structures, equipment, and facilities; and general-purpose public buildings. They are also for operating such other public assets as flood-control reservoirs, irrigation works, power facilities, public lands, and national forests.

Net expenditures for civil repair, maintenance, and operation are estimated at $283 million in 1957, and $290 million in 1958. Outlays for the operation and maintenance of structures, equipment, and facilities for major national security programs are estimated at $9.6 billion, an increase of $492 million from 1957.

Regulation and control.—Most of the major departments and agencies and many smaller agencies have regulatory or law-enforcement responsibilities. These include the normal law-enforcement activities of the Department of Justice, the Treasury, and the judiciary, as well as the operations of the independent regulatory agencies. Expenditures for regulation and control are estimated to total $528 million in 1958 compared to $487 million in 1957.

Operation and maintenance of the postal system.—Since the postal deficit is included in other categories of this analysis (predominantly under current expenses for aids and special services), this category includes the remaining gross expenditures and the receipts of the Post Office, which are equal in magnitude and thus cancel on a net basis. Gross expenditures and receipts in this subcategory for 1958 are estimated at $2.6 billion.

Operation and administration of other civil activities.—All other governmentwide or multiple-purpose expenditures for civil programs are estimated to decrease from $1.8 billion in 1957 to $1.4 billion in 1958. These cover expenditures for the legislative branch and the conduct of foreign affairs; tax collection, public debt administration, and other financing activities; central procurement, record-keeping, and various other direct Federal programs not elsewhere classified. The major decrease in this subcategory from expenditures in 1957 occurs because, under a new law effective at the beginning of 1958, individual Government programs will separately bear their respective shares of the Government's payment to the civil service retirement fund. In 1957 and prior years, the Government made a lump-sum payment which was classified entirely in this subcategory.

Other major national security operation and administration.—These expenditures are estimated to rise from $11.4 billion in 1957 to $11.9 billion in 1958. They represent predominantly pay and subsistence for military personnel together with smaller but substantial expenditures for civilian components, industrial mobilization, and various departmentwide activities of the Department of Defense.

Interest.—These expenditures include interest on the public debt and smaller amounts of interest on refunds of receipts and on uninvested funds. Principally because of the higher interest rates on new securities issued to refunding maturing obligations, expenditures for interest are estimated to rise $100 million from 1957 to 1958.

Special Analysis E

ANALYSIS OF BUDGET EXPENDITURES BY PURPOSE

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

In this special analysis, the expenditures of the United States Government are divided into four large groupings in order to show the ultimate ends or purposes for which taxes and other Federal Government revenues are used. These categories are (1) the cost of protection, including collective security; (2) civil benefits to various parts of society; (3) interest payments, mainly on the public debt; and (4) civil operations and administration.

The discussion of budget expenditures which appears on pages M11 to M16 of the President's budget message is based on this classification. Table 1 below summarizes budget expenditures according to these four major categories. Details on each category are contained in subsequent sections of this analysis.

PROTECTION, INCLUDING COLLECTIVE SECURITY

The expenditures for protection, including collective security, which account for almost two-thirds of budget expenditures, consist of all the outlays (including those for additions to Federal assets) for the Military Establishment, the mutual security program, and related activities such as the overseas information program, the development of atomic energy, and civil defense. These expenditures are estimated to total $45,345 million in 1958, compared to $42,670 million in 1957 and $42,400 million in 1956 (see table 2).

[1] Excludes amounts for procurement and military construction which also contribute o research and development.

Department of Defense.—The major types of outlays by the Department of Defense are for procurement, maintenance, and operation of military equipment; military personnel; military construction; reserve components; and research and development. In 1958, expenditures are estimated to increase by $2 billion over 1957, mainly for the procurement of guided missiles and for the maintenance and operation of new weapons and additional air bases and other military installations.

Atomic Energy Commission.—Expenditures for the development and control of atomic energy are mainly concerned with the procurement of raw materials and the production of nuclear weapons. There will be a continued emphasis on the development of atomic weapons and civilian and military reactors in 1958.

Mutual security program.—This program covers the military equipment and training furnished to cooperating countries and the economic and technical assistance designed to help the nations of the free world strengthen their economies.

Other.—Expenditures for all other programs classified as protection cover net expenditures for stockpiling strategic and critical materials, the expansion of defense production, the overseas information program, civil defense, and selective service.

CIVIL BENEFITS

A large number of programs designed to yield benefits to the Nation generally or to various groups and geographic areas are classified as civil benefits. These are largely current aids and services to various groups; but they also include expenditures for the acquisition of assets, which have varying degrees of recoverable value or permanency, and expenditures for long-range development. Expenditures for civil benefits are estimated to total $16,860 million in 1958, compared to $16,503 million in 1957 and $15,267 million in 1956 (see table 3).

Additions to Federal assets.—This subcategory covers loans, construction activity, and acquisition of other physical assets by all agencies except those included under protection.

The portion of the expenditures by the Commodity Credit Corporation which is for additions to Federal assets covers (1) the net change in loans outstanding for agricultural price supports, (2) increases in inventories of commodities, and (3) construction of storage facilities.

Expenditures by the Commodity Credit Corporation for additions to assets are estimated to decline from $2.2 billion in 1956 to $60 million in 1957 and $425 million in 1958.

Net expenditures for loans by other agencies are estimated to rise from $446 million in 1956 to $1.7 billion in 1957, mainly due to the increased net disbursements by the Export-Import Bank and for the Treasury investment in the secondary market operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association. Smaller net disbursements for these two programs account for the estimated decline to $1.4 billion in 1958. Additional detail on loan programs is contained in special analysis F.

Construction covers all Federal civil public works, including water resource projects by the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, and construction of public buildings and facilities by the General Services Administration and other agencies. Expenditures for construction, other than by the Commodity Credit Corporation, are estimated at $1.2 billion in 1957 and $1.4 billion in 1958.

Long-range development.—A number of Federal programs are broadly developmental in that they contribute to the physical productivity of the economy or increase the technical skills and knowledge of individuals. These programs, which are mainly conducted through grants-in-aid to State and local governments, include agricultural conservation assistance to farmers, conservation practice payments under the soil bank program, programs of education, health, and scientific research and development, and construction of airports and highways. Beginning in 1957, expenditures under the Federal-aid highway program are no longer included in budget expenditures but are made from a separately financed trust fund.

Current expenses for civil benefits.—This category covers current expenditures for programs which provide aids or special services to one or more specific groups. However, it excludes investment-type expenditures, which provide substantial benefits to various economic groups such as outlays for loans, construction, other assets, and developmental programs. Current expenses for civil benefits are estimated at $11.7 billion in 1957 and $11.1 billion in 1958.

Current expenses for the benefit of farmers consist chiefly of (1) the net expenditures of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the soil bank program, other than those classified as additions to Federal assets, long-range development, and international aid; (2) the removal of surplus agricultural commodities; and (3) administrative expenses of aid programs to farmers.

Current expenses primarily benefiting private business include subsidies and other aid to the aviation and shipping industries and the payment to the Post Office to cover the losses in postal operations. The decline in net expenditures estimated for 1958 arises chiefly from the proposed adjustment of postal rates to meet the cost of the postal service.

Current expenses benefiting labor include the Federal grants to cover the cost of administering unemployment insurance and public employment offices, the general administrative expenses of the Department of Labor, and the mine safety work of the Bureau of Mines.

Most of the expenditures benefiting homeowners and tenants are in the form of loans already covered above. Current expenses are primarily for administration and interest, and are offset by the operating receipts arising from housing loan and loan insurance programs.

Federal grants to States help provide public assistance to the needy aged, the blind, the totally disabled, and orphans.

Other services performed by the Federal Government which benefit various groups or areas of the Nation include grants for the school-lunch program, disaster relief, and certain activities of the Public Health Service and the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

INTEREST

Interest payments for 1958 are estimated at $7,360 million, compared to $7,260 million for 1957. This difference consists of higher interest payments on the public debt, reflecting an increase in interest rates on issues refunded.

CIVIL OPERATIONS AND ADMINISTRATION

The expenditures shown under this heading are predominantly the traditional expenses for civil operations and administration of the Federal Government. Here are found the bulk of the expenditures for the legislative branch, the judiciary, the Executive Office of the President, the Departments of State and Justice, the Internal Revenue Service, and the various regulatory activities of the Government.

TABLE 4.—Civil operations and administration

Other Federal programs	212	256	266
Total, civil operations and administration	2,027	2,267	1,842

Expenditures under the heading of "Civil operations and administration" are estimated at $1,842 million in 1958, a decrease of $425 million from 1957. The decrease results from the fact that beginning in 1958, each individual Government program will bear its respective share of the Government's payment to the civil service retirement fund, with the result that the bulk of this cost is now allocated to other categories. In 1957 and most prior years, the Government made a lump-sum annual payment which was classified entirely as "Civil operations and administration" (see table 4).

RELATIONSHIP OF DATA TO SPECIAL ANALYSIS D

The data used in this classification are related primarily to special analysis D, "Investment, operating, and other budget expenditures." Table 5 shows the relationship between that classification and this one.

The method for relating the data in this classification to special analysis D is as follows:

(1) All items which are classified in the major national security function (shown separately in special analysis D), together with the nonmilitary portion of the mutual security program, the Federal Civil Defense Administration, the Selective Service System, and the United States Information Agency are here classified as protection.

(2) Interest here is identical with interest in special analysis D.

(3) The remainder of the expenditures is divided between civil benefits and civil operations and administration as follows: (a) "Additions to Federal assets," "Expenditures for other developmental purposes," and "Current expenses for aids and special services," which are not included in (1), above, are considered civil benefits; (b) repair, maintenance, and operation of assets related to benefit programs, and expenditures for shared revenues and miscellaneous grants-in-aid are also considered civil benefits; and (c) the remaining expenditures are considered civil operations and administration.

Special Analysis F

FEDERAL CREDIT PROGRAMS

Introduction

Federal credit programs are an important method for the achievement of public policy objectives. For example, as part of the Federal programs for improvement of housing and encouragement of home ownership, Federal agencies have insured or guaranteed more than 40 percent of all outstanding home-mortgage loans. Similarly, financial assistance in the form of credit is an important part of the Federal program of encouraging efficient family-size farm units. Loans to help restore international economic stability and promote the economic development of underdeveloped areas have been a significant part of the Government's international program in recent years. Federal credit aids to business are primarily to help meet defense needs and to assist small businesses to obtain financing; they account for only a very small part of business credit. The President is recommending new credit aids as part of his programs for assistance to school construction, and communities suffering from chronic unemployment. In addition to influences in these specific areas, Federal credit programs exert a powerful influence on the general level of economic activity.

The impact of Federal credit programs on the Federal budget is relatively small when compared with the large amount of credit extended or guaranteed. The most important reason for this is the predominance of Federal insurance and guaranties of private loans in recent years, discussed more fully later in this analysis. Such programs normally involve little or no budget expenditures except in cases when defaults require the guaranteeing or insuring agencies to take over private loans. Secondly, a significant share of new commitments, both for insurance and guaranties and for direct loans, are canceled or expire without being used by the lending institution or the borrower. Finally, collections on loans in most cases directly offset disbursements on new loans, with the result that net expenditures are much less than gross expenditures; often net receipts occur.

Federal credit programs are intended to supplement rather than to substitute for private credit. They have expanded greatly in the postwar period. Direct loans outstanding increased from about $5 billion in 1945 to about $17 billion on June 30, 1956. However, this amount was only about 4 percent of the estimated private debt of $394 billion outstanding on that date. Private loans partly or wholly guaranteed by Federal agencies have increased more than eightfold since 1945 to $51 billion, comprising 13 percent of total private debt.

Coverage of Special Analysis

This special analysis presents a broad picture both of direct Federal loans and investments, and of Federal loan insurance and loan guaranty programs. It summarizes new commitments, disbursements and repayments, loans outstanding and guaranties in force, new commitment authority, and status of credit authority of 18 major Federal credit programs. These programs account for nearly all new commitments of Federal credit agencies in 1958.

The analysis covers major credit programs of wholly owned Government enterprises, whether corporate or noncorporate. Included also are major credit operations of other departments and agencies, not primarily engaged in lending activities, such as the Treasury Department loan to the United Kingdom in 1947. Loan programs of important quasi-public agencies are excluded from the tables, but are discussed separately.

Three changes in coverage have been made in this year's analysis. First, the Federal intermediate credit banks in the Farm Credit Administration have been excluded from the tables. On January 1, 1957, the banks became mixed-ownership institutions; their receipts and expenditures are, therefore, no longer included in budget expenditures. A discussion of the banks, however, is included under quasi-public credit programs. Second, the ship mortgage guaranty program of the Maritime Administration is expanding greatly and is therefore included in the analysis for the first time. Third, the substantial changes in the Government's investment in the secondary market operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association are included, since they are reflected in budget expenditures.

The analysis excludes interagency credit used to finance budget expenditures, such as borrowing from the Treasury by other Government agencies, whether for loan or other programs. Credit extended in connection with sales by the Federal Government, such as credit to finance sales of war surplus goods, is also excluded in general.

SUMMARY

Total new commitments for major Federal credit programs for 1958 are estimated at $21.4 billion (table 1). Of this total, credit aids for housing and related programs, including loans and guaranties by the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Veterans Administration, account for $16.9 billion, or about 80 percent. Credit aids for agricultural programs account for $3.2 billion, or 15 percent; this would have been 23 percent if the Federal intermediate credit banks had been retained. The major increase in new commitments during the 3-year period is accounted for primarily by the steady growth in housing programs.

As indicated in detail in table 3 below, expenditures of major credit programs will exceed receipts by $1,178 million in 1958. The changes over the 3-year period are accounted for in large part by changes in the level of operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Federal National Mortgage Association, and the Export-Import Bank.

NEW COMMITMENTS

New commitments provide the best single measure of the trends in most Federal credit programs. They also provide the best indication of trends in the economic impact of these programs, since changes in the magnitude of new commitments usually lead to corresponding changes in the volume of loans disbursed by either public agencies or private lenders.

In this study, commitments are defined as approvals by Federal agencies of direct loans or of insurance or guaranties of private loans. They are shown on a gross basis, including commitments which do not result in an actual credit extension. The amounts shown are the principal amounts of the loans; for several guaranty and insurance programs these exceed the Government's contingent liability, since the unguaranteed or uninsured portions are also included.

As table 2 indicates, commitments for Federal guaranties and insurance of private loans account for about 80 percent of total new commitments in 1958. This high proportion arises from legal requirements or the administrative policy of making direct loans only where private credit, even with Government guaranty or insurance, is not available on reasonable terms, and from revisions in interest rates and other terms designed to make guaranteed and insured loans more attractive to private lenders. Some of the direct loans and investments also encourage private lending, for example, purchases of mortgages by the Federal National Mortgage Association from private financial institutions.

Direct loans and investments.—New commitments of $4.3 billion for direct loans and investments continue at slightly below the 1957 level, making allowance for the fact that 1958 figures for the International Cooperation Administration are not available. Increases in 1958 for some of the housing programs are offset by reductions in the lending program of the Export-Import Bank, reduced price-support operations by the Commodity Credit Corporation, and lower investments in the secondary market operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association. The sharp increase in new commitments in 1957 and in 1958 over the 1956 level arises in large part from investments to finance the secondary market operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association, and increased loans in 1957 by the Export-Import Bank, including a $500 million loan to the United Kingdom to meet financial needs arising from the crisis in the Middle East.

Guaranties and insurance.—New commitments for Federal guaranties and insurance of private loans are estimated at $17.2 billion in 1958, compared to $16.3 billion in 1957 and $15.9 billion in 1956. Guaranties and insurance of housing mortgages will be substantially higher mainly as a result of growing activities under the mortgage insurance programs for housing in urban renewal areas and the revised program authorized by the Housing Amendments of 1955 for mortgage insurance on family housing for the armed services. The increases in the housing programs account for all of the increase since 1957.

Overlap in commitments.—Total commitments may overstate by 1 to 2 billion dollars the net amount of credit assistance by the Federal Government, especially for housing credit. This is because two or more types of Federal assistance are sometimes provided for the same borrower or the same property at different stages in the financing process. No adjustment is made for this overlap, since the amount in any single year is difficult to estimate.

A substantial share of the housing initially constructed with the aid of mortgage insurance by the Federal Housing Administration is ultimately sold to veterans who finance their purchases with mortgages guaranteed by the Veterans Administration. The Federal National Mortgage Association purchases or participates only in mortgages previously insured by the Federal Housing Administration or guaranteed by the Veterans Administration.

Similarly, local housing authorities normally finance most or all of the construction of low-rent units with temporary loans made or directly guaranteed by the Public Housing Administration. These temporary obligations, however, are refinanced by sale of long-term obligations to private investors on the security of Federal annual contribution contracts.

DISBURSEMENTS AND REPAYMENTS

Direct loans and investments can have a major impact on the Federal budget, since the difference between disbursements and repayments represents Federal expenditures or receipts. Federal guaranties and insurance of private loans, on the other hand, ordinarily have only a minor effect on Federal expenditures, since they result primarily in expenditures by private financial institutions. Only if they have been taken over by Federal agencies as a result of defaults or otherwise are they reflected in budget expenditures. Net expenditures for Federal credit assistance give, therefore, only a partial picture of the economic impact of these programs.

Net expenditures of all Government lending programs—with the exception of loans from trust funds or by quasi-public agencies—are included in the budget totals. In most cases, collections are offset directly against expenditures; in a few major programs, however, they go directly to miscellaneous receipts and, therefore, do not affect budget expenditures. In the case of foreign loans, disbursements in foreign currencies are included in the analysis but are not included in the budget.

In table 1 of this analysis, expenditures for loans are shown on a net basis, that is, they reflect loan disbursements less repayments of old loans. However, to indicate more clearly the total volume of loans, table 3 shows both gross loan disbursements and repayments (including those going directly to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury). The difference between these two columns represents the net addition to or reduction in Federal loan assets (excluding primarily chargeoffs and recoveries) for the major credit programs during the fiscal year. To bring total expenditures for loans into line with budget expenditures, net expenditures of minor Federal programs and adjustments for repayments going directly to miscellaneous receipts and for disbursements in foreign currencies are shown.

In both tables 1 and 3, expenditure figures represent disbursements and repayments of loans only, and exclude all income and expense items. Losses actually incurred and written off are not included, because no cash transaction is involved.

In 1958, gross loan disbursements of major Federal credit programs are estimated at $5,542 million and repayments at $4,364 million. Net expenditures of $1,178 million are thus a relatively small fraction of the gross level of activity. Of the total repayments, $351 million will go directly to miscellaneous receipts, chiefly repayments of loans by the Farmers' Home Administration, the Rural Electrification Administration, and the Treasury loan to the United Kingdom. Disbursements of loans in foreign currencies are estimated at $137 million. Allowing for these adjustments, together with net expenditures of $52 million for relatively minor credit programs, net budget expenditures for loans will amount to an estimated $1,444 million.

Gross disbursements for 1958 will be somewhat lower than in 1957, primarily as a result of decreased expenditures for the Federal National Mortage Association, the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank. Repayments in 1958 are also expected to be below the 1957 level. The lower level of activity of the Commodity Credit Corporation results in large part from the soil bank program and increased exports of agricultural commodities.

Current levels of repayments are small when compared with current disbursements in the case of active programs with predominantly long-term loans such as the Rural Electrification Administration, the International Cooperation Administration, or the college housing loan program of the Community Facilities Administration. On the other hand, repayments substantially exceed disbursements in the case of liquidating programs, such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the loan to the United Kingdom, and relatively inactive programs such as loans and advances under the Defense Production Act.

Neither current repayments nor net expenditures provide any measure of the ultimate recoverability of the loans made. As indicated in the detailed statements on individual programs, interest or premiums cover expenses and losses for many programs. In some, the legislative mandates make losses probable from time to time, such as the nonrecourse loans of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the loan-guaranty programs of the Veterans Administration.

Loans Outstanding and Guaranties in Force

The best index of the level of Federal credit programs over a period of years is provided by the total of their outstanding loans, guaranties, and insurance in force.

Outstanding loans by the end of 1958 are estimated at $19.6 billion, about $1.2 billion more than at the end of 1957. Most of the increase over the 3-year period is in investments to finance the secondary market operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association and in foreign loans by the Export-Import Bank and the International Cooperation Administration. About one-half of the loans outstanding are to foreign borrowers, including the loan of $3.4 billion to the United Kingdom, loans of $3.4 billion by the Export-Import Bank, and $2.3 billion by the International Cooperation Administration.

Guaranties and insurance in force are estimated to increase to $65 billion by the end of 1958. The increase of nearly $14 billion in the 2 years since the end of 1956 reflects primarily increased guaranties of mortgage loans by the Veterans Administration and the Federal Housing Administration. These two programs account for more than 90 percent of all outstanding guaranties and insurance, and most of the remainder are long-term obligations of the Public Housing Administration.

The amounts shown include both the guaranteed and unguaranteed portion of outstanding loans in order to give a clearer picture of the economic impact of these programs and to tie in better with banking statistics. They do not, however, indicate the estimated contingent liability of the Federal Government, which is shown in table 6. The major program on which the contingent liability differs materially from the principal amount of the loans is the veterans' loan-guaranty program. By the end of 1958, the Government liability will be about $15.7 billion lower than the outstanding amount of such loans.

The probability that the Government will be called upon to take over any substantial part of the guaranteed or insured portion of outstanding loans is small, except possibly in a national financial emergency. Sizable assets are available to minimize any potential losses. Moreover, in the case of most mortgage insurance programs charging premiums, income in the past has been sufficient not only to cover expenses and current losses, but also to build up substantial reserves.

New Commitment Authority

New commitment authority includes any additional loan or loan guaranty authority made available or recommended. There are several kinds of new commitment authority. Budget authorizations are those included in budget totals of new obligational authority; they consist either of appropriations or of authorizations to expend from public debt receipts. Other authorizations, which do not normally give rise to budget expenditures, consist of insurance and guaranty authorizations and conditional authorizations which become available only under specified conditions.

Table 5 summarizes new commitment authority of the 12 major credit programs which will receive additional authority during the period. New commitment authority for 1958 is estimated at $6.7 billion, compared to $9.6 billion in 1957 and $12.3 billion in 1956. New authority required for the Federal Housing Administration in 1957 and 1958 is sharply below 1956 because the level of commitments has been running lower than anticipated, causing a large carryover of unused authority. No new borrowing authority is requested in the budget for the Commodity Credit Corporation in 1958. About half of the new authority is required for guaranties and insurance of housing loans by the Veterans Administration.

New commitment authority for most credit programs is provided by Congress in the basic legislation rather than in appropriation acts. For example, the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank, the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Public Housing Administration, and the various mortgage insurance authorizations of the Federal Housing Administration are all prescribed in the statutes governing these programs. Since new commitments can generally be financed out of uncommitted balances of prior authorizations, or out of funds made available by collections on outstanding loans, requests for new commitment authority in any one year are limited to relatively few credit programs. For example, in 1958, new commitment authority is requested for only five major programs—the Rural Electrification Administration, the Farmers' Home Administration, the Small Business Administration, the Community Facilities Administration, and the Federal National Mortgage Association; in addition, restoration of capital impairment is requested for the Commodity Credit Corporation.

In several important cases, the authority provided by the basic statute is indefinite. The most important examples are guaranties and insurance of loans by the Veterans' Administration, guaranties of defense production loans under section 301 of the Defense Production Act, and indirect guaranties of local housing authority obligations issued on the security of annual contribution contracts of the Public Housing Administration. In these cases, the tabulations show new authorizations equal to the net amount of the guaranteed or insured portion of new commitments.

A second type of new authority indefinite in amount exists in the case of loan programs where the authority can also be used for grants, purchase commitments, or other nonlending purposes. Major examples during the 3-year period are the programs of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the International Cooperation Administration. In these programs all the new obligational authority provided could legally be used for loans, but is not likely to be so used. Dollar loans by the International Cooperation Administration in the 3-year period account for only a relatively small part of the total assistance program, so that it would be misleading to include the total amount of the mutual security program as new obligational authority for loan assistance. The data, therefore, show amounts for new authority adequate to finance estimated new commitments. Loans and guaranties by the Commodity Credit Corporation account for a substantial part of its program. Its total new obligational authority is, therefore, included, even though some of it will be used for nonlending purposes.

STATUS OF CREDIT AUTHORITY

Unlike most other Government programs, commitment authority for the major credit programs is not normally provided for a single year, but remains available in most instances until utilized or until the statutory authority for the program expires. Hence, with only a few exceptions, the existing authority represents the cumulative total of amounts made available in prior years.

Cumulative net authority.—Three major types of commitment authority have been provided for Federal credit programs. A majority of the major programs operate on a revolving-fund basis, that is, collections on outstanding loans and expirations of insurance commitments permit re-use of the original authority. Limitations on such programs are ordinarily in terms of maximum amounts of loans outstanding, maximum borrowings from the Treasury, or maximum amounts of insurance or guaranty liability. Leading examples include all lending programs of Government corporations and the insurance programs of the Federal Housing Administration.

In the case of several noncorporate loan and loan insurance programs, a maximum limitation is placed upon the total volume of loans and loan insurance commitments. Funds collected on such loans and expirations of such insurance are not available for re-use. Typical examples are the direct loan program of the Rural Electrification Administration and the direct loan and insurance program of the Farmers' Home Administration.

A few programs are not governed by any specific dollar limitations. These are limited only indirectly by the provisions of the statute or of the agency's regulations governing eligibility for Federal credit assistance. The amount committed depends primarily on the number of applications. The most important example is the loan guaranty and insurance program of the Veterans Administration. The loan guaranties authorized under section 301 of the Defense Production Act are also not specifically limited.

In the case of both the Commodity Credit Corporation and lending programs under the Defense Production Act, loans are financed from obligational authority which also finances nonlending programs. For the purposes of this analysis, the net authority available at the beginning of the year for these loan programs is set equal to the total available authority after deducting authority committed for nonlending programs. An exception is made for the International Cooperation Administration, because its dollar loans account for only a small and indefinite part of the total assistance given under the mutual security program in recent years and in 1958. Its authority at the beginning of the year is, therefore, shown as equal to loans outstanding and undisbursed commitments at the beginning of the year.

Credit authority available at the beginning of 1958 is estimated at $79 billion (table 6). New commitment authority of $6.7 billion is estimated to become available during the year. On the other hand, estimated expirations, certain repayments, and other reductions in outstanding authority amount to $3.7 billion. The net authority available at the end of 1958 is, therefore, estimated at $82 billion.

Charges against authority.—In addition to the $69.2 billion of outstanding loans and guaranties (shown in detail in table 4 but excluding here the portion of private loans not guaranteed or insured by the Federal Government), charges against the available authority include undisbursed commitments. These are expected to total $7.6 billion on June 30, 1958, for loans and guaranties together.

Uncommitted authority.—For major Federal credit programs as a whole, commitment authority at the end of 1958 is estimated to exceed charges against the authority by $5.1 billion. Of this unused authority, 68 percent is accounted for by several programs administered by the Housing and Home Finance Agency, including $1.1 billion by the Federal Housing Administration. A reduction of $3.2 billion in uncommitted authority of the Federal Housing Administration accounts for the major part of the decline of uncommitted authority between 1957 and 1958.

Since the indefinite authority of loan guaranty programs not subject to specific limitations is shown as equal to charges against the authority, the total uncommitted authority in table 6 does not reflect the fact that these guaranty programs could be expanded substantially under presently available authority. However, nearly 70 percent of the cumulative authority is subject to definite limitations.

Since this analysis is limited to major active or liquidating credit programs, substantial amounts of uncommitted standby authority of other programs are excluded. The most important examples are the $3 billion borrowing authority for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, $1 billion for the Federal home-loan banks, and $750 million for the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. These are unlikely to be used unless a national financial emergency occurs.

Quasi-Public Credit Programs

The Federal Government also has a measure of responsibility for the credit programs of certain mixed-ownership corporations and other public agencies operating in whole or in part with private funds. The most important are the Federal intermediate credit banks, the banks for cooperatives, the Federal land banks, the Federal home-loan banks, and the Federal Reserve banks. The secondary mortgage market activity of the Federal National Mortgage Association is discussed with the other programs of the Association in the next section.

The 12 regional banks for cooperatives make loans to agricultural cooperatives. Most of the stock in the banks is still owned by the Federal Government and the banks are supervised by the Farm Credit Administration. Loans outstanding at the end of 1956 were $349 million, compared to $322 million in 1955.

The 12 Federal land banks are now privately owned, but are sponsored by the Government and operate under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration. These banks provide mortgage credit to farmers at relatively low interest rates through individual national farm loan associations. The amount of loans outstanding at the end of 1956 was $1,638 million, compared with $1,408 million a year earlier.

The 11 Federal home-loan banks are also now privately owned, but are supervised by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and have authority to borrow $1 billion from the Treasury, if necessary. These banks make both short-term and long-term advances to member savings and loan associations on the security of home mortgages or Treasury obligations, as well as unsecured short-term loans. Advances outstanding on June 30, 1956, were $1,173 million, compared with $1,017 million on June 30, 1955.

All of the stock in the 12 Federal Reserve banks is provided by the member banks, but the policies of the Federal Reserve System are controlled by the presidentially appointed Board of Governors. Moreover, the Reserve banks, after paying 6-percent dividends to the member banks, pay 90 percent of their remaining profits to the Treasury, and their entire surplus reverts to the Treasury in the event of liquidation. As part of their normal central banking functions, the Reserve banks stand ready to make short-term discounts and advances for member institutions and also have a small program of direct loans to industry. The amount of discounts, advances, and industrial loans outstanding on June 30, 1956, was $233 million, with discounts and advances low on that date. By October 31, they were $706 million.

The 12 Federal intermediate credit banks extend credit to production credit associations and privately capitalized farm-lending institutions by discounting short-term notes to help finance the production needs of farmers. To finance their operations, the banks sell short-term debentures to the public. The banks may have obligations outstanding of not more than 10 times their capital and surplus. In accordance with the Farm Credit Act of 1956, the production credit corporations were merged in the Federal intermediate credit banks as of January 1, 1957, and provision was made for the retirement of Government capital in the banks and for their eventual ownership by the production credit associations. Because of this change in financial structure, the financial transactions of the banks are being omitted from the budget expenditure figures starting January 1, 1957. For the last half of the fiscal year 1957 and for 1958, these transactions are recorded as trust fund transactions. In 1958, loans and discounts of these banks are estimated at $2,164 million, about $100 million more than in 1957 and $200 million more than in 1956. Repayments in 1958 are estimated at $2,121 million.

Major Agencies or Programs

HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY

Major credit programs administered by five constituents of the Housing and Home Finance Agency are included in this analysis. In addition, there are a number of minor programs—most of which are in liquidation—which are administered in the Agency.

Federal National Mortgage Association.—Under the Housing Act of 1954, the Federal National Mortgage Association was reconstituted as three fiscally independent activities—special assistance functions, management and liquidating functions, and secondary market operations—under a single management.

The special assistance activity is intended to assis- groups or areas otherwise unable to obtain private financ ing and to help prevent declines in housing activity. Authority is provided to make advance commitments, and to purchase $200 million in whole mortgages, and $100 million in immediate participations of 20 percent in mortgages. Legislation is being proposed to make the participation authority available for the purchase of whole mortgages and to increase the authorization by $200 million. This authority in 1957 and 1958 will be largely directed toward supporting mortgages on housing in urban renewal areas. In addition, $200 million commitment authority for mortgages on military family housing and $50 million for cooperative housing was authorized by the Housing Amendments of 1955. An increase of $50 million for cooperative housing is proposed for 1958. Total new commitments under the special assistance functions in 1958 are estimated at $437 million.

The management and liquidating functions of the Association consist of the liquidation of the mortgages of the predecessor association. No new commitments can be made and mortgage purchase authority expires as mortgages are sold or repaid. Authority is provided to substitute private financing for Treasury borrowing through the sale of unguaranteed debentures. Purchases under outstanding commitments will be completed in 1957. The outstanding mortgage portfolio at the end of 1958 is estimated at $2,077 million compared with $2,287 million at the end of 1957.

The secondary mortgage market operations of the Association are partially privately financed. This unit helps to make mortgage funds available throughout the country at market rates of interest. It may purchase only Government insured and guaranteed mortgages meeting the usual standards of private investors, and its operations must be self-supporting. The activity was financed initially by a Government stock subscription of approximately $93 million; private mortgage sellers are also required to buy stock, with provision for ultimate retirement of the Government stock. The Association may issue nonguaranteed debentures; the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase up to $1 billion of these. Legislation is being proposed to increase the Government stock subscription by $100 million and the Treasury borrowing authority by $700 million. It is estimated that at the end of 1958 the Association's portfolio of mortgages will total $1,958 million. Of this, $1,095 million will be financed from preferred stock purchased by the Treasury and temporary Treasury loans, which are included in budget expenditures, primarily in 1957. In 1958, the bulk of the mortgage purchases will be financed from debentures and stock sold privately, and are, therefore, reflected in trust expenditures.

Urban renewal administration.—Under the Housing Act of 1954, the Housing and Home Finance Administrator is authorized to make loans and grants to local public agencies for the planning and execution of slum clearance and urban renewal projects. Loans are made to cover the cost of project planning, and for the temporary financing of project development. In addition, private temporary loans may be guaranteed through the pledge by local agencies of the Federal loan commitment. Borrowing authority of $1 billion is available for these purposes.

The level of loan activity is determined primarily by the number of projects in the development stage. Planning has been completed in an increasing number of communities, and many projects have entered the actual development stage, so that financing needs are increasing. New loan commitments are estimated to increase from $83 million in 1956 to $200 million in 1957 and $297 million in 1958. Net loan expenditures are expected, however, to remain at relatively low levels because of the short-term nature of the loans, and the increasing use of guaranteed private financing in lieu of direct Federal loans.

The current interest rate on these loans is 3¼ percent. Administrative expenses are financed from a separate appropriation.

Community facilities administration.—The Housing Act of 1956 increased from $500 million to $750 million the authorization for long-term loans to colleges and universities for the construction of dormitories and related facilities. The sharply increased demand for these loans, brought about by the reduction in interest rates under the Housing Amendments of 1955 is expected to continue through 1958. As a result, loan commitments will increase substantially from $81 million in 1956 to $252 million in 1957 and $289 million in 1958. The current interest rate on these loans is 2⅞ percent, well below current private market levels for even tax-exempt obligations of this type. Legislation is being proposed in this budget to provide an additional $175 million of authority and permit increases in interest rates sufficient to cover the cost of money to the Treasury and to make loans more attractive to private investors.

The Housing Amendments of 1955 authorized $100 million for a new program of loans to local governments for public facilities, such as water and sewage systems. Preference is given to communities with a population of less than 10,000. Commitments under this program are estimated at $16 million in 1957 and $20 million in 1958. Interest rates are required to cover all expenses of the program. Under present market conditions, interest rates have been set at 4 percent for general obligation bonds of 30-year maturity and 4½ percent for revenue bonds of the same period, with upward or downward adjustments for variation in the maturity period. It is expected that these interest rates will permit private refinancing during the 2-year period of Government commitments totaling $2 million.

Federal Housing Administration.—The Federal Housing Administration is authorized to insure against default (a) the full principal amount of a wide variety of mortgage loans on new and existing housing, and (b) up to 90 percent of the principal amount on unsecured home-improvement loans. The basic program of insuring loans for 1- to 4-family housing accounts for the bulk of mortgage insurance activity, but insurance is also provided for mortgages on rental housing, housing under cooperative ownership, and housing on military reservations and in urban renewal areas. Approximately 16 percent of all outstanding home mortgages are insured by the Administration.

New mortgage insurance commitments are expected to increase in 1957 and 1958 mainly as a result of (1) the liberalization of terms on mortgages on existing housing authorized by the Housing Act of 1956, and (2) the growing activity under the mortgage insurance programs for housing in urban renewal areas and family housing for the armed services. In 1958 it is estimated that commitments will be made for insurance of mortgages on 626,200 dwelling units and for 1.3 million home-improvement loans.

The Administration's program is fully self-supporting. Insurance premiums, fees, and other income will cover all current expenses and add substantially to the reserve against future losses. In order to maintain the competitive status of insured mortgages relative to other investments, the maximum interest rate has been increased to 5 percent for insured home mortgages and 4½ percent for mortgages on rental housing, exclusive of the insurance premium and service charges.

Public Housing Administration.—Under the Housing Act of 1949, the Public Housing Administration makes loans and grants to assist local authorities in the construction of low-rent public housing. These loans and grants are made under annual contribution contracts between the Administration and local authorities. The annual contribution contracts provide for (1) loan commitments by the Administration not to exceed 90 percent of project development costs, and (2) the payment of annual Federal contributions over a 40-year period to cover debt service on the bonds used to finance the project permanently.

Loan commitments under annual contribution contracts are either disbursed as direct Federal advances or used to guarantee private temporary loans. Most frequently, a direct Federal advance is made initially and later refunded with guaranteed financing. Ordinarily long-term bonds are sold to private investors prior to completion of construction, and all temporary financing, both direct and guaranteed, is retired. However, under some circumstances, the period of temporary financing may be indefinitely extended. The Administration's borrowing authority for these purposes is $1.5 billion. Because of the decline in the number of units under construction, the volume of temporary financing, including both public and private loans, will decline during 1957 and 1958.

Prior to completion of construction, the units are permanently financed by the local housing authority through the sale of 40-year serial bonds to private investors. While not directly guaranteed by the Federal Government, these local housing authority bonds are treated in this analysis as guaranteed obligations by virtue of the Government contract to pay annual contributions covering debt service. The outstanding permanent financing is expected to increase from $2.1 billion at the end of 1956 to $3 billion by the end of 1958, reflecting the completion and permanent financing of a large number of units started in earlier years.

On direct Federal loans, local authorities are charged at the present time an interest rate of 3¼ percent. In the past year interest rates on private temporary loans have averaged slightly over 1.5 percent and on long-term loans have ranged between 2.35 and 2.55 percent, depending primarily on variations in market rates of interest.

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION

This analysis includes the loan guaranty and insurance programs, and the direct housing loan program authorized under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended. It excludes minor lending activities of the Veterans Administration, such as policy loans made by the veterans' life insurance funds and a few very small inactive programs.

Loan guaranties and insurance.—The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs guarantees housing, business, and farm loans made by private lenders to veterans of World War II and the Korean conflict. By June 30, 1956, approximately 4,811,000 loans of all types had been guaranteed, of which 94 percent were for homes, 5 percent for businesses, and 1 percent for farms; housing loans currently account for nearly 99 percent. It is estimated that annual loans guaranteed will decrease from 607,000 in 1956 to 540,000 in 1958. This decline reflects a somewhat slower pace of new home construction and the strong competition for funds in the private mortgage market. There is no statutory limit on the aggregate amount of the loans.

The maximum interest rates on guaranteed and insured loans are designated by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, within limits set by law. The current rates of 4½ percent on guaranteed loans and 5.7 percent on most insured loans represent the statutory maximum. An increase in the statutory limit is recommended by the administration.

Under existing legislation the Government is liable for all losses on most loans up to 60 percent of the outstanding principal amount, or $7,500, whichever is less. No charge is made by the Government for its guaranty. Administrative expenses are paid from the general operating expenses appropriation of the Veterans Administration and claims are paid from a general appropriation for veterans' readjustment benefits. Net losses on claims paid up to June 30, 1956, amounted to about 32 million dollars, or less than 1 percent of loan guaranties and insurance made since the program's inception.

The loan-guaranty program for World War II veterans expires on July 25, 1958.

Direct housing loans.—In areas where the guaranty program is ineffective because of lack of private funds at 4½ percent interest, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may make loans directly to veterans for the purchase, construction, or improvement of homes (including farm housing) at 4½ percent interest. An increase in the interest rate in line with the proposed increase on guaranteed loans is recommended. New commitments for direct loans in 1957 and 1958 are expected to exceed the number made in 1956, primarily because of the reduced availability of private mortgage funds. It is estimated that 125,000 direct loans will have been made by June 30, 1958, when the program expires.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Three major credit programs of the Department of Agriculture are included in this analysis.

Rural Electrification Administration.—Since 1935, the Rural Electrification Administration has been making loans with 35-year maturities, chiefly to cooperatives, to finance construction of electrical distributions, transmissions, and generating facilities to serve rural areas without central station service. Since 1950, similar loans have been made to finance construction and improvement of rural telephone systems.

New obligational authority is provided annually in the budget to finance these programs. New commitments for 1958 will be $265 million, the same as for 1957. Most of the loan disbursements in 1958 will arise from commitments made in previous years; undisbursed commitments of $688 million at the end of 1958 will be the basis for disbursements for the following 2½ years, on the average.

Interest rates are set by statute at 2 percent, substantially below the present cost of long-term money to the Treasury of about 3⅜ percent. Administrative expenses are financed by a separate appropriation. Collections of principal and interest are deposited in miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

Farmers' Home Administration.—The Farmers' Home Administration makes loans to farmers unable to obtain credit on terms within their means from other sources for operating expenses and crop production, farm ownership and improvement, farm housing, and for soil and water conservation activities. Loans are intended to strengthen the family-type farm and encourage better farming methods. These loan programs are financed by annual authorizations. The Administration may also insure a maximum of $100 million a year in long-term mortgage loans under the farm ownership program and a maximum of $25 million a year under the soil and water loan program.

New direct loans are expected to amount to $310 million in 1958, compared with $266 million in 1957. The increase includes a rise of $20 million in loans for farm housing and other farm buildings under the authority provided by the Housing Act of 1956. A supplemental appropriation of $26 million for the farm ownership loan program is recommended for 1957 to permit an increase in the refinancing of farm debts under the expanded loan authority enacted last year.

The interest rate on farm operating loans, which constitute the largest number of direct loans, is 5 percent; this is the legal maximum. Interest rates on direct farm ownership and soil and water loans have been set at 4½ percent. The maximum rate stipulated by law for farm ownership loans is 5 percent; no maximum rate is set for the soil and water loans. However, since these loans are interchangeable to some extent, it is not feasible to establish interest rates on soil and water loans that differ materially from those on farm ownership loans. The Secretary of Agriculture has authorized interest rates on insured farm ownership and soil and water loans at 4½ percent, of which one-half percent represents insurance premiums and one-half percent a charge for administration. Interest rates on farm housing loans have been set at 4 percent, the maximum rate provided by law.

Administrative expenses of the Farmers' Home Administration are covered by separate appropriations. Collections of interest and principal go into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

The Farmers' Home Administration also administers a revolving fund for which emergency loans may be made to farmers and stockmen suffering from production disasters and unable to obtain credit on reasonable terms from other sources. The interest rate is 3 percent on all loans except special livestock loans on which the rate is 5 percent. New commitments in 1958 are expected to be below 1956 and 1957 and repayments are estimated to exceed disbursements in both 1957 and 1958.

Commodity Credit Corporation.—In carrying out the Government's program of supporting prices of agricultural commodities, the Commodity Credit Corporation makes direct loans to farmers and guarantees loans made by private lending agencies. Loans and guaranties enable farmers to market their commodities in an orderly manner and secure prices for such commodities in line with the standards set forth in law. Loans are backed by commodities and borrowers may discharge their obligations without personal liability by turning over pledged commodities, to the Corporation. These forfeitures of collateral are treated as repayments of loans in this analysis. The Corporation also makes loans for the construction or improvement of farm-storage facilities.

The Corporation's borrowing authority was increased from $12 billion to $14.5 billion in 1957. No increase is being requested for 1958. However, a $1,240 million appropriation will be needed to restore the impairment of the Corporation's capital resulting from 1956 operations of the price support and related programs. New loan and loan guaranty commitments in 1958 are estimated at $2,538 million, which is $380 million less than the estimate for 1957. This reduction is accounted for primarily by the new soil bank program and increased exports of agricultural commodities. Repayments of direct loans in 1958 are estimated at $2,329 million, virtually the same as estimated disbursements.

There are no statutory limits on interest rates. Interest rates on 1956 crop loans will be continued at 3½ percent. This rate is charged the borrower only if the loan is repaid in cash; if repaid by surrender of collateral, no interest is charged. In the case of guaranties, the private lender receives interest at the rate of 2¾ percent, plus service charges.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized by title XI of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, to insure private construction loans and mortgages on most types of cargo and passenger-carrying vessels. The objective of this program is to facilitate private financing of construction, conversion, or reconditioning of vessels. The mortgages or loans may not exceed 75 percent of the cost to the purchaser of vessels built with Federal subsidies and 87½ percent of the construction costs of nonsubsidized vessels. The aggregate unpaid principal amount of insured mortgages and loans outstanding at any one time may not exceed $1 billion.

Recent amendments to title XI increased the authority of the Government to insure ship mortgages from 90 percent to 100 percent of the amount of the mortgage. As a result of these amendments and the worldwide shortage of shipping capacity, it is estimated that insured loans in force will increase from $18 million in 1956 to $466 million in 1958.

The maximum interest rate on guaranteed loans is set by statute at 5 percent, but the Secretary of Commerce has authority to increase the limit to 6 percent if private financing is not available at a lower rate. Insurance premiums are ⅜ of 1 percent per annum on construction loans and ¾ of 1 percent per annum on mortgage loans. No default has been incurred since the inception of the program.

EXPANSION OF DEFENSE PRODUCTION

Under the Defense Production Act, the President is authorized to make loans or advances or to guarantee loans for expansion of defense production. Numerous agencies participate in these programs.

Loan guaranties.—Under section 301 of the Defense Production Act, the three military departments of the Department of Defense, the Departments of Commerce, the Interior, and Agriculture, the Atomic Energy Commission, and the General Services Administration are authorized to guarantee loans by public or private financing institutions to defense contractors and subcontractors. The Federal Reserve banks act as fiscal agents for the guaranties of private loans, and the procedure is governed by the Federal Reserve Board's regulation V. No specific limitation is placed on the amount of loan guaranties.

From the beginning of the program in September 1950 to the end of December 1956, nearly 1,500 V-loans, totaling $2.8 billion were authorized by the procurement agencies. More than 95 percent of the guaranties have been authorized by the Departments of the Air Force, the Army, and the Navy, primarily to speed the production of aircraft and aircraft parts, electronics and communication equipment, tanks, weapons, and ammunition. Guaranties by the General Services Administration to expand production of basic minerals and metals and machien tools account for nearly all of the remainder.

To cover administrative expenses and possible losses, charges are made for guaranties, the rate depending upon the proportion of the loan guaranty. This proportion has averaged about 75 percent. The guaranteed portion of loans must be purchased by the procurement agency upon request of the lender. So far, income has substantially exceeded expenses. There is no statutory limit on the interest rate which financing institutions may charge, but a maximum interest rate of 5 percent and a commitment fee of one-half to 1 percent have been set administratively.

Loans and advances.—Under section 302 of the Defense Production Act, the President is authorized to make direct loans or to participate in private loans for the expansion of industrial capacity, development of technological processes, or production of essential materials. The President has delegated this authority for loans to domestic borrowers to the Treasury Department and for foreign loans to the Export-Import Bank. The authority is available for borrowers upon certification by the appropriate defense agency as to essentiality to the defense effort. Most of the loans have been made to assist in expanding the production of copper, steel, and other basic minerals and metals. Loans by the Export-Import Bank account for only a relatively small part of the total. No new commitments are expected in 1957 and 1958, since most of the planned expansion is already underway. It is anticipated that a large part of the loan portfolio will be sold or refinanced privately in 1957 and 1958, thus reducing loans and commitments outstanding from $230 million in 1956 to $73 million by the end of 1958.

Under section 303 of the same act, the General Services Administration has made advances on purchase commitments for strategic minerals and metals and industrial equipment. No new advances are expected in 1957 and 1958.

There is no statutory limitation on the interest rate. Interest rates charged on both loans and advances have been generally 5 percent. No ultimate net cost is expected.

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

The Small Business Administration was created in 1953, and is authorized to make loans to small businesses and to victims of natural disasters. The legislative authority for these programs expires on June 30, 1957, but the President has requested its extension.

Loans to small businesses are authorized up to a total of $150 million outstanding at any one time, but an increase is recommended so that loans may continue to be made in 1957. The maximum loan to any one borrower is $250,000, and maximum maturity generally 10 years. Loans may be made only if financial assistance is not available from private sources on reasonable terms and only if there is reasonable assurance of repayment. Moreover, direct loans are made only when it is not possible to secure participation from private banks. More than two-thirds of the loans made so far have been made jointly with private banks. The law provides for interest to be charged at the going local rate up to a maximum of 6 percent, which is the current rate. It is anticipated that 4,200 business loans will be made in 1957 and 3,200 in 1958. These figures compare with 1,915 in 1956.

The Administrator also has broad authority to make loans to victims of floods or other disasters. Generally, his policy is to designate disaster areas, residents of which are eligible for special financial assistance. There is no limit on the amount that may be loaned to each borrower, but the aggregate outstanding at any one time may not exceed $125 million. Loans for housing may have maturities up to 20 years, but other loans are limited to 10 years. Interest rates on disaster loans are set by law at 3 percent. The Small Business Administration also administers disaster loans previously made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Appropriations of $175 million have been made to finance the small business and disaster loan programs since the agency was established. Additional amounts totaling $50 million in 1957 and $75 million in 1958 will be needed to finance anticipated loans.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The only credit programs administered by the Treasury Department and included in this analysis are the liquidation of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans and the 1947 loan to the United Kingdom. The Treasury Department is also authorized to make civil defense loans, up to $250 million outstanding at any one time, upon certification by the Federal Civil Defense Administrator; however, no new commitments for civil defense loans are anticipated for 1957 and 1958.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation.—The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Liquidation Act provided for termination of the Corporation on June 30, 1954. The Corporation's foreign loans were transferred for liquidation to the Export-Import Bank, certain mortgages to the Federal National Mortgage Association, disaster loans to the Small Business Administration, and business and public agency loans to the Treasury Department. During the 3-year period from June 30, 1955, to June 30, 1958, business and public agency loans and commitments will have been reduced from $232 million to about $42 million.

Loan to United Kingdom.—A loan of $3,750 million was made to the United Kingdom in 1947 and 1948. It is a 50-year loan at 2 percent interest. Repayments of principal have been made on schedule, beginning in 1951. They are deposited directly in miscellaneous receipts and are not available for new loans.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

The Export-Import Bank is the principal foreign lending agency of the Government. Its total loan and loan guaranty authority is $4.9 billion; in addition, it has $100 million of authority to insure American exporters against certain risks of expropriation and confiscation. Its major goal is the expansion of trade between the United States and foreign countries. It extends loans to finance American exports and imports and the development of sources of strategic materials, and to promote the economic development of underdeveloped countries. The Bank also makes loans to foreign governments to meet emergency needs due to war, disaster, or reconstruction which would disrupt the normal flow of trade with the United States. The Bank also acts as an agent for the International Cooperation Administration in the Department of State in administering loans and has made a limited number of loans under authority of the Defense Production Act.

The Bank, in order to secure maximum private participation in its loan projects, emphasizes guaranties of private loans, rather than making loans directly. The high level of domestic demand for private capital currently restricts the success of these efforts. The Bank acts to supplement private capital and will not finance projects or exports for which private financing is normally available.

Interest rates and other loan terms are set by the Bank upon advice of the National Advisory Council on International Financial and Monetary Problems. In general, the Bank charges 2 percent more than the yield of United States Government securities with comparable maturities; rates on long-term unguaranteed loans are usually somewhat higher. Loan maturities vary from 12 or more months on export credits to a number of years on developmental loans. Losses have been small and income is more than adequate to cover costs; reserves amounting to $405 million on June 30, 1956, have been set aside for future contingencies. Annual dividends are being paid to the Treasury at the rate of 2¼ percent on capital stock.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The International Cooperation Administration in the Department of State directs the bulk of the loans extended under the mutual security program, the authority for which is in the President. The Administration and its predecessor organizations—the Foreign Operations Administration, the Mutual Security Administration, the Economic Cooperation Administration and the Technical Cooperation Administration—have made loans to foreign governments as part of a broad program to assist in the restoration of economic stability and to promote the economic development of underdeveloped areas in the free world. Extension of authority for the program is recommended, but new loan commitment figures are not available.

More than half of the loans were made during 1949, after passage of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948. Most of the loans are administered by the Export-Import Bank as agent for the International Cooperation Administration. The earlier loans, made primarily to assist the European countries in the restoration of their economies subsequent to World War II, are generally for a period of 28 years. Current mutual security loans generally are for a period of 40 years, and basic materials development loans are for 10 to 20 years.

Interest rates are determined by the Administration upon advice of the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems. Most of the older loans carry an interest rate of 2½ percent. In the case of most current loans, the borrower may choose to repay in dollars, paying 3 percent interest, or in local currencies, paying 4 percent. Costs of administering the loans are financed from funds available for the general administration of the agency. The first significant repayments began in 1956.

Special Analysis G

FEDERAL ACTIVITIES IN PUBLIC WORKS AND OTHER CONSTRUCTION

Federal construction activities are extensive and involve or affect an important part of the total construction activities of the Nation. They include construction undertaken directly by the Federal Government in connection with its various civil and national security programs; financial aid in the form of loans or grants for construction by States, local governments, cooperatives and nonprofit health and educational institutions serving the public; and aid to housing and other private construction.

Because of the importance of these activities, they are presented in this analysis on an overall basis. Detailed information on each of the Federal programs included is shown separately in parts II and III of this budget under the agency responsible for the program. The tables on pages 1122 to 1126 of this analysis summarize the authorizations and expenditures for direct Federal construction and for grant and loan programs to aid State and local construction. The text, in addition to describing the various Federal public works activities, also describes some of the forms of Federal financial assistance to private construction. The cost of this assistance, however, is not included in the figures on public works expenditures. A reconciliation of the public works expenditures with the major categories of special analysis D, "Investment, operating, and other budget expenditures," is shown on page 1121.

The volume and types of Federal construction vary from year to year as national needs and objectives change. Economic conditions and fiscal policies, the level of construction costs and the magnitude of State, local, and private construction also affect the Federal program. As indicated in the President's budget message, competition for labor, materials, and equipment in the construction industry is very active. Accordingly, while proposals are made in the budget to move forward at a prudent rate with those programs which are urgently needed, some other construction programs have not been recommended, and the head of each agency has been asked to watch closely the timing of construction and to postpone work which can appropriately be deferred.

Direct Federal construction currently constitutes about 7.5 percent of total new construction, and federally aided State and local public works construction represents another 5.5 percent. Most of this public construction is undertaken through private contracting organizations under contracts with Federal, State, or local agencies.

The expenditures shown for public works in this analysis represent disbursements of funds rather than the value of the work put in place during the year. Although such expenditures for a continuing program approximate the value of work put in place on federally owned projects, they include only the Federal portion of the cost of federally aided State and local public works. The non-Federal portion of the total cost of Federal grant programs for public works approximately equals the Federal share, but for individual projects or governmental units this share may vary substantially.

Throughout this analysis, the tables include programs financed from budget accounts and trust funds. For 1956, the Federal-aid highway program is shown under budget accounts; for 1957 and 1958, it is shown under trust funds, in accordance with legislation enacted in the past session of the Congress.

Total expenditures for Federal public works are estimated to increase from $4.9 billion in 1957 to $6.3 billion in 1958. This increase is largely due to the greatly enlarged Federal-aid highway program and to increased expenditures for water resources development projects started in earlier years. Under proposed legislation, additional expenditures will also be required for the Federal-aid school program. Other increases will occur in the military program, and as a result of increased construction costs.

Civil Public Works

"Civil public works," as used in this analysis, are those construction activities of the Federal Government which are required for its civil programs as distinguished from those required for national security programs. These activities normally include such works as structures for the control or utilization of water for various purposes, transportation facilities, such as roads and airports with their associated structures, and buildings for the housing of various public functions. Some of these facilities, such as major flood control, navigation and irrigation developments, veterans hospitals, and public buildings, are undertaken directly by the Federal Government. Other facilities, such as the major highway systems of the country, hospitals for general service to the public, and plants for the treatment of waterborne wastes, are undertaken by State or local governments with financial assistance from the Federal Government.

Table 2 summarizes Federal expenditures for civil public works for 1956, 1957, and 1958, by agency.

CONTINUING AND NEW WORK

Table 3 classifies those civil public works shown under budget accounts according to whether they will be continuing or newly undertaken in 1958. It indicates the amounts required after 1958 to complete the direct Federal work and grant commitments programed in the budget.

Expenditures in 1958 for continuing work are estimated at $1.5 billion, with $6.2 billion required in later years to complete. Included are a number of direct Federal water resources projects and several programs for the development of other natural resources, such as construction of roads and facilities in the national forests and parks, which will require a number of years to complete, and several Federal-aid programs, which will continue for a number of years.

Expenditures for new projects and programs in 1958 are estimated at $405 million, with $1.6 billion required thereafter to complete. A total of 30 authorized water resources projects are recommended for starting in 1958, as well as some small projects costing less than $400,000 each. Other authorized new work includes 2 veterans hospitals and 2 penal institutions.

Under proposed legislation, a new Federal assistance program for general school construction is recommended. Provision is also made for the Bureau of Reclamation to start construction of the Fryingpan-Arkansas project and to make loans and grants to local groups for the construction of small reclamation projects, for the Tennessee

INVESTIGATIONS AND STATUS OF PLANNED AND AUTHORIZED PROJECTS

Adequate basic data, comprehensive surveys and careful detailed planning are essential for economical design and construction of public works. Effective use of public works for countercyclical purposes also requires that they be planned well in advance. Federal programs designed to meet these objectives are described below. Construction expenditures shown in this analysis include detailed project planning costs but do not include costs of basic data collection and preliminary surveys.

Basic data.—Federal programs for the collection of basic data are designed to serve a wide variety of nationally important engineering and scientific purposes, including the investigation and planning of Federal and other construction projects. In line with the recommendations of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Water Resources Policy, an increase in 1958 appropriations for these programs is proposed. A total of $66 million is recommended for the general coverage data collection programs, including geodetic control surveys; topographic, geologic, and soil surveys and maps; and the accumulation and processing of hydrologic and meteorologic data. Some of these programs are scheduled several years in advance in accordance with priorities determined by user requirements.

Preliminary surveys and investigations.—Careful preliminary investigations are necessary to determine the basic need for projects as well as their engineering and economic feasibility. Inadequate examination of the factors involved in project formulation before authorization may result in approval of projects having questionable justification or in seriously underestimating project costs. Appropriations and allotments totaling $17 million are included for 1958 for preliminary investigations of river basin and other construction programs, including continuation of the survey to determine whether hydroelectric power can be economically developed from the tides at Passamaquoddy Bay. In addition, $1.5 million is recommended to permit the Housing and Home Finance Agency to make grants to States and metropolitan areas for assistance in general community planning.

Detailed planning.—Preparation of project plans in advance of construction provides for orderly programing of project construction and may prevent expensive changes in project designs during the construction period. Such planning also provides an opportunity to verify the economic feasibility of projects, as well as their estimated cost, before construction is started. Expenditures for advance preparation of plans in 1958 are estimated at $39 million. This total includes $11 million to enable the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation to carry on planning on about 85 projects already authorized by the Congress, and $1 million for a 1958 supplemental to initiate planning on projects expected to be authorized in a rivers and harbors and flood control bill. Planning will also be underway in 1958 on buildings for the Smithsonian Institution, the Bureau of Standards, various Federal hospitals, and for other purposes.

The budget also provides an additional $6 million to enable the Housing and Home Finance Agency to make repayable advances to State and local agencies for the planning of their public works.

Authorized reserve.—An adequate reserve of soundly conceived authorized projects is necessary to permit a wise selection of projects for advance planning and for starting in accordance with program needs and economic and budgetary policy. Agency reports indicate that, on the basis of present costs, $12 billion of unstarted work has been authorized, either by general or specific legislation. About $8 billion of this authorized work is included in the river basin programs of the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, representing 618 projects.

Planned projects.—By the end of 1957 Federal agencies will have an estimated $1.7 billion of authorized Federal projects planned to a stage where construction could be started, and advance planning in various stages of completion on an additional $4.7 billion. Comparable totals for 1958 are estimated at $3.4 billion and $3.8 billion, respectively. Most of this planned reserve consists of water resources projects. By the end of 1958, the Corps of Engineers will have completed planning to the stage where work could be started on about 218 projects, representing an estimated $1,344 million of work, and the Bureau of Reclamation, 14 projects, amounting to about $975 million. In addition, the Corps of Engineers will have planning in process on another $872 million of work, and the Bureau of Reclamation on $865 million of work. A substantial amount of planning will also have been done by State and local agencies on highways, airports, waste treatment facilities, and hospitals, for which Federal grants are authorized.

PROGRAMS BY MAJOR FUNCTION AND TYPE OF FACILITY

Civil public works expenditures are listed in table 5 according to the functional classification used in this budget, with subclassifications according to the type of facility. Most functions require some public works. For some functions, expenditures for public works represent only a small part of the total cost of the program. For other functions, such as natural resources, over one-half of the expenditures are for various types of construction. About 77 percent of total civil public works expenditures in 1958, including highway trust fund expenditures, will be for the natural resources and transportation programs.

NATURAL RESOURCES

for flood control, navigation, irrigation, hydroelectric power, municipal water supply and related purposes, and the conservation and development of land, forest, mineral, recreational, and fish and wildlife resources. Public works expenditures for these purposes will amount to $1,011 million in 1958, compared with $871 million in 1957. By far the largest proportion of these expenditures is for water resources developments.

Corps of Engineers.—The rivers and harbors and flood-control programs of the Corps of Engineers are nationwide in scope, except for the Tennessee Valley area. In flood-control work, emphasis will be given in 1958 to the projects in the Northeast and Far West, which were started in 1956 and 1957, and to the continuation of construction on the Mississippi River and its principal tributaries. Large flood-control projects are also underway in Los Angeles, Calif., and in central and southern Florida.

Construction will be continued in 1958 on 24 multiple-purpose projects, including work on 2 additional power generating units at Table Rock Reservoir and 5 additional units at Oahe Reservoir, and on 117 predominantly flood-control projects, including 16 for the lower Mississippi River and tributaries. Construction will also be continued on 87 other projects, mostly for navigation, including the Great Lakes connecting channels, the Delaware River channel to Trenton, and a number of locks and dams on the Ohio River. Thirty of these projects will be completed in 1958.

Thirteen new local flood-protection projects, which will provide benefits primarily to urban and industrial areas, are recommended for starting in 1958. Two of these will be completed within that year. Three new flood-control reservoirs will be initiated in 1958, and funds are provided for adding new power generating units at the existing Bull Shoals Reservoir in Arkansas and Missouri. Work will also be started on 6 new channel and harbor projects, 1 of which will be completed in 1958, and 1 lock and dam. In addition, $3 million is provided for small projects costing less than $400,000 each, which will be selected by the Secretary of the Army.

The Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation.—This federally owned corporation is constructing that part of the Saint Lawrence Seaway which is in United States territory. Related navigation improvements are being built by Canada, and related power developments by the State of New York and the Province of Ontario. It is anticipated that the seaway will be open to deep-draft traffic in 1959. Legislation is being proposed to provide additional borrowing authority in 1958 to finance completion of the project.

Bureau of Reclamation.—The Bureau's program for development of water resources in the 17 Western States for irrigation and other purposes consists primarily of continuation of construction on 71 irrigation and power projects including 21 units of the Missouri River Basin project, 3 units of the Colorado River storage project, and rehabilitation work on 10 projects constructed in prior years. Of these, 7 projects and 1 unit of the Missouri River Basin project will be completed during 1958. Reclamation facilities scheduled for completion in 1958 will provide a full water supply for 168,400 new acres and supplemental water for 87,600 acres of presently irrigated lands.

The 1958 budget also provides funds for initiation of construction on 3 new projects and 3 units of the Missouri River Basin program. In addition, provision is made under proposed legislation for initiation in 1958 of the Fryingpan-Arkansas project in Colorado, and for a small projects program under which the Bureau will make loans and grants to public agencies for the construction of small irrigation projects.

International Boundary and Water Commission.—This Commission participates with a similar agency of Mexico in the construction of water conservation and control facilities on the Rio Grande River. In 1958 construction will continue on Anzalduas Dam, started in 1956.

Tennessee Valley Authority.—The 1958 construction program of the Authority provides for continuing construction of 7 steam-electric generating units started in 1956 and 1957 and for cleanup work on 5 steam-electric plants which are in operation. Construction of transmission lines required to market the additional power to be produced and continuation of work on a lock at Wilson Dam are also provided for. Under proposed legislation provision is made for the Authority to start construction of one new steam-electric generating unit at an existing plant.

Summary of Federal electric power facilities.—Federal electric power installations include hydroelectric facilities constructed as a part of multiple-purpose reservoir projects, and steam-electric facilities operated by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

At the end of calendar year 1956 generating capacity installed and operated by Federal agencies amounted to 18.7 million kilowatts. This was about 16 percent of the total capacity of class I electric utility systems in the United States. Additional capacity of 2.5 million kilowatts is scheduled for completion in calendar years 1957 and 1958 with substantial amounts scheduled for later years. The capacity now programed will, when completed, result in a total Federal capacity of about 25.9 million kilowatts.

Federal transmission facilities and substations for the integration of Federal generating stations and for the marketing of power from these stations will be constructed in 1958 by the Bureau of Reclamation, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Southwestern and Bonneville Power Administrations. In addition, the latter agency will provide facilities for the transmission of power from non-Federal projects on a mutually beneficial basis under appropriate wheeling agreements. The addition of 759 miles of lines during that year will bring the total in operation on Federal systems to about 28,300 miles. Expenditures in 1958 for these facilities by all agencies will be $66 million.

Summary of water resources and related developments.—The major part of water resources development is classified under the natural resources function, but other water resource developments are carried out under the programs for agriculture and agricultural resources and for labor and welfare. Expenditures for all water resources and related developments are brought together in table 7.

Other natural resources programs.—Included under the natural resources function are programs for the construction of roads and trails in the national forests, national parks, and Indian reservations and on other public lands, and for continuation of work on six national parkways. Provision is made also for the construction of buildings, utilities, and other facilities in the National Park System, which is composed of 180 park, monument, and other areas. The latter facilities, together with road, trail, and parkway construction, are a part of the 10-year development program of the National Park Service initiated in the fiscal year 1957. An expanded program to improve recreational facilities, and to provide employee housing and access roads in the national forests, is also proposed.

Access roads and other facilities will also be constructed by the Bureau of Land Management to facilitate use of public domain lands. The program of the Fish and Wildlife Service includes additional facilities at fish hatcheries, improvement of wildlife areas, and completion of Devils Kitchen Dam, Crab Orchard Refuge, Illinois.

development, and construction of civil defense facilities. Expenditures for transportation facilities, including trust fund expenditures, amounting to $1,857 million, account for 50 percent of the expenditures for civil public works in 1958.

Public roads.—The Federal-aid Highway Act of 1956 provided authority for grants to States for projects on the interstate highway system totaling $24.8 billion. This amount, which is spread over the 13-year period from 1957 through 1969, will cover about 90 percent of the cost of completing this highway system. Of the $24.8 billion, the act provided an additional $1 billion in 1956, $1.7 billion in 1957, and $2 billion in 1958. The act also included additional contract authorizations of $125 million in 1956, $850 million in 1957, and $875 million in 1958, for grants for Federal-aid primary, secondary, and urban highways. The Federal-aid highway systems now have a combined total length of about 775,000 miles.

For fiscal year 1957 and thereafter, authorizations and expenditures for the Federal-aid highway program, which is administered by the Bureau of Public Roads, are carried in a separately financed highway trust fund and therefore are no longer included in budget totals. They are included, however, in the overall totals for public works in this analysis.

In addition to administering the Federal-aid program, the Bureau of Public Roads constructs highways in the national forests and on other public lands. The 1956 act provided contract authority to continue these programs at somewhat increased levels. Expenditures in 1957 and 1958 will provide for construction and improvement of some 1,300 miles of forest highways, continuation of road work in Alaska, and construction of the Woodrow Wilson Memorial Bridge over the Potomac River near the District of Columbia.

Airports and air navigation and research facilities.—Grants in aid for the construction and improvement of airports will continue to increase under the expanded program enacted in 1955. It is expected that projects will be programed for 400 airports during 1958. The purchase and installation of air navigation and traffic control facilities for the Federal airways system will continue in 1958. A 1957 supplemental of $35 million is proposed in the budget for constructing an additional airport to serve Washington, D. C.

A major new construction program of $41 million for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is proposed in 1958 to provide new types of facilities for hypersonic research, to expand the nuclear propulsion component research facility now under construction, and to modernize a number of existing research and supporting technical facilities.

Other transportation facilities.—The Office of Territories will spend $1.5 million in 1958 for continuation of construction on the Alaska Railroad, and the Panama Canal Company $9 million for construction of various canal improvements and for continuation in 1958 of preparatory work started in 1957 on the Balboa Bridge.

Housing and community development.—The Federal Government assists in the construction of low-rent public housing units through loans and annual contributions to local housing authorities. The 1958 budget provides for starting construction of 35,000 units as compared with an estimated 25,000 units in 1957. In addition, it is estimated that 25,000 units will be completed in 1958 compared with 15,000 in 1957. Proposed legislation for additional borrowing authority will permit the Housing and Home Finance Agency to continue to provide loans to colleges and universities for the construction of dormitories and other facilities in those instances where private financing is not available. Gross loans in 1958 are estimated at $148 million, of which $75 million will be to public institutions. Other expenditures consist largely of payments on grant commitments for defense community facilities, loans for public facilities under the Housing amendments of 1955, and provision of public works in Alaska and the Virgin Islands.

Civil defense.—This program provides financial assistance to States and localities for the construction and renovation of emergency control centers and civil defense training facilities, and also provides for the planning of control centers and construction of instruction facilities.

VETERANS' SERVICES AND BENEFITS

Construction of a hospital at Topeka, Kans., is underway, and work on facilities to replace most of the Long Beach, Calif., hospital has been started. Construction of replacement facilities at the Downey, Ill., hospital will begin in 1958. This budget also carries funds for the replacement of the hospitals at Jackson, Miss., and Nashville, Tenn., and for preparation of architectural plans for replacement of the hospital at Wood, Wis.

Other activities under this function include work by the quartermaster general of the Army to maintain existing monuments and cemeteries and to provide additional grave sites for persons entitled to burial in national cemeteries, and construction by the American Battle Monuments Commission of American memorials and cemeteries in foreign countries.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS AND FINANCE

Public works activities under this function include construction of office buildings and living quarters, where necessary, for the United States Government abroad. In addition, provision is made for continuing the remodeling and construction of an addition to the State Department building in Washington, D. C., estimated to cost $57 million, and for continuation of construction of radio facilities for the "Voice of America."

LABOR AND WELFARE

Health facilities.—The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare administers a program of grants to States to aid in the construction of hospitals and other medical facilities. Only the grants made to public agencies are included as public works in this analysis; those for nonpublic facilities are discussed later in this analysis and are shown in table 8. Expenditures in 1958 for grants to public agencies will amount to $44 million, or 45 percent of total medical facilities grants. The Department will also make grants for construction of health research facilities, an estimated 40 percent of which are for public non-Federal institutions.

The Department's health programs also include construction and renovation in 1958 of medical facilities for the Indian population, and major repair and rehabilitation work and planning for a new cafeteria-treatment building at St. Elizabeths Hospital, Washington, D. C. Supple-

Education and research facilities.—Legislation is recommended to accomplish in 4 years the program of general assistance for school construction which was recommended in the 1957 budget as a 5-year program. For this program, the budget includes new obligational authority of $451 million with expenditures estimated at $185 million in 1958. Although part of the money may be used to purchase local school bonds and to aid in establishing reserve funds to help assure payment of obligations issued by State school-financing agencies, the expenditures for this program are classified as grants-in-aid in the budget. Assistance for school construction in defense areas and in local districts burdened by Federal activities will continue through 1958.

Grants for construction of waste treatment facilities.—The Water Pollution Control Act Amendments of 1956 authorized a program of grants to communities to stimulate and assist in the construction of waste treatment facilities. These grants are made to communities for projects which are certified by the States as meeting their pollution control programs and which the Public Health Service determines as meeting the criteria for Federal assistance. These grants may not exceed 30 percent of the cost of the project up to a maximum of $250,000 for each grant.

Prison facilities.—The 1958 construction program for the Federal Prison System includes funds for starting 2 new penal institutions and various minor projects at 26 institutions. Other construction, by Federal Prison Industries, Incorporated, will provide employment and training opportunities for prisoners.

AGRICULTURE AND AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES

An increase in funds is provided in 1958 for the rapidly expanding program authorized under the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act. Under the act the Department of Agriculture provides technical and financial assistance to States and local groups for the installation of works of improvement in upstream watersheds for the purposes of preventing damages from soil erosion, floodwater, and sedimentation, and to further the conservation, development, utilization, and disposal of water. The Department also will continue the program of upstream flood-prevention work, including the construction of floodwater retarding structures, diversion ditches, and floodways, in the 11 areas authorized by the 1936 Flood Control Act, and on a number of smaller pilot watersheds.

Other construction work by the Department of Agriculture in 1958 includes grain storage facilities, a laboratory at Ames, Iowa, for research on contagious animal diseases, and more adequate facilities for research in a number of other fields.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT

Public works classified under this function include the construction and major repair and improvement of administrative and other buildings required to carry on the Government's business. The 1958 program includes increased expenditures for the major renovation and modernization of buildings and for air conditioning of some buildings. The lease-purchase programs carried on by the General Services Administration and the Post Office Department are discussed in a later section of this analysis on "Other Federal activities in construction." Other direct Federal construction in this category includes continuation of work on new office buildings for the Senate and House of Representatives, and extension and reconstruction of the central portion of the Capitol, in the District of Columbia. The Senate office building will be completed in 1958.

In addition, the Federal Government provides assistance, through grants and loans, for construction of various community facilities in Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the District of Columbia. The Canal Zone Government will also construct various civic improvements.

MAJOR NATIONAL SECURITY CONSTRUCTION

Department of Defense, military public works.—The military public works program includes both overseas and domestic operational, tactical, logistical, training, and research, development and test facilities for the Air Force, Army, and Navy. Additional facilities are also being constructed for the civilian components reserves including the National Guard.

In 1957 and 1958, the Navy will place emphasis on the further development of those airfields used for training and for operation of jet aircraft, including the extension and modernization of runways, and on facilities in support of antisubmarine warfare and for berthing and drydocking the large-type aircraft carriers. The Air Force will continue the construction of air-defense installations, expansion of the aircraft control and warning system, and dispersal bases for the strategic forces. The Army will continue construction of antiaircraft guided missile facilities. Family and troop housing, community facilities, and a moderate amount of replacement construction are also included in these service programs. New construction starts for military public works will cover only those projects deemed essential to the national defense program.

Atomic Energy Commission.—Expenditures by the Atomic Energy Commission in 1958 are primarily for continuation of projects started in prior years. This construction includes production plants and weapons facilities, power and propulsion reactors including land prototypes for submarines and large naval ships, power reactors in conjunction with public power projects, facilities for development of aircraft and missile nuclear propulsion, three multibillion electron volt accelerators, and a new headquarters building at Germantown, Md. New projects proposed for 1958 include principally further improvement and expansion of production and weapons facilities, additional facilities related to civilian atomic power development, further additions to ground test facilities for the aircraft nuclear propulsion program, construction of an atomic training center in Puerto Rico, and additional research facilities.

OTHER FEDERAL ACTIVITIES IN CONSTRUCTION

In addition to public works, there are other types of Federal activities, involving loans, loan guaranties, grants, or direct Federal expenditures, which affect construction. Federal expenditures for these other activities contribute principally to the physical assets of cooperatives, and nonprofit private groups, or of individuals, whereas public works are limited both in the foregoing sections of this analysis and in special analysis D to additions to Federal, State, and local governmental physical assets.

ASSISTANCE TO COOPERATIVES AND NONPROFIT GROUPS

One important group of these programs consists of Federal assistance to cooperatives and nonprofit institutions, such as colleges and hospitals, for the construction of facilities. These are discussed below and shown in table 8.

TABLE 8.—Federal expenditures for cooperatives and nonprofit groups (not included in civil public works)

Program	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Grants:
Nonpublic hospital construction	$29.9	$45.0	$54.2
Nonpublic hospital facilities in the District of Columbia	.4	.5	1.8
Construction, Howard University	3.3	5.2	1.5
Construction, Gallaudet College	.3	2.0	2.6
Construction of research facilities		2.4	12.6
Construction of medical and dental research and teaching facilities (proposed legislation)			1.6
Loans:
Rural electrification (gross)	208.7	225.0	255.0
College housing (gross)	16.4	41.9	72.5
Total	259.0	322.0	401.8

The Rural Electrification Administration makes loans primarily to rural cooperatives to finance electrification facilities and rural telephones. About 94 percent of the farms in the United States now have central-station electric service and new electrification loans are largely for additional generating facilities and heavier distribution systems, required by increased customer demands. About 750,000 subscribers will be provided with modern telephone service under loans approved through calendar year 1956.

Grants are made to States by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for construction of both public and privately owned hospitals and medical facilities. Grants for public facilities are classified as public works and are discussed elsewhere in this analysis. Expenditures for private facilities, most of them operated on a nonprofit basis, represent 55 percent of total grants for medical facilities and will amount to $54 million in 1958. In 1957 a 3-year program of grants for the construction of health research facilities was enacted. Legislation is recommended which would extend this program to a 5-year program including grants for construction of teaching facilities in the health sciences. The total authorization of $90 million would be increased to $250 million under the proposed legislation. The budget includes $15 million to finance these additional provisions of the grant program in addition to $30 million under the present authorization.

Provision is also made in the budget of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for the continued construction of buildings for Howard University and Gallaudet College.

Loans in 1958 to private, nonprofit colleges and universities by the Housing and Home Finance Agency for the construction of dormitories and other facilities are estimated to amount to $72 million.

AIDS FOR PRIVATE CONSTRUCTION

Another group of Federal programs, consisting of loans, loan guaranties, tax concessions and occasional grants, direct aid, and other incentives, stimulates construction by farmers, homeowners, and businesses. This construction adds up to an important segment of the Nation's total construction.

The Congress, in 1954, provided basic authority for a lease-purchase program to acquire needed Federal public buildings for postal, administrative, and other purposes. Under this program, new buildings are built by private interests, and the Federal Government makes payments extending over a period of 10 to 25 years. At the end of the period the Federal Government will own the buildings. One hundred and forty-four projects involving construction costs totaling $602 million have been approved.

In the field of housing, the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration operate programs for the insurance or guaranty of mortgages on private housing. These include special mortgage insurance programs for military-family, cooperative, urban renewal, and elderly-family housing. These and other programs are also supported by the commitments and purchases of mortgages by the Federal National Mortgage Association.

The Farmers' Home Administration makes direct loans for farmhouses, buildings, and water facilities, and insures private loans for these purposes. The Department of Agriculture's program for soil and water conservation and flood prevention also encourages construction of water-control structures on farmers' lands. The Commodity Credit Corporation makes loans for the construction or expansion of grain-storage facilities and provides storage-use guaranties to encourage commercial construction of such facilities.

Special Analysis H

FEDERAL AID TO STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

This analysis covers Federal financial assistance to State and local governments. Three types of Federal assistance are included—direct grants-in-aid, shared revenues, and loans and repayable advances.

For 1958 total Federal aid expenditures, exclusive of Federal administrative costs, are estimated at $5,502 million. This includes net expenditures of $3,848 million from budget accounts and $1,654 million from a new trust account established by the Highway Revenue Act of 1956. Starting in 1957, the Federal share of the new and greatly enlarged interstate highway program will be financed from this trust fund, in which the proceeds of certain excise taxes are deposited, instead of from budget appropriations as was the practice through 1956.

The total of $5,502 million of Federal aid expenditures for 1958 includes $215 million under proposed legislation and $5,287 million under existing laws. The 1958 total from the budget and trust accounts is expected to be $1,749 million higher than in 1956, and $1,048 million greater than the revised total for 1957. The largest single increase from 1957 to 1958 is $517 million in the new highway grants. The next largest increase—$185 million—is for the new general assistance program for school construction under proposed legislation. Grants to States for public assistance are also expected to rise by $97 million, primarily because of the 1956 amendments to the Social Security Act which, among other things, increased the Federal share as well as the maximum of benefit payments to individuals subject to Federal matching and also authorized new grants for medical care. The net increase in all other items from 1957 to 1958 is $249 million, reflecting scattered decreases, including $31 million for the poliomyelitis vaccination program, offset by increases in numerous items. These include the construction grants for waste-treatment facilities, assistance for schools in federally affected areas, as well as higher net loans and repayable advances.

Table 1.—Federal aid expenditures in relation to total Federal budget expenditures and total State-local revenues from their own sources

[3] When grants-in-aid from the Federal-aid highway trust fund are added, net expenditures total $4,454 million, 6 percent of total Federal cash payments to the public, and Federal aid as a percentage of State-local revenues will be higher.
[4] When grants-in-aid from the Federal-aid highway trust fund are added, net expenditures total $5,502 million, 7 percent of total Federal cash payments to the public, and Federal aid as a percentage of State-local revenues will be higher.

When the three kinds of aid are considered, by far the largest part of Federal aid in 1958, $5,271 million, or 95.8 percent of the total, will be in the form of grants-in-aid from budget appropriations and trust accounts. Shared revenues account for $102 million, or 1.9 percent; and net loans and repayable advances for the remaining $126 million, or 2.3 percent. In 1956, grants-in-aid were 97.0 percent of the smaller total of Federal aid in that year.

Grants-in-aid, loans, and repayable advances from budget and trust accounts for civil public works which add to State-local assets, represent an increasing part of total Federal aid outlays—41 percent of the total in 1958 as compared to 31 percent in 1957 and 24 percent in 1956. (See summary at end of detailed table and table 4.)

Development of Federal aid.—Federal aid to State and local governments, in recent decades, has become a major factor in the cooperative financing of essential government functions. The rudiments of the present system date back to the Civil War with the enactment of the Morrill Act which established the land-grant colleges and which instituted certain federally required minimum standards, characteristic of the present grant-in-aid system. Federal aid was later initiated for agriculture, highways, vocational education and rehabilitation, forestry, and public health. In the depression years, Federal aid was extended to meet economic security and other social welfare needs. The detailed table at the end of this analysis lists the various programs of Federal financial assistance to State and local governments presently available or proposed for enactment.

From 1953 to 1955 the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations made an intensive study of the division of responsibilities between the Federal Government and the State and local governments. The recommendations of the Commission and related studies have served as guides in formulating legislative proposals and in administration of intergovernmental programs. Highway legislation has been enacted, school construction legislation has again been recommended, a bill to provide for limited payments in lieu of taxes was sponsored by the administration in the last Congress and is once more being recommended by the President, and legislation is being formulated for the purpose of more clearly defining legal jurisdiction over Federal real property within the States.

Pursuant to a recommendation of the Commission, the President in 1956 designated the Office of the Deputy Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Relations to give continuing attention to interlevel problems of government. As one of its assigned duties, this office will have functional responsibility for problems associated with the Federal aid system as a whole. A special assistant to the President is charged with advising on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations and is coordinating the formulation of legislative proposals for the further improvement of Federal-State-local relations.

Grants-in-aid.—As indicated above, the great bulk of Federal aid to State and local governments takes the form of grants-in-aid wherein Federal financial participation supports State or locally administered programs. For 1958, grants to States and local governments total $5,271 million (including $1,654 million from the highway trust fund); an increase of $1,000 million from the estimate for 1957. The "labor and welfare" category is responsible for approximately 54 percent of the grant-in-aid expenditures in 1958; "commerce and housing," 36 percent; "agriculture and agricultural resources," 8 percent.

FEDERAL AID TO STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS—Continued

Grants to States and local governments account for four-fifths of all budget expenditures estimated for labor and welfare.

The largest grant program is public assistance for which the budget provides $1,679 million for 1958.

The various grant-in-aid programs provide for Federal fiscal participation in a specific function or service rendered by a State or local government. Most grant-in-aid statutes require that State and local programs meet certain standards and provide for the allocation of money among the States in accordance with various formulas. These allocation formulas vary considerably among programs. Some are statutory while others are established by the administering Federal agency on the basis of criteria listed in the laws. Some contain specific measures such as population, area, per capita income, incidence of specific diseases, road mileage, etc.; others allot equal amounts to all States. Still others allot on a fixed percentage of State expenditures up to a specified limitation contained in the Federal law. Generally, the amounts expended for most programs of Federal aid are subject to the establishment of maximum amounts in the authorizing statutes and the necessity for annual appropriations by Congress. However, in the public assistance program the amount paid to each State is determined by a statutory formula applied to actual caseloads and individual benefit rates established by each State up to the statutory maximum subject to matching. Consequently, the amount appropriated in advance does not necessarily limit the total of Federal payments for a given year. Congress customarily provides a supplemental appropriation if this is necessary to cover the claims submitted by the States.

The vocational rehabilitation formula enacted in 1954 provides for variation by States in both the allotment of funds and the requisite matching share, in inverse proportion to per capita income. In recent years, similar formulas have been recommended for grants-in-aid in the field of health.

Legislation governing a few grant-in-aid programs permits aid to private nonprofit agencies or institutions. The program of grants to aid in the construction of hospitals and other health facilities, administered by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, is an illustration. It is estimated that 54 percent of the Federal expenditures of $100 million for these grants in 1958 will be used for nonprofit hospitals and other private health facilities. The program, nevertheless, is one in which the States have a central role through the preparation of statewide programs, the approval of individual projects, and the channeling of the Federal payments. Therefore, the entire amount authorized and spent for the program is included as Federal aid in this table. The part going to private institutions is indicated separately.

On the other hand, certain Federal programs may incidentally involve grants to particular State or local governmental agencies, even though they are not primarily programs of grants-in-aid or loans to State or local governments. For example, the Public Health Service and the National Science Foundation make research grants to colleges and universities, including some State and local institutions. These payments are not included in the tabulation. However, similar grants made by the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation are included because they are made for reasons of State program improvement.

Payments of unemployment allowances to veterans of the Korean conflict and to former Federal civilian employees are considered direct Federal programs. The States, as a service to the Federal Government, make the benefit payments through their unemployment compensation offices as agents of the Federal Government and are fully reimbursed. Their expenses of administration are paid by the Government as part of its general grants-in-aid for unemployment compensation and employment service administration. These administrative costs in the States are not separately identifiable and are included in the Federal-aid total even though the benefit payments are excluded.

In a few instances, grants-in-kind are made, usually involving commodities, services, or structures. Wherever these can be identified in the budget they have been included in this analysis. Principal among them are grants of agricultural commodities to schools, welfare departments, and other public agencies, shown in the tabulation under agriculture and agricultural resources. This is supplementary to the grants specifically for the national school lunch program, shown under labor and welfare. However, the donation of previously acquired property, such as grants of surplus public housing properties to local agencies, have been omitted from the tabulation.

Shared revenues.—In the budget estimates for 1958, payments of shared revenues are estimated at $102 million, only slightly above the revised estimate for the current year. As shown in the tabulation, the Mineral Leasing Act, national forest program and tax collections for American Samoa and Puerto Rico constitute approximately 76 percent of all shared-revenue expenditures.

Classified as shared revenues are (a) payments to States and localities of a portion of the proceeds from the sale of certain Federal property, products, and services; and (b) payments to the Territories of certain Federal tax collections derived within their boundaries or from transactions affecting them. Shared revenues from property and products are derived mainly from public lands in the West, and the Federal law usually requires that the State or local share be used for schools or for schools and roads in the county where the Federal lands are located. The payment of tax collections to the Territories (e. g., internal-revenue collections for Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Samoa) are included in this analysis to the extent that they are included in budget receipts and expenditures. Some revenues collected under Federal laws for the benefit of the governments of Guam, Puerto Rico, and Virgin Islands are paid directly to those Territories, without affecting Federal budget accounts.

Loans and repayable advances.—Budget expenditures for loans in most cases are net amounts, representing for any year the gross amount of loans and advances minus credits for certain collections during the year. For 1958, gross disbursements for loans and advances to State and local governments are estimated at $532 million, collections at $406 million, and the net excess of loans over collections at $126 million. In a few cases, collections are not deducted from gross disbursements but, instead, are credited directly to miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury. These collections (which are shown in special analysis B as repayments of loans by States, municipalities, and other public bodies) totaled $138,000 in 1956 and are estimated at $181,000 in 1957 and $254,000 in 1958.

FEDERAL AID TO STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS—Continued

Loans are made to State or local governmental bodies by several Federal agencies for specified types of public improvements, such as low-rent public housing, slum clearance, and urban renewal, by the Housing and Home Finance Agency. Also included in the category of loans are certain advances made by the same agency for the planning of non-Federal public works; these advances are repayable if the planned projects are carried out. Advances are also made by the Federal Civil Defense Administration in the operation of its supply procurement fund, which represents a central purchasing operation for State and local civil defense stocks. In 1957 and 1958 States and municipalities will procure directly a greater volume of their supplies and equipment, thus reducing advances from the fund.

Part of the Alaska public works expenditures represents Federal advances of funds to be repaid by the government of the Territory.

Federal-aid highway trust fund.—The Highway Revenue Act of 1956 established a trust fund into which proceeds from certain excises on motor fuels, tires, and vehicles are to be deposited and from which the Federal share of the new highway program will be financed. The companion Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 authorized Federal grants of $25 billion over a 13-year period to cover 90 percent of the cost of completing the Interstate Highway System. In addition, it provided for increased grants for primary, secondary, and urban highways.

The estimated receipts and disbursements of this trust fund in 1957 and 1958 are shown in table 2. During 1958 it is expected that tax collections dedicated to this program will reach a level of $2.2 billion, nearly $400 million more than all payments. It is expected that expenditures from the trust fund will rise gradually in later years to nearly $3 billion annually.

Proposed legislation.—Federal aid to State and local governments would be affected by several of the recommendations for legislation which are included in the budget. The largest single item is the proposed program of general assistance to States for construction of public school facilities under a 4-year program recommended by the President. The budget includes $451 million of new obligational authority for 1958 for this purpose, with expenditures estimated at $185 million. Although part of this money may be used to purchase bonds, the entire amount is classified as grants-in-aid for the purpose of this analysis.

Legislative recommendations will also be transmitted to the Congress to provide for a new program of Federal assistance to States in meeting certain personnel and administrative costs of State and metropolitan area civil-defense organizations as well as provide for other needed improvements in the overall civil-defense effort. The budget includes $50 million in new obligational authority and estimated expenditures of $10 million for this purpose. The President's legislative program also includes proposals for grants to assist construction of medical and dental training facilities, train teachers for mentally retarded children, assist States in combating juvenile delinquency, encourage States to undertake specific planning action to meet their needs in higher education, help strengthen State occupational safety programs, and to provide for Federal participation in partnership projects for development of natural resources.

Relationship to other budget figures.—The totals for Federal aid in this analysis represent budget expenditures, as defined in the introduction to part I except for the one item of grants from the Federal-aid highway trust fund in 1957 and 1958; financial transactions relating to trust fund programs are shown in part III of the budget document.

In most cases, the expenditures in a given fiscal year correspond closely to the amount of the appropriation, but in some instances the expenditures for grants or loans are made from an appropriation which also finances direct Federal operations or Federal administrative expenses. When this occurs, the amounts tabulated in this analysis ordinarily represent an estimate of that part of the expenditure which is paid as aid to State and local governments. Also, there are certain programs—chiefly construction—where there are substantial differences between appropriations (or other authority to incur obligations) for any year and expenditures in that year. This arises because construction projects usually cannot be completed and paid for within a fiscal year. In 1958, for example, the hospital construction and school construction programs of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare show substantial differences between appropriations and estimated expenditures.

The detailed tabulation of Federal expenditures for aid to State and local governments is arranged according to the functional classification used in the budget message. In order that this analysis may be related readily to the analysis of investment, operating, and other budget expenditures presented in special analysis D, that tabulation shows separately in each category the amounts of Federal aid to State and local governments. In table 3, the Federal-aid programs are recapitulated to follow the outline of special analysis D.

Similarly, table 4 relates this special analysis of Federal aid to special analysis G which tabulates budget and trust expenditures for public works. Including proposed legislation, about 41 percent of all Federal-aid expenditures is for public works, mostly public roads, schools, and housing.

District of Columbia.—Many Federal-aid programs provide financial assistance for specific public services in the District of Columbia on the same basis as in the States. In addition, this analysis includes programs of particular aid for the District of Columbia in the form of a general contribution to help defray the costs of the local government, assistance in building the District's hospital center (which is additional to aid made available under the general State-aid hospital and health facility construction program), and loans for capital outlays under the District government's public-works program.

NOTE: Slight differences in the totals in special analyses D and G result from rounding.

Other financial relationships.—Apart from grants-in-aid, loans, and shared revenues, many other Federal expenditures and policies affect the finances of State and local governments. Types of transactions not covered in the tabulation of aids include the following:

(a) Reimbursements for various specific services, such as payments to public educational institutions for tuition of veterans and of students from the Armed Forces and payments to local governments for care of Federal prisoners in local institutions.

(c) The value of surplus educational and hospital supplies, materials, and equipment, and of housing and other real estate donated or sold at substantial discounts to State and local agencies. The surplus public housing mentioned earlier is in this category of omitted grants-in-kind.

(d) The payments of property taxes, or payments in lieu of property taxes, made upon Federal property under the provisions of various laws. When such payments are based upon a percentage of revenues, however, as in the case of the Tennessee Valley Authority, they are included in the shared-revenue section of the table.

(e) The transfer to the unemployment trust fund of the excess of receipts from the Federal unemployment tax over operating costs of the Federal-State unemployment compensation and placement program to the extent that this annual transfer was devoted initially to setting up a reserve of $200 million from which loans can be made to States which will deplete their own reserves for benefit payments. Such loans, if made, will be trust fund transactions and therefore would not be reflected in the tabulation of budget expenditures for Federal aid. The $200 million reserve was completed July 1956. Thereafter, excess receipts are being transferred from general funds to the trust fund in which they are credited to the accounts of the several States. For example, the $53 million transfer estimated for 1958 is classified as a Federal grant-in-aid.

In addition, the table does not reflect various indirect financial benefits accruing to State and local governments, such as exemption from Federal income tax of interest paid on State and local debt; the indirect Federal guaranty of municipal obligations issued for low-rent housing and urban renewal; deductions of State and local income, property, and other taxes from personal and corporate incomes in computing Federal income tax; services rendered to other governmental units by Federal agencies in the ordinary course of their operations; and some programs administered cooperatively for the purposes of both the State and Federal Governments, such as agricultural crop reporting or the National Guard.

Some of these financial benefits, of course, have counterparts in the form of services rendered or occasional payments made to the Federal Government by the States or their subdivisions.

Special Analysis I

FEDERAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

This analysis summarizes Federal expenditures in 1956, 1957, and 1958 for research and development to discover new facts concerning phenomena in the natural and social sciences and to apply existing knowledge to new technological uses. Included are expenditures for the performance of research under the head "Conduct of research and development" and for the construction, improvement, and equipping of research facilities under the head "Increase of research and development plant." The contribution of the Federal Government in support of scientific training is dealt with separately in a supplementary section at the end of this textual analysis.

Net budget expenditures for Federal scientific research and development programs are estimated to be $3,345 million in 1958, an increase of $807 million over 1956 and $364 million over 1957.

Table 1.—Total Federal research and development expenditures

[In millions]

Purpose	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Conduct of research and development	$2,337.6	$2,657.5	$2,909.6
Increase of research and development plant	200.4	323.5	435.3
Total	2,538.0	2,981.0	3,345.0

National security needs account for the largest portion of the increase in 1958 and for the greatest part of total research and development expenditures of the Federal Government. The Department of Defense programs, chiefly for the development and improvement of military weapons and equipment, account for 61 percent of the 1958 expenditures, while the Atomic Energy Commission research programs make up 21 percent.

More emphasis is being placed on research to meet human needs in health, welfare, educational, and economic terms. Of particular significance is the recent growth in support of medical research and assistance to research in fields such as education, vocational rehabilitation, and social work, particularly in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which accounts for 6 percent of total expenditures. Other agencies with substantial research and development programs are the Department of Agriculture with 4 percent of total expenditures for such purposes and the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics with 3 percent.

Emphasis is also increasing on fundamental research, which is the base on which rests the expanding technology of the Nation, particularly under programs of the National Science Foundation.

The Federal Government supports approximately half the research and development costs of the Nation. Private industry finances much of the remainder, and smaller amounts are expended from funds of foundations, educational institutions, and by State and local governments.

Of the total Federal research and development expenditures, one-half are made directly by Government research laboratories and facilities. The remaining expenditures are chiefly made through contracts with private industry and through grants and contracts with universities. In 1956, the National Science Foundation estimated that work conducted in Government facilities accounted for 47 percent of total Federal expenditures; work conducted in private profit organizations, 38 percent; and educational and other nonprofit institutions, 15 percent.

[1] Figures under "Major national security" and "Total" include the pay and allowances of Department of Defense military personnel assigned to research and development activities, as follows: 1956, $188 million; 1957, $196 million; 1958, $239 million.

In this analysis the term "conduct of research and development" includes activities in which the primary aim is either to develop new knowledge or to apply existing knowledge to new uses. These activities may be carried out in Government installations or in the facilities of private, State, or local organizations using Federal funds. Generally excluded from this definition are expenditures for routine testing, mapping and surveys, experimental production, information activities and training programs including fellowships for the support of graduate students in the sciences. This special analysis also omits expenditures for the collection of general-purpose statistics of the Census Bureau, Bureau of Labor Statistics, and other agencies, some of which expenditures were included in the similar tabulations of "Federal research and development programs" in preceding budgets. The principal statistical programs of the Federal Government are discussed in special analysis J in this budget.

Expenditures for increase of research and development plant include amounts for physical facilities such as land, buildings, and major equipment, regardless of whether the facility is to be used or owned by the Federal Government or by a private, State, or local organization.

All expenditures in this special analysis are net budget expenditures as defined in the introduction to part I of the budget; the estimated amounts include expenditures from supplemental appropriations proposed for later transmission. Table 16 relates the figures in this special analysis to the analysis of the investment, operating, and other budget expenditures presented in special analysis D.

Department of Defense—Military Functions

The objective of the military research and development program of the Department of Defense is to provide new and improved weapons, equipments, and techniques which will significantly increase the effectiveness of the armed services. The program includes basic research directly related to current developments or likely to have future military significance, applied research and development, comprising the major part of the program, and testing and evaluation. These activities are conducted by the military services under the general supervision of the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

CONDUCT OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

The expenditures of the Department of Defense in this analysis for conduct of research and development consist of: (a) those included in the research and development category of the Department's budget, which covers only expenditures under the specific research and development appropriations of military services, and (b) that part of the military personnel budget category which represents the pay and allowances of military personnel engaged in research, development, and test activities. Related expenditures, particularly those under procurement appropriations, are excluded.

More than half of the Department of Defense expenditures are for work performed under contracts with industrial and research organizations; the remainder is for work in the Department's research, development, and test installations. All major operating costs of the military installations are included in these estimates. In the case of contracts with industrial and nonprofit organizations, the figures include the substantial part of contractor effort which is covered by the research and development budget category but do not cover related costs of even greater magnitude funded as part of the procurement programs. Of particular importance for the conduct of research and development are the design, engineering, and experimental fabrication of initial quantities of nonstandardized weapons and equipment for developmental, test, and evaluation purposes, which are financed from procurement appropriations. Advanced manned aircraft, aerodynamic and ballistic guided missiles, ships and submarines incorporating new design features and components, and major electronics equipments are examples of the types of articles bought under procurement programs for use in the research, development, test, and evaluation programs.

Obligations in major substantive fields are shown in table 5. The amounts shown for operation and management of facilities are those which are not distributed directly to the other programs under the current practices of each department; obligations and expenditures in this area continue to rise as a result of the completion and operation of test ranges and other new research and development facilities of the military services. Obligations shown in connection with the emergency fund represent amounts not yet distributed among the departments but estimated to be required during the years indicated. Certain of the specific fields of research and development outlined in table 5 are closely related to and coordinated with programs conducted by the Atomic Energy Commission and the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

INCREASE OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PLANT

Estimates of increase in the research and development plant of the Department of Defense include all public works construction at military installations having as their primary mission research, development, and testing, and that part of construction at other installations which is in support of the research and development program. Development, engineering, experimental fabrication and test facilities provided contractors under the procurement programs are not included in these estimates. The sharp increase estimated for Air Force plant expenditures in 1958 reflects in particular the expansion of development and test facilities, including those in support of the ballistic missiles programs.

As discussed above, expenditures and obligations shown in this analysis for both conduct of research and development and increase in research and development plant exclude certain related costs, in particular those incurred under the procurement programs in support of research, development, test, and evaluation activities. Taking these costs into consideration, the aggregate amount programed for defense research and development in 1958 will be in excess of the $5.2 billion programed for 1957, as estimated last year by the Department of Defense.

MILITARY ASSISTANCE

As part of the military assistance program, the United States cooperates through the mutual weapons development program with a number of foreign countries to accelerate the development of advanced nonnuclear weapons. Current participants in the program, which is administered by the Department of Defense, are the United Kingdom, France, The Netherlands, Belgium, Norway, Italy, and West Germany. Projects are financed jointly by the United States and the countries undertaking particular developments, and in certain cases technical assistance is provided in addition to or in place of financial assistance. Expenditure estimates in table 7 represent United States participation.

[In millions]

Function	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate

The projects are conducted by scientists and technicians of the participating countries and are directed at developing weapons, equipments, and techniques which are particularly well suited to the defense requirements and capacities of these countries.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

The Atomic Energy Commission's program includes both basic research and applied research and development. Basic research is conducted in the physical and life sciences to secure a better understanding of nuclear processes and subatomic particles and of the effect of nuclear radiation on living organisms. The applied research and development includes efforts to improve the processes used in the production of fissionable materials, to improve weapon types, and to find ways of obtaining useful power from nuclear reactions, including controlled thermonuclear reactions. While a large portion of this research program is of necessity aimed at military uses of atomic energy, an increasing portion is devoted to civilian applications. Moreover, the effort placed on military uses produces much information necessary to progress in the application of atomic energy for civilian purposes.

The program of research and development for production and weapons is mainly directed to developing improved production methods which would increase the capacity and efficiency of the plants producing uranium metal, feed materials, and fissionable materials, and to developing concepts which lead to new and improved weapon types.

In the field of reactor development, increasing effort is being devoted to developing means for producing competitive electric power from atomic reactors. The increasing participation of industry in the program is expected to speed the achievement of this objective. The Commission is also continuing the development of reactors for the propulsion of commercial ships. The work on reactors for military uses, including transportable reactors to supply power at remote bases and propulsion reactors for military aircraft and naval combatant vessels, will continue. Supplementing these specific projects is the advanced engineering and development on reactor materials, fuel elements, fuel separation systems, and reactor safety, which is applicable to many reactor designs. Expenditures for the increase in research and development plant in this area are mainly for engineering laboratory buildings, facilities for testing reactor experiments, an engineering test reactor, and prototype reactors for civilian power and military purposes.

TABLE 8.—Expenditures of the Atomic Energy Commission for research and development

The Commission's program of research in the physical sciences contributes important basic data for use in the solution of problems related to the development programs discussed above. A major portion of the effort is to develop a fundamental understanding of atomic structure and forces through the use of particle accelerators, including two in the multibillion electron volt range. Considerable effort is also placed on research on the physical, chemical, and metallurgical properties of materials used in the Commission's programs. Much of the information developed yields applications beyond the field of atomic energy. Construction expenditures include those for three new multibillion electron volt particle accelerators at Brookhaven National Laboratory, Upton, Long Island; Cambridge, Mass.; and Princeton, N. J.

The program of research in biology and medicine is primarily aimed at securing an understanding of the effects of radiation on living organisms, developing methods of minimizing such effects, and analyzing the long-term effects of nuclear explosions. However, an increasing research effort is being placed on the development of methods of using atomic energy in biological research and in the diagnosis and treatment of human diseases. The expenditures for construction are primarily for the completion of the medical research center, including a medical reactor, at the Brookhaven National Laboratory.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

The research activities of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare continue to be centered chiefly in the Public Health Service. Though proportionately small, the research programs of the Office of Education and the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation are gaining in significance. Research is also carried on by the Food and Drug Administration in connection with its enforcement responsibilities, and by the Social Security Administration on the extent of public and private insurance, benefit, and assistance programs and on the specialized needs for the protection of children's health and welfare.

Function	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate

Research on human diseases—their diagnosis, cause, and treatment—is conducted by the Public Health Service chiefly through the National Institutes of Health. The Institutes are organized on a disease category basis as illustrated by table 10 which covers the entire research program of the Public Health Service.

Almost two-thirds of the expenditures of the Public Health Service are for research sponsored in colleges, universities, and other nongovernmental institutions through grants and contracts. The remaining one-third is for research in the laboratories of the Public Health Service.

The major portion of the increase in 1958 under the National Institutes of Health is to provide for more adequate payments for overhead costs for medical schools and other institutions receiving research grants. Smaller increases are also estimated for research grants in arthritis and metabolic diseases, in allergy and infectious diseases, and in the direct operating costs of the Institutes.

Elsewhere in the Public Health Service increased expenditures are estimated chiefly for research in air and water pollution. However, research is also being expanded in methods to improve control of infectious and communicable diseases and in other environmental health problems.

The Office of Vocational Rehabilitation conducts scientific investigations and studies under a program of grants to States and private and nonprofit agencies for research and development projects which show promise of contributing to the solution of vocational rehabilitation problems which are common to several or all of the States. The increased expenditures in 1958 will assist in increasing and extending knowledge of all phases of vocational rehabilitation and in improving and expanding the national program of vocational rehabilitation of the handicapped.

The Office of Education undertakes and sponsors research on educational problems of broad national importance. It conducts studies through its own staff and makes contracts for cooperative research with colleges and universities and with State departments of education. The increased expenditures in 1958 are chiefly devoted to expansion of the cooperative research program which began in 1957. Under this program attention is being given particularly to projects related to educating the mentally retarded and gifted children, to recruiting and training teachers, to school building needs, as well as to other contemporary educational problems.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The budget recommendations for 1958 provide for continued expansion of research by the Department of Agriculture as an aid in solving the acute problems involved in providing balanced supplies and increased utilization of agricultural products.

The Department conducts agricultural research chiefly through the Agricultural Research Service through facilities operated by the Department, through grants to States, and through contracts and cooperative projects principally with State agricultural experiment stations. Other research is also carried on by the Forest Service, the Agricultural Marketing Service, the Foreign Agricultural Service, the Farmer Cooperative Service, and the departmental library.

The Agricultural Research Service conducts or supports research on crops, farm and land management, livestock, home economics, and utilization of farm products. The increased expenditures in 1958 are chiefly devoted to research on utilization of farm products, production economics, soil and water conservation, and payments to State experiment stations. A major increase is also anticipated for construction of new research facilities for the study of animal diseases.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

The research and development programs of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics are currently primarily concerned with problems of military significance. However, many of the fields in which the Committee works are of importance to civil aviation as well. The Committee's programs include basic research in the fundamental problems of flight over an ever-widening range of speeds, altitudes, and conditions; applied research and development to translate basic principles into improved design, construction, and propulsion of aircraft and missiles; and specific research and development related to particular aircraft and missiles under development by the military services.

Increase of research and development plant	20.6	19.6	22.5
Total, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics	71.1	74.6	86.5

The increase in expenditures estimated for the conduct of research and development during 1958 reflects the increased level of operations proposed for the Committee in view of the pivotal character of its role in aeronautical research and development. Because the unique facilities and equipment available to the Committee at its 3 laboratories and 2 flight stations are basic to its capacity for conducting research and development, a major program of new construction totaling over $40 million is also proposed for initiation in 1958. The purpose of this program is to provide new types of facilities particularly for hypersonic research, which is of increasing importance, to expand the nuclear research facility currently under construction, and to modernize and expand the capabilities of existing research and technical supporting facilities.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The major research expenditures of the Department of the Interior are under the Bureau of Mines, the Geological Survey, and the Fish and Wildlife Service. Smaller amounts are expended for research in the utilization of saline water and for programs in the Bureau of Reclamation and the National Park Service.

TABLE 13.—Expenditures of the Department of the Interior for research and development

Function	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
400 Natural resources	$34.4	$41.8	$47.3

The Bureau of Mines conducts research on technological and economic problems of the mineral industry and on improvements to promote safe and healthy working conditions in mines.

The Geological Survey conducts investigations of the availability and quality of surface and underground water resources and the nature and occurrence of minerals and mineral fuels.

In the Bureau of Reclamation research is undertaken to develop improved design, construction, and operation of irrigation projects.

The research programs of the Fish and Wildlife Service are directed to the conservation of the Nation's animal life and thus to promote the maximum use and enjoyment of wildlife resources.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

Under its basic legislation, enacted in 1950, and Executive Order 10521, issued in 1954, the National Science Foundation is assuming increasing responsibility for the encouragement and support by the Federal Government of general-purpose, basic research in this country. Grants are made to colleges, universities, and other research institutions for the conduct of fundamental investigation in the biological, medical, mathematical, physical, and engineering sciences.

Total, National Science Foundation	16.3	43.4	42.8

Increased funds are provided for this purpose by the 1958 budget to permit support of a greater number of promising research proposals. The Foundation is also forwarding the progress of basic research through providing special facilities to assist the performance of scientific experimentation and investigation. Such facilities include radio and optical astronomy observatories, reactors and other devices for nuclear research, university computers, and support for field stations for biological research.

In addition to its direct support of research, the National Science Foundation is responsible for studying the Nation's research efforts and recommending to the President policies relating to the place of the Federal Government in the encouragement, support, and conduct of research.

The Foundation has responsibility for supporting the United States program for the International Geophysical Year, to be held in 1957–58. This worldwide program involves research by scientists of over 50 nations during the period indicated in order to obtain data which will advance the world's knowledge of the earth and its physical characteristics, including conditions above the atmosphere through the launching of earth-circling satellites. Funds for this program provide for establishing and maintaining observation stations and for procurement of scientific equipment.

Synthetic rubber research and development were supported by the Foundation in 1956 from funds received from the Federal Facilities Corporation. Balances of these funds were made available by reappropriation for use in 1957 to support grants for basic high-polymer research.

Department of Commerce

The largest research and development program of the Department of Commerce is that of the National Bureau of Standards. Other major research and development programs are conducted by the Maritime Administration, the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and the Weather Bureau. Smaller research expenditures are made by the Census Bureau, the Office of Business Economics, and the Patent Office.

Table 15.—Expenditures of the Department of Commerce for research and development

600 General government	1.6	2.3	2.8
Total, Department of Commerce	20.2	22.1	26.7

Research and development in the physical sciences is conducted by the National Bureau of Standards in carrying out its basic responsibility for maintaining and developing national standards of measurement. The increased expenditures estimated for 1958 will permit the Bureau to meet more adequately the requirements of science and industry for standards of greater range and precision. Additional expenditures are also anticipated for the development of detailed plans and specifications for the new laboratory facilities to replace the inadequate plant now occupied in the District of Columbia.

The Maritime Administration is conducting research in connection with its program of Liberty ship conversion and engine improvement and research on ship design, cargo handling, materials and equipment, and nuclear propulsion.

Expenditures under the Civil Aeronautics Administration reflect research conducted by the Administration and that sponsored by the Air Navigation Development Board, a joint board of the Commerce and Defense Departments. Increased expenditures are estimated in 1958 to expand the work of the Board and the Civil Aeronautics Administration on the development and improvement of air navigation and traffic control. The Administration also performs research on aeronautical instruments and equipment and on human problems relating to aircraft design and operation.

The Weather Bureau conducts a program of meteorological research with special emphasis on investigation of severe storms, such as hurricanes and tornadoes, and in 1958 will expand its program on the development of weather forecasting through use of high speed electronic computers.

Other Agencies

Research is also conducted by a number of other agencies in furtherance of their assigned responsibilities. These include the Advisory Committee on Weather Control, the Civil Service Commission, the Federal Civil Defense Administration, the Federal Communications Commission, the General Services Administration, the Housing and Home Finance Agency, the Post Office Department, the State Department, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Treasury Department, the United States Information Agency, and the Veterans Administration. The General Services Administration research is almost entirely contract research, financed from funds available to the President under the Defense Production Act, and is directed toward increasing the supply of strategic and critical raw materials.

Federal Activities Contributing to Training in the Sciences

The foregoing analysis discusses expenditures of the Federal Government for the support of research and development and for the acquisition and improvement of scientific equipment and facilities. Equally important, however, to the furtherance of research is the education and training of engineers and scientists in the natural and social sciences. Many of the research and development programs reported in this special analysis assist in the support of scientific education. In addition, the Federal Government contributes directly to the education of new scientists and engineers through fellowships, traineeships, training grants, and other programs directed toward the improvement of science education and the encouragement of young people in scientific careers, even though in most cases these programs are not part of the research and development expenditures.

In the following paragraphs a number of the Federal activities contributing to training in the sciences are described. While not a complete cataloging, it indicates the range of activities in which the Federal agencies are engaged and includes data on the relative size of each such program. Data on costs are on an obligational basis rather than on an expenditure basis as is generally the case in the preceding tables. It may be estimated from this analysis that the Federal Government through training programs in the sciences and through the support of scientific research is aiding well over 40,000 students.

RESEARCH ASSISTANTSHIPS

The largest measure of Federal assistance in science education comes through the employment of research assistants under grants and contracts which are chiefly financed from research and development appropriations.

The Government in 1956 obligated over $160 million at educational institutions for the conduct of scientific research and development. An additional $144 million was obligated at research centers affiliated with educational institutions. In the process of carrying out much of this Government-financed research, educational institutions employ research assistants to perform junior level research work on Government projects while engaged in completing undergraduate, graduate, or postgraduate training. Such employment contributes to the technical training of the student, and, through the income it provides, indirectly assists him in completing his education.

Most of the departments and agencies with research contracts or grants at educational institutions do not obtain reports on the number of research assistants employed for work on federally supported projects. However, the data presented in the table below indicates the order of magnitude of support.

	1956	1957	1958
Department of Agriculture	700–1,200	700–1,200	700–1,200
Department of Defense	10,000–15,000	10,000–15,000	10,000–15,000
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare	1,750	3,775	4,100
Atomic Energy Commission	1,180	1,720	2,125
National Science Foundation	1,100	1,900	3,000
Other agencies	445	300	500

In total it is estimated that as many as 21,000 students were employed in 1956 under research grants and contracts and upwards of 24,000 are estimated for 1957 and 26,000 for 1958.

FELLOWSHIPS

At present four agencies of the Federal Government award fellowships to individuals for the purpose of providing opportunities for research, training for graduate degrees, improvement of teaching, and cultural exchange. They are financed from appropriations not classified as research and development and are awarded at the predoctoral and postdoctoral levels for study chiefly in the natural sciences.

Agency	Number of fellowships			Obligations (in millions)
	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare	1,408	2,057	2,363	$2.8	$5.4	$6.5

Total	2,774	3,817	4,784	6.8	11.2	15.2

Within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the National Institutes of Health, the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation, and the Social Security Administration offer fellowships in the medical, rehabilitation, and welfare fields.

The National Science Foundation awards fellowships for the improvement of teaching, for research, and for graduate training in the sciences.

The fellowship program of the Department of State administered by the Department's International Educational Exchange Service makes fellowships available in all fields including the natural and social sciences to promote the sharing of ideas with other nations of the free world.

The Atomic Energy Commission fellowships are awarded chiefly in the field of nuclear energy technology and also in radiological physics, industrial hygiene and industrial medicine.

TRAINEESHIPS

Traineeships presently are awarded by the Federal Government primarily for the purpose of providing advanced education and training opportunities in specific fields for individuals who have completed their basic professional education. Expenditures for these are also not classified in the research and development category.

Three agencies of the Government administer traineeship programs—the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Veterans Administration, and the Department of Agriculture.

	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare	1,880	3,784	4,835	$5.3	$11.8	$15.2
Veterans Administration	703	795	795	-------	-------	-------
Total	2,583	4,579	5,630	5.3	11.8	15.2

NOTE.—Data on the program of the Department of Agriculture are not readily available; it is estimated that the number is under 100. Veterans Administration costs are not available.

Within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, responsibility for the programs rests with the National Institutes of Health, the Bureau of State Services, the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation, the Social Security Administration, and St. Elizabeths Hospital. The trainees sponsored by the foregoing are studying in the medical and allied sciences and welfare fields.

The Veterans Administration conducts a program for psychology trainees who are paid on the basis of services actually rendered.

The Department of Agriculture, by means of a cooperative agreement with the land-grant colleges, contributes to the financing of a study-leave program for State and county extension workers who may be granted leave with pay for advanced training or study related to agricultural extension work.

TRAINING GRANTS

Training grants are ordinarily awarded for the purpose of establishing, expanding, improving, or continuing programs of training in the sciences. As distinguished from fellowships and traineeships, training grants are made to institutions and serve to strengthen the capacity of the recipient institutions to perform their research and training functions. They likewise are financed from appropriations not counted in the research and development category.

Five organizations have training grant programs, the largest program being that of the National Institutes of Health in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which offers such grants to assist undergraduate and graduate training in medical and related fields. The grants may generally be used either for the establishment or strengthening of programs or for the payment of stipends to trainees selected by the recipient institutions.

Also in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation makes grants to schools, universities, and other agencies to pay part of the cost of training projects in fields concerned with rehabilitation. The Social Security Administration beginning in 1958 will undertake a program of grants to States for 5 years for training of public welfare personnel for work in public assistance programs.

The Atomic Energy Commission operates several training grant programs. The Commission makes grants to assist nonprofit educational institutions acquire teaching aids, demonstration apparatus, and laboratory equipment including educational reactors. Specialized equipment and limited operational assistance are offered to medical schools to encourage training in the use of radioisotopes. A similar program is directed to colleges and universities for the instruction of students in the biological and agricultural sciences. In addition, equipment and operational assistance is granted to schools of public health for radiation safety training.

The Commission also makes training grants for the support of the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies resident graduate program and radioisotope training program. A program of graduate study in reactor technology is partially supported at the Oak Ridge School of Reactor Technology and the Argonne National Laboratory's International School of Nuclear Science and Engineering.

OTHER AIDS TO SERVICE TEACHING

Closely related to training grants with respect to providing a variety of aids for science teaching are several programs, chiefly of the National Science Foundation and the Atomic Energy Commission, likewise not classified in the research and development category.

Agency	Obligations (in millions)
	1956 actual	1957 estimate	1958 estimate
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare	----	----	$0.4
Atomic Energy Commission	$0.2	$1.4	1.9
National Science Foundation	1.4	11.0	12.8
Veterans Administration	.2	.2	.2

To meet the shortage of both high school and college science teachers, and to augment the training of present science teachers, the National Science Foundation supports both summer and yearlong training institutes for teachers of science and mathematics. The estimates for 1958 anticipate 91 summer institutes for 4,500 teachers and 17 yearlong institutes for 50 science teachers. The Foundation also sponsors a number of other activities designed to interest able students in undertaking careers in science and science teaching, including support for visiting scientists who lecture in the high school classroom; for student participation in science fairs and exhibits; and for the development of career guidance materials. Finally, the Foundation supports several activities directed to the improvement of high school and college science curriculums.

The Atomic Energy Commission undertakes programs of a similar nature but for more specialized purposes. Summer courses for high school science teachers in general nuclear science, in cooperation with the National Science Foundation, are supported by the Division of Biology and Medicine, which also provides for scientists from Atomic Energy Commission laboratories to conduct lectures in radiobiology in colleges and universities. The Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies supports a variety of similar activities.

OTHER PROGRAMS

Among other programs directed specifically to increasing the supply of scientists and engineers is the undergraduate work-study program initiated by the Navy in 1956. This provides for the selection of able high school graduates who are interested in attending college to study in the sciences and engineering and who at the same time wish to be employed in work situations contributing to their educational objectives. It is estimated that some 300 students will be participating in this program during 1958.

Under a program to increase the number of military doctors and dentists, the Department of Defense supports the training of medical and dental students, at a junior officer level, at a salary that is equivalent to a scholarship for attendance at a professional school. In return for this the Department receives military service commensurate with assistance given. It is estimated that about 800 students will be participating in this program in 1958.

A number of agencies undertake cooperative educational programs to contribute to training in the sciences and to encourage recruitment of scientific and engineering personnel. Such programs may operate through formal agreements whereby a Government agency, an educational institution, and a student cooperate in planning a program in study and complementary employment, or with informal cooperation between agency, school, and student. Related to these cooperative educational programs is the extensive summer employment of qualified students in fields of mutual interest to the agency and to the student. It is estimated that well over 5,000 students are participating in various cooperative educational programs of the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, including part-time summer employment.

Finally there are a number of Federal activities which, while not directed toward increasing the supply of scientists and engineers, nevertheless materially assist to this end. These include such programs as the training of veterans, the Reserve Officer Training Corps, the in-service training of Government civilian and military personnel, and medical and dental internships and residencies at Government hospitals.

Special Analysis J

PRINCIPAL FEDERAL STATISTICAL PROGRAMS

The statistical programs included in this analysis are primarily those which produce the basic statistical data used by the Government and the public in measuring the welfare and progress of our citizens and of various sectors of our national economy. Responsibility for these programs is shared by a number of agencies—some engaged primarily in statistical activities (such as the Bureau of the Census in the Department of Commerce, or the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor), and others in which statistical activities are a byproduct of other operating functions (such as the Internal Revenue Service in the Treasury Department).

Continuing current statistical programs are shown and discussed separately from the periodic census programs, for which there are wide fluctuations in expenditures from year to year. For 1958 the budget recommends $35.2 million for the Government's principal current statistical programs, and $6.7 million for the periodic census programs. The obligations for current and periodic census programs for 1956 and 1957 and the recommended levels for 1958 are shown by agency in the table at the end of this analysis. The obligations for current programs are shown below by broad subject areas, to emphasize the interrelationships which exist among the programs of different agencies and to aid in appraising the Government's overall statistical program.

Several changes have been made this year in the scope of this analysis of Federal statistical programs. The appropriation item under the Public Health Service for "Public health methods and reports" has been included for the first time, because of the statistical importance of the new national health survey authorized last year by the Congress (Public Law 652, approved July 3, 1956). The research and statistical program of the Office of Education, also expanded last year, is likewise included in this analysis for the first time. On the other hand, the marketing research activities of the Department of Agriculture have been excluded from the analysis of statistical programs because the collection and use of statistics is incidental to the broader purposes toward which these activities are directed: increasing market efficiency, expanding market outlets, and improving the quality of agricultural products.

Not all the Government's statistical activities are included in this analysis. Many Government agencies collect and use statistics in carrying out their administrative responsibilities, and frequently these statistics have general informational uses as well. Such agencies as the Social Security Administration, Bureau of Mines, Housing and Home Finance Agency, and Interstate Commerce Commission, for example, although they are not included in this analysis, produce statistical information widely used by the Government and the public.

CURRENT PROGRAMS

The 1958 budget recommendation of $35.2 million for principal current statistical programs represents an increase of $5 million over the amount available for these programs in 1957. Almost one-third of this $5 million is accounted for by mandatory items in the 1958 budget, resulting primarily from adding to the costs of present programs the contributions to the civil service retirement and disability fund. These contributions, formerly made through a separate appropriation, are to be made directly by the agencies beginning in 1958.

Exclusive of the mandatory items, an increase of approximately $3.4 million is recommended for specific program changes, described in the following paragraphs. Some of these program recommendations are directed toward obtaining more accurate or more detailed information in specific areas where improvements are needed. Other program increases for 1958 represent full-year costs of activities (primarily the health and educational programs, mentioned above) which are being initiated or expanded during 1957.

Labor statistics.—This area includes many of the basic programs of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, such as employment and wages by industry, labor turnover, industrial hazards, foreign labor conditions, and the measurement of productivity. It also includes the work of the Bureau of the Census in supplying data on the number and characteristics of persons in the labor force, including employment or unemployment status; and information on farm labor collected by the Agricultural Marketing Service.

Almost half of the net increase of more than $500,000 recommended for labor statistics in the 1958 budget is accounted for by the mandatory items—primarily retirement costs. The balance provides for improvement of specific programs within the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Funds are included for a study of the effects of tariff changes on employment in the United States ($120,000); and for strengthening the industry wage survey program in important nonmanufacturing industries, such as petroleum and metal mining ($145,000). Provision is made for completion of the expanded Federal-State cooperative program of labor turnover statistics, initiated in 1956, so that all States will be included by the end of 1958; and for increased salary costs in the employment statistics program conducted in cooperation with the States. The 1958 program of the Bureau of Labor Statistics also includes provision for preparatory work necessary to adapt employment data to the revised Standard Industrial Classification; studies of the effect of automation in industries where electronic computers are being introduced; and case studies of the technological displacement of older workers. PRINCIPAL FEDERAL STATISTICAL PROGRAMS—Continued

Bureau of Labor Statistics programs for 1958 are offset in part by completion during the current year of nonrecurring projects, for which $170,000 is available in 1957.

Demographic statistics.—The two principal current programs included in this area are located in the Public Health Service: the National Office of Vital Statistics, which compiles the national statistics of births, deaths, marriages and divorces; and the national health survey program, being inaugurated in the current year. Also included in the area of demographic statistics are the work on population estimates and projections in the Bureau of the Census; the research and statistical activities of the Office of Education; and studies of the farm population by the Agricultural Marketing Service.

Excluding increases required for mandatory items, increases of almost $650,000 are recommended for demographic statistics in 1958. Most of this program increase is for the national health survey program. The National Health Survey Act approved in July 1956 provides for a continuing national survey, supplemented by special studies, to obtain accurate current statistical information on the amount, distribution and effects of illness and disability in the United States. An appropriation of $700,000 was made available to launch the program in 1957, and the increase to about $1.2 million for 1958 represents the amount needed for a full year's operation. Similarly, additional funds included for the Office of Education for 1958 provide for full-year costs of the expanded statistical program being initiated in the current year, to obtain more comprehensive data about the Nation's school systems.

Prices and price indexes.—Included in this area are the Bureau of Labor Statistics programs on wholesale and consumer prices; and the Agricultural Marketing Service estimates of prices received and paid by farmers, and research on factors affecting prices, supply, and consumption.

Program changes account for less than $250,000 of the total increase of more than $400,000 recommended in this area for 1958.

In the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the 1958 budget recommends additional funds ($114,000) for the initiation of surveys of consumer expenditures to be made each year in four to six cities. Information from these surveys is needed to provide a continuing check on the accuracy of the weights used in compiling the Consumer Price Index.

In the Agricultural Marketing Service, the 1958 budget recommends $100,000 for a program designed to improve the indexes of prices paid and received by farmers. These indexes are based on price information now obtained chiefly through mail questionnaires, and the irregularity of response has raised the question of whether other means of collecting the data can be found to insure a greater degree of accuracy in the information reported. Provision is also made in the 1958 budget recommendation for improved coverage in the research program on prices, supply, and consumption.

Production and distribution statistics.—The broad area of production and distribution statistics includes a large part of the continuing program of the Bureau of the Census—current data on retail, wholesale and service trades; manufacturing industries; agriculture; and foreign trade and shipping. It also includes the work of the Agricultural Marketing Service on crop and livestock estimates, and the Agricultural Research Service program on the economics of farm production.

The total increase of $2.3 million recommended for production and distribution statistics in 1958 includes about $700,000 for the mandatory items and almost $1.6 million for program changes.

The largest program increase is $835,000 for the production economics program of the Agricultural Research Service. This increase is designed primarily to provide economic data needed for the development and appraisal of farm programs, including research on the financial condition, land ownership and tax burdens of different groups of farmers. It is proposed to conduct studies on a continuing basis in each of about 35 type-of-farming areas, in cooperation with the land-grant colleges, various credit agencies, and other units in the Department of Agriculture. The increase for the production economics program also provides for economic studies of irrigation in the Upper Colorado River Basin. In the Agricultural Marketing Service increases of $158,000 recommended for 1958 provide funds to permit the Department of Agriculture to assume sole responsibility for the collection of crop-condition data for the weekly weather-crop bulletins, issued jointly with the Weather Bureau; and for the improvement of poultry statistics.

In the Bureau of the Census, the 1958 budget recommendation includes increases totaling approximately $125,000 for several specific projects designed to improve the accuracy and usefulness of the foreign-trade statistics program. These increases provide funds needed to keep pace with the increased volume of foreign trade; to obtain more reliable figures for commodities exported in small dollar volume (under $500 per shipment); and to revise the commodity classifications used for export and import statistics to bring them up to date. The 1958 budget recommendation for the Bureau of the Census also includes $100,000 for the annual compilation and publication of County Business Patterns, and about $70,000 for expansion and improvement of the monthly data on manufacturers' sales, inventories and new orders—widely used as a current indicator of business trends. As part of the governmentwide defense readiness program, an amount of $300,000 is recommended for the Census Bureau to obtain industrial data for use in preparing plans for post-attack damage assessment.

Construction and housing statistics.—Statistics on construction activity are compiled by the Business and Defense Services Administration, which is responsible for the estimates of private nonresidential construction, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which is responsible for the estimates of private residential and public construction. The budget recommendations for 1956 and 1957 included funds to provide for improvements in this area, but the increases proposed were not allowed in the final appropriations as enacted by the Congress. No increase is proposed for this program for 1958, pending completion of a comprehensive review now being made of the Government's work in this area and reformulation of a program designed to provide more comprehensive and more accurate measures of this important segment of the economy.

The area of construction and housing statistics in this analysis also includes the current data on housing statistics compiled by the Bureau of the Census. No increase is requested for this program in 1958. An increase of $45,000 is included for the Census Bureau, however, to provide for a sample survey of State and local governmental units in order to obtain needed information on the status of plans for various types of public works.

National income and business financial accounts.—This area includes a number of statistical and analytic programs basic to the Government's statistical system and to analysis of the national economy. It includes the work of the Office of Business Economics in preparing estimates of national income and product, measuring and analyzing business trends, and computing the balance of international payments. It also includes the statistical tabulations of personal and corporate income tax returns made by the Internal Revenue Service; the estimates of farm income and production expenditures prepared by the Agricultural Marketing Service; the statistics on financial and other operations of State and local governments prepared by the Bureau of the Census; the quarterly financial reports program prepared jointly by the Federal Trade Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission and other economic statistical series compiled by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Approximately one-fourth of the increase of about $875,000 for these programs in 1958 is for mandatory items, and approximately $650,000 is recommended to strengthen specific programs.

For the Office of Business Economics, an increase of $40,000 is recommended to provide for publication of a new edition of the National Income Supplement, incorporating revision of the income and product estimates made possible by data now available from the 1954 economic censuses.

An increase of about $300,000 is recommended to enable the Internal Revenue Service to prepare preliminary tabulations of key financial items in the income tax returns in order to make these important business indicator statistics available a year earlier than at present.

For the Agricultural Marketing Service, an increase of about $150,000 is recommended to provide for the regular collection of data on farm income and production expenditures. A nationwide survey is designed to obtain information on farmers' expenditures for use in keeping the parity index up to date, as well as in preparing national and State estimates of farm income.

An increase of $100,000 is recommended for the Federal Trade Commission to provide for extension of the financial reports program (now limited to manufacturing corporations) to include trade and mining corporations, on a sample basis. For the Securities and Exchange Commission, an increase of about $50,000 is recommended for improvements needed in estimates of savings, plant and equipment expenditures, and small-company securities issuances.

PERIODIC CENSUS PROGRAMS

Censuses of business, transportation, manufactures, and mineral industries are authorized by existing legislation to be taken at 5-year intervals, and are next scheduled to be taken covering calendar year 1958. The 1958 budget recommends $1.8 million for these censuses, to accelerate the preparatory work begun in 1957. Preparatory funds in 1958 will be used to determine the content and scope of the censuses; to develop detailed plans for the collection and processing of the data, with emphasis on the use of electronic equipment; and to establish mailing lists. Collection of information for most of the economic censuses will begin early in calendar year 1959, covering operations during calendar year 1958, but some of the information for the census of transportation will be collected during fiscal year 1958.

Preparatory work for the eighteenth decennial census, consisting of the 1960 censuses of population, housing, and agriculture, will be initiated in 1958. Of the $4.1 million recommended for this purpose in the budget estimate, about $2 million is for use in developing plans for the content of each census and the types of tabulations to be made; in defining the enumeration areas and preparing the maps needed for the thousands of enumerators who will canvass the population in 1960; and in field tests of collection procedures. The remaining $2.1 million provides for replacing present electronic data-processing equipment with improved computers and obtaining newly developed auxiliary equipment. The more efficient computer systems and increased mechanization of associated operations will result in economies in the cost of processing census data, and will permit earlier publication of census results.

An appropriation of $1,750,000 was made last year for the 1957 census of governments. About $935,000 of this amount will be obligated in the current year and the remaining $815,000 in 1958.
