STATEMENT FOR THE PRESS.

February 1, 1919.

Substantial liquidation of war paper and other discounts, also further reduction in outstanding note circulation are indicated in the Federal Reserve Board's weekly bank statement issued as at close of business on January 31, 1919.

The banks' gold reserves show an increase of 10.8 millions, largely through gold deposits made by the Treasury. War paper on hand decreased 140.6 millions, other discounts - 20.3 millions and acceptances 3.2 millions. On the other hand, Government short-term securities went up 119.1 millions, the increase representing certificates of indebtedness taken by two banks to cover temporary advances to the Government. A decrease of 81.5 millions in Government deposits is largely offset by a gain of 68.7 millions in members' reserve deposits. This together with the larger "float" accounts for a decline of 20.1 millions in net deposits.

The week saw a further decrease of 15.8 millions in Federal Reserve note circulation as against a simultaneous gain of 11.3 millions in cash reserves. Accordingly the banks' reserve percentage shows a rise from 52.3 to 53 per cent. Aggregate liabilities on Federal Reserve bank notes in circulation increased 2.6 millions. Increases of capital and surplus of existing members, chiefly in the Boston and Chicago districts, account largely for the increase of $93,000 in paid-in capital shown.

CONDITION OF MEMBER BANKS, JANUARY 24, 1919.

Moderate reductions for the week in the holdings of U. S. war obligations and a slight increase in the amount of paper secured by such obligations are indicated in the consolidated weekly statement of the Federal Reserve Board, showing condition of 768 member banks in about 100 leading cities. Principal changes for the week affect among others the following items: U. S. bonds other than circulation bonds (chiefly Liberty bonds) decreased 25.8 millions; Treasury certificates decreased 9.8 millions; loans secured by Government war obligations, (war paper), increased 6.6 millions; other loans and investments decreased 45.3 millions.

Practically no change is shown in the ratios of the aggregate holdings of U. S. war obligations and war paper to total investments which work out at 25 per cent for all reporting banks, 26.5 per cent for the banks in the 12 Federal Reserve cities and about 30 per cent for the New York City banks.

All classes of deposits show decreases for the week; Government deposits showing a decline of 169.6 millions at all reporting banks, and an even larger decline at the banks in the 12 Federal Reserve cities; all other demand deposits (net) ^{a decrease of} -185.9 millions and time deposits ^{a decrease of} 18 millions.

Reserve balances with the Federal Reserve banks fell off 23.4 millions and cash in vault - 11.7 millions.

STATEMENT FOR THE PRESS.

February 8, 1919.

Substantial increases in the holdings of war paper, largely by the three Eastern Reserve banks and considerable reductions in reserve deposits of the larger banks are indicated in the Federal Reserve Board's weekly bank statement issued as at close of business on Friday, February 7, 1919.

The banks' gold reserves show a decrease of about 4 millions, some of the banks reporting exchanges of Federal Reserve notes for gold. Holdings of war paper increased 33.5 millions, other discounts remained practically unchanged, while acceptances on hand went up 1.4 millions. U. S. short-term securities, due mainly to redemption by the Treasury of temporary certificates of indebtedness, declined about 127 millions. Total earning assets show a decrease of 32.4 millions for the week.

The return flow of notes to the issuing banks appears to have ceased, at least temporarily, the Federal Reserve note circulation being 5.4 millions larger than the week before. Net deposits on the other hand show a decline for the week of 45.3 millions, which accounts largely for the rise of the reserve ratio from 53 to 53.5 per cent.
